Screenwriter Michael Wilson also makes an appearance in the film, disguised as a Greek priest. Following For Your Eyes Only, Wilson will make small cameos in all following Bond's films until today. He is also in Goldfinger and Moonraker.

"August 12, 1980"' revised script

> - Richard Maibaum (to Michael Wilson): I've been a little concerned about the loss of M. His relationship with Bond was enormously important in terms of Bond's persona. The all around Superman, James Bond, had one person who cut him down to identifiable size: M, his boss. [...] You mentioned something about Tanner. I hope that we don't lose the Boss-Hired Hand relationship. M-Bond was pure gold.

A third script from "August 12" of 124 pages contains revised ones from November 4, 11 and 14; October 1, 1980, as well as "5.2.81".

In the pre-title Bond still dumps the man's wheelchair into the Thames but has another line instead of "The party's a washout...": "Happy anniversary".

After this, the main difference from previous scripts is that M is no longer present at all. His dialogues lines has been redistributed in turn to the Minister of Defense, Tanner and Q.

The 2 CV is still chased by Mercedes in this script; Rémy Julienne's of the french stunt team, however, preferred Peugeots [504] for filming:

> - Rémy Julienne[34] : You cannot make a spectacle with Mercedes on these roads, they are too large. Cubby asked, "What do you think the best cars would be for the villains?". I said something like a Peugeot 405, an average car, something easy to work with. Tom Pevsner said: "But Cubby, we have a financial agreement with Mercedes". Cubby said: "I don't care".

The ending also sees some changes: 007 now throws the A.T.A.C. in the void facing General Gogol and the parrot Max converses with the Prime Minister who is in the kitchen with her husband. "Give us a kiss! Give us a kiss!".

> - Richard Maibaum[35] : I think we blew an opportunity in For Your Eyes Only to go back to the From Russia With Love / On Her Majesty's Secret Service Bonds.

> - Michael Wilson[36] : For Your Eyes Only was an attempt to retreat from excesses and bring Bond down to earth. Make him be more resourceful rather than just whipping out some gadget to get him out of a situation. I think it shows the breadth of what Bond films can be.

> - Richard Maibaum[37] : I think For Your Eyes Only turned out pretty well, except for the teaser [pre-title sequence], which was one of the worst in terms of audience reaction. I particularly liked Carole Bouquet, who played Melina. She was cool and beautiful, and she could hold her own alongside Bond. And the villains were very believable.

The shadows of John Strong and Gail Morgan Hickman

The writing of the movie is credited to Richard Maibaum and Michael Wilson. However the name of screenwriter John Strong was present in a second tentative writing credit sent at the beginning of 1981 by EON to the Writers Guild of America. His contribution to the script are unknown to me (probably revisions if I have to guess); his name was absent of the first tentative writing credit (sent in October 1980).

John Christopher Strong III[38] was an actor, writer and producer. Born in 1936 in the United States, he began his career as a TV actor in 1960, with appearances in Perry Mason and Voyage to the Bottom of the Sea, before creating The John Strong Show (1971-1972). As a screenwriter, he has notably wrote episodes of Scooby Doo, Where Are You! (1969), Return to the Planet of the Apes (1975) and some of All in the Family. He also produced some TV show and movies, like Savage Streets (1984, that he also wrote) or A Show of Force (1990, he also wrote).

Another name present in the tentative writing credit send to the Guild is the one of Gail Morgan Hickman. Accompanying his name, a note stating that the "company acquired option on material written not subject to any writing agreement. Material was not used and option was not exercised". It seems Hickman send something on spec (speculative screenplay, a non-commissioned and unsolicited screenplay)? In a letter addressed to Hickman, EON' lawyers states that "all of the essential elements of this [August, 12th] screenplay [...] had been developed at the time your screenplay was first examined by the producers and, therefore, any similarities which may exist are coincidental".

Gail Morgan Hickman[39], born in 1953 in United States gained his first significant writing credit with the Dirty Harry film The Enforcer in 1976. His other screenplay credits include The London Connection (1979), The Kids Who Knew Too Much (1980), The Big Score (1983), Murphy's Law (1986), and Death Wish 4: The Crackdown (1987).

In 1977, Hickman authored the nonfiction book The Films of George Pal, chronicling the career of the renowned science-fiction producer-director. He also wrote the novelization of The Enforcer under the pseudonym Wesley Morgan.

From 1988 onward, Hickman focused on television writing and producing for series such as episodes of Crime Story, The Equalizer, The Flash, The Sentinel, or Largo Winch.

Ronald Hardy name wasn't submitted to the Guild, however.

Sources/references from chapter 12: For Your Eyes Only

1 "The Life of Ian Fleming" by John Pearson (1966).

2 "James Bond: The Man and His World" by Henry Chancellor (2005).

3 "Christopher Wood Interview" on MI6-HQ website (2005):
https://www.mi6-hq.com/sections/articles/interview_christopher_wood

4 "Inside For Your Eyes Only" DVD bonus.
Michael Wilson's interview by David Childs on Octopussy set (Film Special, november 1982):
https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=jywlxq3KD4s

5 "When the Snow Melts: The Autobiography of Cubby Broccoli" by Albert Broccoli and Donald Zec (2012 edition).
"Nobody Does it Better" by Mark A. Altman and Edward Gross (2020).

6 Michael Wilson's interview by David Childs on Octopussy set (Film Special, november 1982):
https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=jywlxq3KD4s

7 "The James Bond Archives" by Danny Graydon and Paul Duncan (2012).

8 "Some Kind of Hero: The Remarkable Story of the James Bond Films" by Matthew Field & Ajay Chowdhury (2015).

9 (Sorry, I don't remember where I found this; neither the eventual exact quote).

10 "When the Snow Melts: The Autobiography of Cubby Broccoli" by Albert Broccoli and Donald Zec (2012 edition).

11 "An interview with Chritopher Wood" in Universal Exports website:
https://www.universalexports.net/interviews/wood.shtml#interview

12 "The John Glen Interview" by Richard Schenkman and Tom Sciacca in Bondage magazine (issue #12, 1983).

13 "The James Bond Archives" by Danny Graydon and Paul Duncan (2012).

14 "Richard Maibaum: Veteran Screenwriter for a Brand-New Bond" interview by Lee Goldberg and Edward Gross in Starlog magazine (issue #120, July 1987).

15 "A View to a Kill: the official movie magazine" (1985).

16 "A View to a Kill: the official movie magazine" (1985).

17 "Richard Maibaum: Veteran Screenwriter for a Brand-New Bond" interview by Lee Goldberg and Edward Gross in Starlog magazine (issue #120, July 1987).

18 "Richard Maibaum: 007's Puppetmaster" interview by Lee Goldberg in Starlog magazine (issue #68, March 1983).

19 "The Man With the Golden Eye" by Peter Lamont (2016).

20 Symposium by Richard Maibaum for the Writer's Guild of America, Beverly Hills, California, October 1987; via "Speaking of Writing" by Sylvia Kamion Maibaum and Richard Maibaum (2019).

21 "The John Glen Interview" by Richard Schenkman and Tom Sciacca in Bondage magazine (issue #12, 1983).

22 Michael Wilson's interview by David Childs on Octopussy set (Film Special, november 1982):
https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=jywlxq3KD4s

23 "The John Glen Interview" by Richard Schenkman and Tom Sciacca in Bondage magazine (issue #12, 1983).

24 "The James Bond Archives" by Danny Graydon and Paul Duncan (2012).

25 "Nobody Does it Better" by Mark A. Altman and Edward Gross (2020).

26 "The James Bond Archives" by Danny Graydon and Paul Duncan (2012).

27 "The James Bond Archives" by Danny Graydon and Paul Duncan (2012).

28 "Nobody Does it Better" by Mark A. Altman and Edward Gross (2020).

29 "Nobody Does it Better" by Mark A. Altman and Edward Gross (2020).

30 "James Bond Returns Director John Glen" by Stephen Payne and Gary Russell in Starburst magazine (issue #107, July 1987); via "Some Kind of Hero: The Remarkable Story of the James Bond Films" by Matthew Field & Ajay Chowdhury (2015).

31 "The James Bond Archives" by Danny Graydon and Paul Duncan (2012).

32 "More just than M" orbituary of Bernard Lee in 007 Magazine (issue #8, August 1981).

33 "The James Bond Archives" by Danny Graydon and Paul Duncan (2012).

34 "Some Kind of Hero: The Remarkable Story of the James Bond Films" by Matthew Field & Ajay Chowdhury (2015).

35 "Richard Maibaum: 007's Puppetmaster" interview by Lee Goldberg in Starlog magazine (issue #68, March 1983).

36 "The James Bond Archives" by Danny Graydon and Paul Duncan (2012).

37 "The Complete James Bond Movie Encyclopedia" by Steven Jay Rubin (2003 edition).

38 For John Strong biography, see for the sources:
John Strong (III)'s page in IMDb.
John Strong (III)'s page in Planet of the Apes Wiki.

39 For Gail Morgan Hickman biography, see for the sources:
Gail Morgan Hickman's page in IMDb.
Gail Morgan Hickman's page in Wikipedia.

James Bond's
all time high.
ALBERT R. BROCCOLI
presents
ROGER MOORE
as IAN FLEMING'S
JAMES BOND 007
in OCTOPUSSY

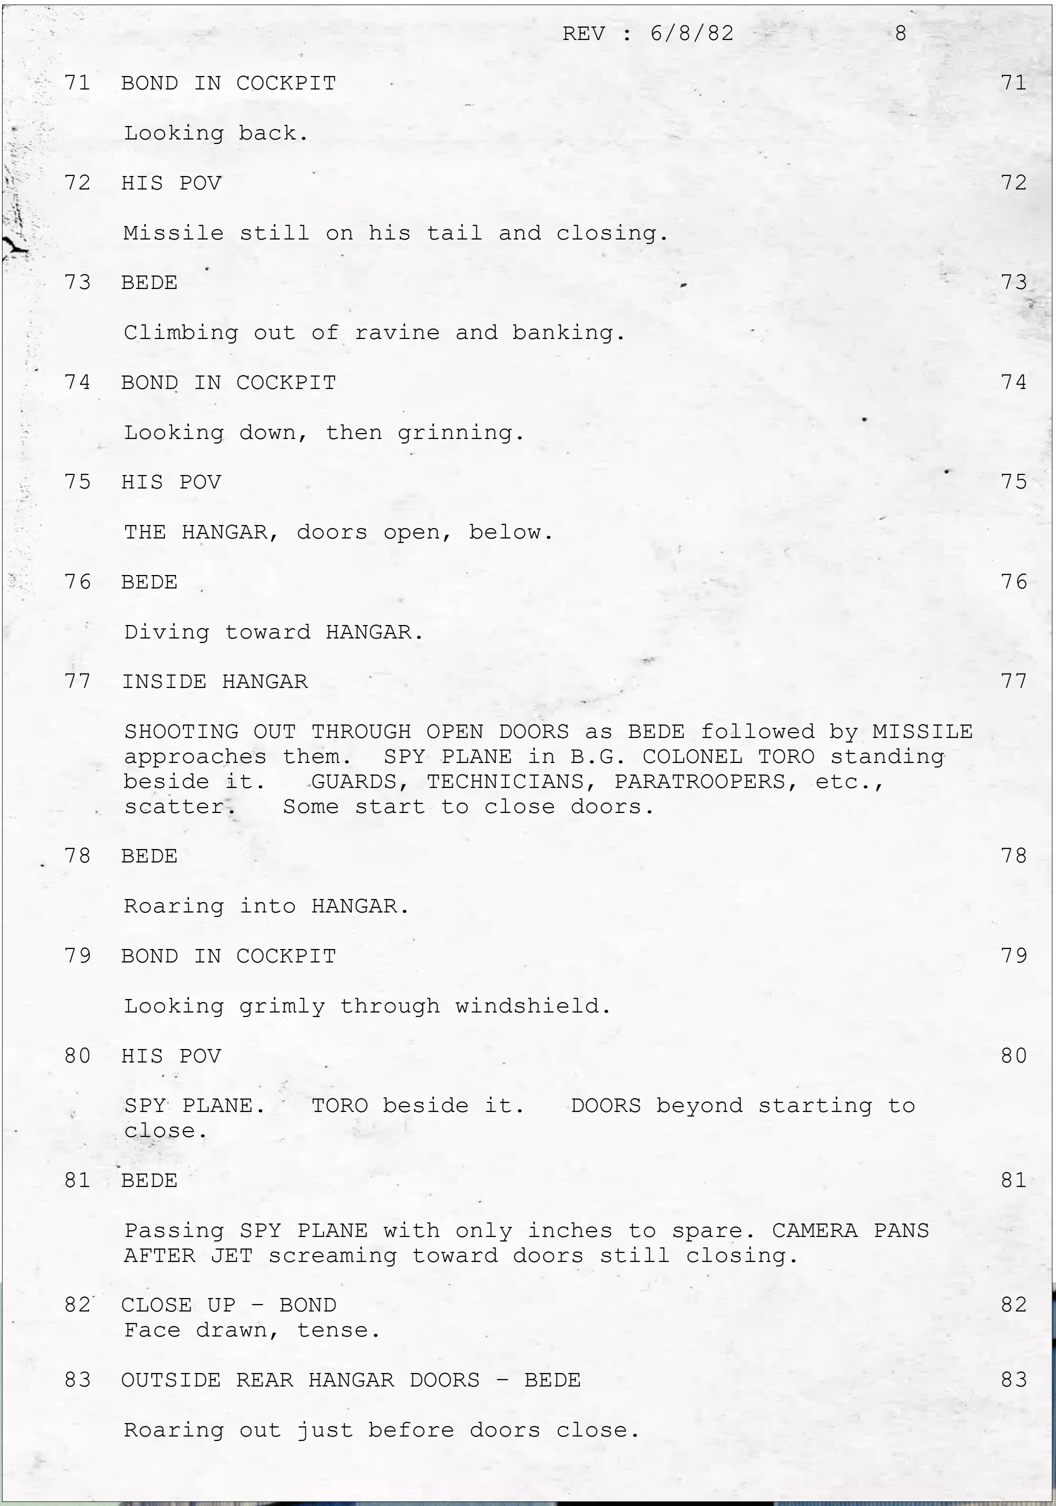
Release date (premiere) :
6 June 1983

Writing credit as per title sequence:
"Screen story and screenplay by George MacDonald Fraser and Richard Maibaum & Michael G. Wilson"

Director :....................................John Glen
Producer :.......................Albert R. Broccoli
Executive producer :......Michael Wilson
Director photography :.........Alan Hume
Set Designer :........................Peter Lamont
Composer :..............................John Barry
Editor :.........P. Davies and H. Richardson
Title sequence :...............Maurice Binder
Title song vocals :................Rita Coolidge



REV : 6/8/82 8

71 BOND IN COCKPIT 71

Looking back.

72 HIS POV 72

Missile still on his tail and closing.

73 BEDE 73

Climbing out of ravine and banking.

74 BOND IN COCKPIT 74

Looking down, then grinning.

75 HIS POV 75

THE HANGAR, doors open, below.

76 BEDE 76

Diving toward HANGAR.

77 INSIDE HANGAR 77

SHOOTING OUT THROUGH OPEN DOORS as BEDE followed by MISSILE approaches them. SPY PLANE in B.G. COLONEL TORO standing beside it. GUARDS, TECHNICIANS, PARATROOPERS, etc., scatter. Some start to close doors.

78 BEDE 78

Roaring into HANGAR.

79 BOND IN COCKPIT 79

Looking grimly through windshield.

80 HIS POV 80

SPY PLANE. TORO beside it. DOORS beyond starting to close.

81 BEDE 81

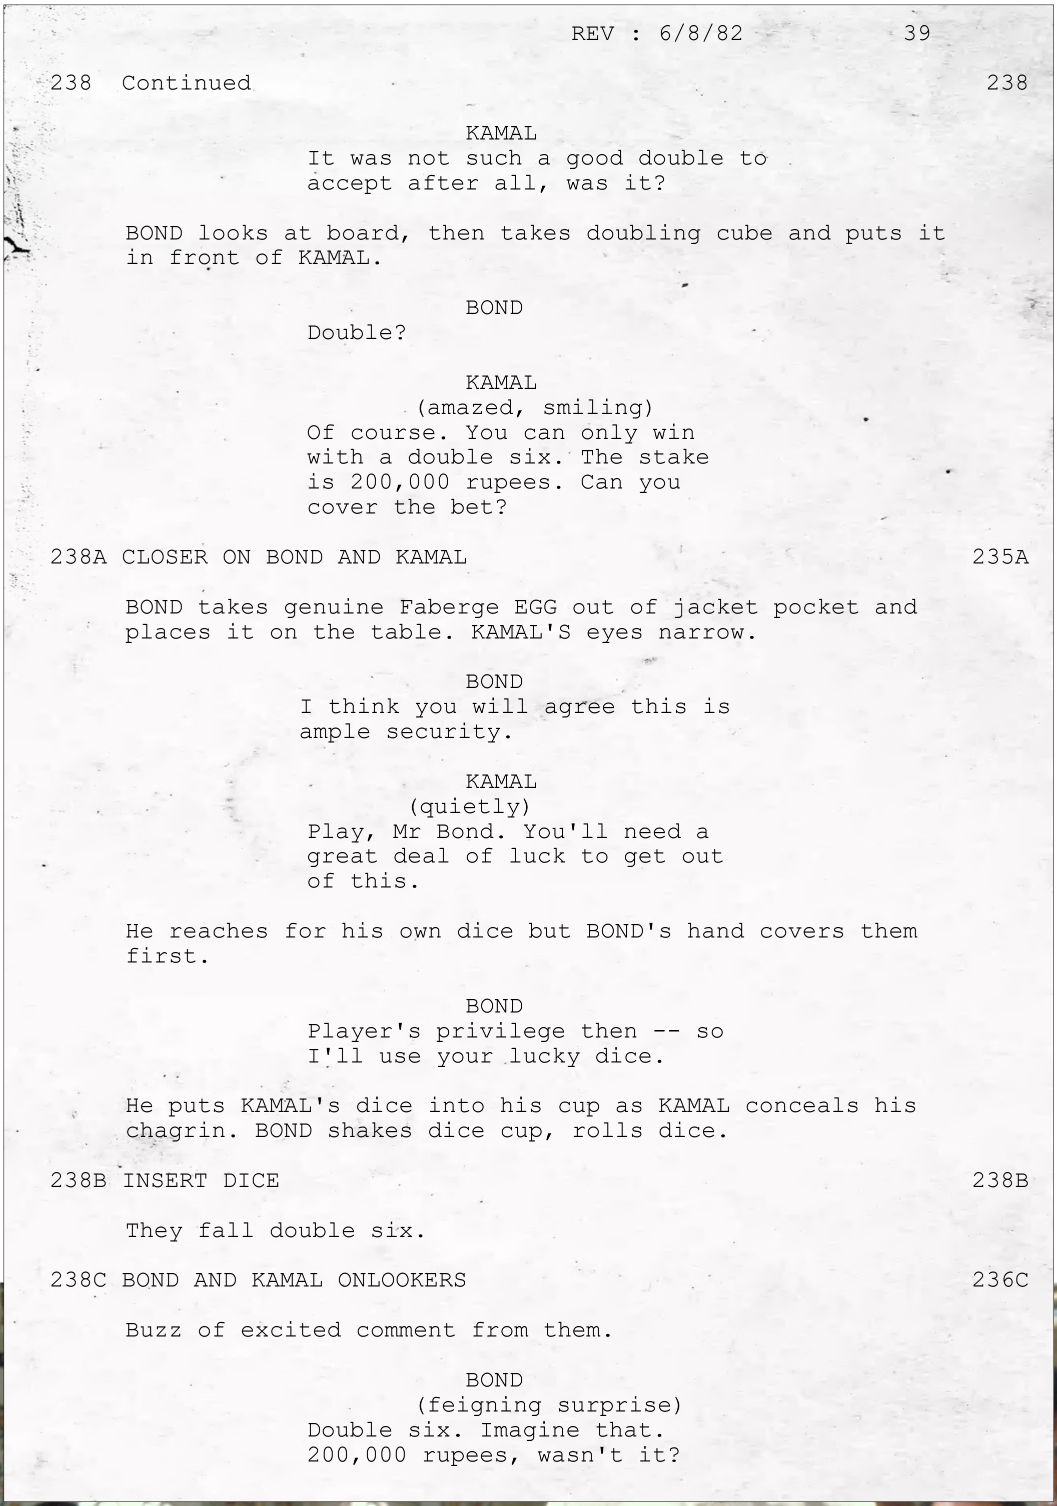
Passing SPY PLANE with only inches to spare. CAMERA PANS AFTER JET screaming toward doors still closing.

82 CLOSE UP - BOND 82
Face drawn, tense.

83 OUTSIDE REAR HANGAR DOORS - BEDE 83

Roaring out just before doors close.

CHAPTER 13



REV : 6/8/82 39

238 Continued 238

KAMAL
It was not such a good double to accept after all, was it?

BOND looks at board, then takes doubling cube and puts it in front of KAMAL.

BOND
Double?

KAMAL
(amazed, smiling)
Of course. You can only win with a double six. The stake is 200,000 rupees. Can you cover the bet?

238A CLOSER ON BOND AND KAMAL 235A

BOND takes genuine Faberge EGG out of jacket pocket and places it on the table. KAMAL'S eyes narrow.

BOND
I think you will agree this is ample security.

KAMAL
(quietly)
Play, Mr Bond. You'll need a great deal of luck to get out of this.

He reaches for his own dice but BOND's hand covers them first.

BOND
Player's privilege then -- so
I'll use your lucky dice.

He puts KAMAL's dice into his cup as KAMAL conceals his chagrin. BOND shakes dice cup, rolls dice.

238B INSERT DICE 238B

They fall double six.

238C BOND AND KAMAL ONLOOKERS 236C

Buzz of excited comment from them.

BOND
(feigning surprise)
Double six. Imagine that.
200,000 rupees, wasn't it?

Cast:

James Bond :.........................Roger Moore
Kamal Khan :.......................Louis Jourdan
Octopussy :...........................Maud Adams
Magda :..........................Kristina Wayborn
Gobinda: ....Kabir Bedi
Orlov :...............................Steven Berkoff
Vijay :..................................Vijay Amritraj
Sadruddin :..........................Albert Moses
Mischka :.............................David Meyer
Grischka :........................Anthony Meyer
Jim Fanning :..................Douglas Wilmer
Gogol :..................................Walter Gotell
M :......................................Robert Brown
Moneypenny :.....................Lois Maxwell
Q :...............................Desmond Llewelyn

Main filming locations: India, West Germany, USA, and UK

With this film, the writers are trying to stay in the same vein as For Your Eyes Only; despite an uneven tone with a little more lightness and comic elements in a plot which is yet intended to be more serious and ultimately too complex and confusing to follow for many spectators. Moore shows a few wrinkles (Maud Adams too) but there is some chemistry between them on screen. India is an interesting setting and the action scenes are still good, even if the ending one disappoints a little. Once again the villains lack a memorable dimension but still get the job done, and well done.

OCTOPUSSY

Table of contents

Octopussy

Literary origins....782
False starts....784
September 3, 1981' treatment: Blofeld, Japan and German castle....785
Traces of the past....792
A step in the right direction: NATO, Brezhnev and Tu-144....794
September 30, 1981' treatment: wargames and evil Octopussy....796
Fanthom of the past....802
Enter Fraser....804
June/August 1982' scripts....809

Literary origins

At the end of June 1981, the last James Bond film, For Your Eyes Only, is released in cinemas in the United Kingdom and North America. Less than two months later its screenwriters, Richard Maibaum and Michael G. Wilson, were already actively working on the next one which would be, as announced at the end For Your Eyes Only: Octopussy.

Small reminder: it was in 1965 that appeared, in serial form in the Daily Express, a short story by Ian Fleming: Octopussy.

OCTOPUSSY
AND
THE LIVING DAYLIGHTS
FLEMING
OCTOPUSSY AND THE LIVING DAYLIGHTS FLEMING

Octopussy tells the story of Major Dexter Smythe, a British soldier who, towards the end of the Second World War, learned that the enemy had hidden two gold bars near a refuge in the mountains not far from Kitzbühel (Austria).

Smythe decides to keep this for himself and hire a mountain guide, Hannes Oberhauser (yes, the movie Spectre of 2015 will refer to him), to lead him there. Once at the location where the ingots are located, Smythe kills the guide.

Many years later, Oberhauser's body was found and it was established that the bullets which killed him came from Smythe's service weapon. Now living in his villa in Jamaica thanks to the fortune he has acquired, Smythe receive the visit of James Bond who once considered Oberhauser (his ski instructor) as a sort of father.

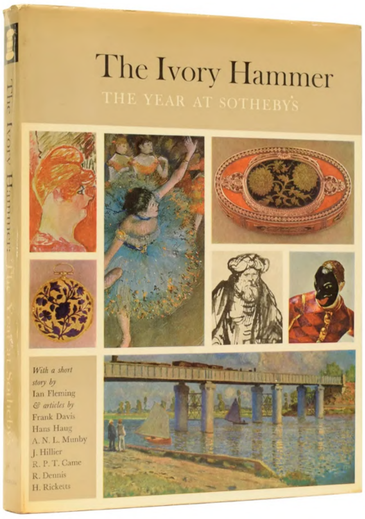
During a discussion that follow, Smythe ends up confessing his crime to Bond. Finally Bond leaves, telling him that it will probably be a week or so before someone is sent to bring him back to England where he will surely be judged. Rather than face this, Smythe decides to in sort commit suicide by having his octopus named "Pussy" kill him.

The film Octopussy from 1983 will not take up the plot of the short story. Only the presence of octopuses and a dialogue between Bond and Octopussy recalls the literary origins:

- Octopussy: You remember Major Dexter Smythe? You were sent out to arrest him, weren't you?
- Bond: [...] Yes. Smythe, after a brilliant military career, joined our secret service. His mission was to recover a cache of Chinese gold, seized in North Korea. Both he and his native guide disappeared. The gold was never found.
- Octopussy: And twenty years later, you were sent after him.
- Bond: The guide's body turned up with a bullet still in his skull from Smythe's revolver. I traced Smythe to Sri Lanka, and gave him 24 hours to clear up his affairs before I took him back.
- Octopussy: He committed suicide rather than face the disgrace of a court martial. [...] He was my father.

Part of the film's plot, however, will be inspired by another Fleming short story: The Property of a Lady, published in 1963 in The Ivory Hammer (the annual publication of the auction company Sotheby's).

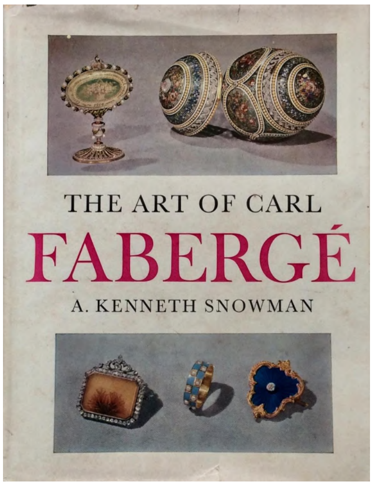
Commissioned from Fleming by Sotheby's, in this short story the Secret Service questions when Maria Freudenstein of the Service, who is know to be in reality a Russian double agent, receives in inheritance the Emerald Sphere, a lost work of Carl Fabergé which she will sell at auction at Sotheby's. Wouldn't this be a reward from the KGB for the information she transmitted to them? In any case, that's James' and M' intuition, and they think the resident of the KGB will be present at the sale to increase the auction price.



The Ivory Hammer
THE YEAR AT SOTHEBY'S
With a short story by Ian Fleming & articles by Frank Davis Hans Haug A. N. L. Munby J. Hillier R. P. T. Came R. Dennis H. Ricketts

Seeing this as a perfect opportunity to identify him and have him expelled from the country, Bond is sent to the sale with Kenneth Snowman (of Wartski, a specialist of the work of Fabergé).

Finally Bond identifies a certain Piotr Malinowski as the KGB' man and goes to inform HQ. (Jim Fanning in the film will be a mixture of the characters of Kenneth Snowman and Dr. Fanshawe, expert in antique jewelry, present in the scene at M's office in the short story).



(Kenneth Snowman was a real person and Fleming used Snowman' book The Art of Carl Fabergé for his research. The filmmakers too since the catalog visible in the film, as well as a dialogue line, are basically taken from it).

False starts

Among the first plot ideas for the film which apparently didn't go beyond the stage of a few pages, we can note Octopussy in mama-san (manager of a nightclub in Tokyo) who sells information about her customers. She would have a partner, "Monsieur Diamant" (french word for diamond), who would be none other than Goldfinger's brother! Russia would be interested in acquiring the smuggled diamonds for industrial purposes and foreign exchanges. "Mr. Diamant" have the idea of flooding the African market with diamonds and blackmailing governments if they want to stop that (?). There is a mention of a bag of diamonds in the underground mail distribution network.

As we remember, Maibaum had already had the idea of giving Goldfinger a brother in On Her Majesty's Secret Service and Diamonds Are Forever ; a pursuit in the underground postal network of London was also considered for these two films as well as for For Your Eyes Only.

The document, which is more loose notes than anything structured, also mention India, a Japanese assassin and an auction at Sotheby's.

Another concept (taking up a suggestion made by aerial cameraman Frank Holgate, even if he never worked on a Bond's film) included as an initial idea a gas capable of neutralizing the radiation emitted by atomic weapons explosions; which could disrupt the balance of nuclear deterrence.

Mountaineers tasked with installing a device on Nanda Devi (Himalayas) capable of monitoring China's nuclear program and accidentally dropping it into a crevasse was another hypothesis for the film's story. Especially since it "might be a way to get Bond to India", a filming location already considered for Moonraker where some scouting had taken place at the time. Some notes about females samurais or/and shirabyōshi including Shizuka Gozen and Tomoe Gozen are present on this document.

Two pages dated August 13, 1981 had, as for theme, the global trafficking of African ivory (transiting through India). Octopussy works with a criminal named Mr. Blanc (meaning "white", in french) who finances with money from the traffic a process to transform nuclear waste into a harmless white powder which can be made dangerous again via another process (bad guys would be willing to pay big money to use this like a chemical weapon). While investigating the death of a colleague in Kenya, Bond will discover this and that Octopussy wants to take over Mr. Blanc's operation. Octopussy makes it look like that Bond is passing on secrets to traitors like Kim Philby and Guy Burgess; Bond becomes a fugitive.

September 3, 1981' treatment: Blofeld, Japan and German castle

> - John Glen[1] : A Bond film is quite unique. You don't start with a script. You start with an idea, which can change completely after maybe three or four weeks.

> - Richard Maibaum[2] : We started with two elements. Fleming's Octopussy novella and a short story called The Property of a Lady. George [Fraser] came on and worked on a draft and came up with a lot of the elements dealing with the Fabergé eggs. He worked with Michael [Wilson], then I was brought back to do the shooting script. We had a devil of a time coming up with a story about Octopussy, but it helped when we discovered that there actually is an organization in Japan composed entirely of women; a kind of female mafia. And since we had once considered India as a location, it became the basis of this den of female thieves led by a woman named Octopussy.

At the start of pre-production it is not yet sure that Roger Moore will return, as with the previous film, various actors will ultimately be auditioned to replace him.

On September 3, 1981, Maibaum and Wilson completed a 62-page treatment very different from the film we know and which brings back a spectre from the past, plus some ideas imagined for previous films including For Your Eyes Only.

The writers specify that this treatment will have to open with a pre-title sequence which is not yet defined: "Bond on mission outwits and spectacularly surmounts opposition action demonstrating why he is considered the greatest secret agent in the world" (an earlier version described it with what is probably the simplest phrase possible: "Bond on a mission miraculously survives opposition action").

After that, we head to a factory that prints money in Luxembourg; we are told that it "printing banknotes of various European paper currencies" (though it was written before the creation of the Euro). Henchmen from the Spectre (they are nicknamed "Spectres") arrive and carry out a burglary while Blofeld (his cat on his lap and who, we have to believe, is not the character who died in the pre-title of the previous film!) observes this on a TV monitor from a helicopter.

The Spectres transfer the money into a VTOL plane but eight hooded individuals come, overpower the Spectres with martial arts, and steal the plane containing the loot. Once in the air, the thieves of the thieves remove their hoods: they are all young women, of different origins.

In a 16th century castle in France or West Germany well stocked with works of art, young women engage in several types of activities (dancing, chess, reading, etc.) (there are some beautiful males too). According to the writers, the place is reminiscent of the poem Kubla Khan.

The owner of the place, a thirty-something Eurasian woman named Noami La Fonte, known in crime circles as "Octopussy", receives an American lawyer named Vance Gordon. He informs her that the money printing factory's insurance company has made her an offer to recover the stolen money.

On the side of the Spectre HQ, Blofeld is furious: this time Octopussy has gone too far; he orders his men to find her and kill her.

We find Bond playing roulette in a London casino, observed by a model named Jocelyn Joy, aka "Jay Jay". Unlike usual, he loses (the manager even comes to tell him that he has exceeded his credit limit and that he now owes money to the casino)! In the parking lot he finds Jay Jay waiting for him in his Lotus and he invites her to his house.

Bond shows Jay Jay his collection of 17th century English mugs (yes, apparently Bond collects such things!), saying that he's unfortunately going to have to sell one of them at Christie's to pay off his debt to the casino. Fortunately Jay Jay seems to be able to console him and "he finds the tiny octopus tattooed just above her left buttock amusing".

The next morning we find Bond at the auction at Christie's. In the room he witnesses a bidding fight for his mug between Jay Jay and a man named Grady, at prices well above the normal value of the object. Jay Jay wins the auction and Bond decides to follow her; he loses her so he decide to tail Grady instead.

Bond is spotted during his tailing. Grady begins to flee and runs towards a post office building, slips down a chute used to send mail bags and ends up in the underground mail delivery system by rails. Bond and Grady fight on a moving cart, then attempting to flee 007 on foot, Grady ends up getting hit by a mail cart and dies. 007 decides to leave the place before the police arrive.

At MI6 HQ, Penelope Smallbone (M's new secretary, there is no Moneypenny), M, the Minister of Defense, the Chief of Staff and a certain Major Wickersham look at press articles that talk about the record price that Bond's mug has reached. Bond is informed Wickersham is from internal affairs and that he is conducting a routine investigation into Bond's sale and the money he received; James will be on leave until the investigation is completed. Wickersham doesn't really like 007: he thinks his reputation is a myth intended to increase MI6's budget.

Bond returns home and discovers that Wickersham is undertaking some sort of search warrant at his house. Suddenly a delivery man brings a package for Bond which contains the sold mug accompanied by a message that looks like written in Russian. It seems that the money 007 received was not for the mug but for something else: Wickersham have Bond arrested.

Oliver Reed circa 1979, the writers wrote of Wickersham that "he looks like Oliver Reed (who should play him)".

In a sort of secret MI6 prison; M, Q and Wickersham visit Bond. Wickersham says he have evidence against Bond, which the latter knows was forgery made by someone who is trying to frame him. During the scene Q smokes a cigar and discreetly leaves his magnetic lighter for Bond before leaving the place (with apparently the complicity of M).

Once the gentlemen have left, Bond escapes from the prison using a function on the lighter that sprays a sedative liquid at the guards. Outside he run into Wickersham and gets into a taxi left there by Q. 007 have difficulty to start the taxi and to give him time, Q shoot "instant banana peels" from an umbrella into Wickersham's path (sic!); Wickersham then falls to the ground. Wickersham doesn't admit defeat however: he enters a Rover dealership and takes one of the car to pursue Bond.

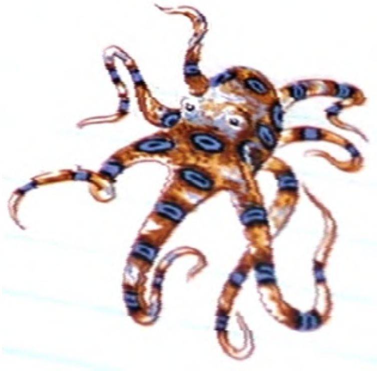
The treatment then calls for a "comic chase" through various emblematic places in London at the end of which Bond crashes his taxi and takes refuge in the nearest building: a Turkish baths. Having lost Wickersham, Bond opens a packet of Q which contains false papers in the name of "Colin Forbes", professional ornithologist, with a fake bushy walrus mustache to match the photo on the passport.

Wickersham tells M and Q that Bond must have had help to escape and that he intends to get to the bottom of it. Meanwhile Bond (with his fake mustache) sees a wanted notice about himself in the newspapers in a newsstand, as well as the photo of Jay Jay on the cover of a fashion magazine. He phones a modeling agency called Magna, saying that he would like to hire Jay Jay: he is told she is currently busy in Tokyo.

Bond goes to Heathrow Airport and sees Wickersham looking for him. He confronts Wickersham in the bathroom and ties/gags him before boarding a plane to Japan.

In Tokyo, Bond visits the Magna's local offices and asks for Jocelyn Joy. The receptionist asks if he is Mr. Bond because she have a message for him. Bond replies that he is a friend of him and the receptionist gives him an envelope: inside is the address of a hotel with the drawing of an octopus.

Before going there, Bond takes a detour to a fish business belonging to an old friend of him: Tada, to whom he asks questions about octopuses. Tada tells him in particular about the deadly poison of the blue-ringed octopus and that the message in "Russian" received by Bond at his home was actually Japanese and means "octopus". Bond would like to know if it could also be the name of a sushi restaurant: Tada says they should ask his uncle Tosuke.



Bond goes to see Tosuke who is a master blacksmith. Tosuke tells him that in the days of feudal Japan, the octopus was the symbol of a secret society of female samurais which disappeared long ago.

Leaving Tosuke's house, Bond takes care of Bork: a man who had been following him since he left Magna.

Bond goes to a seaside village where the hotel/inn is located, sees Jay Jay and tail her. She goes to a kind of gym where she practices naginata with other girls then returns to her hotel bungalow where Bond is waiting for her. He draw her a bath and took off her naginata.

In the bath Bond washes her back while Jay Jay tells him that it wasn't personal to have him accused of being a double agent, and that she feels affection for him. She offers him to come to Delhi (India) with her if he wants to know the answers to all his questions.

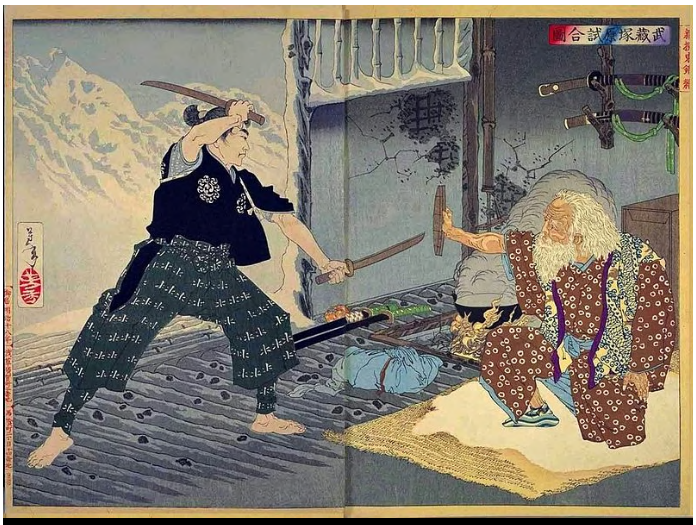


Illustration of the legendary duel between Tsukahara Bokuden (right, with the lid of a pot) and the samurai Miyamoto Musashi.

Bond and Jay Jay are now doing kind of things that are done by lying in a futon, when some [Spectres] samurais show up; a fight begins. This is an opportunity to show Jay Jay's skills with her naginata while Bond fights in particular with an iron lid of a kind of pot in a reference to Tsukahara Bokuden.

The fight continues outside the bungalow, this time Bond has retrieved his pistol. Jay Jay, however, is fatally hit by one of the samurai; in her last breath she advises Bond to go to Delhi and then to the Rambagh Palace hotel. "Bonzai" Bond tells her (instead of Banzai, long live / live forever). Bork, who was observing the scene from a distance, leaves.

Bork reports what he saw to Blofeld and says he lost Bond trace just as the latter was taking a plane to India. From what he saw Bond would be involved with Octopussy; Blofeld demands to liberate a certain Ra Abbid.

Ra Abbid is currently detained in a California prison, he is seen with his therapist, Dr. Freundlich. The treatment tells us that Abbid is a black hitman who deserted the U.S. Army to join the Vietcong and was later trained with ninjas. He attacks Freundlich and frees himself from his straitjacket by dislocating his shoulder (we are before Lethal Weapon) and using his teeth; then he escapes from the prison. Spectres then give him his weapon of choice: a labrys (double-edged ax).

Bond is in the room that Jay Jay had reserved at the Rambagh Palace in Jaipur and is playing Rubik's Cube to pass the time when a beautiful Indian girl from the hotel staff, Nara, suggests him to go to the Holi festival (where people throw color pigments) with her. However, Wickersham shows up in the hotel room accompanied by two police officers: Bond has been spotted at the airport.

Bond escape via the fire escape and a chase begins through the festival with emblematic places of the city in the background, elephants with howdah (in which Bond briefly hides) and fakirs (in reality thugs in the pay of Spectre).

A contortionist turns out to be Ra Abbid who attacks Bond with his labrys and manages to knock him out. Bork stops Abbid from finishing off Bond and they take him away alive.

In the next scene there is an Indian-style funeral: a body wrapped in clothing is placed on a pyre for cremation. Suddenly the body begins to move: it is Bond who is trying to free himself from his bonds in order to survive. An adjacent pyre is lit and a hot air balloon hidden in it begins to take off. Octopussy and Nara who are inside cut Bond's bonds, load him into the hot air balloon and fly away into the sky before the eyes of Ra Abbid as Bond loses consciousness again.

Bond is taken by rowboat to a small island (which is actually said to be filmed in a hotel in Udaipur, which appears to be the Taj Lake Palace, where the film will actually be shot. Ultimately the filmmakers will realize that everything they need apart from the Taj Mahal can be found in Udaipur and will decide to confine themselves there instead of going to Jaipur[3]). After regaining consciousness, Bond chats with Octopussy.

She explains that she is the daughter of a French mercenary and that her mother, Murfaki Okasi, came from a Japanese samurai family. Octopussy revived the secret society of female samurai and framing Bond was part of her plan. She can now offer him to clear his name (and even come work for her full time with a salary of six zeros if he wishes) in exchange for a service for her: killing Blofeld, "the man who killed his wife".

Bond was unaware that Blofeld was still alive but is not cooperative: he first wants her to clear him, then he will inform MI6 about Blofeld and MI6 will possibly ask him to exercise his license to kill on him. Octopussy have no time for that and leaves Bond in the charming company of his girls, hoping that he will think again and change his mind.

During the night Ra Abbid and other Spectre's thugs infiltrate Octopussy's palace, including by slipping through a tiny gap between the bars of a window. One of the thugs heads towards Octopussy's room but she manages to get rid of him and then sound the alarm. Bond wakes up and Nara comes to warn him that Abbid is looking for him; Bond comes across a thug who tries to strangle him but it is Bond who ends up strangling the thug. There is a brief fight between Bond and Abbid at the end of which the latter flees by slipping again through the bars of a window.

After that, Octopussy asks Bond if he has changed his mind: no. She then said to him: "I allow several beautiful young men to make love to me. [...] I would be delighted to include you among them". "A career as a number one boy for a lady gangster" is still not in his plans. Octopussy will have to rethink her plan.

At a bar Wickersham sips a Coca Cola; as he watches the beautiful Nara pass by him, a girl slips a pill into his drink.

Octopussy's secretary, Chin, comes to show her chests of gold and precious stones that he bought at knockdown prices: they will be transferred to a boat in the Gulf of Cambay then shipped to Marrakech to be resold. The chests are loaded aboard a Sikorsky S-55 helicopter and Octopussy tells Bond to get in it with her: she is going to let him go since the surprise effect for Blofeld's assassination is ruined anyway.

They join the cargo boat (the Albatross) and Bond discovers that Wickersham is being held on board. Octopussy orders Nara to handcuff Bond to Wickersham. Octopussy says that the captain will untie them once they will be in the high sea and she wonders what will happen next: either Wickersham will deliver Bond to London, either Bond will stop him from doing so.

Octopussy's wonder is cut short by the arrival of a coast guard boat which comes to board the ship. Except that it is not real coast guards but men from the Spectre including Bork and Ra Abbid, accompanied by Blofeld himself.

They open fire on the captain and take control of the Octopussy's ship. Blofeld appears in front of Octopussy and Bond, saying in particular "Miss La Fonte, I had the pleasure a few minutes ago of hearing that my orders to burn down your chateau de plaisance with everything in it have been carried out".

Blofeld orders to his men to transfer the chests to the Coast Guard boat, plant explosives on the cargo, and kill Bond and Wickersham. He will let Abbid take care of Octopussy.

Blofeld leaves. Bond kicks away a henchman's gun and teams up with Wickersham to strangle him with the chain of their handcuffs. They join Octopussy who fights with a knife against Abbid and his axe. There is a fight at the end of which Abbid once again flees. Bond finds the key to the handcuffs and unlocks them. As Blofeld machine-guns them from the coast guard boat, they jump into the water.

Blofeld fish out Wickersham (as well as Abbid): he could be useful. A Spectre helicopter machine-gun Octopussy's girls on a nearby beach. The cargo ship explodes: Blofeld believes Bond and Octopussy to be dead.

Bond and Octopussy comes out the water and take refuge in a ruined Hindu temple where they sleep a little. When he wakes up, Bond sees Octopussy attempting suicide by hara-kiri and stops her, even though he says he should let her die. To make her want to stay alive, Bond makes love to her; after which she says she is ready to confess everything to his superiors in London once Blofeld would be dead! She says she thinks Blofeld is hiding in a West German castle called Konigschloss perched on a promontory.

On the Rhine, Bond and Octopussy observe the castle from a tourist boat: there is an antenna which appears to be a motion detector. Bond thinks he needs an expert's opinion: Hans Hauser (instead of Hannes Oberhauser), "a [local] guide who taught me to climb when I was a student. He had a bad fall, left him with a limp".

They go to meet Hauser and Bond explains to him that he needs to go to the Konigschloss. Hauser tells them a legend related to the "impregnable" Mäuseturm (they see it from where they are) and says that he may know a way.

Hauser's nephew, Fritz, descends with a winch Bond, Octopussy and Hauser into a cavern. Inside it, is an underground watercourse which passes under the castle. After donning scuba gear, Bond and Octopussy enter the castle via a well. Meanwhile Spectre is interrogating/torturing Wickersham.

Hauser: "The Mouse Tower. The tyrant Hatto lived there, oppressing the peasants. They could do nothing to get at him because the tower was impregnable. Then one night a mouse found small hole in the wall and went through it. Other mice followed until there was a horde of them inside. They devoured him".

Bond and Octopussy come across the Spectre's stash of explosives and decide to plant some in a boiler. They see Wickersham being escorted, Bond goes to warn him that explosives may detonate and tells Octopussy to wait for him where she is.

She doesn't listen to him, she goes to Blofeld's room and puts a blue-ringed octopus in his bath: Bork (who was preparing Blofeld's bath) dies before Blofeld's eyes.

Bond joins Wickersham who is in a room with Ra Abbid and a bunch of medieval weapons. There is a "truly titanic struggle" with the various weapons and at one point Bond sees that Abbid is standing under an air conditioning duct. Bond triggers the explosives via a detonator and the explosion which propagates through the conduits hits Abbid.

Joined by Octopussy, Bond and Wickersham try to escape the burning castle. Blofeld and Abbid too: they join hang gliders located on a parapet and flee away. Bond takes the last hang glider and chases them across the Rhine Valley (leaving Octopussy and Wickersham in the castle).

Blofeld and Abbid land at an airport and steal a DC-3 plane from some parachutists. Before it could take off, Bond jumped onto the plane and is now hanging on to the tail of the aircraft as it gains altitude.

Similar to what we see in the film, Abbid joins Bond on the fuselage and fights with him before ending up in a propeller and finally dying. Blofeld then jumps from the plane with a parachute, Bond retrieves a parachute and does the same. With a knife he cuts Blofeld's parachute in flight, who then falls to his "death".

Later in M's office, if Wickersham obtains all the congratulations of the minister with promise of promotion and medal, Bond can still be happy that his name has been cleared.

In an isolated cottage we find Bond and Octopussy: they are saying goodbye. Octopussy would like to stay by his side but Bond doesn't want to, telling her that marriage is not authorize by MI6 for agents like him. She promises him that she will no longer engage in the kind of activity she was taking part in, but as soon as she leaves, she is already on the phone with her lawyer trying to sell a painting she stole from Blofeld's castle. Bond, who has overheard her conversation, "shakes his head wryly and we leave him wondering what to do about her...".

Traces of the past

Before arriving at the treatment we have just seen, Maibaum and Wilson had imagined various things during the writing process which were subsequently changed.

Thus, in a first grouping of pages dated August 18, 1981 from the beginning of a similar plot, the screenwriters wrote that Octopussy was called Yvette Sayota (from a Japanese father and a French mother). Jay Jay was Jennifer Joyce's nickname (not Jocelyn Joy) and the Wickersham character was here named Groves or Gordon (and was intended to resemble "Chris Reeves"). He was not from internal affairs but was a 00 agent who "disapproves of Bond's personal life".

After escaping from the "detention house", Bond went to M to confront his boss. M told him he should try to clear his name. Bond's disguise was gonna to be a beard, even a rabbi one.

Christopher Reeve, who was filming Superman 3 in Pinewood, visiting Roger Moore on the set of Octopussy.

In another set of pages which also bears the August 18' date, Bond has no gambling debt. Instead an antique dealer offers to sell Bond an antique mug after the pre-title. Bond gives him an advance, saying he will give him the rest once he sells one of the mugs from his own collection at auction.

At Christie's, Bond mug hits record price, thanks to two attractive girls who upped the ante.

M informs 007 of Wickerham's (not Wickersham) investigation. 007 is arrested during the search of his house and escapes the secret prison with the help of Q and M. The comical car chase in London ends with a section on foot in the underground postal railway system, where Bond leaves Wickerham tied to something with his own handcuffs.

After that there is a scene where Octopussy in her castle located in Alsace receives an American gangster named Seymour Coy who owes her money. He tries to trick her but she makes him cough up the money (plus extra) without physical violence. She then receives the mother of one of her employees who was killed and whose grandson is in trouble with the police. She will help the mother. Finally Terry Kelly (one of the auction girls) informs Octopussy that Bond has been arrested, "good, we'll have Mr. Bond where we want him".

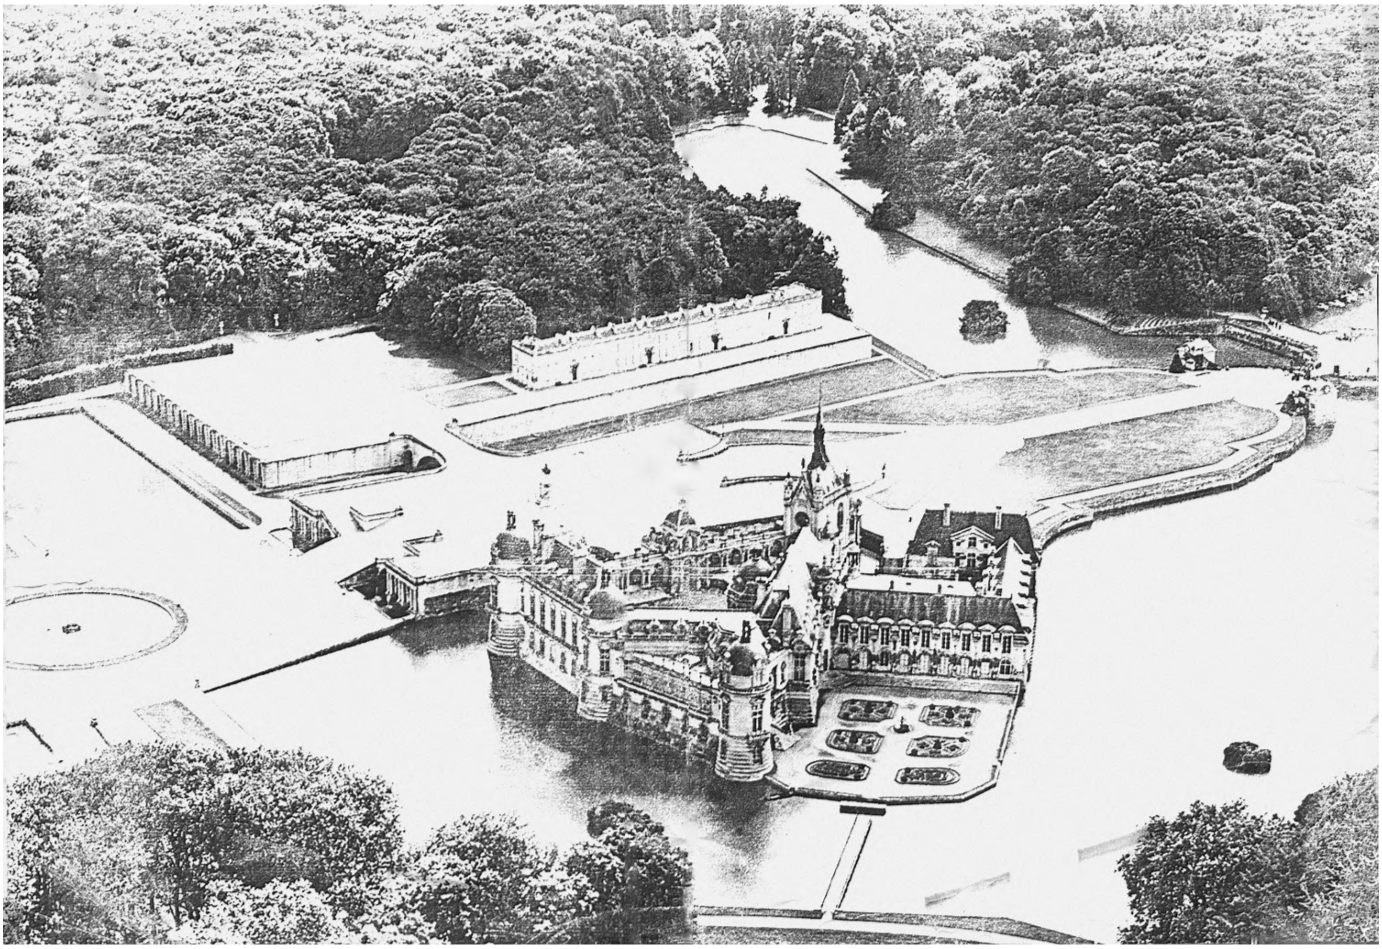
On August 20, new pages were added with Bond visiting Tada in Japan. He meets Tosuke or Toskuke (who here is a friend of Tada instead of his uncle) in a scene a little longer than the September 3 one, including the tea ceremony. The name of the female secret society was The Sign Of The Octopus.

After that Bond goes to Jay Jay's modeling agency, here named Magnum. In another undated set of pages there are scenes at the coastal village and "Blofield" of the "Spector" organization orders to liberate "Ray" Abbid. In these pages he is serving a sentence at "Dorthmore", notably for the assassination of Double-O agents. He betrayed his country in Vietnam and was kicked out of a KGB killer school because he was "too violent". There isn't his therapist, instead we see Abbid overpowering guards (while tied to a chain in his cell) and escaping via a helicopter with a rope that flies over the prison yard.

On other pages it was considered that Ray Abbid would be Turkish (he doesn't always have a favorite weapon here) and that Blofeld approaches Octopussy's cargo boat with a helicopter (rather than a coast guard boat).

In some versions, when Octopussy lets Bond think about her proposal to kill Blofeld, she has him escorted to his hotel where Nara has left a box with a blue-ringed octopus to remind him of her proposal. That's when Wickersham shows up at Bond's room to arrest him. During a fight the box falls and the octopus fatally bites one of the police officers who accompanied Wickersham. (The pursuit during the Holi festival then begins).

Finally, it is interesting to note that a photo of the Chantilly' castle (a location which will appear in A View to a Kill) was put aside by Maibaum during his research (was it considered for the Octopussy pleasure castle?).



A step in the right direction: NATO, Brezhnev and Tu-144

At one point it was considered to change direction and an undated treatment seems to introduce an important element of the plot that will find its way into the film:

The Russian general named Bulgakov (who will becomes General Orlov in the film) believes that an invasion of West Germany must be launched before West Germany deploys its new rockets. Other Russian leaders like Brezhnev disagree.

Bulgakov then engage Octopussy to kill or take hostage the NATO high command in Belgium in order to cripple NATO's nuclear defense. 007 prevents this and Octopussy reveals to him, to save herself, that she was supposed to board a courier plane in Brussels which would have taken her to Moscow if the attack had succeeded. Bulgakov and his accomplices would then killed Brezhnev to carry out a sort of coup.

The screenwriters were looking for a plane that could make a Brussels/Moscow flight in a short time and were studying the Soviet supersonic civil plane Tupolev Tu-144 for this purpose. Russia having made extensive use of industrial espionage during the Cold War, we note an air of resemblance with the Concorde (of which the Tu-144 was the only "rival"). In 1975 the Tupolev Tu-144 entered service, initially as cargo and mail planes. As the aircraft was not very reliable (two crashes between 1975 and 1978), it quickly no longer carried passengers but remained used as a freight plane until 1983.

Leonid Brezhnev was the general secretary of the Communist Party (main leader) of the Soviet Union between 1964 and 1982. It was therefore perhaps quite a daring move to have a plot where he is so openly mentioned. An actor resembling him (Paul Hardwick) will appear in the film.

Bond convince NATO's Supreme Allied Commander to remain silent for 90 minutes, while he board the plane and fly to Moscow with Octopussy, in the hope that he could find help from the general Gogol since he doesn't think he is related to the conspirators.

Bond, Octopussy, Gogol and his men confront Bulgakov in the Kremlin and prevent him from killing Brezhnev in time. Bulgakov dies during the fight and Octopussy escapes.

Apparently Bond was considered a traitor by MI6; M told Bond that the framing came from him and that it had been done so Bond could approach Octopussy more easily.

007 goes to Octopussy's base in Japan because he wants to bring her back to Europe to be judge for the murder of a girl he met earlier in the film. Bond kills an Octopussy's "super-assassin" who attacks him and she also attacks him by throwing a blue-ringed octopus in his face. In a reference to Cleopatra, Octopussy commits suicide by pressing the octopus against her breasts. She falls into the water, Bond follows her and sees that Octopussy has reached an underwater cave where an enormous octopus sensually wraps itself around her dying body...

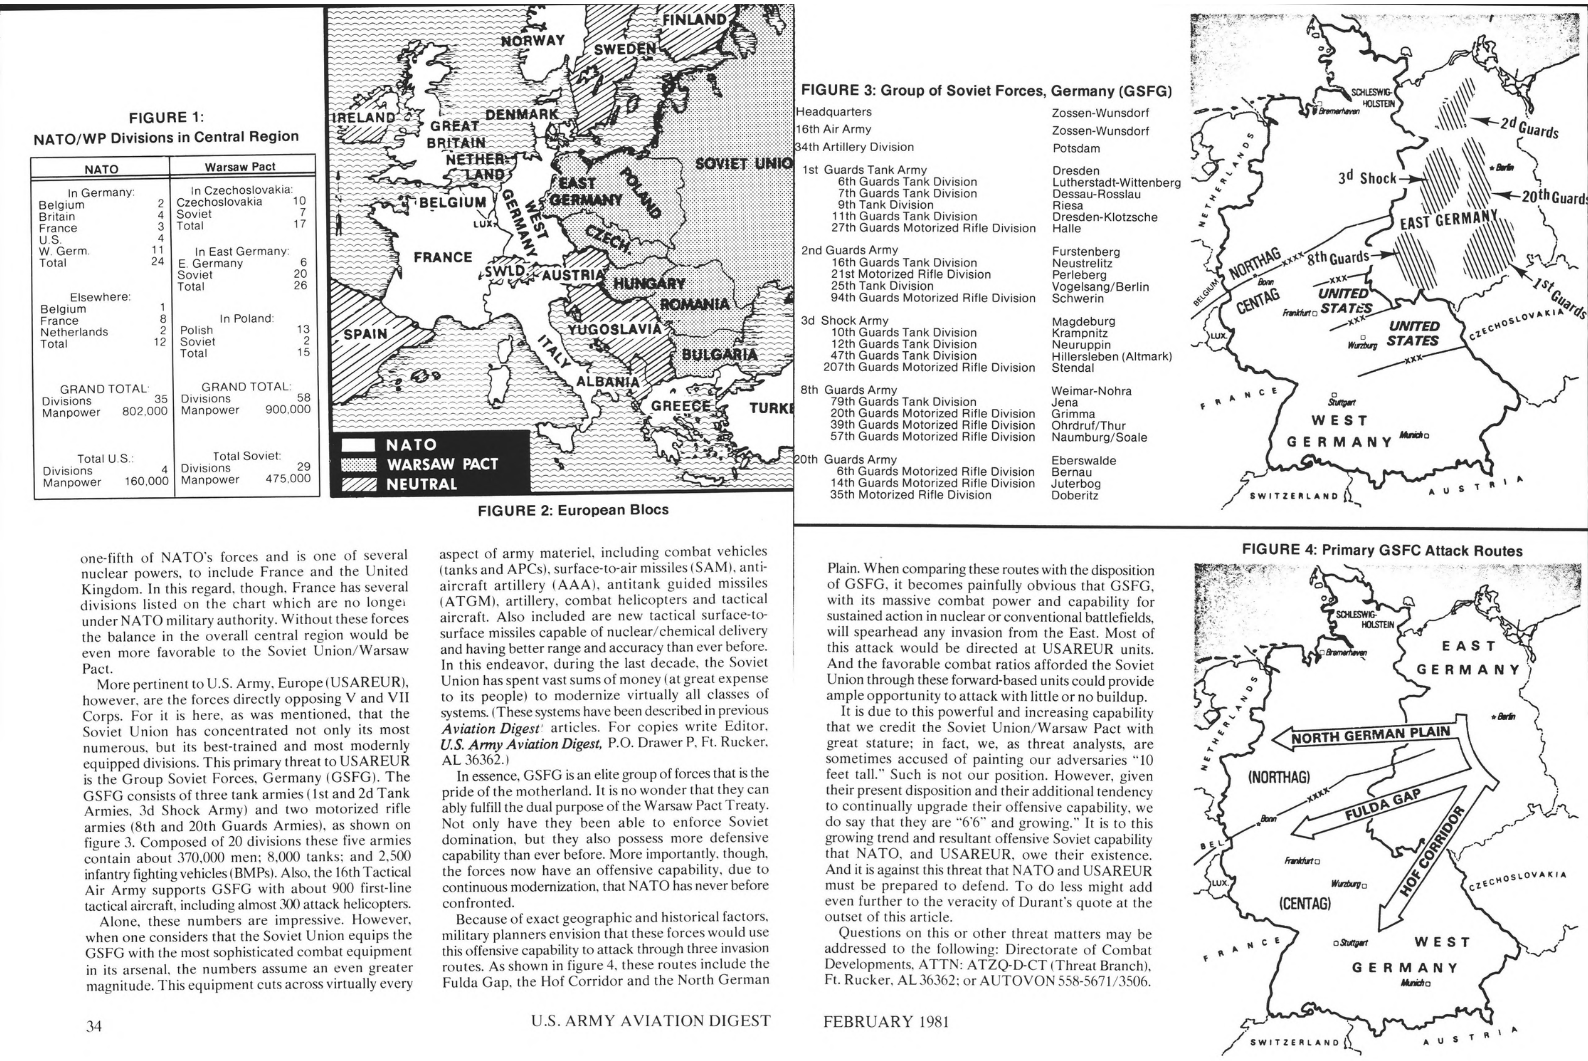


FIGURE 1:
NATO/WP Divisions in Central Region

NATO		Warsaw Pact
In Germany:		In Czechoslovakia:
Belgium	2	Czechoslovakia	10
Britain	4	Soviet	7
France	3	Total	17
U.S.	4
W. Germ.	11	In East Germany:
Total	24	E. Germany	6
		Soviet	20
Elsewhere:		Total	26
Belgium	1
France	8	In Poland:
Netherlands	2	Polish	13
Total	12	Soviet	2
		Total	15
GRAND TOTAL:		GRAND TOTAL:
Divisions	35	Divisions	58
Manpower	802,000	Manpower	900,000
Total U.S.:		Total Soviet:
Divisions	4	Divisions	29
Manpower	160,000	Manpower	475,000

FINLAND
NORWAY
SWEDEN
IRELAND
DENMARK
GREAT BRITAIN
NETHERLAND
SOVIET UNIO
BELGIUM
EAST GERMANY
POLAND
LUX
WEST GERMANY
FRANCE
CZECH
SWLD
AUSTRIA
HUNGARY
ROMANIA
SPAIN
YUGOSLAVIA
ITALY
BULGARIA
ALBANIA
GREECE
TURKE
NATO
WARSAW PACT NEUTRAL

FIGURE 2: European Blocs

FIGURE 3: Group of Soviet Forces, Germany (GSFG)

Headquarters	Zossen-Wunsdorf
16th Air Army	Zossen-Wunsdorf
34th Artillery Division	Potsdam
1st Guards Tank Army	Dresden
6th Guards Tank Division	Lutherstadt-Wittenberg
7th Guards Tank Division	Dessau-Rosslau
9th Tank Division	Riesa
11th Guards Tank Division	Dresden-Klotzsche
27th Guards Motorized Rifle Division	Halle
2nd Guards Army	Furstenberg
16th Guards Tank Division	Neustrelitz
21st Motorized Rifle Division	Perleberg
25th Tank Division	Vogelsang/Berlin
94th Guards Motorized Rifle Division	Schwerin
3d Shock Army	Magdeburg
10th Guards Tank Division	Krampnitz
12th Guards Tank Division	Neuruppin
47th Guards Tank Division	Hillersleben (Altmark)
207th Guards Motorized Rifle Division	Stendal
8th Guards Army	Weimar-Nohra
79th Guards Tank Division	Jena
20th Guards Motorized Rifle Division	Grimma
39th Guards Motorized Rifle Division	Ohrdruf/Thur
57th Guards Motorized Rifle Division	Naumburg/Soale
20th Guards Army	Eberswalde
6th Guards Motorized Rifle Division	Bernau
14th Guards Motorized Rifle Division	Juterbog
35th Motorized Rifle Division	Doberitz

SCHLESWIG-HOLSTEIN
Bremerhaven
2d Guards
Berlin
3d Shock
20th Guards
EAST GERMANY
NETHERLANDS
8th Guards
NORTHAG
Bonn
CENTAG
UNITED STATES
Frankfurt
1st Guards
BELGIUM
LUX.
UNITED STATES
Wurzburg
CZECHOSLOVAKIA
FRANCE
Stuttgart
WEST GERMANY
Munich
SWITZERLAND
AUSTRIA

FIGURE 4: Primary GSFC Attack Routes

SCHLESWIG-HOLSTEIN
Bremerhaven
EAST GERMANY
Berlin
NETHERLANDS
NORTH GERMAN PLAIN
(NORTHAG)
FULDA GAP
Bonn
BEL
Frankfurt
HOF CORRIDOR
Wurzburg
CZECHOSLOVAKIA
LUX.
(CENTAG)
FRANCE
Stuttgart
WEST GERMANY
Munich
SWITZERLAND
AUSTRIA

one-fifth of NATO's forces and is one of several nuclear powers, to include France and the United Kingdom. In this regard, though, France has several divisions listed on the chart which are no longer under NATO military authority. Without these forces the balance in the overall central region would be even more favorable to the Soviet Union/Warsaw Pact.

More pertinent to U.S. Army, Europe (USAREUR), however, are the forces directly opposing V and VII Corps. For it is here, as was mentioned, that the Soviet Union has concentrated not only its most numerous, but its best-trained and most modernly equipped divisions. This primary threat to USAREUR is the Group Soviet Forces, Germany (GSFG). The GSFG consists of three tank armies (1st and 2d Tank Armies, 3d Shock Army) and two motorized rifle armies (8th and 20th Guards Armies), as shown on figure 3. Composed of 20 divisions these five armies contain about 370,000 men; 8,000 tanks; and 2,500 infantry fighting vehicles (BMPs). Also, the 16th Tactical Air Army supports GSFG with about 900 first-line tactical aircraft, including almost 300 attack helicopters.

Alone, these numbers are impressive. However, when one considers that the Soviet Union equips the GSFG with the most sophisticated combat equipment in its arsenal, the numbers assume an even greater magnitude. This equipment cuts across virtually every aspect of army materiel, including combat vehicles (tanks and APCs), surface-to-air missiles (SAM), antiaircraft artillery (AAA), antitank guided missiles (ATGM), artillery, combat helicopters and tactical aircraft. Also included are new tactical surface-to-surface missiles capable of nuclear/chemical delivery and having better range and accuracy than ever before. In this endeavor, during the last decade, the Soviet Union has spent vast sums of money (at great expense to its people) to modernize virtually all classes of systems. (These systems have been described in previous Aviation Digest articles. For copies write Editor, U.S. Army Aviation Digest, P.O. Drawer P, Ft. Rucker, AL 36362.)

In essence, GSFG is an elite group of forces that is the pride of the motherland. It is no wonder that they can ably fulfill the dual purpose of the Warsaw Pact Treaty. Not only have they been able to enforce Soviet domination, but they also possess more defensive capability than ever before. More importantly, though, the forces now have an offensive capability, due to continuous modernization, that NATO has never before confronted.

Because of exact geographic and historical factors, military planners envision that these forces would use this offensive capability to attack through three invasion routes. As shown in figure 4, these routes include the Fulda Gap, the Hof Corridor and the North German Plain. When comparing these routes with the disposition of GSFG, it becomes painfully obvious that GSFG, with its massive combat power and capability for sustained action in nuclear or conventional battlefields, will spearhead any invasion from the East. Most of this attack would be directed at USAREUR units. And the favorable combat ratios afforded the Soviet Union through these forward-based units could provide ample opportunity to attack with little or no buildup.

It is due to this powerful and increasing capability that we credit the Soviet Union/Warsaw Pact with great stature; in fact, we, as threat analysts, are sometimes accused of painting our adversaries "10 feet tall." Such is not our position. However, given their present disposition and their additional tendency to continually upgrade their offensive capability, we do say that they are "6'6" and growing." It is to this growing trend and resultant offensive Soviet capability that NATO, and USAREUR, owe their existence. And it is against this threat that NATO and USAREUR must be prepared to defend. To do less might add even further to the veracity of Durant's quote at the outset of this article.

Questions on this or other threat matters may be addressed to the following: Directorate of Combat Developments, ATTN: ATZQ-D-CT (Threat Branch), Ft. Rucker, AL 36362; or AUTOVON 558-5671/3506.

34 U.S. ARMY AVIATION DIGEST

FEBRUARY 1981

Excerpt from an article about the grouping of Soviet armed forces in Germany (GSFG) from the U.S. Army Aviation Digest (February 1981 issue), which the screenwriters have read.

September 30, 1981' treatment: wargames and evil Octopussy

On September 30, 1981, Maibaum and Wilson completed a new 31-page treatment that open at a NATO firing range in the Netherlands. A new anti-tank rocket is tested there against an old tank. Bond is there, accompanied by a Swedish NATO intelligence officer woman named Greta Nesvig.

Among the crowd of observers, there are two people they suspect. The two guys flee towards a NATO airship when military police approach them. 007 goes purchase them, one of the suspect clings to the airship's mooring cable and climb it; Bond does the same. 007 fights with the suspect on the top of the airship and manages to eject him. The other suspect now at the controls of the airship also tries to eject Bond but 007 launches himself on a cable until he enters, feet first, through the cockpit window. There is a fight there until Bond defeats his opponent and lands the airship. The pre-title sequence, which will surely inspire A View to a Kill, ends with Bond falling unconscious after asking Greta if she is free tonight.

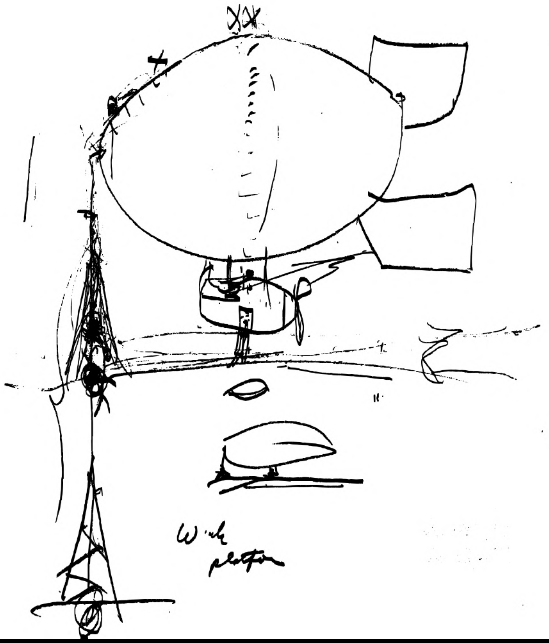

Illustration made by the writers. Some will say that John Gardner's Role of Honor (1984) inspired the screenwriters to include an airship in A View to a Kill; this treatment proves that it was not the case.

At NATO HQ in Belgium, the Supreme Allied Commander Europe (SACEUR, as specified in pages written earlier) Boswell participates in a simulation of European conflict (with bas relief map and miniatures) in the company of a strategist named Leslie Fathom (who looks like to Orson Welles according to the treatment). After this, Fathom says he have to go because he have something important to do in London.

Orson Welles circa 1981.

On the other side of the Iron Curtain in Moscow, Levski, the Russian equivalent of Fathom, outlines his concerns about NATO's new anti-tank rocket. It could be a problem if Russia one day wants to invade West Germany: if an attack had to take place it must take place soon, before the big deployment of these rockets. General Anatol Bulgakov would like to launch this attack but the head of the KGB (who is General Gogol) doesn't agree with him: the policy of the Politburo is strictly defensive.

After exchanging a few words with Penelope Smallbone (still no Moneypenny in this treatment), Bond joins his superiors in M's office (Tanner is present) and meets Clinton-Hogg, an art dealer (a similar character will appear in the film, under the name Jim Fanning). Clinton-Hogg explains that a Fabergé egg named Property of a lady, which disappeared during the Russian Revolution, will be sold at auction tomorrow at Sotheby's (and no longer Christie's). Since other Russian treasures have been sold recently, it's seems that the Russians are looking to get money to finance something. M asks his agent to investigate.

Bond and Clinton-Hogg arrive at Sotheby's in a taxi driven by an MI6 sub-agent named Zec (without K compared to when this character was considered during the writing of For Your Eyes Only).

A girl of about 25 (Jay Jay) and a man (Scanlon) bid but the auction is won at a record price by someone else. Bond, who had previously spotted Scanlon in the crowd at the NATO test, decides to tail him. As in the September 3' treatment, there is a chase in the underground London mail delivery system and Scanlon dies when he is hit by a trolley which propels him on the electrified rails.

Bond and Zec put his corpse in a mail bag and 007 asks Zec to deliver it to Q for a full forensic report. Bond has bigger fish to fry than doing it himself: he has a backgammon tournament planned with a friend: Fathom.

It turns out that one of Fathom's girlfriends that Bond has the opportunity to meet/see again during the tournament is Jay Jay. Fathom is informed that someone wants to see him and he leaves Bond with Jay Jay. It turns out this person who came to meet him is Gogol and Fathom gets into the general's limousine. Bond then becomes the default winner of the tournament; strange that Fathom left while he was winning, Bond thinks.

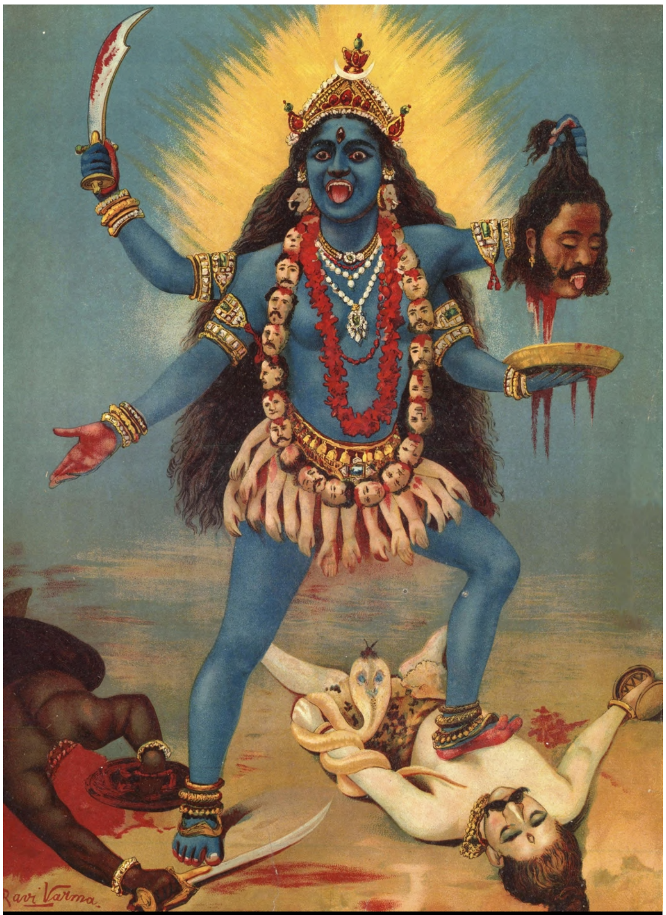
Bond offer Jay Jay to come to his house, which she ends up accepting. They make love, the opportunity to discover that Jay Jay still has an octopus tattoo in this treatment. Once she leaves, Bond contacts M and demands that Fathom be located as he obviously has a bad feeling.

007 goes to the Q-Branch where he is told analysis of Scanlon's body reveals that he is linked to an export company in Jaipur. A little later M informs 007 that Fathom has disappeared. M orders his agent to find him and bring him back, or even shoot him if that is not possible. As a NATO tactician, Fathom must not fall into the hands of the Soviets.

007 arrives at Delhi airport where he is greeted by Wickersham, who in this treatment, is his local MI6 contact (Station D). Wickersham is accompanied by a certain Sastri, from the Indian police. (Bond is unaware of it but he is spotted by Akselrod: an agent of Bulgakov). Bond is informed that Jay Jay would be in Jaipur, but Wickersham suggest they go to lunch/talk at his club first. There (where they even do a polo pony game) Bond says he wants to learn about the octopus symbol and Sastri thinks his uncle can help them.

At the said uncle's house, Bond learns that the blue-ringed octopus was the symbol of an "old cult of sorcerers, spies and assassins who practiced human sacrifices and worshiped Kali, the Hindu goddess of death and destruction" (hence the octopus symbol: Kali is often represented with a multitude of arms).

Back at the club, Wickersham is murdered by someone who then takes his place in a game of pony polo he was to play against Bond; the imposter tries to kill our favorite spy. A battle between Bond and the assassin begins on the back of ponies, with the two men exchanging blows with mallets.



Painting depicting the goddess Kali, by Raja Ravi Varma.

At one point 007 falls from his mount and the assassin tries to trample him with his pony. Bond ends up sending a puck with his mallet towards his opponent who catches it between the two eyes and dies.

General Bulgakov is informed that the assassination attempt on Bond has failed; he orders to liberate Rabidoff. The latter is in prison for having kill his KGB instructor and have an ordinary appearance, except that he regularly have facial spasms.

We find Bond at the Rambagh Palace in Jaipur; there he meets Nara from the hotel staff (and checks that she doesn't have an octopus tattoo: she doesn't). When she leaves his room, she goes to meet Akselrod from the KGB.

007 then goes to the export company to which Scanlon is linked: nothing interesting there it seems but when he leaves, Akselrod and his men try to kidnap him. Bond escapes through the Holi festival by mingling with the crowd but a contortionist (Rabidoff) he passes by knocks him out from behind.

As in the previous treatment, Bond is placed on a funeral pyre but escapes (by himself this time), thanks to a gadget from Q: "Perhaps a double T-shirt which can be inflated and filled with gas, thus creating a small balloon. (Special Effects geniuses please note and do better)", we can read!

When night falls, Bond decides to discreetly return to the export company with Sastri and finds Russian objects of art hidden in plastic trinkets.

At the Lake Palace, Akselrod and Rabidoff visit Octopussy (who is playing flute and) who is described as a woman of indeterminate age with dark skin and a (short) "incongruous" crewcut haircut. Doesn't that remind you of somebody?:

Jamaican singer/actress Grace Jones was considered for the role of Octopussy in this version. She would eventually play May Day in A View to a Kill and be considered again for a role in No Time To Die.

- Michael Wilson[4] : We always thought she [Grace Jones] would be a colorful character. To some extent, the [May Day's] part in A View to a Kill was written with her in mind. We were thinking of her for Octopussy, but couldn't quite arrange it because she was performing on the road. We managed to see some of Conan the Destroyer [1984] and were very impressed with her.

- Grace Jones[5] : They had wanted me to be in Octopussy, in the title role, played by Maud Adams, but there was some anxiety about having a black woman as a villain.

We are told that her grandfather was an exiled rebel Ethiopian prince and her grandmother a Hindu temple dancer. Octopussy is not happy with the way they are going after the British agents: it might attract attention. At one point she hits the ground with an electric whip. She will deal with Bond as she want to; she asks Jay Jay to go to him.

When he returns to his hotel, Bond finds Jay Jay in his bed and begins to question her. She throws a smoke grenade and flees; he chases her to the Lake Palace. There he is well received by Octopussy's girls who take him to change before bringing him to Octopussy.

Octopussy says she is interested in him because it seems Jay Jay has a crush on him. She tells him about her cult and her "quest for spiritual peace, physical perfection and psychic awareness". The cult has changed since the old time, rather than Kali it is now dedicated to the blessing' goddess Parvati, she says. Since Octopussy talked about psychic awareness, Bond asks her if she could use that to locate Fathom.

Octopussy tells him yes but they have to do a sacrifice for this: a goat. There is then a sacrifice ceremony in a cave/temple with Octopussy dressed as Parvati but it turns out that it is actually a human sacrifice that she is about to make: girls drag Bond to the sacrifice platform. As Octopussy is about to stick a knife in Bond's chest, Jay Jay can't accept it and throws a flash grenade before freeing Bond with the help of Dierdre, another of Octopussy's girls (Irish).

They flee into the woods (Dierdre is captured). Jay Jay briefly tells Bond her life story: a girl from a good family who eventually fell into drugs.

U.S. ARMY
3966

Then Sastri leads a raid on the export company and loads the art objects into an armored van. In the Indian countryside, Octopussy and her girls hijack the van using an aerial crane type of helicopter.

Bond and Sastri then decide to raid the Lake Palace but the place is empty, except for Dierdre's body in a bathtub with a blue-ringed octopuses. Jay Jay, who wishes to avenge her, tells Bond that Octopussy is going to meet Fathom at an East German castle, but doesn't reveal precisely where so that Bond will bring her with him.

As Supreme Allied Commander Boswell goes for an inspection tour of West Germany, we find Bond and Jay Jay near some sort of chalet in the woods of the other Germany. They are accompanied by a British agent, Hans, who thinks that Fathom might be there. 007 sneaks inside and finds Fathom: he looks like a defector since he was sipping champagne with Gogol. Fathom explains, however, that the general is an old friend and that in order to counter Bulgakov, they want to organize a simulated wargame conflict between Levski and Fathom (who would win and thus discourage Bulgakov from launching an invasion). This will take place at the castle.

007 thinks it's a good idea in principle but is afraid that Fathom will lose, that it's could be a trap or that he really is a defector. 007 doesn't want to take any risk so Fathom will come with him or he will kill him. However, Gogol's men try to overpower Bond who then manages to escape by jumping through a window.

Boswell stops at an inn in a village called Kugelberg when the lieutenant who accompanied him, Alicia Finney from NATO public relations but in reality Octopussy's right-hand woman, points a gun at him. With the help of her accomplices she takes the portable device which allows the SACEUR to activate NATO's nuclear capabilities ("(This is factual)", according to a note from the writers). Doubles of Boswell and the other generals accompanying him resume the inspection tour.

Similar to the previous treatment, Bond and Jay Jay use an underground watercourse to infiltrate Bulgakov's castle while the simulated conflict takes place (Octopussy watches it on a TV screen from another room in the castle). 007 and Jay Jay come out through the well, overpower Russian soldiers and take their uniforms. They reach the simulation room where Bond envisage to kill Fathom before changing his mind.

Boswell and other handcuffed NATO generals arrive at the castle accompanied by Finney; Bond and Jay Jay see this. In a twist, Octopussy also has her girls (except Finney) locked in cells by the Russians: they know too much and have no longer any use.

Bond knocks Finney unconscious before she bring the nuclear device to General Anatol Bulgakov and he puts it in his pocket. He then goes to the cells and tells the Russian officer there, Vesnen, that he will relieve him. Once Vesnen left, Bond hands the device to Boswell.

Octopussy, who assumes that Bulgakov have the device, joins him and asks him when he plans to stop this conflict simulation joke. In a "Hitler-like" jig of triumph, Bulgakov reveals that the real invasion is about to begin; NATO's defense will be "pathetic, confused and leaderless". Gogol is not happy. A technician arrives and informs Bulgakov that there is movement with NATO nuclear weapons. Bulgakov is furious, he orders Boswell to be killed (Octopussy adds to kill her girls as well) and still wants to launch the attack anyway, even if NATO's capacity is not neutralized (and is even mobilized).

Rabidoff arrives at the cells where he fights with Bond while Jay Jay frees the girls. Bond kills him and frees the NATO generals. The freed Octopussy girls fight against Russian soldiers. Gogol's men arrive at the castle in cars and arrest Bulgakov and Levski (Fathom then opens a bottle of champagne). Bond comes across Octopussy who disarms him with her electric whip before running towards the well and fleeing.

Later we find Bond and Jay Jay making love on a beach near a swimming pool. A blue-ringed octopus approaches them but Bond spots it and avoids it. Octopussy disguised as Kali attacks them with her electric whip; the fight moves into the pool where Bond comes out just before the whip hits the water while Octopussy is still in it. Octopussy stuns, grabs the octopus and holds it against her chest to commit Cleopatra-style suicide. Bond and Jay Jay look away, "it will take a little time to find an appropriate comment from him"...

Fanthom of the past

Below, several elements imagined during the conception of this treatment, starting with a pre-title in which Bond had to recover data on rockets which were to be deployed in West Germany. The sequence begins at the top of a skyscraper with Bond descending the building on a rope. The MI6 subagent Zec who stayed on the roof is overpowered by Oddjob's twin brother (!) or a new assassin (working for Octopussy). 007 stop on a window sill before the henchman does something dangerous with his rope and 007 enters the building by melting a window with Q's flamethrower. Inside Bond makes his way through the opposition with this flame thrower. There is a fight in an elevator shaft between 007 and the assassin who melts the cables, Bond activates the brakes of the elevator on which he falls, and saves his skin (as well as the ones of the passengers).

Another idea was to set the pre-title in the anti-tank rockets assembly plant (the idea of launching an attack on the West because of the deployment of a new type of rocket will ultimately be abandoned in the film to be replaced by a mutual disarmament agreement with NATO).

In one iteration of the story, Octopussy (Naomi La Fonte version) was also to be present at the auction, and had, instead of Jay Jay, the backgammon tournament scenes (Bond finish the game started by Fathom with her). When Octopussy was leaving Bond's house, he followed her and saw her meeting Scanlon (the underground railway scene followed). On Scanlon's body, Bond found a catalog with another Fabergé egg on it which was to be auctioned in Tokyo (007 was to go here).

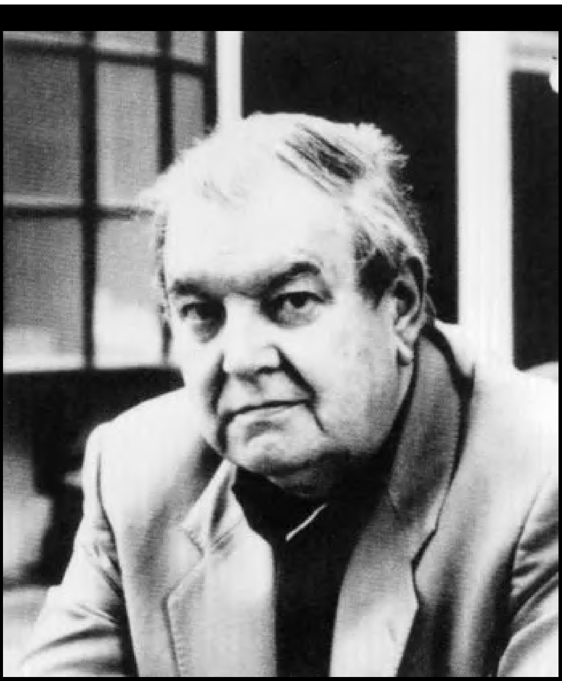
It was also imagined that Fathom sees Bond during the simulated conflict at the castle but doesn't reveal his presence. One page clarifies Octopussy's motivations: money (Bulgakov hires her with funds he earns from art auction sales).

Regarding the evolution of identities: Akselrod was at one point named Boris, Leslie Fathom was named Wesley Fathom, and Clinton-Hogg had "Jeffry" as a first name.

It should be noted that during their research the screenwriters had read various articles on NATO (including NATO Review) and more precisely about SHAPE (NATO's Belgian HQ, photo on the side). The writers even wrote a memo on the procedure for activating NATO's nuclear capability.

- John Glen[6] : We're sticking with the format that we've come back to; using more or less From Russia With Love for style. We're staying with that straight-down-the-line narrative. We are not cheating. We will not press a [gadget] button and have a miracle happen. Bond has to do it for real, and he might have to suffer.

Enter Fraser



George MacDonald Fraser[7] was born in 1925 from Scottish parents at Carlisle, England. He grew up and studied in Scotland, at the Glasgow Academy.

In 1943, enlisted in the Border Regiment, at the age of 18 he was assigned to an Indian infantry division which fought the Japanese in India and Burma. Promoted to lance-corporal three times, he was three times demoted for minor faults, one of which was losing a teapot. Finally, promoted again, he remained a lance-corporal until he was sent before an officer selection commission. He recounts his military journey in his memoirs Quartered Safe Out Here.

At the end of his officer training, he was posted to the Gordon Highlanders, another infantry regiment. Immediately after the war he served in the Middle East and North Africa. He recounts some anecdotes and stories from this period in his series of stories McAuslan.

In 1947 he decided to leave the army and obtained a job as a trainee journalist at the Carlisle Journal, then married another journalist: Kathleen Hetherington. They moved to Canada then returned to Scotland. From 1953 he joined the Glasgow's Scottish daily, The Herald, where he worked for many years as a journalist. He was deputy editor from 1964 to 1969 and then briefly acting editor. He resigned and devoted himself to writing novels.

His first, Flashman (1969), will launch a series of twelve novels which will extend until 2005 and will remain his best-known work. The Flashman novels (character taken from one created by Thomas Hughes in his novel Tom Brown's Schooldays), are presented as a memoir written by the main character, Harry Paget Flashman. As he gets older, he remembers his status as a "hero" of the British Army during the 19th century despite the fact that in reality he was probably one of the worst officers of the British Army: dishonest, coward and devoid of moral sense. The novel series is notable for the accuracy of the historical events described and has received good reviews.

This first book, set notably in India and Afghanistan, proved popular and the sale of the film rights allowed Fraser to become a full-time writer. He moved to the Isle of Man where he could paid less tax.

Between two novels of The Flashman Archives, Fraser will write The Steel Bonnets: a non-fiction book about these cattle rustlers called the Border Reivers.

The film rights of Flashman had been purchased by Richard Lester, but having failed to secure financing for doing the film, he hired Fraser to write the script for the films *The Three Musketeers (*1973) and *The Four Musketeers (*1974), which launched Fraser as a screenwriter.

Thanks to the box office success of the two Musketeers films, in 1975 Fraser and Lester finally managed to make a Flashman film: Royal Flash, written by Fraser himself.

After that, in addition to new Flashman novels, George Fraser wrote other novels and participated in the rewriting of the scripts of several films, including Superman and Octopussy.

After James Bond, Fraser will participate in the writing of films *Red Sonja (*1985) and The Return of the Musketeers (1989). A movie The Lone Ranger with John Landis that he had started writing will be canceled. He also wrote several other novels as well as his memoirs.

In 1999, he was made an Officer of the Order of the British Empire. He died of cancer in 2008 on the Isle of Man, aged 82.

At one point in the writing process, it was decided to bring in a new screenwriter: George MacDonald Fraser. According to Michael Wilson: "He has a tremandous knowledge of history and of India, so we asked him to come on board and help us out"[8]. John Glen adds: "He's a great expert on India and that was going to be location for our movie so we thought he could bring his special humour"[9].

> - George Fraser[10] : When I worked on Octopussy, I couldn't be sure whether Cubby approved of my participation or not. I've an idea, and I may well be wrong, that I had been imposed on him, possibly by David Begelman, then head man at MGM-UA.

> - George Fraser[11] : Perhaps [Cubby] sensed that I, too, had my reservations; I'd thought hard before taking the Octopussy assignment, partly because I wasn't sure that I wanted to be involved in such a high profile notoriously popular entertainment, partly because I was scared stiff of working on the biggest of big pictures which was totally different from anything I'd ever done. On the other hand, was I going to pass up a Bond movie? The chance to be part of cinema history? I swithered, and compromised by asking [...] to name a price that I thought (hoped?) might well be turned down. It wasn't, and in due course I found myself mounting the steps of [...] the main office in the great MGM lot at Culver City, to begin a long and intensive series of round-table discussions with the principals of the Bond production team.

That first day wasn't the best introduction to EON that Fraser could have had according to Glen: "We waited around and exchanged pleasantries [...]. Two hours later, Cubby and Michael still hadn't arrived and eventually they did about 11 o'clock. They turned up with their legal advisor, Norman Tire. They were having a lot of [...] legal problems with the other Bond [Never Say Never Again]. They just said hello and disappeared into an office. And we didn't see them again for a whole day. [...] Fraser thought that the whole thing was most unprofessional"[12].

> - John Glen[13] : George and I met in Hollywood and spent time working on ideas. We were both great students of Ian Fleming's work and would often run sequences from the early movies and leaf through the novels, looking for passages that hadn't been committed to film yet. The India element came into our equation because of George's books.

Unfortunately I do not have any documents dated from this period. However, the books The Light's on at Signpost (Fraser), Ian Fleming and James Bond Manuscripts in The Schøyen Collection (Jon Gilbert), Archives Octopussy (Club James Bond France) and The James Bond Archives (Paul Duncan and Danny Graydon) teach us the following.

Fraser originally wanted to set the pre-title sequence in his adopted country, the Isle of Man, during the Tourist Trophy (motorcycle racing) sidecar. A duel to the death on the circuit with Bond and his opponent (each with a pretty girl in the passenger seat)[14].

> - George Fraser[15] : It would have made a terrific sequence, but it never got to the consideration stage, for it could only have been filmed during the actual > races, when the island is awash with bikes and riders. [...] That happens in June, while we were in autumn, and couldn't hang about.

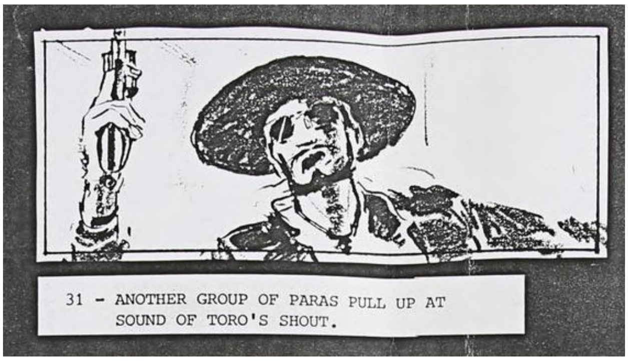
In a document dated December 1981 and credited to Fraser, Glen, Wilson and Albert Broccoli: Blofeld was there again and wanted to take control of Octopussy's organization located in India in order to traffic heroin. Many Octopussy girls were then murdered[16].

Meanwhile in London, M followed these events with interest but was killed before he could intervene; Bond was convinced it was murder[17]. (Bernard Lee having died in January 1981, this undoubtedly explains the origin of this idea). M's successor, Villiers (who turns out to be in Blofeld's pay), assigns Bond a desk job to calm his detective efforts[18]. Worse, Bond is accused of being M's murderer and have to become a fugitive[19]. Pursued by British agents, he will have to prove his innocence and determine what happened to M[20].

We would also find in Fraser's scripts the yo-yo saw, a scene at the Blades club and characters such as Magda, Kamal Khan (who was for a time a friend/ally of Bond in the Afghan resistance, whom he had met during his studies), Smythe and Orlov. Among the locations considered: Cuba, an English cricket match, a race at the Nürburgring and a US Navy submarine[21].

> - Peter Lamont[22] : The first draft was about 200 pages and everyone panicked. It was a long script, but when you read it, all the stage directions were there. It was almost a shooting script. [Fraser] had never been to Udaipur, but he'd done all his research and he knew India like the back of his hand.

In the 4th version dated April 15, 1982 of 138 pages, the gunbarrel opens with a polo ball fired towards the screen. The pre-title shows the mini-jet in South America, pursued by a missile which will destroy the hangar of the spy plane for which 007 had come[23]. According to John Glen, the idea was for the sequence to take place in Argentina (in war against United Kingdom from 2 April to 14 June 1982: the Falklands War), hence the reason for the polo and the horse box from which the plane comes out[24].



31 - ANOTHER GROUP OF PARAS PULL UP AT SOUND OF TORO'S SHOUT.

Colonel Toro is described as having a sombrero, black sunglasses, and carrying revolvers with beaded stocks.

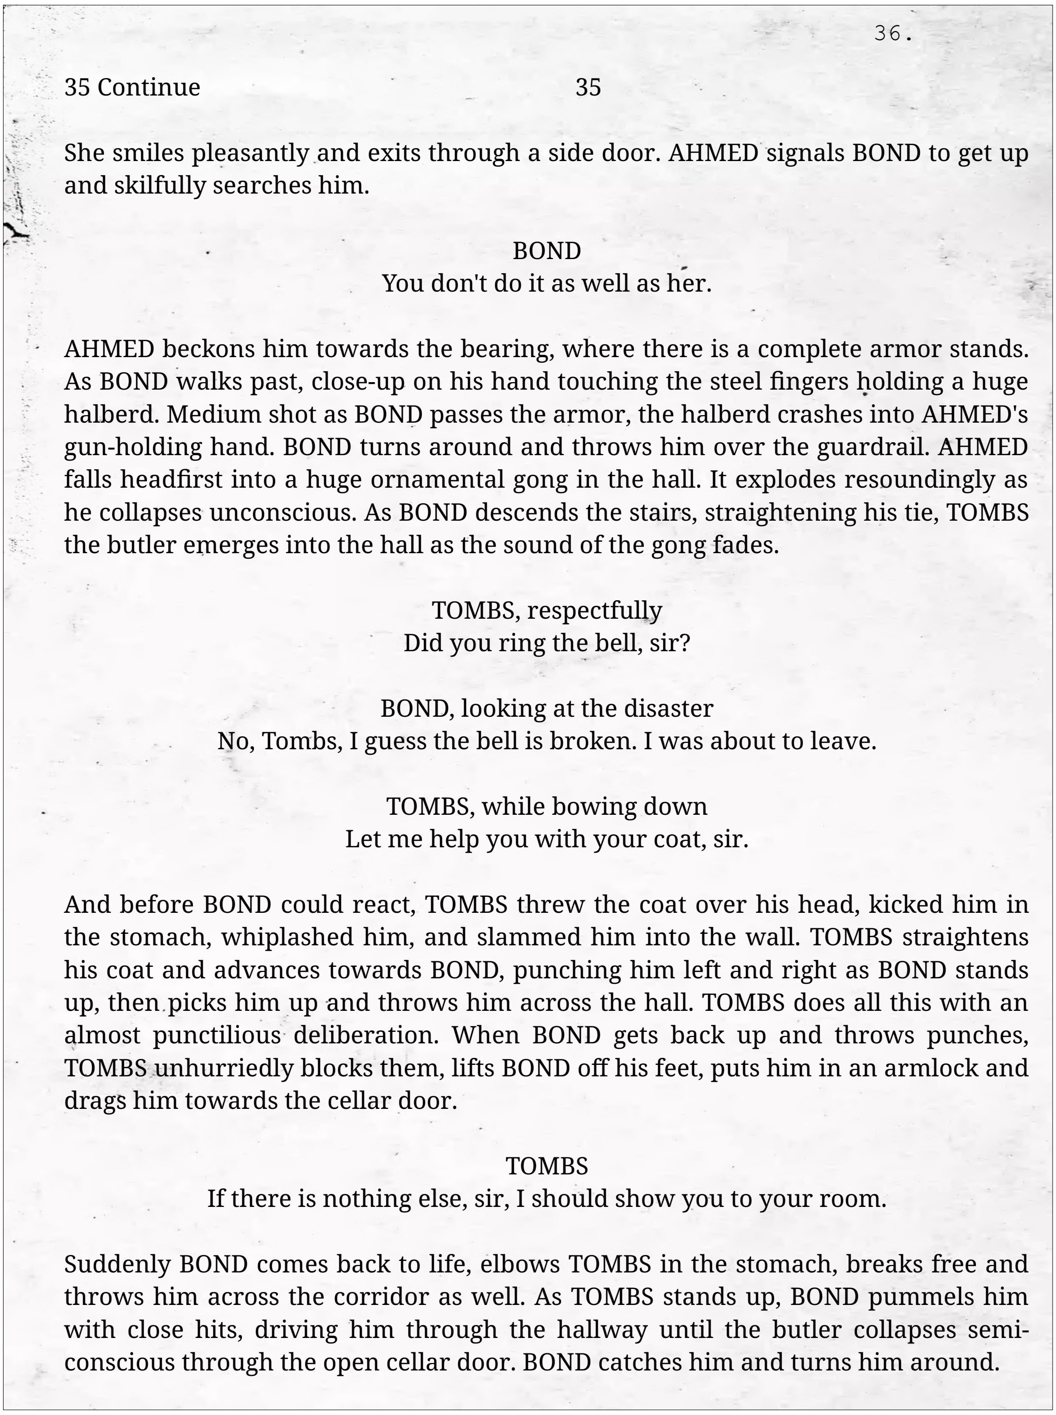
The knife-throwing brothers are present and kill 009. Bond must investigate the Fabergé egg that 009 had. Before the briefing still no Moneypenny, only Smallbone: "Moneypenny was unique. And if I may, so are you", says Bond[25].

Similar to the film there is an auction at Sotheby's where Bond switches the two eggs and sees Kamal Kahn described as an exiled Afghan prince with a "wine-coloured turban and forked beard". After the sale, Bond follows him to his club, the Serpentine, where he plays backgammon against Khan who cheats with loaded dice[26]. When Bond wins, Kamal pronounce a line echoing the novel Moonraker:

> - Moonraker*, chapter 7: I should spend the money quickly, Commander Bond.

Bond also meets Octopussy who introduces herself as "October Debussy", explaining "I was born in October and my mother loved [the composer] Debussy"[27].

Bond drives her to her home in a green Bentley. The place is full of animals (including a tiger and a gorilla) and she explains that she is in the circus world. Octopussy intended to seduce him to get the egg back but when she realizes that he doesn't have it on him, she asks her butler to brutalize him. 007 flees in a scene where the gorilla attacks and destroys his Bentley[28].



36.

35 Continue 35

She smiles pleasantly and exits through a side door. AHMED signals BOND to get up and skilfully searches him.

BOND
You don't do it as well as her.

AHMED beckons him towards the bearing, where there is a complete armor stands. As BOND walks past, close-up on his hand touching the steel fingers holding a huge halberd. Medium shot as BOND passes the armor, the halberd crashes into AHMED's gun-holding hand. BOND turns around and throws him over the guardrail. AHMED falls headfirst into a huge ornamental gong in the hall. It explodes resoundingly as he collapses unconscious. As BOND descends the stairs, straightening his tie, TOMBS the butler emerges into the hall as the sound of the gong fades.

TOMBS, respectfully
Did you ring the bell, sir?

BOND, looking at the disaster
No, Tombs, I guess the bell is broken. I was about to leave.

TOMBS, while bowing down
Let me help you with your coat, sir.

And before BOND could react, TOMBS threw the coat over his head, kicked him in the stomach, whiplashed him, and slammed him into the wall. TOMBS straightens his coat and advances towards BOND, punching him left and right as BOND stands up, then picks him up and throws him across the hall. TOMBS does all this with an almost punctilious deliberation. When BOND gets back up and throws punches, TOMBS unhurriedly blocks them, lifts BOND off his feet, puts him in an armlock and drags him towards the cellar door.

TOMBS
If there is nothing else, sir, I should show you to your room.

Suddenly BOND comes back to life, elbows TOMBS in the stomach, breaks free and throws him across the corridor as well. As TOMBS stands up, BOND pummels him with close hits, driving him through the hallway until the butler collapses semi-conscious through the open cellar door. BOND catches him and turns him around.

- John Glen[29] : One of the ideas was to use an ape, a silver-back gorilla, from a zoo in Kent. The zoo was owned by Mr. John Aspinal, who was also the owner of Cubby's favorite casino [...]. [He and Cubby were friends actually]. [...] So we went down [...] to this zoo and I met [Aspinal's] daughter. [...] She said "I used to go into the cage with the gorilla and we'd wrestle, we'd play". [...] It was a remarkable animal, and we did write it in a sequence: James Bond comes face-to-face with this one. [...] But in the end we thought it was just too difficult to do. [...] [Aspinal also] had tigers and lions and God knows what else.

Bond learns that Kamal and Octopussy have gone to India and he goes there too, where he is greeted by MI6 local contact Sadruddin. They go to see Q who is currently working on a gadgetized tuk-tuk[30].

Gobina comes to find Bond at his hotel and invites him at Kamal's place where we meet Magda and General Orlov. Bond discovers their plan, thanks to what Q has hidden in the egg and escapes Kamal's fort. There is then a big action scene with a chase in the jungle, then with the armed tuk-tuk, elephants and fakirs. 007 manages to escape, thanks to the arrival of a contingent of girls from Octopussy, but Sadruddin, who had come to his aid, dies[31].

Bond is taken to Octopussy but Khan, furious that she helped Bond, now try to eliminate her. When that fails, Khan goes there himself and tells Octopussy that he still needs her to bring one last treasure out of Russia via her circus. 007 pushes her to accept on the condition that he become a partner in this affair; Khan reluctantly agrees[32].

The script moves to Germany where the twins spot Bond searching the lion cage in which the treasure is hidden. 007 was to try to tame the animal (but the idea was abandoned because it was considered too disrespectful to MGM, the studio which had acquired United Artists during the production of For Your Eyes Only, and whose logo is a roaring lion!)[33].

Orlov explains to Khan that Bond is "the man who incapacitated Blofeld and Goldfinger and dismantled Spectre". Bond is going to be tortured and Orlov explains his real plan: to detonate a nuclear bomb on an American base during the circus performance[34].

Gogol, who is investigating the disappearance of a nuclear weapon from Russia, arrives and Bond takes the opportunity to run away, pursued by the twins. Without money, Fraser wanted Bond to approach a passerby to ask for a coin to make a phone call. The passer-by turns out to be Gert Fröbe (who played Goldfinger in 1964) who replies: "sorry, I only have gold"[35]!

Gogol kills Orlov and 007 manages to arrive at the American base in time to defuse the bomb, disguised as a clown[36].

> - George Fraser[37] : I may have seemed unduly casual and flippant, as when I had Bond assuming the costume of a circus clown, and absolutely horrifying Cubby by later proposing an even more bizarre disguise for his hero. I can still hear his cry of outraged disbelief: "You want to put Bond in a gorilla suit?".

The rest of the script consists of an assault on Khan's fortress with the Octopussy girls and the aerial sequence with Bond hanging on the plane[38].

Fraser will write five scripts for Octopussy (the last one is dated May 5, 1982)[39]. Fraser was also able to suggest actor Kabir Bedi for the film (he was cast and played Gobinda)[40].

> - George Fraser[41] : It was a tough, exhausting process, but from the writer's point of view it had immense advantages all too rare in the film world: you knew it was going to get made, that no expense would be spared, [...] that the whole operation would be managed with a professionalism second to none.

June/August 1982' scripts

The director John Glen.

- John Glen[42] : I came back to England to start preparing for production, and I barely got off my coat when the phone rang. It was Cubby ringing from Hollywood [...]: "John, get your ass back here. We've thrown your script [written with Fraser] out and we've got Richard Maibaum in, and Michael Wilson will co-write a new scenario. We don't like that script".

After the passage of George MacDonald Fraser, Richard Maibaum and Michael Wilson took care of reworking the script. I have three scripts signed Maibaum and Wilson, "based on a draft screenplay by George MacDonald Fraser" (according to the covers pages): one from June 10, 1982 (about 140 pages), another dated August 19, 1982 (147 pages). Another also dated June 10 on the cover but which was actually completed later as it contains revisions from 5, 6, 13 and 19 August as well as 7, 9 September and 15 November 1982. The three scripts are very similar and also very close to the finished film.

The only big disparity with the film concerns the character of Vijay, who is completely absent from these scripts! Indeed here there is only one MI6 agent who operates with Bond in India: Sadruddin. This one basically does everything he and Vijay will do in the film.

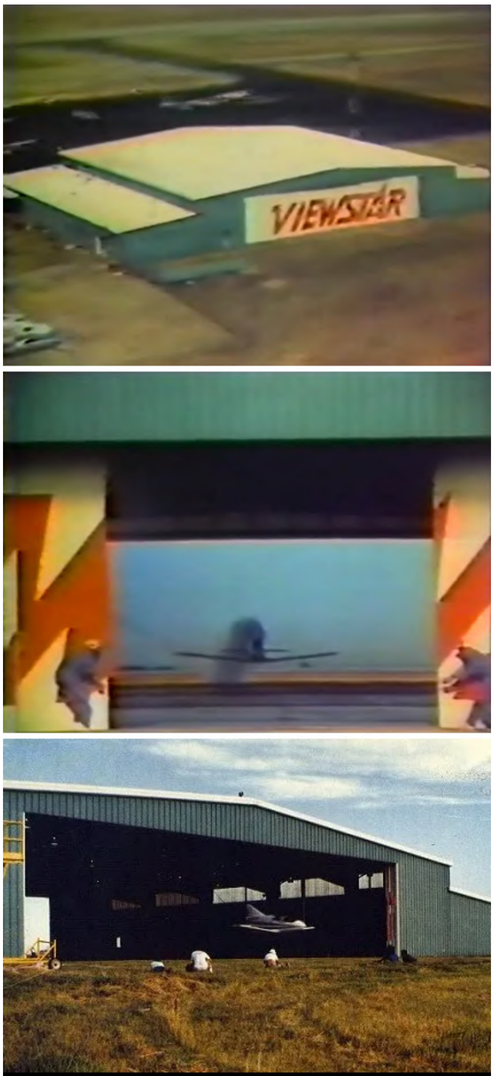
You would think that Sadruddin role was cut in two when tennis player Vijay Amritraj was considered for a role. That said, the reference to the tennis racket (held here by Sadruddin) during the tuk-tuk chase was already present in the August script.

But first let's talk about the differences specific to the June script in which the identity of the guy that Bond impersonates in the pre-title is the one of Russian Colonel Igor Koski (who will revert to Luis Toro in the August scripts and the film; he doesn't have a mustache).

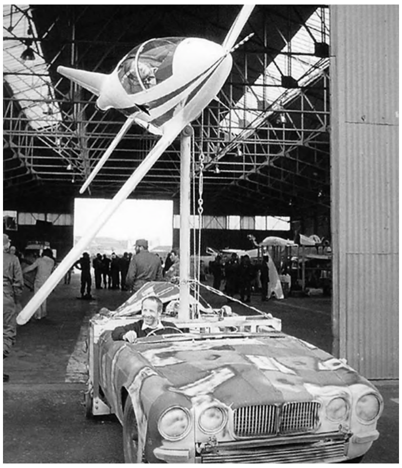
- John Glen[43] : The idea of the parachutists and Roger Moore leaning forward and pulling their ripcord [...] was born on Moonraker, when I was working in California [with the parachutists stuntmen during the filming of the Moonrakers's pre-title sequence]. They told the story about when they used to go on their jaunts, on their way back to the aerodrome, [...] as a gag they used to lean forward and pull their ripcord and the guys will go out the back of the truck.

The Bede jet that was in Fraser's scripts is still here. After trying to place it in Moonraker (from which the gas station gag will be re-used) and For Your Eyes Only; Octopussy will prove to be the right one with a stunt taken from an already existing Japanese ad for Toshiba and its ViewStar Betamax. In this advert, pilot Corkey Fornof flew a BD-5J plane through a hangar while it appeared, thanks to a special effect, that the doors were opening[44].

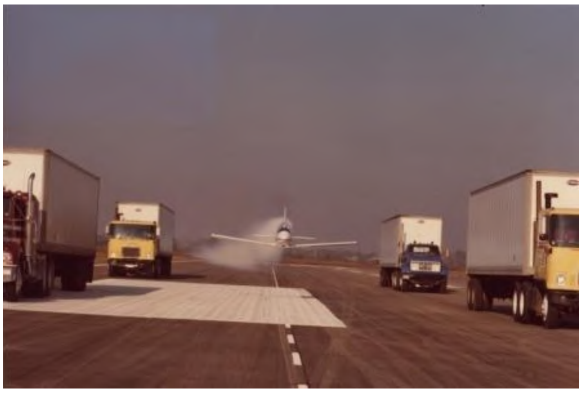
- John Glen[45] : The Bede was flown by an American named Corkey Fornof, and he'd come come over to England, we'd invited him over. He ran me a commercial that he'd made for a Japanese company [...]. I said [to him]: "Frankly Corkey, it's the most boring scene I've ever seen. It might be terribly dangerous [...] but it looks boring on the screen, because there's nothing there, there's no drama. [...] Could you do that with lots of people in the hangar, so we can get some drama?".



Above is the Toshiba ad that inspired the pre-title sequence.



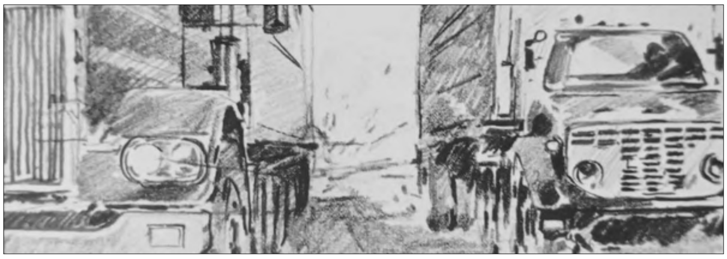
Fornof replies no: it would be too dangerous[46]. However the concept will be kept, Fornof will be hired to pilot the plane in the film, and thanks to the magic of cinema and the geniuses of the technical team who found a way to film the sequence inside the hangar filled with people (by hanging the plane above a car on a pole), it will be possible to sell to the audience what we see in the film.

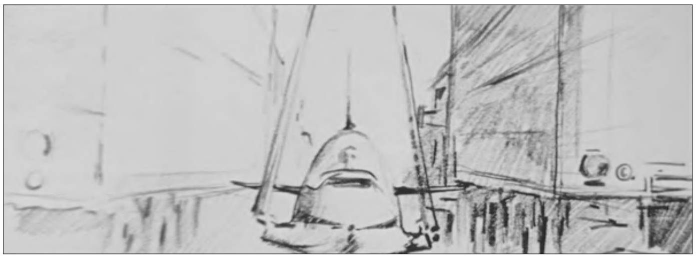


It will also be tempted to include another stunt already attempted in another ad (see picture on right): having Bond and his plane pass between two trucks as it lands on the road[47]. As showed in the Octopussy's storyboard bellow, folding wings was supposed to be part of this sequence.

This pre-title will be the last one to be independent of the main plot, all subsequent films until today will more or less link the pre-title to the rest of the plot. Although in the end, even before Octopussy, there were very, very few totally independent pre-title sequences in the saga, Maibaum declared during the promotion of The Living Daylights:

- Richard Maibaum[48] : We are finding now, that after having done this business of having the mini-adventures, it makes a picture too long and we're beginning to start now with something that is exciting and yet starts the story of the film.





Further on we also note that Fanning was named "Smythe" in this script.

In India, Bond has a drink with Magda at the bar before leaving the casino after his game with Kamal.

For the poster through which the tuk-tuk passes, if the one with the dragon's head is present in the script, in parentheses the writers propose an alternative poster: the Indian version of the "legs" poster of For Your Eyes Only!

After visiting Q's laboratory (where there is no watch with a TV screen), Magda doesn't tell Bond that Kamal is offering to trade the egg for his life at the hotel restaurant.

Further on, at Kamal's dinner, Bond refuses the soufflé, asking for a vodka martini "shaken not stirred" instead. Wara (a waiter) brings one to him. Also during the dinner, Kamal asks Bond if he knows how to shoot and invites him to join him tomorrow for a tiger hunt. 007 asks if it's not illegal: "Here, I make the rules, Mr. Bond".

A little later at Kamal's palace, Bond is not locked in the cold room. Instead he tries to return to his room but Magda pulls him towards hers:

> - Bond: Thanks.
> - Magda: What were you doing?
> - Bond: Just trying not to be caught. [Pointing at Orlov's helicopter as it leaves] What's that all about?
> - Magda: No one tells me anything.
> - Bond: Why are you helping me?
> - Magda: Guess... I would hate for Kamal to use his drugs on you, it would be such a waste.
> - Bond: Then I'd better figure out how to get out of here.

007 sees that Magda on the bed have his wallet:

> - Bond: How did you manage that?
> - Magda: My dad had a slight of hand act in Vaudeville. He taught me. Your best chance is at dawn. You wouldn't survive in the jungle at night.

Since they have a few hours to kill, Bond joins her in bed. When Bond wakes up, he says he doesn't think there are any tigers left in the region and Magda tells him that it's him they're actually going to hunt. She gives him a route and wishes him good luck. He then pretends to be one of the bodies in the cold room.

> - Michael Wilson[49] : The whole thing come from a short story, The Most Dangerous Game [by Richard Connell], where a fellow arrives on an island and he is told by his host that they'd like to go hunting and he [finds himself being] the quarry.

The chase in the jungle has some differences and additional scenes: while Bond is being chased, Magda passes a message in morse code with a mirror and sunlight to Octopussy's girls located in the latter's palace. At one point Bond gets rid of one of his pursuers who is on horseback and takes his mount until it receives a bullet. There is no tiger but a leopard.

BARBARA WOODHOUSE

- John Glen[50] : Roger had just returned from America, where British dog trainer Barbara Woodhouse was all the rage. Her admonishing catchphrase, "Sit!", was on every impersonator's lips, and Roger suggested that Bond should use the instuction on the advancing stuffed tiger.

On horseback, Magda joins Octopussy and explains to her that Bond is a little ahead of his pursuers but that he should arrive at the river before dark.

- Octopussy: Kamal has violated my explicit instructions.

Bond almost gets crushed by the legs of one of the elephants (there is the scene where he loosens the Gobinda's howdah). At one point 007 uses a vine (there is no comparison to Tarzan written however) and ends up falling into a river where he is carried away by the current.

Almost lifeless, he manages to reach a bank where he falls unconscious. Octopussy, who was looking for him with her rowing boat, comes across Bond and brings him on board. Our 007 is in bad shape:

- Bond: I'm alive... I hope.
[...]
- Girl 1: Get some rest. I'll check on you in the morning.
- Bond: I don't think I can wait until then.

Bond (who limps a little) is brought to Octopussy's palace (there is thus no scene with the submarine disguised as a crocodile from the film, likewise Bond doesn't threaten Octopussy with his weapon during his meeting with her). 007 tells us that the guide that Octopussy's father murdered was a friend of his [Bond's] family.

Octopussy talks a little about her mother too:

- Octopussy: The social stigma of an Eurasian wife effectively ended his career. After she died he became a recluse, studying marine animals in Ceylon.

After Kamal has arrived and left:

- Octopussy: A particularly unpleasant man.
- Bond: I thought you were partners.
- Octopussy: Hardly, he occasionally works for me.

A little further on, Octopussy talks about her father again and we find a trace of a previous treatment:

- Octopussy: He loved them [the octopuses], he was the one who nicknamed me Octopussy. Because of his interest I was naturally fascinated by the Kali cult of the blue-ringed octopus.
- Bond: Enough to revive it.
- Octopussy: It's the symbol of my organization.

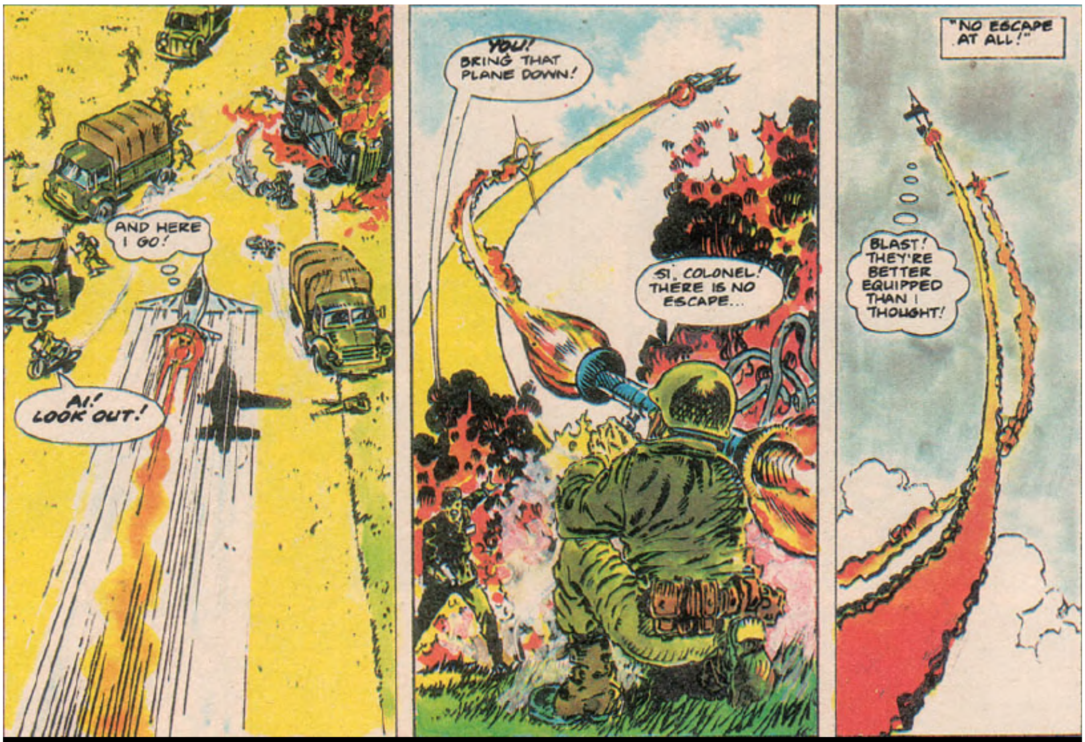
She also explains that she entered the world of smuggling after seeing how much smugglers were taking from her father for his gold.

- Octopussy: What in one place is a crime, in another is a legitimate business. In some countries my smuggling operations are listed on the local stock exchange.

The thugs sent by Kamal to Octopussy's palace strangle a guard during their infiltration. During the fight against them, 007 falls with one of them into the water where there is a crocodile. In the scene that follows, Bond and Q, both in the film's crocodile-disguised submarine gadget, return to shore where Sadruddin (alive) is waiting for them. Unlike the film, there is no scene where this character fish with Q on the edge of the palace, nor a scene where he is assassinated.

Finally, to finish with the June script, in Germany it is Bond who arrives first at the telephone box (and it is the woman who taps on the window): he tries to contact the American military base but his communication is cut off several times due to lack of money and difficulties to finding the right interlocutor.

Now let's talk about the differences between the film and the August 19 script (most of which also existed in the June script, but were not specific to them):



AND HERE I GO!
AI! LOOK OUT!
YOU! BRING THAT PLANE DOWN!
SI, COLONEL! THERE IS NO ESCAPE...
"NO ESCAPE AT ALL!"
BLAST! THEY'RE BETTER EQUIPPED THAN I THOUGHT!

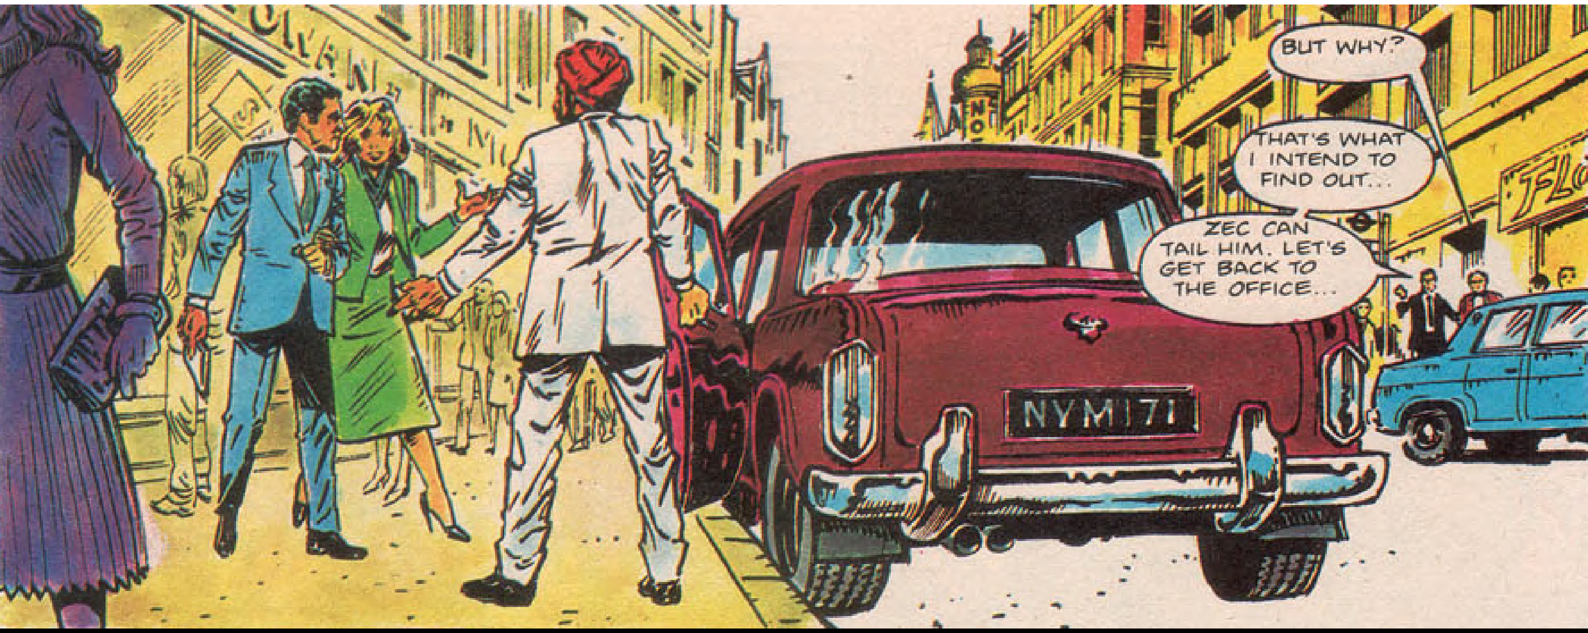
The soldier with the Blowpipe is, however, the solution that was chosen in the Marvel comic book adaptation.

In the pre-title two alternatives are given for launching of the enemy missile: either by a Blowpipe held by a soldier, or by an anti-aircraft battery after a call from an officer by walkie-talkie. It is the second solution which was retained in the film (although it only appears in parentheses in the script).

After meeting Lenkin (the art expert at the National Art Repository of the Kremlin), Orlov originally had an additional line for the twin who accompanied him: "Lenkin's mental health concerns me. When his work for us is completed, find him a suitable sanatorium: in Siberia".

(The twins are not named in the stage directions, just designated by numbers, "TWIN 1" and 2, although one of them is aptly named Mischa during a line of dialogue).

Agent Zec is still present (he will be renamed Smithers in the film).



BUT WHY?
THAT'S WHAT I INTEND TO FIND OUT...
ZEC CAN TAIL HIM. LET'S GET BACK TO THE OFFICE...
NYM 171

Although he doesn't appear in the film, Zec is present in Marvel's comic book adaptation.

It can be noted that the decision to use the James Bond Theme during the sequence with the flute was already in the script. An interesting sentence was also said by Sadruddin: "We think he [Kamal] have political ambitions. Very cozy with the Russians". Another line, this time spoken by Orlov, also hinted at Kamal's political ambitions: "Your hopes for political power depend on it" (the June script went further with Orlov telling Bond: "Kamal has the dream of being emperor of Afghanistan").

Kamal is described as a "striking figure, immaculately dressed in western clothes. In his early forties, darkly handsome and self-possessed, his body is lithe but athletic". EON ended up casting Louis Jourdan, 61, for the role.

- Richard Maibaum[51] : Louis Jourdan was okay. I thought he stood off and spoofed a little bit to much because he was a great star and couldn't take seriously this guy he was playing in a Bond picture. He was good, except that he was so kind of above it all.

The script also suggests, but doesn't require, a gag during the "hunt" sequence: "He swings out over marshy river like Tarzan".

At the end of the scene, 007 finds refuge in a tourist boat. It "was Michael Wilson's idea. In fact, he's in the scene. It is one of his regular cameos", remembers John Glen[52].

After this sequence, Bond was getting a massage from a "beautiful Indian masseuse". In the film, it is Vijay who massages him... We will also note that Sadruddin does indeed die in this August' script.

In the film, the face to face with Orlov is cut by a shot where we see the soldiers loading the jewels into the trunk of a car. The original dialogue was as follows:

- Orlov: Who are you?
- Bond: British Secret Service, licensed to kill, and this time I'll enjoy it.
- Orlov: Not for long. You are in an extremely dangerous position. What do you want?
- Bond: Let's not play games. I saw the bomb. What are you and Kamal up to?
- Orlov: You should be more concerned about getting out of here alive.
- Bond: I'm worried about what happens if that bomb goes off on a U.S. airforce base. Do you want to start a nuclear war?
- Orlov: Only a lunatic wants that.
- Bond: Your man in the tunnel said the bomb was identical to an American one... That's it! You're trying to stage a nuclear accident,
- Orlov: Inventive, but purely speculative. [...] Assuming you are correct, what possible military advantage would be gained?
- Bond: An American nuclear accident in Europe would cause unilateral disarmament. Europeans would say: "Yanks go home and take your bombs with you".
- Orlov: A plausible scenario.
- Bond: NATO disarms itself, but you keep your military superiority.

The film is written during the Euromissile crisis / NATO Double-Track Decision, a period where major anti-nuclear demonstrations between 1979 and 1985 were organized in favor of nuclear disarmament and against the installation of American' Pershing II missiles in Europe (including West Germany) by NATO.

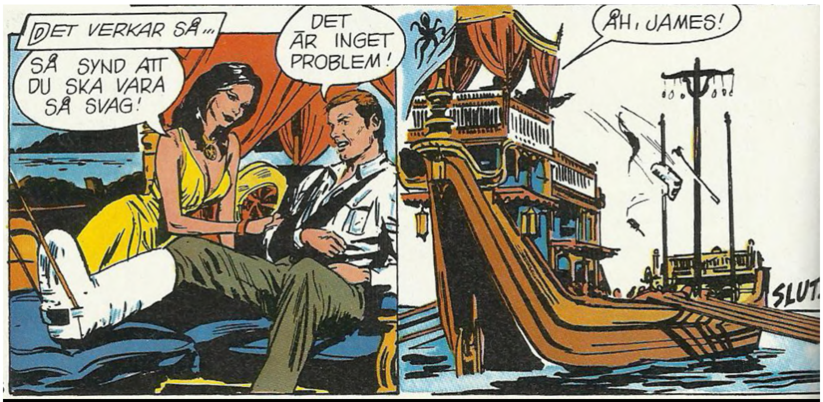
- Kabir Bedi (Gobinda)[53] : I just had to play on the real silent menace of the character. I did suggest to Michael Wilson, "Give Gobinda certain supernatural powers, Eastern magic, so Bond has to battle a totally different kind of villain". He could have been able to levitate, sorcery, do charms, spells, have all things that could have confounded Bond. They said, "No, no we prefer to keep things realistic", which I found ironic.

It's not often that the cinematic Bond ventures into the realm of the supernatural, so it's interesting to note that a scene of the script demands, after that 009 hit Twin 2, "[Twin 1] wincing as though feeling his identical twin's pain". Also later after that Bond kills Twin 2 with a hit on his head with the cannon: Twin 1 "suddenly clasping his head in sympathetic psychic reaction to [his] brother's fate".

Gogol shouts "Stop him" to the Vopos when Orlov tries to board the train at the border and still absent is the gag where Kamal and Gobinda's car doesn't start on the first try when they want to leave the circus. After Bond defuses the bomb, the general tells him that it was close and that he was formidable, 007 responds: "Just clowning around, general".

We can note that Maibaum credits Cubby Broccoli with the dialogue line "go out and get him" when Kamal asks Gobina to get out of the plane[54].

In fact, many of the dialogues in the script have very slight differences from the film, as does the order of the scenes. We don't find Kamal's line that Bond has the deplorable habit of survive (even though it was present in the June script).



DET VERKAR SÅ...
SÅ SYND ATT DU SKA VARA SÅ SVAG!
DET ÄR INGET PROBLEM!
ÅH, JAMES!
SLUT.

The Semic's version of the comic adaptation also contains some of these small differences...

Other small differences include Gobinda not crushing the rigged dice, Magda smoking a cigarette in bed, and Octopussy wearing the Romanov star around her neck in the final scene (Bond also throws the medical equipment overboard). We can note that the Octopussy girls are also sometimes called the "Octopussies" in the script.

Finally we note that Vijay is finally present on the revised September pages (in a similar way to the film), there is also this dialogue upon Bond's arrival in India:

> - Sadruddin: Vijay is the tennis pro at Kamal's club. He knows him pretty well.

Octopussy shooting began on August 9, 1982[55] (the filming of aerial scenes for the finale had, however, begun in June[56]).

In that same year 1983 was also released Never Say Never Again and in a sort of a memo on this film, Maibaum writes about the sort of jetpack flying platform that Bond and Leiter use in Never Say Never Again: "we thought about using them at Kamal's castle".

And since you probably wonder, Maibaum though that "Connery was the best thing about" Never Say Never Again, "although he doesn't look well in the early sequences". He find Brandauer "excellent", liked Carrera, and disliked Q he tough "completely out of character". He very liked some scenes like the one where Bond pretend to be a masseur, the videogame duel (although it "has no real payoff") one and the motorbike one. He however though the horse jump "looked phoney". "The sex stuff is considerable more explicit than in our films" and "the music was the loudest I've ever heard in a film". "For my dough the film, except for Sean, lacked charm", although Maibaum adds he can hardly be objective given his personal interest in the saga.

> - John Glen[57] : Octopussy is very relevant to the current situation in Moscow. When we were writing the plot for Octopussy, we had little idea that it would be virtually the truth. There is a big scandal in Moscow about the State Circus. Brezhnev's son-in-law was involved in the scandal. The State Circus was being used to smuggle jewelry into Russia. In other words, they were taking payment, presumably, from the various places they performed, but they didn't take money, they took jewelry. They raided this guy's flat and found a million dollars worth of gems. And by some strange coincidence, that's part of our story.

Sources/references from chapter 13: Octopussy

1 "The James Bond Archives" by Danny Graydon and Paul Duncan (2012).
2 "The Complete James Bond Movie Encyclopedia" by Steven Jay Rubin (2003 edition).
3 "Inside Octopussy" DVD's bonus.
4 "On Location with A View to a Kill" by Lee Goldberg in Starlog magazine (issue #92, march 1985).
5 "I'll Never Write My Memoirs", autobiography by Grace Jones (2015).
6 "James Bond is Back - and Octopussy's Got Him!" by Don McGregor in Starlog magazine (issue #68, 1983).
7 For George MacDonald Fraser biography, see for the sources:
"George MacDonald Fraser" obituary by Stanley Reynolds in The Guardian (2008):
https://www.theguardian.com/books/2008/jan/04/pressandpublishing.georgemacdonaldfraser
"George MacDonald Fraser" obituary in The Telegraph (2008):
https://www.telegraph.co.uk/news/obituaries/1574486/George-MacDonald-Fraser.html
"George MacDonald Fraser: Writer whose tales of Flashman changed the face of British historical fiction" obituary in The Independant (2008): https://www.independent.co.uk/news/obituaries/george-macdonald-fraser-writer-whose-tales-of-flashman-changed-the-face-of-british-historical-fiction-768103.html
"George MacDonald Fraser, Author of Flashman Novels, Dies at 82" obituary by Margalit Fox in The New York Times (2008): https://www.nytimes.com/2008/01/03/arts/03fraser.html
"George MacDonald Fraser OBE" obituary in The Scotsman (2008):
https://www.scotsman.com/news/obituaries/george-macdonald-fraser-obe-2459096
"Flashman creator, Herald writer: George MacDonald Fraser dies" obituary in The Herald (2008):
https://www.heraldscotland.com/news/12452548.Flashman_creator__Herald_writer__George_MacDonald_Fraser_dies/
Flashman (novel)'s Wikipedia page.
George MacDonald Fraser 's Wikipedia page.
8 "The James Bond Archives" by Danny Graydon and Paul Duncan (2012).
9 "Some Kind of Hero: The Remarkable Story of the James Bond Films" by Matthew Field & Ajay Chowdhury (2015).
10 "The Light's on at Signpost" autobiography by George MacDonald Fraser (2002).
11 "The Light's on at Signpost" autobiography by George MacDonald Fraser (2002).
12 MI6 Confidential magazine (issue Special #4 "John Glen: all time high"; 2020).
13 "The James Bond Archives" by Danny Graydon and Paul Duncan (2012).
14 "The Light's on at Signpost" autobiography by George MacDonald Fraser (2002).
15 "The Light's on at Signpost" autobiography by George MacDonald Fraser (2002).
16 "Ian Fleming and James Bond: Manuscripts in The Schøyen Collection" by Jon Gilbert (2020).
17 "Ian Fleming and James Bond: Manuscripts in The Schøyen Collection" by Jon Gilbert (2020).
18 "Ian Fleming and James Bond: Manuscripts in The Schøyen Collection" by Jon Gilbert (2020).
19 "Ian Fleming and James Bond: Manuscripts in The Schøyen Collection" by Jon Gilbert (2020).
20 "Ian Fleming and James Bond: Manuscripts in The Schøyen Collection" by Jon Gilbert (2020).
21 "Ian Fleming and James Bond: Manuscripts in The Schøyen Collection" by Jon Gilbert (2020).
22 "Some Kind of Hero: The Remarkable Story of the James Bond Films" by Matthew Field & Ajay Chowdhury (2015).
23 "Poulpe fiction" by Matthew Field & Ajay Chowdhury in french magazine Archives of the Club James Bond France (issue "Octopussy", 2021). Translated from french..
24 MI6 Confidential magazine (issue Special #4 "John Glen: all time high"; 2020).
25 "Poulpe fiction" by Matthew Field & Ajay Chowdhury in french magazine Archives of the Club James Bond France (issue "Octopussy", 2021). Translated from french.
26 "Poulpe fiction" by Matthew Field & Ajay Chowdhury in french magazine Archives of the Club James Bond France (issue "Octopussy", 2021). Translated from french.
27 "Poulpe fiction" by Matthew Field & Ajay Chowdhury in french magazine Archives of the Club James Bond France (issue "Octopussy", 2021). Translated from french.
28 "Poulpe fiction" by Matthew Field & Ajay Chowdhury in french magazine Archives of the Club James Bond France (issue "Octopussy", 2021). Translated from french.
29 MI6 Confidential magazine (issue Special #4 "John Glen: all time high"; 2020).
30 "Poulpe fiction" by Matthew Field & Ajay Chowdhury in french magazine Archives of the Club James Bond France (issue "Octopussy", 2021). Translated from french.
31 "Poulpe fiction" by Matthew Field & Ajay Chowdhury in french magazine Archives of the Club James Bond France (issue "Octopussy", 2021). Translated from french.
32 "Poulpe fiction" by Matthew Field & Ajay Chowdhury in french magazine Archives of the Club James Bond France (issue "Octopussy", 2021). Translated from french.
33 "Some Kind of Hero: The Remarkable Story of the James Bond Films" by Matthew Field & Ajay Chowdhury (2015).
34 "Poulpe fiction" by Matthew Field & Ajay Chowdhury in french magazine Archives of the Club James Bond France (issue "Octopussy", 2021). Translated from french.

35 "Poulpe fiction" by Matthew Field & Ajay Chowdhury in french magazine Archives of the Club James Bond France (issue "Octopussy", 2021). Translated from french.
36 "Poulpe fiction" by Matthew Field & Ajay Chowdhury in french magazine Archives of the Club James Bond France (issue "Octopussy", 2021). Translated from french.
37 "The Light's on at Signpost" autobiography by George MacDonald Fraser (2002).
38 "Poulpe fiction" by Matthew Field & Ajay Chowdhury in french magazine Archives of the Club James Bond France (issue "Octopussy", 2021). Translated from french.
39 "The James Bond Archives" by Danny Graydon and Paul Duncan (2012).
40 "The Light's on at Signpost" autobiography by George MacDonald Fraser (2002).
41 "The Light's on at Signpost" autobiography by George MacDonald Fraser (2002).
42 MI6 Confidential magazine (issue Special #4 "John Glen: all time high"; 2020).
43 MI6 Confidential magazine (issue Special #4 "John Glen: all time high"; 2020).
44 See it here: https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=bMghzLhX-B8
45 MI6 Confidential magazine (issue Special #4 "John Glen: all time high"; 2020).
46 MI6 Confidential magazine (issue Special #4 "John Glen: all time high"; 2020).
47 MI6 Confidential magazine (issue Special #4 "John Glen: all time high"; 2020).
48 Symposium by Richard Maibaum for the Writer's Guild of America, Beverly Hills, California, October 1987; via "Speaking of Writing" by Sylvia Kamion Maibaum and Richard Maibaum (2019).
49 "Inside Octopussy" DVD's bonus.
50 "The James Bond Archives" by Danny Graydon and Paul Duncan (2012).
51 "Writing Bond" by Mark A. Altman in Cinefantastique magazine (vol. 19, issue 5, July 1989).
52 MI6 Confidential magazine (issue Special #4 "John Glen: all time high"; 2020).
53 "Some Kind of Hero: The Remarkable Story of the James Bond Films" by Matthew Field & Ajay Chowdhury (2015).
54 "Cheers, 007!" article by Richard Maibaum in The Hollywood Reporter (July 14, 1987).
55 "The James Bond Archives" by Danny Graydon and Paul Duncan (2012).
56 "The James Bond Archives" by Danny Graydon and Paul Duncan (2012).
57 "James Bond is Back - and Octopussy's Got Him!" by Don McGregor in Starlog magazine (issue #68, 1983).

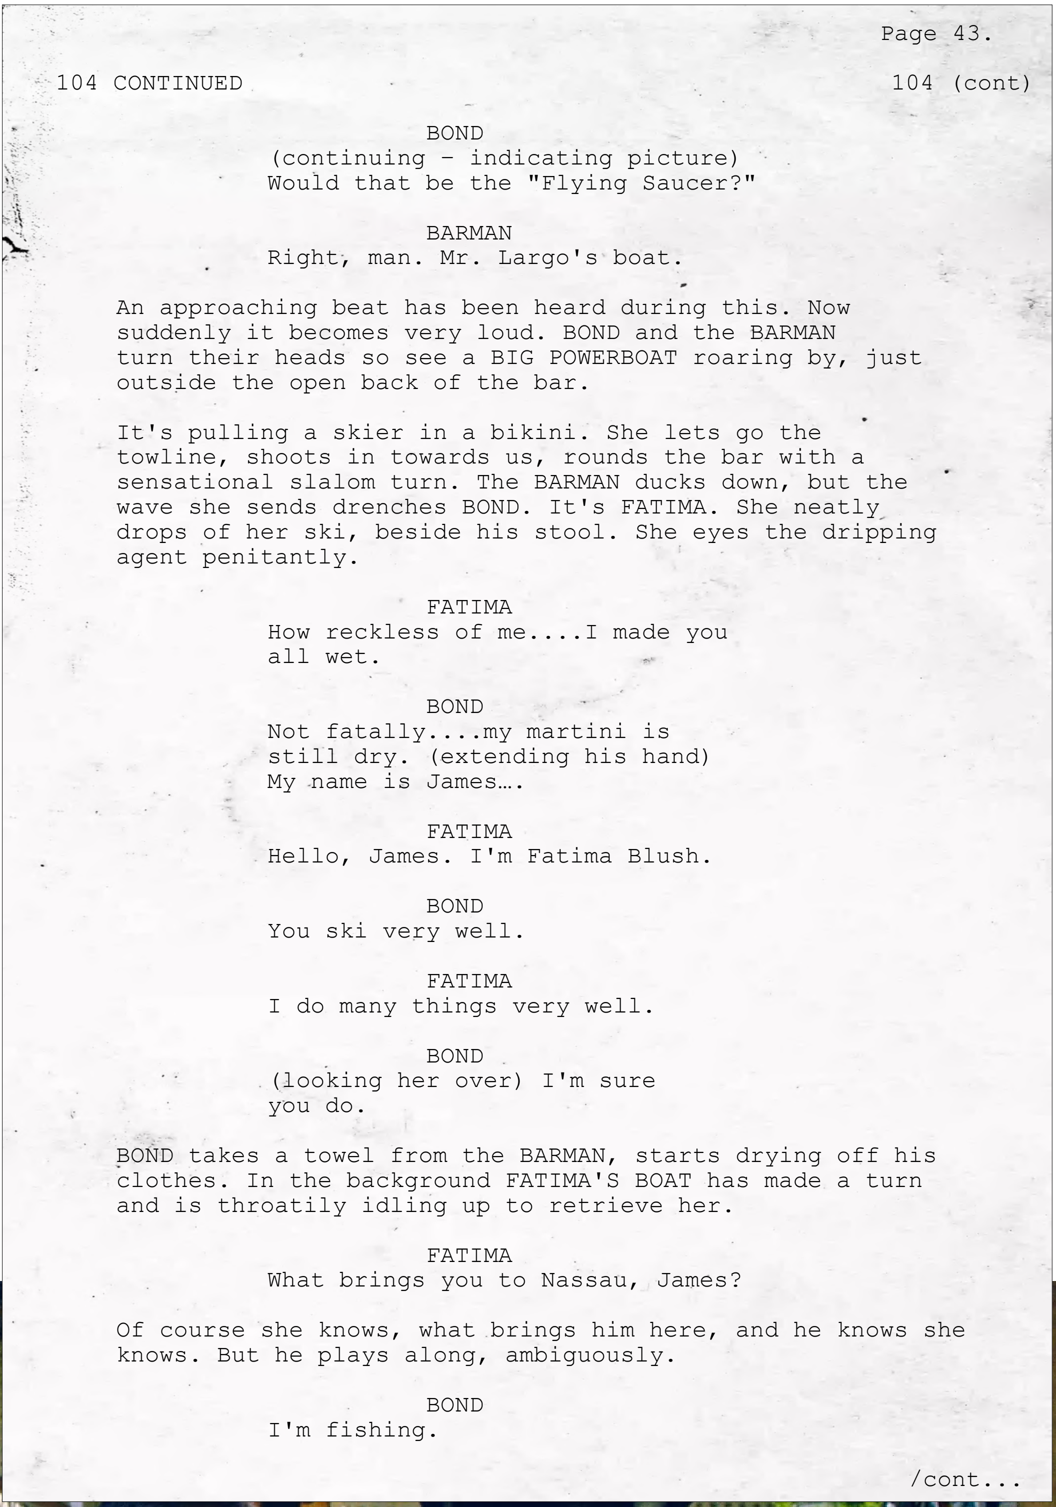
SEAN CONNERY
is
JAMES BOND
in
NEVER SAY NEVER AGAIN
JACK SCHWARTZMAN and KEVIN McCLORY Present A TALIAFILM Production An IRVIN KERSHNER Film
SEAN CONNERY "NEVER SAY NEVER AGAIN"
KLAUS MARIA BRANDAUER · MAX VON SYDOW · BARBARA CARRERA · KIM BASINGER · BERNIE CASEY · ALEC McCOWEN and EDWARD FOX as "M"
MICHEL LEGRAND · KEVIN McCLORY · LORENZO SEMPLE, JR. · KEVIN McCLORY, JACK WHITTINGHAM and IAN FLEMING
IRVIN KERSHNER · JACK SCHWARTZMAN

Release date (premiere) :
6 October 1983

Writing credit as per title sequence:
"Screenplay by Lorenzo Semple, Jr. Based on an original story by Kevin McClory, Jack Whittingham & Ian Fleming".

Director :............................Irvin Kershner
Producer :.....................Jack Schwatzman
Executive producer :.......Kevin McClory
Director photo. :..........Douglas Slocombe
Set Designer :...................Stephen Grimes
Composer :.......................Michel Legrand
Title sequence :....................Ian Crafford
Title song vocals :.....................Lani Hall



Page 43.

104 CONTINUED 104 (cont)

BOND
(continuing - indicating picture)
Would that be the "Flying Saucer?"

BARMAN
Right, man. Mr. Largo's boat.

An approaching beat has been heard during this. Now suddenly it becomes very loud. BOND and the BARMAN turn their heads so see a BIG POWERBOAT roaring by, just outside the open back of the bar.

It's pulling a skier in a bikini. She lets go the towline, shoots in towards us, rounds the bar with a sensational slalom turn. The BARMAN ducks down, but the wave she sends drenches BOND. It's FATIMA. She neatly drops of her ski, beside his stool. She eyes the dripping agent penitantly.

FATIMA
How reckless of me....I made you all wet.

BOND
Not fatally....my martini is still dry. (extending his hand) My name is James….

FATIMA
Hello, James. I'm Fatima Blush.

BOND
You ski very well.

FATIMA
I do many things very well.

BOND
(looking her over) I'm sure you do.

BOND takes a towel from the BARMAN, starts drying off his clothes. In the background FATIMA'S BOAT has made a turn and is throatily idling up to retrieve her.

FATIMA
What brings you to Nassau, James?

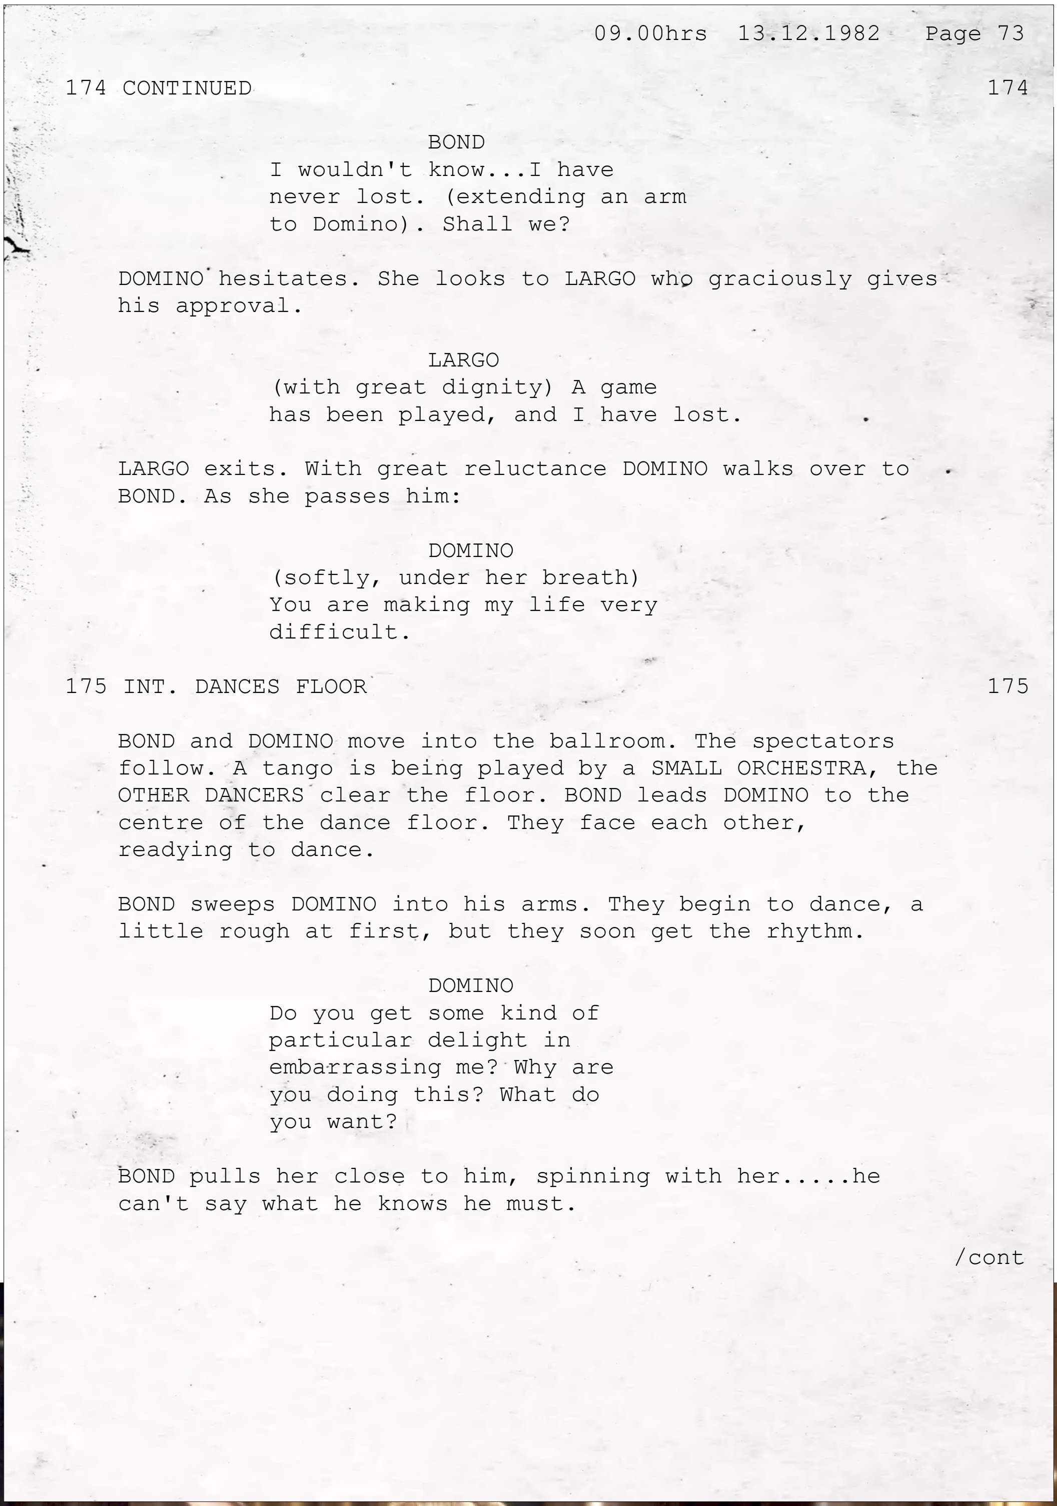
Of course she knows, what brings him here, and he knows she knows. But he plays along, ambiguously.

BOND
I'm fishing.

/cont...

CHAPTER 13.5

NEVER SAY NEVER AGAIN (AND WARHEAD)



09.00hrs 13.12.1982 Page 73

174 CONTINUED 174

BOND
I wouldn't know...I have never lost. (extending an arm to Domino). Shall we?

DOMINO hesitates. She looks to LARGO who graciously gives his approval.

LARGO
(with great dignity) A game has been played, and I have lost.

LARGO exits. With great reluctance DOMINO walks over to BOND. As she passes him:

DOMINO
(softly, under her breath)
You are making my life very difficult.

175 INT. DANCES FLOOR 175

BOND and DOMINO move into the ballroom. The spectators follow. A tango is being played by a SMALL ORCHESTRA, the OTHER DANCERS clear the floor. BOND leads DOMINO to the centre of the dance floor. They face each other, readying to dance.

BOND sweeps DOMINO into his arms. They begin to dance, a little rough at first, but they soon get the rhythm.

DOMINO
Do you get some kind of particular delight in embarrassing me? Why are you doing this? What do you want?

BOND pulls her close to him, spinning with her.....he can't say what he knows he must.

/cont

Cast:

James Bond :...........................James Bond
Largo :..................Klaus Maria Brandauer
Domino Petachi :.................Kim Basinger
Fatima Blush :.................Barbara Carrera
Felix Leiter :..........................Bernie Casey
Nicole :.......................Saskia Cohen-Tanugi
Ernst Stavro Blofeld :......Max von Sydow
Jack Petachi :..................Gavan O'Herlihy
Nigel Small-Fawcett :.....Rowan Atkinson
M :..Edward Fox
Moneypenny :......................Pamela Salem
Algernon :...........................Alec McCowen

Main filming locations: Bahamas, France and UK

With his rights on Thunderball, Kevin McClory will seek throughout his life to create new adaptations for the screen of the novel. Fortunately for us, he achieved one in 1983 with the release of Never Say Never Again. There is lot good things in this movie, like the casting in its globality, including the return of Sean Connery, but let's face it: he has aged seriously. At least they try to play on it in the film. The movie success to distance itself enough from Thunderball to not give us the impression of a mere copy/paste, despite the limited room for maneuver the filmmakers had. But there are flaws like the terrible lighting of the casino scenes, some poor digital special effects, cheesy soundtracks sometimes and a relatively bland final action scenes in a cave (even soporific, kid I fell asleep during it!).

Table of contents

Never Say Never Again

Bringing the writers to remake Thunderball....822
1976' script: James Bond of the Secret Service....825
Similarities....839
1978' script: Warhead....840
Warhead on rails and... Derailed....843
Writing Never Say Never Again....845
December 1982' script....858
McClory strike back: Atomic Warhead....874
MGM vs. Sony....876

Bringing the writers to remake Thunderball

Gala Premiere
VARIETY CLUB OF IRELAND
by KEVIN McCLORY
Directed by TERENCE YOUNG
ALBERT R. BROCCOLI and HARRY SALTZMAN
SEAN CONNERY
THUNDERBALL
PERSONAL APPEARANCE
KEVIN McCLORY

Remember: between 1959 and 1961, Kevin McClory, Ian Fleming, Jack Whittingham, Ivar Bryce and Ernest Cuneo were working on a James Bond film project including stolen atomic bombs, the Bahamas and underwater battle. Treatment and scripts were written, and in parallel Fleming also wrote a novel: Thunderball.

When McClory and Whittingham finally read the novel, they sued Fleming who was planning to publish it without even credit them for their contribution to the story. An out of court treatment was reached in 1963 which gave to McClory the cinematic rights on the novel and on its genesis treatment/scripts.

Then McClory and EON Production teamed up for doing the Thunderball movie: it was win-win deal for the two party, especially when the movie broke records at the box-office in the middle of the Bondmania.

> - Kevin McClory[1] : We agreed [with Broccoli et Saltzman] that I would produce the picture; the idea was that all three of us would produce the picture, in actual fact all three of us produced the picture together, although I have the sole screen credit.

However, once the film was released in 1965, Kevin McClory had not said his last word. Thunderball was something that was deep in its heart and certainly Bond was also a synonym of big money and fame. EON, to ward off competition from a rival Bond for a long time, had included in one of the clauses of its contract with McClory a prohibition for the Irishman to remaking any film based on Thunderball (and its premises) for ten years. But after disappearing from the showbiz radar for these ten years, it is almost with no surprise that Kevin McClory announced his return to the Bondian scene in 1976…

But let's get back to in 1975 first, 10 years after the release of the film Thunderball, Kevin McClory is therefore preparing to recover the right to make new films based on the novel and previous scenarios developed during the Xanadu era. With the help of spy novel writer Len Deighton, who a little over a decade earlier had tried his hand at writing From Russia with Love, Kevin McClory is already starting to work on a new script inspired by the novel but which would not be very faithful nevertheless (we will notably find elements of old genesis scripts which do not appear in the novel, as "new" things).

> - Len Deighton[2] : Kevin breezily [said to me] when he eventually located me. "I need someone sensible. I need someone who will write something that is within my legal rights. I have to have a writer who can distinguish between a remake of Thunderball and a sequel. [...] I want you to come to New York and > spend some time with my lawyers so that you will know the difference. And I want you to come to Expo '75; the Japanese are building an underwater city off the island of Okinawa. And you will have to talk to people I know in Florida about the way they are making amazing midget submarines in their back yards. And you must meet with Jacques Cousteau the underwater explorer, he's an old friend of mine. And we'll go to Spain to visit Sean who is going to play James Bond again. You are the only person who can do it for me, Len". [...] Kevin knew me and knew how to press all the right buttons. He hadn't even mentioned payment. A few days after my younger son was born, I was on the plane reading a paperback edition of Thunderball. My work on the remake had begun and I was already suspecting that I'd made a terrible mistake. These became the longest, most demanding and, because I was with Kevin almost all the time, the most exasperating weeks of my life. [...] I spent day after day with Kevin's American lawyers (it must have cost him the earth in fees) and then put together a wall chart with transparent overlay so that both plots could be instantly compared.

Deighton who had knew both Fleming and McClory in his life compare the two men like that:

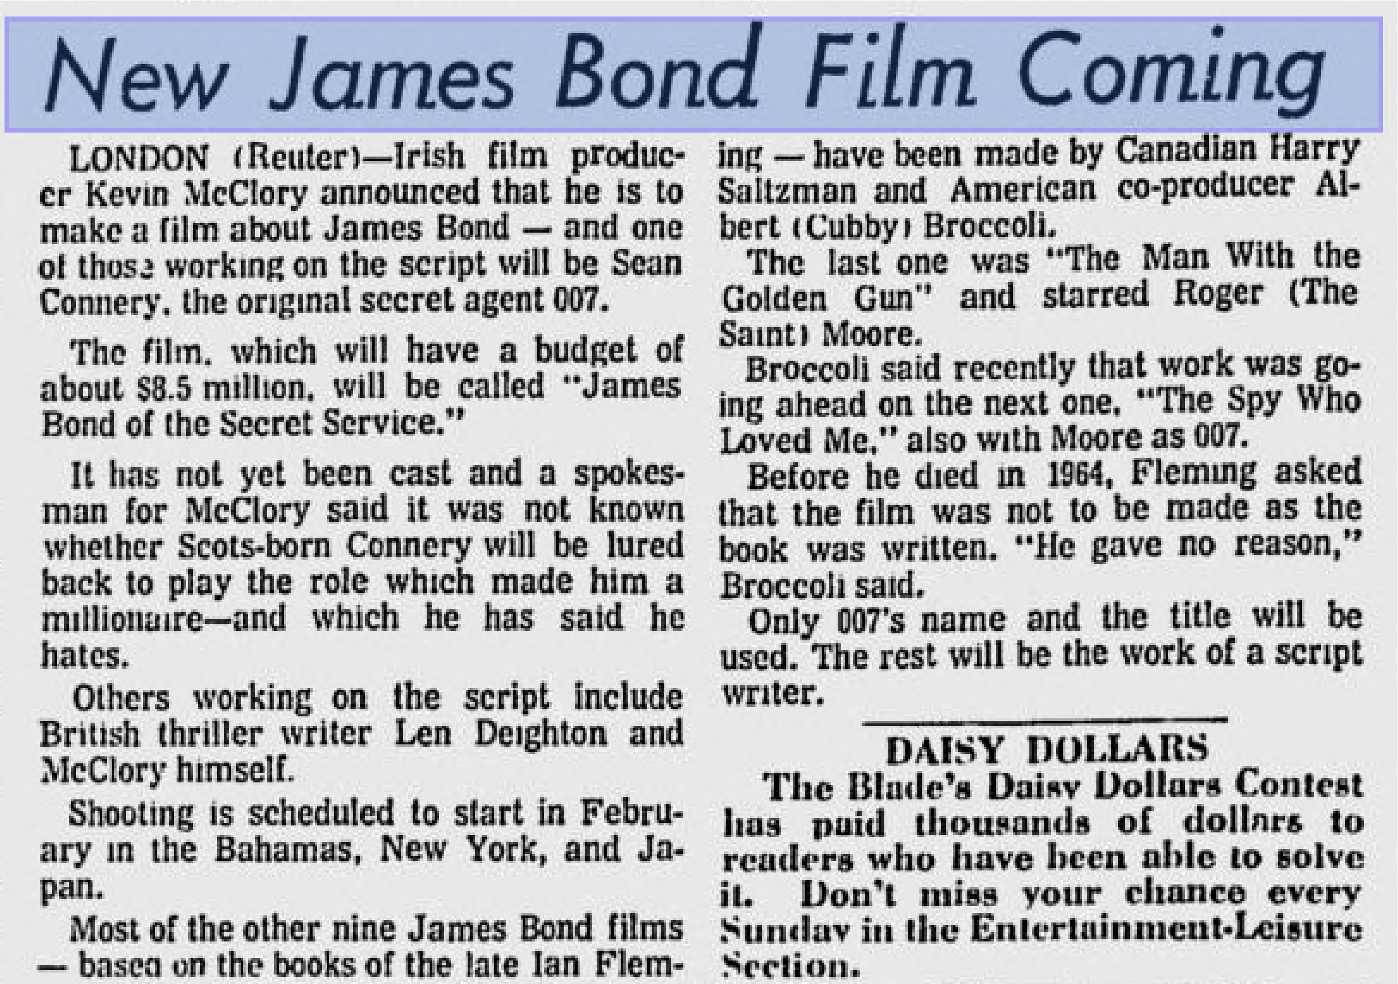
> - Len Deighton[3] : Ian Fleming was as different to Kevin McClory as any civilized man could be, and yet equally bewildering. While Ian was systematic and determined, Kevin was confused and disorderly; a disablement that he was apt to tackle by throwing money around, usually in the wrong direction. Ian was not a gambler; he was averse to risk in both personal and general matters. Ian played bridge, a civilized game [...] Kevin's game was backgammon, a usually more convivial helter-skelter encounter that depended largely upon chance and a lucky roll of the dice. [...] While Ian remained an inscrutable titanium product of an over-disciplined upbringing, Kevin was a nervous and desperately loquacious actor, a woolly thespian who came unravelled when the audience didn't pay proper attention. [...] Kevin was a notorious time-waster who digressed and prevaricated. He constantly moved around the room, dithered, stammered and procrastinated; he never took notes and forgot to read the agenda. Ian's background and training ensured that he arrived for appointments exactly on time [...]. Kevin, as I know from painful experience, was always late; sometimes very late. Sometimes he didn't turn up at all.

McClory and Deighton are soon joined by a third contributor: Sean Connery! The actor left the role of James Bond after Diamonds Are Forever in 1971 and held grudges against Albert R. Broccoli and Harry Saltzman (because he felt he had not been paid enough)[4].

"At that time I went down to see Sean, and asked him would he play the role? And he said no, he didn't want to do that. But it was very clear that Sean has always been very interested in directing, writing", says McClory[5].

McClory proudly and quickly announced in January 1976 that Connery was working on the writing a new James Bond film titled with a name dusted off from the past: James Bond of the Secret Service[6].

"I knew Sean didn't want to play Bond again but he knows more about Bond than anyone else and he has a vast number of ideas about what Bond can do. He did not just contribute throwaway lines, he also got involved in the construction of the plot, and he's a very good storyteller. He writes visually", McClory says[7]. Len Deighton adds that Connery has "very useful and explicit ideas about the character"[8].



New James Bond Film Coming

LONDON (Reuter)—Irish film producer Kevin McClory announced that he is to make a film about James Bond — and one of those working on the script will be Sean Connery, the original secret agent 007.

The film, which will have a budget of about $8.5 million, will be called "James Bond of the Secret Service."

It has not yet been cast and a spokesman for McClory said it was not known whether Scots-born Connery will be lured back to play the role which made him a millionaire—and which he has said he hates.

Others working on the script include British thriller writer Len Deighton and McClory himself.

Shooting is scheduled to start in February in the Bahamas, New York, and Japan.

Most of the other nine James Bond films — based on the books of the late Ian Fleming — have been made by Canadian Harry Saltzman and American co-producer Albert (Cubby) Broccoli.

The last one was "The Man With the Golden Gun" and starred Roger (The Saint) Moore.

Broccoli said recently that work was going ahead on the next one, "The Spy Who Loved Me," also with Moore as 007.

Before he died in 1964, Fleming asked that the film was not to be made as the book was written. "He gave no reason," Broccoli said.

Only 007's name and the title will be used. The rest will be the work of a script writer.

DAISY DOLLARS

The Blade's Daisy Dollars Contest has paid thousands of dollars to readers who have been able to solve it. Don't miss your chance every Sunday in the Entertainment-Leisure Section.

Toledo Blade – June 4, 1976

- Kevin McClory[9] : Len Deighton I've always liked as a thriller writer. [...] He was living in Ireland, so I called him and [...] said, "I'd like you to collaborate with me", same as I did with Fleming, really. [...] I felt we needed a little more humor. Sean's kind of humor. Sean is a naturally funny man. He's got an interesting sense of humor, a Scot's humor, but he uses throwaway lines in regular conversation. [...] So I said to Len, "Listen, think we'll bring Sean in as a writer [...]". It was in that area of humor more than anything, at that time, that I was interested.

- Kevin McClory[10] : I went down to see Sean, and asked him would he play the role. He said no, he didn't want to do that. But it was very clear that Sean had always been very interested in directing, writing. So I popped down to Marbella [his villa in Spain], to have a word with Sean, and ask him if he would like to come and write with us, and he said yes. I would liase between the two of them and out of that came James Bond of the Secret Service.

1976' script: James Bond of the Secret Service

IAN FLEMING'S

"JAMES BOND OF THE SECRET SERVICE"

Screenplay By

LEN DEIGHTON
SEAN CONNERY
KEVIN McCLORY

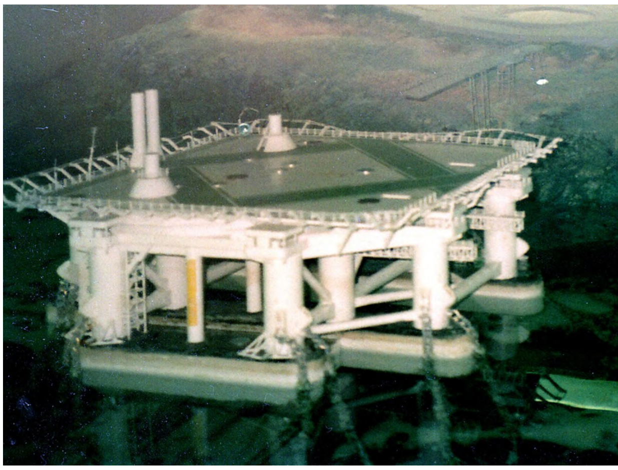
FIRST DRAFT
November 11, 1976

A "first draft" script of "James Bond of the Secret Service", 150 pages, was completed on November 11, 1976 and credited to the names of Len Deighton, Sean Connery, and Kevin McClory.

Before we even get into the story, there's something striking on the cover: "Ian Fleming's James Bond of the Secret Service". After having fought a few years earlier to obtain a mention "based on a screen treatment by K. McClory, J. Whittingham and [Fleming]" for the novel, it is quite curious to note that we find ourselves here with Fleming name alone...

"A clear blue sky and blue sea molted with dark patches of weeds. In the far distance, there is an amphibious aircraft. It flies towards us", the script begins.

This plane flies over the Sargasso Sea (North Atlantic Ocean) and carries Mr. Steinberg, the Secretary General of the United Nations. The pilot is having problems with the radio and the controls are no longer responding... A camera shot shows a strange metal object which is called a "laser R/R".



Inside a place called the Arkos where the laser controls are located, Emilio Largo is in the company of a certain Maslov and technicians. Largo tells a technician not to go too fast because he doesn't want any wreckage. Suddenly, the futuristic white structure that is the Arkos rises from the ocean, and as the plane passes underneath, the structure brings the craft and its occupants underwater. Blofeld appears on a television screen:

- Largo: Phase one complete, sir.
- Blofeld: This will be the final disaster in the Bermuda Triangle, my dear Largo.
- Largo: As you say, Mr. Blofeld.

Opening credits where we see the plane reaching the bottom of the ocean where there are other wrecks of the victims of the Bermuda Triangle. As the Arkos and its prey reach the bottom of the water, algae move and reveal stocks of gold, diamonds, manganese, etc.

James Bond can be found at Shrublands which looks more like a holiday club than the clinic of Thunderball (despite the presence of armed guards); the place is described as a "school of aquabatics" in the Caribbean. On the beach, Bond is given sunscreen by Justine Lovesit (Shrublands' staff member). There's some dialogue like "well, I'll call you 'Just' for short", then they see a certain Hellinger and Dr. Fatima Blush (remember: a name that first appeared in a Fleming's 1959 letter to Cuneo) arriving on the beach:

> - Bond: There are the lovers again.
> - Justine: Scarface, you mean. Hellinger. He's CIA, you know. We have quite a lot of secret agents come here for underwater training.
> - Bond: Oh, really?
> - Justine: They guard underwater equipment, oil rigs in the Gulf and harbor installations.
> - Bond: He Looks as if he spends more time under her than under harbor installations.
> - Justine: That's how he got his face so badly scarred. He was fighting terrorists who tried to blow up the President's yacht. She's the new doctor, Dr. Fatima Blush. She's here to give the men their physicals. She has a Korean mother and a Spanish-Moroccan father. She's a good swimmer. She nearly got into the Olympics team last year.
> - Bond: Representing who, the United Nations? She could easily win a gold medal in the physical Olympics.
> - Justine: Perhaps you'd like to go to the whirlpool with her; the two of them are there every night
> - Bond: Whirlpool? What an intriguing idea, Just. Why don't we make it a foursome?
> - Justine (she throws the sun oil at Bond): There, you can finish it, yourself. I've got better things to do.

Justine Lovesit leaves and Hellinger approaches 007. During their conversation (and also from a newspaper article), Bond learns that a local, Largo, is a millionaire and a possible the future Caribbean champion of backgammon. He has a laboratory with sharks for cancer research. His island, Turtle Cay, is nicknamed "Shark Island".

Speaking of Largo, we find him entering a secret base located inside a cliff on his island. The interior is reminiscent of the headquarters of an international company with a modern design. His personal assistant comes to see him and tells him that:

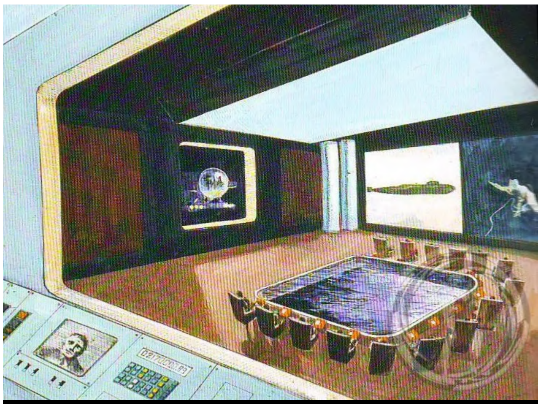
> - P.A.: Good morning, Mr. Largo. Everyone is here. The video tape has been edited exactly according to your instructions and is on the machine.

Largo enters a sort of elevator with a recompression chamber which takes him underwater, towards the Arkos. The view is supposed to be impressive with lots of transparent tube-shaped corridors and fish and sharks visible behind the glass. Largo is joined by Bomba (a black henchman with an imposing build; his description says that his "presence and attack makes Muhammad Ali look like a fag"!).

Largo takes a brief tour of the structure, passing Maslov who is working on a strange electronic machine that doesn't look like anything we known but has eyes and a jaw: "I have made wonderful progress. Don't go too close! It [the machine] has detected the radiated heat of your body", Maslov told him.

Largo then passes into a room where minerals are extracted from the ocean and then heads towards a conference room where there are around fifteen Spectre agents (men of all nationalities). Blofeld (stroking a cat) is not here but in a submarine a little further away and is following the meeting via monitors. Largo is now in a small control room from where he follows the meeting.

The meeting start with the profits from their operations, it is notably said that the Spectre (spelled without capital letters in the script) sells weapons in Africa, ransomed an airline by hijacking its planes, etc... There is the classic execution of one of the members who made a mistake: he is ejected outside the Arkos, in a transparent tube which ends in the ocean's water. Then comes the explanation of their future big operation. Blofeld has decided to control/claim all the seas and oceans of the world, and prohibit governments from all forms of pollution of marine spaces as a result (no less!):



Concept art made for the meeting room.

> - Blofeld: Well, gentlemen, I hope you need no further persuading when I tell you that I have decided to abandon all long-term terrestrial operations. I have already ordered all units on stand-by. It is my intention that Spectre will take possession of all the seas. As you know, seventy point eight percent of this planet is covered by ocean... Many governments are claiming territorial waters up to two hundred miles [322 km] from their coastlines. I deny them this childish demand. Fifty miles [80 km] is a generous measure. And I think I might call myself a generous man, by any standards. My first act will be to stop all pollution. Each government will answer to me for any destructive elements coming in to our oceans. I will give them six months to cease using our oceans as dumping grounds for their sewage, filth, poisons, chemicals, and atomic waste. Six months is sufficient time for them to make other arrangements... Rivers will not be subject to our direct control, but it will be forbidden that their flow contains any life-destroying substances. By life, I include all underwater plant life... Phytoplankton, etc... Breaches of this pollution rule will result in the first warning period of one week, followed by the execution of the senior politician of that country's government, and the execution of the politician responsible... Now, are there any questions?
> - Number 3: What about oil drilling outside the fifty-mile limit?
> - Blofeld: I am not a hard man, you all now that. My experts tell me that the cost of bringing up oil from under the sea is prohibitive [...] The Church uses the promise of Paradise, the communists promise eternal parity, and some governments promise oil. I have no intention of destroying any of those illusions. But one thing must be clear: oil rigs, like supertankers, must not add a drip to the pollution [...].

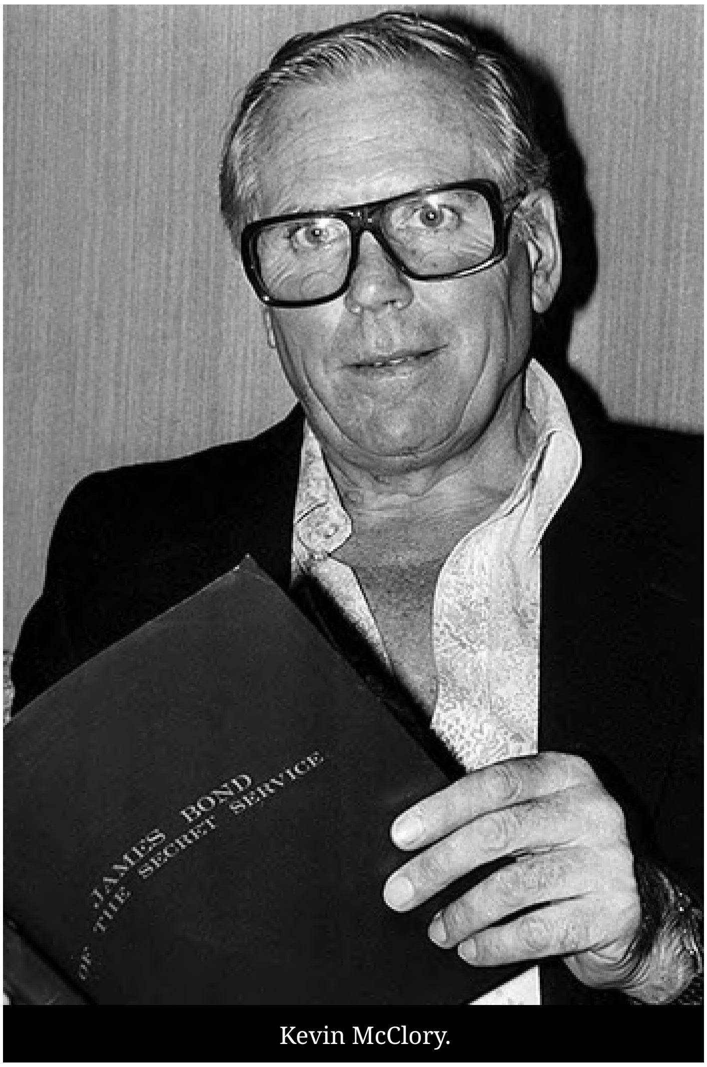
Blofeld explains to his Spectre agents that they are now reassigned to the Operation Hammerhead, phase one of it has just been completed by Largo.

A bit like what we could read in the press at that time about the CIA, Howard Hughes and the Azorian Project ; Largo then explains that Spectre failed in an attempt to recover nuclear warheads from the remains of a Russian nuclear submarine they sank. Spectre's members are then supposed to see a video of the operation on a screen at the same time as Largo recounts how it failed.

This video it is about a Spectre's submarine (piloted by Largo) approaching the wreck of the Russian submarine; a diver exits the Spectre's submarine and visits the wreck to retrieves the warheads when suddenly an American recovery ship is visible on sonar. The order is given to the diver to return to the Spectre's submarine but he slips and is unable to get up due to the weight of his diving suit that make him looks like the Michelin Man: Largo decides to leave with the Russian submarine, abandoning the diver in the wreck.

The video displayed to the members of Spectre shows the diver struggling at length, against a musical background. Largo assure to Spectre's members that the diver "insisted, [...] implored me, to abandon him rather than hazard this great operation". However in Largo's control room we are able to hear that, without the music, it was just the opposite: the diver implored Largo to not abandon him, invoking his wife and children.

Largo walks out of his control room and goes into the meeting room whee he insists that it's better for someone to die than to endanger this whole operation, let's be inspired by the "comrade who has set us all an example of courage and self-sacrifice".



Kevin McClory.

At Shrublands, Bond gets sunscreen applied again by Justine Lovesit when his pager ring. He goes to a high security zone in Shrublands where Felix Leiter and Gardner Steer (the Director General of the CIA; "He's our M", Leiter tells Bond) are among others.

A map showing the last known positions of missing planes and boats in the Atlantic Ocean hangs on the wall. Bond is shown a recording of Blofeld (he doesn't say who he is) which has been sent to several governments. Blofeld explains that he killed the Secretary General of the United Nations and that his demands will reach them clearly in a future message. As a result, all aquatic units are placed on red alert to be able to react as quickly as possible to these demands.

Leiter also tells Bond that the Russians have lost a submarine and that Hellinger will be tasked with going to the wreck in hopes of finding decoding equipment there. Shrublands is then also described as a sort of aquatic training center for combat units (obviously including those of the CIA and MI6).

Near Shrublands' pier, Fatima Blush joins Bomba and Giuseppe Petacchi, a Spectre agent who has undergone plastic surgery to resemble Hellinger.

An alarm sounds and through his window Bond sees Bomba in Fatima's room. 007 leaves his own room where he was, once again, in the company of Justine Lovesit. Bond comes across Fatima.

- Bond: Sorry, I thought I saw someone suspicious, a huge black man.
- Fatima: Oh, him. He brought Pinder, the man who died. [...] He was a local who had a diving accident.

To distract him, she takes him to the whirlpool where they are about to make love...

- Fatima: Ah, I can read you like a book, James.
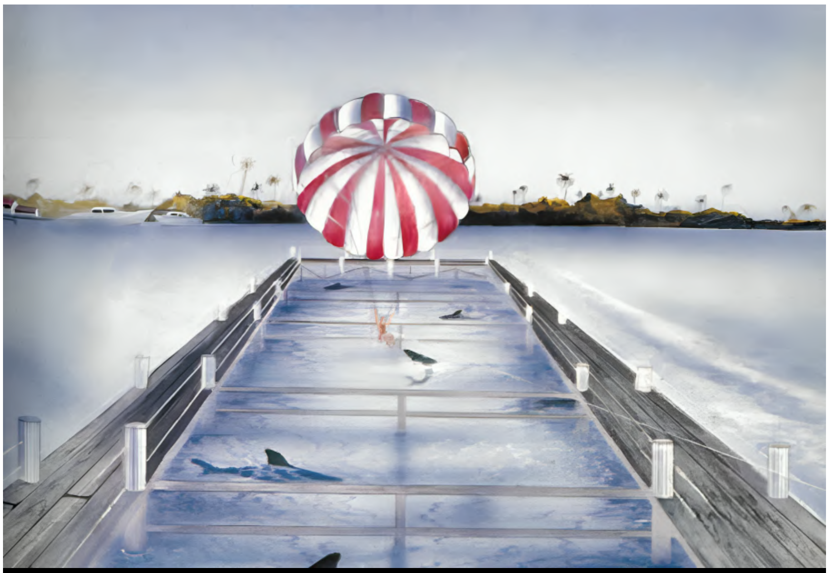
[She approaches him to touch him].
- Bond: This must be the braille system you're using.

When Hellinger arrives in the baths and hears Fatima and Bond's moaning, he becomes jealous and drastically increases the whirlpools of the baths from the control room, causing Fatima to nearly drown. Bomba arrives and kills Hellinger, Petacchi takes the latter's place and decrease the whirlpools.

- Petacchi: Now, maybe that will teach you to fool with my girl.

Note that in retaliation, Bond simply picks up hose pipe lying in water and sprinkles Petacchi.

- Petacchi (furiously): Don't forget you have a parachute lesson tomorrow, Mr. Bond!



Concept art made for the movie.

The next day Bond goes parachuting: he is towed behind a boat driven by Petacchi; Fatima is in the passenger seat. Despite the high speed, Bond asks: "Is this the scenic route?". Petacchi then takes the boat to Shark Island (despite Fatima's protests) and reduces the boat's speed to try to lower Bond into one of the pools that contains the dangerous creatures. Bond almost gets his feet bitten and Petacchi makes a second pass; 007 then unbuckles his harness and lands on the pier. He gets back on the boat, beats the shit out of Petacchi during a "furious fight [...] in the small confines of the boat" and at the end of which Petacchi falls into the water. A shark approaches him:

- Bond: Swim Hellinger, swim. It's a shark!

Bond ends up helping Petacchi to get back on the boat and returns with them to Shrublands. However, he saw Bomba when he was near the sharks' pools...

In her room at Shrublands, Fatima contacts Largo to inform him that Petacchi wants more money and that Bond saw Bomba near the pools.

A little later Emilio Largo is on a dredger, the Marie Celeste, which is not far from a CIA recovery ship (whose description recalls the Hughes Glomar Explorer, with a "long metal arm goes down to the bottom of the ocean, ending in a large claw-like structure which is grasping the Russian submarine).

A helicopter carrying Petacchi lands on the ship. Phase two of the Operation Subrob begins: a dozen Spectre's men in diving suits accompanied by a submarine (in which Largo is) emerge from a hatch of the dredger and head towards the wreck of the Russian submarine. On board the recovery ship, Petacchi places a device and Maslov then activates the Laser R/R; which has the effect of cutting off the CIA ship's electronics and communications. Once three nuclear warheads have been recovered and brought back to the dredger, Largo explodes (via the R/R Laser) a zodiac heading towards the Marie Celeste and on which Petacchi was.

Bond prepares to return to London, Fatima offers to come with him and he accepts. No less than five days later, in Moneypenny's office, there is a rather funny scene where Bond tells her that his stay at Shrublands was very hard before she brings out a photo of Fatima in a bikini. 007 enters M's office; M takes him directly to see "Q" in a gymnasium where a (giant) miniature of the scene where the CIA recovery ship was near the Russian submarine was built.

Q explains that the submarine appears to have suffered an "electronic breakdown" just like the recovery ship and various planes that disappeared in the Bermuda Triangle; three warheads are missing. A dead body was found near the submarine, Fidelio Sciacca (the diver that Largo had abandoned earlier) and it turns out that this man had some sort of camera placed in the socket of one of his eyes. Q is trying to recover the recording of this device and the protagonists theorize that the Spectre could be behind it:

- M: What do you think of that [device], Bond?
- Bond: It's certainly more sophisticated than anything the Russians are using.
- M: Yes?
- Bond: I think it's Spectre.
- M: I agree.

It turns out that they have in their hands a recording between Fatima and Largo (the latter telling her to continue monitoring Bond), but this recording is currently indiscernible. Q will do everything to make the video clearer in the next few hours, meanwhile Bond can go home to prepare to pack.

A camera shot shows a Spectre's agent, Effie (same nickname as Sean Connery's mother), placing a bomb under Bond's bed when she hears the sound of his Aston Martin (model not specified) entering the garage. Bond asks the fake new housekeeper (Effie) to unload the caviar from the trunk of the Aston and put it in the fridge: "there's only one thing worse than no caviar; that's warm caviar".

Effie takes the opportunity to plant another bomb in the car. Fatima rings to the doorbell. Effie is then in the process of defusing the bomb under the bed when Bond brings Fatima into his bedroom; Effie stays hidden under the bed while the other two make love above…

Suddenly 007 hears a noise in the bathroom and finds a man trying to get in through the window. After having overpowered him, 007 goes to the garage where he comes across a second intruder whom he also overpower. As he goes to the front door (someone rang the bell, a man who appears to be British), he hears the sound of the Aston (started by Fatima, unaware of the presence of the bomb) followed by a huge explosion that demolishes the garage.

007 is back at M's office: it is explained to him (and us) that Q managed to make the recording clear and, having thus discovered that Fatima was a Spectre's agent, MI6 sent men to protect Bond (those he has overpowered). Now that they know Largo is clearly involved, Bond must investigate his activities.

Bond takes a plane back to Shrublands. It's a pretty funny scene because he's with Q and, throughout the flight, Q explains to him in detail how his gadgets work (as usual, Bond seems to be disinterested in his explanations). Q provides him with two gadgets in particular: a Geiger counter and a homing device.

> - Q: How splendid. For once Double-07, I'll have sufficient time to explain these technical weapons to you in perfect detail. You don't seem pleased.

Bond returns to the Shrublands situation room where he finds Leiter, M and Steer. How did M arrive so quickly? "Concorde", he replies. 007 is informed that Spectre has claimed responsibility for the latest events and is threatening to atomize a major city, or even the entire world, if United Nations' Secretary General Steinberg is not replaced by one of their men. M order Bond and Leiter to do a recce on Shark Island.

Bond and Leiter put on their state-of-the-art Q's diving suits (heated and with thrusters) and head towards Shark Island. Meanwhile, Largo is in a casino to play a backgammon championship against Bond (who will not show up, Largo will then be crowned winner by forfeit; it is a ruse to keep him away from his island).

At Largo's estate, 007 comes across a woman: Domino, Fatima's twin sister! Strangely they seem to be have sex together instantaly and he asks her for help, which she accepts on the condition that he promises to kill Largo:

> [Bond places a hand over the girl's mouth and one around her waist. He puts her hands behind her back and makes her fall onto the bed].
> - Bond: You should be dead, written off, like my garage... Strange, something different... You're not Fatima.
> - Domino: No. She was my twin sister... She's dead.
> - Bond: You know it was on Largo's instructions.
> - Domino: I thought so. He used us one against the other.
> [Bond notices a piece of manganese on a table].
> - Bond: Where did you get this?
> - Domino: Largo gave it to me. He said he found it scuba diving. He said they're a better friend to girls than diamonds.
> - Bond: Certainly very valuable, but he didn't find it scuba diving... Whose room is that?
> - Domino: Largo's. But who are you?
> - Bond: Would you believe Martin Borman? No, seriously, I'm working against Largo.... Actually my name's James Bond... And your name?
> - Domino: Domino.
> - Bond: How divine.
> - Domino: Largo gave Fatima the name "Blush".
> - Bond: Do you think you can help me?
> - Domino: I'll try.
> [Bond kisses her].
> [...]

[A little later we find Bond and Domino in bed. She is stroking Bond's hair tenderly].
- Domino: Oh, James.
- Bond: So you must help us. Unless you do, hundreds of thousands of innocent people will die. You will help, won't you?
- Domino: But promise me one thing, James.
- Bond: Anything.
- Domino: Promise me you will kill Largo.

Since Largo returns to his property by helicopter, Bond leaves Domino after giving her the homing device and finds Leiter:

- Leiter: What took you so long?
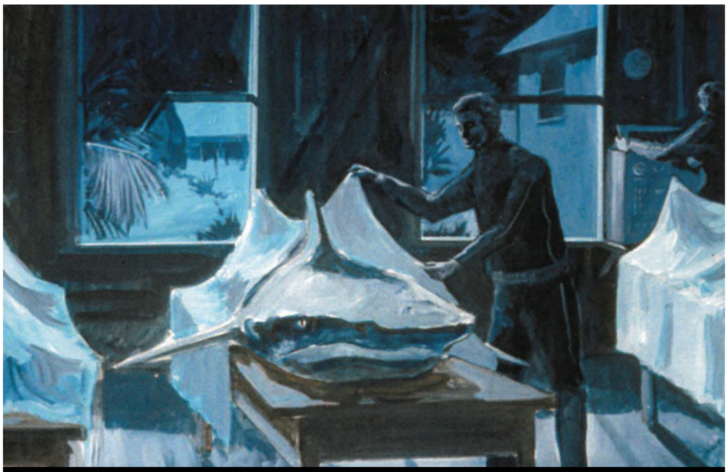
- Bond: It's like the Service. It's easy to get in but harder to get out!!

Largo is presented with diving suits found on the property. Meanwhile Bond and Leiter enter a laboratory that resembles a morgue with eight tables on which are white sheets that appear to cover bodies. Bond lifts a sheet and they discover robot sharks (yes, you read that right). "A robot shark, now I've seen everything!", exclaims Bond. Strangely Leiter is worried that "if the Mafia put these on the market, the victim would go down as another shark statistic. But they would sell".



Concept-art made for the film.

Suddenly, Largo appears on a screen alongside Bomba and Maslov and greets Bond and Leiter. 007 recognizes Maslov as a "Polish scientist who defected and was reported missing... On that airliner in forty-eight. Of course, it went down in the Bermuda Triangle". Largo sends them some henchmen:

The far door to the laboratory bursts open: three Spectre men advance. Bond and Leiter exchange looks: three they can handle!

The other door opens and three more men enter. Bond and Leiter stand back to back, momentarily bracing themselves for the inevitable attack.

Two Spectres rush Bond. He kicks one fiercely in the groin and karate chops the other.

- Leiter: Look out...

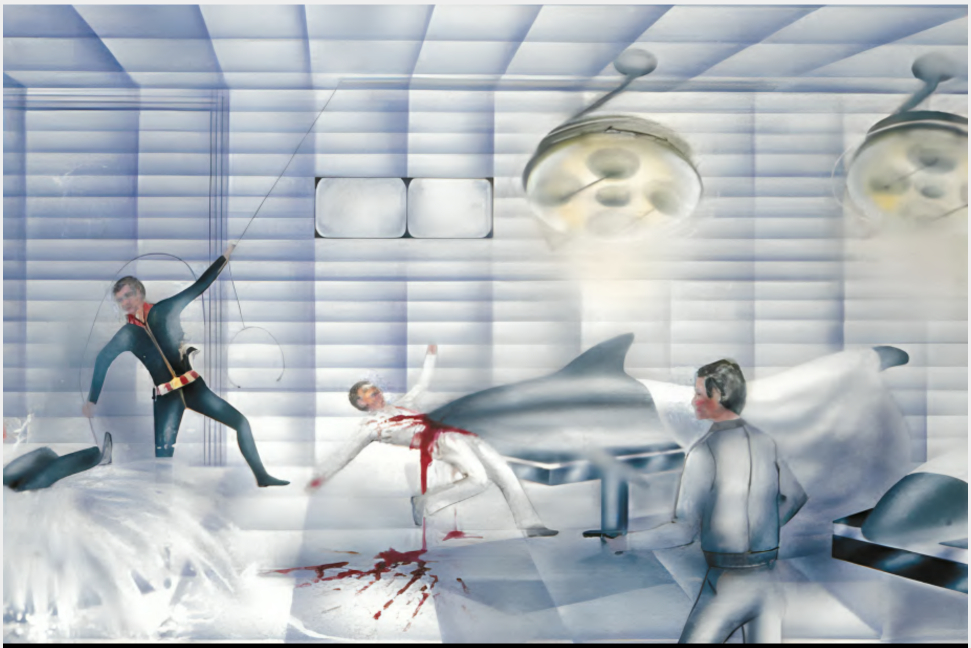
As third Spectre fires a shaft from a CO_2 underwater weapon at Bond, who ducks. The spear clangs off a mechanical shark and sticks in the back of the fourth Spectre who has Leiter bent back over a slab.

> Bond leaps on to an overhead pulley and swings out over the sharks. Drawing a heavy-handled underwater knife from its sheath in his shin-holder, and holding onto the pulley with one hand, he smashes the fifth Spectre man brutally under the chin with the heavy handle. The Spectre falls back with a scream into the gaping jaws of the tiger shark on the slab. The servo mechanism whirrs and the jaws, with the strength of mechanical digger, crunch into the Spectre's stomach, biting him almost in half. Blood gushes from the man's stomach.



Concept-art made for the film.

> The sixth Spectre man slips on the blood and loses his balance. He falls into acid-filled bath. He screams, his hand clutches side of bath, then slips back into the steaming acid.
>
> Throughout this unique fight we intercut to Largo crouched over the TV set in his communication centre, as if he were a fight promoter encouraging the fighters. During the action in the laboratory, Largo's face and blasphemous voice dominate the screen.

Largo then sends Bomba:

> Bond drops wearily to the ground to face him. Bomba moves swiftly across the room, grabs Leiter and hurls him against the wall; keeping a grip on one arm, he wheels around spinning Leiter into Bond who is now moving towards him. Bond falls to the ground with Leiter on top of him. Bomba picks up Leiter and literally uses him as a thresher to flail Bond. He throws Leiter to one side as Bond gets on his knees.

Maybe it wouldn't have been as ridiculous as you might think if we look at this behind-the-scene image from the filming of Jaws (1975)...

As Bomba raises his enormous hand to administer the coup de grace to Bond, we cut to a scene of Largo speaking with Maslov in the laboratory. Maslov tells Largo that the hammerhead robot sharks will be able to carry a nuclear device and that the tiger robot sharks are "man eaters". Then Bond and Leiter are attached to chairs located in the elevator which is also a sort of recompression chamber (the kind of thing where Krest is locked in Licence to kill) which is turned on...

Largo returns to the Arkos and we see Domino tied in a pool, a robotic tiger shark controlled by Bomba heading towards her: Largo found the homing device that Bond gave her. Largo questions her while she is terrified but when the shark opens its jaws a few centimeters from Domino, an uncomfortable Maslov turns off the robot, claiming that it has not yet finished passing the phase test. Largo then postpones the girl's death.

The lack of signal from the homing device (destroyed by Largo) alerted Bond's allies. As a result, an aquatic commando accompanied by Q, Steer, M and a certain Colonel Philips invades Shark Island. On the beach, Q discovers footprints leading to a cliff, then Bond and Leiter are freed from the recompression chamber by Q: they more or less owe their lives to Domino who had left her scarf on the control panel of the chamber. The script is unclear on this: did the scarf somehow deactivate the recompression chamber by activating a button or blocking a mechanism in some unexplained way, or did it just caught the eye of Q who then touched the controls to deactivate it? In any case when Bond asks Q how he got there in time, the latter replies: "I didn't [get there in time]".

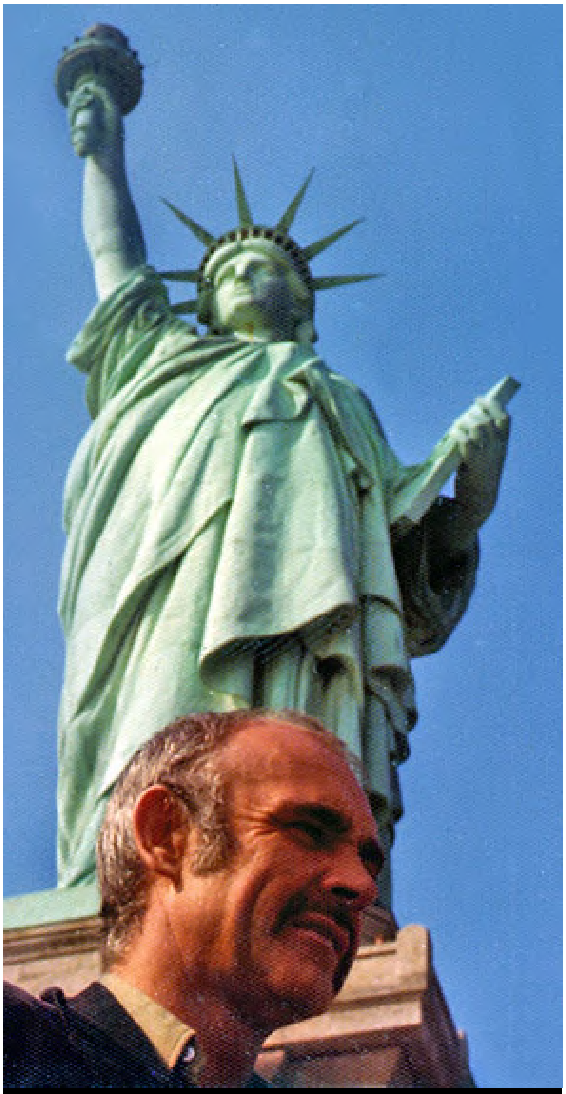
The dredger Marie Celeste is found on Shark Island and M and Steer go inside. Suddenly Blofeld's voice is heard: he is now demanding a meeting at the United Nations during which a "New Order" will decide the economic and political future of the oceans. If this request is not met, the Spectre will destroy a major city and then detonate two more nuclear warheads under the Antarctic ice sheet.

Back in Shrublands, Q explains that this explosion under the ice cap could cause ocean levels to rise drastically and flood "half the world's cities" with tidal waves. Taking into account the last known position of the homing device and the composition of the manganese ore found at Largo's place, the protagonists hypothesize that Largo is heading towards New York.

Bond and Leiter are greeted by a General Linklater at J.F.K. airport. Under the gaze of journalists:

> - Linklater: Hello, Leiter. You must be Bond. I'm General Linklater. Director General Steer told me to give you everything you asked for.
> - Bond: Well, we didn't ask for that mob of reporters.
> - Linklater: That's all right, sir. I've made arrangements. This way.

They go by helicopter to an EMCOCEN crisis unit (Emergency Co-Ordination Center) located in the Pan Am building, the police chief is here. They try to determine where Spectre placed the bomb: they only have eight hours left to find it. The city is in a state of alert and panic; they have presidential authority.



Sean Connery during location scouting for the film.

- Linklater: Okay, gentlemen. I'm not going to go round and introduce you all, [...] this is Commander James Bond of Her Majesty's Secret Service. He knows more about this organization called Spectre, this is the Special Executive for Counterintelligence, Terrorism, Revenge and Extortion, than any of us. [...]
- Bond: What's been done so far?
- Chief of police: Fifth Avenue has been cleared. Plans for the evacuation of Manhattan and adjoining areas are nearly complete. We are commandeering all privately owned buses and trucks. All buildings have been searched.
- Bond: Subways?
- Chief of police: All checked, sir.
- Bond: Underground pipes and sewers?
- Chief of police: Well, sir, we didn't think...
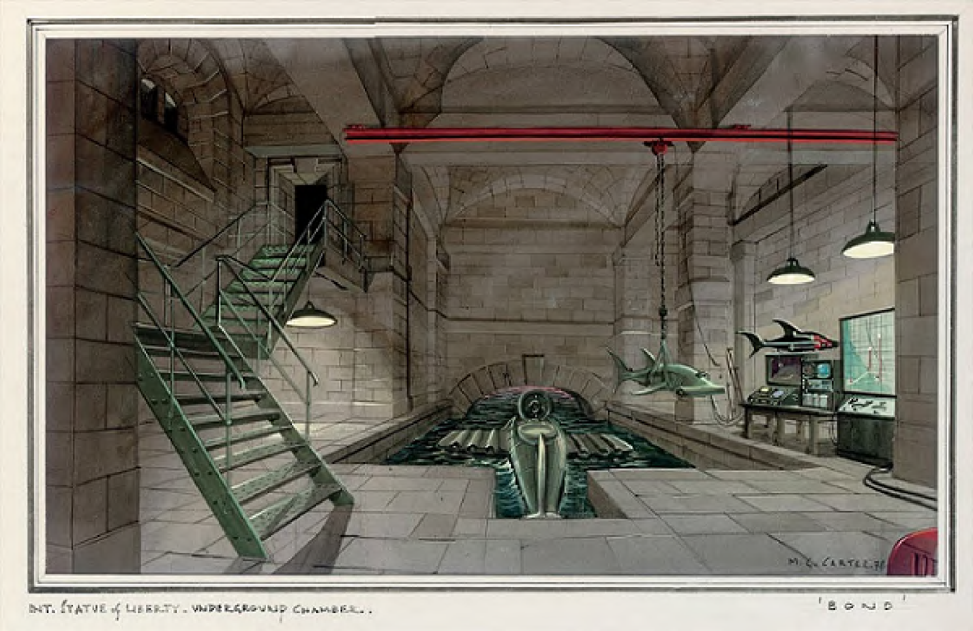
- Bond: We are dealing with an underwater organization. Have all underground and underwater installations checked immediately.

[...]

- Bond: By the way, have you checked Ellis and Liberty Islands?
- Chief of police: Yes, sir. Ellis was checked out earlier, Liberty is closed to the public today and they are on to the superintendent's office right now.

A camera shot actually reveals a man in the superintendent's office who is on the phone... Except that behind him are seven men (including the real superintendent) tied and gagged. Largo and Maslov are in the control room of their robot sharks that is actually located inside the Statue of Liberty! They put in the water a hammerhead robot shark responsible for carrying a warhead as well as other robot sharks which will serve as escort.

Meanwhile, people are discussing what is happening in the city that is being evacuated:



M.G. CARTER
INT. STATUE of LIBERTY - UNDERGROUND CHAMBER..
'BOND'
A concept art for the interior of the Statue of Liberty created for the film (by Maurice George Carter).

> - First [bus] driver: My brother-in-law works for the city; he says it's an outbreak of typhus in Harlem.
> - Second driver: Yesterday you said it was a leakage of nuclear waste.
> - First driver: Either way, I'm on double time after two o 'clock.
> - Second driver: Now they've cleared East River Drive for buses only.

A single car travels down Fifth Avenue, a limousine in which Bond and Linklater are; they return to EMCOCEN. Meanwhile, from a window in the Statue of Liberty's tiara, Largo watches his robotic sharks in the harbor through binoculars.

Bond and Leiter hear on the television news that sharks have been seen in the harbor, they were coming from the direction of Ellis Island. Bond makes the connection between the Statue of Liberty and a phrase that Blofeld had uttered earlier: "Liberty is our symbol".

On a roof, Bond, Leiter and the chief of police see red spots and mutilated limbs near an entrance to the sewers that run under Wall Street: these are those of the men who had been sent to search the sewers (with Q's diving suits). Bond asks Leiter to return to EMCOCEN so he can give order to the Aquatic Unit to invade the Statue of Liberty island.

Bond and the chief of police are now driving towards Wall Street, they get off at a subway station and join other men who are drilling a hole into a wall to access the sewers (Spectre has sealed all the sewer entrances of Manhattan). Bond decides to go here alone:

> - Police Chief: I think you'd better take my gun.
> - Bond: A screwdriver is all I need, Chief. I think I know what I'm looking for.

Once Bond leaves, the police chief decides to send three men after him in case he needs help; one of them turns out to be Bomba.

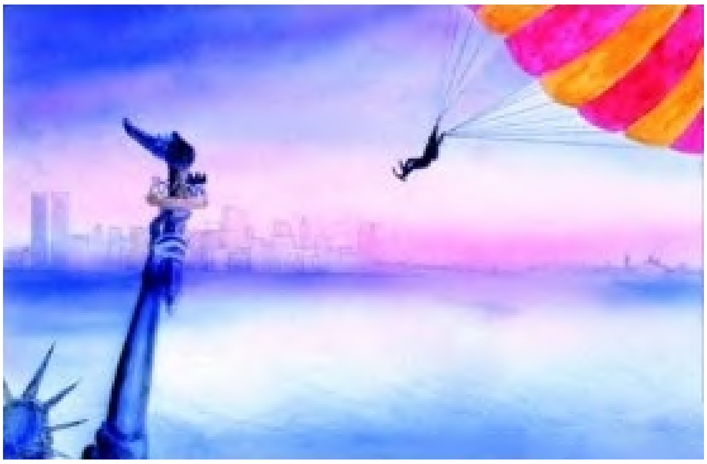
In the sewers, Bond is attacked by a robotic tiger shark and escapes using a ladder but Bomba, who is at the top of this ladder, knocks him back down. 007 swims and manages to hold on to the shark which then drags him into the sewers, trying to hit walls so that Bond will let go. Finally 007 manages to open a steam valve, which attracts the robot shark (because these things are attracted to heat) and takes the opportunity to neutralize the metal creature with the screwdriver.

Bond orients himself with the Geiger counter but runs into Bomba again. During a fight between the two men, Bond grabs a pipe from the ceiling of the sewers to pass above the water in order to reach the other bank and thus escape Bomba. Bond begins to cross with the strength of his hands. Bomba follows Bond, and holding the pipe with one hand (while he hangs in midair), Bomba grabs Bond by the neck with the other. The pipe ends up giving way under Bomba's weight and the man releases his grip on Bond before falling into the water and being devoured by tiger sharks as if he were being eaten by piranhas. Bond (literally) fall down onto the hammerhead shark that is carrying the warhead and neutralizes it with his screwdriver.

Largo, who sees this on a screen, asks Maslov to activate the timer and suddenly a red light with the words "WARHEAD ACTIVATED" appears on the warhead. Bond tries to defuse it when Q, dressed as a man working for the city sewers, suddenly comes from behind him and permanently deactivates the warhead!

A camera shot then shows twelve men from the aquatic unit emerging from the water and climbing the base of the Statue of Liberty with grappling hooks. Elsewhere, Marines board five helicopters heading towards the statue. Largo and Maslov are about to escape in a submarine but Largo falls to the ground following an explosion. The aquatic unit begins to invade the place and Largo tells Maslov to leave without him. Emilio Largo then takes part in the fight and retreats with his men towards the top of the statue.

Bond also wants to take part in the attack on the Statue of Liberty but Q has understood that robot sharks are attracted by heat; going there by swimming is therefore excluded (since Q's diving suits are heated). Q pulls out something that should help Bond to get there with the help of Felix Leiter... Meanwhile the helicopters arrive at the statue, there is smoke everywhere from colored smoke grenades.

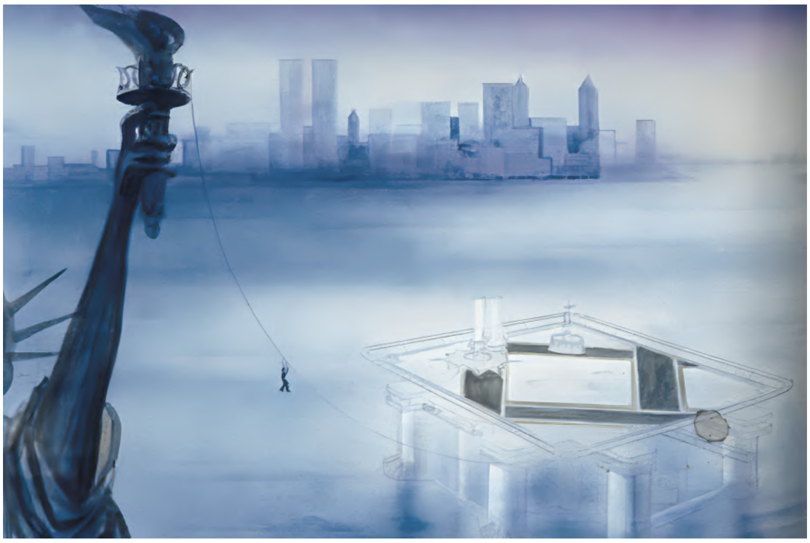


Leiter heads toward the monument with boat, accompanied by Bond... Who is on water-skis behind. Suddenly 007 flies away thanks to a kind of balloon ("helium-filled kite"), presses two buttons which cause his skis to retract into his boots and literally lands on Largo who is on the balcony at the level of the Liberty's Torch.

As Marines climb the statue with grappling hooks, Bond pursues Largo who flees down a spiral staircase. Largo kills one of the Marines with a stiletto at the statue's eye level (blood flows as if the statue is crying) and uses the dead Marine's grappling hook to go down; Bond follows him.

Largo manages to get aboard the Arkos which has just emerged from the water. Bond jumps into the water, places a miniature breathing device in his mouth and manages to grab onto the Arkos which is now diving. Largo is angry with Maslov for being hesitant: he doesn't fail to let him know and says he will detonate the remaining bombs in Antarctica in retaliation. In a bad situation and convinced that he'll be killed, Maslov asks Domino for help and begins to untie her:

> - Maslov: Help me. Please. You must help me! He has gone mad. He is going to kill me. He promised me he would never explode one of those things; he said everything we did was to help the world, to help people. But it wasn't true, none of it was true. You must help me!



While he has almost finished untying Domino, Largo returns. Quickly realizing his betrayal, Largo orders his men to capture Maslov alive but the scientist resists and grabs a weapon with which he kills or wounds a few henchmen before being shot (since Largo wanted Maslov alive, he shoots the man who had killed him).

Bond, who has finally managed to get inside the Arkos, comes across Largo and fights against him and one of his men in hand-to-hand combat while the Arkos heads dangerously towards an underwater ravine. Largo manages to retrieve a gun and hold Bond at gunpoint before sitting down in a chair in the meeting room. Domino, who managed to free herself, joins the control room of the meeting room. During a jolt she stumble across a control panel and presses a button which causes Largo to be ejected from the Arkos (in the same way as the man who was killed during the Spectre's meeting from the beginning of the script).

The Arkos is now out of control, Bond and Domino escape using Largo's comfortable submarine; they are covered from head to toe in gold powder (because they passed through a room where gold was extracted). The audience sees the Arkos being destroyed while hitting underwater mountain peaks, Bond and Domino kissing, 007 activates the autopilot, "Oh, James" and the submarine move away until it becomes nothing more than a little dot in the underwater world with, in the background, the music Rule Britannia...

- Len Deighton[11] : When I accompanied [McClory] on research trips that went everywhere from Miami Beach to Okinawa, Kevin always found friends to greet him, entertain him, lend him money (sometimes tens of thousands of pounds) and fix whatever he needed. "Your friend Len Deighton wants to go down into the New York sewers; it's strictly forbidden but would 8 am tomorrow morning be OK?". A car with a siren sounding, and a red light flashing, took me to an appropriate opened man-hole where a guide, official coveralls and regulation rubber boots of the right size awaited me. The Statue of Liberty was closed to visitors, but not only was it opened for Kevin and me but we had an official Port Authority tugboat take us to the island; then wait for us patiently while we climbed to peer at the big city out of the windows that are cut into Liberty's headdress. When Kevin came to town, Charlie Kelly, a popular New York Police Department detective, took time off to accompany him everywhere.

Similarities

In 1976 Kevin McClory, after learning several details about the plot of The Spy Who Loved Me, went to court to issue an injunction to stop production of the EON's film[12]. He indeed noticed a lot of similarities between the two Bond movies being developed: the hijacking of nuclear warheads from submarines, SPECTRE as an enemy, both productions intending to use the Aquapolis of the Okinawa exhibition and visited it, Christopher Wood had even invented a robot swordfish to defend it and Bomba the super-strong, imposing and mute henchman is undoubtedly reminiscent of Jaws.

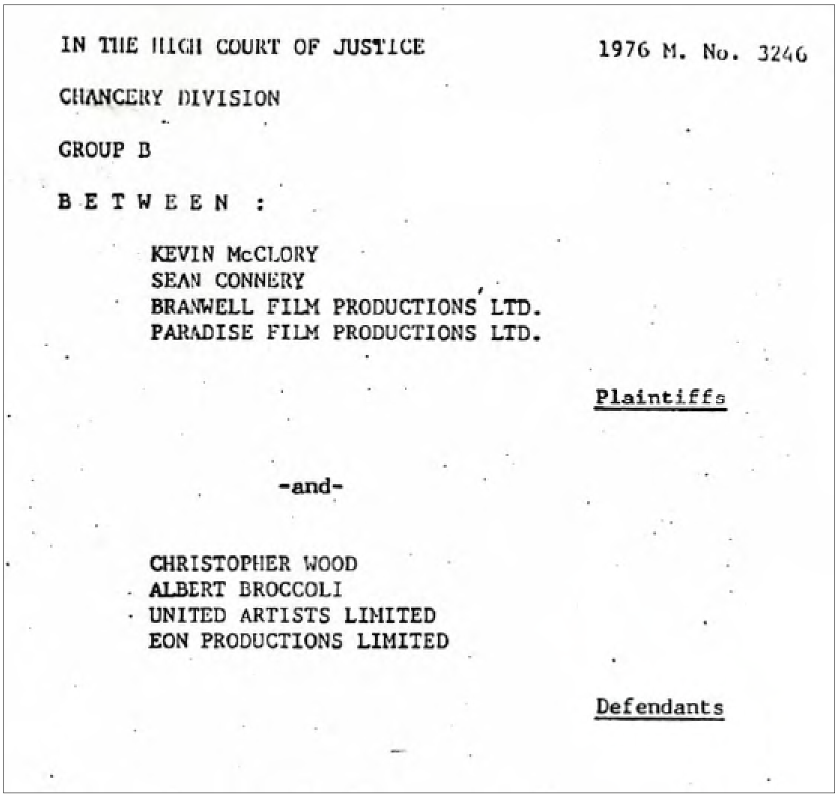
McClory also alleged that the soon-to-be-released movie The Spy Who Loved Me infringed upon his rights in Thunderball[13], notably theme of the theft of nuclear weapon[14].

On this occasion McClory claims to be the sole holder of the rights to SPECTRE as the idea of creating this organization was developed for Thunderball[15].

Sean Connery was also a part of the action against EON, as a co-plaintiff!

Christopher Wood himself was present in the dock and Maibaum went into the court to give his testimony.

McClory and Connery failed to ensure that The Spy Who Loved Me was not released in theaters, but Albert Broccoli, for fear that McClory would embark on a long and costly legal action, asked his screenwriters to remove all traces of the SPECTRE in the script (and this despite the fact no court decision never gave McClory any exclusive rights on SPECTRE or Blofeld).



IN THE HIGH COURT OF JUSTICE 1976 M. No. 3246

CHANCERY DIVISION

GROUP B

BETWEEN :

KEVIN McCLORY
SEAN CONNERY
BRANWELL FILM PRODUCTIONS LTD.
PARADISE FILM PRODUCTIONS LTD.

Plaintiffs

-and-

CHRISTOPHER WOOD
ALBERT BROCCOLI
UNITED ARTISTS LIMITED
EON PRODUCTIONS LIMITED

Defendants

1978' script: Warhead

Sean Connery, Len Deighton and Kevin McClory during Warhead's development.

> - Len Deighton[16] : The first and basic element of the plot required the creation of a mechanical shark [...]. In order to facilitate the widest possible positioning of the forward-facing twin beams that would locate the target, I made it a hammerhead shark. When the script was completed I called it Hammerhead. It is one of the frustrations of a screen writer's job that it is over and done with before the film camera starts turning. Sometimes this is a relief. [...] I handed the script to Kevin, said goodbye and thank you and returned to writing my books and give fuller attention to my long-suffering wife and our two sons. [...] Although my name was left on the revised version of the script, Hammerhead was changed to Warhead. [...] Warhead went through several rewrites and what remained of my work I don't know. [...] Kevin never completely paid me the agreed fee is a measure of that. Perhaps not. Kevin was more noted for the richness of his promises than for the payment of his bills.

"He owed me $27,000 for screenplay writing which I never received", adds Deighton[17].

Another script was completed a few years later, on September 6, 1978. At 137 pages, it was now titled Warhead, "based on James Bond of the Secret Service by Ian Fleming, Kevin McClory and Jack Whittingham". The writers listed on the cover page are still Len Deighton, Sean Connery, and Kevin McClory. However, Deighton crossed out his name and hand-wrote "nothing from me [in this script]".

> - Kevin McClory[18] : The other side objected to it [the title James Bond of the Secret Service] because of the similarity of the name to On Her Majesty's Secret Service. In any event, I particularly like one-word names. I personally think it's more effective, so their objection didn't bother me much. They felt it was too similar, and the law was valid, even though this was a Fleming title. Warhead was my title. We found it wasn't registered, so we registered it for our company.

This 1978 version is almost identical to the 1976 version studied previously. It therefore retains the same qualities (humor, the scenes in New York, surprise compared to a novel that we already know) and the same flaws (robot sharks which could turn out to be ridiculous if technically poorly done, Bond who has almost nothing to do before New York, relatively undeveloped characters including Domino who acts as a bit of a stopgap and who fall straight into the arms of our hero whom she has only known for a few seconds (before being captured and doesn't show up again until the finale), and arguably the worst sin of all for the project: a story that could prove legally too far from the novel and its ancestors).

Several characters and places have however been renamed: Bomba becomes Ghengis and changes nationality: this henchman is now Mongolian. The Arkos is renamed Aquapolis (like the real one) and the crisis unit is no longer located at the Pan Am Building (MetLife) but at the twin towers of the World Trade Center.

Sean during location scouting.

Several scenes have been shortened: this is the case of the one with the plane of the Secretary General of the United Nations where it is no longer even indicated who is on the plane or in the Aquapolis. The scene where Bond does parachutes at the back of Petacchi's boat was also shortened, as was Maslov's death (in the 1976 version he struggles and even kill people, there he is just shoot directly). The explanation for the failure of Spectre's first attempt to recover the submarine's warhead has been completely removed. However, there might have been an addition because the second page of the script only consists of the words "pre-title sequence (to be written)".

While all of this can be considered as minor changes, there is however a major one in the 1978 script. Indeed, it turns out that the character of Largo was completely removed from the script to be replaced by Blofeld himself!

In reality the writers almost just stupidly changed the name of the character, which obviously created funny situations. Thus the Ernst Stavros (with a superflux "s" at the end) Blofeld of Warhead is a future backgammon champion, he performs actions and pronounces phrases that doesn't always fit his personality.

Additional problem, the Bond-Blofeld relationship doesn't work that much, it's a real step back in the saga given that it's supposed to be the first time that the two men meet, so goodbye Bond's hate for of man who killed his wife.

Beside, after an epic battle on the Statue of Liberty, Blofeld is killed by Domino in a way that might have disappointed the fan of the time who was just waiting for the final confrontation between the two men (although as for Largo, there is no planned camera shot to show his lifeless body).

Warhead on rails and... Derailed

There were probably lots of changes or rewrites that I didn't have. In any case, it's all well and good to have scripts: you still have to do something with them!

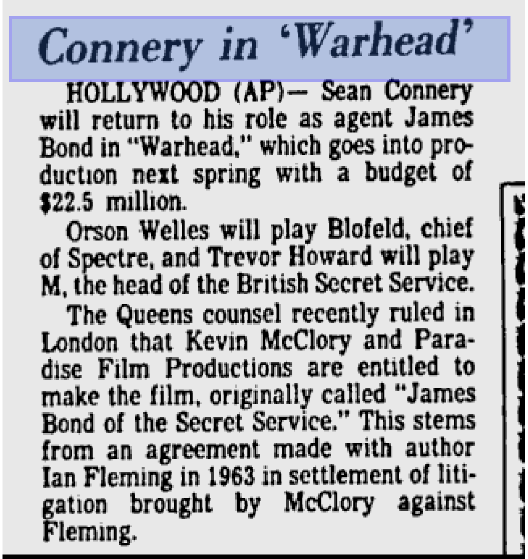
McClory had already announced "James Bond of the Secret Service" with filming scheduled to begin in February 1977[19]. Paramount should be involved[20].

However, with several millions committed to the project, Paramount says that they only wanted to make the film if Sean Connery dons the James Bond tuxedo[21]. Connery agrees, "there was also a certain amount of curiosity in me about the role, having been away from it so long"[22].

By the time McClory told the fans that Sean Connery was back "like Muhammad Ali when he's at his most fit"[23], they were undoubtedly overjoyed!

Rumors Richard Attenborough in the director's chair are circulating[24]. (McClory also reportedly at one point having asked Connery to direct the film[25]).

"Sean Connery will star, together with Orson Welles and Trevor Howard. Our budget will be $22.5 million", declared McClory[26], but want you trust everything coming from his mouth?



Connery in 'Warhead'

HOLLYWOOD (AP)— Sean Connery will return to his role as agent James Bond in "Warhead," which goes into production next spring with a budget of $22.5 million.

Orson Welles will play Blofeld, chief of Spectre, and Trevor Howard will play M, the head of the British Secret Service.

The Queens counsel recently ruled in London that Kevin McClory and Paradise Film Productions are entitled to make the film, originally called "James Bond of the Secret Service." This stems from an agreement made with author Ian Fleming in 1963 in settlement of litigation brought by McClory against Fleming.

Pittsburgh Post-Gazette: April 30, 1979

> - Trevor Howard[27] : I had lunch with McClory one day and he asked me if I'd be interested in playing M. I said probably not, since it's such a small part. But I was always willing to discuss it. Next thing I knew I'd been announced for the role. But I can assure you I've signed no contract.

> - Orson Welles's lawyer[28] : Orson is often approached about subjects and I wouldn't necessarily know about them, but we certainly haven't signed a contract for this picture.

Yet, decades later, in 2000, McClory still continued to claim that Howard would have played M in the movie and that Welles would have payed Blofeld (and directed the film as well)[29]!

Speaking publicly about the plot, McClory says, "If you visualise Star Wars underwater, you get some idea of our story"[30].

Kevin McClory is preparing for a new legal battle. This time, he did not initiate the procedure. Cubby Broccoli joined forces with United Artists to try to stop his film[31]. They says that without Fleming's permission, McClory can't make a rival James Bond film that is isn't actually based on Thunderball.

If McClory is ready for the legal battle to defend his "Star Wars underwater", this is not the case for Sean Connery who plays the caution card and declares: "Before I put my nose into anything, I want to know it is legally bona fide"[32].

This statement, as well as the imminent legal action, undoubtedly chills Paramount, which decides to withdraw from the project[33]. Connery, upset by the legal situation, also walked away from the project: "Perhaps some lawyer will play the part [of Bond]", he adds[34].

> - Sean Connery[35] : The legal factors were harder to go through than to make the film, I said "That's enough!", and I walked away from it. When I first worked on the script with Len, I had no thought of actually being in the film. It wasn't until my wife Micheline suggested it would be fun to try it again that I agreed. But it's clearly not on the cards now.

If Warhead is dead, Kevin McClory's desire to make a James Bond film is far away from it. In 1979 he announced his intention to launch a series of James Bond films, saying that "as long as we don't release the films at the same time, I don't think they would hurt each other"[36]. Like many of the things announced by the Irishman: we will never see the color of it.

Writing Never Say Never Again

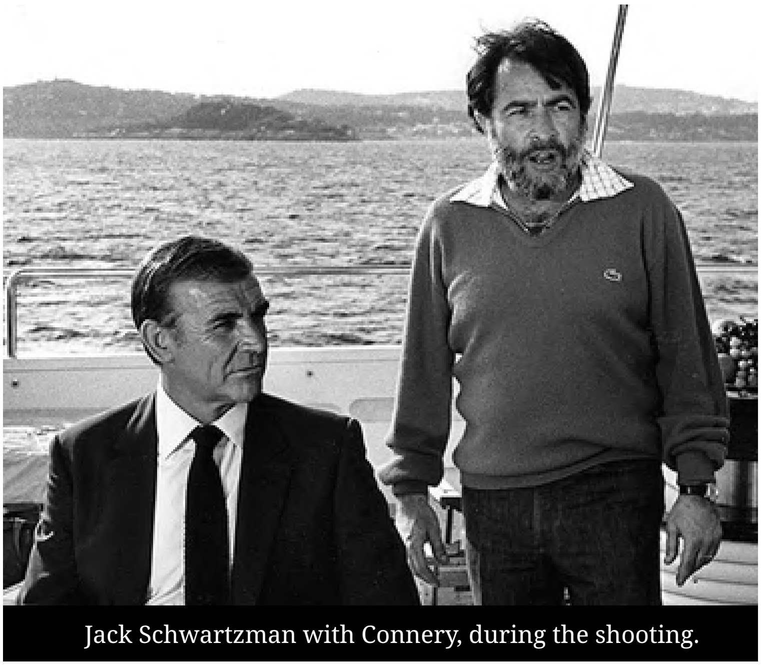
After spending the last few months trying to find financial support and assert his rights, McClory's problems finally seem to be resolved thanks to the providential arrival of a former lawyer specializing in the film industry who is now an associate producer at Lorimar Productions: the American Jack Schwartzman.

> - Jack Schwartzman[37] : McClory presented [an idea for a] Bond film starring Connery to Lorimar. One of my responsibilities was to survey and evaluate it, giving Lorimar a recommendation whether or not they should do it. I recommended they should, but, for various reasons, they couldn't come to terms. Several months passed, and in early 1981, I left Lorimar and embarked on a career as an independent producer [creating Taliafilm]. Out of the blue, I received a phone call from an investment banker friend of mine in New York, who was McClory's financial advisor. He asked if I was interested in getting involved with a Bond movie based on certain rights his client had.



Jack Schwartzman with Connery, during the shooting.

Schwartzman knows that McClory has rights to make a film on Thunderball and knows that produced correctly while scrupulously respecting the legal framework, they have every chance. In other words: he's interested.

Connery is still ready to be on board to return to play 007 as long as he doesn't have to deal with lawyers[38] and have basically a say on every creative decision[39] (Schwartzman didn't want to invest in the project if Connery wasn't on board[40]). Jack Schwartzman rent the rights from McClory[41] (Never Say Never Again is Schwartzman's film and not McClory's) and managed to raise a budget of around $34 million, with Warner Bros. distributing the film in the United States/Canada. (Schwartzman had also offered to make the film in co-production with EON, but Broccoli was not interested[42]).

> - Jack Schwartzman[43] : I bought his rights [McClory] and agreed to give him a credit on the film. Beyond that he's had no input creatively or in terms of the production. He retains the rights to make more films in the future [after 1986].

If the pre-production of the film was launched in 1982, the script of Warhead is shelved. In fact Schwartzman had deliberately refused to buy the script because it was obviously more than a simple rewrite of Thunderball and this could lead to legal problems.

> - Jack Schwartzman[44] : I didn't want the Warhead script. At the time I made my deal [with McClory], it was the subject of the litigation, and I didn't want to be tarred with the same brush. I had to develop a whole new screenplay. Since the litigation existed, I knew what the parameters were regarding what we could and could not do.

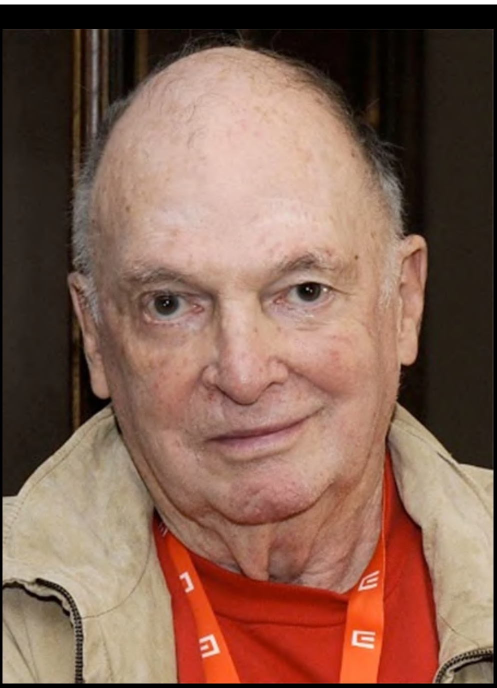
Julian Piers Plowden[45] (born 1931), known to those close to him as "Poppy", was educated at Ampleforth College, then served in the British Army in 1953. While in London in 1956 he met the love of his life, Judith Hall Rathvon of New York. They married in New York in 1956 and moved to Mexico City in 1957, where Plowden began working as an assistant and script reader for producer John Sutro.

After spending three and a half years in Mexico, Plowden and his wife moved to California where he began working in Hollywood, specifically television. In 1974 Plowden was at Paramount and in 1978 he was at Lorimar Productions, as vice president in charge of creative affairs. He works on scripts such as The Forty Days of Musa Dagh adapted from the novel by Franz Werfel.

On Never Say Never Again, he will be credited as an associate of Jack Schwartzman.

Whenever the opportunity arose, Plowden's favorite pastime was going fly fishing with friends and family. He died in 2016 at the age of 85.

The first writer on the project was apparently one of Schwartzman's associates at Lorimar, Julian Plowden[46]. Plowden tried his hand at it for a while, then writing the scenario was entrusted to Lorenzo Semple Jr.



Lorenzo Elliott Semple III[47], born in March 1923 in the United States, attended the Brooks School in Massachusetts where he graduated in 1940.

He then went to Yale University, but left in 1941 to join the American Field Service in North Africa, where his beard earned him the nickname "The Goat". Aged 19, he was awarded the "Médaille militaire" and the "Croix de Guerre" for his service as a volunteer ambulance driver with the Free French Forces in Libya. Wounded in action at Bir Hakeim, he returned to the United States where he was drafted into the Army, serving as an intelligence officer in Europe.

Back home, he studied playwriting at Columbia. Semple's writing career began in 1951, as an author of short stories for magazines such as The Saturday Evening Post and Collier's Weekly. Semple also tried writing for the theater and had a play produced on Broadway: Tonight in Samarkand (1955), a melodrama adapted from a French play.

After writing an episode for The Alcoa Hour (1955), he wrote another play: Golden Fleecing (1958-1959).

Semple wrote other episodes for various television series such as Buckskin, Target or Pursuit.

Semple's first association with James Bond took place in the 1950s, with producer Gregory Ratoff, then owner of the film rights to the Fleming's novel Casino Royale.

"I was a bright young guy fresh out of college, and Gregory hired me to write the screenplay. I worked without pay, but it was a great deal of fun. We traveled around the world while he gambled in casinos, supposedly doing research. He was too old-fashioned to work, so I would sit at the typewriter for four or five hours a day in whatever hotel we were staying in, and just turn out pages and pages of scenes. I probably wrote several scripts during a year of traveling throughout Europe. Gregory thought the story was much too silly. He said: Nobody believe this James Bond, so we make him into woman. [...] The idea was to write it as a vehicle for [actress] Susan Hayward".

Ratoff died in 1960 before anything came off it.

The play Golden Fleecing by Semple was purchased by MGM and made into a film under the title The Honeymoon Machine (1961) with Steve McQueen. After that Semple moved to Hollywood and established himself as a writer for other television shows including Kraft Suspense Theatre (1964), Breaking Point or Burke's Law.

While now living in Spain in 1965, Semple was approached by producer William Dozier to develop a television series for ABC based on the comic strip Batman. Semple wrote a pilot and the first four episodes; Batman the TV show becomes a popular success. He wrote 16 of the 120 episodes (and was consultant on the others) as well as the script for the 1966 film version.

Semple is also writing a double episode of The Green Hornet in 1966.

From there, Semple focused on writing for films. Building on the success of the film Batman, he and director Leslie Martinson reunited on Fathom (1967), a spy parody starring Raquel Welch.

His script for Pretty Poison (1968) was critically acclaimed. After a few more films, Semple found himself being one of the screenwriters for Papillon (1973). In 1975 here he was writing Three Days of the Condor adapted from the novel of James Grady. This marks his first collaboration with producer Dino De Laurentiis for whom he will do in the following years King Kong (1976), Hurricane (1979) and Flash Gordon (1980).

James Bond then returns with Never Say Never Again.

After that he will write Sheena: Queen of the Jungle (1984), the series Rearview Mirror and only another pair of unremarkable films.

Afterwards, Semple will do movie reviews on YouTube. He died in 2014 at his home in Los Angeles, one day after his 91st birthday.

The film will adopt the name Never Say Never Again, a title suggested by Sean Connery's wife and referring to the fact that her husband had earlier declared that he would never play the character of Bond again[48].

According to Schwartzman, Lorenzo Semple Jr. was selected because "he was diverse enough to have written both Batman and Three Days of the Condor. I was hoping to come up with a film which would be somewhere in the middle of those two"[49].

- Jack Schwartzman[50] : Lorenzo knows how to write suspense and he also has a certain sense of humor, which I felt was attractive to my concept of the picture. Compared to other writers, he was enormously qualified and he has turned out to be the absolutely right choice. If you look at his credits, he's a rather unique guy, and a very brilliant man.

Semple was interviewed in detail in issue #71 of Starlog (1983) during the production of the film. He says that Sean Connery "had been on record as saying that if the script was right, he would do another Bond picture someday. That fact was very intriguing to me, like searching for a lost mine"[51].

> - Lorenzo Semple Jr.[52] : Sean wanted this to be the greatest film ever made, so it wouldn't appear to be a rip-off for the money. I was extremely apprehensive about that idea, because I felt a Bond movie-especially one that's essentially a remake-would never be the greatest film ever made. I tried to make it as sparkling as possible, but I think it would be a very bad idea to become super-artistic about this movie.

With EON and MGM-UA not keen on the idea of a rival Bond production, a number of lawyers in the pay of Schwartzman and the film's insurance company are there to ensure that the script for the future Never Say Never Again doesn't go outside the framework of the rights that McClory had acquired in 1963, and that nothing bad will come of it if/when legal action will be attempted by their adversaries[53].

"Part of the fun of doing the screenplay was threading my way through this legal mine-field", Semple comments[54]. He is not worried that the film will not see the light of the day: "I had no doubt whatsoever that we were within our rights. [...] When there's big money involved and profits to be made, one way or another it will get off the ground"[55].

" heard that as long as McClory was not actively connected with the picture it would get made. Schwartzman persuaded McClory to take his money and step into the background. In effect he arranged for McClory to get out", adds Semple[56].

According to Semple: "The major change we made is that James Bond is in semi-retirement, and must force his way back into action"[57]. The idea is to have an older Bond[58].

The other big point of contention is to change the locations of action by relocating scenes in the Bahamas elsewhere. "I kept saying the story was more important than the location, but Jack and his lawyers were very nervous about moving the setting from the Bahamas", Semple recalls[59].

> - Lorenzo Semple Jr.[60] : At one point, we even had Leiter kicked out of the CIA and working in security for an oil company, but we had to change that back for legal reasons.

Anything from Fleming's novel that was not used in the 1965' film is considered a plus to have[61]. Well, not exactly:

> - Lorenzo Semple Jr.[62] : For example, in the scene in which SPECTRE and Ernst Blofeld are introduced [in the novel], Blofeld summarizes various operations his organization has carried out in the last year. He describes five separate incidents. I didn't see why we couldn't have taken one of those incidents and done a whole new picture from it. I asked the lawyers many times about that idea, but they said we couldn't get away with it. The lawyers kept saying: "The bottom line is if it's too different from the Thunderball movie, then you're not doing a remake, you're doing a sequel".

For obvious rights reasons, Never Say Never Again could also not have elements specific to the EON's Bondian formula such as the gunbarrel, the James Bond Theme, "Q" or even a credits sequence with naked girls.

Semple completes a 70-page treatment that receives the approval of lawyers[63]. The next step is to have the one of Sean Connery who has a say on the script. The treatment was sent to the actor in Spain: "Sean liked it, and so did Jack; especially when Sean liked it", Semple remembers[64].

Having the Connery's approval, Semple began work on a first script based on his treatment. "The word came back that Sean liked it but had some ideas. So I went over to Marbella [to meet him for the first time] and visited him for a few days. I thought all his ideas were excellent. I listened to him most closely, and did my best to incorporate them in my rewrite"[65].

The film needs a director and Connery's idea is to hire the one of Superman, Richard Donner, but Donner "didn't like the script and didn't want to do a remake", according to Semple[66].

It is the director of the second opus of Star Wars (The Empire Strikes Back), Irvin Kershner, who will end up in the director's seat. This is not good news for the screenwriter:

Connery with director Irvin Kershner.

- Lorenzo Semple Jr.[67] : Kersh is the most notorious destroyer of scripts in Hollywood. [...] Quite a few people in Hollywood turn white at the very thought of Kersh becoming involved with a project. His habit is to immediately say the script is terrible and start rewriting it himself.

- Lorenzo Semple Jr.[68] : The script was not as action-packed, nobody expressed at this moment much concern about it. The idea from the beginning had been to have this not a super action movie, [but] it's sort of a psychological study of an older spy.

The echoes he had heard from Kershner were well-founded according to Semple:

- Lorenzo Semple Jr.[69] : Kersh had tons of ideas. First, he said the script was great, then, he said it needed more action. He's very enthusiastic, but he's like a child. He would say: "I've got a sensational idea. Let's do this". Two days later, he would say: "That's terrible. It doesn't work at all". [...] Anybody would have had difficulty with Kersh. It might have been fun if we were beginning the project then, but at that stage, it was extremely unpleasant. Sean was waiting to start the movie [...] but Kersh took the view that we were starting from scratch, and played around for months.

One can wonder if Kershner was the ideal man for the job when you read the following quote:

> - Irvin Kershner[70] : The only thing that made me do [this film] was Sean Connery because [...] I was never interested in Bond. In fact, up to that point I'd only seen two Bond films. [...] I didn't want to look at the Bond films. [....] I felt that we were making something different. [I decided to forget I had seen any of them. As far as I'm concerned, there never was a Bond picture before[71]]. [...] I didn't think Fleming was a great writer at all. In fact, I though he was mediocre.

> - Lorenzo Semple Jr.[72] : We had made a conscious decision at the beginning to try to make it more like the classic early Bond movies. Thunderball was the one in which they started getting silly, and the series deteriorated from there. We wanted to do without the huge gimmicks. But then, everybody became increasingly nervous about the audience's reaction to a more realistic approach to James Bond.

> - Irvin Kershner[73] : The action is important and the movie has a lot of action, but it also has people. One should always use a character's humanity as a base.

Semple rewrote the script according to the director's instructions (and also making some sacrifices in the name of budget cuts[74]). "We ripped up scenes and changed the script around wildly. Eventually Sean approved it and went away. Then, Kersh said that we've got to change everything again. He brought in one of his friends and they wrote 20 pages, which were just terrible", according to Semple[75].

> - Lorenzo Semple Jr.: I was subsequently brought back in by Kersh for more rewriting. The first thing I did was throw his stuff out. [...] Kersh worked with me in London for two weeks, but without consulting Jack. We did a rewrite with which Kersh was very happy. He took it to Sean in Marbella, and there was an explosion. Sean said: "I hate it! You've ruined [the script! I won't do the movie!". Naturally, there was great panic. Jack turned on me and said: "I should have thrown your typewriter out the window!" I don't blame Jack, because Kersh was really out of control.

According to Semple, Connery found the script notably lacking in action[76]. "I was immediately sacrificed. It was agreed that I wouldn't have anything more to do with the writing", adds Semple[77]. "What then happened was that Kersh, Sean, the assistant director and a secretary pasted together another script, restoring material from the earlier drafts"[78].

> - Irvin Kershner[79] : Was it a Bond's story? Was he really an older Bond? Did it have the humor of a Bond? I read it, and it felt it wasn't the older Bonds. It was something different, it sort of was Bond in some places and not Bond in others. He was having problems with it, there was no doubt about it. Sean read it and he told me that this wasn't his idea of what the film would be. [...] I don't think Jack liked it either. [...] There were two distinct problems [...]: what was the tone of the dialogue, what was the story. By now we had four scripts and we put it together and it began to make sense, it began to have a form.

- Lorenzo Semple Jr.[80] : The script problems wouldn't have occurred if we had a director who was [mere] a craftsman, and didn't also fancy himself a "great artist".

Despite having been dismissed from this James Bond film, Semple and Schwartzman continued at the same time to collaborate on the script of another film in project, an adaptation of the science fiction novel The Stars My Destination by Alfred Bester[81]. (The project will, however, eventually fall through).

Director Irvin Kershner defends himself, saying that his relationship with Lorenzo Semple was very good when they worked together and that:

- Irvin Kershner[82] : It was afterwards, when it of course had to be re-written by others, that he became very angry. I got reports about things he was saying about me. But this happens often with writers, they feel they have done a perfect job. [...] By the way, I think Lorenzo is a terrific writer, and very knowledgeable, with a nice sense of form and rhythm. It's just we had a lot of problems trying to make a film out of this book. I think he didn't quite realise that. In fact he was in on the production before the real problems arose.

Kershner describes the existing script at the time he came to the film as something "designed to satisfy a contract more than an audience"[83]. The legal framework was a real problem at the time of writing, adds Kersner: "We had these terrible limitations; you can't do this, you can't do that, you can't do this. They were suing us all the time. It was very very difficult to get a script. Very very difficult"[84].

Zalman King Lefkowitz[85], born in 1941, began his career as an actor on television as in Alfred Hitchcock presents, The Standells or The Munsters. He would later star in films, often categorized as erotic.

Towards the end of the 1980s he diversified as a director, screenwriter and producer of little-known films. He died at age 69 in 2012.

- Irvin Kershner[86] : Lorenzo Semple had worked with Jack Schwartzman and Sean Connery for nine months when I arrived. His script didn't convinced me. Then began a long series of changes. Screenwriter Zalman King took charge of the matter for a fortnight. Then came Ian La Fresnais and Dick Clement, who basically rewrote everything, restructured everything. They knew how to give coherence to something that was going in all directions. The original script was endless! [Kershner also adds that he was more interested in developing the characters than filming great action scenes].

- Barbara Carrera (Fatima Blush)[87] : Semple didn't believe women could be villains, so his justification for this villainess that I was going to play was to make her totally unappealing. A bull-dyke with a bald head wearing man's > clothing. I was in tears by the time I finished reading it. [...] I said, "I read the script. I'm not that character. I'm not going to play that character. I'm sorry, Kersh". And he said, "Relax, we have six writers coming in. They're gonna revamp the whole script".

At one point the script begins like this:

1 EXT. GROUNDS OF A CASTLE - DAY 1

It's the 16th Century. A fair is going on: jugglers, tumblers, musicians, barking dogs, purveyors of food and drink, and so on. A TRUMPET is heard.

2 EXT. CASTLE COURTYARD - DAY 2

TWO MOUNTED KNIGHTS IN ARMOR gallop at each other, using JOUSTING LANCES with balls on the ends in place of points. They make simultaneous contact and unhorse each other with a spectacular crash.

A VEILED WOMAN

Stands at a slitted window watching another KNIGHT IN ARMOR preparing for the next joust. He's at a distance, his back turned so his face is not seen as he dons the last part of his ARMOR, a HELMET with a a wonderful PURPLE PLUME. The woman glides out of shot.

FEATURE THE PURPLE KNIGHT

He's lifted in the air on a rope-and-pulley HOIST and dropped astride his waiting mount.

ANOTHER ANGLE

A JOUSTING LANCE rests on a RACK. The veiled WOMAN appears. With a quick slealthy move she twists off the ball on the end and replaces it with another ball that looks identical. She watches the PURPLE KNIGHT trotting up to take his LANCE. As he does, she solemnly pulls off one of the gossamer SCARVES she wears and touches it to her lips. Gallantly, the PURPLE KNIGHT draws his SWORD and catches the SCARF with the tip, retrieves it, affixes it to his HELMET.

HIGH SHOT - THE COURTYARD

TRUMPETS sound again, the PURPLE KNIGHT sets his LANCE and wheels away to a starting mark, while his opponent, in a HELMET with a GREEN PLUME does the same. They charge at each other.

SHOTS - THE PURPLE KNIGHT

As he gallops, the scene changes into SLOWER AND SLOWER MOTION. The camera finds his LANCE and glides along it to a HUGE CLOSE UP of the ball on the end. It seems barely to be moving as it strikes the GREEN KNIGHT'S SHIELD. The ball breaks open revealing a GLITTERING STEEL POINT within. Sliding off the shield, the point hits a BREASTPLATE and goes through it as if that were paper.

CONTINUED

2 CONTINUED 2

CLOSE LOW ANGLE - THE GREEN PLUMED HELMET

In that same EXTREME SLOW MOTION the point comes out thru the back of the unfortunate KNIGHT as a horrifying fountain of BLOOD spurts out. The murdered GREEN KNIGHT starts falling backwards from his saddle.

CUTS - AROUND THE AREA

Stricken silence for an instant, then horrified pandemonium. Dumbly, the PURPLE KNIGHT controls his rearing HORSE and holds his now broken off LANCE. ZOOM IN TIGHT on this lowered VISOR. A glint of EYES seeing something.

P.O.V. - THRU THE VISOR

That VEILED WOMAN, the one who was over his LANCE is looking right directly back at him, then she quickly slips away into the crowd and starts running.

MOVING - WITH THE PURPLE KNIGHT

He kicks his heels into his HORSE and takes off after her with his broken LANCE. PEOPLE yell and scatter out of his path as he gallops through the courtyard, crazily jumping obstacles in his way.

3 EXT. GATES - LEADING TO A CAR PARK - DAY (VEILED WOMAN) 3

She's running at full sprint now away from the CASTLE. As she runs the large gossamer VEIL falls from her head revealing a beautiful BLACK AFRICAN WOMAN. MOVING WITH HER we discover ourselves startingly out of the 16th century and into today. What we've seen has apparently all been a spectacle of some sort, for out here are PEOPLE IN MODERN DRESS and a PARKING LOT JAMMED WITH CARS.

The BLACK WOMAN leaps into a nifty little SPORTS CAR, perhaps a LOTUS ELITE. She starts it.

SHOT - INCLUDING THE PURPLE KNIGHT

Charging the vehicle broadside as it leaps backwards. The busted LANCE smashes a side WINDOW and whistles under the driver's chin.

Bouncing off some CARS parked behind her, she shoots forward. The KNIGHT wheels, draws his BROADSWORD, slams it down through her roof. Again, the thrust just misses, but it sends her skidding into more PARKED CARS. His HORSE rearing and shrieking, the KNIGHT fights his SWORD out of the metal and gets in a couple of more chops before a new lunge into reverse carries away the WEAPON.

CONTINUED

(The knight then had to succeed in killing the girl and remove his helmet: it was James Bond).

> - Sean Connery[88] : Unfortunately Lorenzo is American, and the humour is very British; with an American director and an American writer, [the script] had a tendency to go towards American humour.

The British comedy writing duo Dick Clement and Ian La Frenais (who had worked for a time on the writing of Moonraker) remembers how they got into the film:

> - Dick Clement[89] : We were making a television series called Auf Wiedersehen, Pet in England and we bumped into Irvin Kershner in the commissary in Elstree Studios [where Never Say Never Again was being filmed]. We already knew him, so we said, "Oh, you're doing this Bond film, do you need a rewrite?". He replied, "Yes, I probably do". We thought that'd be great.

La Frenais and Clement in 1983.

For a while Clement and La Frenais had no news from Kershner and when their agent ask again for them, the film's production asked them to come to France, to Nice, where the film was being shot[90].

"The first thing we did when we got to Nice was to look at what they had already shot. They had been shooting for about three weeks, and it was clear to us that there were a lot of problems", Clement recalls[91]. One of the things they notice is that the current script doesn't contain an explanation for Bond going to the Bahamas[92].

> - Dick Clement[93] : Kersh just looked at this and said, "Well, you better find a reason because there's a unit shooting underwater there now".

After a week in Nice, writing in the hotel and watching scenes being shot, the screenwriting duo returned to London and embarked almost directly for the next shooting destination: the Bahamas[94]. "We were in the Bahamas for about ten days. [...] Then it was back on Elstree to be in the cutting room with Kersh", explains the screenwriters[95]. There the screenwriters spend time with the director in the editing room looking for solutions to story problems, as well as continuity problems when cuts have taken place to reduce the length of the film deemed too long to be acceptable[96].

> - Irvin Kershner[97] : They were great on dialogue, they could get the little humor [...] and get away from the exposition. I thought they were terrific.

By being on production during filming, the writers have a front-row seat to observe problems and try to remain neutral in conflicts between filmmakers that arise during filming:

- Ian La Frenais[98] : The problem was not the script; we're not badmouthing the previous writer. But for whatever reason, they started shooting before they were ready and the film was definitely not ready to shoot. We were in the position of plumbers fixing a bad leak. We had to be aware of the logistics and the politics as well as the writing. But all the problems stemmed from the behind-the-scenes financing and insurance issues, all the logistical things. They were not prepared to start when they did.

- Dick Clement[99] : [Connery] kept saying "the script isn't there, the script isn't there. [...] Sean was pretty mad because he felt that he kept telling Schwartzman "you've got to get the script right", and they hadn't. So he was mad because they shouldn't have been in this position.

- Dick Clement[100] : Because of the threat of litigation, they had been told at one point [that] you could only use the original dialogue from the book [or that they had written a version of the script like that[101]]. It's impossible to write a screenplay where you only dialogue [from] in the book. It's... It's insane. [On this film] everything had to be checked by the producer, by the director, by Sean and then by the insurance company [...]. So there were four sets of people checking every line that we wrote, which was... Extraordinary.

December 1982' script

Filming began on September 27, 1982 and we will be analyzing a 125 page film script dated December 1982. No screenwriter's name appears on the cover page but at this point Clement and Ian La Frenais have already joined the production.

> - Dick Clement[102] : I remember going up to Kershner and saying, "Do you like your opening sequence?". He looked at me and said, "Not especially, why?". I said: in the current script, it's a jousting tournament sequence. [...] Eventually, one of [the knights] wins, takes off his helmet, and he's revealed to be James Bond. We said, "Here's the thing: the key asset you've got in making this movie is Sean Connery whom a lot of people regard as THE James Bond. You've got him and they [EON] haven't. It's a huge asset. [So] why don't you show him [to the audience] from the word go [instead of hiding his face under armor]?".

> - Irvin Kershner[103] : I saw an abandoned house [in the Bahamas] and I thought of an opening in the abandoned house.

> [The] camera tracks parallel with a man running through the trees at top speed. We cannot identify him. His clothes blend wish the forest and a coil of nylon rope is looped around his shoulder. There is no music, only the sound of she man's breathing, his legs brushing against the undergrowth and the insistant ticking of a stopwatch. The foliage is sub-tropical, suggesting Central America or Asia.

So this script begins with Bond approaching the colonial-style house (the script doesn't, however, require superimposed credits; in fact no opening credits seems planned). So LaFresnais and Clement were very disappointed when they discovered that their ticking clock sound (which was apparently present in an early cut[104]) had ultimately been replaced by a song: "I think they made one of the worst post-production decisions ever: they put a song over it, which completely took away any tension there was there"[105].

The action is similar to the film except that 007 neither uses a frisbee nor a blowgun, but a grappling hook to climb the house (instead of zippling over a power line). He frees the girl who is blonde, without being surprised by an enemy (hidden behind a door in the film). She stab him as telling him "You're dead, Mr. Bond".

Just after this scene, we find Bond passing through Moneypenny's office to see M in a passage absent from the film:

> - Moneypenny: Good morning, James. When's the funeral?
> - Bond: We are not amused, Miss Moneypenny.
> - Moneypenny: Sorry. M says to go straight through.

The scene with M is the same as the one in the film and Bond goes to Shrublands. He arrives here in a "vintage Series 3 Bentley Continental" and "sound of a military jet is heard as it arcs through the sky".

When the doctor says he will have a "refreshing cup of parsley tea", Bond has an additional line: "I hope it's shaken, not stirred".

Clement and La Frenais admitted that the exchange "if you could fill this beaker for me", "From here?" between Bond and a nurse is a gag they recycled from their television series Porridge[106].

We are then supposed to see Fatima Blush arrive in a fast car at the "Banque De Industrie Europa Internationale" to meet Blofeld. The writing of this sequence is not finished since the meeting is only contained in four explanatory sentences:

> In which we meet Blofeld and Largo.
> No reference is made to Bond.
> Blofeld kills A.N. Other.
> We learn a little about the plot and a reference is made to Jack Petachi.

Because for some reason Petachi is written with a single C (unlike the novel, abut as the Xanadu's era draft). Below, handwriting on the script indicates that the art department renamed the bank to Bank de Finse to avoid possible confusion and that this decision was approved by Kershner, "Jack" [Schwartzman?] and another Jack.

We find Bond at Shrublands, playing golf in the open air, then return to his Bentley where he sees Lippe lowering a bandaged Jack Petachi out of an ambulance. Fatima, disguised as a nurse, also gets out of the ambulance and pushes Petachi in his wheelchair. The script tells us that: "There is a moment of eye contact between Fatima and Bond as she passes him. Bond watches her appreciatively".

Scenes missing from the film.

> - Barbara Carrera (Fatima Blush)[107] : [Kershner] told me about Never Say Never Again. He was very excited and literally talked me into doing it with him and Sean Connery without a script! Somehow, Kershner's enthusiasm and his excitement got me hooked on it. The first time I saw the script, for instance, I wasn't at all happy with it. It was too late because I was already committed to the film! I thought, "My god! I'm making a dreadful mistake!". But then writers came in, and it just kept improving every day, more and more.

007 then comes across Patricia Fearing, an osteopath, and tells the latter that she doesn't look like a "bonebreaker".

Patricia takes care of Bond's vertebrae (on this occasion he also does rowing machine).

- Prunella Gee (Patricia Fearing)[108] : The [shooting] schedules were up the creek and there were people everywhere. [Connery] was going back to his hotel to work on the script at night.

We then find Petachi, who unlike the film is not alone in his room, but with Fatima who tells him not to move until she comes back. Meanwhile Bond opens his pantry suitcase when he receives a visit from Patricia and we doesn't in the film heard theses ending lines:

- Bond: I also have a red plonk which I have been saving for a real emergency.
- Patricia: James, you're supposed to be eating nothing but soya curd.
- Bond: Starting tomorrow, I promise to become a born-again vegetarian.

This script doesn't detail the type of wine but the writers at one point remember writing 1964 Château Cheval Blanc into a script:

- Dick Clement[109] : I remember the prop guy came up to us and said, "I couldn't get the 1964 Cheval Blanc. Will the 1963 do?". We said, "Yeah, yeah, that'll be fine". But he was concerned with the authenticity of it.

At night, Bond see Fatima and Jack fighting and goes to investigate. The script is then identical to the film, even if we are told about a "metallic eye", then we go directly to the scene where Petachi steals the missiles (instead of the fight against the muscular Lippe in Shrublands). When Petachi drives out of the military base, Fatima and Lippe are near the road and the latter says:

- Fatima: There may be a problem with last night's Peeping Tom. I would deal with him myself, Lippe, but I must reward my sweet baby Jack. He has done everything we asked.

"Lippe smiles at the thought of an assignment which he will enjoy".

As Bond retrieves the box of matches from Jack's room in Shrublands, the ALCM (Air Launched Cruise Missile) are dropped from the bomber and Fatima catches up with Petachi's car. She knocks him off the road by throwing a boa at him before killing him with a bomb as the Spectre collects the missiles. The script describes these moments in detail (kissing the boa, the children on the beach, etc.), only one difference should be noted: Largo is next to Dr. Kotze in the trawler (he doesn't arrive in helicopter; Kotze will be renamed Kovacs in the film).

We arrive at the scene where Lippe tries to assassinate Bond on the weight machine. The fight which is described with precision and is similar to the film, the action however takes place at night. At the end of this there is no urine joke, instead Bond says to the cook: "a nasty specimen".

In the following scene, a black helicopter is heading towards 10 Downing Street. The camera reveals that the helicopter is in fact a miniature and it enters through a window of the Prime Minister's residence to land, after passing in front of a secretary, on the "In" wire basket. As the rotors stop, an audio cassette comes out of the miniature helicopter accompanied by a paper: "A MESSAGE FOR THE QUEEN". The note and cassette are then brought on a "silver tray" by a servant to Buckingham Palace.

While Bond is being scolded by M for the destruction of Shrublands, the phone rings:

> - M: It's that kind of attitude which tempts me to suspend you, Double-O-Seven.
> - Moneypenny: Sir...
> - M: Miss Moneypenny, do not interrupt me when (I'm bollocking Bond).
> - Moneypenny: But it's the Queen, sir.
> - M: What about her?
> - Moneypenny: She's on line one!
> - M: M speaking.

We find M in the conference room of the American embassy with his aide (a certain Elliott), "his" Minister (Lord Ambrose), a CIA man (Culpepper) and the head of American forces in Europe (General Miller) described as wearing "as much braid as Idi Amin [Dada]":

> - Ambrose: I understand your incredulity, gentlemen, but we must at least verify the facts. After all the abduction of hydrogen warheads is the ultimate nightmare, is it not?
> - Miller: It's because of that we take the safeguards we do. I don't understand why you people have pressed the panic button.
> - M: We have not pressed the panic button. This information resides only with the Minister and the heads of British intelligence.
> - Miller: It'll be all over the Kremlin by now.
> - Ambrose: I don't think that's altogether fair, General Miller.
> - Miller: If your spooks were as careful with security as we are, you wouldn't be wasting my time. Our fail sate procedures relating ts nuclear hardware are foolproof.
> - Culpepper (on phone): Culpepper. One moment... It's your base, general.
> - Miller: Miller. Yes, Colonel... What? Holy shit...

On a video screen a S.P.E.C.T.R.E. logo appears while a female voice explains the meaning of the letters, then Ernst Stravro Blofeld shows he has the bombs and expresses his demands.

007 enters Moneypenny's office and asks the latter to investigate the emblem on Petachi's cigarette pack:

> - Bond: While they're preoccupied with weightier matters, Moneypenny, could you do me a favour?
> - Moneypenny: Of course, James, where?
> - Bond: I'm pretty sure this is a yachting insignia. Could you check with Lloyds Register of Shipping. Find out her name, who owns her, and where she's based...
> - Moneypenny: A cruise. How sweet, James. But I don't have a thing ts wear.

Largo arrives by helicopter at his yacht, sees Domino dancing with a certain "Kurt", and receives a message from Spectre telling him that Lippe has been killed by Bond and that the latter must be eliminated. Largo decides to join Domino and the dialogues are a little different from the film:

- Largo: I am gone for a few days, and I return to find my beloved in the arms of another man.
- Domino: Max!
- Largo: "Perfidy, thy name is woman".
- Domino: If you leave a girl alone so often, what is she supposed to do?
- Largo: Why, become a great dancer. That is why I employed such a distinguished teacher.
- Domino: Kurt thinks it's time I danced again.
- Largo: Every day you dance!
- Domino: I mean in the theatre.
- Largo: But I am your audience. This is your stage. You have my adoration, my applause, my... Appreciation.

[He presents her with the necklace and there are dialogues similar to the film].

- Largo: It is safer around your neck than any place I could imagine. Because you will never leave me. God help you, Domino, if you wanted another man.
- Domino: If one came along... What could I do?
- Largo: Simple, my darling.... You could cut your throat before I did i for you.

While Domino, "distraught", goes for a swim, we find Bond on a computer at HQ, finding out about Largo. He goes to M's office where he is briefed (a scene in the script mentions Big Ben ringing three times at 1:00 a.m., a government signal signifying that they accepts the Spectre's conditions). We then find Bond at the shooting range with "Algy" before preparing to go to the Bahamas.

Then we see Largo on the Flying Saucer in video conversation with Fatima:

- Largo: Bond took a flight to Nassau!
- Fatima: "Know thy enemy".
- Largo: How does he know that I am his enemy?
- Fatima: He must know something or he would not be heading for your base.
- Largo: Then we must reward his enterprise. Go there! And make sure that he learns the secret of Bluebeard Reef.
- Fatima: It is a secret he will take to his grave.

- Dick Clement[110] : The first forty pages of the film are pretty much ours, with the exception of one or two of the action sequences. Which includes the all health farm staff, the Bahamas stuff with Rowan Atkinson's character. [...] Things like sharks sequence: no [that's not ours].

In the Bahamas, 007 meets Nigel Small-Fawcett who is notably described as an "incompetent clown", then Fatima Blush. A stage direction then specifies that: "of course she knows what brings him here, and he knows she knows. But he plays along". Then comes the scene of the shark attack, and Bond returns to the hotel with the fisher-woman (whom the script only refers to as "Sexpot") and the explosion. "I'm sure it's how he'd want to go", commented Fatima as she pressed the detonator.

- Jack Schwartzman[111] : We wrote the script without anyone in mind for [Leiter's] role. When we were casting, Sean mentioned he had always wanted Leiter to be played by a black actor, so we decided to cast that way.

- Bernie Casey (Felix Leiter)[112]: Sean had said, during one of our conversations, that Felix Leiter is not memorable. "Let's make him black. At least that will make him more noticeable and therefore, more memorable because he is, after all, my best friend, and he does always come to help me, and no one remembers that he was even there".

Bond arrives in Nice where he meets Felix Leiter (whom the script describes as a "black man") and Nicole (agent 3-2-6 or 3-8-6, depending on the pages). There's a bizarre code exchange here as Nicole tells Bond: "I always shave twice a day", to which 007 responds: "So do I, except on Sundays, or I end up with a five o'clock shadow". They arrive at the villa where Bond observes the Flying Saucer via a telescope, the dialog is quite different from the film:

- Leiter (standing in the kitchen): James, you got seven kinds of tea here... Three types of marmalade... But no spices... I can't make bouillabaisse without spices... Who does the shopping around here? You got cornflakes, I don't believe this... Nicole, where's the saffron?
- Nicole: I don't know... I don't live here... My orders were to buy English food.
- Leiter: You ever seen this in bouillabaisse?
- Bond: Felix...
- Leiter: Yeah!
- Bond: Forget the soup... Feast your eyes on that.
- Leiter: That's Largo's lady.
- Nicole: Be careful, her lover is very jealous.
- Leiter: I can't think why.

- Nicole: Her name is Domino, Domino Petachi.

- Leiter: The records show her as Domino Peters.
- Nicole: No, that's her stage name... Her real name is Petachi.
- Bond: Jack Petachi.
- Leiter: Well here he is now... [...] Look at that (Largo dances with Domino) Ten bucks a mouthful.
- Bond: But what a mouth...
- Nicole: Olives?
- Bond: No, it's perfect... She's going ashore... Shopping...
- Nicole: How could you know that?
- Bond: Lip reading.
- Nicole: Formidable!
- Bond: Formidable...

Meanwhile Blofeld records a message saying that the first bomb is in place to encourage governments to pay. Domino arrives at land and goes to a tobacconist shop, she asks the merchant for a certain type of cigarettes:

- Shop assistant: Écoutez, madame... [Listen, lady].
- Domino: Monsieur, sir, etc... No... No... You misunderstand me. I want a no good cigarette to help me give up smoking.
- Shop assistant: Je ne comprends pas [I don't understand].
- Bond: Excuse me. (Domino turns) There's only one way to give up smoking, and that's to stop... I do it constantly... I'm the world's leading authority on giving up smoking. You're lucky I happen to be here. My name is James
- Domino: Really?
- Bond: Indeed. Of course, if you have no self-control, the mild ones are preferable. (To the shop assistant) Une cartouche de Checkers, avec filtres, s'il vous plaît. King Size? King Size pour madame. [A cartridge of Checkers, with filters, please. King Size? King Size for the lady].
- Domino: Thank you very much.

[Bond pays and Domino prepares to leave the store. 007 stands in front of her].

- Bond: I'd like to buy you a drink... And then perhaps we could have dinner.
- Domino: I'm sorry, that's out of the question.
- Bond: I'm sure he wouldn't object when you explain the circumstances.
- Lord: Who?
- Bond: Monsieur Largo... Your friend.

- Domino: My friend is a...
- Bond: Please... No woman has to justify why she is in the arms of one of the world's richest men...
- Domino: Thank you for the cigarettes.
- Bond: Domino, just tell him that James Bond did you a service. I'm sure he'll want to thank me personally.

Domino stops, looks at Bond, then leaves. (In the film, this scene partially taken from the novel will be replaced by a scene where Bond gives Domino a massage in the Centre de la Santé (Health Center), although the photo above shows that it was filmed).

We find 007 at the casino, he sees Domino again, the dialogues are a little longer than the film and inspired from the novel:

[...]
- Bond: I'll have a vodka on the rocks. I'd hate to think what you call hard?
- Domino: I call vodka on the rocks hard. All the tomato juice makes it soft.
- Bond: Would you like to know what I really think about you?
- Domino: Every woman likes to hear about herself, but make it sound like the truth.
- Bond: I think you are younger than you pretend to be... And that you attached yourself to someone in gratitude rather than love...
- Domino: A bird in a gilded cage.
- Bond: ...But it is becoming more and more difficult to sing for your supper.

[Not far away, Fatima talks with Largo about Bond and Domino, same dialogue as the film].
- Bond: I want you to know, I find you exceedingly beautiful, sexy, provocative, self-willed and cruel.
- Domino: Cruel?
- Bond: To yourself. For remaining with someone you don't love.
- Domino: You could be wrong, Mr. Bond.
- Bond: And your brother, where is he now?
- Domino: On his way here, I can't wait to see him. How do you know my brother
- Largo: An... You must be the famous James Bond. Right? Who gave Domino such excellent advice.

[...]

- Jack Schwartzman[113] : Warner Brothers had given us a hundred Atari video arcade games for the casino sequence. It was logical for these very wealthy French charity guests to be playing video games. And I thought it would be terrific for Bond to play Largo on video. By now, baccarat and chemin de fer were passé in Bond movies, we wanted to update what Fleming had originally conceived.

Bond and Largo go to a game room to play an (unnamed) video game: a medium that still seemed quite new at the time. (On this occasion the script tells us that Largo greets guests by speaking in German, French and Italian). The game plays like in the movie except that the amounts bet are higher (we are talking about a difference of hundreds of millions of dollars!) and there is one more round:

> [Largo apparently pretends to lose the third round, a battle for Britain].
> - Largo: Bravo, Mr. Bond. I've always said that the British can pull it out when they need it.
> - Bond: I have seen your "spectre"...
> - Largo: Really?
> - Bond: Your spectre of defeat.
> - Largo: Then how fortunate for me to have chosen a game of skill rather than luck.
> - Bond: I've always thought it lucky to a skill.
> - Largo: Let's see. Continue.

00000
00749
00000
00749

They play the fourth round (United States, where Bond falls from his chair; Largo then had to press a button and an electrocardiogram was to show that 007 was still alive). Then a fifth round (the world, where Bond wins). Bond exchanges his winnings for a dance with Domino, to which she responds: "Do you get some kind of delight in embarrassing me? Why are you doing this? What do you want?". He reveals to Domino the death of her brother then Largo suggests to Bond that they come for lunch the next day on his yacht.

007 returns to the villa at dawn and discovers Nicole's body. Fatima flees in a "red car" and 007 chases her with his motorcycle modified by Algernon. The chase unfolds like the film except that there is an additional scene where Bond takes out a revolver after exiting the tunnel and manages to touch a mirror of Fatima's car (the latter then presses a button which brings out a plate armored reminiscent of the one of the DB5).

After Fatima's death, there is a scene on the Flying Saucer where Blofeld speaks via telescreen to Largo:

> - Blofeld: My esteemed Number One. I am disturbed by the events of last night.
> - Largo: I agree, sir. The failure of agent Blush is most regrettable.
> - Blofeld: I am not referring to that alone. I find your own behavior questionable. Playing games. Competing for a woman. I hope your relationship with her has not become a dangerous obsession.
> Largo seplies, but all the time his eyes watch Domino in the room beyond.
> - Largo: I will do nothing to jeopardize the Tears of Allah.
> - Blofeld: I trust not. We are a critical stage and we must address ourselves to the question of Mr. Bond.

Bond just happens to be underwater with Leiter inspecting the yacht's hull with a Geiger counter. "Bond starts poking at the hidden door with his knife when sudenly the section starts opening. A tempest of bubbles. Bond tries to push off, but there's an enormous suction pulling at him. [...] Bond lets go of the Geiger counter. He motions Leiter to get away. Bond is bent double and sucked in".

007 sees again Largo and Domino on board the boat, there is a little extra dialogue (perhaps referring to the treasure hunter cover that Largo uses in the novel) when he asks for a vodka martini:

- Largo: Of course. Stirred, but not shaken, right? Welcome to my ship...
- Bond: It must be difficult to leave a ship like this.
- Largo: Right... Quite right... Come.

[They pass into a room with lots of ancient treasures: coins, amphorae, etc...].

- Largo: My hobby is underwater exploration. For many years I have collected these treasures of the deep. I have donated many priceless pieces to universities and maritime museums.
- Bond: I've heard you're a very generous man.
- Largo: It is one of my many faults.

Largo shows him his control room then Bond kisses Domino in the dance hall, which angers Largo. The following scene shows us a dinner between Largo, Bond and Domino (four men from the crew play music on this occasion); a scene deleted from the film.

- Largo: The last supper... Before we get to Palmyra. You'll love it there my darling. A more romantic place would be hard to find. The last time I was there, was with your father. You would have liked him, Mr. Bond, very much like yourself, full of spirit, an adventurer, no regard for danger. He died as he lived, pursuing impossible dreams... Come Demino.

[Largo takes Domino by the hand and dances a tango with her, the same tango that Bond did at the casino]

- Largo: Don't worry Mr. Bond. You can have the last waltz.

Meanwhile Leiter finds himself on an American aircraft carrier:

- Leiter: We've lost contact with the yacht. I need a reconnaissance plane, right away.
- The Captain: None to spare. My orders are to maintain an air screen over the oilfields.
- Leiter: Doesn't anybody understand? Bond is the best hope we've got!

> [Leiter grabs up a phone].
> - Leiter: Felix Leiter... Channel six-B dash nine! Get me the Navy Department in Washington.

The Flying Saucer arrives on the outskirts of Palmyra and Bond and Domino observe the property through binoculars:

> - Domino: Looks like a prison... I have a feeling we're never going to leave here.
> [Bond sees fishing boats].
> - Bond: They'd be about as useless as the Swiss Navy.

Largo joins them, then they visit Palmyra:

> [In the courtyard, men carry boxes of treasures and statues].
> - Largo: Here we have no traffic problem, no mass production, no equal rights, and no plastic.
> [A large door closes behind them, they approach an auction platform with chains].
> - Largo: Thousands of slaves were auctioned off in this very courtyard. Of course, it was many years ago. It's not allowed any more... Officially. (he laughs).
> [They cross a stone bridge (viaduct) and arrive at the gardens where the house is clearly visible].
> - Largo: Mind your step. There it is... My home. Imagine the work it took to carve it out of the desert. Here I am master of my little kingdom and everyone within it. You will see, this place is full of wonderful surprises. Come, come with me.
> [On the terrace where there is a frieze].
> - Largo: The Adoration of the Magi. Fifteenth century. Catalan.
> [They enter the house].
> - Largo: How do you like your new home, my princess?

Bond and Domino are taken prisoner like in the film. 007 manages to free himself, thanks to his laser watch, and steals a horse before coming to the aid of Domino (who was about to be bought by a man whom the script calls the "ugly man"). In the water they are picked up by a submarine brought here by Felix Leiter.

Here there is no scene in the shower where M tells 007 that Washington's bomb has been defused. Instead the action takes place in the submarine's control room and the bomb is still active:

> - Commander Pedersen: Washington's bomb... Impossible to defuse... Unique arming code... Must trace source...
> - Bond: Largo is the only link... And his yacht could be in any of a hundred coves.
> - Leiter: I wish that helicopter would get here...

Suddenly Bond has the idea of comparing Domino's necklace to the map and goes with Leiter to The Tears of Allah in "XT-7", a sort of flying platform. Leiter doesn't land well, his XT-7 rolls over on its side and Bond holds out his hand. They dive and arrive in a temple cavern where Largo and his men are moving the bomb. There is a dialogue when they see Kotze:

- Leiter: Kotze.
- Bond: Who?
- Leiter: With the map. Atomic physicist, Hungarian. He's the source that Washington needs.
- Bond: We'll have to take him alive.
- Leiter: Too many of them. No way.
- Bond: Stay here...

Bond knocks the head off the statue and at that moment Largo kills one of his men; in fact he thinks that the latter made it fall. At one point Largo looks up and sees Bond; a shootout then follows like in the film.

With the help of a helicopter, Bond dives into the water and sets off in pursuit of Largo and the bomb. The underwater fight between Bond and Largo is interspersed with fight scenes with Leiter and the Navy men; the latter manage, after losses (Leiter is notably injured) to capture Kotze alive:

Another scene deleted in the final cut...

- Leiter: Contact Washington... Quick! [To Kotze, a walking-talkie near his face] Now slow and clear, the procedure for disarming the bomb.

Domino finally kills Largo with a harpoon gun underwater. The Navy helicopter approaches the water and Bond and Domino board it with a communications device that 007 retrieved from Largo:

Suddenly, Blofeld's voice emits from the communications pod which Bond is still holding.
- Blofeld: We grow impatient. Actuate your transmitter, immediately!
[Blofeld and the others are waiting in Spectre headquarters, watching their black screen. Suddenly it lights up, at first with no image, just wavy lines].
- Blofeld: At last! We remain assembled in our hour of triumph! Does our force now rule the world, Number One?

The the image on the screen takes shape. It is Bond and Domino, pressed together, inside the helicopter.

Blofeld goes rigid in his chair. The other numbers are also gaping in consternation.

- Bond: Sorry, wrong number. It's Double-O-Seven, Mr. Blofeld.

Blofeld leaps up with strangled cry of rage. Push in fast on the cat on his shoulder. It suddenly slips and scratches Blofeld's neck. His face contorts in agony.

Resume [to] Bond and Domino. They are watching the screen, witnessing the agonizing death throes of Blofeld.

- Bond: I think his plans have just been scratched.

[Bond drops the pod]. In slow motion, the camera follows the downward course of the pod. We see the anguished face of Blofeld in his last seconds of life as it spirals away towards eternity and the sea below.

Blofeld's death was well filmed but cut during editing. In a previous scene, also cut, during the first Spectre's meeting, a Spectre agent had to be eliminated by Blofeld, by his cat. This passage was intended to establish that Blofeld's cat had its claws coated with poison.

- Irvin Kershner[114] : The first cut was over three hours long. I had to sacrifice certain scenes, such as the death of Blofeld, scratched by his cat following the cry of surprise he let out when he discovered Bond, and not Largo, on his control screen.

We find Bond and Domino around a swimming pool in the Caribbean where Nigel Small-Fawcett joins them. The scene in the film was shoot at McClory's house in the Bahamas[115].

> - Bond: You! ...M sent you!
> - Small-Fawcett: You refuse to speak to him, sir...
> - Bond: Right... Never again...
> ...He kisses Domino, looks in the direction of the camera, and winks...
> END TITLES.

Due to some stupid restrictions of the Writers Guild of America, Dick Clement and Ian La Frenais will not be credited for their work on the film.

Semple explained during production of the film: "My final payment depends on whether I receive sole or shared credit [...] I don't know that will happen in this case, since I'm certain many of the other writers don't have contracts"[116].

> - Lorenzo Semple Jr.[117] : Someone said [...] "All writing belongs to you until another guy signs a Guild contract". [Clement and La Frenais had not done this]. So everything that La Frenais wrote, everything everybody wrote is yours" for credit purposes. I thought that's pretty outrageous, but anyway so I wrote a letter to the Guild from the arbitration, saying I wanted sole credit. And I said this is very unfair, if I were the other guys I'd be outraged. But I said I owe it to all writers, I owe it to all writers in the future to stand up for the Guild, and for the contract. It just was totally hypocritical to tell you the truth. And I got sole credit, on this extremely legal technical basis. I mean they were outraged, there were two appeald.

Having a sole credit got Semple $100,000 that the production is unwilling to pay[118]. After the Guild threatened Schwartzman to blacklist him, Semple finally got his money[119].

> - Sean Connery[120] : Without them [Clement and La Frenais], the picture wouldn't be half as good in terms of dialogue. They really should have had more credit than they have.

The actor kind repaid them later as the screenwriters says:

> - Ian La Frenais[121] : We did uncredited rewrites on The Rock [the 1996 film, which starred Sean Connery and Nicolas Cage]. [...] We went on The Rock because of Sean. He said to the producers "I want Dick and Ian because of the Bond film".

Never Say Never Again is produced under Schwartzman's Taliafilm production company, named after his wife Talia Shire, who also happens to be the sister of Francis Ford Coppola.

Schwartzman recalls that Coppola "he read the material, and commented on it. He re-wrote a few things here and there. Basically he was acting as a friend of the court"[122].

Francis Ford Coppola[123], born April 7, 1939, is an American director, producer and screenwriter awarded with no fewer than five Academy Awards, six Golden Globe Awards, two Palmes d'Or and a British Academy Film Award (BAFTA).

Diagnosed with polio as a child, he was bedridden and found creative ways to entertain himself, including producing his own puppet shows. Coppola developed an interest in film early and studied theater at Hofstra University in New York. Following his graduation in 1960, Coppola moved to California to attend UCLA's film program.

After directing The Rain People in 1969, Coppola co-wrote Patton (1970). Coppola's reputation as a filmmaker was cemented with the release of The Godfather in 1972 and its sequels, films co-written and directed by Coppola.

In 1974 he released the thriller The Conversation. His next film, Apocalypse Now (1979) about the Vietnam War, which he co-wrote, directed and produced, was acclaimed and awarded.

Other notable films released by Coppola since the early 1980s include Outsiders (1983), Rumble Fish (1983), Cotton Club (1984), Peggy Sue Got Married (1986), Dracula (1992) and The Rainmaker (1997).

> - Irvin Kershner[124] : A few lines in the film are due to Coppola, but that's it. He had written a scenario that we discarded. I love Francis, I consider him an exceptional screenwriter, but as he was already working on two films, he couldn't decently claim to be working seriously on this Bond.

Sean Connery had also considered calling on Tom Mankiewicz for the film. The screenwriter had been more or less involved in all the Bond films of the 70s, notably Diamonds Are Forever with the actor. In addition to Bond, he had participated in recent years in rewrites of the first two Superman films and directed few episodes of Hart to Hart (including the pilot).

> - Tom Mankiewicz[125] : Sean once came to me to write Never Say Never Again. I was very close to the Broccolis and I said, "I can't do that". Then after the picture was made and they had to reshoot, he asked me to come see it and to give him suggestions. I called Cubby and said, "Is that all right with you?". Cubby said, "Oh, absolutely. Absolutely. By the way, it would have been alright with me if you had written it." I never asked him because I didn't want to put Cubby in that position.

(Mankiewicz will subsequently participate in rewrites on the Gremlins and will at the end of his career, in the 90s, be the director of two films, Dragnet and Delirious, and two telefilms. A few years later he began writing his autobiography, My Life as a Mankiewicz, and will pass away at the age of 68 in 2010).

Nr.5 · 83
Mai (Heft 60) DM 5.- C5039E
cinema
EUROPAS TE FILM HRIFT
Exklusiv:
Das Duell
Bond gegen Bond

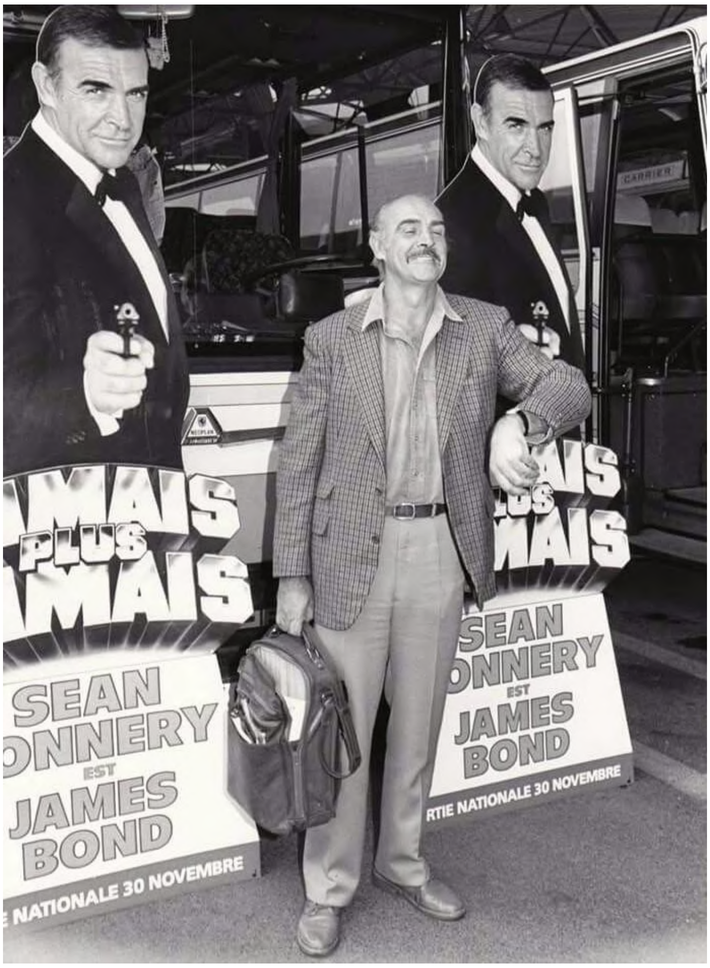
Unter strengster Geheimhaltung wurden in diesen Tagen die zwei brisantesten 007-Filme fertiggestellt, die es in der langen Bond-Serie bisher gab: „Octopussy" mit Roger Moore und „Never Say Never Again" mit Sean Connery. cinema gelang es, heimlich die Dreharbeiten beider Produktionen zu beobachten

Since EON also launches Octopussy in 1983, the media had a field day with titles such as "The Battle of the Bonds"[126]. And despite certain false rumors: Sean Connery and Roger Moore remain very good friends, they notably make one or more appearances together.

A final attempt by the late Fleming's representatives to block the film took place in the London courts in the spring of 1983, but once again the court ruled in favor of Schwartzman/McClory[127]. The film was too advanced and the 1963' court decision gives McClory the right to adapt Thunderball anyway; complainants are invited not to attempt this type of action again in the future[128].

After several problems and tensions during pre-production and production, notably due to a certain disorganization and the fact that the inexperienced producer Schwartzman had overestimated his abilities as a producer and was often absent because he had to spend his time in the courts or with laywers, the film was finally released in American theaters in October 1983. "The only good memory was Sean. If he hadn't been the Bond, I don't think the picture would have been finished", Kershner later said of the bad atmosphere during the making of the film[129].

If the film doesn't perhaps achieve the expected success, it is still a victory for Kevin McClory who has FINALLY just indirectly succeeded in releasing a rival Bond after all these years (although he did not spend a lot of time on the film, nor played a significant role in it, according to Kershner[130], Dick Clement[131] and Jack Schwartzman[132]). Hats off, sir!



MAIS PLUS MAIS
SEAN ONNERY EST JAMES BOND
E NATIONALE 30 NOVEMBRE
SEAN ONNERY EST JAMES BOND
RTIE NATIONALE 30 NOVEMBRE

McClory strike back: Atomic Warhead

McClory had sold Schwartzman the option to make a second Bond[133], but Schwartzman ultimately didn't want to make a third version of Thunderball (and one without Connery; the actor had strong quarrel with the producer during Never Say Never Again[134]).

But if you thought that Never Say Never Again marks the end of Kevin McClory's attempts to release another James Bond, you don't know him well! Already in 1984 he clearly wanted to launch a series of films, the first of which would be titled S.P.E.C.T.R.E or sell his rights to Bond as shown in these pages of Screen International and Variety.

Paradise Film Productions III

anounces a series of

JAMES BOND

Productions

Commencing with

"S.P.E.C.T.R.E"

(Special Executive for Counter Intelligence, Terrorism, Revenge, and Extortion)

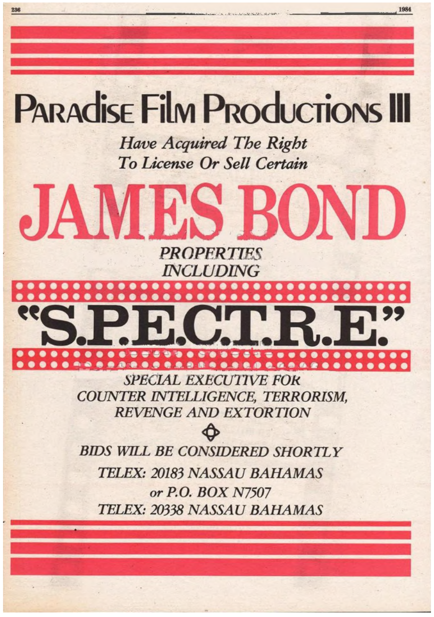
The important announcement will be made shortly.

Overseas Enquiries:

Kevin McClory

(Producer, Thunderball, Executive Producer, "Never Say Never Again")

Paradise Film Productions III
P.O. N 7507
Nassau Bahamas
Telex 20183 or 20338



236 1984

Paradise Film Productions III

Have Acquired The Right
To License Or Sell Certain

JAMES BOND

PROPERTIES INCLUDING

"S.P.E.C.T.R.E."

SPECIAL EXECUTIVE FOR COUNTER INTELLIGENCE, TERRORISM,
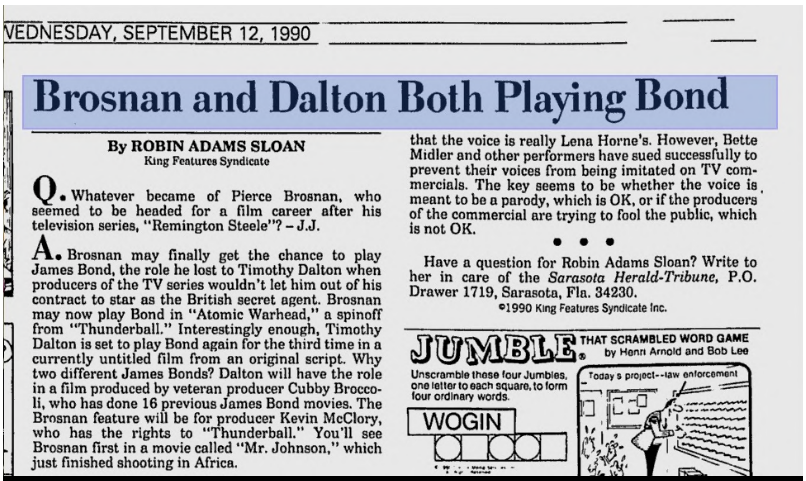
REVENGE AND EXTORTION

BIDS WILL BE CONSIDERED SHORTLY
TELEX: 20183 NASSAU BAHAMAS
or P.O. BOX N7507
TELEX: 20338 NASSAU BAHAMAS

In 1989, he announces a new film called Atomic Warhead[135] (or Warhead 8[136] or Atomic Warfare[137]) and approaches Pierce Brosnan who has just missed the role of James Bond due to his contract with NBC for the TV show Remington Steele:

> - Kevin McClory[138] : I talked to Pierce in Ireland (another Warhead 8 location [as Canada]), but at this stage it's not in our interest to comment. [...] The bulk of the picture will be set in Australia. We've got quite a lot of underwater filming to do and a fair amount will be done on the Great Barrier Reef.



VEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 12, 1990

Brosnan and Dalton Both Playing Bond

By ROBIN ADAMS SLOAN
King Features Syndicate

Q. Whatever became of Pierce Brosnan, who seemed to be headed for a film career after his television series, "Remington Steele"? – J.J.

A. Brosnan may finally get the chance to play James Bond, the role he lost to Timothy Dalton when producers of the TV series wouldn't let him out of his contract to star as the British secret agent. Brosnan may now play Bond in "Atomic Warhead," a spinoff from "Thunderball." Interestingly enough, Timothy Dalton is set to play Bond again for the third time in a currently untitled film from an original script. Why two different James Bonds? Dalton will have the role in a film produced by veteran producer Cubby Broccoli, who has done 16 previous James Bond movies. The Brosnan feature will be for producer Kevin McClory, who has the rights to "Thunderball." You'll see Brosnan first in a movie called "Mr. Johnson," which just finished shooting in Africa.

that the voice is really Lena Horne's. However, Bette Midler and other performers have sued successfully to prevent their voices from being imitated on TV commercials. The key seems to be whether the voice is meant to be a parody, which is OK, or if the producers of the commercial are trying to fool the public, which is not OK.

• • •

Have a question for Robin Adams Sloan? Write to her in care of the Sarasota Herald-Tribune, P.O. Drawer 1719, Sarasota, Fla. 34230.

©1990 King Features Syndicate Inc.

JUMBLE. THAT SCRAMBLED WORD GAME
by Henri Arnold and Bob Lee
Unscramble these four Jumbles, one letter to each square, to form four ordinary words.
WOGIN
Today's project--law enforcement

Sarasota Herald-Tribune (Florida), 1990.

Once again, the film will only remain in draft form.

Around this time, McClory also envisioned a sort of cartoon series for children "James Bond vs. SPECTRE"[139] as well as a 26-episode adult series[140]. He is also thinking of writing a book about the relationship he had with Ian Fleming[141]. None of these three projects saw the light of day.

McClory also contacts Sylvan Whittingham, daughter of the screenwriter Jack that had passed away a few years earlier. McClory explains to her that he will sue EON by providing proof that Richard Maibaum had read Jack's scripts when he wrote the first script of Thunderball for EON in 1961[142]. McClory, however, had turned his back on Whittingham after the 1963 trial, and Whittingham's family had not heard of McClory until Never Say Never Again[143].

(McClory had meanwhile sued Ivar Bryce in the 70's for the publication of his memoirs about Fleming, You Only Live Once, claiming that the part about Thunderball was libelous against Whittingham's name, but McClory did it without even telling that to the Whittingham's family[144]. Bryce had to withdraw his book for sale and wrote a second edition later in 1984 expurgated of the libelous parts).

McClory thus asks Sylvan for the documents used in court in 1963, claiming that he had lost his own[145]. (He had never lost them, since he never had them. In fact it was his former lawyer Peter Carter-Ruck who had them and he refused to give them to McClory because Kevin had not paid him in full, and accused him of conspiracy because he considered that he was in league with Broccoli and Saltzman and could ultimately had obtained much more during the 1963 trial[146]).

MGM vs. Sony

Kevin McClory's unwavering determination strikes again in early 1996, after GoldenEye's success, when he announces in the magazine Variety a new James Bond film titled Warhead 2000 A.D[147].

Based again on Thunderball, the film will be released alongside Brosnan's films: "I'm back in the Bond business because I have a couple of films I want to direct and Bond can provide the finance. I didn't want to make another Bond film, but now that I've come this far, I'm enjoying it immensely", he says[148]. He also adds he is in negotiations with an actor to play James Bond:

"An actor has been chosen to play Bond. But we won't announce it yet to keep the competition in the dark. No, it's not Sean Connery. He's too old for the part now [66 years old]. But he has said he would play the villain in a James Bond film if the price was right"[149].

"I am anxious to make part of the film in Ireland. The rest of it will be shot in the US, Australia, and the Caribbean. Raising money for a Bond film is never really a problem. A lot of people wondered where I disappeared to for the last couple of years. I was in Amsterdam writing the script"[150].

Although McClory also throws out lines like: "The rights to Bond belong to United Artists via the late Albert Cubby Broccoli, but there is a loophole big enough to drive an Aston Martin through"[151], the producers of the EON franchise declines to comment.

In 1997, things changed. At the start of the year, the site Drudge Report claims that Sony is trying to acquire the rights of the James Bond films[152]. While the rumor was picked up by the media, MGM's Frank Mancuso responded to the press in Variety (March 19): "The rights to the James Bond franchise are not for sale. There is simply nothing to bid for, much less grab"[153]. Sony's John Calley declined to comment[154].

But few month later, in October, Sony Pictures announces that its studio Columbia Pictures will work on a new rival 007 film franchise with Kevin McClory! Sony says that their first Bond film will be based on original works created by McClory, Fleming and Jack Whittingham[155].

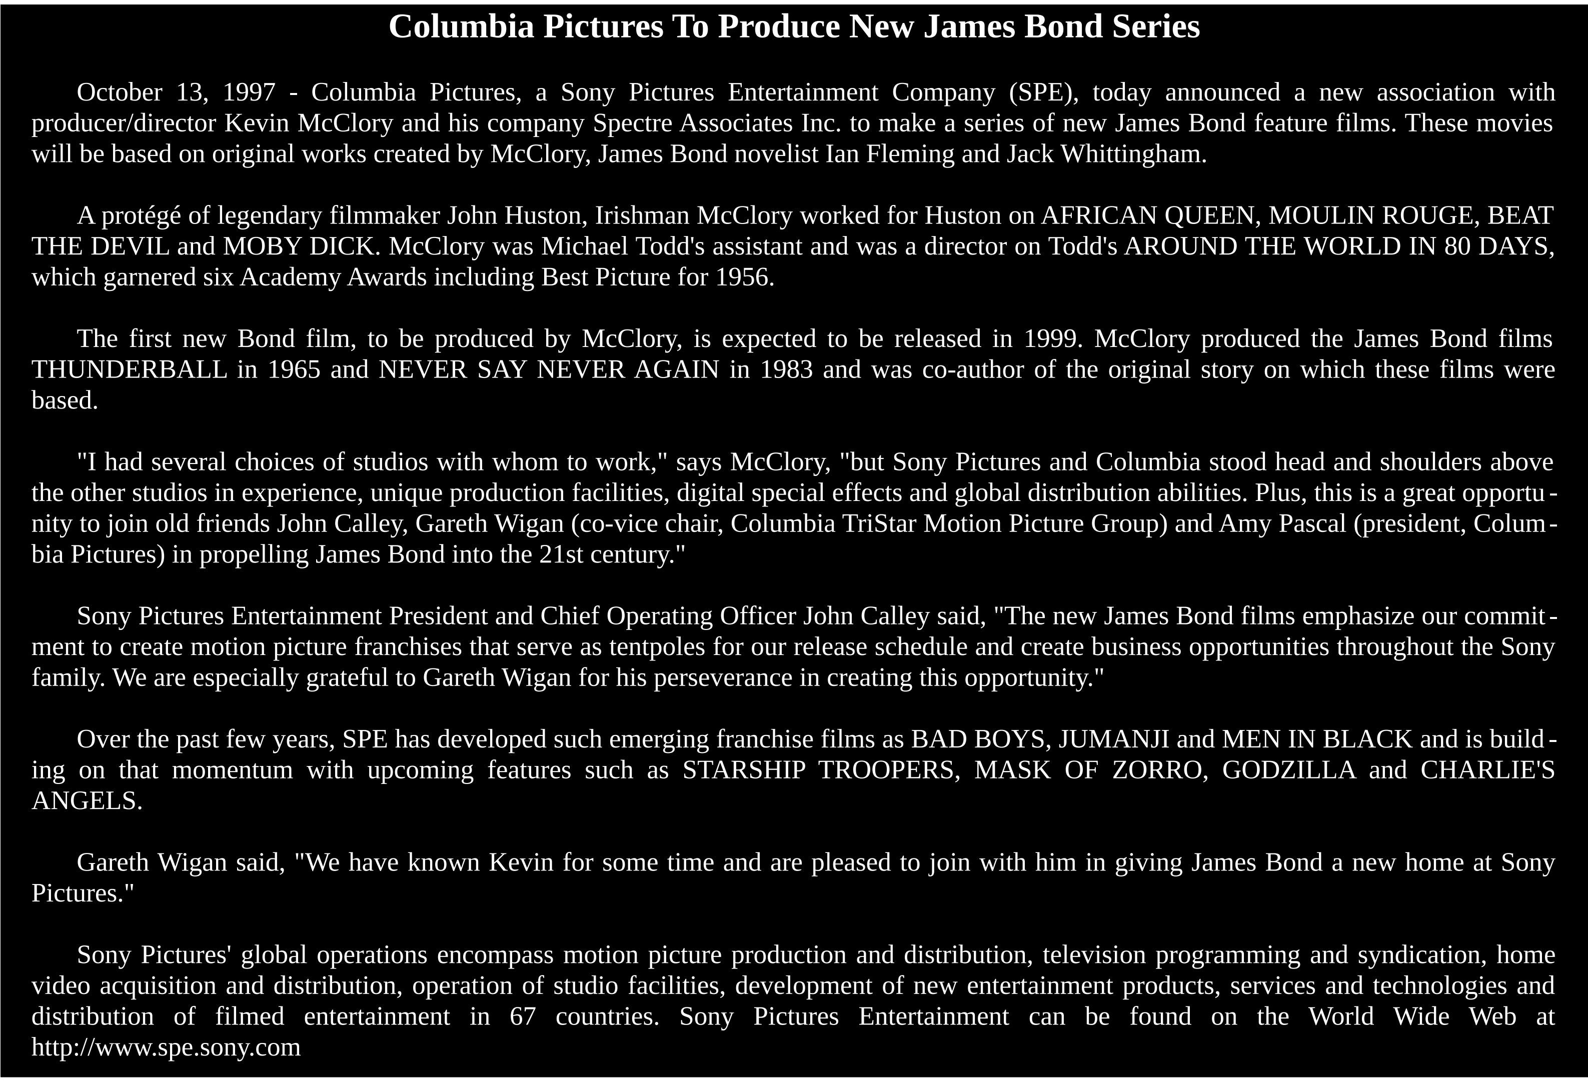
Sony is led by John Calley, former chairman of MGM/UA. Calley was also at Warner during the time of Never Say Never Again.

Since 1989, Sony own Columbia Pictures which controlled the film rights to Casino Royale since the 1967 film version.

"There have been a number of great Bonds over the years. We are satisfied that McClory has the right to make James Bond", Calley tells Variety[156]. The man also says that there is no script yet, that no actor or director is attached to the project. However, he states that 1999 will be the year of release of Sony's first Bond film[157].

McClory is not commenting on the amount of the transaction, nor the number of films he wants to make. He also denies that any new films will essentially be remakes of Thunderball[158]. "We want something you can regenerate every two years'', adds Calley in an interview[159].

Below is the official press release that was on Sony Pictures website in 1997[160]:



Columbia Pictures To Produce New James Bond Series

October 13, 1997 - Columbia Pictures, a Sony Pictures Entertainment Company (SPE), today announced a new association with producer/director Kevin McClory and his company Spectre Associates Inc. to make a series of new James Bond feature films. These movies will be based on original works created by McClory, James Bond novelist Ian Fleming and Jack Whittingham.

A protégé of legendary filmmaker John Huston, Irishman McClory worked for Huston on AFRICAN QUEEN, MOULIN ROUGE, BEAT THE DEVIL and MOBY DICK. McClory was Michael Todd's assistant and was a director on Todd's AROUND THE WORLD IN 80 DAYS, which garnered six Academy Awards including Best Picture for 1956.

The first new Bond film, to be produced by McClory, is expected to be released in 1999. McClory produced the James Bond films THUNDERBALL in 1965 and NEVER SAY NEVER AGAIN in 1983 and was co-author of the original story on which these films were based.

"I had several choices of studios with whom to work," says McClory, "but Sony Pictures and Columbia stood head and shoulders above the other studios in experience, unique production facilities, digital special effects and global distribution abilities. Plus, this is a great opportunity to join old friends John Calley, Gareth Wigan (co-vice chair, Columbia TriStar Motion Picture Group) and Amy Pascal (president, Columbia Pictures) in propelling James Bond into the 21st century."

Sony Pictures Entertainment President and Chief Operating Officer John Calley said, "The new James Bond films emphasize our commitment to create motion picture franchises that serve as tentpoles for our release schedule and create business opportunities throughout the Sony family. We are especially grateful to Gareth Wigan for his perseverance in creating this opportunity."

Over the past few years, SPE has developed such emerging franchise films as BAD BOYS, JUMANJI and MEN IN BLACK and is building on that momentum with upcoming features such as STARSHIP TROOPERS, MASK OF ZORRO, GODZILLA and CHARLIE'S ANGELS.

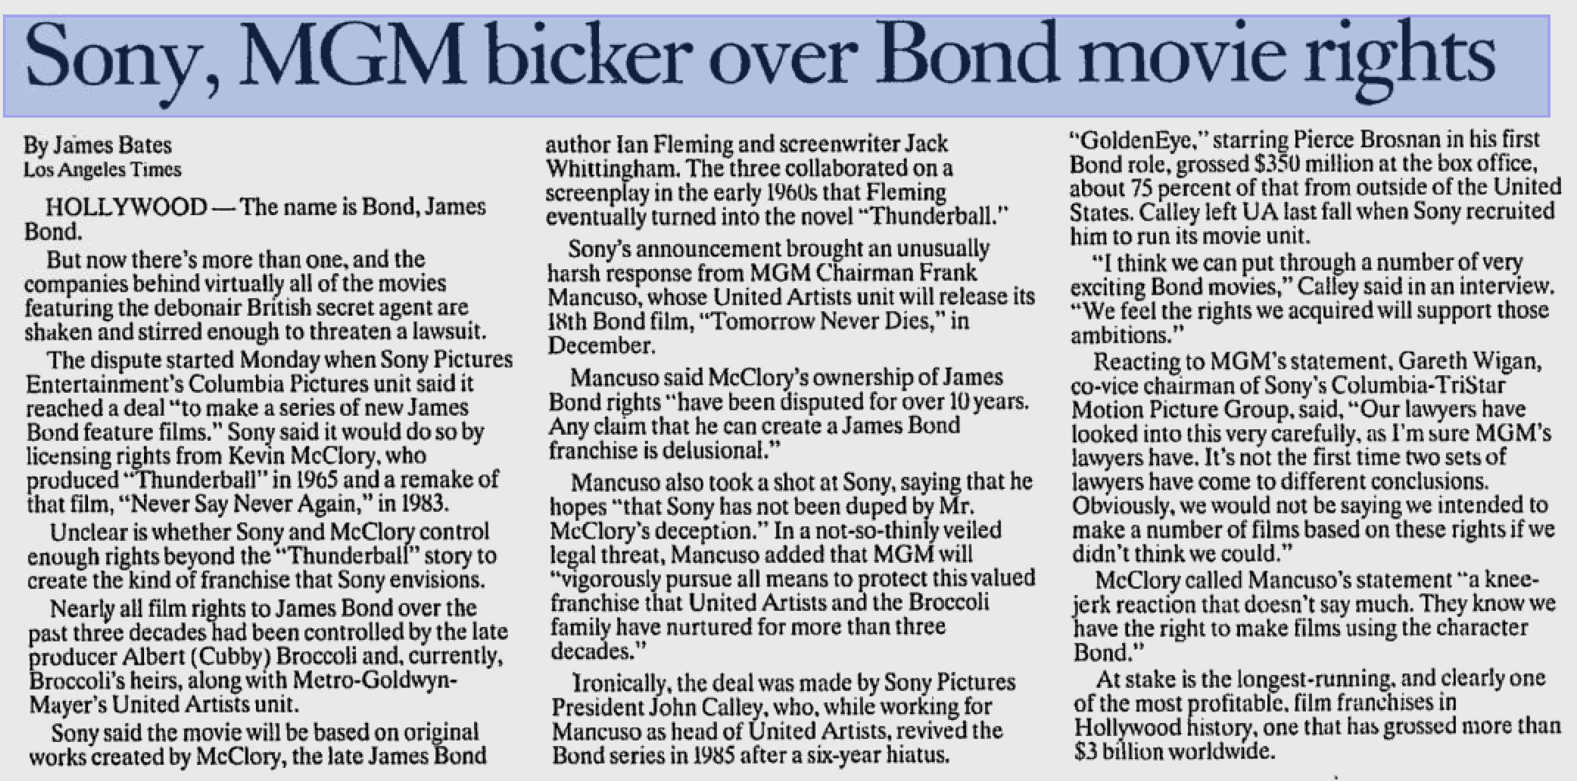
Gareth Wigan said, "We have known Kevin for some time and are pleased to join with him in giving James Bond a new home at Sony Pictures."

Sony Pictures' global operations encompass motion picture production and distribution, television programming and syndication, home video acquisition and distribution, operation of studio facilities, development of new entertainment products, services and technologies and distribution of filmed entertainment in 67 countries. Sony Pictures Entertainment can be found on the World Wide Web at http://www.spe.sony.com

MGM immediately responded and threatened Sony on the following day with legal action: "Any claim that he [McClory] can create a James Bond franchise is delusional. We hope that Sony has not been duped by Mr. McClory's deception. Today, more than ever, we will vigorously pursue all means to protect this valued franchise [...]"[161].

For Sony: "Our lawyers have looked into this very carefully, as I'm sure MGM's lawyers have. It's not the first time two sets of lawyers have come to different conclusions. Obviously, we would not be saying we intended to make a number of films based on these rights if we didn't think we could"[162].

While everything points to an upcoming major legal battle, it is no surprise that those involved find themselves before the courts.



Sony, MGM bicker over Bond movie rights

By James Bates
Los Angeles Times

HOLLYWOOD — The name is Bond, James Bond.

But now there's more than one, and the companies behind virtually all of the movies featuring the debonair British secret agent are shaken and stirred enough to threaten a lawsuit.

The dispute started Monday when Sony Pictures Entertainment's Columbia Pictures unit said it reached a deal "to make a series of new James Bond feature films." Sony said it would do so by licensing rights from Kevin McClory, who produced "Thunderball" in 1965 and a remake of that film, "Never Say Never Again," in 1983.

Unclear is whether Sony and McClory control enough rights beyond the "Thunderball" story to create the kind of franchise that Sony envisions.

Nearly all film rights to James Bond over the past three decades had been controlled by the late producer Albert (Cubby) Broccoli and, currently, Broccoli's heirs, along with Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's United Artists unit.

Sony said the movie will be based on original works created by McClory, the late James Bond author Ian Fleming and screenwriter Jack Whittingham. The three collaborated on a screenplay in the early 1960s that Fleming eventually turned into the novel "Thunderball."

Sony's announcement brought an unusually harsh response from MGM Chairman Frank Mancuso, whose United Artists unit will release its 18th Bond film, "Tomorrow Never Dies," in December.

Mancuso said McClory's ownership of James Bond rights "have been disputed for over 10 years. Any claim that he can create a James Bond franchise is delusional."

Mancuso also took a shot at Sony, saying that he hopes "that Sony has not been duped by Mr. McClory's deception." In a not-so-thinly veiled legal threat, Mancuso added that MGM will "vigorously pursue all means to protect this valued franchise that United Artists and the Broccoli family have nurtured for more than three decades."

Ironically, the deal was made by Sony Pictures President John Calley, who, while working for Mancuso as head of United Artists, revived the Bond series in 1985 after a six-year hiatus. "GoldenEye," starring Pierce Brosnan in his first Bond role, grossed $350 million at the box office, about 75 percent of that from outside of the United States. Calley left UA last fall when Sony recruited him to run its movie unit.

"I think we can put through a number of very exciting Bond movies," Calley said in an interview. "We feel the rights we acquired will support those ambitions."

Reacting to MGM's statement, Gareth Wigan, co-vice chairman of Sony's Columbia-TriStar Motion Picture Group, said, "Our lawyers have looked into this very carefully, as I'm sure MGM's lawyers have. It's not the first time two sets of lawyers have come to different conclusions. Obviously, we would not be saying we intended to make a number of films based on these rights if we didn't think we could."

McClory called Mancuso's statement "a knee-jerk reaction that doesn't say much. They know we have the right to make films using the character Bond."

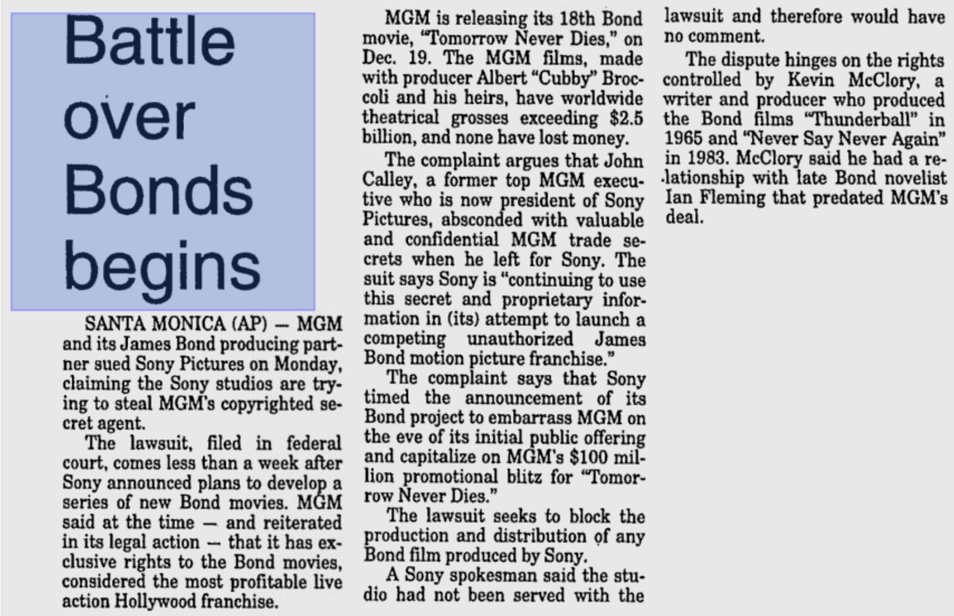
At stake is the longest-running, and clearly one of the most profitable, film franchises in Hollywood history, one that has grossed more than $3 billion worldwide.

Extract from the October 14, 1997 issue of The Spokesman-Review.

The battle between Sony, John Calley, McClory and his company Spectre Associates against MGM, Danjaq, (EON, United Artist) was a long one; the final conclusion will only be made in 2001!

The MGM camp filed a complaint in November 17, 1997 for copyright infringement, trademark dilution and unfair competition[163] (MGM alleged that Sony deliberately timed its Bond announcement to coincide with MGM's initial public offering. "Sony Pictures and John Calley's decision to wait until the eve of MGM's IPO was nothing more than a wanton and calculated attempt to maximize the damage from their unlawful scheme", stated the MGM[164]).

MGM also sue John Calley personally, for misappropriation of trade secrets[165], stating that Sony's efforts to put together a James Bond rival film are due to "a disgruntled former executive of [MGM's] United Artists" (Calley) who allegedly left MGM with confidential information on how to optimally exploit the Bond franchise in the 21st century[166].



Battle over Bonds begins

SANTA MONICA (AP) — MGM and its James Bond producing partner sued Sony Pictures on Monday, claiming the Sony studios are trying to steal MGM's copyrighted secret agent.

The lawsuit, filed in federal court, comes less than a week after Sony announced plans to develop a series of new Bond movies. MGM said at the time — and reiterated in its legal action — that it has exclusive rights to the Bond movies, considered the most profitable live action Hollywood franchise.

MGM is releasing its 18th Bond movie, "Tomorrow Never Dies," on Dec. 19. The MGM films, made with producer Albert "Cubby" Broccoli and his heirs, have worldwide theatrical grosses exceeding $2.5 billion, and none have lost money.

The complaint argues that John Calley, a former top MGM executive who is now president of Sony Pictures, absconded with valuable and confidential MGM trade secrets when he left for Sony. The suit says Sony is "continuing to use this secret and proprietary information in (its) attempt to launch a competing unauthorized James Bond motion picture franchise."

The complaint says that Sony timed the announcement of its Bond project to embarrass MGM on the eve of its initial public offering and capitalize on MGM's $100 million promotional blitz for "Tomorrow Never Dies."

The lawsuit seeks to block the production and distribution of any Bond film produced by Sony.

A Sony spokesman said the studio had not been served with the lawsuit and therefore would have no comment.

The dispute hinges on the rights controlled by Kevin McClory, a writer and producer who produced the Bond films "Thunderball" in 1965 and "Never Say Never Again" in 1983. McClory said he had a relationship with late Bond novelist Ian Fleming that predated MGM's deal.

Lodi News-Sentinel – November 18, 1997

MGM also adds charges of slander of title, inducing breach of contract and breach of fiduciary duties[167].

Sony and McClory then uses an outrageous counterclaim strategy. Not only they claim that they have the right to launch their own Bond franchise, but they also argue that all other 007 films are based on ideas from early Xanadu's scripts/treatments of Thunderball (on which McClory owns the rights) and that he is therefore the co-creator of the cinematic Bond[168]! Which would therefore give him the right to receive money for all the films that have been made by EON since Dr. No (later McClory would only requested eight: Dr. No, FRWL, Goldfinger, Thunderball, YOLT, DAF, TSWLM, and TWINE[169]) and to co-own the "cinematic" version of the James Bond character[170].

To assert that, McClory claims that in 1961 EON and Richard Maibaum wrote a Thunderball script without even having the film rights on Thunderball[171]. Michael Wilson at the court was unable of producing document showing that EON had Thunderball's film rights at the time this script was written in 1961[172].

McClory adds that Richard Maibaum had read Xanadu's scripts in 1961 and based his own 1961 Thunderball's script on it, as well as on the infringing Fleming's novel[173].

This contention was disputed by Danjaq who testified in his deposition that Maibaum didn't have access to the Xanadu's scripts, only the Thunderball's novel[174]. (As we saw in the Thunderball's chapter of this book, although very faithfully to the novel, Maibaum 1961's script doesn't contain any Xanadu's material not present in the novel).

"Pre-production on Thunderball was abruptly interrupted and inexplicably, the same screenwriter, Richard Maibaum, fresh from copying Thunderball, wrote the screenplay for Dr. No. It was inevitable that he would bring with him important cinematic elements from Thunderball", would later read a statement from McClory's representatives[175].

> - McClory's representatives[176] : The unauthorized copying of Thunderball in 1961 enabled Broccoli, Saltzman and their companies to do the following:
>
> a) Obtain financing from United Artists to make a series of James Bond films with the intention of commencing the series with Thunderball.
>
> b) Obtain Sean Connery to play James Bond [since Connery stated the first script he read and was hired for was Thunderball].
>
> c) Incorporate the "Spectre Organization" and its chairman "Ernst Stavro Blofeld" from the Thunderball script and/or novel as James Bond's new super villain adversaries.

"They contend that McClory transformed the supposedly violent and alcoholic James Bond of the Fleming books into the movie character who is so beloved, recognizable and marketable", later wrote judge Mary Margaret McKeown[177].

> - (Judge) Mary Margaret McKeown[178] : The crux of McClory's claim was that certain of the Bond movies released over the past thirty-six years infringed on McClory's rights under United States copyright law. Because, McClory argued, he possessed the rights to both the novel Thunderball and the materials developed during the writing of the initial Thunderball script, he also possessed the rights to certain plot elements that first appeared in those works: namely, the "cinematic James Bond" character, SPECTRE, the villain Ernst Stavro Blofeld, and the theme of nuclear blackmail. According to Danjaq, this was the first time McClory ever made such a claim.

McClory will goes so far as to describe this as "the greatest act of piracy in the History of the motion picture industry?"[179].

Pierce O'Donnell, lead attorney for MGM and Danjaq, then stated: "Instead of meeting us on the merits of our claim, they've concocted this bizarre claim that a man who spent a few months working on an unsuccessful Thunderball script with the man who created James Bond can somehow become the owner of the cinematic James Bond"[180]. "The defendant's response confirms our strongly held belief that Sony was delusional in asserting that it can launch a new series of James Bond films", added an official MGM's statement[181].

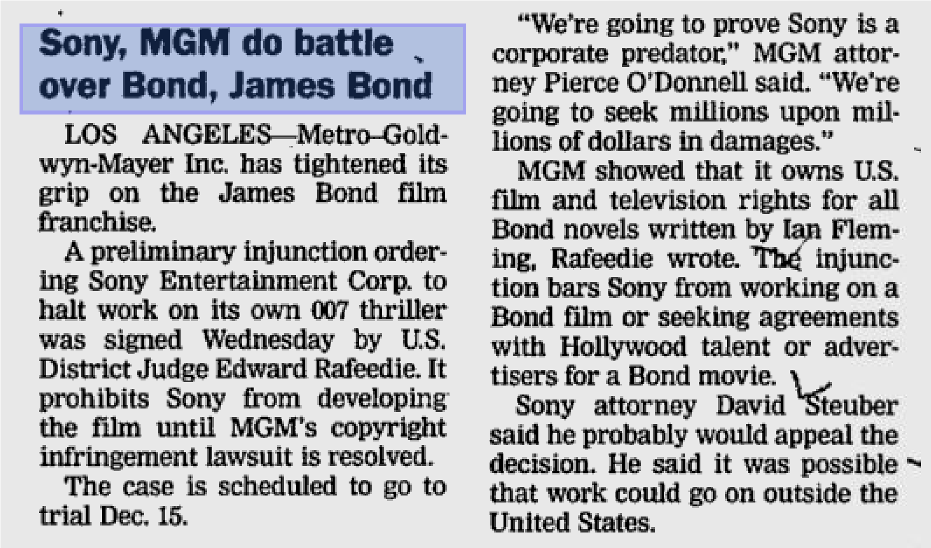
For its part, MGM argues that the 28-year copyright term of the United States has long expired on the scripts of Thunderball and says all rights to James Bond go back to them[182], according to the "doctrine of Stewart v. Abend"[183]. The judge was apparently keen to agree to that[184].

On May 19, 1998, the MGM filled a preliminary injunction in court to prevent Sony to work on their films (and also advertising it)[185]. "We understand that Sony may be commencing their process a little faster than we thought. We don't want them in the process of making movies while the suit is in litigation", said an MGM representative[186].

According to the judge Edward Rafeedie, Sony was apparently indeed in talk with filmmakers Roland Emmerich and Dean Devlin for its Bond's films[187].

As usual, the press also reports all kind of rumors, but I will spare you them since there is no way to know if there a slightest element of truth to them.

Unfortunately for Sony and McClory, the judge Rafeedie rules in MGM's favor. On July 29, 1998, the major obtained an injunction stopping all pre-production of a rival Bond film until the court had rendered its final decision[188]. For Sony and McClory it is the beginning of the end even if for now, Sony's attorney says they will appeal and are not excluding the idea to develop the movie outside the USA[189]. Rafeedie wrote that MGM could however apply separately for a worldwide injunction if they want[190].



Sony, MGM do battle over Bond, James Bond

LOS ANGELES—Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Inc. has tightened its grip on the James Bond film franchise.

A preliminary injunction ordering Sony Entertainment Corp. to halt work on its own 007 thriller was signed Wednesday by U.S. District Judge Edward Rafeedie. It prohibits Sony from developing the film until MGM's copyright infringement lawsuit is resolved.

The case is scheduled to go to trial Dec. 15.

"We're going to prove Sony is a corporate predator," MGM attorney Pierce O'Donnell said. "We're going to seek millions upon millions of dollars in damages."

MGM showed that it owns U.S. film and television rights for all Bond novels written by Ian Fleming, Rafeedie wrote. The injunction bars Sony from working on a Bond film or seeking agreements with Hollywood talent or advertisers for a Bond movie.

Sony attorney David Steuber said he probably would appeal the decision. He said it was possible that work could go on outside the United States.

The Free Lance-Star – August 1, 1998

Appealed of the injunction's decision, Sony certainly did, causing delay in the schedule of the trial[191].

In the intervening period, in October 1998, World Entertainment News launch the rumor of a Thunderball remake called Doomsday 2000 with Connery, to be film in 1999 in Australia and the Bahamas[192].

On November, three judges examining Sony's appeals gives their verdict: the injunction is valid and maintained[193].

The trial is now set to April 6, 1999[194].

Meanwhile, Sony and MGM fights on others courts battlefields. The two companies have also issues about The Silence of the Lambs's home-video distribution and on the Spider-Man films rights[195]. On March 1, 1999, on the eve of a major trial, Sony, MGM and Marvel however arrived to an agreement about the Spider-Man rights[196].

Almost one month later, despite its grip until now, Sony decided not to pursue its plans for James Bond and agreed to an amicable settlement with MGM in 1999, just few days before the long awaited scheduled April 6th trial. In addition to financial compensation for both camps, Sony agreed to cede all its rights to everything related to James Bond (including Casino Royale's film rights).

"Under the terms of a separate agreement entered into on March 29, 1999, the Company [MGM] and Danjaq acquired from Columbia all of Columbia's rights to the 1967 James Bond film entitled Casino Royale, and the Sony Parties agreed to broaden the contractual prohibition regarding making or distributing James Bond films and the James Bond trademarks [...] throughout the world", states an MGM's document submitted to the SEC (Securities and Exchange Commission)[197].

It was reported in Variety that "In terms of dollars, Sony paid MGM $5 million to settle the outstanding tort claims, most prominently MGM's claim that Sony had timed its 1997 press release announcing a competing Bond franchise to disrupt MGM's initial public offering. However, Sony ends up ahead $5 million, since MGM paid Sony $10 million for Casino Royale and the worldwide prohibition"[198].

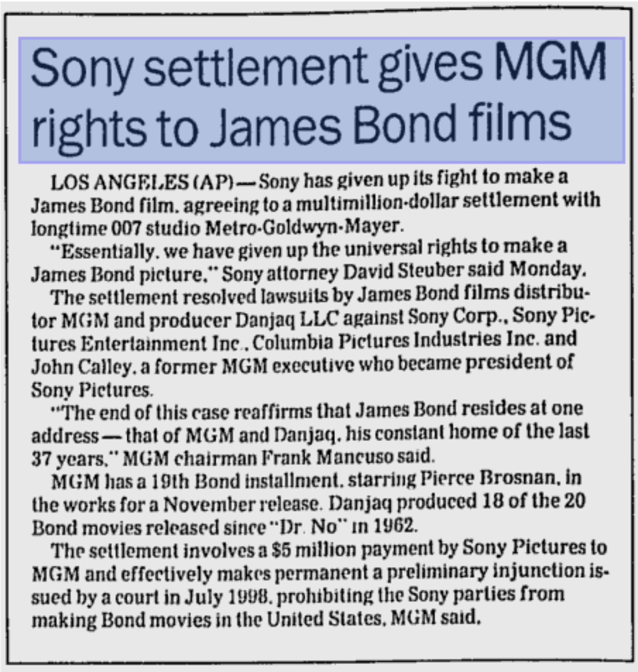
David Steuber, a lawyer representing Sony, said that a ruling earlier this month by judge Rafeedie clearing Calley of the accusation of disclosing secret information about the Bond franchise was important in paving the way for a settlement[199].

(Ironically, the James Bond films including 2006's Casino Royale will be produced in collaboration by MGM and Sony together a few years later, after that a consortium that included Sony Pictures bought the MGM en 2004).



Sony settlement gives MGM rights to James Bond films

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Sony has given up its fight to make a James Bond film, agreeing to a multimillion-dollar settlement with longtime 007 studio Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer.

"Essentially, we have given up the universal rights to make a James Bond picture," Sony attorney David Steuber said Monday.

The settlement resolved lawsuits by James Bond films distributor MGM and producer Danjaq LLC against Sony Corp., Sony Pictures Entertainment Inc., Columbia Pictures Industries Inc. and John Calley, a former MGM executive who became president of Sony Pictures.

"The end of this case reaffirms that James Bond resides at one address — that of MGM and Danjaq, his constant home of the last 37 years," MGM chairman Frank Mancuso said.

MGM has a 19th Bond installment, starring Pierce Brosnan, in the works for a November release. Danjaq produced 18 of the 20 Bond movies released since "Dr. No" in 1962.

The settlement involves a $5 million payment by Sony Pictures to MGM and effectively makes permanent a preliminary injunction issued by a court in July 1998, prohibiting the Sony parties from making Bond movies in the United States, MGM said.

The Deseret News – 30 mars 1999

McClory refuses to be part of the deal and says he would continue individually his legal crusade against MGM based on his copyright infringement claims[200] (his lawyer even hint there could also be a breach of contract for Sony[201]).

McClory then reaffirmed his desire to make a 007 when he announced in June 1999 a new project tentatively titled Warhead 2001 (or Warhead 2001 AD.[202]) which he would have defined as "not competing with the shoot 'em up which I believe the other Bonds have become"[203]. He said he was in discussions with German and Australian production companies for this film which would mainly be filmed in Australia[204] (with a Blofeld's lair under the Great Barrier Reef protected by great white sharks), and China[205]. In short: the usual bullshit.

In October, MGM is quoted saying: "We contend that the only rights Mr. McClory ever had were limited to remaking the movie Thunderball and that even those rights have expired"[206].

The trial was delayed few times. Justified or not absences in the court from McClory's part didn't helped him to score points like a judge would note later:

> - (Judge) McKeown[207] : The proceedings were first delayed in 1999 so that McClory could find new counsel in order to keep his counterclaim alive. Then, four days before the trial was to start, McClory moved for a continuance so that he could travel to England to oversee funeral arrangements for his sister-in-law. The court denied that motion on the belief that McClory could attend the funeral and travel to Los Angeles in time for the trial. McClory failed to appear for the first day of trial. He did, however, send a letter stating that he could appear and testify two days later. But McClory neither appeared nor informed the court (or his own attorney) of his whereabouts. (Eventually, McClory sent word that he had had visa problems and had been unable to reenter the United States). [...] Here, McClory fails to meet this fourth prong. His own attorney admitted that he would add nothing to Danjaq's testimony.

> - McClory's representative[208] : McClory's absence was due to the death of his sister in law, wife of his disabled brother for fifty years. McClory's request for a one-week continuance of the trial, enabling him to attend the funeral in Europe and comfort his only brother, was denied even though the same judge had granted MGM/UA/Danjaq a three month continuance to attend premieres of a James Bond film [The World Is Not Enough].

McClory who wasn't present hasn't had the opportunity to defend himself his side of the story[209] when judge Edward Rafeedie rendered his decision on March 30, 2000 and rejected McClory's strange co-author/owner of the cinematic Bond argument (and his issue about the use of SPECTRE and nuclear blackmail in EON's films[210]) on the base that he waited too long before coming to claim his possible rights[211].

Appeal, McClory did. And more than one year later, on August 27, 2001, the Court of Appeal validate the initial decision of judge Rafeedie, and thus invalided McClory claim[212].

"We are called upon to determine whether McClory waited too long to claim his piece of the pie, whatever that share might have been. We conclude that McClory's claims are barred in their entirety by the doctrine of laches and, on that basis, affirm the district court's dismissal of McClory's suit", reads the summary of the court's decision in 2001[213], which remind that "laches is an equitable defense that prevents a plaintiff, who with full knowledge of the facts, acquiesces in a transaction and sleeps upon his rights"[214].

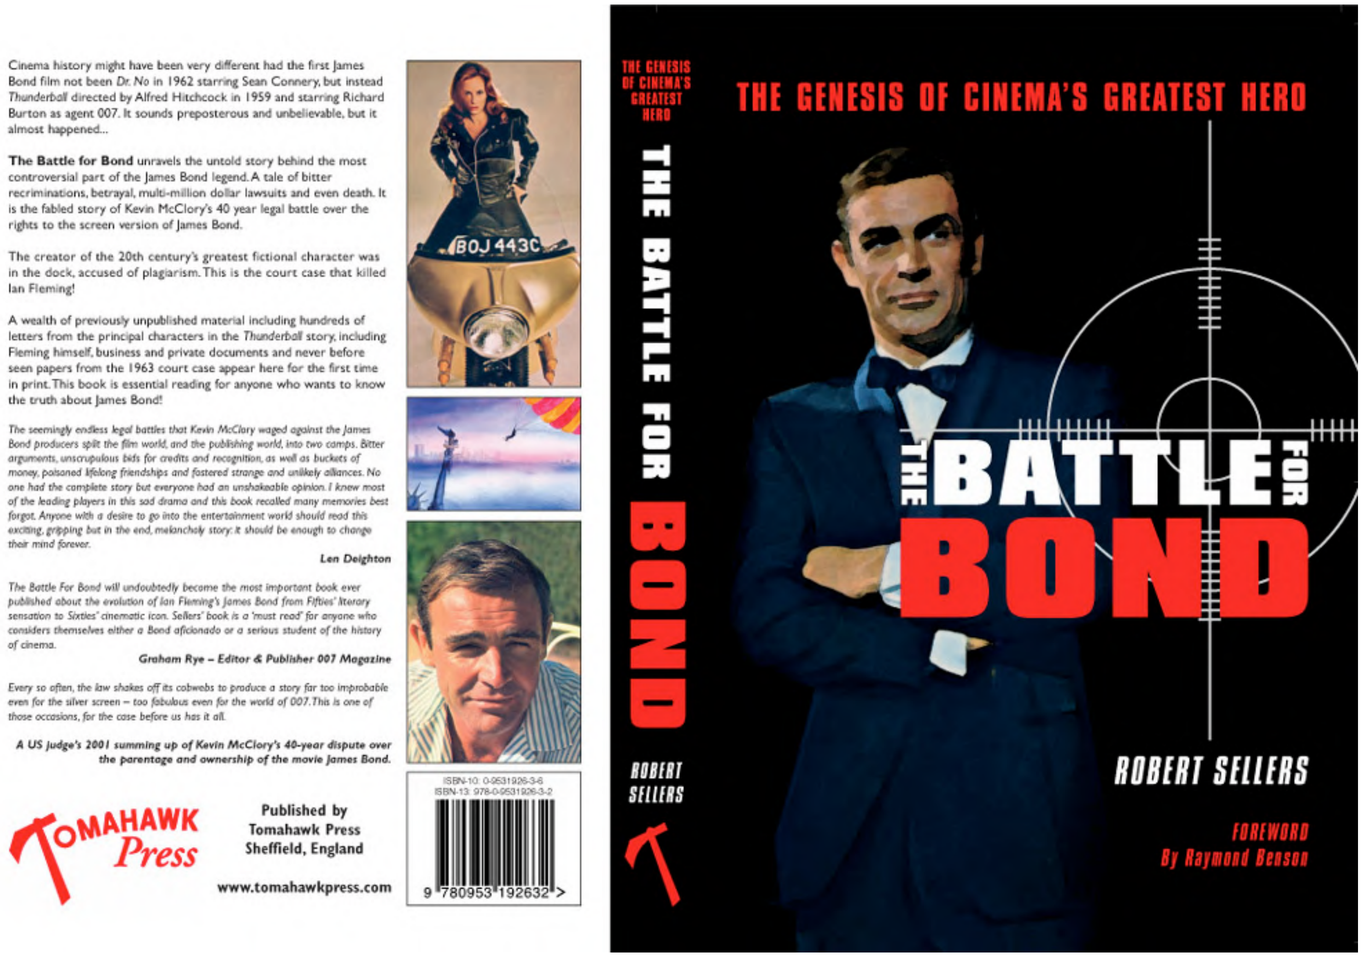
Yet "there had been a delay of at least twenty-one years, and more likely thirty-six years, between McClory's knowledge of the potential claims and the initiation of litigation", wrote Mary Margaret McKeown, one of the three appeal's judge[215]. Because McClory waited too long, it is also deemed prejudicial to Danjaq/MGM since many witnesses they could have presented (like Maibaum or Cubby) have died since, stated both judge Rafeedie and McKeown[216].

The judge McKeown concluded her summary as that: "So like our hero James Bond, exhausted after a long adventure, we reach the end of our story. For the foregoing reasons, we affirm the district court's determination that Danjaq established laches; that, as a matter of law, McClory is unable to establish willful infringement; and that laches bars McClory's claims in their entirety"[217].

That was the end of it. Later en 2002, McClory seemed to want to sell his rights at auction, but this was not done[218].

Kevin McClory died in 2006 at the age of 80, just four days after the release of Casino Royale, leaving four children behind, as well of a legacy in the James Bond universe. That's was the end of his Thunderball-based movies ambitions.

To anyone who would like to learn a lot more about the history of the Bond film project during the Xanadu era, Warhead, McClory, the rights disputes on Thunderball, etc... I highly recommend the book The Battle for Bond by Robert Sellers. The author had access to tons of documents and this a that is worth to read to know more.



Cinema history might have been very different had the first James Bond film not been Dr. No in 1962 starring Sean Connery, but instead Thunderball directed by Alfred Hitchcock in 1959 and starring Richard Burton as agent 007. It sounds preposterous and unbelievable, but it almost happened...

The Battle for Bond unravels the untold story behind the most controversial part of the James Bond legend. A tale of bitter recriminations, betrayal, multi-million dollar lawsuits and even death. It is the fabled story of Kevin McClory's 40 year legal battle over the rights to the screen version of James Bond.

The creator of the 20th century's greatest fictional character was in the dock, accused of plagiarism. This is the court case that killed Ian Fleming!

A wealth of previously unpublished material including hundreds of letters from the principal characters in the Thunderball story, including Fleming himself, business and private documents and never before seen papers from the 1963 court case appear here for the first time in print. This book is essential reading for anyone who wants to know the truth about James Bond!

The seemingly endless legal battles that Kevin McClory waged against the James Bond producers split the film world, and the publishing world, into two camps. Bitter arguments, unscrupulous bids for credits and recognition, as well as buckets of money, poisoned lifelong friendships and fostered strange and unlikely alliances. No one had the complete story but everyone had an unshakeable opinion. I knew most of the leading players in this sad drama and this book recalled many memories best forgot. Anyone with a desire to go into the entertainment world should read this exciting, gripping but in the end, melancholy story: it should be enough to change their mind forever.

Len Deighton

The Battle For Bond will undoubtedly become the most important book ever published about the evolution of Ian Fleming's James Bond from Fifties' literary sensation to Sixties' cinematic icon. Sellers' book is a 'must read' for anyone who considers themselves either a Bond aficionado or a serious student of the history of cinema.

Graham Rye – Editor & Publisher 007 Magazine

Every so often, the law shakes off its cobwebs to produce a story far too improbable even for the silver screen – too fabulous even for the world of 007. This is one of those occasions, for the case before us has it all.

A US judge's 2001 summing up of Kevin McClory's 40-year dispute over the parentage and ownership of the movie James Bond.

TOMAHAWK Press

Published by Tomahawk Press
Sheffield, England

www.tomahawkpress.com

ISBN-10: 0-9531926-3-6
ISBN-13: 978-0-9531926-3-2
9 780953 192632 >

Sources/references from chapter 13.5: Never Say Never Again (and Warhead)

1 "Q&A with Kevin McClory" by Richard Schenkman in Bondage magazine (issue #7, Summer 1979).

2 "James Bond: My Long and Eventful Search for His Father" by Len Deighton (2012).

3 "James Bond: My Long and Eventful Search for His Father" by Len Deighton (2012).

4 "Sean Connery vs James Bond" documentary on Arte (2022).

"When the Snow Melts: The Autobiography of Cubby Broccoli" by Albert Broccoli and Donald Zec (2012 edition).

5 "Q&A with Kevin McClory" by Richard Schenkman in Bondage magazine (issue #7, Summer 1979).

6 Variety (January 7, 1976); via "Some Kind of Hero: The Remarkable Story of the James Bond Films" by Matthew Field & Ajay Chowdhury (2015).

7 "The making of Never Say Never Again" in 007 Magazine (issue #40, January 2002).

8 "Some Kind of Hero: The Remarkable Story of the James Bond Films" by Matthew Field & Ajay Chowdhury (2015).

9 "Nobody Does it Better" by Mark A. Altman and Edward Gross (2020).

"Q&A with Kevin McClory" by Richard Schenkman in Bondage magazine (issue #7, Summer 1979).

10 "The making of Never Say Never Again" in 007 Magazine (issue #40, January 2002).

11 "James Bond: My Long and Eventful Search for His Father" by Len Deighton (2012).

12 "Inside The Spy Who Loved Me" DVD bonus.

"*007 courts his copyrigh*t" article by John Andrews (unknown newspapers and date).

"James Bond, the Spy I Loved" by Christopher Wood (2006).

13 Docket summary 00-55781 by judge Mary Margaret McKeown (August 27, 2001).

14 "Are MGM and Danjaq 21st Century pirates?" by a McClory's representative on Spectre Organization website (2000): http://spectreorganisation.com/press/pressjune.html

15 (Sorry, I don't remember where I found this; neither the eventual exact quote).

16 "James Bond: My Long and Eventful Search for His Father" by Len Deighton (2012).

17 "Ian Fleming: The Complete Man" by Nicholas Shakespeare (2023).

18 "Nobody Does it Better" by Mark A. Altman and Edward Gross (2020).

"Q&A with Kevin McClory" by Richard Schenkman in Bondage magazine (issue #7, Summer 1979).

19 "The making of Never Say Never Again" in 007 Magazine (issue #40, January 2002).

20 "Warhead Back Again With 007" by Roderick Mann in The Los Angeles Times (08.05.1979); via "Some Kind of Hero: The Remarkable Story of the James Bond Films" by Matthew Field & Ajay Chowdhury (2015).

21 The Battle for Bond by Robert Sellers (first edition, 2007).

22 The Battle for Bond by Robert Sellers (first edition, 2007).

23 "Q&A with Kevin McClory" by Richard Schenkman in Bondage magazine (issue #7, Summer 1979).

24 The Battle for Bond by Robert Sellers (first edition, 2007).

25 "The Snag that could kill off a new Bond film" by Roderick Mann in The Sunday Express (11.03.1979); via "Some Kind of Hero: The Remarkable Story of the James Bond Films" by Matthew Field & Ajay Chowdhury (2015).

26 "Warhead Back Again With 007" by Roderick Mann in The Los Angeles Times (08.05.1979); via "Some Kind of Hero: The Remarkable Story of the James Bond Films" by Matthew Field & Ajay Chowdhury (2015).

27 "Out of Bondage" by Roderick Mann in Ottawa Citizen (July 27, 1979).

28 "Out of Bondage" by Roderick Mann in Ottawa Citizen (July 27, 1979).

29 "Are MGM and Danjaq 21st Century pirates?" by a McClory's representative on Spectre Organization website (2000): http://spectreorganisation.com/press/pressjune.html

30 "Sean Connery: A Celebration" by Robert Sellers (1999).

31 "Some Kind of Hero: The Remarkable Story of the James Bond Films" by Matthew Field & Ajay Chowdhury (2015).

32 Sunday Mirror (December 17, 1978); via https://eofftv.com/never-say-never-again-1983/

33 The Battle for Bond by Robert Sellers (first edition, 2007).

34 Sean Connery interviewed on LBC Radio (1979); via "Some Kind of Hero: The Remarkable Story of the James Bond Films" by Matthew Field & Ajay Chowdhury (2015).

35 "The making of Never Say Never Again" in 007 Magazine (issue #40, January 2002).

36 "Q&A with Kevin McClory" by Richard Schenkman in Bondage magazine (issue #7, Summer 1979).

37 "Producing Never say Never Again" by Steve Swires in Starlog magazine (issue 71, June 1983).

38 (Sorry, I don't remember where I found this; neither the eventual exact quote).

39 The Battle for Bond by Robert Sellers (first edition, 2007).

40 "Bond vs. Bond" by B. Hugh James in Cinefantastique magazine (Vol. 14, Number 3, May 1984).

41 "Bond vs. Bond" by B. Hugh James in Cinefantastique magazine (Vol. 14, Number 3, May 1984).

Fantastic Films (issue #36, November 1983); via "Some Kind of Hero: The Remarkable Story of the James Bond Films" by Matthew Field & Ajay Chowdhury (2015).

42 "Producing Never say Never Again" by Steve Swires in Starlog magazine (issue 71, June 1983).

43 "The making of Never Say Never Again" in 007 Magazine (issue #40, January 2002).

44 "Producing Never say Never Again" by Steve Swires in Starlog magazine (issue 71, June 1983).

45 For Julian Plowden biography, see for the sources:

Plowden's page on Legacy.com: https://www.legacy.com/us/obituaries/latimes/name/julian-plowden-obituary?id=16159717

46 "The Complete James Bond Movie Encyclopedia" by Steven Jay Rubin (2003 edition).

47 For Lorenzo Semple Jr. biography, see for the sources:

"Lorenzo Semple Jr., Creator of TV's Batman, Dies at 91" by Bruce Weber in The New York Times (April 1, 2014): https://www.nytimes.com/2014/04/01/arts/television/lorenzo-semple-jr-creator-of-tvs-batman-dies-at-91.html

"Lorenzo Semple obituary" by Ronald Bergan in The Guardian (April 2, 2014): https://www.theguardian.com/film/2014/apr/02/lorenzo-semple

"Creator of TV's ‘Batman' Lorenzo Semple Jr. Dies at 91" by Alex Stedman in Variety (March 28, 2014): https://variety.com/2014/tv/news/creator-of-tvs-batman-lorenzo-semple-jr-dies-at-91-1201149758/

"Lorenzo Semple Jr., Creator of TV's ‘Batman,' Dies at 91" by Mike Barnes in The Hollywood Reporter (March 28, 2014): https://www.hollywoodreporter.com/news/general-news/lorenzo-semple-jr-dead-creator-675354/

"Lorenzo Semple Jr. dies at 91; successful Hollywood screenwriter in 1970s and ‘80s" by David Colker in The Los Angeles Times (March 29, 2014): https://www.latimes.com/local/obituaries/la-me-lorenzo-semple-20140330-story.html

"Lorenzo Semple, Jr. The screenwriter Fans Love to Hate, Part 2" by Steve Swires in Starlog magazine (issue 75, October 1983).

Lorenzo Semple Jr.'s Wikipedia page.

48 Connery's interview with Barry Norman in Film 83.

49 "Producing Never say Never Again" by Steve Swires in Starlog magazine (issue 71, June 1983).

50 "Producing Never say Never Again" by Steve Swires in Starlog magazine (issue 71, June 1983).

51 "Lorenzo Semple, Jr.: Having fun with James Bond in Never Say Never Again" by Steve Swires in Starlog magazine (issue 74, September 1983).

52 "Lorenzo Semple, Jr.: Having fun with James Bond in Never Say Never Again" by Steve Swires in Starlog magazine (issue 74, September 1983).

53 "Lorenzo Semple, Jr.: Having fun with James Bond in Never Say Never Again" by Steve Swires in Starlog magazine (issue 74, September 1983).

54 "Lorenzo Semple, Jr.: Having fun with James Bond in Never Say Never Again" by Steve Swires in Starlog magazine (issue 74, September 1983).

55 "Lorenzo Semple, Jr.: Having fun with James Bond in Never Say Never Again" by Steve Swires in Starlog magazine (issue 74, September 1983).

56 "Bond vs. Bond" by Lee Goldberg in Cinefantastique (Volume 13, Number 4, 1983).

57 "Lorenzo Semple, Jr.: Having fun with James Bond in Never Say Never Again" by Steve Swires in Starlog magazine (issue 74, September 1983).

58 "The big gamble" Blu-ray's bonus.

59 "Lorenzo Semple, Jr.: Having fun with James Bond in Never Say Never Again" by Steve Swires in Starlog magazine (issue 74, September 1983).

60 "Lorenzo Semple, Jr.: Having fun with James Bond in Never Say Never Again" by Steve Swires in Starlog magazine (issue 74, September 1983).

61 "Lorenzo Semple, Jr.: Having fun with James Bond in Never Say Never Again" by Steve Swires in Starlog magazine (issue 74, September 1983).

62 "Lorenzo Semple, Jr.: Having fun with James Bond in Never Say Never Again" by Steve Swires in Starlog magazine (issue 74, September 1983).

63 "Lorenzo Semple, Jr.: Having fun with James Bond in Never Say Never Again" by Steve Swires in Starlog magazine (issue 74, September 1983).

64 "Lorenzo Semple, Jr.: Having fun with James Bond in Never Say Never Again" by Steve Swires in Starlog magazine (issue 74, September 1983).

65 "Lorenzo Semple, Jr.: Having fun with James Bond in Never Say Never Again" by Steve Swires in Starlog magazine (issue 74, September 1983)

66 "Lorenzo Semple, Jr.: Having fun with James Bond in Never Say Never Again" by Steve Swires in Starlog magazine (issue 74, September 1983)

67 "Lorenzo Semple, Jr.: Having fun with James Bond in Never Say Never Again" by Steve Swires in Starlog magazine (issue 74, September 1983)

68 "The big gamble" Blu-ray's bonus.

69 "Lorenzo Semple, Jr.: Having fun with James Bond in Never Say Never Again" by Steve Swires in Starlog magazine (issue 74, September 1983)

70 The Battle for Bond by Robert Sellers (first edition, 2007).

71 "The making of Never Say Never Again" in 007 Magazine (issue #40, January 2002).

72 "Lorenzo Semple, Jr.: Having fun with James Bond in Never Say Never Again" by Steve Swires in Starlog magazine (issue 74, September 1983)

73 "On the set of Never Say Never Again" by Richard Schenkman in Starlog magazine (issue #68, March 1983).

74 "The big gamble" Blu-ray's bonus.

75 "Lorenzo Semple, Jr.: Having fun with James Bond in Never Say Never Again" by Steve Swires in Starlog magazine (issue 74, September 1983)
76 "The big gamble" Blu-ray's bonus.
77 "Lorenzo Semple, Jr.: Having fun with James Bond in Never Say Never Again" by Steve Swires in Starlog magazine (issue 74, September 1983)
78 "Lorenzo Semple, Jr.: Having fun with James Bond in Never Say Never Again" by Steve Swires in Starlog magazine (issue 74, September 1983)
79 "The big gamble" Blu-ray's bonus.
80 "Lorenzo Semple, Jr.: Having fun with James Bond in Never Say Never Again" by Steve Swires in Starlog magazine (issue 74, September 1983)
81 "Lorenzo Semple, Jr.: Having fun with James Bond in Never Say Never Again" by Steve Swires in Starlog magazine (issue 74, September 1983)
82 "The director strikes back" Kershner's interview by Matthew Field in 007 Magazine (issue #40, January 2002).
83 "The making of Never Say Never Again" in 007 Magazine (issue #40, January 2002).
84 "The director strikes back" Kershner's interview by Matthew Field in 007 Magazine (issue #40, January 2002).
85 For Zalman King biography, see for the sources:
Zalman King's Wikipedia page.
86 "Ni tout à fait le même,ni tout à fait un autre...", Kershner interview by Frédéric-Albert Lévy in Le Bond magazine (issue #13, September 2013). Translated from french.
87 "Nobody Does it Better" by Mark A. Altman and Edward Gross (2020).
88 The Guardian Lectures: Sean Connery Talks to Iain Johnstone on Chanel 4; via"The making of Never Say Never Again" in 007 Magazine (issue #40, January 2002).
89 "The Many Lives of James Bond" by Mark Edlitz (2019).
90 Dick Clement and Ian La Frenais interview on SpyHards podcast (#26): https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=2f2rP_ZTdsE
"Nobody Does it Better" by Mark A. Altman and Edward Gross (2020).
91 "The Many Lives of James Bond" by Mark Edlitz (2019).
92 Dick Clement and Ian La Frenais interview on SpyHards podcast (#26): https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=2f2rP_ZTdsE
"The Many Lives of James Bond" by Mark Edlitz (2019).
93 "The Many Lives of James Bond" by Mark Edlitz (2019).
94 Dick Clement and Ian La Frenais interview on SpyHards podcast (#26): https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=2f2rP_ZTdsE
"Nobody Does it Better" by Mark A. Altman and Edward Gross (2020).
95 "The Many Lives of James Bond" by Mark Edlitz (2019).
96 Fantastic Films (issue #36, November 1983); via "Some Kind of Hero: The Remarkable Story of the James Bond Films" by Matthew Field & Ajay Chowdhury (2015).
"The Many Lives of James Bond" by Mark Edlitz (2019).
97 "The big gamble" Blu-ray's bonus.
98 "The Many Lives of James Bond" by Mark Edlitz (2019).
99 The Battle for Bond by Robert Sellers (first edition, 2007).
100 "The big gamble" Blu-ray's bonus.
101 "Nobody Does it Better" by Mark A. Altman and Edward Gross (2020).
102 "The Many Lives of James Bond" by Mark Edlitz (2019).
103 "The big gamble" Blu-ray's bonus.
104 Dick Clement and Ian La Frenais interview on SpyHards podcast (#26): https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=2f2rP_ZTdsE
105 Dick Clement and Ian La Frenais interview on SpyHards podcast (#26): https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=2f2rP_ZTdsE
106 Dick Clement and Ian La Frenais interview on SpyHards podcast (#26): https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=2f2rP_ZTdsE
107 "Barbara Carrera: Making Love (and Death) Means Never say Never Again" by Richard Shenkman in Starlog magazine (issue 75, October 1983)
108 "Some Kind of Hero: The Remarkable Story of the James Bond Films" by Matthew Field & Ajay Chowdhury (2015).
109 "The Many Lives of James Bond" by Mark Edlitz (2019).
110 "The big gamble" Blu-ray's bonus.
111 "Producing Never say Never Again" by Steve Swires in Starlog magazine (issue 71, June 1983).
112 "On the set of Never Say Never Again" by Richard Schenkman in Starlog magazine (issue #68, March 1983).
113 "The Complete James Bond Movie Encyclopedia" by Steven Jay Rubin (2003 edition).
114 "Ni tout à fait le même,ni tout à fait un autre...", Kershner interview by Frédéric-Albert Lévy in Le Bond magazine (issue #13, September 2013). Translated from french.

115 The Battle for Bond by Robert Sellers (first edition, 2007).
116 "Lorenzo Semple, Jr.: Having fun with James Bond in Never Say Never Again" by Steve Swires in Starlog magazine (issue 74, September 1983)
117 "The Writer Speaks: Lorenzo Semple Jr." by the Writers Guild Foundation on YouTube: https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=_CiaijXy91o
118 "The Writer Speaks: Lorenzo Semple Jr." by the Writers Guild Foundation on YouTube: https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=_CiaijXy91o
119 "The Writer Speaks: Lorenzo Semple Jr." by the Writers Guild Foundation on YouTube: https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=_CiaijXy91o
120 "The making of Never Say Never Again" in 007 Magazine (issue #40, January 2002).
121 "The Many Lives of James Bond" by Mark Edlitz (2019).
122 "The director strikes back" Kershner's interview by Matthew Field in 007 Magazine (issue #40, January 2002).
123 For Francis Ford Coppola biography, see for the sources:
Francis Ford Coppola's Britannica page.
Francis Ford Coppola's Wikipedia page.
124 "Ni tout à fait le même,ni tout à fait un autre...", Kershner interview by Frédéric-Albert Lévy in Le Bond magazine (issue #13, September 2013). Translated from french.
125 "Tom Mankiewicz Talks James Bond", Mankiewicz's interview by Mark Edlitz on Empire website: http://www.empireonline.com/interviews/interview.asp?IID=1101
126 "Battle of the Bonds: The Real Story Behind 007's Last Big Case" in Time Out magazine (issue #668, June 1983).
127 "Never Day Never Again update" in Bondage Quarterly (Vol 4, number 2, September 1983).
128 "Never Day Never Again update" in Bondage Quarterly (Vol 4, number 2, September 1983).
129 "The big gamble" Blu-ray's bonus.
130 "The director strikes back" Kershner's interview by Matthew Field in 007 Magazine (issue #40, January 2002).
131 "The Many Lives of James Bond" by Mark Edlitz (2019).
132 "Bond vs. Bond" by B. Hugh James in Cinefantastique magazine (Vol. 14, Number 3, May 1984).
133 "Bond vs. Bond" by B. Hugh James in Cinefantastique magazine (Vol. 14, Number 3, May 1984).
134 "Some Kind of Hero: The Remarkable Story of the James Bond Films" by Matthew Field & Ajay Chowdhury (2015).
"The making of Never Say Never Again" in 007 Magazine (issue #40, January 2002).
135 "Brosnan and Dalton Both Playing Bond" by Robin Adam Sloan in the Sarasota Herald-Tribune (September 12, 1990).
"Fate may let Brosnan play 007" by Shirley Eder in Bangor Daily News (September 12, 1990).
"Brosnan mum on rumors he'll do James Bond flick" by Marilyn Beck in the Reading Eagle (September 2, 1989).
136 "Brosnan to play Bond.....Down under" in TV Week (September 9, 1989).
137 "Fate may let Brosnan play 007" by Shirley Eder in Bangor Daily News (September 12, 1990).
138 "Brosnan to play Bond.....Down under" in TV Week (September 9, 1989).
139 "The nineties" on Liner-notes website: http://www.liner-notes.com/articles/bond/nineties.html
The Battle for Bond by Robert Sellers (first edition, 2007).
140 The Battle for Bond by Robert Sellers (first edition, 2007).
141 The Battle for Bond by Robert Sellers (first edition, 2007).
142 The Battle for Bond by Robert Sellers (first edition, 2007).
143 The Battle for Bond by Robert Sellers (first edition, 2007).
144 The Battle for Bond by Robert Sellers (first edition, 2007).
145 The Battle for Bond by Robert Sellers (first edition, 2007).
146 The Battle for Bond by Robert Sellers (first edition, 2007).
147 "McClory Still Plans Rival - Warhead 2000" on Mr. Kiss Kiss Bang Bang website (January 11, 1996): http://web.archive.org/web/20061003061756/http://www.ianfleming.org/007news/articles/warhead.shtml
148 Variety (1996); via "Warhead 2000 - The Lost Bond Film" by Michael Cooper in Alternative 007 website: http://www.alternative007.co.uk/73.htm
149 Variety (1996); via "Warhead 2000 - The Lost Bond Film" by Michael Cooper in Alternative 007 website: http://www.alternative007.co.uk/73.htm
150 "Kevin Aims to Make Big Boom in Battle of Bonds" by Trevor Danker in The Sunday Independent (October 27, 1996); via https://paginas.fe.up.pt/~tendas/007/007warhe.html
151 https://paginas.fe.up.pt/~tendas/007/007warhe.html
152 "Drudge Sneak: Sony Eyeing James Bond" by Matt Drudge in Drudge Report and Wired (February 18, 1997): https://www.wired.com/1997/02/drudge-sneak-sony-eyeing-james-bond/
153 "Denzel dons 'Shades'; Lane gets 'Gunshy'" by Michael Fleming in Variety (March 19, 1997): https://variety.com/1997/voices/columns/denzel-dons-shades-lane-gets-gunshy-1117342461/
154 "Denzel dons 'Shades'; Lane gets 'Gunshy'" by Michael Fleming in Variety (March 19, 1997): https://variety.com/1997/voices/columns/denzel-dons-shades-lane-gets-gunshy-1117342461/
155 Sony Pictures website: http://www.spe.sony.com/movies/others/news29.html

Sources/references from chapter 13.5: Never Say Never Again (and Warhead)

156 "Sony splits Bond market" by Rex Weiner in Variety (October 14, 1997): https://variety.com/1997/film/news/sony-splits-bond-market-1116674240/

157 "Sony splits Bond market" by Rex Weiner in Variety (October 14, 1997): https://variety.com/1997/film/news/sony-splits-bond-market-1116674240/

158 "Sony splits Bond market" by Rex Weiner in Variety (October 14, 1997): https://variety.com/1997/film/news/sony-splits-bond-market-1116674240/

159 "A Dispute That's Worthy Of the Title 'Battle Royale'" by By James Sterngold in The New York Times (October 14, 1997) : https://www.nytimes.com/1997/10/14/business/a-dispute-that-s-worthy-of-the-title-battle-royale.html

160 Sony Pictures website: http://www.spe.sony.com/movies/others/news29.html

161 "Sony splits Bond market" by Rex Weiner in Variety (October 14, 1997): https://variety.com/1997/film/news/sony-splits-bond-market-1116674240/

162 "2 Bonds? Sony Says 'Never Say Never'" by James Bates in the Los Angeles Times (October 14, 1997): https://www.latimes.com/archives/la-xpm-1997-oct-14-fi-42512-story.html

163 MGM's filling of annual report to the SEC (Securities and Exchange Commission) (March 30, 1999).
"MGM Files Suit to Bar Sony From Making Bond Films" by Marla Matzer in The Los Angeles Times (November 18, 1997): https://www.latimes.com/archives/la-xpm-1997-nov-18-fi-54958-story.html

164 "MGM Files Suit to Bar Sony From Making Bond Films" by Marla Matzer in The Los Angeles Times (November 18, 1997): https://www.latimes.com/archives/la-xpm-1997-nov-18-fi-54958-story.html

165 MGM's filling of annual report to the SEC (Securities and Exchange Commission) (March 30, 1999).
"MGM Files Suit to Bar Sony From Making Bond Films" by Marla Matzer in The Los Angeles Times (November 18, 1997): https://www.latimes.com/archives/la-xpm-1997-nov-18-fi-54958-story.html

166 "007 faces legal shootout" by Paul Karon in Variety (November 17, 1997): https://variety.com/1997/film/news/007-faces-legal-shootout-111662175/
"A Pending Lawsuit" in Variety; via Universalexports.net : http://www.universalexports.net/00Warhead.shtml

167 MGM's filling of annual report to the SEC (Securities and Exchange Commission) (March 30, 1999).

168 "Sony drops Bond bomb" by Paul Karon in Variety (February 19, 1998) : https://variety.com/1998/film/news/sony-drops-bond-bomb-1117467954/

169 Docket summary 00-55781 by judge Mary Margaret McKeown (August 27, 2001).

170 "Sony drops Bond bomb" by Paul Karon in Variety (February 19, 1998) : https://variety.com/1998/film/news/sony-drops-bond-bomb-1117467954/

171 "Are MGM and Danjaq 21st Century pirates?" by a McClory's representative on Spectre Organization website (2000): http://spectreorganisation.com/press/pressjune.html

172 "Are MGM and Danjaq 21st Century pirates?" by a McClory's representative on Spectre Organization website (2000): http://spectreorganisation.com/press/pressjune.html

173 Docket summary 00-55781 by judge Mary Margaret McKeown (August 27, 2001).

174 Docket summary 00-55781 by judge Mary Margaret McKeown (August 27, 2001).

175 "Are MGM and Danjaq 21st Century pirates?" by a McClory's representative on Spectre Organization website (2000): http://spectreorganisation.com/press/pressjune.html

176 Spectre Organization website: http://spectreorganisation.com/statement/chp4.html

177 Docket summary 00-55781 by judge Mary Margaret McKeown (August 27, 2001).

178 Docket summary 00-55781 by judge Mary Margaret McKeown (August 27, 2001).

179 "Are MGM and Danjaq 21st Century pirates?" by a McClory's representative on Spectre Organization website (2000): http://spectreorganisation.com/press/pressjune.html

180 "Sony drops Bond bomb" by Paul Karon in Variety (February 19, 1998) : https://variety.com/1998/film/news/sony-drops-bond-bomb-1117467954/

181 "Sony drops Bond bomb" by Paul Karon in Variety (February 19, 1998) : https://variety.com/1998/film/news/sony-drops-bond-bomb-1117467954/

182 "007 faces legal shootout" by Paul Karon in Variety (November 17, 1997): https://variety.com/1997/film/news/007-faces-legal-shootout-111662175/
"A Pending Lawsuit" in Variety; via Universalexports.net : http://www.universalexports.net/00Warhead.shtml

183 MGM's filling of annual report to the SEC (Securities and Exchange Commission) (March 30, 1999).

184 "Legal bondage" by Janet Shprintz in Variety (July 28, 1988): https://variety.com/1998/film/news/legal-bondage-1117478893/

185 MGM's filling of annual report to the SEC (Securities and Exchange Commission) (March 30, 1999).
"MGM seeks injunction to halt rival Bond film" (Associated Press, May 20, 1998); via https://www.universalexports.net/00Warhead.shtml
"Fight heats up over Bond movie franchise" in The Daily News (May 21; 1998).

186 "MGM seeks injunction to halt rival Bond film" (Associated Press, May 20, 1998); via https://www.universalexports.net/00Warhead.shtml
"Fight heats up over Bond movie franchise" in The Daily News (May 21; 1998).

187 "Legal bondage" by Janet Shprintz in Variety (July 28, 1988): https://variety.com/1998/film/news/legal-bondage-1117478893/

188 "Judge Tells Sony To Halt Bond Film" by Michael White for Associated Press; via https://www.universalexports.net/00Warhead.shtml
"Sony, MGM do battle over Bond, James Bond" in The Free Lance-Star (August 1, 1998).
189 "Sony, MGM do battle over Bond, James Bond" in The Free Lance-Star (August 1, 1998).
190 "Judge Tells Sony To Halt Bond Film" by Michael White for Associated Press; via https://www.universalexports.net/00Warhead.shtml
191 "Sony scores small win in Bond case" by Janet Sphrintz in Variety (September 18, 1998): https://variety.com/1998/biz/news/sony-scores-small-win-in-bond-case-1117480547/
192 "Connery to return as 007 in Doomsday 2000" by World Entertainment News Network (October 24, 1988); via https://www.universalexports.net/00Warhead.shtml
193 "Court backs MGM on Bond" by Janet Shprintz in Variety (November 22, 1998): https://variety.com/1998/biz/news/court-backs-mgm-on-bond-1117488797/
194 "Bond battle set for trial" by Janet Shprintz in Variety (February 28, 1999): https://variety.com/1999/biz/news/bond-battle-set-for-trial-1117491739/
195 "Studio Rights to Spider-Man Are Untangled" by Michael A. Hiltzik in The Los Angeles Times (March 2, 1999): https://variety.com/1999/biz/news/mgm-orion-sue-sony-col-over-homevid-coin-1117491121/
"MGM, Orion sue Sony, Col over homevid coin" by Janet Shprintz in Variety (February 8, 1999): https://variety.com/1999/biz/news/mgm-orion-sue-sony-col-over-homevid-coin-1117491121/
196 "Studio Rights to Spider-Man Are Untangled" by Michael A. Hiltzik in The Los Angeles Times (March 2, 1999): https://variety.com/1999/biz/news/mgm-orion-sue-sony-col-over-homevid-coin-1117491121/
"Sharing Spidey" by Janet Shprintz in Variety (March 1, 1999): https://variety.com/1999/film/news/sharing-spidey-1117491798/
"Spider-Man escapes lawyers web" on BBC News (March 3, 1999): http://news.bbc.co.uk/2/hi/entertainment/289715.stm
197 MGM's filling of annual report to the SEC (Securities and Exchange Commission) (March 30, 1999).
198 "Big Bond-holder" by Janet Shprintz in Variety (March 29, 1999): https://variety.com/1999/film/news/big-bond-holder-1117492814/
199 "Deal Cements MGM's Bond to 007 Franchise" by James Bates in The Los Angeles Times (March 30, 1999): https://www.latimes.com/archives/la-xpm-1999-mar-30-fi-22412-story.html
200 "Big Bond-holder" by Janet Shprintz in Variety (March 29, 1999): https://variety.com/1999/film/news/big-bond-holder-1117492814/
201 "Big Bond-holder" by Janet Shprintz in Variety (March 29, 1999): https://variety.com/1999/film/news/big-bond-holder-1117492814/
202 "Are MGM and Danjaq 21st Century pirates?" by a McClory's representative on Spectre Organization website (2000): http://spectreorganisation.com/press/pressjune.html
203 "Inside Moves: McClory in Bond pic talks; De Niro cruising 'Parents' hood" in Variety (June 2, 1999): https://variety.com/1999/film/news/inside-moves-119-1117502662/
204 "Inside Moves: McClory in Bond pic talks; De Niro cruising 'Parents' hood" in Variety (June 2, 1999): https://variety.com/1999/film/news/inside-moves-119-1117502662/
"Alternative 007 films under discussion" in the Reading Eagle (June 2, 1999).
205 Spectre Organization website: http://spectreorganisation.com/statement/chp8.html
206 "Trial date set in Bond rights case" on Mr. Kiss Kiss Bang Bang website (October 22, 1999): http://www.ianfleming.org/007news/articles/mcclorydate.shtml
207 Docket summary 00-55781 by judge Mary Margaret McKeown (August 27, 2001).
208 "The 41 year old battle of the Bonds continues" by a McClory's representative on Spectre Organization website (May 8, 2001): http://spectreorganisation.com/press/press.html
209 "Are MGM and Danjaq 21st Century pirates?" by a McClory's representative on Spectre Organization website (2000): http://spectreorganisation.com/press/pressjune.html
210 "The 41 year old battle of the Bonds continues" by a McClory's representative on Spectre Organization website (May 8, 2001): http://spectreorganisation.com/press/press.html
211 "Court: License to nil" by Janet Shprintz in Variety (March 30, 2000): https://variety.com/2000/biz/news/court-license-to-nil-1117780103/
"Latest Bond installment sans McClory" by Janet Shprintz in Variety (March 28, 2000): https://variety.com/2000/biz/news/latest-bond-installment-sans-mcclory-1117779982/
"Bond claimant left shaken, stirred, and defeated" in The Guardian (April 3, 2000): https://www.theguardian.com/film/2000/apr/03/news
212 Docket summary 00-55781 by judge Mary Margaret McKeown (August 27, 2001).
"McClory loses his Bond retry" by Lindsay Chaney in Variety (August 27, 2007): https://variety.com/2001/biz/news/mcclory-loses-his-bond-retry-1117851916/
213 Docket summary 00-55781 by judge Mary Margaret McKeown (August 27, 2001).
214 Docket summary 00-55781 by judge Mary Margaret McKeown (August 27, 2001).
215 Docket summary 00-55781 by judge Mary Margaret McKeown (August 27, 2001).

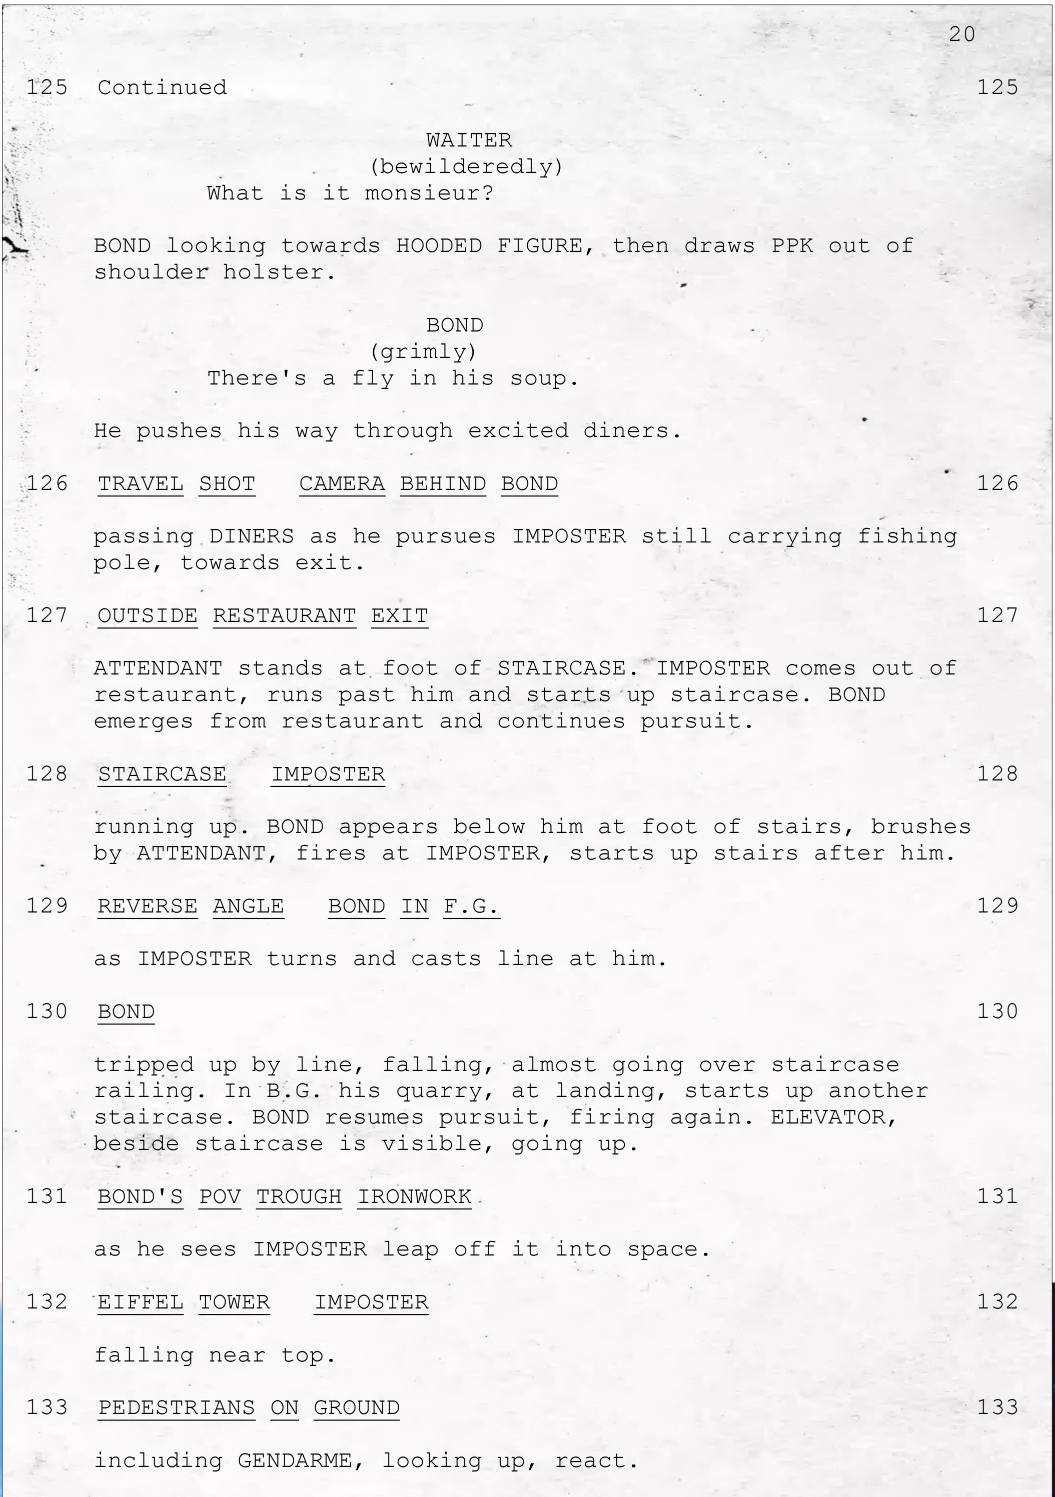
216 Docket summary 00-55781 by judge Mary Margaret McKeown (August 27, 2001).
"Court: License to nil" by Janet Shprintz in Variety (March 30, 2000): https://variety.com/2000/biz/news/court-license-to-nil-1117780103/
217 Docket summary 00-55781 by judge Mary Margaret McKeown (August 27, 2001).
218 https://www.mi6-hq.com/sections/articles/images/mcclory_legacy2.jpg

HAS JAMES BOND FINALLY MET HIS MATCH?
ALBERT R. BROCCOLI Presents
ROGER MOORE
as IAN FLEMING'S
JAMES BOND 007
A VIEW TO A KILL

Release date (premiere) :
22 May 1985

Writing credit as per title sequence:
"Screenplay by Richard Maibaum and Michael G. Wilson"

Director :....................................John Glen
Producers :.Albert Broccoli and Michael Wilson
Director photography :.........Alan Hume
Set Designer :........................Peter Lamont
Composer :..............................John Barry
Editor :...................................Peter Davies
Title sequence :...............Maurice Binder
Title song vocals :...............Duran Duran



20

125 Continued 125

WAITER
(bewilderedly)
What is it monsieur?

BOND looking towards HOODED FIGURE, then draws PPK out of shoulder holster.

BOND
(grimly)
There's a fly in his soup.

He pushes his way through excited diners.

126 TRAVEL SHOT CAMERA BEHIND BOND 126

passing DINERS as he pursues IMPOSTER still carrying fishing pole, towards exit.

127 OUTSIDE RESTAURANT EXIT 127

ATTENDANT stands at foot of STAIRCASE. IMPOSTER comes out of restaurant, runs past him and starts up staircase. BOND emerges from restaurant and continues pursuit.

128 STAIRCASE IMPOSTER 128

running up. BOND appears below him at foot of stairs, brushes by ATTENDANT, fires at IMPOSTER, starts up stairs after him.

129 REVERSE ANGLE BOND IN F.G. 129

as IMPOSTER turns and casts line at him.

130 BOND 130

tripped up by line, falling, almost going over staircase railing. In B.G. his quarry, at landing, starts up another staircase. BOND resumes pursuit, firing again. ELEVATOR, beside staircase is visible, going up.

131 BOND'S POV TROUGH IRONWORK 131

as he sees IMPOSTER leap off it into space.

132 EIFFEL TOWER IMPOSTER 132

falling near top.

133 PEDESTRIANS ON GROUND 133 including GENDARME, looking up, react.

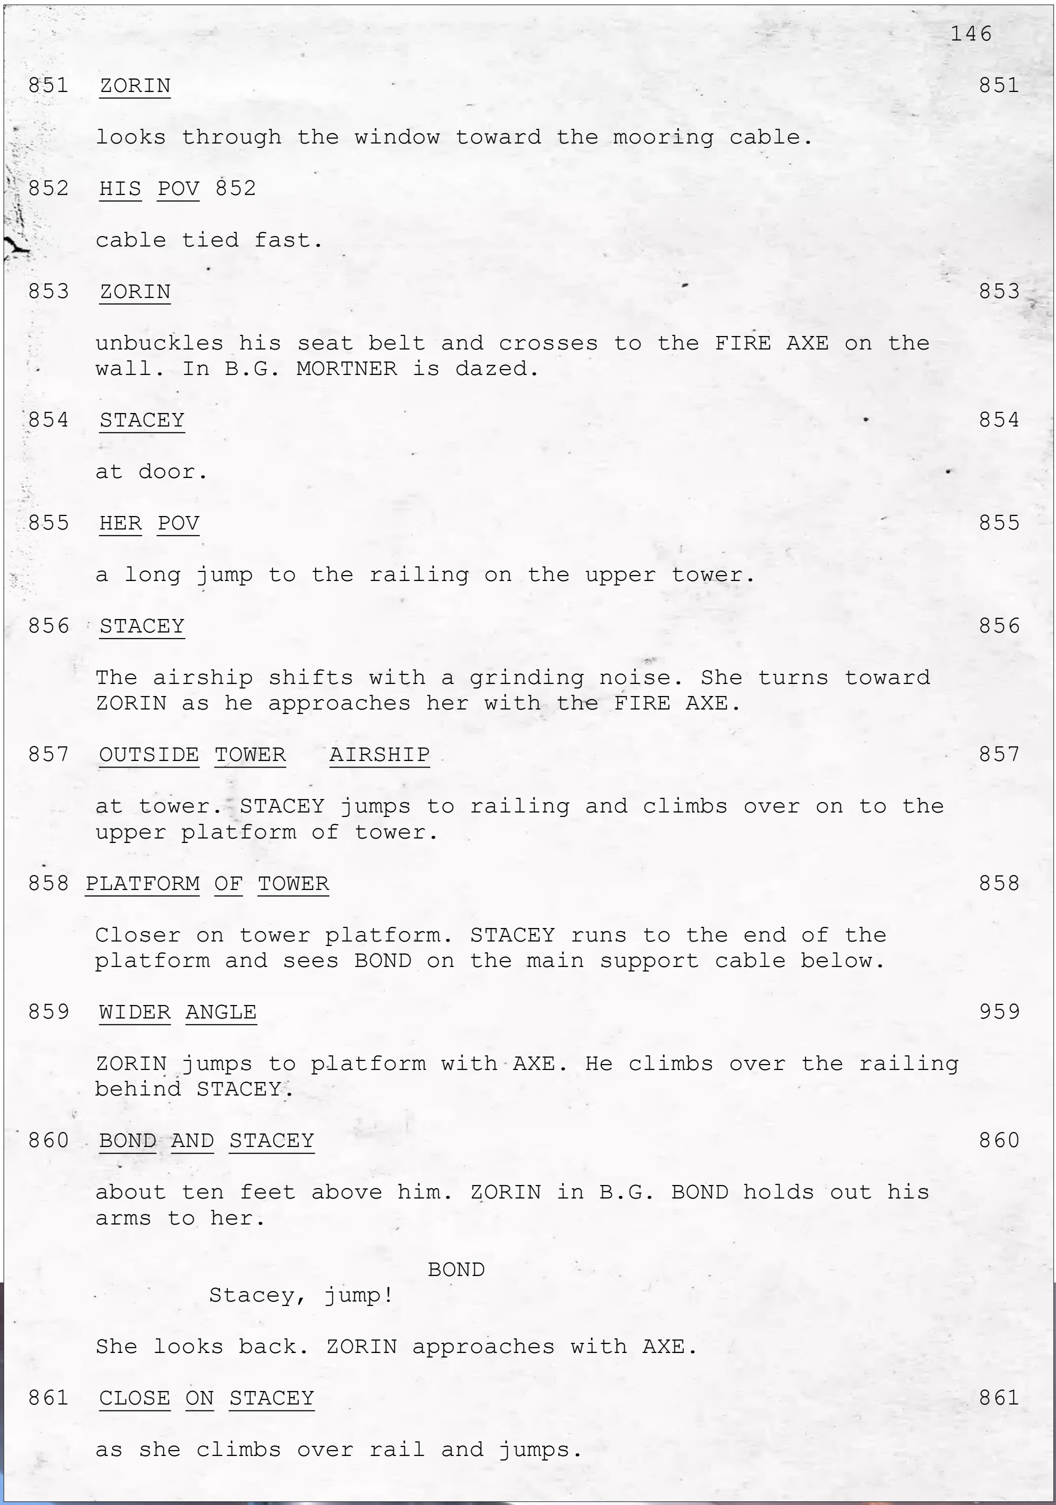
CHAPTER 14

A VIEW TO A KILL



146

851 ZORIN 851

looks through the window toward the mooring cable.

852 HIS POV 852

cable tied fast.

853 ZORIN 853

unbuckles his seat belt and crosses to the FIRE AXE on the wall. In B.G. MORTNER is dazed.

854 STACEY 854

at door.

855 HER POV 855

a long jump to the railing on the upper tower.

856 STACEY 856

The airship shifts with a grinding noise. She turns toward ZORIN as he approaches her with the FIRE AXE.

857 OUTSIDE TOWER AIRSHIP 857

at tower. STACEY jumps to railing and climbs over on to the upper platform of tower.

858 PLATFORM OF TOWER 858

Closer on tower platform. STACEY runs to the end of the platform and sees BOND on the main support cable below.

859 WIDER ANGLE 959

ZORIN jumps to platform with AXE. He climbs over the railing behind STACEY.

860 BOND AND STACEY 860

about ten feet above him. ZORIN in B.G. BOND holds out his arms to her.

BOND
Stacey, jump!

She looks back. ZORIN approaches with AXE.

861 CLOSE ON STACEY 861

as she climbs over rail and jumps.

Cast:

James Bond :..........................Roger Moore
Max Zorin :................Christopher Walken
Stacey Sutton :....................Tanya Roberts
May Day :...............................Grace Jones
Tibbett :............................Patrick Macnee
Scarpine :.........................Patrick Bauchau
Chuck Lee :................................David Yip
Carl Mortner :................Willoughby Gray
Pola Ivanova :..................Fiona Fullerton
Jenny Flex :..........................Alison Doody
Pan Ho :...........................Papillon Soo Soo
Gogol :....................................Walter Gotell
M :..Robert Brown
Moneypenny :......................Lois Maxwell
Q :...............................Desmond Llewelyn

Main filming locations: California, France, Switzerland, Iceland and UK

Indeed Roger Moore is getting too old and we far too much see his doubles in this film. However, I really like this A View to a Kill and its atmosphere which suits the actor who have the chance to forms a lovely duo with Patrick Macnee. The filming locations are fabulous, the stunts that take place there are not to be outdone and the villains are colorful. Zorin's objective, although similar to what we had in Goldfinger, is well found and the story is satisfactory. Although no one understands the lyrics, Duran Duran also deliver a hell of a song, just like John Barry who delivers once again a perfect soundtrack.

SKYSHIP 500

Table of contents

A View to a Kill

The short story..894
Hijack a comet...895
Carl and Kitty Willis..898
When Gaddafi was a James Bond villain...901
October 26, 1983' treatment: Zorn, Viola Havel and special vintage...902
November 1983: Adam Geist, May Day, Mexico, western and MARS...912
December 15, 1983' treatment: Zorin, drone-pigeon, AMC and firefighters.......................................917
Pre-title attempt: the welcoming Bunjoe..926
New pre-title: road convoy...928
January 16, 1984' treatment: interlude in Acapulco...930
A cold reception...934
February 14, 1984' treatment: Pan Ho, Silicon Valley and a new Tola..936
March 3, 1984' treatment: France, Golden Gate and revenge...940
March 30, 1984' treatment: Stacey, quarter of a taxi and Snooper..943
April 5, 1984' treatment: horses and pumping station..946
June 8, 1984' revised script: snowboarding and botanical gardens...948
June 20, 1984' revised scripts..951

The short story

From September 21 to 25, 1959, a short story by Ian Fleming was published in the Daily Express: James Bond and the Murder Before Breakfast.

A British motorcycle courier is shot dead in the west of Paris, on his weekly journey between NATO's Supreme Headquarters Allied Powers Europe (SHAPE) and the offices of Station F (France) of the Secret Service. The classified documents he was carrying were stolen. 007, who is passing through Paris between two missions, is charged by M to help with the ongoing investigation. He is picked up by Mary Ann Russell (of Station F) who takes him to SHAPE where he meets the head of security, Colonel Schreiber.

After investigating and traveling to the crime scene in camouflage gear, 007 spotted the killers' underground hideout in the woods. Bond disguises himself as a SHAPE courier and rides a BSA M20 motorcycle on the same road. As expected, the assassins try to kill him to steal his documents. But Bond is ready and manages to get rid of the killers (who speak a language that resembles Russian) with the help of Mary Ann Russell, who saves his life when he finds himself in a bad position facing one of the opponent.

When republished in the collection For Your Eyes Only the following year, the short story changed its title to From a View to a Kill.

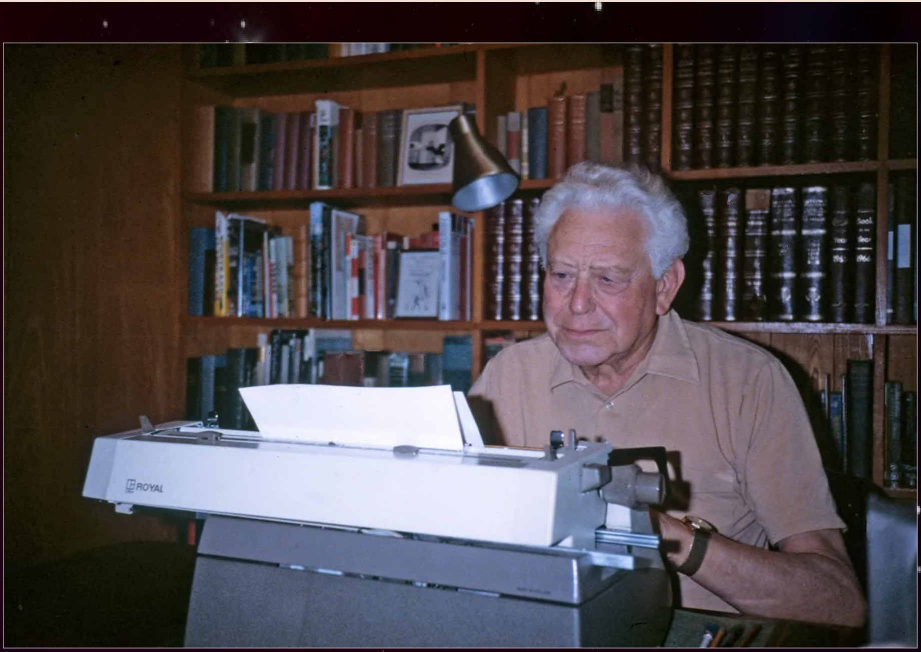
ALGO LLAMÓ SU ATENCIÓN. DETRÁS SUYO VENÍA ALGUIEN MÁS.
DEBE SER ALGÚN POLICÍA MILITAR FRANCÉS O NORTEAMERICANO DE LA OTAN.
NO, ES DE MI MISMA COMPAÑÍA. ¿QUIÉN SERÁ? TAL VEZ EDDIE O WALLY... SÍ, ES WALLY.
EFECTIVAMENTE, EL HOMBRE QUE LO SEGUÍA VESTÍA SU MISMO UNIFORME...
PERO EL PRIMER MOTOCICLISTA NO PODÍA VER LA LUGER QUE SU SEGUIDOR LLEVABA SOBRE EL ESTANQUE DE GASOLINA...
ERROR QUE LE SERÍA FATAL...

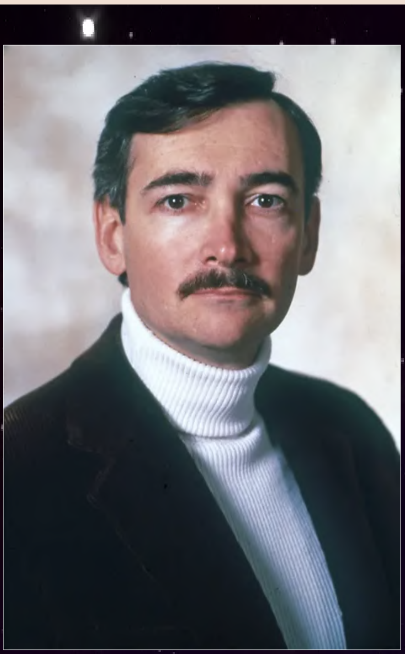
> - John Glen[1] : It's a good situation with the short story, a spy ring in France, the motorcycle courier disappears, the flower in the field hiding the microphone. I'd like to get George MacDonald Fraser again for the script, I like his sense of humour. [...] We'll continue the trend, getting back to the real Bond.

For one reason or another Fraser will not return and basically the film will retain almost nothing of the short story (except Bond being in Paris). Even the title will not be entirely preserved, being amputated from its "From".

It was France that actually seemed interested the production according to Michael Wilson: "we'd had some good results there with Moonraker. So we went back again, because it was a good place to film, and there were plenty of exciting places for us to shoot: the Eiffel Tower, big châteaux [castles]"[2].

Hijack a comet





Development of the film begins under the full title, "From a View to a Kill", with at the writing Richard Maibaum and Michael Wilson (who was also promoted co-producer alongside his father-in-law, Cubby Broccoli).

- Official magazine of A View to a Kill: Originally, they considered "having Zorin manipulate Halley's Comet so it comes crashing down".

An undated nine-page memo written for the film begins with: "If someone wanted to hit California with some kind of force and effectively destroy the Northern part of the State including Silicon Valley, San Francisco, America's prime agricultural land and upwards of 15 million people, causing a comet to collide with the State around the midpoint or above it of the San Andreas Fault would be a good way to do it. [...] An ideal comet for this type of purpose would be one that is expected to come near the earth soon, like Halley's Comet which is due in 1986".

The 1P/Halley comet which interested the screenwriters. Visible every 75-80 years from Earth, it passed (for the last time) into our near solar system at the beginning of 1986. Several space probes, notably Giotto and Vega 1 & 2, approached it "closely".

The document estimates that Comet Halley is traveling at 149 418 km/h. Given its speed and size, the impact would be very devastating and even more so on a geologically fragile area. The author of the memo compares the thing to an air rifle hitting a window that has been already pre-broken and glued back with superglue. And even if the comet missed its target and landed in the water: the tidal surge caused would still engulf San Francisco, we can read.

But how do we get the comet to actually crash into Earth?

The idea would be to successfully deviate the comet's trajectory once it arrives near our planet.

"A group [of individuals] wanting to deflect a comet would do as follows. They would launch a series of rockets at around the same time, each loaded with multiple atomic warheads, and programmed to converge on one spot in space at the same time a comet passes through there. This would be at a point where the comet comes closest to the Earth in its journey. The warheads on all the missiles would explode at once, in that spot, and deflect the nucleus of the comet from its existing inertial path even one or a few degrees. [...] Even with just a small deflection in path, the comet would be made to head on a path that would lead it to collide with Earth. [...] It would not destroy the Earth as some people feared in 1909 when Halley's Comet's tail crossed the earth for a time, but the impact could destroy northern California".

Computers can perform the necessary calculations; moreover, some calculations about Halley as its speed and its date of arrival have already been carried out by the world scientific community, as it is noted. The calculations made by the scriptwriters/consultants give between 7 and 22 hours between the moment of the deviation and the impact on Earth depending on the parameters to be taken into account (with the last 1.63 seconds as the point of no return where it would be too late to avoid disaster). The rockets fired by the bad guys should take a little over a week (184 hours) to reach their destination located 14 times the Earth-Moon distance.

In this and other documents, the filmmakers ask themselves the question of how the bad guys could keep the secret on all this. It is said that "it would not be terribly hard for an organization to disrupt the path of a comet like Halley's and make the whole caper look as if nothing out of the ordinary had happened".

How would the Americans react if they detected a rocket launch? It is admitted that they are already very busy to monitoring the Warsaw Pact countries. Many private or foreign companies such as Ford, Arabsat, Mitsubishi are also launching rockets into space; so the Americans would not be more worried than that as long as the rockets don't tend to come down like a missile.

It is notably noted that the private West German company OTRAG (meaning: Orbital Transport and Rockets, Inc.) "have been approached by Libya to build a rocket base [...] and also launch satellites for Gaddafi" (OTRAG, one of the first private companies to design space launchers, was actually installed in Libya around this time).

Likewise, the writers set aside for the villain a 1983 newspaper article about the rockets Dolphin from the company Starstruck Inc. The design of the Dophin was quite special because it could be launched from anywhere from the ocean/sea (launched from a boat, the Dolphin floated horizontally before a weight attached to the rear end of the rocket pulled it vertically for launching). (After two failures and one half-success, Starstruck, short of funds, closed its doors at the end of 1984, leading an end to the development of the Dolphin).

"These rockets would head out into space at a speed of 19 000 miles per hour [30 577 km/h] ostensibly to launch satellites into orbit around the Earth. Instead, they have atomic bombs in their noses rather than satellites, a fact easily hidden from all but those few technicians that work on the rockets".

Would a nuclear explosion near the comet be visible/noticed from Earth? It is deduced that this would not be the case: the explosion would not be visible to the eye because of the distance (and due to the fact that comets are already a bright thing by nature), nor to the instruments which wouldn't show anything abnormal or interpretable.

As for obtaining the nuclear warheads, the screenwriters listed and placed on maps the different uranium mines around the world. During their research on mining processes, the screenwriters notably consulted the Encyclopedia Britannica. However, they were particularly interested in biomining: a technique that using bacteria to extract ore from a rock.

But how to counter the villains' plan once Bond would discovers it? "The best way [...] would be for governments to launch a number of rockets armed with an equivalent potency of warheads in explosive power, at a point in space where the comet would be, as soon as possible, and deflect the comet once more off a collision course [...] that will take it back into space safely".

"It may be that the Western nations do not have enough high-yield rockets with warheads at the ready to do the job [...]. They may want to ask the Soviet Union to join them and contribute a rocket or two. The Soviets could be encouraged to do so if a Western government head suggested to Andropov that their calculations indicate that the comet, if it hits earth, will land smack on his favorite vacation spot in the Crimea or Yalta"!

It doesn't appear, however, that a treatment was written based on this idea of hijacking a comet (if so, I don't have one). The filmmakers quickly settled on a plan for the villain that would exploit California's risky geology (a theme already addressed in the 1978' Superman movie where Lex Luthor tries to send nuclear missiles on the San Andreas fault to cause an earthquake) in another way probably considered less fanciful.

- Richard Maibaum[3] : We considered having the master villain Max Zorin manipulate Halley's Comet so that it came crashing down and devastated Silicon Valley. But in the end we decided that was just a little bit too fantastic. So we decided [...] we would have him create an earthquake that would send the Valley into the Pacific instead!

- Michael Wilson[4] : Somebody told me this sounds like Superman. I didn't even remember it. I went back and saw it and yeah, the bad guy had a plot to sink California and turn Las Vegas into beachfront property. Our plot tends to be more realistic. This is something that could almost be done. In other words, once you see this picture, you'll see that it's a little frightening. Everything from a geological standpoint is absolutely true.

Carl and Kitty Willis

On September 6, 1983, Wilson did something exceptional: he wrote two fictitious files (one written from the point of view of MI6/MI5, the other by the Russian secret services) explaining the origins of the villain, a certain Carl Willis, "assuming that Willis is Bond's main adversary" in the film!

We learn in the MI6 file that Willis' past is quite abstract. Born apparently as Karl Speizer in East Germany during the war, he lost his parents at a young age during the conflict. At the age of 20, he and his twin sister Kurstine fled the country for West Germany.

Noticed for their intelligence, they worked in the mail department of a bank in Liechtenstein for a year and a half, before leaving to study in England at the London School of Economics where Karl stands out as an academic genius.

Their shy natures and atypical physique, white-blond hair and each having one eye of a different color (brown and blue), earned them some taunts from classmates comparing them to "aliens". [redacted]. During this period they learn English; Karl gets a doctorate in just 3 years and goes to work in a bank again.

An episode occurred during which one day Karl suddenly had a seizure and destroyed his apartment, which earns him a stay in hospital, but didn't prevent him from being naturalized British citizen with his sister. The twins changed their names to Carl and Kitty Willis.

Carl experienced a meteoric rise in the banking world and moved out in a castle in France, from which he then managed "a vast financial empire mostly of banking and high technology". In addition, he made a big name in the field of champagne, thanks to the exploitation of the castle's vineyard. [redacted].

Carl collected works from the troubled periods of several painters and entered the horse racing community where accusations of cheating took place, but nothing was proven.

Carl recently acquired an oil company called Wildcat Oil which operates in the San Francisco bay area. MI6/MI5 concludes its report to the CIA (which is conducting a routine investigation following this acquisition) by saying that basically nothing suspicious has been found about Carl Willis.

P.H. Hill

SECTION 6

CONFIDENTIAL

MEMO

From: P.H. Hill, Background Analyst MI6
To: H. Dale - Liaison Officer MI5 - Washington, D.C.

Re: Carl Willis
Alias - Karl Speizer

You have requested a background report on CARL WILLIS on behalf of the CIA who are running a routine check on him following the recent acquisition by Willis of "WILDCAT OIL", an oil exploration company presently operating in the San Francisco Bay Area. This is part of the normal investigation by the CIA of any non-resident alien who makes a substantial investment in the area because of the strategic importance of "Silicon Valley" to the military and economic welfare of the United States.

Little is known of the early life of Carl Willis. He was born in East Germany during the war. Both he and his twin sister, Kitty, were orphaned during the second world war and grew up in State School. Their parents are unknown, their birth records were lost or destroyed. They were named Kurstine and Karl Speizer by the state authorities. There is no indication that they are related to the infamous Dr. Speizer.

In the 1960's, the twins managed to escape into West Berlin. Although only twenty years old, the pair, especially Karl, impressed the International Red Cross Refugee Interviewer as intelligent and mature. In a short time the West German government

From: F. Shanko, Leningrad War College
To: Chairman, Supreme Soviet

The Soviet secret service file gives a very different version of the life of the Willis' twins. They are believed to be the result of a Nazi scientific program aimed at creating a perfect generation of Aryan soldiers.

One of the program's scientists, Dr. Eric Speizer, conducted experiments on labor camp prisoners including exposure to radiation, genetic manipulation and insemination of 2,000 "subjects". [redacted]. In the end, only a pair of Siamese twins were born/survived. Their surrogate mother "upon seeing her children and being aware of the other failures of the program, refused to touch the children and committed suicide a few days after their birth".

Through surgery, the Siamese twins were separated and Speizer, frenetic after 2,000 failures, named his creations by his name (and the first names of his two own parents).

At the end of the war, the Russian army stumble on Karl and Kurstine during the liberation of Germany. The twins are transferred to a Russian orphanage where Karl's intelligence manifests; Kurstine is not endowed with the same genius but his brother throwing fits when we try to separate them, it is decided to leave them together.

Meanwhile, Dr. Speizer is judged by the Allies for his war crimes and hanged.

Karl graduated from the University of Dresden at only 14 or 15 years old and continued his studies in economics in Moscow. [redacted]. One day he was informed that his sister has broken her ankle and panicking, he caused such a scene when he arrived at the hospital that security was forced to intervene.

Placed in the psychiatric wing, a certain Dr. Zardoff is particularly intrigued by Karl and discovers that the boy is "a true sociopath driven by a suppressed rage against the rest of mankind". Zardoff tries to treat Karl with hypnosis, drugs and psychotherapy before thinking of using this rage and his intellect for the benefit of the State.

Karl's hate is then directed towards the West, Karl not being able to forgive Westerners for the execution of Dr. Speizer, whom he considered his biological father. Under Zardoff's direction, Karl joined a military school in Leningrad where he was a student and eventually became a professor of economic warfare. His ideas/teachings would lead to the formation of the OPEC (Organization of the Petroleum Exporting Countries)!

He and his sister were then trained at a spy school in Stalingrad [redacted].

At the age of 20, the twins joined West Germany: the year was 1960. There Karl was secretly and implicitly involved in the management of Russian capital in the West: the famous "Eurodollars" passing through the Moscow Narodny Bank Limited! He moves to London and has, as mentioned in the MI6 file, the episode of the crisis in his apartment (crisis caused by the fear that his sister will leave him, specify the Russian file).

After gaining a reputation as a successful capitalist in finance, he acquired high-tech companies and discreetly shared their industrial secrets with the USSR. Through financial manipulation, Willis sufficiently damaged the American dollar and thus caused the end of the Bretton Woods agreements in 1971!

The end of the agreements and the embargo taken by OPEC against the United States in 1973 led to the first oil crisis/shock. [redacted].

The report concludes by saying that Karl Speizer now has an even more ambitious plan in the very heart of the United States, "a social and economic catastrophe so devastating that the U.S. may never recover".

F. Shanko

When Gaddafi was a James Bond villain

A rather surprising undated note gives the broad outlines of the villain's plan, who is this time named Zorn (note that on a draft paper the names Zorb, Zarb, Zorg, Jorn, Troyn were scribbled for our villain). He sells his industrial secrets to the highest bidders.

Where this gets special is that it is written that Zorn is teaming up with Muammar Gaddafi, the leader of Libya "who hates the United States and wants to weaken it anyway he can"! Zorn had once sold to Gaddafi a biomining process for his oil wells and he convinces him that he is able to destroy the Silicon Valley while killing a bunch of Americans with an earthquake followed by a tidal wave. Zorn will be paid (by Gaddafi?!) $1 billion for that.

The plot also revolve around a certain Kronk (an assistant of the Doctor Mengele) who genetically created Zorn and his sister during the Second World War. Kronk hides somewhere in the South America' jungle where he continues his experiments. "Perhaps he is a member of a group of war criminals from various countries, not only Germany, who operate somewhat like Spectre. They call themselves ICHOR, the blood of the Gods. Or perhaps Kali, the Vedic goddess of Vengeance".

Colonel Muammar Gaddafi (1942-2011) whom Ronald Reagan had described as a "mad dog of the Middle East" at the head of a "rogue state" in the early 1980s. One of Reagan's criticisms toward Libya and its leader was their support to the international terrorism. Gaddafi, for his part, regularly criticized the United States for its interference in the internal affairs of other countries, particularly those in the Arab world. A notable incident happened in the Gulf of Sirte in 1981, when Libyan' fighter jets opened fire on American' aircrafts conducting military exercises in international waters near the Libyan coast. (Later in 1986, the American intelligence services accused Libya of being behind the bombing of the West Berlin discotheque which notably killed two American soldiers. In retaliation the United States took economic sanctions and carried out a bombing on Libya in the following days).

Josef Mengele carried out various deadly medical experiments on numerous inmates in the Auschwitz camp. He was particularly interested in identical twins and part of his research was aimed at proving the genetic superiority of the Aryan race. After the war, he fled to South America where, managing to remain hidden, he died in 1979 without ever having been imprisoned for his actions, nor apparently feeling any remorse.

October 26, 1983' treatment: Zorn, Viola Havel and special vintage

Richard Maibaum was officially hired for the film on September 19, 1983, for a total salary of $100,000 or $150,000.

- Michael Wilson[5] : There are four people who participated in creating the story for A View To A Kill: Cubby Broccoli, Richard Maibaum, John Glen and myself. We began by creating several different kinds of plots, which Dick and I worked on together after discussing them with Cubby. Once we had formulated the character of the principal villain and a plot to go with it, we began writing a treatment. And at that stage, we began consulting closely with Cubby and John all along the way.

Cubby and his wife Dana Broccoli (in 1989).

- Cubby Broccoli[6] : My wife [...] is a writer, and very little has ever been said about her contribution to the Bond films, because she's never taken a credit of any kind. Nor have I, as far as that goes, on the writing aspects since we first started. But, without trying to be egotistical, we have contributed tremendously to the pictures' story quality. Dana and I have worked on the stories: when you get ideas at home, you bring them into the office. But she doesn't like to be quoted as being a writer, because there are more writers that contribute the story's final parts.

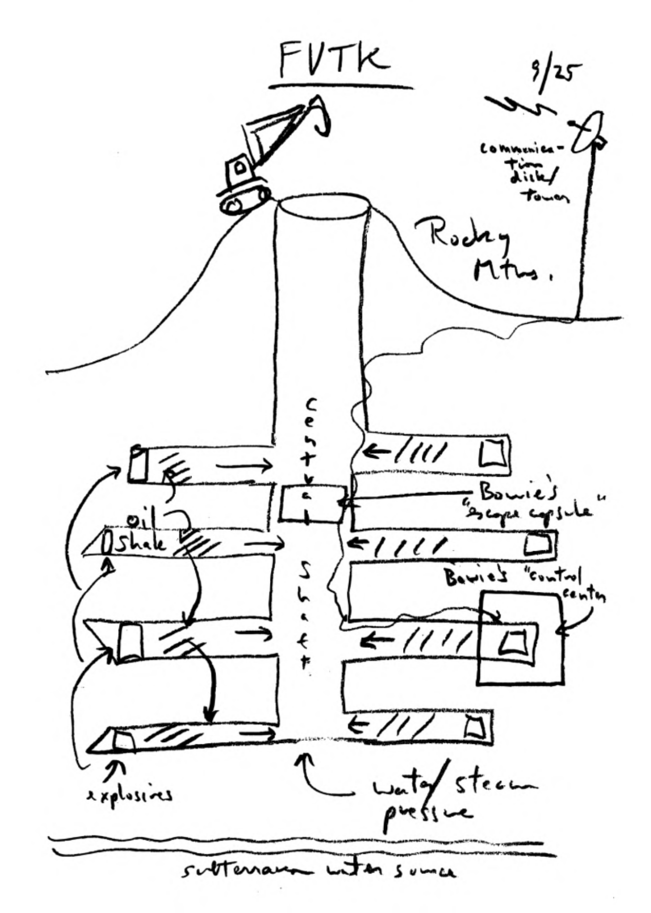
On October 23, 1983, a 27-pages treatment entitled "From a View to a Kill" is completed.

The pre-title sequence is not defined: "perhaps" Bond emerging from the torpedo tube of a submarine to reach the shores of a country like Nicaragua or Grenada. There, he would save a young female agent held in a prison or hiding somewhere following a coup, imagine the screenwriters.

The heart of the story begins after the credits, at Ascot. Bond is there with Moneypenny watching the outcome of a race they bet on. They are joined by a "diminutive [diminished?] ex-jockey" named Tibbett. They discuss Coquelin, the horse Bond had bet on and which surprisingly won the race.

The horse's owner is revealed: Sebastian Zorn, described as "is in his late middle thirties, tall, slender, with classic Nordic-Aryan features, except for his eyes. Only one is blue, the other is brown".

The description is reminiscent of singer/actor David Bowie who is having different colored eyes (see photo on next page). He was approached for the role but turned it down, saying he thought that "for an actor it's probably an interesting thing to do. But I think that for somebody from rock it's more of a clown performance. And I didn't want to spend five months watching my double fall off mountains"[7].



Note the "Bowie" to designate the villain in this drawing made during the writing of the film.

Alongside Zorn is Standing Bull, described as an American Indian with braided hair and formal dress. Zorn is joined by what appears to be his lover, a blonde with very fashionable clothes: Viola Havel. "The fabulous Parisian couturière [seamstress]", comments Moneypenny.

While Moneypenny goes to collect Bond's winnings (he plans to buy her a dinner with it), he and Tibbett go to the stable. There is something about Coquelin that keeps reminding Tibbett of an old horse he had ridden. However, Standing Bull being near the horse, they decide to turn around.

In the next scene Bond is at the jockey club, with M. The latter explains to his agent that industrial processes of Zorn, who have some businesses in the field of high technology (as well as in oil and mining), have leaked outside England. Similar to Drax in the novel Moonraker, Zorn "is considered an industrial asset important to British military and economic interests". Perhaps there is an industrial spy in his organization? When M and Bond meet the manager of the jockey club, we learn that Zorn is also under a discreet investigation for doping in the horse racing community. However, tests on his horses never yielded anything. An investigator named Aubergene is leading an investigation about Zorin's lover, Viola: Bond should perhaps meet him.

In a scene inspired by an idea abandoned during the writing of Moonraker, Bond goes to the restaurant of the Eiffel Tower to speak with Aubergene. The investigator says he have difficulty finding things about the past of Zorn and Viola Havel. Like in the film there is a spectacle with a butterfly attached to a stick and Aubergene is killed by a poisoned butterfly which touches his cheek; he falls into his bowl of soup. A waiter asks what's going on, "there's a fly in his soup" replies 007.

Bond goes after the hooded assassin who ends up jumping from the Eiffel Tower by parachute. 007 doesn't admit defeat, we see him stealing a taxi from the bottom of the tower to pursue the parachutist; however there are no stunts compared to the film.

- (Stuntman) B.J. Worth[8] : One day at lunch I mentioned in passing to Michael Wilson, "I'd love to jump off the Eiffel Tower sometime if you ever wanted this > for a sequence". He said: "Do you think you could get permission?". Four years later Michael called me up and said, "You still interested in jumping off the Eiffel Tower?". I said, "Sure! No problem. Sign me up!".

The parachutist lands on a riverboat; Bond parks, jumps onto it from a bridge and lands with a crash on a dinner party. The chef, who is not happy, slows him down, just enough so that the assassin have time to be picked up by an accomplice by boat. Further on (Bond doesn't see it) the murderer removes his hood: it is Sebastian Zorn and the pilot of the boat is Viola.

Bond go meet M at his office where Tibbett (now described as a "sub-agent") is also present. His boss reprimands him over a bill for the riverboat damage. 007 explains that the French authorities also made him undergo a psychiatric examination. Anyway, M assigns 007 to "Operation Kingping": full investigation onto Zorn to determine if whether or not he had anything to do with Aubergene's death.

Bond, driven by Tibbett (in chauffeur's uniform), arrives in a Rolls-Royce at the Zorn's castle in the Rhone Valley (France). This is a place where there is currently a Havel's fashion show (Zorn also produces champagne in this castle). 007 have the cover of a buyer named Archibald. Viola's stunning models demonstrate her latest clothing line and Bond approaches her, telling her he considers her equal to Dior or Givenchy. Bond seems to be popular with the women present and even to a "rather faggy" man.

Zorn ends up beckoning Viola to join him and tells her that he has seen Bond before but cannot remembers where (at the Eiffel Tower). Bond is amazed by the quality of Zorn's champagne, which he says is as good as a Bollinger 57. How does it is possible, he asks Zorn, who replies "we all have our secrets".

Viola on a white horse comes to present her new jeans: Bond notices a butterfly-shaped logo on them.

Zorn takes his guests to visit his wine cellar; Bond notices a man resembling a scientist (Dr. Mortner) disappearing into a secret passage in the castle. 007 joins Tibbett who, for his part, investigated at castle's stables and witnessed the disappearance of the horse Coquelin, in a scene similar to the film.

Later there is a sort of banquet. At the end of it Zorn joins Bond on the patio and asks him if he is also an expert on horses in addition to being an expert on wine and fashion. Zorn, who now seems to remember where he had seen Bond, also asks him if he knew a certain Aubergene. 007 remains calm and goes to accompany Viola to her room. She kisses him "passionately" before separating from him and closing the door. "Zorn has seen the incident and is visibly effected".

Bond and Tibbett go to investigate near the stable and notice, where Coquelin was, a hidden elevator. In it, they go down to a laboratory, and avoiding Mortner, they discover genetic manipulation/cloning/crossing work on horses and varieties of grapes.

Guards arrive: they have been spotted. A fight takes place in the laboratory with a crash amidst the scientific equipment. At one point Bond projects a guard into an automated grape press: "white wine turns into red". Bond and Tibbett emerge from the secret passageway of the wine cellar when an alarm sounds.

Zorn and Havel go investigate; when Viola returns to her room she finds Bond in her bed. "For once it isn't a girl in his", the screenwriters saw fit to clarify. They sleep together, which enrages Zorn even more.

When 007 returns to his room, however, there is another girl in his bed: one of Zorn's plump guests, whom Bond manages to get rid of without bedding her.

Viola returns to Zorn and calms him down, saying that she slept with Archibald/Bond only to learn more about him and that she hated every second of it. Viola adds that she and Zorn are "unique among all human beings on Earth", unlike Bond. They hug.

The next day, armed guards come to tell Bond that Zorn would like to see him. 007 obeys, telling Tibbett to go wash the Rolls in the meantime (and transmit what they found to M).

While Standing Bull strangles Tibbett in a car wash in a manner similar to the film, Zorn discreetly takes photos of 007 while he chats with him. Just as similar to the film, Zorn learns on his screen that the man in front of him is in fact James Bond, "probably the most effective secret agent in the world".

Viola joins them and Zorn discreetly sticks a needle in the cork of a bottle of champagne before uncorking it in the direction of Bond. The cork hits 007 who then falls unconscious because of the substance that was on the needle.

Zorn and Viola toast with the champagne and go to throw the Rolls with Bond in it into water. 007 manages to escape drowning by using the air contained in the tires, like in the film.

Zorn and Standing Bull have now joined a meeting room where there are around twenty men of different nationalities. Zorn breaks the ice by saying that "those of you who were once associated with the organization known as Spectre, now defunct, will be especially gratified to hear" that James Bond is dead. We discover that all these people (including Zorn) are part of an organization called ICORIE: International Control of Reciprocal Industrial Espionage. Together they finance the acquisition of industrial secrets and share them between them.

Zorn, however, has a new project that will earn them much more than usual: targeting Silicon Valley. He doesn't explain in detail how, he is more busy getting rid of Sam, the (American) member who doesn't want to be part of the operation that will take place on his soil. Like in the film, Sam meets his doom when it is revealed that the meeting took place in an airship. At the end of the meeting, Zorn and Standing Bull join a helipad located on the top of this airship where a helicopter with Viola on board picks them up. From the sky they admire Silicon Valley and there is the dialogue "what a magnificent view", "for a kill".

Meanwhile, Bond aboard a tow truck, brings back the Rolls Royce which took water to Q. "You're still very hard on equipment in the field, Double-O Seven. But I must say you're looking very fit for a corpse". They go to see M: the analysis of Zorn's champagne reveals that it is only distributed by a company in San Francisco.

On the other hand, a drawing of Mortner made by Bond's hand reveals that he is in reality a certain Aschenhaus who was once an assistant of the evil Josef Mengele; together they conducted genetic experiments to create perfect Aryans in a Nazi extermination camp.

After the War, Aschenhaus and Mengele "fled to South America where they set up a jungle lab and tried to continue their work. An Israeli agent who infiltrated it acquired some of their records". Q hand them these Eyes Only files which explain the mysteries surrounding the origins of Zorn and Havel.

> - Michael Wilson[9] : We originally thought since we were in the United States, we would use Felix Leiter. But then we thought, since we would be in San Francisco, in Chinatown, it would be a good idea to use a Chinese/American agent.

In San Francisco, Bond meets a "Chinese [Asian]-American" CIA agent: Li Ti. The latter informs 007 that a Zorn's pumping station is causing problems for crab fishermen who are seeing their catches decrease. When they encounter one of them, Bond asks why they aren't doing anything. "Like organizin' a protest?" asks the fisherman. "Something like that", replies Bond, who says he wants to help them because Bretonne-style stuffed crab is one of his favorite dishes.

So while fishermen are protesting with their boats and signs near the pumping station, Bond in diving gear examines the depths of the pumping station. As in the film, he is sucked towards a propeller and escapes by abandoning his oxygen bottle which gets stuck in the propeller.

007 manages to go back to the fishing boats before being spotted.

One of Zorn's engineers, Marsh, explains to his boss that he needs a tunnel boring machine if he wants the work on their project "Main Chance" complete in time.

At nightfall, Zorn steals a tunnel boring machine from a military depot in Twentynine Palms by lifting it with his airship in a scene described "like something out of Close Encounters of the Third Kind". "(Models and special effects departments: do you[r] best)", we can read.

We move on to the Ferry Building in San Francisco which houses the California Department of Conservation. There a pretty girl in her late twenties, Bonnie Lissom, asks to see a responsible named Mr. Howe (described as looking like James G. Watt, with the same "silly-looking") because she has something important to say him.

Howe doesn't seem to want to see her and is anyway already busy answering questions from Bond who poses as a journalist (cover name: Stock) who tells him that Zorn doesn't pump oil but water. Howe defends Zorn, saying he is good for California's economy.

James G. Watt, United States' Secretary of the Interior from 1981 to 1983, a period when he caused several controversies, particularly because he was perceived as hostile and harmful to the environment. Watt notably opened part of American coastal waters to oil and gas drilling. In 1982 he proposed leasing a large tract of land off the coast of California to oil and gas drillers. He resigned on October 9, 1983.

007 leaves and is approached outside by Bonnie who had listened his conversation with Howe. They go to the bar Tommy's Joynt where they drink a beer (not for product placement reasons like it is nowadays: the writers were simply interested in the decor of the place, containing a collection of beer bottles from all over the world). Bonnie tells Bond that she is a geologist who tried to warn Howe about the increasing seismic activity near

The Avenue
www.theavenuesf.com
415 776 800
TOMMY'S JOYNT
SAN FRANCISCO LANDMARK
SPORTS SATELLITE TV
FOOD & BEVERAGE CO.
OPEN UNTIL 2
WORLD FAMOUS
MY'S JOYNT
NDWICHES
OCKTAILS

Zorn's pits/mines around the San Andreas Fault. If Zorn really pumps water like Bond told Howe, it could get worse.

> - Michael Wilson[10] : The plot is theoretically practical. We came up with this idea of causing a huge earthquake that would sink Silicon Valley and flood it. The actual mechanism for causing earthquakes was not that far-fetched. It was based on a study done in Oklahoma. One of the ways to reclaim oil from exhausted oil fields is to pump water down into the oil wells. So we though, if we start pumping water into Silicon Valley, it could trigger an earthquake in one of the most earthquake-prone zones in the entire world. It was very Bondian.

Bonnie and Bond decide to travel to the epicenter of a recent earthquake: an old, abandoned warehouse in the countryside. The basement is flooded with salt water: this proves that Zorn's pumping activities are seismically dangerous.

Bond and Bonnie get closer and decide to kiss (...even though they have only just met) when suddenly the dilapidated building begins to collapse on top of them (...by pure coincidence). They manage to get out just in time.

Referring to the kiss they had, Bonnie says, "you made the earth move!" (pun intended: make the earth move meaning good sexual experience).

Bonnie then goes to explain the situation to Howe but gets fired by him.

Bond and Bonnie then join Li Ti at a Chinatown restaurant during "Gay Halloween" (Halloween in the Castro). The CIA agent explains to them that he has tracked shipments of champagne cases to a mine near a ghost town called Last Chance. Outside the restaurant, a man dressed as a grim reaper observes them through the bay window: under his mask he has different colored eyes.

When Li Ti comes out and walks away from the restaurant, Zorn kills him with his scythe with the help of Viola disguised as a fairy godmother.

Halloween on Castro street in the late 1970s.

Bond and Bonnie come out in turn and the reaper is ready to fall on them when 007 recognizes Zorn's eyes. He dodges the scythe blow and fights against Zorn but Standing Bull disguised as a pumpkin head joins the fight. Zorn takes the opportunity to flee and our heroes do the same: putting on costumes, Standing Bull loses them in the crowd.

Later that night, Bond and Bonnie decide to search Howe's office at the Ferry Building. Arriving there, they find Howe who seems dead: "the Grim Reaper's been here", comments 007. Speaking of Zorn, he suddenly enters "nonchalantly" whistling "perhaps" Lili Marleen (a song that was particularly popular in the Nazi Germany):

> - Zorn: Good evening, Mr. Bond. I'm delighted to see you again.
> - Bond: The feeling is mutual, Mr. Zorn.

> - Zorn: I Suggest you let me have that [pointing at the gun in 007's hand], James. And please call me Sebastian. We have a great deal in common.
> - Bond: I'm afraid not. You have very little in common with anyone, except perhaps Viola Ravel.

007 wonders why Zorn is so confident and notices that Standing Bull, who was hiding, has captured Bonnie with one hand and is holding a tomahawk in the other.

Bond then gives his gun to Zorn who explains to him, similar to the film, that he is going to kill them in a fire which will pass as revenge on their part towards Howe who had fired Bonnie.

Zorn grabs a fire extinguisher which actually contains flammable liquid and begins to spread it while 007 tries to provoke him by telling him in particular that he was "conceived in a test tube". Zorn replies that the little one which was born in a test tube will however cause tomorrow "the greatest natural disaster in the history of mankind".

Zorn and Standing Bull leave the Ferry Building in a helicopter while Bond and Bonnie are trapped in by the flames. Bond retrieves the tomahawk (which Standing Bull had left behind) to join the next room where Bonnie is, load her on his shoulders, and exits the building the way they entered.

Bonnie and Bond go to a motel where they eventually make love. The next morning as they try to figure out Zorn's plan, they notice that a total solar eclipse is predicted for the day; 007 makes a call.

Bond and the girl go toward the mine near the ghost town that Li Ti had mentioned earlier. In the surrounding area they notice trucks carrying bags of crystalline powder.

Our heroes reach the ghost town on horses and go to the saloon which turns out to still be active. Inside there is Q dressed as a cowboy; Bond makes the introductions. 007 shows him a sample of the crystalline substance: explosives, Q tells him.

Bond and Bonnie decide to go to the mine but they are greeted by gunfire as they exit the saloon. Q gives 007 a revolver and there's "a classic old time western gun battle" described as improvable. Bond and Bonnie manage to escape on horses while Q is captured.

They manage to enter the perimeter of the mine and steal miner's clothing: they hide in a minecart to progress further into the heart of Zorn's operation. They see in holes dug by the tunnel boring machine the crystalline powder being mixed with bacteria contained in champagne bottles.

The puzzle becomes clear in Bonnie and Bond's heads: Zorn is going to detonate explosives in the San Andreas Fault which will cause a chain reaction leading to a massive earthquake and a sort of tsunami, amplified by the effect of tide created by the eclipse. Millions of people will die and Silicon Valley will be destroyed.

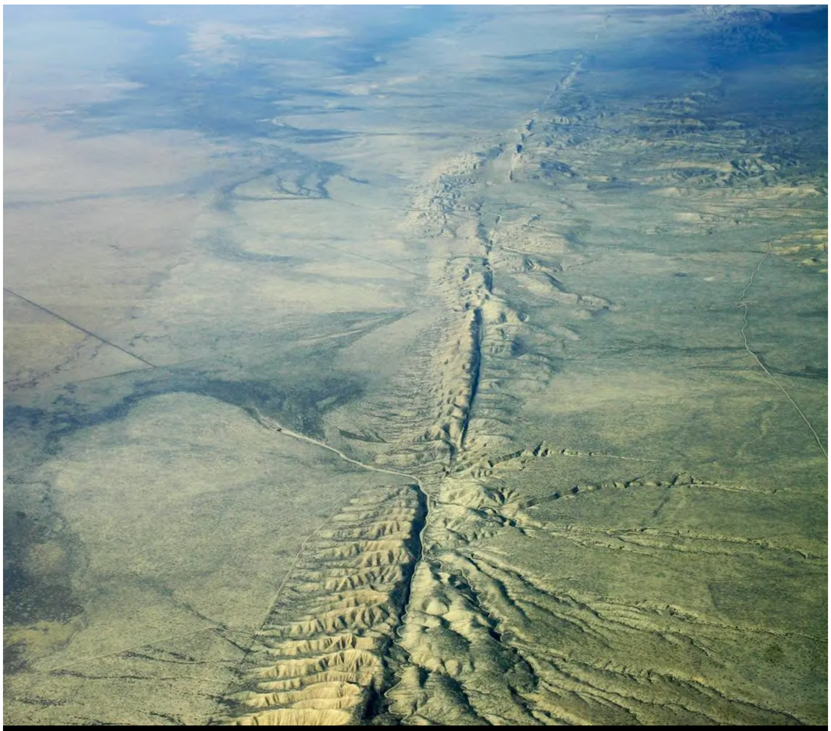
To prevent this, Bond tries to sabotage Zorn's detonator cables. From his airship, Zorn notices that his detonator have a problem and contact Marsh, who spots Bond and Bonnie and sends guards to them. While fleeing through the mine tunnels, Bond falls down a water-filled precipice while Bonnie is captured. She is attached with Q near a pile of explosives.

Bond manages to find an exit from the mine and sees the airship gaining height. He clings to the mooring cable, pulls it up and manages to enter the airship. Inside he comes across Standing Bull who attacks him with a tomahawk. The Native American miss 007 and his tomahawk crashes into the auxiliary balloon which begins to deflate, sending Standing Bull flying out of combat.



The San Andreas Fault.

The jolt of the airship losing altitude also sends Zorn and Viola flying away from the detonator. As 007 sees Zorn crawling towards the detonator; he decides to break the tip of an oxygen bottle and flee to the helipad at the top of the airship and jump. Bond arrives there just in time as a spark ignites the oxygen and the airship explodes "like the Hindenburg" with the bad guys inside during the eclipse in background. 007 land into a lake.

Later Bond leads the authorities to the mine; we discover that Q and Bonnie are fleeing the mine in the tunnel boring machine.

In the finale, dignitaries, including the President of the United States himself, are in Silicon Valley to present Bond and Bonnie with a medal. However our heroes are not there, they are somewhere else in a bed. Bond confides to the girl that he is not a journalist named Stock but Bond, James Bond 007. She suspected it.

The Zeppelin Hindenburg, one of the largest airships in existence and infamous for its 1937' accident that led to its destruction (and consequently the decline of transatlantic transport by airship).

November 1983: Adam Geist, May Day, Mexico, western and MARS

After the October 26' treatment which already contained the essence of the film, the screenwriters will however begin to write others treatments, moving away from this initial concept on various points... Before returning to it little by little. It begins with a treatment from November 9, 1983 by Maibaum and Wilson, of which I unfortunately don't have all the pages.

The pre-title sequence is still dissolving at the Ascot racecourse where the horse Coquelin has been renamed Cortez and more importantly: Sebastian Zorn is now called Adam Geist! While this may not seem like a step in the direction of the film, we note that, on the other hand, Viola Havel and Standing Bull have been merged into one single character: May Day described as "a tallish but shapely girl fashionably dressed. [...] She is Geist's muscle gal bodyguard, physical therapist, sex object... And killer". "(Or perhaps her name is Mai Dai and she is an Oriental)", it is envisioned.

007 joins M at the Jockey Club and learns that the CIA is asking them to investigate Geist because he is on a project involving oil in California. The United States suspects Geist of having previously done business with Iran during an oil embargo against that country and wants to make sure.

[I am missing pages (normally containing the Eiffel Tower scenes; here it is May Day and not Geist himself who kills Aubergene)].

On another page, M tells Bond that Adam Geist is also suspected of having smuggled Exocet missiles to Argentina in one of his tankers, before the Falklands War.

Geist apparently holds his annual horse sale at his ranch, which is in Mexico. Bond and Tibbett should go there. Before leaving however, M wants 007 to visit a Scottish Lord named Rumsford (the writers originally considered to name him MacConahy or Mumsley). The man looks like Bond and occasionally buys horses for his fox hunting trips: it could be a good cover for 007 to pretend to be him.

Bond therefore goes to Scotland to meet this Lord at his home. Rumsford says he will teach Bond "'all about hunting, from a view to a kill".

We later find Bond, under the cover of Lord Rumsford, near Acapulco in a Rolls Royce with Tibbett, disguised as his driver/valet. They arrive at Geist's "Rancho Del Sombra". The place is described as an impressive ranch surrounded by a huge patio and other structures for staff, guests, stables and a practice ring.

> - Michael G. Wilson[11] : The horse racing in the film was included because Cubby was interested in breeding and racing horses at that time; and he had quite a stable himself.

An (unnamed) girl of escaramuza charra (Mexican female sports game, close to rodeo) brings Bond to Geist. 007 asks the latter "what [horses] have you got that won't cost me the family jewels?". Geist replies that his trainer will advise him. May Day sees Bond but still can't remember where she saw him.

In the evening there is a barbecue with a pig on the spit and mariachis. Bond tries to reject the advances of a plump American woman named Miss Potter (it was previously considered to name her Miss Cowley). Geist introduces 007 to his "breeding consultant", a septuagenarian named Mortner who tells him that genetics are the key to success in this field. Geist cuts the discussion short.

There is a demonstration of charrería and Bond sees a certain Bud Conley whom he will meet again later in the story.

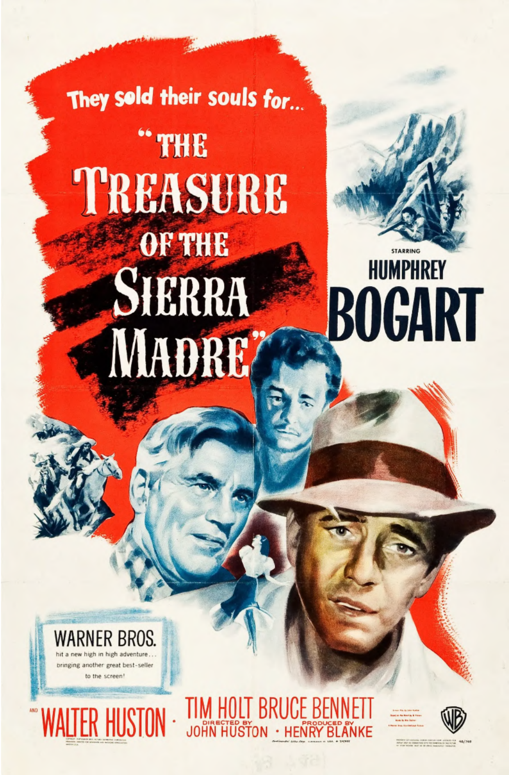
Later Bond and Tibbett of course find the genetic laboratory for horses. And since this section of the treatment no longer takes place in France, the villain is no longer a champagne producer (he does however produce something supposed to be a sort of sealant).

Guards arrive, Bond and Tibbett attack them and an alarm is sounded. May Day and Geist go to investigate but Bond has already left the laboratory and is in Geist's room, photographing with his ring a diary containing a date and the word "Starfire".

May Day finds 007 in her room; she undresses and we see her magnificent very muscular body which impresses Bond. They go bed together.

Further on, going out into the corridor, Bond sees Miss Potter approaching him in her nightie. 007 rushes to his own room before she comes in and "locks [the] door and bolts it"!

May Day finally remembers seeing Bond at the Eiffel Tower and informs Geist about it. He discreetly photographs Bond in his office and offers him to come with him to a fox hunt while Tibbett goes to wash the car and finds his death (not in a car wash but in the middle of a herd of cows).



They sold their souls for...
"THE TREASURE OF THE SIERRA MADRE" STARRING HUMPHREY BOGART
WARNER BROS.
hit a new high in high adventure... bringing another great best-seller to the screen!
WALTER HUSTON
TIM HOLT BRUCE BENNETT DIRECTED BY JOHN HUSTON PRODUCED BY HENRY BLANKE

Geist says he's sorry, he have to leave because an emergency has arisen in his business. He leaves Bond in the company of his "hunt master", Pancho, described as "a swarthy crafty-looking Mexican bandit type straight out of [The] Treasure of the Sierra Madre". Other Mexicans of the same type join them.

They go hunting on horseback and there is another reference to the 1948' film in dialogue like this:

- Bond: [What are we hunting?]
- Pancho: [Whatever the dog flushes out. Sometimes a fox, sometimes a coyote.]
- Bond: A badger?
- Pancho: We don't need no stinkin' badgers.

The Treasure of the Sierra Madre : this Mexican bandit tries to convince the heroes that he and his companions are Federales:
- If you're the police, where are your badges?
- Badges? We ain't got no badges. We don't need no badges. I don't have to show you any stinkin' badges!

As things progress, it becomes clear to Bond that he is in fact the prey. The other riders start to bump into him, unfastening his saddle (Bond continues to ride without it). The Mexicans shoot in the air: Bond's frightened horse dismount him and 007 falls into a cliff where he slows his fall by trying to hold onto the vegetation. Bond finds himself at the foot of an old abandoned mine.

Bond draws his gun but Pancho does "the old Zorro bit" to disarm him with a lasso.

Pancho tells him that it's nothing personal but that he's gonna to kill him: orders from the boss. 007 tries to buy time by saying he is rich and that they could ask for a ransom rather than killing him. Bond overpowers two of the Mexicans who approach him and dives into an old wagon which takes him down to an abandoned town. He takes refuge in a barn and unhorses a man with a lasso.

Pancho have an idea: lock Bond in the barn and burn it. Before they could do that, Bond leapt out of the barn on the man's (that he had unhorsed) horse.

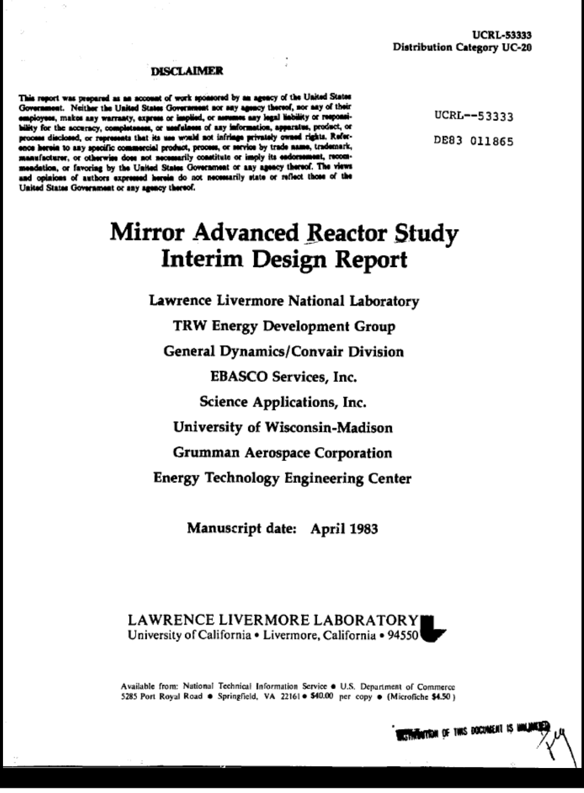
[There are pages missing].

There is a meeting (in a skyscraper) between Geist and other men who are in the oil business. Of course, the members of this assembly don't like alternative energy sources because it means less profit for them. Geist tells them about a new project in development that he sees as a threat: Lawrence, a laboratory near San Francisco in Berkeley, is creating a new form of clean energy: a fusion reactor, MARS (Mirror Advanced Reactor Study).

At the time this treatment was written, the real Lawrence Livermore National Laboratory was conducting experiments on the concept of magnetic mirror: a nuclear fusion device used in some fusion reactors to trap high-temperature plasma using magnetic fields.

A document from April 1983 of 559 pages named "Mirror Advanced Reactor Study: interim design report" was written by the laboratory. (Note that there is another Lawrence laboratory in Berkeley as mentioned by the screenwriters, but it is apparently the Livermore one which was leading the project in reality). I don't have the scientific skills to understand and appreciate even a tenth of this document, but this part of the introduction seems interesting to me to quote:

"The Mirror Advanced Reactor Study (MARS) is a major two-year study [for the creation] of a commercial tandem mirror reactor, conducted by the Lawrence Livermore National Laboratory (LLNL) for the U.S. Department of Energy [...]. The main objectives of MARS are:



UCRL-53333
Distribution Category UC-20

DISCLAIMER

This report was prepared as an account of work sponsored by an agency of the United States Government. Neither the United States Government nor any agency thereof, nor any of their employees, makes any warranty, express or implied, or assumes any legal liability or responsibility for the accuracy, completeness, or usefulness of any information, apparatus, product, or process disclosed, or represents that its use would not infringe privately owned rights. Reference herein to any specific commercial product, process, or service by trade name, trademark, manufacturer, or otherwise does not necessarily constitute or imply its endorsement, recommendation, or favoring by the United States Government or any agency thereof. The views and opinions of authors expressed herein do not necessarily state or reflect those of the United States Government or any agency thereof.

UCRL--53333
DE83 011865

Mirror Advanced Reactor Study
Interim Design Report

Lawrence Livermore National Laboratory
TRW Energy Development Group
General Dynamics/Convair Division
EBASCO Services, Inc.
Science Applications, Inc.
University of Wisconsin-Madison
Grumman Aerospace Corporation
Energy Technology Engineering Center

Manuscript date: April 1983

LAWRENCE LIVERMORE LABORATORY
University of California • Livermore, California • 94550

Available from: National Technical Information Service • U.S. Department of Commerce
5285 Port Royal Road • Springfield, VA 22161 • $40.00 per copy • (Microfiche $4.50)

DISTRIBUTION OF THIS DOCUMENT IS UNLIMITED

(1) to design an attractive fusion reactor producing electricity and synfuels in a tenth-of-a-kind commercial stage of development; (2) to identify key development and technology needs for the commercial tandem mirror reactor and its forerunner, the Fusion Power Demonstration reactor (FPD); and (3) to exploit the potential of fusion for safety, low activation, and simple disposal of radioactive waste.

Currently at the midpoint of this study, we describe the general characteristics of the MARS reactor; however, some design trade studies are still being explored. Many MARS features have been part of past [magnetic] mirror experiments or can be tested in the near-term mirror facilities such as TARA, the Tandem Mirror facility at MIT, TMX-U, the Tandem Mirror Experiment-Upgrade at LLNL, and MFTF-B, the Magnetic Fusion Test Facility at LLNL".

It appears that Lawrence Livermore National Laboratory abandoned its magnetic mirror experiments in 1986, due to insufficient funds[12].

1-2

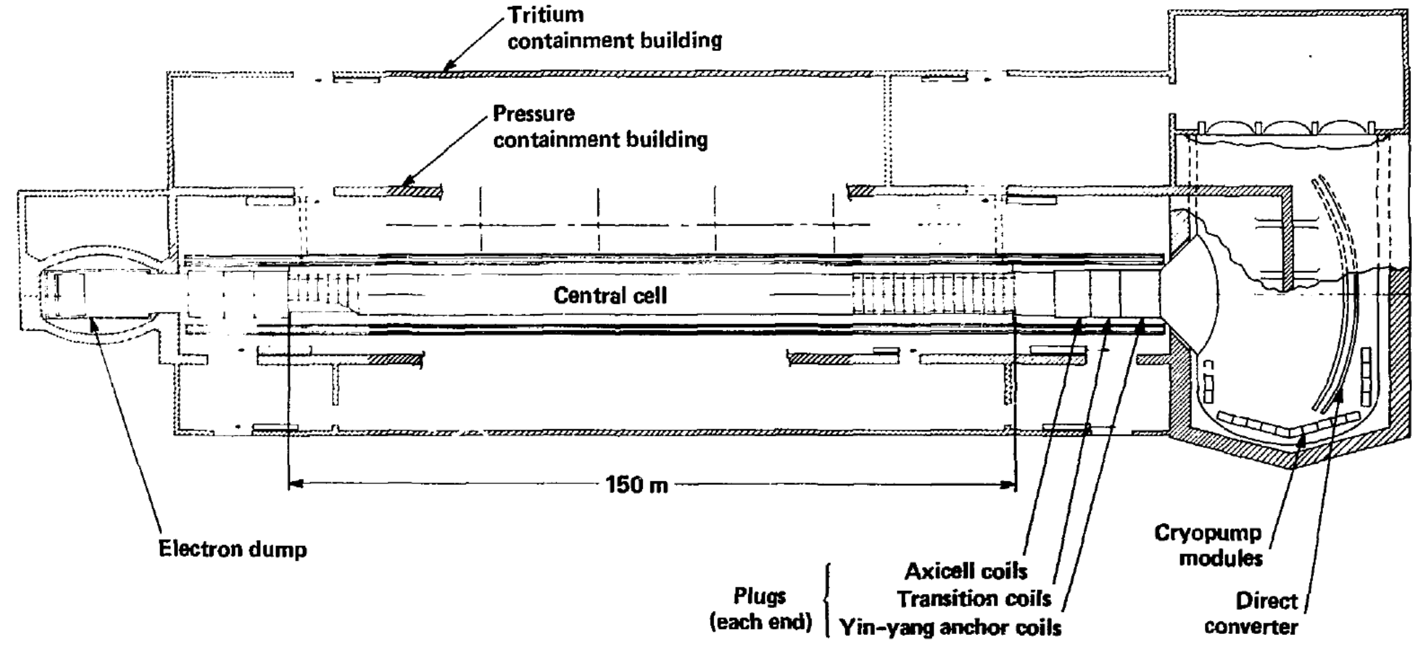


Fig. 1.1-1. MARS reactor design.

Geist asks his guests for money, in exchange for which he will sabotage MARS before it become operational:

> - A man: That is wishful thinking. Any interference would only cause [simple] postponements.

- Geist: Not if it caused a disaster of such dimensions it would be followed by a wide-spread outcry to discontinue the production of fusion energy. Such a psychological climate would not be difficult to achieve. Witness the freeze on new nuclear atomic plants [constructions] after the Three Mile Island episode.

In the next scene, a hearse arrives at MI6 at night. A tearful Q assistant tells him that Bond has arrived... Q opens the coffin: no one. The undertaker turns out to be Bond, who then says to Q: "You didn't expect me to come all the way from Mexico in a coffin, did you?".

They pass through Q's laboratory to join M and other members of MI6. During their meeting it is said that the sealant Geist produce turns out to be a chemical substance/bacteria used for mining and that Mortner is a wanted Nazi war criminal.

The nuclear accident at Three Mile Island (United States) in 1979 caused the release into the environment of a certain quantity of radioactivity following a partial meltdown of the reactor core. As with Chernobyl a few years later, public opinion became aware that nuclear accidents constituted a real risk and new regulations were decreed for the nuclear industry. Three Mile Island led the United States to abandon the construction of new nuclear power plants (a doctrine that lasted nearly 30 years).

I don't have the complete rest of this treatment, but some pages are similar to those that will be covered in the next chapter.

We can notably find in the article "Microbial Mining" about biomining published in the issue #247 (1982) of magazine Scientific American (that the screenwriters had read): "It seems probable that at some time in the future, genetic manipulation may produce leaching microorganisms with highly desirable characteristics". (In a memo, we can note that the screenwriters wrote they were interested in a genetically generated bacteria for biomining which would left explosives residues).

Also note that while Zorn produced champagne with genetically modified grapes in the previous treatment, the screenwriters had also read articles in the press about GMO crops/food.

December 15, 1983' treatment: Zorin, drone-pigeon, AMC and firefighters

John Glen on the Golden Gate.

One of the signatures of director John Glen in his films is the presence of birds which fright Bond and the spectators, as when he climbs St Cyril in For Your Eyes Only, when he infiltrates Whitaker's villa in The Living Daylights or when he rappels down to plant explosives in front of Sanchez's casino windows in Licence to Kill.

- John Glen[13] : Alfred Hitchcock always used to do a personal appearance on his films. I always used to use my little signature which was a pigeon. When someone asks me why I used a pigeon I always said "well they are available anywhere in the world and they're cheap". They all look alike!

On November 29, 1983, the director wrote a scene in which Bond uses a gadget which is a kind of remote-controlled pigeon to place it on the chimney ledge of the villain's ranch. Through a microphone contained in the pigeon, Bond is able to eavesdrop on Geist having a meeting with an "international crime syndicate" assembly.

However the joy is only short-lived: a suspicious guard outside shoots the pigeon whose debris falls into the chimney. Geist warns his security and a hunt for the intruder is carried out in the surroundings of the ranch with dogs.

Bond sprays himself with anti-dog spray to mask his smell and while trying to escape, he comes across a Russian who was also spying on the meeting with a sort of parable. He fights with him. The Russian ends up sending Bond flying (into a bush). The Dobermans catch the Russian and he is captured. Geist then orders his dogs to kill the Russian.

On December 15, 1983, Richard Maibaum and Michael Wilson incorporated this and other suggestions from John Glen into a "second draft" treatment of a 54-pages for "From a View to a Kill".

Although the pre-title sequence is still not entirely defined, it has evolved since October. Bond still arrives in a foreign country and completes a "mission (to be devised)" with the help of a female local resistance fighter. They are chased and come across a KGB agent similar to Bond: Tola. Bond gains the upper hand and lets Tola go, alive, saying he have no specific orders to kill him. Tola thanks 007, tells him until next time and leaves.

Bond and the girl are not out of danger however, they are still being chased by other guys. The writers say that maybe Bond and the girl each ride on motorized surfboards capable of reaching 50 km/h. Enemies pursue them in boats in the crowded harbor; surfboards have better maneuverability while boats tend to crash. The girl jumps off her board before crashing, Bond turns around to pick her up on his, and the pre-title end as they join the submarine that brought Bond to the island.

At Ascot we see that Adam Geist has been renamed in Max Zorin. 007 asks M why he is interested in Zorin and the latter now explains that the Russians obtained technological secrets after Zorin bought a company that had contracts with the British government.

As Bond and Tibbett go to check on Cortez as he reminds Tibbett of another horse, they witness an "almost superhuman display of strength" when they see May Day calming/controlling the horse.

Bond goes to meet M who demand him to go speak to Aubergene in Paris. If you're wondering if this character's name is a reference to Agatha Christie, the answer is yes: Aubergene is described black-on-white in this treatment as "a dapper Hercule Poirot type". (If you still don't have the reference: poireau is the french word for "leek", while aubergine mean "eggplant" in french).

After the usual scenes in Paris, M remonstrates 007 because of the damage he caused and gives him the mission to investigate Zorin further. He explains that Zorin's past before he arrived from East Germany 15 years ago is vague.

Bond and Tibbett still have to go to a ranch near Acapulco where Zorin have his horse sale. Before this, 007 visits Lord Angus Mumsford (with an M instead of an R at the beginning) whom M describes as a "friend" of his in addition to an occasional horse buyer who is physically close to Bond.

Bond therefore goes to Scotland to meet this Lord with whom he then hunts foxes; Bond is thrown off his horse and ends up in the mud as Mumsford laughs. This character indeed resembles Bond and have "a pronounced Scotch accent [...]. Like you know who" (Sean Connery?) we are told.

As they return from hunting, a groom sings D'ye and John Peel?, an old hunting song (that perhaps inspired Ian Fleming) which notably contains the lyrics "From a find to a check, from a check to a view, from a view to a kill in the morning"! Before Bond leaves, Mumsford tells him that he should do something about his clothes: "I wouldn't be caught dead in 'em".

At the Acapulco airport, Bond, under the cover of Lord Mumsford, is greeted by a fifty-year-old Mexican named Pancho Fernando Ruy Herrera who offers him a ride in his Volkswagen "thing" to take him to his boss's ranch. No thanks, Bond replies with a Scottish accent and showing him Tibbett unloading a Rolls Royce from the plane.

They arrive at the hacienda where Zorin breed his horses and are greeted by "Betty" Flex, "one of four muscle girls" who constitutes the guard commanded by May Day (the other three are not named). (Note that there there is no mention of charrería anymore in this treatment).

Flex brings Bond to Zorin who says he is happy to see him; Zorin discreetly tests Bond on his knowledge on horses and 007 succeeds. Bond is then approached by a plump American girl in her fifties named Susie Potter, who knew Mumsford and say to him that she is happy to see him again after all these years. As Bond fears she'll blow his cover, he says the drink he is holding has confused his ability to remember her; Zorin comes to them and makes introductions.

Bond walks away from her by following Zorin to the stables.

That evening at the barbecue, Zorin introduces "Carl" Mortner to Bond. Miss Potter, who is rather hot, slips her room key to Bond as she passes by him: he throws it into a cactus pot.

Bond approaches May Day and tries to flirt with her, but she displays great coldness. However, she agrees to let him take her back to her room where she suddenly jumps on him and gives him a hickey... Before instantly entering her room and closing the door in his face.

Later, as in the previous treatment, Bond and Tibbett go to investigate the stables and find the genetic laboratory. It only concerns horses in this treatment (no more biomining process). While searching, Bond discovers that Mortner have a sample labeled "Lord Mumsford": May Day retrieved his DNA when she gave him a hickey.

Guards arrive, a fight in the laboratory ensue, then Bond photographs a document on which "Graystones" is written.

May Day finds Bond in her bed. As she joins him there, the treatment tells us that 007 have "his things-I-do-for-England expression". Then there's the interlude with Miss Potter, Bond lock his room before she approaches him, before leaning against the door, "exhaustedly".

Zorin discreetly photographs Bond and takes him for a horseback ride (not to hunt) while Tibbett dies (in a car wash). Zorin apologizes because he have business to attend. He leaves Bond in the company of Pancho and four other Mexicans who look like western movies bandits. Zorin presses a remote control and Bond's horse gets excited because the saddle is electrified. Pursued, Bond dismantles the saddle and tries to jump a wall with the horse but falls from his mount.

He then runs towards a ghost town but is caught by Pancho and his friends. There are the scenes from the previous version of the treatment and Pancho thinks of locking Bond in the barn before burning it. However, Bond jumps out on a horse but doesn't go far: he and his nag are shot. Bond, wounded in the arm, grabs a rifle from the saddle and takes refuge in an abandoned saloon. The Mexicans follow his blood trails on the ground; there are five or six of them and Bond only has two cartridges.

Inside the saloon Bond has created a trap; he strapped the rifle on a table toward a door and tied a curtain cord between the gun's trigger and the door handle. A kick is given in the door: bang! A Mexican falls over the railing and his body ends up in the bar below. From the window, Bond jumps on a Mexican located outside. The other men think he is still in the saloon.

Bond, now wearing the boots and sombrero of the Mexican he had jumped on, enters the saloon through the swinging doors, knocks out a Mexican and points a revolver at Pancho.

> - Pancho: You have been in Mexico before.
> - Bond: Never, but I've seen a lot of westerns.

Holding them at gunpoint, Bond brings the Mexicans into the streets of the ghost town. 007 hears a car approaching behind him: the Rolls; he thinks it's Tibbett who driving it. However it is May Day and Zorin who get out of the car, the latter holding a bottle of champagne. "Bollinger '68, Mr. Bond, one of your favorite vintages, I believe". As in the previous treatment, Zorin pops the champagne cork (that contains a needle) on Bond. The Rolls is put into the water and Bond escapes, thanks to the air in the tires.

Thinking that Bond is dead, Zorin and his accomplices go to an art gallery on Paseo de la Reforma, Mexico City. They are joined there by General Gogol of the KGB and two of his men: Tola (from the pre-title) and a certain Klotkoff. We learn that Zorin is a top KGB agent and the general is afraid that his recent activities will draw attention to ongoing Russian operations. Zorin says he's leaving the KGB; the scene is very similar to the film with Klotkoff who retorts that he is only a laboratory experiment, May Day who lifts him up and Gogol who says "you will come back to us, comrade" as he leaves.

Bond joins (without the hearse/coffin element) the British ambassador's yacht in Acapulco, where there is M, Bill Tanner, a minister and Q. Mortner and Zorin's past is explained; it is added that his origins make Zorin someone with a great intelligence. It is also said that "Graystones" is Zorin's well-guarded villa in San Francisco. Q gives 007 a product so he can take care of Zorin's guard dogs and another currently unidentifiable gadget.

We find Bond observing the Zorin's villa through binoculars; he unboxes Q's gadget which turns out to be a sort of remote-controlled "tiny drone" in the shape of a pigeon (with flapping wings). Inside the villa Zorin is giving a conference to his associates. They all got rich thanks to oil, says Zorin, but there is a problem: the MARS fusion reactor project.

Taking advantage of the sound of a helicopter nearby, Bond places the pigeon drone on the edge of the villa's fireplace and presses a button which causes a wired microphone to come out of the "animal's" beak and go into the fireplace to listen to what is being said in the conference room bellow.

Zorin explains that they must sabotage MARS (Bond having missed the beginning of the meeting, he doesn't know what MARS is) before it become operational (and affects the profits of the oil industry of which they are members). It has to look like a natural accident and it has to be terrible enough that any idea of redeveloping a similar project would be abandoned. This is what Zorin calls the Operation Main Chance.

Meanwhile outside the conference room several things are happening. Bond spots Klotkoff in the distance listening to the meeting with a satellite dish-shaped device; a real pigeon who has landed near the drone try to mate/breed with it, and a guard became suspicious at the sight of the motionless pigeon. The guard shoots the pigeon-drone and in the meeting room Zorin and his associates see what fell down the chimney.

The guards are alerted and the Dobermans are released to find the intruder: Bond and Klotkoff decamp and end up crossing paths. Klotkoff thinking that Bond is one of Zorin's guards attacks him, Bond defends himself: "they are both trained and expert in all the martial arts disciplines. Every move one man makes is instantly countered properly by the other". The dogs arrive, Bond sprays himself with Q's product: the Dobermans only attack Klotkoff who is captured while Bond manages to flee. Klotkoff tries to escape but May Day and her girls catch up with him: we don't see what they do to him but the body of the Russian, his neck broken, falls near Bond who is hidden in a bush.

007 then goes to meet CIA agent Li Ti who tells him about the problem of crab fishermen near the Zorin pumping station. Bond therefore infiltrates the place with diving gear and when he flees after having abandoned the oxygen tank, a Zorin boat spots him. 007 quickly boards one of the fishermen's boat; Li Ti and fishermen help Bond by throwing a fishing net at Zorin's men.

Marsh was renamed Conley (on pages from December 20 his name was Connelly) and there is no longer any mention to a tunnel boring machine in this treatment.

FOR THE WET

FOR THE WHITE

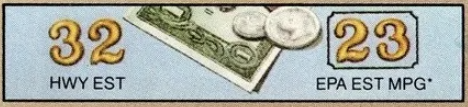
FOR THE WINDING

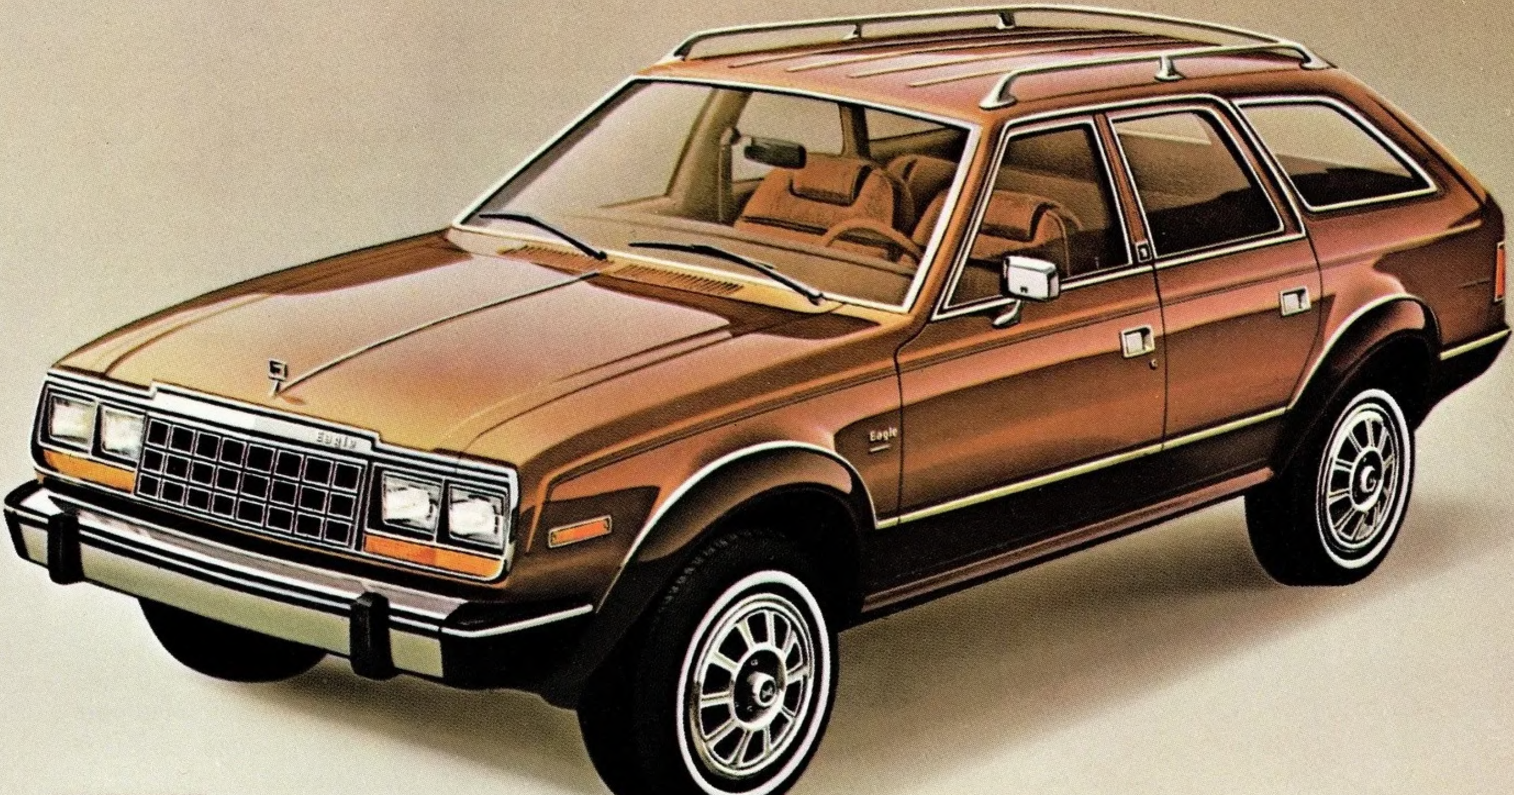
FOR THE WILD

FOR THE WARM

FOR THE WEEKEND

FOR THE WALLET





W is for Eagle Wagon. And for the wherever. Because Eagle is the only automobile in the world that lets you go from 2-wheel drive to full-time 4-wheel drive at the flick of a switch. 2-wheel drive for high mileage on the highway. 4-wheel drive for worry-free traction and security when the roads weave, the weather worsens, or when you just want to wander where there is no road.

And Eagle's well-appointed interior makes the going all the more wonderful. Why not see the 1983 Eagle Wagon today. Wherever you're going, whatever the weather, it'll fit you to a W.

SAFETY IS A SNAP

The 2-wheel/4-wheel drive EAGLE

FROM AMERICAN MOTORS

*Optional 5-speed stick. Use these figures for comparison. Your results may differ due to driving speed, weather conditions and trip length. Highway and California figures lower.

In the following scenes Bond meets Howe at the Ferris Building. Bonnie Lissom then approaches him in the street; unlike the previous treatment she doesn't offer him a beer but asks for his contact details (supposedly so that Howe can contact him).

So later when Bond leaves his hotel, she approaches him again at the wheel of her AMC Eagle Wagon. She offers to drop him off, he accepts and climb in her car.

Suddenly on the road they are chased by "Hell's Angels"'s bikers. While trying to lose them, Bonnie crashes her car into a lamp post. 007 and the girl then flee on foot towards a subway station, the bikers follow them and there is a hand-to-hand fight between them and Bond in the subway metro.

(Michael Wilson and John Glen had also imagined an additional scene on December 12 in which, after that, two other bikers are waiting for them at the next station. There is then a chase through the subway tunnels to a bridge, before Bond and Bonnie jump off the bridge onto the roof of a moving metro to escape them. This scene was abandoned in this 15 December treatment).

Later, after getting rid of them, Bonnie reveals to Bond that she is a geologist and tells him about the seismic activity that is intensifying near Zorin's activities. She says she have a cat and a canary who are susceptible to earthquakes because of the magnetite in their brains.

The Man Who Predicts Earthquakes Earthquake Prediction

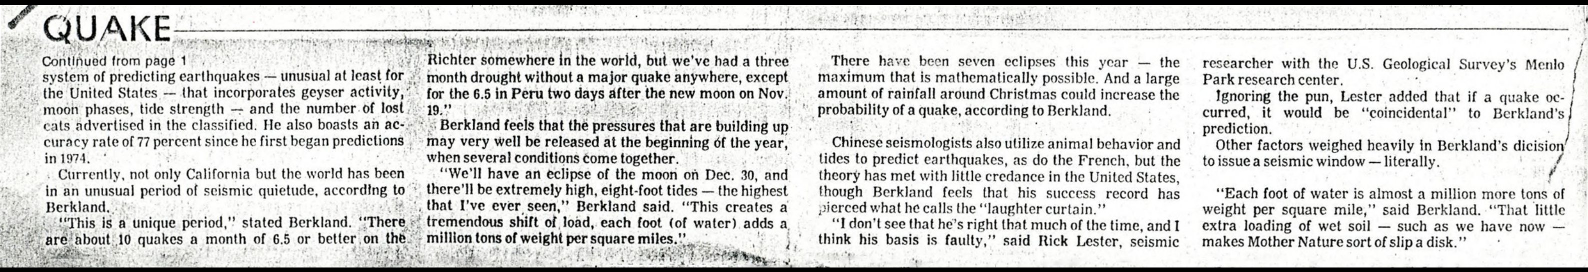
For Bonnie, the screenwriters were inspired by Californian newspaper articles from 1982-1983 on the controversial geologist James O. Berkland who claimed to be able to predict earthquakes, in particular via to animals and their magnetites. The plot of the treatment and Berkland in the press both talk about an increase of missing cat/dog notices before the quakes. Berkland and journalists also mentioned in the articles (read by the screenwriters) the lunar eclipses of 1982 and their effects on tides and earthquakes.



QUAKE

Continued from page 1

system of predicting earthquakes — unusual at least for the United States — that incorporates geyser activity, moon phases, tide strength — and the number of lost cats advertised in the classified. He also boasts an accuracy rate of 77 percent since he first began predictions in 1974.

Currently, not only California but the world has been in an unusual period of seismic quietude, according to Berkland.

"This is a unique period," stated Berkland. "There are about 10 quakes a month of 6.5 or better on the Richter somewhere in the world, but we've had a three month drought without a major quake anywhere, except for the 6.5 in Peru two days after the new moon on Nov. 19."

Berkland feels that the pressures that are building up may very well be released at the beginning of the year, when several conditions come together.

"We'll have an eclipse of the moon on Dec. 30, and there'll be extremely high, eight-foot tides — the highest that I've ever seen," Berkland said. "This creates a tremendous shift of load, each foot (of water) adds a million tons of weight per square miles."

There have been seven eclipses this year — the maximum that is mathematically possible. And a large amount of rainfall around Christmas could increase the probability of a quake, according to Berkland.

Chinese seismologists also utilize animal behavior and tides to predict earthquakes, as do the French, but the theory has met with little credance in the United States, though Berkland feels that his success record has pierced what he calls the "laughter curtain."

"I don't see that he's right that much of the time, and I think his basis is faulty," said Rick Lester, seismic researcher with the U.S. Geological Survey's Menlo Park research center.

Ignoring the pun, Lester added that if a quake occurred, it would be "coincidental" to Berkland's prediction.

Other factors weighed heavily in Berkland's dicision to issue a seismic window — literally.

"Each foot of water is almost a million more tons of weight per square mile," said Berkland. "That little extra loading of wet soil — such as we have now — makes Mother Nature sort of slip a disk."

Evening free-lance – December 9, 1982

Given the way Bond had dealt with the Hell's Angels: is he really a journalist? In this case, who were these bikers after: her or him? (Her). Bond says that, in doubt, he should not return to his hotel but spend the night at her place. Bonnie changes into a nightie and... Makes a bed on the floor for Bond. Distraught that his charms didn't take him to bed with the girl this time, Bond says to himself that "there has to be a first time for everything"!

The next morning 007 is awakened by Bonnie's animals, which are sensitive to seismic activity. Later he and Bonnie go to check the epicenter which is no longer a dilapidated warehouse. Instead it's a crack in the ground and they descend into it using a rope attached to the bumper of the AMC Eagle Wagon. There is salt water, they kiss, a new quake almost kills them, "you made the earth move!".

The scenes that follow are also similar to before: Howe fires Bonnie, they find Li Ti in a restaurant where the old mine Last Chance is mentioned. Bond notes the name is close to the operation Main Chance, the place must have a connection with.

Then there are the gay Halloween scenes with Zorin as a grim reaper, May Day as a fairy and Pancho as a pumpkin. Bonnie and Bond are lucky enough to escape from them, unlike the poor Li Ti, but Zorin discreetly follows them in the car.

Bond and Bonnie arrive at the Ferry Building to find information about the mine. Howe (still alive), warned of their presence by Zorin, points a revolver at them. Zorin and his henchmen join them, Howe is killed, our heroes are placed in the elevator (unlike the previous treatment where they were trapped in Howe's office) and the building is set on fire. This time Bond carrying Bonnie on his shoulder exits the building down a large ladder from a fire truck.

Also similar to the movie: a policeman now tries to put 007 and the girl under arrest. On this occasion Bond says that he is James Bond (and not John Stock as Bonnie believed) from the British secret service to explain the situation. It doesn't work and 007 and Bonnie flee the police, behind the wheel of a stolen fire truck. Police cars chase them and Bonnie goes to the back of the truck, controlling that part of the vehicle. Bond drops firefighting foam on the road: the police cars slide over it and one crashes.

SAN FRANCISCO
AERIAL TRUCK CO.

The chase ends with Bond driving the truck across the road to block it; he get out of the fire truck and disappear on foot into the crowd with Bonnie.

(These scenes with the fire truck are inspired by pages that John Glen and Michael Wilson wrote together on December 12).

Bond and Bonnie travel to the mine and enter it via a ventilation shaft. They spot a sort of bunker where they see Zorin entering alone. They follow him inside and Bond point his silenced pistol on him:

> - Zorin: Congratulations, Mr. Bond. For the first time in our curious rivalry you hold the upper hand.

Bond wants information, "I have license to kill [you know]". Zorin is not talkative but that doesn't matter, there is a model in his bunker and looking at it Bond understands Zorin's plan: create an earthquake with flooded tunnels and explosives to destroy "something called Mars", but Bond still don't know what MARS is. (Note that there is no longer solar eclipse in this treatment).

Holding Zorin at gunpoint, Bond signals him to move forward. Suddenly Pancho appears and throws his lasso around Bonnie's neck. Zorin takes advantage of this distraction to escape while 007 grabs the rope and pulls Pancho down from his spot above them, saving Bonnie. Betty Flex and the other May Day's girls arrive and with Pancho, they pursue our heroes into the tunnels of the mine.

Bond and Bonnie manage to get out of the mine and join the AMC hidden in a bush. They get in and head towards the symbol that represented MARS on the model; soon the bad guys (except May Day) are behind them with a car and a helicopter in which Zorin is.

Bond sees that they are approaching a laboratory where work is being done on energy fusion: Bonnie says that an earthquake would have a terrible effect there, with the dangerous products that the laboratory contains, such as deuterium. The fallout in the event of an explosion would be catastrophic (not unlike at Three Mile Island).

Fortunately the place have some kind of automatic emergency procedure in case of earthquake, to shut down the laser machines which producing the fusion and thus reduce the risk of explosion; Bonnie knows this because she participated an inspection of the place in the past.

Bond stops by the guards at the gate and tells them that he urgently needs to speak to the person in charge of the site, they only have seven minutes before the earthquake. However, the laboratory staff don't really take the threat seriously and Bond and Bonnie are forced to enter by force, pursued by the guards.

When they arrive at the room which contains the emergency system, they come across May Day who was already there in order to deactivate it. They attack her but soon Betty Flex and the other girls arrive to help May Day.

Meanwhile Zorin is in his helicopter, with the detonator, waiting for H hour to ensure that May May has deactivated the automatic emergency system.

Bond explains to the girls that they will all die if they don't do something; he tells May Day that Zorin had betrayed him, that he sent her here on a suicide mission. Zorin presses the detonator and the building begins to shake and disintegrate. If May Day doesn't change her mind, that's not the case for Flex and the other girls who start attacking May Day. Part of the ceiling falls on May Day, killing her. The other girls (described as muscular) hold up the rest of the ceiling while Bond goes to reactivate the emergency system.

From his helicopter, Zorin sees that his plan has failed: the laboratory has certainly suffered serious damage but it has not exploded. He sees Bond and Bonnie coming out of the building. Zorin gives Pancho an order.

Ambulances arrive and Bond places Bonnie in one. When it drives away we see that the driver of the ambulance is Pancho.

(Note that in previously written pages our villains were named "Zoron" and "Mai Dai". Zoron was to observe the planned destruction of MARS from a bunker instead of a helicopter).

We then find Zorin at his Mexican ranch at night. A certain Dr. Spitzer is doing surgery on Mortner who is clearly not in the best of health:

> - Spitzer: We must operate without delay. And the heart must be fresh.
> - Zorin: Don't worry. It's on the way.

We see Bond on a surveillance camera screen, not-so-discreetly infiltrating the property. Bond arrives towards Bonnie but finds himself trapped by a glass wall, gas is released: he passes out.

Bond regains consciousness strapped to an operating table, next to Mortner lying on a similar table:

> - Zorin: So, Mr. Bond, our struggle ends. You were a worthy opponent and thought you had defeated me, I have won because the future will be mine. I am > the prototype of a new species, the next evolutionary step. But you will play a part in the future. Your heart will beat in Mortner's body long enough for him to finish his work. [...] I shall enjoy witnessing this transplant.

(In an earlier version, when the villain was still named Geist, he told 007 more things. He was to use the profits made from the destruction of MARS to create a genetic institute where he would be cloned in order to generate a new, more perfect, human race; no more sexual procreation in his vision of the future).

The surgeon approaches 007, however we see that it isn't Spitzer under the mask but Tola. He pulls out a silenced pistol and fires two bullets into Zorin's heart. In reference to the pre-title sequence, Tola frees Bond, telling him that he have no specific orders to kill him, and unplugs Mortner who then dies.

> - Tola: So das vidanya. When we meet again perhaps I will have different orders.

(Note that in a draft signed by Wilson and Glen dated December 7, Bond said to the villain: "You're just like the rest of us, Zorin, except for an exaggerated ego". "Tola" was also named "Tula").

Bonnie joins Bond; 007 says that Zorin didn't know he left his heart with her in San Francisco.

The treatment concludes with Bond and Bonnie making love in an Acapulco hotel. They hear mariachis playing music outside and go to see from the balcony: three of the mariachis in costumes turn out to be M, Q and the minister!

Pre-title attempt: the welcoming Bunjoe

A 7 pages proposal (undated) was written for a pregeneric. No name on the document, except a handwritten "Matt" (Richard Maibaum's son, Matthew Maibaum?).

The document opens on the (fictitious) island of "Bunjoe", formerly part of the Indonesian archipelago but which since 1983 has been taken by a Marxist government friendly to Cuba and Russia, we are told. The Sangihe Islands appear to be part of Bunjoe.

A video shows the Bunjoe leader described as looking like the late Soekarno, surrounded by what appears to be Muammar Gaddafi and Yuri Andropov.

Rumors say that the leader, Muhammad Gotchainnakorna, plans to enter the tourism economy, making his country a competitor to Bali. A reconnaissance plane spotted the construction of an airport as well as large mobile homes for tourists, but is it really the case? Since it is possible that the Soviets are in reality establishing some kind of forward operating base on Bunjoe, it was decided to send James Bond there to take some photos.

So we see Bond and a certain Bonnie (no relation with Bonnie Lissom) who came to assist him, coming out of the belly of what appeared to be a dead orca washed up on a Bunjoe beach! They wear clothes like Hawaiian shirts and Bond also have Q's glasses which have night vision and blink-activated camera functions.

At night, Bond goes to inspect the mobile homes and photograph them when he notices elements on them that remind him of a mobile missile launcher. A little fiddling: the mobile home rises, a wall falls, and Bond is able to see an exposed missile with "red star and all".

007 sees guards arriving and he disappears into the darkness accompanied by the girl. They arrive near the airport under construction where Bond sees facilities that appear to be intended to accommodate Yak-38 fighter jets; he takes photos.

Bond and Bonnie discretely return to the fake orca on the beach and retrieve two motorized surfboards from it. They go out to sea while soldiers arrive behind them. A Soviet Mil Mi-24 helicopter flies over the orca and Bond presses a button on the collar he is wearing: the orca kicks its tail savagely into air, hitting the helicopter which thus crash on the beach!

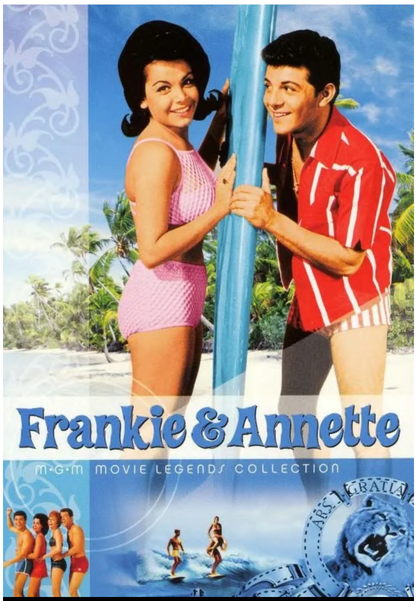
On the surfs, Bond and Bonnie arrive at a port through which they are forced to pass. The coast guard chases them in a boat but it's an "old, big and clumsy, and slow" boat. Its searchlights barely lock on to them as they zigzag through the various boats in the harbor. Bond and the girl pass through catamarans but the girl's surfboard ends up getting hit by a bullet.

Bonnie jumps on Bond's board and 007 manages to outrun his enemies "balancing himself on the board like a latter-day Frankie Avalon with girl wrapped around his waist".

Almost out of fuel, they arrive at a British submarine with a Union Jack flag. They go inside but find themselves facing Russians, Cubans and Bunjoe's soldiers:

- Man: A quite good imitation of your British K[-class] submarine, yes, Commander? [...] Our Russian friends always were poor sailors, [but] excellent imitators.

Bond fights but is overpowered; however he managed to hide a wrench and cables on him.



Frankie Avalon, American singer and actor who appeared between 1963 and 1967 in ten films of the “Beach Party” saga, notably featuring surfing.

007 and the girl are then placed in a torpedo which will be fire on the real British submarine (which is a little late). The torpedo is fired; Bond uses the wrench, they get out of the open torpedo. Bond clings to the latter and places the cables in the propeller of the torpedo to prevent it from hitting the British submarine. The torpedo deviates and then crashes into a huge Russian cargo ship carrying cement: boom, cement flows everywhere and the trucks on the deck of the cargo ship fall into the water as it capsizes/sinks.

The British submarine surfaces near Bond and Bonnie; M and Q exit the kiosk. Q is there saying "Double-O Seven, what have you done with my cetacean?".

- Bond: As the Yanks used to say, Q: we whaled their ass.

New pre-title: road convoy

On December 12 and 13, 1983, director John Glen invented other things for the pre-title which would end up being reused a few years later when writing the final of Licence to Kill.

Bond is in a submarine with Q (wearing a beach shirt) off the coast of Cuba. Q gives him his "famous" rebreather and Bond climbs into a torpedo. He is propelled and as he emerges, Bond presses a button which turns the torpedo into a surfboard. 007 catches waves but finds himself submerged: he is ejected but manages to reach the beach. The surfboard, however, landed aground between two guard towers. 007, taking advantage of the fact that the guards are too busy observing a girl in a bikini, go to retrieve the board and hide it in the sand.

The girl catches Bond doing this but she turns out to be his local contact.

Bond gets into her car with the girl, which takes him near an area surrounded by a fence. A convoy of six military trucks plus few other vehicles passes; Bond hangs under a truck. When the convoy stop, we see that one of the trucks transforms into a mobile missile launcher, another into a mobile radar, etc...

While the soldiers are busy taking their lunch break, Bond enters a semi-trailer filled with screens and computers; he takes some photos of the equipment. However, soldiers return and Bond then hides inside the toilets located at the end of the trailer. He can't get out because the soldiers have decided to eat inside the truck.

One of the soldiers decides to go to the toilet but finds the door locked; he insists. A horn sounds and the convoy sets off again.

Bond attempts to climb headfirst out of the small toilet window, which leads him into the space between the truck's cab and its trailer. He has to hold on to the window with his feet for not end up in the wheels below him.

The soldier behind him finally manages to open the toilet door and grabs Bond's legs. 007 struggles and manages to completely go through the window; the soldier takes out his walkie-talkie. The jeep at the front of the convoy turn around to come towards Bond but end up in the ditch while trying to avoid another jeep coming from behind the convoy, which had started the same approach.

The soldier blindly fires his revolver through the window. Bond closes the window on the soldier's hand.

The men in the remaining jeep fire towards Bond but hit the truck's brakes. Bond enters the truck's cabin, fights the driver and sends him onto the hood of the jeep. Its driver activates the windshield wipers to get rid of the man.

No longer having brakes, 007's truck hits the back of the truck in front of him. The computers in this truck's trailer catch fire with the impact, and this truck hits the one ahead of it (which is the one containing the missile). The flames ignite the missile which then takes off towards a random destination.

By putting into reverse, Bond manages to move away from the two burning vehicles in front of him but in doing so his trailer goes sideways: destroying the jeep. With the trailer detached, Bond leaves the scene of destruction at the wheel of the tractor unit.

On January 6, 1984, John Glen imagined a sequel to all of this. Bond goes to pick up the girl with the truck but they are confronted with an armored vehicle in front of them. Bond and the girl jump out of the truck's cab as the two vehicles collide.

Pursued by troops, they flee into the jungle to where Bond had buried the surfboard. They set off into the ocean with it and reach a position where Bond grabs a cable, he then deploys a parachute: Bond and the girl thus parasail towed behind the British submarine. The submarine surfaces and stops: Bond and the girl land on the kiosk and go inside.

- Bond (to Q): We were passing and through we'd drop in.

January 16, 1984' treatment: interlude in Acapulco

On January 16, 1984, Richard Maibaum and Michael Wilson completed a "final draft" (which was far from final) treatment of 53 pages.

The writers don't completely adopt Glen's suggestion for pre-title and summarize it in a few lines that don't even include the word "truck". We have Q on board of the submarine from which Bond is propelled by a torpedo before continuing his way on a surfboard (non-motorized) to the shore. He meets the girl and accomplishes his objective: the destruction of mobile missile launchers. Bond meets and spares Tola from the KGB and joins with the girl in a chase with the surfboard (now motorized) the submarine where Q is waiting.

The scenes that follow in Ascot, Paris and Scotland are similar to before and Bond lands in Mexico with Tibbett. Here Pancho has been renamed Sanchez and they don't go to Zorin's ranch right away, but have a stop first to a luxury hotel in Acapulco.

At the hotel Bond meets Bonnie Lissom who is by the swimming pool. Sanchez left, leaving Bond and Tibbett in their room/bungalow, and Bonnie exchanges a few unheard words with Sanchez.

007 says he wants to eat fish and we find him on a boat with Tibbett, fishing, while Tibbett rows like a good servant. "A successful cover must become almost second nature", explain Bond to Tibbett who is tired of playing the servant.

Bond's boat collides with another boat who tow behind Bonnie on a parachute. 007 dives and helps the girl to get out of the parachute in which she was tangled. She thanks him and he introduces himself to her as Lord James Mumsford.

Later, Bond sends Tibbett to Bonnie's room to apologize for the collision and to tell her that Mumsford is inviting her for dinner tonight.

Tibbett sets the table and asks Bond why dating this girl while they are on a mission. Bond replies that in their profession, you have to enjoy things before it's too late; he quotes a line from a poem to express it: "gather ye rosebuds while ye may".

Dinner passes and Bond congratulates Tibbett for the soufflé, adding that he found it a little deflated, however. Tibbett can take the evening off and Bond add to Bonnie (loud enough for Tibbett to hear) that he is keeping the latter in his service only out of gratitude to Tibbett's father who was one of his faithful retainers. Tibbett leaves the room, slamming the door.

In the hotel lobby, Tibbett sees Sanchez trying to reach Bonnie's room. Tibbett then tries to telephone Bond to warn him but the latter is too busy kissing the girl on the sofa... In a succession of comical scenes, Tibbett tries to hire mariachis to play music under Bond's balcony in order to attract him there. Bond pays the musicians to stop playing, then Tibbett pays the mariachis more to go back playing music.

With all these musical interruptions, Bonnie is no longer in the mood to have sex with 007 and says she have to go back to her room: she have to get up early tomorrow. She leaves; "James Bond, the great lover, is not very happy", add the screenwriters.

It was John Glen who had suggested almost all of this in a two-page memo from December 6 which bear his name. In which there was this interlude at the hotel, Bonnie, the incident with the parachute while fishing and Bond insisting on the valet relationship, much to the regret of "Tibbit".

The next day Bond and Tibbett finally go to Zorin's ranch where the horse sale is taking place. We see that Betty Flex has been renamed to Jenny Flex like in the movie. One of the first things they see is Zorin accompanying Bonnie to her car. Tibbett was right, the girl is indeed linked to Zorin, notes 007 (although he does not know exactly how).

Further when Bond is introduced to Mortner: the latter tells 007 that his [Bond's] characteristics seem purely Aryan/Anglo-Saxon. Bond agrees, adding "unless there's a chimp somewhere in the family tree"!

Later the western-style action scene was somewhat compressed/reduced but remains very similar to what we found before.

After the episode at Zorin's villa with the drone-pigeon and the episode at the pumping station, Bond goes to see Howe, whose office is no longer at the Ferry Building but at San Francisco City Hall. Leaving the office, Bond and Bonnie now recognize each other from the previous scenes in Acapulco.

007 waits for her outside and they get into her AMC Eagle Wagon; both suspicious of the other. For his part, Bond saw her at Zorin's ranch, Bonnie for her part saw him with Howe under the name of James Stock rather than James Mumsford.

Meanwhile Howe calls Zorin to tell him that the girl has come to bother him once again. Bikers come to attack them, they flee into the metro. Bond search desperately for change in order get through the portal; he have just enough to buy a single ticket so they pass through the portal together, pressed against each other, "(it can be done)" specify the writers.

The bikers, now on foot, board the same subway as them and attack Bonnie (but not Bond). 007 grabs an old man's cane and goes to help her with it (he decide to not use his Walther because there are too many people in the subway). The bikers have chains and a club, Bond defends himself with a chain taken from an enemy and can count on the help of an old woman who sticks one of her knitting needles in the buttocks of a bad guy.

They then go to Bonnie's house, she says that her father was a geology professor and that she is a geologist. She offers him a drink and Bond asks for a "dry martini, shaken not stirred".

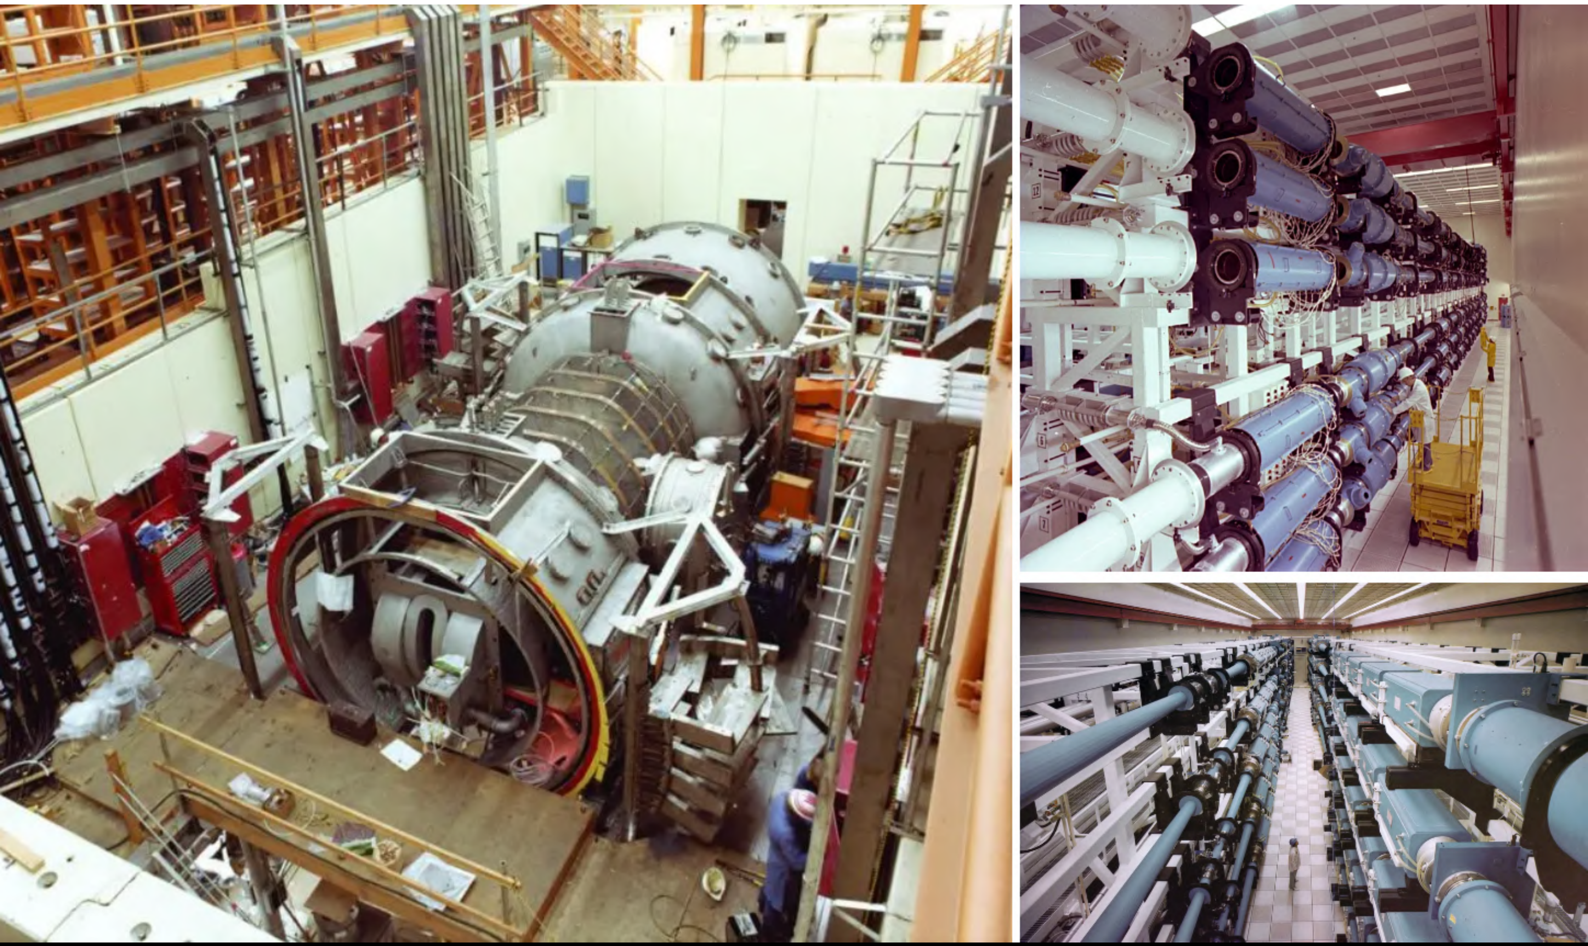
Bonnie explains that she is concerned about the increasing seismic activity near Zorin's wells and this is why she was in Acapulco: to warn Zorin personally, since Howe is not listening to what she said. Bond, for his part, sticks to his journalistic cover when explaining himself.

In this treatment Bond and the girl go to bed together (instead of Bond sleeping on the floor). Then we move on to the now usual scenes: earthquake epicenter, gay Halloween, fire (at City Hall) and the fire truck chase.

After that, similar to the film, Bond stops a Zorin's truck carrying explosives with the fire truck, in order to enter the perimeter of the mine. Bond and Bonnie enter Zorin's bunker: he is not there in this treatment but the model is there.

Zorin and Conley detonate explosives, killing the mine workers and blocking the mine's exit. Bond and Bonnie improvise some spelunking equipment and manage to get out the mine through a ventilation shaft.

Meanwhile, Sanchez, May Day and her girls, who are disguised as paramedics/nurses, arrive in ambulance at the Lawrence laboratory (the one in Berkeley). Disguised like this, they pass the security guards. With the help of an accomplice inside, named Dr. Fowler, they reprogram the emergency system.



In addition to MARS, during their research the screenwriters read about three other works on nuclear fusion carried out at Lawrence's Livermore (not Berkeley) laboratory. This includes the Tandem Mirror, a sort of magnetic mirror similar to MARS (photo on the left), but also two lasers using an inertial confinement fusion process: Shiva (top right) and Nova (bottom right). It is probably these lasers that Bond must cut to avoid disaster. (Note that Lawrence had already welcomed a film crew for Tron (1982), a film which include Shiva on screen).

Bond and Bonnie have joined the fire truck and rush aboard to the Lawrence laboratory they saw on the model. The guards at the entrance don't understand the emergency so Bond smashes the gate with the truck to get in and heads towards the fusion laboratory. In the emergency system room there is then a big hand-to-hand fight (an electromagnet disarmed everyone) between our heroes, May Day, her acolytes and the laboratory guards.

Zorin from a helicopter detonates the explosives, Fowler now believes Bond when he says that Zorin has betrayed them and goes reactivate the emergency systems to cut the lasers which producing the fusion. May Day tries to stop him but Bond and Bonnie go fight with her.

Meanwhile Jenny Flex and the other girls run to escape the place but are caught by guards. A ceiling falls on May Day and kills her.

Failing to find a period photo of the Lawrence Berkeley National Laboratory, here a modern photo (the round building already existed at the time).

- John Glen[14] : During our location [scout] in Silicon Valley we spent a lot of time in Berkeley University and at this top secret atomic establishment.

The finale is the same as before, with Tola saving Bond's life at Zorin's ranch before his heart get transplanted into Mortner.

A cold reception

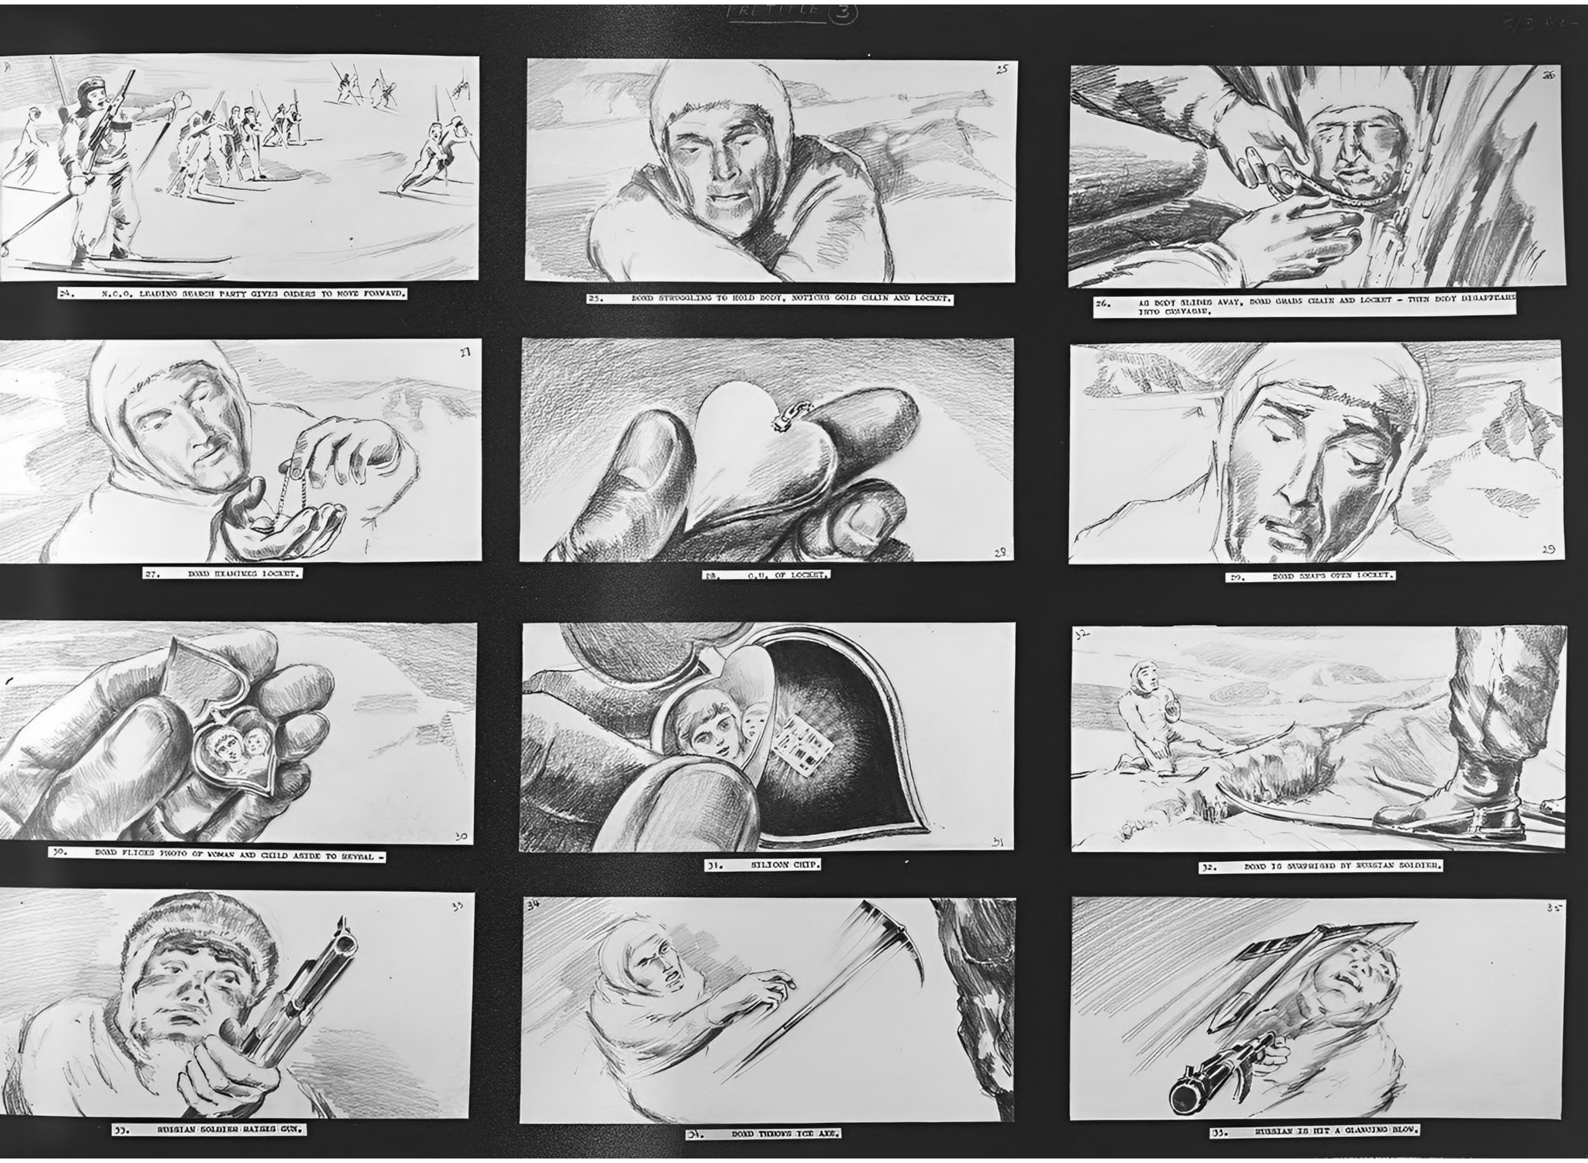
A scouting trip was planned for January 23-30, 1984 with Wilson, Maibaum, Glen, Peter Lamont, Tom Pevsner (executive producer) as well as Cubby's two daughters: Barbara and Tina Broccoli. In the program: San Francisco, including places such as the fire station, Zorin's house, the Ferry Building or Lombard Street. After San Francisco, departure for the Lawrence laboratory at Livermore. The object of the trip is also to find a ranch for Zorin and scouting on this subject takes place near Clearlake (where it was also a question of finding a place to build the ghost town) and Santa Barbara.

On February 2, 1984, the screenwriters and John Glen imagined a pre-title sequence completely different from before.

It opens in the Arctic where the Russian army seems to be looking for something or someone. As in the film, Bond is also present and for his part follows the beeping of a beacon and finds a body buried in the snow. A Russian helicopter flies over him.

As he searches it, the body tends to slide towards a crevasse but 007 manages to recover the pendant (containing an electronic chip) from the dead man just in time.

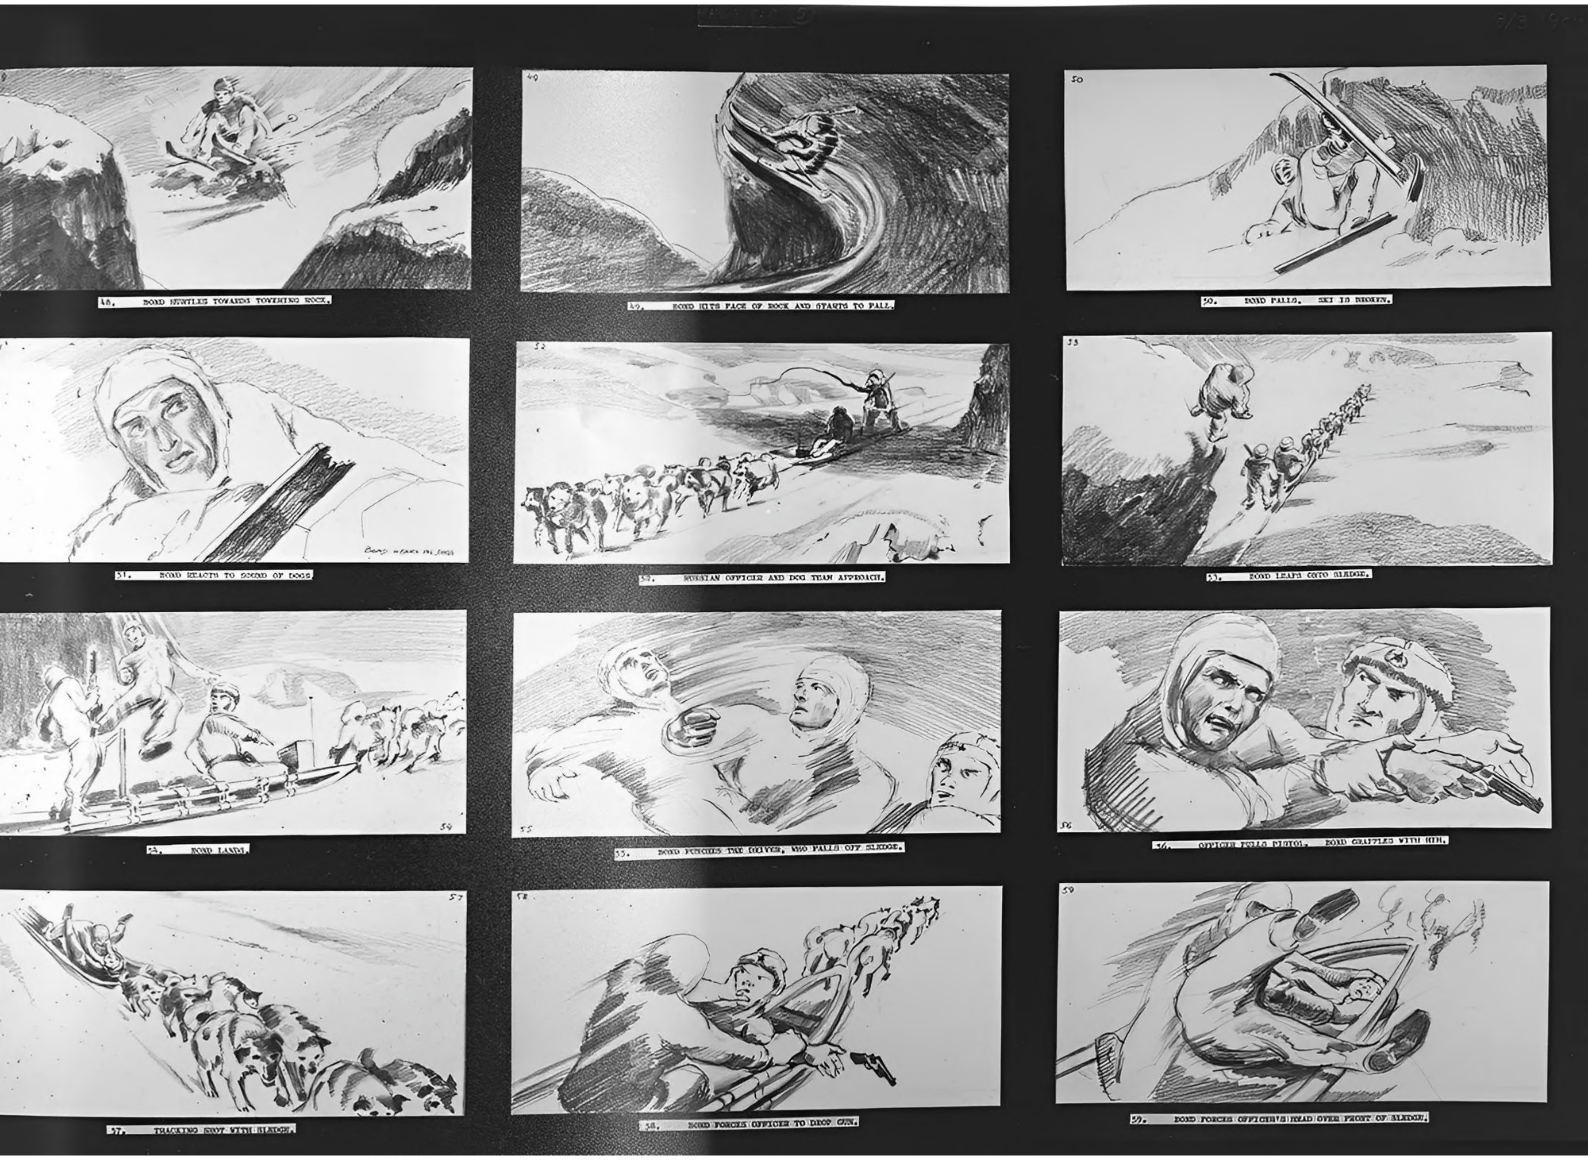
A Russian soldier prepares to shoot Bond but 007 throws his ice axe at him to kill him.



PRE-TITLE ③
24. N.C.O. LEADING SEARCH PARTY GIVES ORDERS TO MOVE FORWARD.
25. BOND STRUGGLING TO HOLD BODY, NOTICES GOLD CHAIN AND LOCKET.
26. AS BODY SLIDES AWAY, BOND GRABS CHAIN AND LOCKET - THEN BODY DISAPPEARS INTO CREVASSE.
27. BOND EXAMINES LOCKET.
28. C.U. OF LOCKET.
29. BOND SNAPS OPEN LOCKET.
30. BOND FLICKS PHOTO OF WOMAN AND CHILD ASIDE TO REVEAL -
31. SILICON CHIP.
32. BOND IS SURPRISED BY RUSSIAN SOLDIER.
33. RUSSIAN SOLDIER RAISES GUN.
34. BOND THROWS ICE AXE.
35. RUSSIAN IS HIT A GLANCING BLOW.

In his death the Russian pulls the trigger of his weapon and soon all the soldiers are chasing 007 who then makes a dangerous descent on skis (the Sylvester's Slot of Squaw Valley, named after stuntman Rick Sylvester who skied it down in 1969[15]).

007 loses a ski and jumps onto a Russian who is on board of a sled pulled by dogs. With it (and without ever fighting the helicopter) Bond joins an MI6 boat disguised as an iceberg. A pretty girl is waiting for him inside and, with her, they move away from the shore and the Russians.



48. BOND HURTLES TOWARDS TOWERING ROCK.
49. BOND HITS FACE OF ROCK AND STARTS TO FALL.
50. BOND FALLS. SKI IS BROKEN.
51. BOND REACTS TO SOUND OF DOGS
52. RUSSIAN OFFICER AND DOG TEAM APPROACH.
53. BOND LEAPS ONTO SLEDGE.
54. BOND LANDS.
55. BOND PUNCHES THE DRIVER, WHO FALLS OFF SLEDGE.
56. OFFICER PULLS PISTOL. BOND GRAPPLES WITH HIM.
57. TRACKING SHOT WITH SLEDGE.
58. BOND FORCES OFFICER TO DROP GUN.
59. BOND FORCES OFFICER'S HEAD OVER FRONT OF SLEDGE.

- John Glen[16] : I was basically an action man [director]. [...] I used to do little sketches. [...] Roger Deer was one of the storyboard artists I used. He would come in and I would go through my sketches with him. Then, he would then do a professional job of making them look attractive. [...] I'd present it to Cubby and Michael and Dick Maibaum. They'd incorporate it in a scene. They'd leave a gap and say there was an action scene and over to me.

February 14, 1984' treatment: Pan Ho, Silicon Valley and a new Tola

At the start of a 65-page treatment by Maibaum and Wilson dated February 14, 1984, the snowy pre-title has been adopted and we no longer go straight to Ascot after this, but to MI6 HQ.

After chatting with Moneypenny and rubbing his nose against her ("An old Eskimo custom. Who knows what it might lead to?" says Bond), he goes to M's office where Q, the minister and Tibbett are present. Q says the EMP-immune microchip Bond recovered from 003's body in Siberia is the same that the one developed for the government by a Max Zorin company. (In 1982, the press reported NATO's concerns about EMP; Maibaum had read some articles on this subject).

Bond begins his investigation on Zorin near Ascot, accompanied by M, Moneypenny and Tibbett. May Day is described as "in her late twenties". The investigation then takes him to Paris and after a detour to meet Lord Mumsford in Scotland, Bond arrives in Mexico where he meets Sanchez and Bonnie for the first time. Arriving at Zorin's ranch, Jenny Flex is now described as "black" skinned.

Further on, while Tibbett and Bond infiltrate the ranch's laboratory, Zorin practices combat with May Day. Unlike the film (and previous treatments), Zorin fights May Day but also at the same time two of her girls: Flex and Pan Ho, who appears for the first time in this treatment and who is described as a "Chinese beauty".

Later, after having tried to kill Bond by drowning him so that it's will "look like an accident", Zorin meets Gogol and Klotkoff (without Tola, now absent from the pre-title). In this treatment its no longer takes place in a museum but at the Mexican pyramids of the Moon and the Sun.

There are the scenes where Bond spies with the pigeon-drone during the meeting in Zorin's villa (renamed "Whitewood"). Here Zorin's target is no longer Lawrence's MARS but Silicon Valley. Bond (like the audience at this stage) knows nothing more: Zorin using a model rather than words to convince his associates.

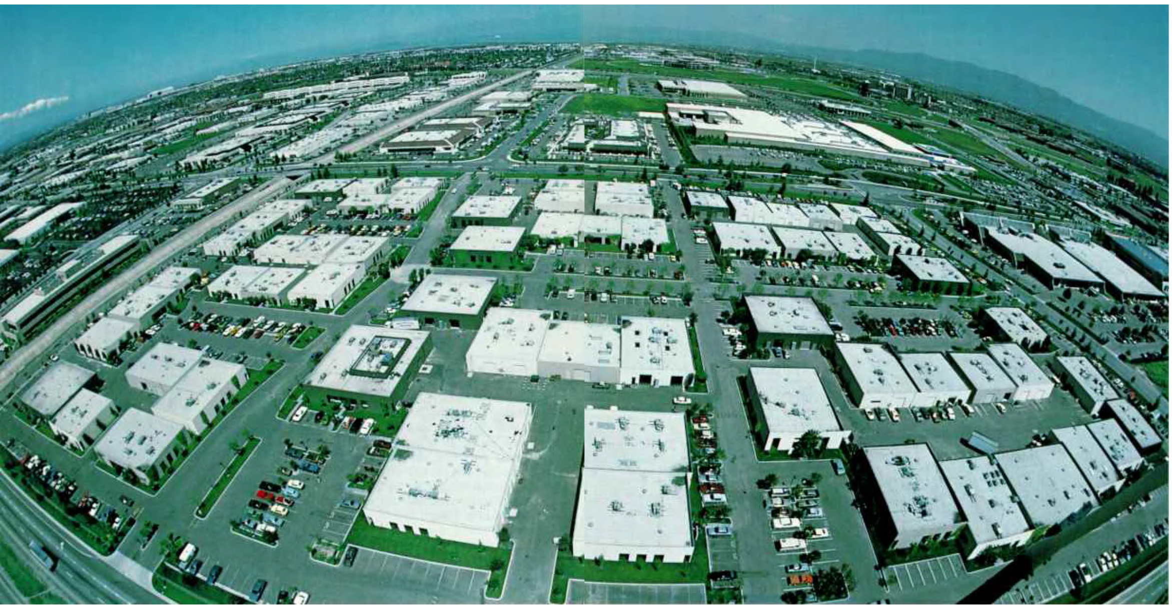
The other important difference is that Klotkoff is no longer the only Russian to listen to the meeting, he have a partner with him: Tola, who in this treatment turns out to be a woman. It is with her that Bond briefly fights before dousing himself (and the girl) with Q's dog repellent spray and hiding in a bush while Klotkoff is captured and killed.

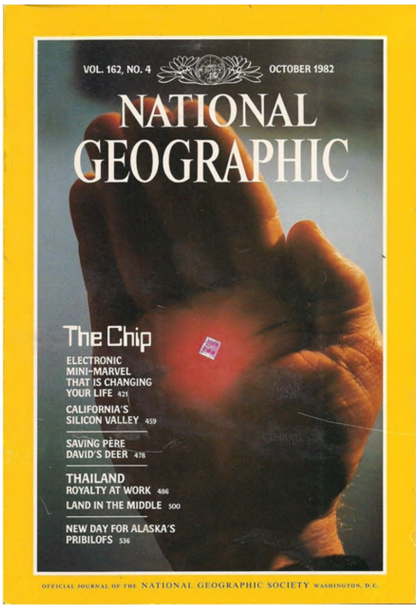
There is then a scene described as "optional" where Bond and Tola return to a car and drive away from the property, followed by another car.

Similar to what we see in the film, we find Bond and the girl in a sauna then in a bed. Bond inserts a cassette of Tchaikovsky and then takes a shower singing/whistling "perhaps" this music. Tola takes the opportunity to leave and join General Gogol who is waiting for her in the car outside. When they play the recording of Zorin's meeting, only music comes out: Bond has switched the tapes.

Later we have in a helicopter above Silicon Valley, Conley saying "What a view!" to Zorin who replies "For a kill".

(For the said view, the writers here refer to a photo from the magazine National Geographic. Looking at the description, it appears that this photo is from the issue #162 (1982). The main subjects of this issue is electronic chips and Silicon Valley).





VOL. 162, NO. 4
OCTOBER 1982
NATIONAL GEOGRAPHIC The Chip
ELECTRONIC MINI-MARVEL THAT IS CHANGING YOUR LIFE 421
CALIFORNIA'S SILICON VALLEY 459
SAVING PÈRE DAVID'S DEER 478
THAILAND
ROYALTY AT WORK 486
LAND IN THE MIDDLE 500
NEW DAY FOR ALASKA'S PRIBILOFS 536
OFFICIAL JOURNAL OF THE NATIONAL GEOGRAPHIC SOCIETY WASHINGTON, D.C.

While trying to escape the bikers in the subway station, Bond and Bonnie can be seen sliding down an escalator railing (a similar thing will appear in the subway scene of Skyfall).

After escaping from them, they arrive at Bonnie's house in Sausalito. We can read here that Bond is basically too lazy to climb the stairs but that the sight of Bonnie's butt during the climb manages to motivate him! Bond no longer end up in the bed with Bonnie: to his disappointment he sleeps on the floor again.

Later at City Hall, Zorin says that Bonnie's body will be found in the elevator trapped by the flames. "What about me?", asks Bond. Zorin reveals he have different plans for him. However, we will never know them because 007 leaves Zorin alone by jumping through the flames and goes to join Bonnie to save her. Zorin prevents his acolytes from following him into the burning building: Bond will not be able to survive the fire according to him.

For the chase that occurs shortly after, there is now a note saying that "perhaps" Bond and Bonnie in the fire truck manage to outrun the police by arriving before them at the movable bridge with the "concrete block" (3rd Street Bridge).

The scenes at the mine become closer to the film, with an office instead of the bunker, where Bond and Bonnie discover via a model that Zorin wants to flood Silicon Valley. Spotted, they flee into the tunnels, pursued by May Day, Flex and Pan Ho. Zorin decides to betray the girls by detonating the explosives while they are still in the tunnels chasing 007 and Bonnie. The workers are also swept away by the water, "Sanchez, directed by Zorin" lassoes those who try to get to safety.

When calm returns, May Day decides to team up with Bond to take revenge: they lift the detonator and place it on a minecart. When the brakes are a problematic, she decides to sacrifice herself by climbing on cart to hold the brakes manually.

From a helicopter, Zorin sees that his plan has failed but notice Bonnie outside and kidnaps her. Bond can't do nothing as the helicopter fly away.

Later Bond attempts to find Zorin at his ranch, but is gassed and put on an operating table in order to save Mortner, so he can finish his work. "Cloning me", Zorin clarifies.

- Zorin: I look forward to this, Mr. Bond, the pleasure of making the first incision. Of course, we will dispense with the anesthetic.

A nurse places the surgical instrument cart near Bond's hand. Bond grabs a scalpel and cuts his bonds while the surgeon draws a pencil line on his torso to operate. 007 jumps from the operating table and fights with a scalpel against Zorin who also have one in his hand. Bond give a hit a the end of an oxygen tank which goes like a "missile which propels itself into Zorin who is flung against table Mortner is lying on".

Conley and Sanchez arrive with weapons in hand but are shot down with a sub-machine gun held by the nurse who turns out to be Tola. She tells 007 that she has no orders to kill him but that it might be different the next time they meet; she leaves.

We find Bond in Acapulco with Bonnie, once again disturbed by mariachis of which (only) one of them turns out to be Q, telling him that he must hurry: 007 must be on a plane to London in fifteen minutes.

March 3, 1984' treatment: France, Golden Gate and revenge

A "revised treatment" from March 3, 1984 condenses the story from 65 to 34 pages. In the first, we notice that Zorin's horse has been renamed Pegasus and it is written that Bond notice the Queen of England presence in the royal box at Ascot.

Further on, in Paris, a few lines now suggest the presence of stunts with the taxi: "[Bond] narrowly avoids several accidents" and the "cab (or whatever vehicle he is driving by then)". It's certainly not much for the moment but it's already much more than in all we had in the previous treatments where Bond was following quote-unquote "quietly" the parachute. We also note that as in the October 1983 treatment, the Aubergene's assassin is again Zorin himself.

Also introduced is a scene that will be filmed but cut, with Bond being freed by M from a Parisian prison after the chase. A "French cop returns Bond's belongings, his PPK and several other inexplicable Q items".

Lord Mumsford at home now offers Bond the company of two attractive girls at the end of his scenes.

The most important change in this first part of the script is that Zorin no longer have a ranch in Mexico but a stud farm in France. 007 lands at Deauville airport where he is no longer greeted by a Mexican named Sanchez, but by a fifty-year-old Corsican named Scarpine. (It was also previously considered to name the character Sanders at a time the country in which these scenes took place was undefined).

Scarpine accompanies Bond and Tibbett to their hotel which turns out to be a castle on a lake. 007 still meets Bonnie Lissom there, who is parasailing on the lake, Bond saves her from drowning. The "driver of [her] motorboat [...] tells Bond engine conked out. [The] excuse sounds phoney". There are the usual scenes of the dinner and Tibbett paying musicians to bother Bond and Bonnie after having noticed she is affiliated with Scarpine.

The next day, they head to Zorin's stud farm. (Peter Lamont remembers a scouting trip to a stud farm at Le Touquet[17]). Bond meets the villain, Miss Susie Potter and Mortner. Here May Day tells Zorin that it could be the man from the Eiffel Tower. Zorin replies not to try anything: they will take care of him tomorrow morning. 007 approaches May Day, tries to flirt with her, she displays coldness although she kisses him very briefly before sending him packing. "Odd behavior that puzzles him".

When night falls, Bond descends along a rope from his room and reaches the stables where Tibbett is also leading the investigation. They discover Mortner's laboratory. Further on, Mortner inject Zorin with a substance before he do combat training with May Day, Flex and Pan Ho. Zorin fights extremely well against the three girls at the same time, gaining the upper hand with martial arts.

As usual Bond and Tibbett are spotted, then 007 end into bed with May Day.

The next day Bond breaks into Zorin's office, photographs a diary, and has a meeting with him. Here Zorin identifies him as James Bond by transmitting his photo and suggests a horseback ride.

Of course, now that we are in France, there is no longer the whole western style action sequence. Instead Bond's horse goes crazy because of the electrified saddle, flees through the woods with Bond on it and arrives near a road on which 007 finds the Rolls occupied by May Day and Conley. Bond is captured and survives drowning.

Zorin meets Gogol somewhere and Venz's character (the Russian played by Dolph Lundgren in the film) is now mentioned on paper.

After theses scenes, 007 meet the other members of MI6, no longer on a yacht but on a warship near Gibraltar. On this occasion Bond wears his commander's uniform and Tibbett is buried at sea. Here Mortner is "identified as Aschenbach, a brilliant young endocrinologist who worked at Berlin's Kaiser Wilhelm Institute during World War II, supervising a program to enhance mental and physical growth of pure Aryan war orphans by injecting them, in utero, with steroids". Zorin is described as very intelligent but with a psychotic side.

> - Richard Maibaum[18] : I wouldn't say [Zorin] was one of my favorite Bond villains. Maybe we loaded that part with too much. It's enough that he should have been an unscrupulous financial wizard without having been concocted to be a mad doctor. I don't know why we thought that was necessary.

The minister wonders what to do with Zorin, he is after all an English citizen: could he be arrested and judged for treason, murder and espionage? M suggests instead using the "license to kill" prerogative of Section 00, a job that in this case doesn't repel Bond, seeing it as a kind of "justice".

We find Zorin in his electronic chip factory, located in "Rabat? Casablanca? Marrakesh?". He give a tour around his facilities to a group of people of different nationalities and they join a meeting room to talk about his project for Silicon Valley. Bond is not far away and is assembling a Q's sniper rifle. Zorin leaves the building but Bond's aim is obstructed because there are too many people between him and his target.

Klotkoff and his accomplice who were listening to the meeting from near are spotted. After fighting, 007 sprays himself and the girl with dog repellent and then Klotkoff is killed.

Bond and the female Russian spy, who is no longer named Tola but Pola, have their scene in the sort of sauna. Here the fact that Bond steals the Russian's recording tape of the meeting is more important than before to the extent that he himself hadn't listened/recorded the meeting unlike in the previous treatments.

In San Fransico 007 meets Li Ti but doesn't inform him that his mission is to assassinate Zorin. There are the scenes with the fishermen, the pump station, Howe, Bonnie, the bikers on the subway, the crack in the ground, Halloween, the fire at City Hall, the fire truck and the mine.

The finale changes by adapting pages that Michael Wilson had written on February 13, 1984. Zorin, Conley and Scarpine are no longer in a helicopter but an airship on which "U.S. Navy" is written. Zorin waits for the "moment he has waited for. The culmination of Operation Main Chance, the most imaginative, spectacular coup in history. The cataclysm he is about to witness created by him, will never be forgotten and the rewards will be unimaginable. The world will never know it wasn't a natural disaster, but he will know. He will have proven to himself he is the greatest intellect of all time".

However, the sacrifice of May Day screws everything up. The bad guys kidnap Bonnie, Bond clings to a cable of the airship and remains suspended on it while the airship flies over San Francisco. Zorin tries to get rid of Bond at the Golden Gate but Bond tie the airship to the bridge, which then crashes into the Golden Gate.

ZORIN
INDUSTRIES

The now holed balloon begins to deflate; Bond takes out Bonnie. Zorin "almost maniacal with rage and frustration" pursues them while the airship falls on the road of bridge. Cars pass around the bodies of Scarpine and Conley.

Zorin fights Bond in hand-to-hand combat on the bridge cable, displaying the strength he had shown in his training against the three girls but "at the last moment Double-O-Seven, as always, wins". Zorin falls from the bridge.

- Michael Wilson[19] : We only have two or three [stunts] that are really, really breathtaking. But it's one thing to think the stunts up and another to decide how to do them. I won't write anything unless I've already figured out how it can be done safely and not be a cheat.

- Bob Simmons (stunt supervisor)[20] : First, the script is presented to me. I start by broadening out the visual ideas as Cubby and Michael allow me to elaborate. I've never had any opposition from them on anything I do.

We find Bond and Bonnie in bed when they notice someone next to them: an armed Mortner who comes to cry for revenge. Before he can shoot, Pola and other Russians accompanying her arrive and capture Mortner alive. Pola leaves, telling Bonnie that she's a lucky girl, and Bond picks up where he left off with Bonnie...

March 30, 1984' treatment: Stacey, quarter of a taxi and Snooper

Throughout the whole month of March, the writers make various revisions. One of them is to change the name of the Bond Girl: from Bonnie Lissom to Amanda Sutton.

It is also envisaged that Bond enters the Zorin's factory disguised as an employee (rather than having him wait outside with a sniper rifle). It is also no longer be Mortner who shows up during the finale while Bond and Amanda are in a shower, but Zorin himself; having obviously survived the fall from the Golden Gate. Pola intervenes and captures him alive.

On March 12, Michael Wilson wrote a scripted version of the pre-title in which the girl waiting for Bond in the iceberg boat is named Kimberly Jones.

On March 30, 1984, a new 37-page treatment by Maibaum and Wilson was completed with the new elements developed during the month. This is the treatment where the "From" has disappeared from the movie's title, which now becomes simply "A View to a Kill".

We can also notice that during the chase in Paris, the taxi driven by Bond is now cut into four parts (an idea that John Glen had written down on February 28, but that probably came from Rémy Julienne who, in the exact same way, cut a blue Citroën 2 CV in four in the 1982's movie Les gendarmes et les gendarmettes).

- John Glen[21] : That was Rémy Julienne and myself. We got together, and we decided what was possible to do with this situation. Then I went away and I wrote it all down and then Rémy separately came to me with a couple of ideas and that's how progressed through the sequence. It was all a consultation between Rémy Julienne and me.

Later, Bond goes straight to Zorin's estate (containing a castle) after landing in Deauville. There is no longer the whole interlude of the hotel where he met the girl with the parasailing etc. : Bond stay directly at his enemy' castle from the start.

With this the writers include new scenes with Bond and Tibbett searching their room for microphones and playing a pre-recorded tape of them when they find one.

They go to the balcony to talk more freely and see a helicopter landing. A beautiful American thirty-something gets off and goes to meet Zorin: no longer Amanda Sutton but Stacey Sutton.

aerospatiale
F-GDMS

- Richard Maibaum[22] : Tanya Roberts was awful. I was at a screening for that film and I remember when it premiered, people were literally doubled over with laughter, falling off their seats, over the way she delivered her lines. It was just embarrassing.

Bond in "formal Scottish attire" joins Zorin's small party where he speaks to Mortner in particular. He sees Stacey and approaches her; he learns that she is not interested in horses: "As a matter of fact, I'm allergic to them".

Zorin interrupts them and leaves with Stacey to his office. 007 avoids Miss Potter, takes a glass of champagne, drinks it and presses it against the office door to listen to what is being said inside, like in the novel The Man with the Golden Gun.

However before hearing anything May Day sees Bond and asks him what he is doing. Pretending to be drunk, Bond said he was looking for a place to refill his glass. May Day tells him he's had drink enough for today and walks him back to his room (no more weird kisses).

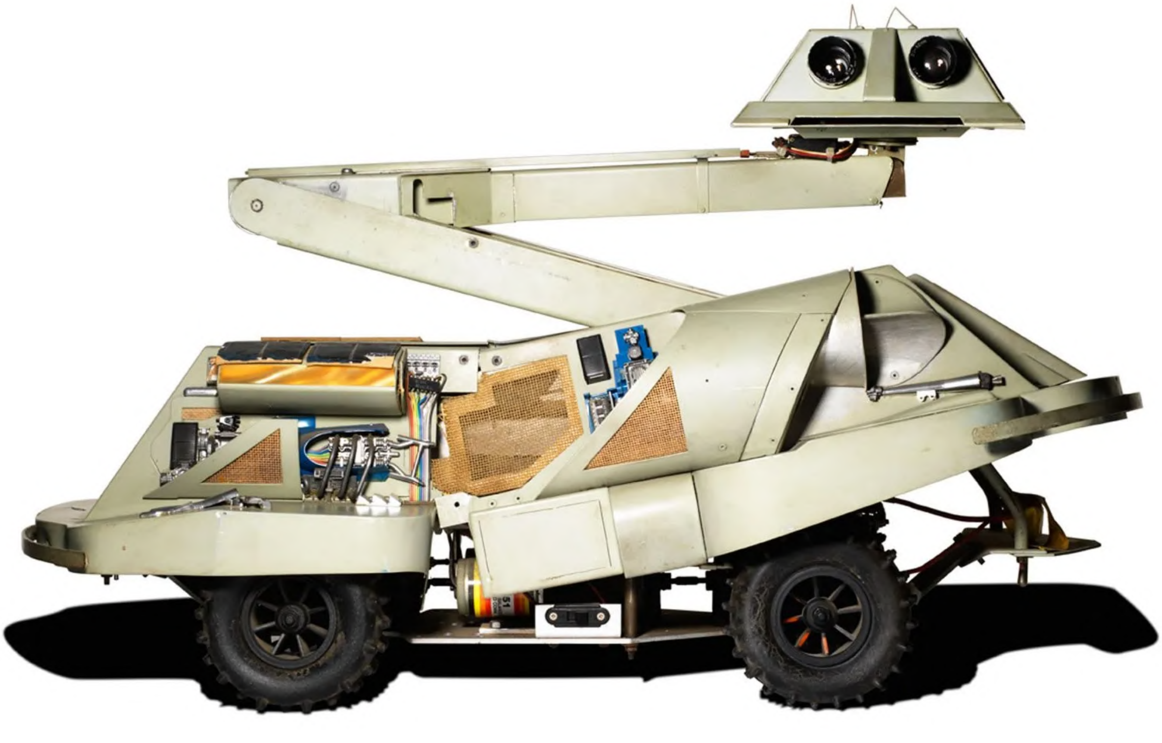
At nightfall, Bond comes out of his room with a rope but comes face to face with Zorin at a window below. "Bond realizes Zorin [in lotus position] is in a trance" and continues to descend the rope without the villain noticing!

There are the scenes in the genetic laboratory, the alarm and Bond who goes to Zorin's office to photograph a paper mentioning a meeting, this time in Antibes (in France). A check for five million dollars for "S. Sutton" is now also present.

After a few scenes, Zorin meets Gogol. Here the screenwriters hesitate between the Rodin museum, Napoleon's tomb at the Invalides and what they call the gallery "Place de Tete" for the meeting place.

Later Bond joins MI6 for Tibbett's funeral at sea and during the briefing that follow, we can read MI6 thinks that Zorin played a very important role in the creation of the OPEC. Here there is no further consideration of Zorin being eliminated by Section 00.

Bond leaves for Antibes (more precisely Sophia Antipolis, described by some as the "French Silicon Valley") where Zorin have his microchip factory. 007 is not alone, Q accompanies him with one of his new gadgets: a sort of terrestrial drone on which a camera and a microphone are mounted. "Snooper? QT?", ask themself the screenwriters for the name of the gadget which is operated from a Volkswagen van.



Snooper tries to head towards the meeting room, a guard spots it but Snooper disappears into an inaccessible area. The guard's colleague thinks it was a hallucination or that his college drank too much. Anyway it is a failure: Snooper will no longer be able to enter the meeting room now.

Bond's problems seem to be resolved when he sees Klotkoff and his accomplice who are listening with a parable. 007 tells Q to leave and there are the usual scenes with the dogs, Pola and the tape exchange at the sauna.

Arriving in San Francisco we can notice that Li Ti has been renamed Chuck Lee. After the pumping station, Bond goes to see Howe and meets Stacey. He decides to follow her discreetly by car to her house, Whitewood (the writers specify that the filming location will be Dunsmuir, where the film will be shot).

Bond enters the house and finds the place empty except for a vase and a room. Things happen similar to the movie: Stacey surprises him with a shotgun, Zorin's men attack the place, the gun turns out to be loaded with rock salt, then a hand-to-hand fight. The only difference is that Stacey doesn't break the vase over anyone's head.

She explains to Bond that Zorin took control of the oil company founded by her grandfather. Due to legal battles, she had to sell all her furniture for not be in bankrupt. Hence the check, for an amicable settlement.

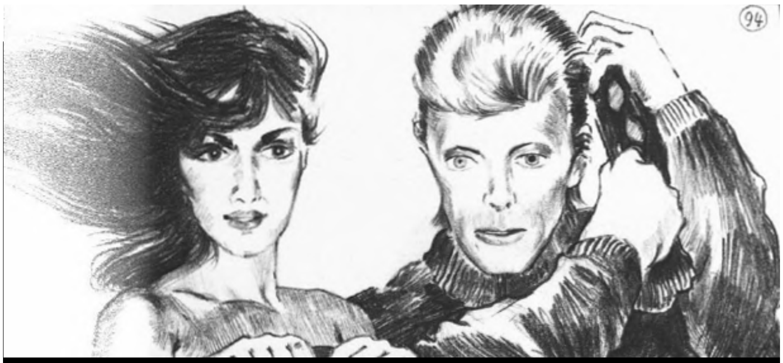
Bond and Stacey, not wanting to risk another confrontation against a new wave of henchmen, leave the house and move into a hotel suite (along with Stacey's animals, Bond give a tips a the reception for this).

Stacey, very tired, falls asleep quickly, so Bond also goes to sleep "unhappily" on the settee, without having had sex with her.

The rest of the treatment is similar to before except now Mortner dies in the airship alongside Conley and Scarpine. As a result, he no longer appears in the finale where Bond and Stacey make love. Instead they are "probably" disturbed by a telephone with on the line either Gogol standing next to Pola or "you-know-who from Washington" (the President of the United States?).

(Ronald Reagan, former actor who became President of the United States from 1981 to 1989, appeared in 1983 in a program about the James Bond saga to promote Octopussy, in which he praised 007 in a one-minute speech).

April 5, 1984' treatment: horses and pumping station



May Day and Zorin (with an air of David Bowie) on a storyboard dated April 5, 1984.

37 pages dated April 5, 1984 are marked as "final treatment" (and as far as I know, it is the finale one, although there were revisions on it on 30 April; 1, 2 and 10 May 1984).

This one marks the disappearance of the scenes in Scotland. Bond no longer impersonates Lord Mumsford, his cover name now is "James St. John-Smith", pronounced "Sinjin Smythe". (It was also considered that Bond would adopt the identity Randolph Culpepper the Third: an American from Virginia). Miss Susie Potter has also disappeared from the plot.

Here to attract Zorin's attention upon arriving at the castle, Bond spends $500,000 to purchase a horse at the auction. When Tibbett asks him how he got an invitation to stay and sleep at the castle:

- Bond: Does the Admiral [M] ride? I've just bought him a horse!

Further on, while Zorin trains against May Day (alone), Bond and Tibbett go to explore Mortner's laboratory. Also introduced in this treatment is the microchip warehouse next to the lab where Bond and Tibbett have a fight with guards.

Zorin now uses a cane to activate steroid boosts grafted under the horses' skin in order to cheat. So the electric saddle disappears. A sequence written by John Glen in a memo where Bond must remain in the saddle on an obstacle course where Zorin cheats is now integrated into this treatment.

The meeting between Zorin and his partners takes place in an airship. The villain's operation is now named "Main Strike" and as in the October 26' treatment, a member who doesn't want to be part of the operation is thrown out of the airship. Bond (and the Russians) are no longer present trying to spy/listen on this meeting.

Bond leaves for California because Zorin have oil business there and he meets Chuck Lee. During the crab fisherman's protest, Bond dives and discovers the propeller which almost causes him to lose his life. 007 flees while being spotted and tells Lee that he needs to take a closer look at this pumping station.

So later Bond returns to the area with Q. Hidden in a van they control Snooper who infiltrates the place where Zorin is talking to his acolytes. Bond and Q also spot two Russians who are listening. Dogs spot Snooper; May Day who goes to investigate comes across Klotkoff who is then thrown into the propeller.

007 goes to the beach to meet Pola who managed to leave the place undetected and there are the scenes with her where he retrieve the Russian' tape. The rest of the treatment is similar to before except that Bond and Stacey no longer go to a hotel after being attacked in her house.

June 8, 1984' revised script: snowboarding and botanical gardens

- Michael Wilson[23] : In the treatment stage of writing a screenplay, Bond is just a character. But when we get down to writing the scenes [in script stage], we tailor it to Roger. He has a particular personality and the scenes must be written accordingly.

The screenwriters have been working on writing scripts since April/May, many pages have been written and rewritten.

Maibaum and Wilson eventually arrive on June 8, 1984 at a script (obviously revised since it has pink pages) that is 136 pages long.

The pre-title now resemble the film with the snowmobile (instead of a dog sled), the improvised snowboard, the helicopter that attacks 007 (instead of returning to its base due to lack of fuel) and "Kimberley" (with a E) Jones (it is specified that she is an "agent").

Willy Bogner on the set of For Your Eyes Only.

- John Glen[24] : [The stuntman/cameraman of the ski sequences] Willy [Bogner] came up with this new idea: snowboarding. He said, "If we could get Bond on a monoski, then we could have some real fun". I thought that was a great idea and I came up with the idea that Bond was on a motorized toboggan that gets shot up and all that's left is the front ski. So Bond goes on it as a snowboard. Willy came up with this idea of the lake, of using the snowboard as a seaboard as well, to go through the lake.

Further on, Zorin now apparently has French nationality while May Day is described by M as an American girl. We can also notice that Tibbett's character has the habit of ending most of his sentences with "guv".

It is now May Day (not Zorin) who kills Achille Aubergene (which was at one point was considered to be spelled "Aubergine") and the chase through Paris contains more stunts (the taxi going down the stairs, jumping on a bus).

Mortner is bearded and Jenny Flex is no longer described as "black".

The duke who thought he was reincarnated as a horse that Zorin mentions, is Louis IV Henri de Bourbon-Condé.

The Zorin-Gogol meeting takes now place at the Palm House from the Royal Botanic Gardens, at Kew.

The Palm House.

(Another previously written version placed this meeting at London's Highgate Cemetery).

WORKERS OF ALL LANDS UNITE
KARL MARX
THE PHILOSOPHERS HAVE ONLY INTERPRETED THE WORLD IN VARIOUS WAYS - THE POINT HOWEVER IS TO CHANGE IT

As Gogol said to Zorin: "Why not? Karl Marx' grave is the last place we'd be expected to meet".

After paying a final homage to Tibbett, a certain Gustav Schiller from West German intelligence comes to brief MI6 on Heinrich Glaub, alias Carl Mortner.

> - Schiller: [...] He experimented on pregnant concentration camp inmates by injecting embryos, in utero, with certain steroid solutions.
> - Q: I must say it sounds totally unscientific.

When Bond goes to San Francisco, Chuck Lee is introduced in a scene at Fisherman's Wharf where he tries (but fails) to take Bond by surprise by coming from behind him:

> - Lee: Your old sidekick Felix Leiter was right. Nobody gets close to Double-O-Seven. Chuck Lee, CIA.
> - Bond: Glad you're with us, Chuck. How's Felix?
> - Lee: Spreading his duff in Washington. They kicked him upstairs or he'd be here himself to hold your hand.

(Note that there was also a version where 007 met Lee not at Fisherman's Wharf, but at the old Alcatraz prison located in San Francisco Bay. Q was also present with them in this one).

Pola is now given the name Ivanova and 007 cooks his "quiche des cabinet[s]" to Stacey. In the mine, Zorin now has Conley killed when his usefulness comes to an end.

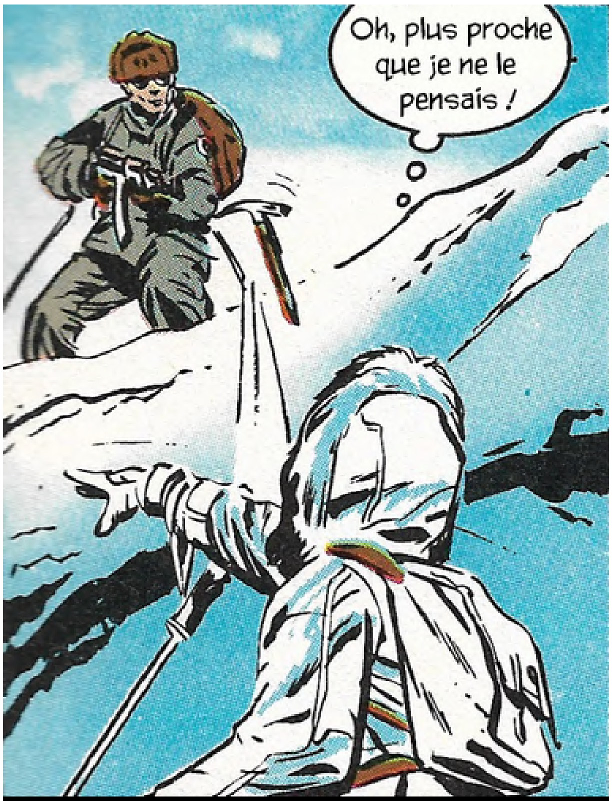
Regarding the finale on the Golden Gate, Zorin is now armed with an ax and the airship ends up exploding (because of a spark).

Snooper coming to stalk on our heroes in the shower has also been added.

Alcatraz Island.

June 20, 1984' revised scripts

Shortly before filming began, a new script was completed on June 20, 1984. The copy I have was revised several times over the following months (June 29; July 13, 23, 30; August 1, 3 ; October 5, 12 and November 20, 22, 1984) and has 145 pages.



Oh, plus proche que je ne le pensais !

Many of the differences from the film that this script contains can be found in Semic's comic book adaptation of the film.

In the pre-title, the script still contains Bond throwing an ice ax at a Soviet soldier and Kimberley is falling into bed without protest (in the film she lets out a "Commander Bond!"):

> - Kimberley: I thought you'd never get back.
> - Bond: I ran into a few unfriendly natives.
> (In the film, Bond responds that "there was a heck of a crowd on the piste").

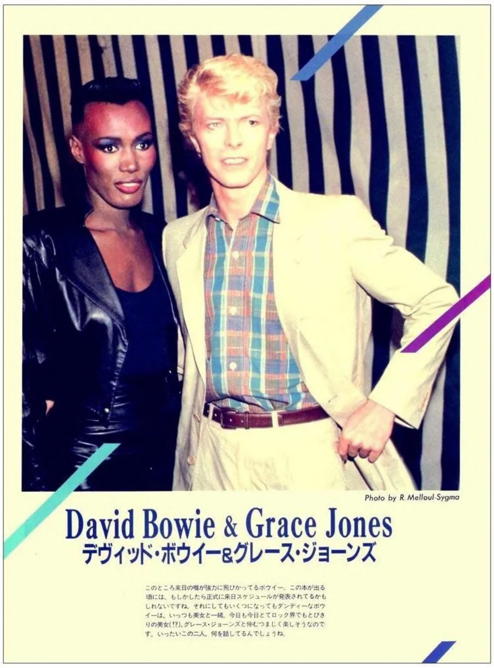

Photo by R. Melloul-Sygma

David Bowie & Grace Jones

デヴィッド・ボウイー&グレース・ジョーンズ

このところ来日の噂が強力に飛びかってるボウイー。この本が出る頃には、もしかしたら正式に来日スケジュールが発表されてるかもしれないですね。それにしてもいくつになってもダンディーなボウイーは、いっつも美女と一緒。今日も今日とてロック界でもとびきりの美女(!?)、グレース・ジョーンズと仲むつまじく楽しそうなのです。いったいこの二人、何を話してるんでしょうね。

The script also calls for a shot where stunned Russian soldiers watch the MI6 iceberg boat drives away...

Snooper now makes a first appearance in M's office and when the action moves to Ascot racecourse, Zorin is still described as "he has one grey and one blue eye" (this will not be the case in the film. Years later, this attribute will be given to Stamper in Tomorrow Never Dies[25]).

> - Grace Jones[26] : Producers didn't know who was going to be my lover and boss, the film's main villain. At first it was going to be David Bowie. He declined, because he said he didn't want to be in a film where for most of it his character would be played by a stand-in doing the stunts. He also wanted to see the script, and for a long time they weren't ready. They then asked Mick Jagger, because they definitely wanted this to be a rock 'n' roll MTV Bond. He didn't want to do it either, and they were struggling with getting a male rock star for the villain. The role was eventually taken by Christopher Walken, styled to be very Thin White Duke Bowie: lean, mean, blond, and suavely narcissistic.

May Day is "shapely, tall, somewhat bizarrely dressed twenty eight year old girl with a distinctive short hairdo and a beautiful but saturninely placid face".

A dialogue between an Ascot official and Zorin was also planned after his horse won the race:

- Sir Aubrey: This is becoming habitual, Mr. Zorin.
- Zorin: Each time only makes me more grateful, Sir Aubrey.

In the deleted scene of the French police station we will note some small differences with what was filmed but cut during editing:

> [Inside a Parisian police station, M waits impatiently. A pimp and two prostitutes are manhandled through barred doors to lock up area as a disheveled Bond, dressed in last night's black tie, comes out escorted by a guard. He stops at a Sergeant's desk. The Sergeant takes a sealed envelope containing Bond's possessions, rips it open and dumps the contents on the desk. An underwater wrist watch, fountain pen, lighter etc. He starts to pick up the watch by winding stem].
> - Stg: One watch...
> [The stem pulls away and is actually the end of a garrot cord which winds out from watch. The Sergeant lets go of the stem, in surprise. It winds back into watch. Bond picks the watch up and puts it on his wrist].
> - Bond: An old family heirloom.
> [The Sergeant picks up a fountain pen and unscrews the top].
> - Stg: One pen...
> [The Sergeant scribbles with the pen on note pad and screws the top back on as he hands the pen to Bond].
> - Stg: ...In working order.
> [The pad begins to smoke and curl up, unnerving the Sergeant slightly. He picks up a lighter].
> - Stg. One lighter...
> [He flicks it. The lighter is a miniature acetylene torch: a large flame shoots out, singeing the sergeant's eyebrows. He drops the lighter and pushes the remainder of Bond's things away].
> - Stg: Take them! Just sign here.

(In a previous version, Bond when leaving the cell, he didn't see his pen among his personal effects that were given to him. A police officer then assured him that there was no pen on him when he was arrested. The policeman had in fact stolen 007's pen and once Bond had left the police station, we saw smoke coming out of the policeman's pocket who then hurried to take off his uniform which was probably burning).

The following dialogue between Bond, Tibbett and M also underwent some changes in the film:

> \- M: Your release gratifies me, Double-O Seven. All it took was 600,000 francs in damages and penalties for violating most of the Napoleonic code. May I remind you this operation was to be conducted discreetly.
> - Bond: Under the circumstances, sir, I felt it was more important to identify the assassin.
> \- M: Any ideas?
> \- Bond: None that make any sense, sir. What did Aubergene hope to learn at the Zorin thoroughbred sales?
> \- Tibbett: I think I can arrange an invitation, Sir. Bit shore notice, but I might be able to squeeze Bond in.
> \- M: Very well, and try to avoid any more international incidents: the exchequer can't afford them.

The action then moves to a 16th or 17th century castle where Bond and Tibbett are greeted by Pan Ho and Scarpine. In this script, it is Pan Ho who says all the lines that were ultimately distributed in the film to Scarpine up to the line "No, those are the servants quarters". Scarpine is described as "a swarthy, middle-aged, Corsican, deceptively pudgy and amiable looking". 007 no longer buys a horse at auction in this script.

After some time, Bond and Tibbett finally go up to their room (the sexual innuendos between 007 and Jenny Flex don't exist in the script). On the balcony, the dialogues between the two protagonists differ from the film when Stacey arrives by helicopter:

> \- Tibbett: Another wealthy owner?
> \- Bond: Or a Zorin inamorata? Whoever she is I like her style. Maybe my stay here won't be all official business.
> \- Tibbett: We're on a mission.
> \- Bond: And she's part of it.

Bond is later accosted by Scarpine:

> \- Scarpine: Enjoying the party, Mr. Sinjin-Smythe?
> \- Bond: Immensely. Always enjoy a good knees-up.

And Bond meets Zorin. If Zorin remains rather evasive in the film when 007 asks him if he is interested in fly casting fishing, in the script his reaction is cooler:

> \- Zorin: Delightful pastime. I must do it more often. But I'm neglecting my other guests. Enjoy yourself. You will find the young ladies stimulating compagny.
> [Then when Bond meets Stacey]:
> \- Stacey: No, I'm not interested in race horses.

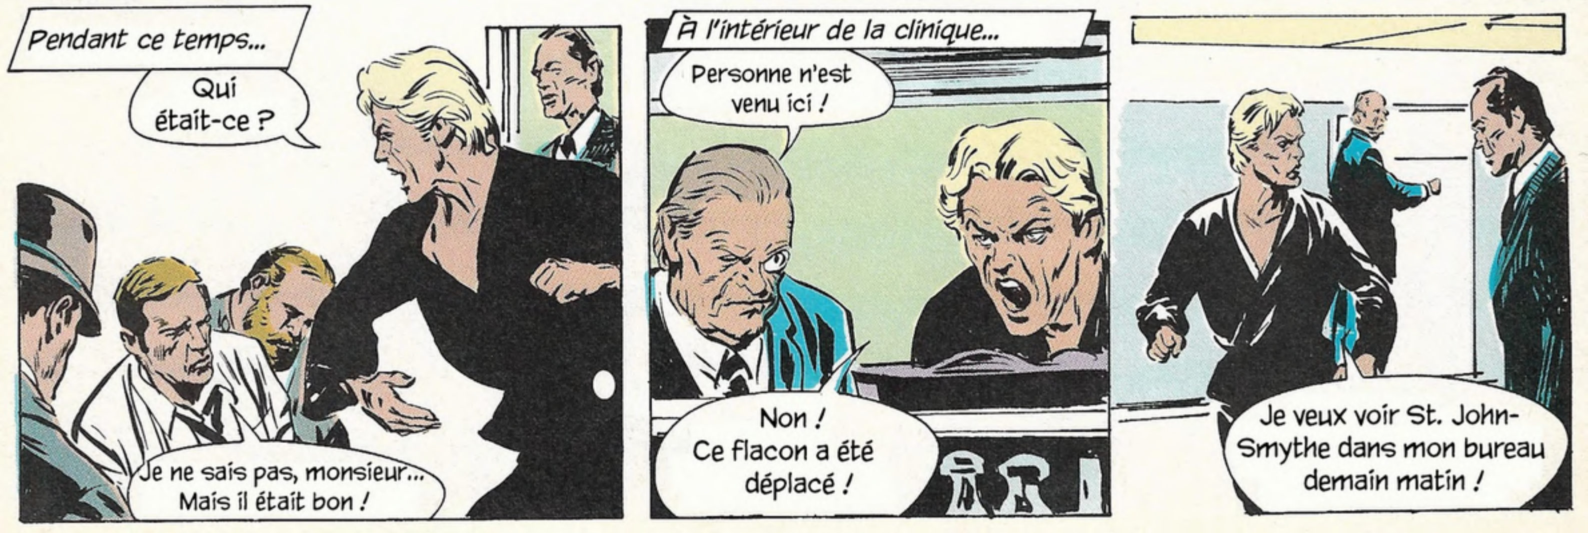
> - Bond: As long as you don't feel the same way about English bachelors who fancy American girls.

The fight scenes in the warehouse and Zorin's training with May Day are quite faithful to the film. The only slight difference comes from the fact that May Day pronounces Sinjin-Smyth's name when she finds him in her room: Zorin thus knows what is happening. Likewise there was supposed to be a very short scene where Zorin asked the guards, whom Bond had packed away during the fight in the warehouse, who had attacked them.



Pendant ce temps...
Qui était-ce ?
Je ne sais pas, monsieur... Mais il était bon !
À l'intérieur de la clinique...
Personne n'est venu ici !
Non ! Ce flacon a été déplacé !
Je veux voir St. John-Smythe dans mon bureau demain matin !

When Zorin sees Bond the next day, he says, "Good morning. You slept well?", to which 007 responds "Never better".

Introduced into this script is the fact that Tibbett had already washed the car and has to dirty it again.

Then come the scenes of the car wash, those of the horse obstacle course and the Rolls in the water which hardly differ from the film, except for the fact that it is Pan Ho and not Scarpine who disarms and knocks out Bond. Likewise, there isn't the reply "well, it's not mutual" from Bond after "you amuse me, Mr. Bond" from Zorin.

After the meeting with Gogol (now taking place on Zorin's property), the film and the script move on to the scene of the meeting in the airship on which it is written "ZORIN OIL" (and not "ZORIN INDUSTRIES"). A first line, probably referring to industrial espionage, is absent from the film. Zorin said:

> - Zorin: Gentlemen, you may find the venue of our meeting unconventional, but I assure you we will not be overheard.

A Taiwanese man decides not to take part in the operation and Zorin dismisses him, telling him that May Day will "provide you with a drink". After she threw him into San Francisco Bay, Zorin had a line where he asked May Day "Did he get his drink?", which was changed to "So, does anybody else want to drop out?" in the movie.

Moreover, the lines which justifies the film' title, "What a view!", "To a kill", is not present here.

This script removes the scenes where Bond meets the other members of MI6 for a final homage to Tibbett and a briefing. Instead Chuck Lee is now providing the information on Mortner.

Lee introduces Bond to the fisherman named O'Rourke who tells him about his crab problems. There is still a scene of anti-Zorin protest by the fishermen but unlike before, Bond no longer dives in the water. The scene now actually looks like this:

After the film's dialogue between Bond, Chuck Lee and O'Rourke, a boat containing our three characters plus other fishermen holding protest signs was to approach pump station by day.

- Bond: See if you can get a little closer.
- O'Rourke: O.K.

In the pumping station, Zorin, May Day, Scarpine and Conley look through a window at the fishing boat:

- Zorin: What do they want?
- Conley: A bunch of hotheads. They want us to stop pumping.
- Zorin (to Scarpine): Keep them away.

Scarpine gets into a boat with station's guards and approaches the one of the fishermen:

- Scarpine (into speaker): This area is restricted. Keep your distance.
- O'Rourke: This is as close as I can get.
- Bond: I'll wait until dark.

This scene was filmed but cut during editing as you can see on the photos above.

When night falls, Bond decides to break into the pumping station. In this script, 007 does it using diving equipment. He narrowly escapes a propeller while leaving his oxygen tank there. May Day then thinks that the bottle belongs to the Soviet spy Klotkoff whom she had just spotted and he is thrown into the propeller. It was this version that was chosen for the film.

My copy of the script also contains the old version of the scene with Snooper:

Q and a first guard [1G] are leaning over a map near a sentry box.

- A second guard [2G]: Go back to the lights and hang left.

- Q: Hang a left?

A guard dog, attached by a leash, sees Snooper and begins to bark furiously. Snooper rushes behind some pipes.

Q and a the guards turn to the dog.

- 2G: Shut your yap, mutt.

The dog continues to bark. The second guard hands the map to Q and goes to the sentry box to quiet the dog.

- Q (confused): A left hand turning...
- 1G: Be cool. Forget what Jim said. There's an easier way: go pass Gus' about a mile to the McDonald's...

On the pier, Snooper runs under the pipes where he is well hidden.

The dog is quiet now. The second guard joins them.

- 2G (to 1G): No, it's a left at Sutton, then right.
- 1G: That's the long way. Go to Van Ness, then take a left.
- Q: Thanks very much, chaps.

Q leaves them arguing and gets into a Volkswagen van. The van moves a few meters, passes a parked car (we don't see who is inside) and stops somewhere. In the background we see the pumping station jetty.

A guard is stationed near the main gate of the pier, his back to the jetty. Snooper moves away from the guard while continuing to progress between the pipes.

Inside the van, Q and James Bond manipulate the Snooper's controls. The robot's point of view is visible on a television monitor.

Snooper approaches a ramp that takes him near a station. The sound of pumping gets louder and louder as it approaches the bridge.

Snooper stops under a control room window and a telescopic stalk extends from its turret to level with the window. From Snooper's point of view we see Zorin, May Day, Conley and technicians looking at a control board.

- Conley: The porosity levels are still low.
- Zorin: Increase them.

In the van, Q and Bond watch and listen to them. The vocals are faint and somewhat obscured by the sound of pumping.

- Conley: We're at maximum pumping now...
- Zorin: We have a deadline. I'll hold you personally responsible if we miss it.

A growling sound is suddenly heard. Q reach the control unit hastily.

At the window, Snooper's turret rotates. A guard dog stands there and barks at the robot. The turret returns to the window and we see May Day reacting to the barking; she exit the room.

The Snooper's stalk retracts as the dog approaches closer and closer, growling. In the van, Bond is at a loss. Q hits a button.

- Q: Repellent!

The Snooper sprays liquid on the dog who yaps. The dog backs off, and barks again. Snooper goes away from him and disappears into a corner.

- Q: Foul smelling stuff.

A little further on, the Snooper's turret rotates again and May Day reacts to the dog's smell. The robot's camera focuses on a microphone located under the floor of the control room, positioned there using an articulated arm. The camera now moves towards a hole in the floor.

- Bond (shaking his head): Too dark.
- Q: Try infrared.

Suddenly two people in an inflatable boat located under the pier appear on the television monitor. One of them is called Klotkoff, the other seems to be another Soviet agent, slender, we can't see his face; he "could be Venz". They are equipped with headphones and a waterproof tape recorder.

- Q: An RM 214, Russian sound probe. We picked one up in Istanbul six months ago.
- Bond (puzzled): The Russians bugging Zorin, too?

A braking sound is suddenly heard. The dog appears from under the ramp, Snooper quickly hides under it, out of sight. May Day glances under the railing, she doesn't see Snooper but sees the microphone. She quickly heads towards the deck. In the van, the monitor image is darkened.

- Bond: Where's Snooper?
- Q: Stuck somewhere under the ramp.

Under the jetty, Klotkoff takes small wooden oars and quietly paddles out when he suddenly found himself jerk out from the boat. In another camera shot we see that Klotkoff is hanging by the scruff of the neck, held by May Day who is below the beams of the jetty. She can't see the other Russian agent on the boat.

The second Russian therefore takes the waterproof tape recorder and slips silently over the side, into the shadows.

May Day and Klotkoff are joined by Zorin, Scarpine and guards.

In the van, Q tries to locate Snooper. Bond gets up.

- Bond: Snooper's a write off.
- Q (stubbornly): I never desert a fellow agent in the field, Double-O-Seven.

Bond takes binoculars from a wall and gets out of the van.

Klotkoff, held by guards, stands near a service hatch. He begs Zorin in Russian, but the latter remains impassive and gestures to Scarpine who opens the trapdoor. The guards throw Klotkoff in, where he gets chopped up by the propeller before the turbine resumes a normal sound.

Bond is standing near the van, looking at the jetty with the binoculars. Q joins him and 007 sees something to his left. Through the binoculars we see a black figure wading through the waves.

> - Bond: At least one got away. It's their car down the road, I want the tape.

He hands the binoculars to Q, runs off and joins Pola Ivanova.

(Note that in the June 8 script there was a little extra scene after the Japanese baths scene, where we saw a Q, still in the van near the pumping station, smiling/relieved: he managed to get Snooper out of the station by placing it on a truck leaving the premises).

After the scenes with Howe, Bond follows Stacey's Eagle Wagon to her house (she drive a Jeep Cherokee the movie). There is the fight in the house where she now breaks the vase herself. During dinner with Stacey, Bond suggests he might stay to protect her:

> - Bond: Look... It might not be a bad idea if I stayed here tonight.
> She turns to face him, almost in his arms.
> - Stacey (with a slight smile): To protect me?
> - Bond: They may be back.
> - Stacey (smiling): I hope not.

This script marks the disappearance of the scene where Bond and Stacey go to inspect a crack in the ground as well as all those of the Halloween parade; Chuck Lee coming to Stacey's house instead and is getting strangled in his car by May Day.

Bond and Stacey escape the fire at City Hall and then escape the police captain in a fire truck (there's no "Dick Tracy" line from the captain). In this script, this pursuit is still as "minimalist" as before (only four pages); notably there is no part where the ladder swings.

> - Stacey: Are you really, James Bond?
> - Bond: You'd better believe it.

At the end the writers nonetheless added the destruction of police cars on the bridge and the police officers had to say that to their captain:

> - Captain: Harris, you can forget that Sergeant promotion. You're gonna pay for that vehicle, one hundred bucks a month, out of your paycheck.
> [Over the Captain's shoulder, Harris and Miller see the Captain's car being crushed by the bridge's counterweight].
> - Harris: I hope your wearing a comfortable pair of shoes, Captain.
> - Miller: 'Cause it look like you'll be walking home.

In the mine: still no scene where Zorin and Scarpine machine gun the workers with Uzi in the script. Zorin just watches "fascinatedly" and kicks a worker who has climbed towards him.

Zorin kidnaps Stacey (she turns around in the script when Bond says "Behind you") and 007 clings to a mooring line.

She is now sitting next to Mortner (Zorin himself pilot the airship):

- Stacey: Zorin's mad. He'll kill us all.
- Mortner: Just sit there and shut up.

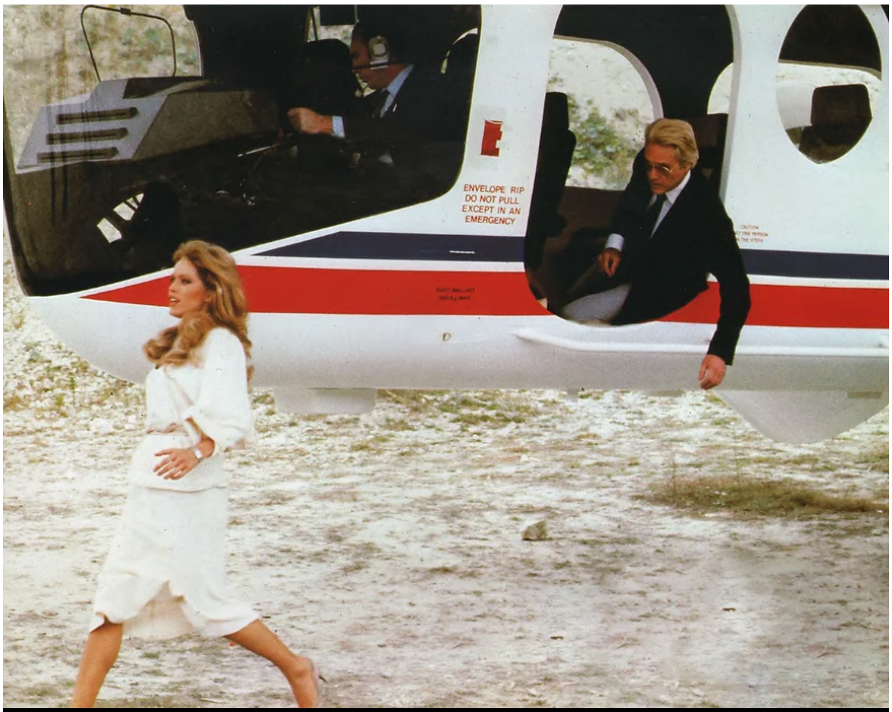
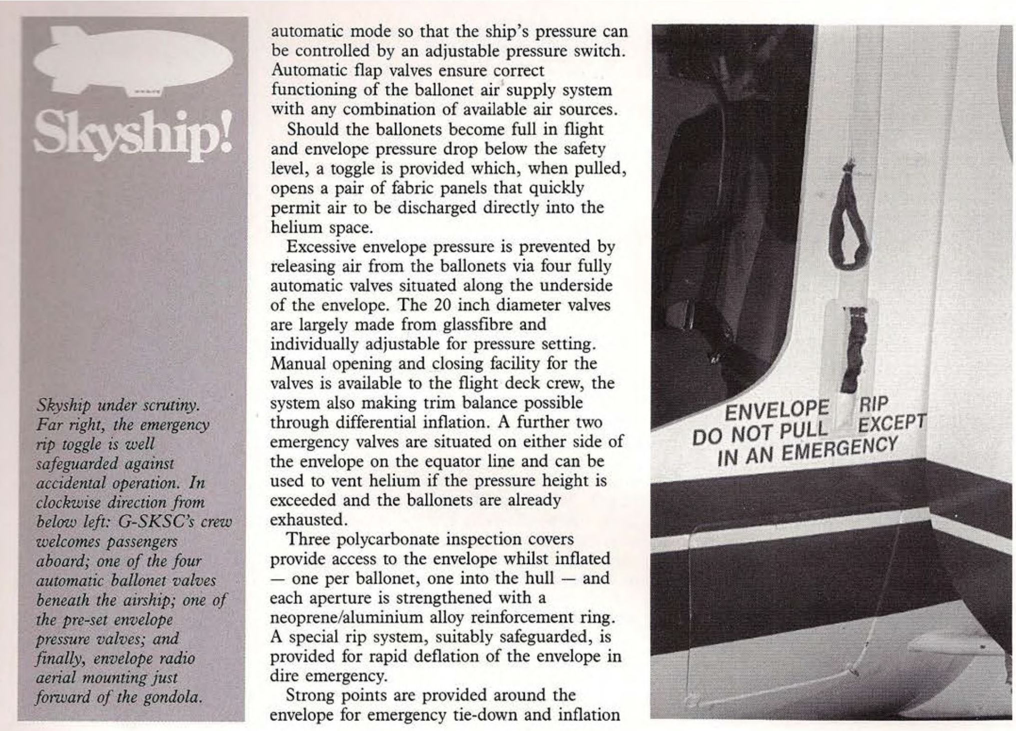
After the airship crashes into the Golden Gate, Stacey rushes towards the door, Scarpine catches her and she grabs a fire extinguisher from a wall to knock him out (in contrast to the film where she knocks him out by surprise).

The grand finale also includes something interesting: if at first Stacey stays under the bridge' pipe, she then goes back up to the pillar. When Zorin falls from the bridge, Mortner is at the door and takes out a gun which he points at Bond... Suddenly Stacey deflates the airship balloon using a sort of emergency handle.



Note the inscription on the side of the airship.

The airship therefore begins to deflate and move away from the bridge before falling into the sea...



Skyship!
ENVELOPE RIP
DO NOT PULL EXCEPT IN AN EMERGENCY

Skyship under scrutiny. Far right, the emergency rip toggle is well safeguarded against accidental operation. In clockwise direction from below left: G-SKSC's crew welcomes passengers aboard; one of the four automatic ballonet valves beneath the airship; one of the pre-set envelope pressure valves; and finally, envelope radio aerial mounting just forward of the gondola.

automatic mode so that the ship's pressure can be controlled by an adjustable pressure switch. Automatic flap valves ensure correct functioning of the ballonet air supply system with any combination of available air sources.

Should the ballonets become full in flight and envelope pressure drop below the safety level, a toggle is provided which, when pulled, opens a pair of fabric panels that quickly permit air to be discharged directly into the helium space.

Excessive envelope pressure is prevented by releasing air from the ballonets via four fully automatic valves situated along the underside of the envelope. The 20 inch diameter valves are largely made from glassfibre and individually adjustable for pressure setting. Manual opening and closing facility for the valves is available to the flight deck crew, the system also making trim balance possible through differential inflation. A further two emergency valves are situated on either side of the envelope on the equator line and can be used to vent helium if the pressure height is exceeded and the ballonets are already exhausted.

Three polycarbonate inspection covers provide access to the envelope whilst inflated — one per ballonet, one into the hull — and each aperture is strengthened with a neoprene/aluminium alloy reinforcement ring. A special rip system, suitably safeguarded, is provided for rapid deflation of the envelope in dire emergency.

Strong points are provided around the envelope for emergency tie-down and inflation

Excerpt from Skyship! by RL Rimell: the Skyship 500 airships as used in the film have this emergency cord designed for a rapid deflation.

Finally, unlike in the film, it's not General Gogol who comes to present the order of Lenin to Bond in M's office, but a United States ambassador who comes to present him with the Medal of Honor.

In another 150-page script (also dated June 20, 1984, despite all the revised pages within), the scene where Bond swings on the fire truck ladder is now present, as is Mortner handling dynamite at the Golden Gate.

Sources/references from chapter 14: A View to a Kill

1. "Flying High with Bond" interview of Glen by Tom Sciacca in 007 magazine (issue #17, 1984).
2. "The James Bond Archives" by Howard Hughes and Paul Duncan (2012).
3. "James Bond: A celebration" by Peter Haining (1987).
4. "On Location with A View to a Kill" by Lee Goldberg in Starlog magazine (issue #92, march 1985).
5. A View to a Kill press kit.
6. Albert Broccoli interview by Adam Pirani in Starlog magazine (issue #99, october 1985).
7. "Sermon From The Savoy", interview with David Bowie by Charles Shaar Murray in NME magazine (September 29, 1984 issue).
8. "The James Bond Archives" by Howard Hughes and Paul Duncan (2012).
9. "A View to a Kill: the official movie magazine" (1985).
10. "The James Bond Archives" by Howard Hughes and Paul Duncan (2012).
11. "The James Bond Archives" by Howard Hughes and Paul Duncan (2012).
12. "Magnetic mirror" page on Wikipedia.
13. "In conversation with Director John Glen, Part 2" on 007.com: https://www.007.com/in-conversation-with-director-john-glen-part-2/
14. "Some Kind of Hero: The Remarkable Story of the James Bond Films" by Matthew Field & Ajay Chowdhury (2015).
15. A "Rick Sylvester - James Bond Stunts" Facebook post: https://www.facebook.com/RickSylvesterJamesBondStuntman/photos/how-many-people-have-a-ski-run-with-their-name-on-it-one-of-the-most-difficult-a/901571059977900/
16. MI6 Confidential magazine (issue Special #4 "John Glen: all time high"; 2020).
17. "The Man With the Golden Eye" by Peter Lamont (2016).
18. "Writing Bond" by Mark A. Altman in Cinefantastique magazine (vol. 19, issue 5, July 1989).
19. "A View to a Kill: the official movie magazine" (1985).
20. "On the Set of Octopussy" by Richard Holliss in Starlog magazine (issue #71, June 1983).
21. "Licenced to Thrill: An Interview with John Glen" by Deane Barker on Mr. Kiss Kiss Bang Bang website: http://ianfleming.org/mkkbb/magazine/glen1.shtml
22. "Nobody Does it Better" by Mark A. Altman and Edward Gross (2020).
23. "On Location with A View to a Kill" by Lee Goldberg in Starlog magazine (issue #92, march 1985).
24. "The James Bond Archives" by Howard Hughes and Paul Duncan (2012).
25. Götz Otto interview with the author: https://www.commander007.net/2020/divertimento-interviews-with-gotz-otto-and-ola-rapace/
26. "What's there to says?" article in MI6 Confidential magazine (issue #71, december 2023).

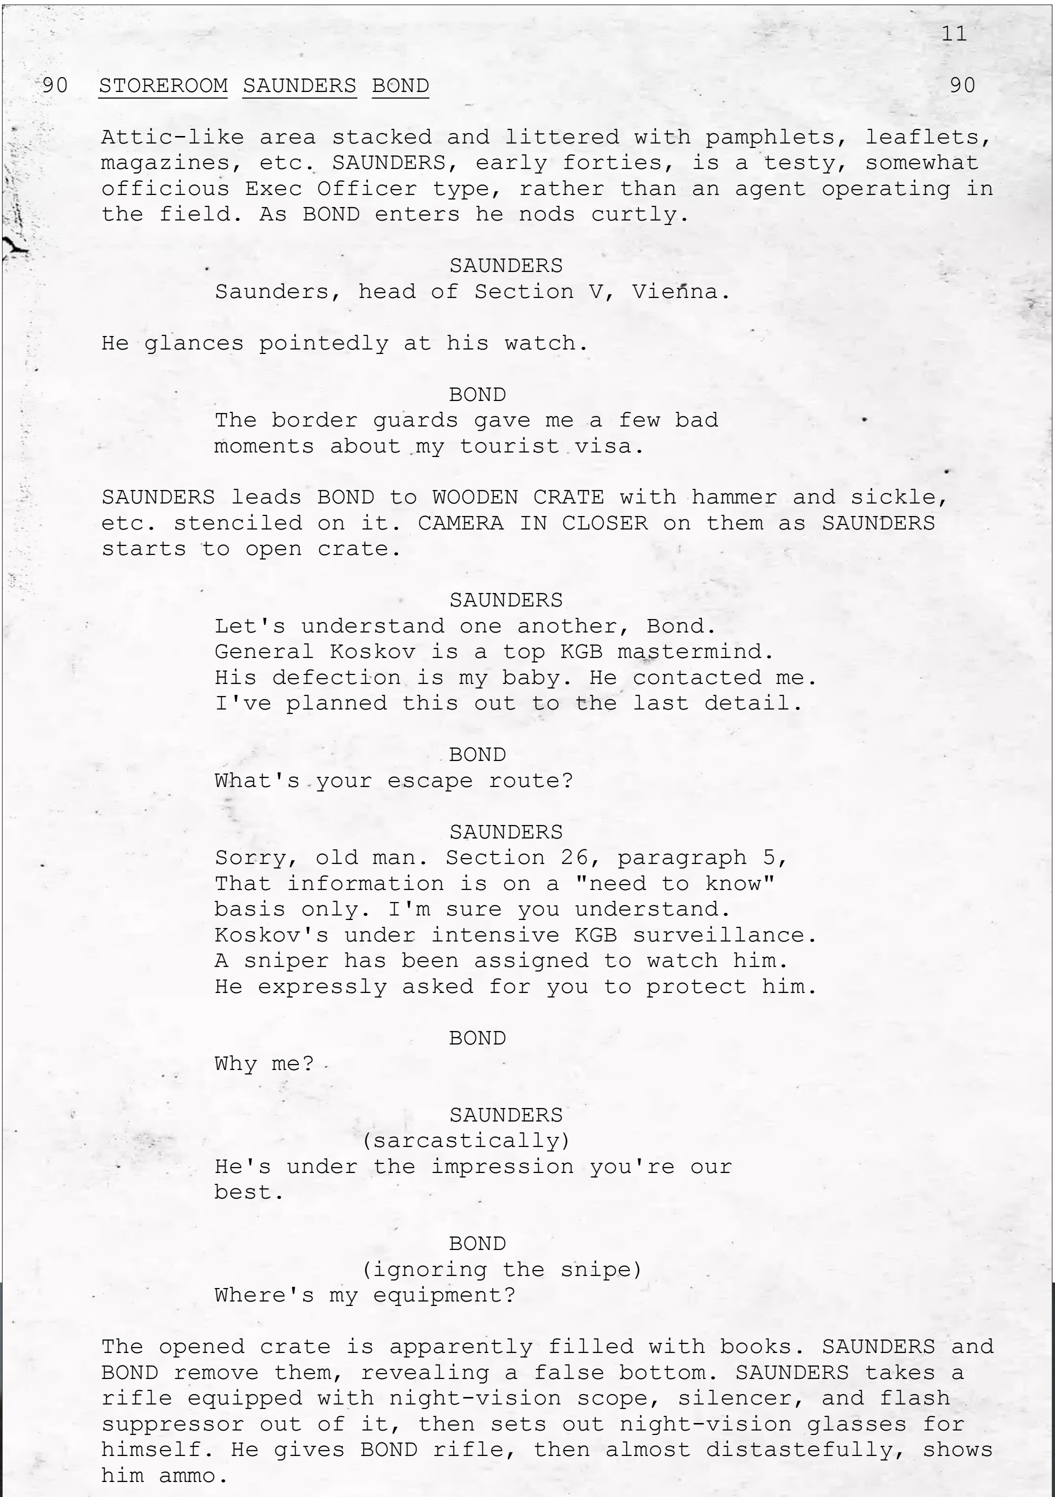
THE NEW JAMES BOND . . . LIVING ON THE EDGE
ALBERT R. BROCCOLI
presents
TIMOTHY DALTON
as IAN FLEMING'S
JAMES BOND 007
THE LIVING DAYLIGHTS

Release date (premiere) :
27 June 1987

Writing credit as per title sequence:
"Screenplay by Richard Maibaum and Michael G. Wilson"

Director :.....................................John Glen
Producers :.Albert Broccoli and Michael Wilson
Associate producer:.....Barbara Broccoli
Director photography :............Alec Mills
Set Designer :........................Peter Lamont
Composer :................................John Barry
Editors :..................P. Davies and J. Grover
Title sequence :...............Maurice Binder
Title song vocals :...............................a-ha



11

90 STOREROOM SAUNDERS BOND 90

Attic-like area stacked and littered with pamphlets, leaflets, magazines, etc. SAUNDERS, early forties, is a testy, somewhat officious Exec Officer type, rather than an agent operating in the field. As BOND enters he nods curtly.

SAUNDERS
Saunders, head of Section V, Vienna.

He glances pointedly at his watch.

BOND
The border guards gave me a few bad moments about my tourist visa.

SAUNDERS leads BOND to WOODEN CRATE with hammer and sickle, etc. stenciled on it. CAMERA IN CLOSER on them as SAUNDERS starts to open crate.

SAUNDERS
Let's understand one another, Bond. General Koskov is a top KGB mastermind. His defection is my baby. He contacted me. I've planned this out to the last detail.

BOND
What's your escape route?

SAUNDERS
Sorry, old man. Section 26, paragraph 5, That information is on a "need to know" basis only. I'm sure you understand. Koskov's under intensive KGB surveillance. A sniper has been assigned to watch him. He expressly asked for you to protect him.

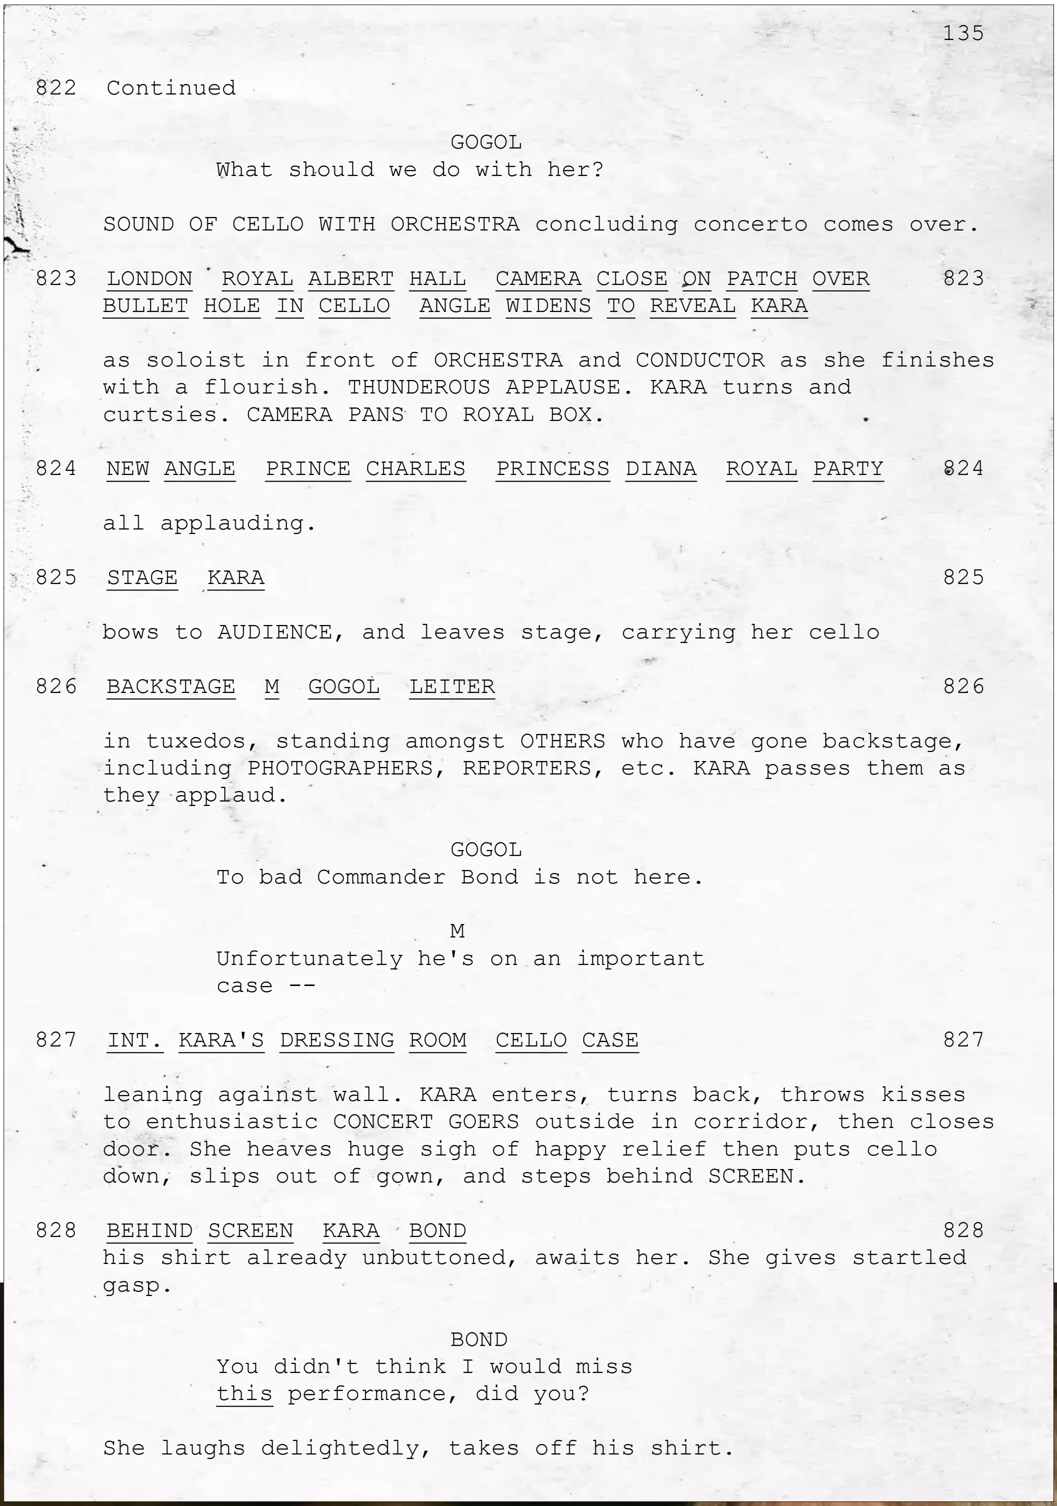
BOND
Why me?

SAUNDERS
(sarcastically)
He's under the impression you're our best.

BOND
(ignoring the snipe)
Where's my equipment?

The opened crate is apparently filled with books. SAUNDERS and BOND remove them, revealing a false bottom. SAUNDERS takes a rifle equipped with night-vision scope, silencer, and flash suppressor out of it, then sets out night-vision glasses for himself. He gives BOND rifle, then almost distastefully, shows him ammo.

CHAPTER 15



135

822 Continued

GOGOL
What should we do with her?

SOUND OF CELLO WITH ORCHESTRA concluding concerto comes over.

823 LONDON ROYAL ALBERT HALL CAMERA CLOSE ON PATCH OVER BULLET HOLE IN CELLO ANGLE WIDENS TO REVEAL KARA 823

as soloist in front of ORCHESTRA and CONDUCTOR as she finishes with a flourish. THUNDEROUS APPLAUSE. KARA turns and curtsies. CAMERA PANS TO ROYAL BOX.

824 NEW ANGLE PRINCE CHARLES PRINCESS DIANA ROYAL PARTY 824

all applauding.

825 STAGE KARA 825

bows to AUDIENCE, and leaves stage, carrying her cello

826 BACKSTAGE M GOGOL LEITER 826

in tuxedos, standing amongst OTHERS who have gone backstage, including PHOTOGRAPHERS, REPORTERS, etc. KARA passes them as they applaud.

GOGOL
To bad Commander Bond is not here.

M
Unfortunately he's on an important case --

827 INT. KARA'S DRESSING ROOM CELLO CASE 827

leaning against wall. KARA enters, turns back, throws kisses to enthusiastic CONCERT GOERS outside in corridor, then closes door. She heaves huge sigh of happy relief then puts cello down, slips out of gown, and steps behind SCREEN.

828 BEHIND SCREEN KARA BOND 828
his shirt already unbuttoned, awaits her. She gives startled gasp.

BOND
You didn't think I would miss this performance, did you?

She laughs delightedly, takes off his shirt.

Cast:

James Bond :......................Timothy Dalton
Georgi Koskov :...................Jeroen Krabbé
Kara Milovy :......................Maryam d'Abo
Brad Whitaker :..................Joe Don Baker
Necros :.......................Andreas Wisniewski
Kamran Shah :...........................Art Malik
Leonid Pushkin :...........John Rhys-Davies
Saunders :....................Thomas Wheatley
Felix Leiter :............................John Terry
Gogol :...................................Walter Gotell
M :..Robert Brown
Moneypenny :.....................Caroline Bliss
Q :................................Desmond Llewelyn

Main filming locations: Austria, Morocco, Gibraltar and United Kingdom

James Bond has a new performer in Timothy Dalton with his more serious approach to the character and a more dangerous side; a Bond that we believe capable of killing in cold blood unlike the one of Roger Moore. 007, however, knows how to keep his humor through a few well-placed lines and the action is still omnipresent. Maryam d'Abo knows how to bring the innocence that Kara needs and the relationship between the latter and Bond is convincing... Unlike the one between Bond and Leiter, with Terry playing the most forgettable version of the character. The bad guys are also not the greatest in this film where the storyline is good but not the easiest to understand. To conclude: special mention to John Barry.

THE LIVING DAYLIGHTS

Table of contents

The Living Daylights

Rebooting James Bond: the October 25, 1985' treatment....964
Rebooting James Bond: Some revisions and previous versions....971
Rebooting James Bond: November 8, 1985' treatment....976
Abandon the reboot....982
Fresh start: going from the sort-story to the Soviet-Afghan War....983
Denisov, Sanchez, casino and a trip with Leiter....986
The storyline develops....992
January 23, 1986' treatment: iceboat, improvised sled and Prater....996
January 31, 1986' treatment: escape method and royal cameo....1000
February 10, 1986' treatment: pre-title and Rosika....1001
April 11, 1986' script: section 26 and toy soldiers....1002
25 April 1986' "second draft screenplay"....1003
May 16, 1986' script: flying carpet, gorilla and helicopter....1027
Revised 05.1986 to 01.1987' script: Pushkin, Aston Martin and Kamran....1031

Rebooting James Bond: the October 25, 1985' treatment

After A View to a Kill, it was clear to both the actor and the filmmakers that Roger Moore would not return for an 8th Bond.

- Cubby Broccoli[1] : Michael and I decided we not only needed a new 007, but an entirely fresh concept for the fifteenth James Bond film. [...] The new concept on the film was going to be worked out initially by Michael and Dick Maibaum, writing together.

- Richard Maibaum[2] : [Me and Wilson] were equal collaborators. We did a lot of conferring. When we started out, we did a very full treatment, sometimes 50 or 60 pages long. We didn't do anything like writing three pages worth of treatment on the back of a letter or anything like that. Cubby liked to know beforehand what's going to be. We lay it out very carefully. Of course, you may deviate from it if you come up with something better, or if something doesn't work, but it is laid out very thoroughly beforehand. We discuss it. Sometimes we would sit there and write it together. Sometimes, Michael wrote the first draft, or I would write the first draft, and we gave it to the other fellow and argued about it. There's an awful lot of arguing that goes on. But you know what they say, if collaborators don't argue, then there's one collaborator too many. [...] Cubby had final approval, of course, and then John [Glen] would sometimes sit in. As I say, it's a true collaboration.

- Michael Wilson[3] : I go to California because Cubby Broccoli and Dick live there. I work with them for three months or so developing the story. Then usually John Glen joins us and we sort of trash out the basic story and treatment. When we're concentrating on the story, we all work very closely together, John and Cubby and Dick and I.

Screenwriters Richard Maibaum and Michael Wilson see the fact they have to find a new actor as an opportunity to try something special: rebooting the saga.

While one of the points raised by critics on A View to a Kill was a Moore who seemed too old in the role, the writers began to draft the origin story/prequel of our favorite spy who would then be in his early twenties: how James Bond became 007. Yes, twenty years before Casino Royale, we were already thinking of returning to the roots of the character.

Among all the versions of this reboot scenario in my possession, the oldest on which we can distinguish a date is a treatment from October 25, 1985. This one weighs 19 page.

The pre-title place the action in 1972. We are in Austria, in a castle transformed into a hotel located on the side of a mountain where we find a James Bond in his twenties. He is in a bed with satin sheets, in the company of a lovely young lady named Elsa. After their intimate moments, Elsa asks him where he was all these years (understand by that: I looked for a man like you for a long time) and his name.

"The name is Bond, James Bond", he replies.

He is a Lieutenant in the Royal Navy posted as Assistant Military Attaché at the British Embassy in Vienna. Bond is unaware that Elsa is the fiancee of a certain Von Rahm: an important Austrian diplomat who invited Bond to the castle to do hang gliding.

Once in the air (each in a different hang glider), it becomes clear that Von Rahm knows that Bond slept with his fiancee during his stay at the castle. Indeed, Von Rahm tries to kick Bond before cutting the canvas of his hang glider with a knife (the action takes place in the air, with Bond trying to dodge the attacks of his opponent who is chasing him). This has the effect of precipitating Bond and his hang glider towards the icy and tumultuous waters of the highest falls in Austria: the Krimml waterfalls. We don't see if he survives or not.

But Bond did survive, as proof we find him in the following scene arriving at the Vienna opera; he has not changed his clothes in the meantime. There he spots Von Rahm and puts his fist in his face. Attendants and bodyguards (of members of high society who had come to attend the performance) intervene; Bond sends several to the ground but they regroup. Bond then tells Elsa that he has never been an opera fan and lets the waiters escort him out. (I assume the pre-title end here).

After these events, Bond is reprimanded at the British embassy: he is told that the Austrian government had requested his diplomatic immunity to be lifted so that he could be prosecuted. However, it was decided that he will be sent home where he will be facing a court martial by the Navy.

In order to get his mind off his imminent trial, James Bond heads to his family home in Scotland.

There we meet his aunt "Charmaine" (not Charmian, strangely), and Bond's grandfather (in poor health) with whom he goes to shoot clay pigeons. Grandfather explains to "Jamie" that there is a long naval tradition in the Bond family, his ancestors having fought at Trafalgar (1805) and Jutland (1916). We also learn that James's parents died in a climbing accident when he was six years old, that the family motto is "The world is not enough" and that his grandfather doesn't intend to leave him the little remaining money of the family because James would be capable of losing it in gambling. However grandfather is understanding, in fact he knows someone who could help James: an old friend who once courted Charmaine.

It is at the "Blayde's" club that Bond meets his potential savior, Admiral "Meservy" (not spelled correctly, namely Messervy), known as "M", who has James's file in front of him. Kicked out of Eton for trouble with a girl. Kicked out of his father's old school when he was caught going up/climbing to the fourth floor bedroom. Six years in Swiss schools. Speaks

French, German and Chinese. Joined the Navy and successfully completed the commando training and flight school he attended. Several accusations of insubordination and absence, but the Admiral seems to think that these are linked to periods of inactivity and that they are therefore just a detail.

Bond seems to be the warrior type, "with no war to fight" adds Bond. M tells him that he is wrong, there is one that never stops: the secret war. He thinks Bond would be an excellent candidate for the Secret Service and there just happens to be a vacant assignment in South Asia. If Bond decides to join MI6, the date of his court martial trial could be postponed. Bond needs time to think.

During this phase of reflection at home (including a party in his apartment with girls), his grandfather dies. This is apparently the moment he realizes that joining the Secret Service is the best thing for him to do. After the funeral, Bond calls M to tell him he's up for it and his new boss is send him to Southeast Asia.

Bond lands at the controls of a DC3 plane at Singapore airport and heads to a Universal Exports warehouse. There he met Bin Ushak (manager of Universal Exports in Malaysia), Felix Leiter (CIA) and Q (who was sent there to install a new radio in the DC3).

Leiter says that here Universal Export intentionally has the reputation of being a company that could fly anything without question. Leiter add that Bond is going to have to fly to the Golden Triangle with a man named Bart Trevor (note that " Bart" is handwritten over another scratched out and unreadable name).

Between his forties and his fifties, the face marked by the events he has gone through during his life, as well as by his excessive consumption of alcohol, Trevor waits for Bond in a disreputable bar called the Red Dragon. He explains to Bond that they are going to fly to the Golden Triangle to deliver "machine tools" to a certain General Kwang: a warlord who is in drug trafficking and smuggling.

During this meeting, two (unnamed) men attack them: according to Trevor, they are competitors who would have liked to have the delivery contract with Kwang. Trevor and Bond overpowers them, "Not bad. So swabbing decks isn't all they teach you in the Navy". Bond retorts that he could have lost his family jewels in the fight with a misplaced kick.

RAFFLES HOTEL
RAFFLES HOTEL

Before leaving for the Golden Triangle, Bond stays at the famous Raffles Hotel in Singapore. When reserving a room, his eyes land on a hotel customers he meets by chance at the reception: a Caucasian woman named Betje Bedwell and her eunuch bodyguard Kowtow. He decides to reserve a room not far from the one of Betje.

From his window Bond observes Betje and at one point sees her discreetly leaving her room while her male chaperon is sleeping. Bond decides to follow her through the streets of Singapore and notices she is buying a rhino horn from a Chinese apothecary. He decides to approach her in a nightclub and seduces her; there are a series of shots around Singapore of them dancing, eating and attending the festival Hungry Ghost together.

Bond gives her a jewel as a gift (meanwhile Kowtow is looking for her, but he don't see them). Eventually they end up to bed in Bond's hotel room. He asks her how he can call her back but Betje says that although the night was magnificent (the greatest of her life), it won't go any further.

James leaves for the airport. While Q finishes preparing the DC3 plane and "(possibly he gives Bond a few gadgets here)", Leiter explains to Bond the route to take and tells him that he has arranged with the Burmese so that their radar screens will be inactive at a certain time. They are joined by Trevor and a Betje (as well as Kowtow) who asks who the pilot is. Betje is told that it is Bond; both are surprised to see each other again.

Suddenly a truck arrives in which are the two competitors seen at the bar, who throw a grenade at them, but Trevor throws it back to them. Before their adversaries have time to recover and before the authorities arrive to investigate, Bond, Trevor, Betje and Kowtow board the DC3 and take off.

The plane piloted by Bond flies over jungle landscapes while he and Betje continue to pretend not to know each other. Suddenly Burmese rockets explode near their aircraft! Bond manages to get out of Burmese territory and inspecting a crate that was damaged during an explosion, he discovers that he is not transporting some machine tools but a shipment of Chinese firearms (as well as Chinese army' uniforms).

Bond was supposed to pilot a DC3. This will be the case in Quantum of Solace.

They end up landing on an airstrip located in the jungle where they are welcomed by a certain La Font or LaFont (the spelling varies depending on the paragraph) who is a former French major who fought in the Indochina War. La Font is currently the commander of Kwang's small army (which nonetheless amounts to a thousand men!). La Font, Bond and Trevor ride on horses towards the (Chinese type) fortress of Kwang while men unload the plane.

There La Font presents them to Kwang who is currently painting. The man, who is in his fifties, says he is keen to test the weapons they have brought and if he is happy with them, they will be paid and free to leave. This will be done tomorrow because a group of concubines is arriving right now.

They leave Kwang with the concubines, and Bond asks Trevor if rhino horns aren't supposed to have an aphrodisiac effect: according to the Chinese yes (but Trevor specifies it has never done anything to him personally).

La Font leads Bond and Trevor to their quarters and they witness a scene where men arrive at the fortress and are greeted by Kwang and La Font. These men carry the banner of a warlord named Kim Feng. Bond realizes that one of Feng's men is there to kill Kwang with a grenade and he eliminates him before he succeeds, thus attracting the recognition of Kwang who visibly swears revenge on Feng since he declares that they will test the weapons on live targets: at Feng's camp. Trevor then suggests to Kwang that Bond fly him over the camp with the DC3, so Kwang can direct the attack from the air.

After Kwang and LaFont have retired, Trevor reprimands Bond by telling him that the real goal of their mission was to get closer to Kwang in order to capture or eliminate him: "You've just prevented Feng's men from doing [the] dirty work for us". Bond asks him why kill Kwang? Is it because of his drug trafficking? Trevor replies that the CIA and MI6 are after him for another reason: he made a deal with the Pathet Lao (Laotian communist and paramilitary political organization) to transform the Golden Triangle into a base for launching raids against the Thailand, Malaysia and Burma.

Bond realizes that Bart Trevor also works for MI6 and the latter reveals to him that he is an agent belonging to Double-O Section with a license to kill. Trevor adds it will be easy to get Kwang on the plane now that the latter thinks they are his friends, thanks to the Bond action.

After repairing the plane, Bond sees Kowtow leading a group of concubines. Not seeing if Betje is one of them, he decides to follow them to find out. It turns out that the concubines are going to bathe in a kind of pool in the jungle and that Betje is one of them; Bond approaches her discreetly through the reeds. They move away a little, make love and talk; it's an opportunity to learn more about the young woman's past. Her father was an English lumberjack and her mother was Dutch. They were killed by communist insurgents and Kwang found her during a raid when she was 6 years old. He sent her to school in Hong Kong at the age of 11, and later made her his concubine. Recently Kwang has been having trouble to perform sexually. This is why he sent her to Singapore where she was to obtain rhino horn. If his men learn of his impotence, he risks losing face.

Later Kwang joins Bond and Trevor at DC3: he is accompanied by 10 armed men. Our heroes therefore resign themselves to kidnap him and fly him over the Feng camp where a battle is raging between the men of the two warlords (they even throw a few grenades from the plane). La Font and his men manage to triumph and capture Feng.

Back at the fortress, Feng (who wears a blindfold over one eye) is brought to Kwang who is painting landscapes. Kwang asks Feng why he tried to kill him; Feng replies that Kwang's deal with the Pathet Lao will mean the end of the warlords, also the Americans have put a price on Kwang's head. Informants have also told him that a group of assassins is on the way. Kwang laughs and order La Font to leave with Feng and to "make him comfortable".

A party to celebrate the victory takes place in the fortress with dancing and swordplay. Bond, Trevor, Kwang and Betje attend. Trevor points out to Bond that the clothes/jewelry Kwang and Betje are wearing look like they belong to the Manchu hoard/treasure, which disappeared from China in 1912 when the last empress was overthrown. This treasure contains jewelry, coins and other objects looted by the Manchus over six centuries.

Kwang offers them $100,000 to fly him somewhere: they accept. The dinner's pièce de résistance is brought by La Font: Feng's head in a tureen!

Bond slips into the concubines' quarters where he joins Betje. He asks her what she knows about the Manchu treasure and she replies that when Chiang Kai-Shek, whose men had found the treasure, was forced to leave for Formosa in 1949, he sent people to bring out the treasure from China. Kwang was a young captain who served on the expedition. Pursued by troops, Kwang and his comrades had hidden the treasure somewhere. Then with an execution squad, Kwang killed the others and then machine-gunned the execution squad, making him the only one who know where the treasure was hidden. Kwang then went to the Golden Triangle where he became what he became, but Betje is sure that he will soon try to retrieve the treasure to leave and live comfortably somewhere where he can peacefully devote himself to painting.

Kowtow surprises the two lovers and tries to strangle Bond who defends himself by impaling him in the eye with the rhino horn. They try to hide the body but are surprised by LaFont who has them locked in two separate cells.

Kwang prepares to kill Betje in the manner that concubines are killed, a torture called "a thousand cuts" but is hesitant about Bond's fate. He asks Trevor if he should kill Bond, and Trevor, wanting to gain time and Kwang's favor, says yes but suggests that Kwang torture him first in order to extract information from him.

While Betje awaits her ordeal and "during Bond's agony" (from here on the script is stingy with detail, as if the rest had been written in haste), Trevor frees Betje and together they free Bond. La Font and his men pursue them and Bart Trevor is killed while sacrificing himself so that Bond can escapes with Betje into the jungle. Although they are chased, they manage to survive and Betje treats Bond's wounds.

Their only hope is to escape by plane and they go to the airstrip. Once there, they see that the DC3 now have Chinese markings and that Kwang arrives with 40 of his men who are wearing the Chinese uniforms and weapons that Bond delivered to them. Bond finds Kwang's plan brilliant: he will land in Chinese territory posing as a government army troop, right next to where he had hidden the treasure at the time. He loads it all up and just has to fly off.

The DC3 takes off with Kwang. Bond knocks out a guard and climbs with Betje into a small two-seater plane on the runway. Once in the air, Bond sets off in pursuit of the DC3. They lose it in a thick cloud layer, but see a landscape filled with ruined tombs and pagoda-shaped rocks: this is the landscape that is the subject of Kwang's paintings. That's where he hid the loot, exclaims Bond.

James lands the small plane in a field and they approach near the DC3 into which the treasure is being loaded. Bond overpowers Song (Kwang's pilot) and a guard (takes his weapon, including the bayonet) and climbs into the cockpit with Betje. He contact Leiter with the radio to ask him to alert the Chinese army.

Betje doesn't understand why Bond doesn't take off and urges him to do so: "What are we waiting for? There's enough [treasure on the plane] for us to live forever, like Gods! Take off! Take off!". "The world is ours!", she continues to shout at Bond who then replies with the family motto: "The world is not enough".

Bond spots Kwang through the windshield and sees him enter an underground tomb; he decides to get off the plane and venture there too. Inside the tomb, a fight begins between Bond and Kwang at the end of which Kwang is flooded/immobilized under a rain of gold coins coming out from the mouth of a statue representing a large dragon-dog. Kwang emerges, begging to be spared, but Bond shoots him in cold blood.

Bond comes out of the tomb and drags Betje behind him, he is spotted by La Font who pursues them.

Bond runs out of ammunition and is caught by La Font who points at him with his .45 caliber. La Font tells him that he needs a pilot, so Bond will come with him (leaving Betje here). Bond discreetly takes out the bayonet he had hidden in his boot and plants it in La Font's stomach. Bond quickly brings Betje into the two-seater plane and takes off as La Font takes his last breath on the ground.

Bond flies in a circle as Chinese army helicopters arrive and drop their commandos to the ground. Betje complains that the Chinese are going to collect the entire treasure. Bond tells her that it belongs to them, that London won't be bad for her and that she will make a fortune by selling her story to "News of The World".

Back in London, at MI6 HQ, we discover the new Miss Moneypenny ("much younger than we remember her"), who announces Bond to M and Chief of Staff who congratulate him:

> - Chief of Staff: Congratulations. I am delighted to inform you that you have been appointed to the Double-O Section. What number is available?
> - M: Why not Trevor's?
> - Chief of Staff or M (turning to Bond): Double-O seven.
> - M: Your next assignment will be to investigate a man in Jamaica, Dr. No.

The end.

Rebooting James Bond: Some revisions and previous versions

4 loose pages provide us with some interesting elements:

- LaFont/La Font is here named as Colonel LaFonte or La Fonte (with a final E). For his background, we are told that he deserted from Diên Bien Phu. Having become a mercenary then a bandit, he today commands Kwang's thousand men recruited from starving local peasants.
- Bond saves Kwang from an assassin sent by Feng. The assassin is then interrogated under torture which consist of very bright lamps in his eyes. We are told that it is an old Chinese form of persuasion called "The Living Daylights". This seems to indicate that even at the time of the reboot, the writers had the idea that The Living Daylights could be the title of the film.
- Kim Feng was named Kung Li (also spelled Kung Ling at one time).
- Bond learns Betje Bedwell's first and last name only after making love to her in the reeds.
- We learn that Kwang's father was part of the "Green Gang" with Chiang Kai-Shek.
- We are told that it was a jealous concubine who warned Kowtow that Bond was in the concubines' quarters with Betje.
- LaFont(e) doesn't catch them trying to hide Kowtow's body, instead the jealous concubine tells Kwang what happened. Bond is then subjected to "The Living Daylights" torture.
- It is on the Riviera that Kwang wants to live peacefully with the money from the treasury.
- Bond understands by himself that the location of the treasure is the one depicted in Kwang's paintings (he understands this before seeing the landscape with his own eyes once in the plane).
- Bond radios Leiter before he and Kwang fly to the location where the treasure is hidden (and asks him to locate the spot he saw in the paintings).

Another set of revision of about 18 pages focuses on the first part of the treatment (until Bond meets Kwang):

The pre-title sequence remain in idea very similar to the one of October 25, 1985, however we will note some differences. First, after their intimate moments, the phone rings and Elsa answers. A man in his late thirties tells her on the line that he has just arrived and will see her this afternoon; Elsa replies "Of course, Siggie". Bond asks him who this "Siggie" was: not the graf Siegfried von Rahm, the diplomat? She explains to him it is indeed him and that she is his fiancee. She wants Bond back in bed with her but he says, "Sorry, dear girl. He asked me here to catch fish, not the future Grafin Von Rahm".

As Bond leaves Elsa's room, Von Rahm is near (just as in the previous version of the pre-title, it is specified that the audience doesn't know if Von Rahm saw Bond leaving the room or not). In the next sequence Bond and Von Rahm are both in a rowboat navigating a mountain stream; they row and fish, seeming to having a good time.

Suddenly Von Rahm knocks Bond out from behind with an oar. He gets out of the canoe which, with Bond attached in it, he lets drift towards the Krimml waterfalls (the treatment tells us to refer to an Austrian travel guide published by Fodor). Bond ends up regaining consciousness, freeing himself from his bonds and surviving the fall of the waterfall after which he is fished out half-drowned by fishermen (but this sequence "will have to be storyboarded with advice from inspired stuntmen", it is written).

Illustration from the 1984 version of Austria by Fodor.

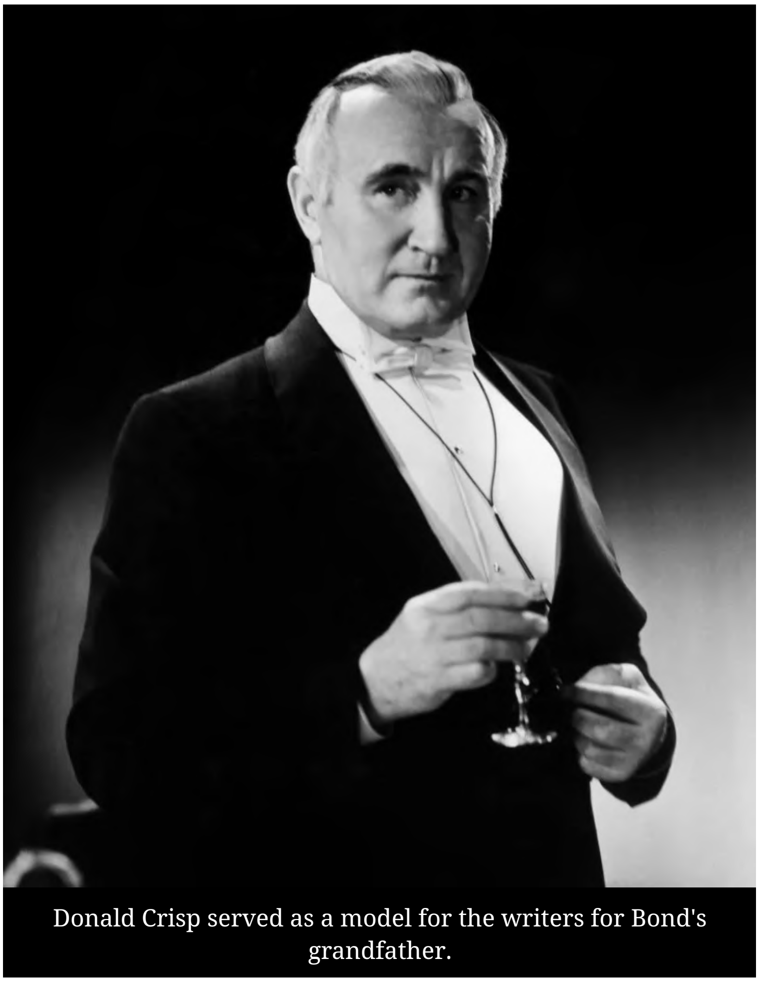
After this Bond arrives in a "roadster" to the opera and the action is similar to the rest of the previous pre-title sequence.

Bond is given a lecture at the embassy (the dialogues in this section are more detailed in this treatment), and heads towards his family home located in Scotland, near Glencoe, at the wheel of his Bentley. We're told the residence was once impressive but now looks dilapidated.

As he stops his Bentley, his aunt Charmaine comes out to greet him. A little later Bond spends time shooting clay pigeons with his grandfather who we are told is in his 70s and "looks like Donald Crisp". Grandpa is rusty while Bond shoot 4 or 5 pigeons in a row.

Grandpa says they both need to talk, the treatment tells us they are both reluctant to have this conversation.



Donald Crisp served as a model for the writers for Bond's grandfather.

Inside Charmaine serves them whiskeys and lets them chat among themselves. Grandpa shows "Jamie" the portraits of his ancestors that adorn the walls, including Commodore Jonathan Bond who died on the HMS Victory at Trafalgar and the one of James' father who apparently fought at Jutland. Showing the portraits of the ancestors, grandfather says that they already had their share of gamblers, womanizers and alcoholics in the family. Grandpa shows him the family motto "The world is not enough" and Bond says he never really understood it. His elder explains to him this basically means that there is no point in owning the whole world if you lose your soul in the process (note that this explanation has been crossed out with a pencil). Bond says he doesn't really have a patriotic spirit and that he joined the Navy because he didn't know what else to do; he still doesn't know. Grandfather tells him that he would like Bond (as a sort of favor) for him to meet an old friend who was courting Charmaine. (On this occasion grandfather tells us that M is still single).

So Bond meet Admiral Meservy at Blayde's. Here it is specified in Bond's file that the school from which he was expelled when he went to the fourth floor is named "Fesse" (probably instead of Fettes). Bond tells M that he is not ready to commit to his Service and begins to leave. M adds that if he decides to join MI6, the date of his court martial could be postponed and gives him a number to contact him.

After the death and burial of his grandfather, Bond agrees to join the Secret Service and leaves for Singapore in DC3. There he notably meets Bin Ushak, Felix Leiter (who is a few years older than Bond) and Q described as a Welshman in his forties (Desmond Llewelyn was in his seventies) who have been sent here to install a new radio in the DC3, and "God knows what else" adds Leiter. Q specify that this last remark was inappropriate. "No offense meant", continues Leiter who precise that this is an Anglo-American operation with the (unofficial) approval of Malaysia and Burma. After poring over a map of the Golden Triangle, Bond says that he must fly with a man named Burton (not Bart) Trevor; Leiter tells him the name of the bar where to find him.

Richard Burton and Trevor Howard, the two legends of British cinema who gave their name to Bond's mentor.

Trevor is waiting at Red Dragon and the treatment tells us that he looks like a mix of Richard Burton and Trevor Howard, "hence the name we've given him". Before talking about work, Trevor asks Bond if he's having a drink: "I'll have a double martini", "Shaken not stirred, I hope" adds Trevor.

The latter asks Bond if he has ever heard of a certain General Kwang, a warlord from the Golden Triangle. A few years ago the Americans offered a reward for him but he put a price on the head of their agents. Bond has his martini sent back because it's "not dry enough" and asks Trevor what business he has with Kwang. He sells him "machine tools", Trevor replies. While waiting for departure time, Trevor made a reservation for Bond at the Raffles Hotel.

They are then attacked in the bar by two "competitors" (unnamed, Corsican, one with a scar on his face).

Bond goes to Raffles ("or one with most suitable layout") where he meets Betje Bedwell (around 25) and Kowtow (he's bald). She gives the receptionist a package which she asks to be placed in a safe. There are all the scenes where Bond seduces Betje in town (however, there is no longer a scene where she buys a rhino horn).

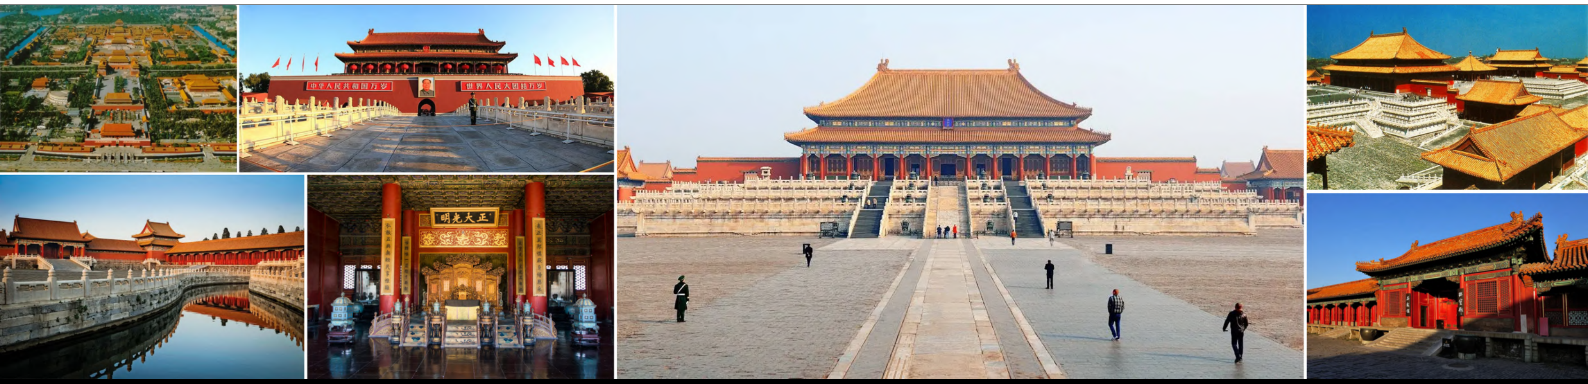
The next day Bond is surprised to see her again at the airport. She has with her the box that she had asked the receptionist to place in the safe. Suddenly a truck arrives in which are the two Corsican competitors seen at the bar; one of them throws a grenade and they dive to the ground. The second competitor fires a machine gun from the back of the truck; Trevor and Leiter, who responded with their pistols, managed to hit him. Bond notices that one of the crates he had to transport and which the grenade damaged doesn't contain machine tools but weapons. He starts to ask Trevor for explanations but it's not the time: sirens are heard in the distance. Before the authorities catch them, Bond and Trevor join Betje and Kowtow in the DC3 and take off.

After escaping Burmese rockets, they arrive at the Kwang airstrip where they are welcomed by a certain Colonel Crapeau (crapeau is a french word for toad): a Frenchman who fought in the Indochina War and who is the commander of Kwang's little army. This set of revisions stop here.

Another incomplete scenario (set between Bond's arrival at the Singapore airport and his return to it) has a few small differences but nothing notable. Except that Betje gives Bond back the jewel he gave her after having sex with him in the hotel room.

Finally we should take a look at in a bulk of around fifty pages of revisions (or which are perhaps earlier versions in fact) on which we can find various things:

- During the pursuit of Kwang's DC3 aboard the small plane, an incident is envisaged in which Bond must repair a system of the plane (whose engine has stopped) in flight while Betje pilots/glides.
- Kwang doesn't speak with Kim Feng in his own fortress but in Fang's camp (after his men have won the assault).
- Some details on one page: "Feng's camp is more like a fortified village than a castle like Kwang's". Trevor also tells Bond that Feng is a man who is almost as bad as Kwang is; so helping Kwang to get rid of him isn't a bad thing.
- Kwang Fortress is at one point described as "in the style of the Forbidden City".



The Forbidden City of Beijing, once an imperial palace of the Emperor of China.

- On pages we are told that La Font was an intelligence officer during the Indochina War and that he later helped launch the French Connection: the export to the United States from France of heroin that come from the Orient.
- Betje comments on Kwang being buried under a torrent of gold coins: "I suppose if he had to go this is the way he would have wanted it".
- In one scenario Kwang apparently wants to recover the treasure to help finance the Pathet Lao's capture of the Golden Triangle.

- On some pages the character Betje is not named like that but is called "Loti" instead.
- Trevor's character was also named differently: "Sayers".
- After the celebratory dinner there is a character named Captain Feng (it's not Kim Feng): this is Kwang's contact with the Pathet Lao. He tells Kwang that he finds his choice of companions (Bond and Sayers) strange and reveals to him that Sayers is a British agent known to the Pathet Lao (and who is responsible for the deaths of many of their agents). Kwang thanks him for this information.

  The door of Bond's bedroom is then thrown open while he is sleeping. They take him to the interrogation room where Sayers is already being tortured by Feng. Sayers tells his interrogator that Bond is just a pilot he hired. Bond is taken to another room where Kowtow tortures him until he loses consciousness; Sayers dies without revealing Bond's involvement.

  Betje quietly releases Bond and hides/heal him for days in her own quarters. Kowtow however becomes suspicious and bursts in, Bond "perhaps" kills him with the rhino horn. Betje reveals Kwang's plan with the treasure to Bond (some details are changed/expanded about how Kwang hid the treasure, we are also told that he hid it twenty years ago). They then plan to steal Kwang's DC3 once the treasure will be loaded into it.

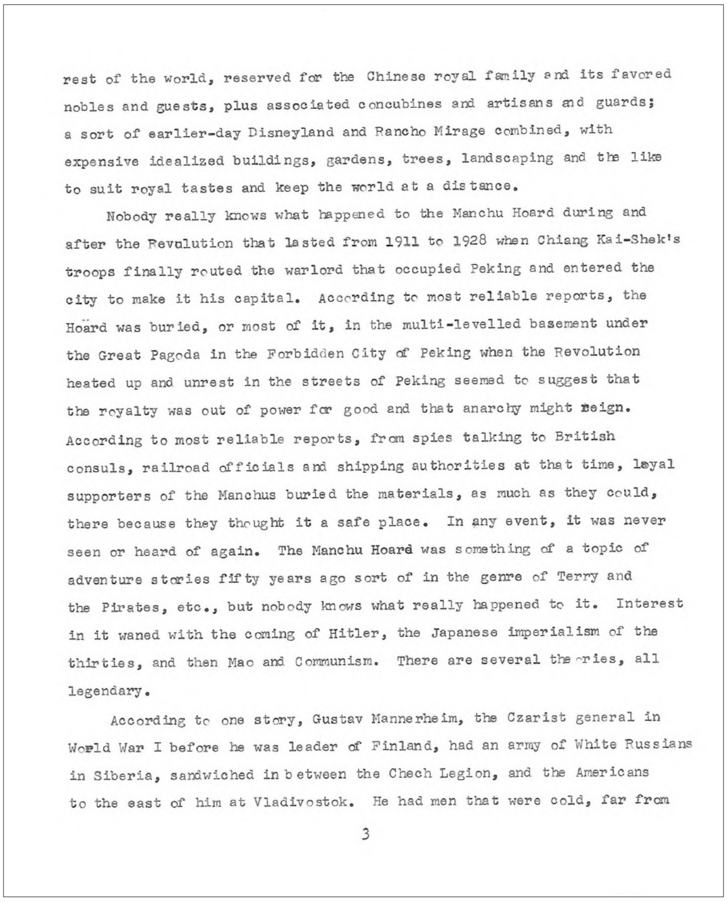
  That's what they start to do, but Bond also wants to kill Kwang. He manages to infiltrate the place where the treasure is hidden and dumps the gold contained in an evil-dog statue on Kwang.

  After this Bond returns to Singapore with Betje where they find Leiter. Betje dumps Bond because she doesn't want to date a government employee: she needs someone to keep her in the lifestyle to which she is accustomed! (She also managed to steal a priceless piece of the treasure).

  Bond returns to London where he is assigned the 00' number of the deceased Sayers.

At one point someone also typed up a 7 page memo titled The Manchu Hoard: A Summary.

This is a long summary of the history of the Manchu treasure mentioned in the treatments of the film. Unfortunately I found nothing on the internet about a treasure similar to the one described... My guess is that they probably make it up out of thin air (mixed with some true history found I don't know where), like the backstory of Carl and Kitty Willis in A View to a Kill. Anyway it's lot of work and detail for something you're probably going to use less than 10% in the film.



rest of the world, reserved for the Chinese royal family and its favored nobles and guests, plus associated concubines and artisans and guards; a sort of earlier-day Disneyland and Rancho Mirage combined, with expensive idealized buildings, gardens, trees, landscaping and the like to suit royal tastes and keep the world at a distance.

Nobody really knows what happened to the Manchu Hoard during and after the Revolution that lasted from 1911 to 1928 when Chiang Kai-Shek's troops finally routed the warlord that occupied Peking and entered the city to make it his capital. According to most reliable reports, the Hoard was buried, or most of it, in the multi-levelled basement under the Great Pagoda in the Forbidden City of Peking when the Revolution heated up and unrest in the streets of Peking seemed to suggest that the royalty was out of power for good and that anarchy might reign. According to most reliable reports, from spies talking to British consuls, railroad officials and shipping authorities at that time, loyal supporters of the Manchus buried the materials, as much as they could, there because they thought it a safe place. In any event, it was never seen or heard of again. The Manchu Hoard was something of a topic of adventure stories fifty years ago sort of in the genre of Terry and the Pirates, etc., but nobody knows what really happened to it. Interest in it waned with the coming of Hitler, the Japanese imperialism of the thirties, and then Mao and Communism. There are several theories, all legendary.

According to one story, Gustav Mannerheim, the Czarist general in World War I before he was leader of Finland, had an army of White Russians in Siberia, sandwiched in between the Chech Legion, and the Americans to the east of him at Vladivostok. He had men that were cold, far from

3

Rebooting James Bond: November 8, 1985' treatment

A 36-page treatment entitled "Bond XV" from October 25, 1985 notably expend the attack from Trevor's competitors at the airport as well as the scenes from Bond's torture which were not really developed in the October 25, 1985 treatment. We also notice that the Bond-Trevor relationship starts off on the wrong foot.

After a pre-title sequence identical to the October 25' one, Bond is reprimanded at the British embassy: he was supposed to develop a friendship with Von Rahm and not "knock the living daylights out of him" (meaning "hit him hard").

After the scenes in Scotland with aunt and grandpa who doesn't intend to leave him the little money that remains with the family because he would be capable of losing it in gambling, Bond meets M who offers him a job in the Secret Service. Bond says he doesn't want to do crypto behind a desk but M tells him that's not what he has in mind for him.

Direction Singapore with Felix Leiter and Q (who was sent there to install a SHORAN navigation system, SHOrt RAnge Navigation, in the DC3). Leiter tells Bond that it is an Anglo-American operation called Operation Kingpin and it concerns the Golden Triangle.

Bond go meet "Bart" Trevor who is waiting for him in a disreputable bar called the Red Dragon Inn. They exchange a secret code to identify each other and Bond begins to sit down. "Not there. Here. Back to the wall. Eye on the door", Trevor said. There is a sense of conflict that instantly settle between the two men. Trevor explains he has been building his cover for two years and it is twenty years that he is in this business. So rule number 1 for Bond: keep a cool head, and rule number 2: keep his mouth shut (this will prevent him from blowing his cover and/or ending up in a coffin).

Trevor asks if today's lesson were too complicated for Bond and explains that he didn't wanted him in first place, but since there was no one else who would be available on time... Waitress arrives and Bond orders a "Double Martini, shaken not stirred".

Trevor explains that Universal Exports has a reputation here of being a company that can fly anything without asking question, and the fact that Bond is awaiting a court martial will be a plus. Trevor adds the mission goal is to deliver "machine tools" to Kwang.

> - Trevor: There's an old Chinese proverb: the less you know, the more you can't tell the torturer.

Two Malaysians (named Dai and Po) attack them: according to Trevor they are the men of a competitor named Ambong who would have liked the delivery contract with Kwang. Trevor and Bond overpowers them.

Bond goes to the Raffles Hotel and sees Betje and Kowtow there. From his window he sees her discreetly leaving her room. The phone rings: it's Trevor who says that Ambong certainly won't stop there, so he'd better sleep well and be on time at the airport tomorrow. Although he assures Trevor that this is his intention, Bond decides to follow Betje through the streets of Singapore and notices she is purchasing a rhino horn from a Chinese apothecary. Then there are the usual seduction scenes at the nightclub, the Hungry Ghost festival, etc... Until they end up to bed together.

While Q finishes preparing the DC3 plane (and eventually hands over a toiletry bag concealing a few gadgets which greatly amuses the young James), Leiter says that he has arranged for the Thai air defenses to be inactive at a certain time. They are joined by Trevor and Betje and Kowtow. Suddenly two trucks arrive in which there are men from Ambong, including Po and Dai. Trevor shouts for Bond to take off while drops one knee to the ground and starts shooting. Dai (in the back of a truck) has a flamethrower which he aims at the plane, Trevor fire and ends up killing Dai whose flamethrower hits a tanker truck parked on the tarmac and which then explodes.

Kowtow is helping Trevor board the DC3 which is picking up speed to take off while the two trucks are chasing the plane (one on each side). Three men (including Po) jump through the rear door of the plane and one attacks Kowtow, who then leaves Trevor who must now climb out on his own (apparently clinging to the door of the moving plane). Kowtow manages to eject two men off the plane but Po heads toward the cockpit where he attacks Bond. While Po releases him for a few moments to take care of Betje who has come to his rescue, Bond manages to take off, avoiding by a few centimeters another plane on the runway coming from opposite. One of the trucks doesn't have the same luck: it crashes into the plane (this is only thing from this reboot version that will end up in the film, with the new Moneypenny). Kowtow and Trevor eventually intervene and eject Po. Bond is self-complimenting and Trevor tells him about "beginner's luck".

Then there are the scenes where Thai rockets explode near the plane and break open a crate, causing Bond to see they are actually transporting Chinese weapons and uniforms.

They eventually arrive at their destination and meet La Font. He searches them and confiscates Trevor's weapon. La Font, Bond and Trevor ride horses towards Kwang Fortress.

Kwang who is painting, wants to test the weapons. However, this will happen tomorrow because Betje arrives with a package containing the aphrodisiac rhino horn.

La Font leads Bond and Trevor to their room. Trevor takes out his Q toiletry kit (similar to the one Bond received) to notably inspect if there are microphones or cameras. This is not the case. Bond is amused and asks if this is rule number 3? Yes: "never take anything for granted", says Trevor, adding that he once found a bomb in a toilet flush destined to explode when he flushed it.

> - Bond: Sanitary way to go. In the end you could have gotten a DSM [Distinguished Service Medal] posthumously, too.
> - Trevor: Very witty.

Looking out the window, Bond points out to Trevor that it would be easy to escape that way. But the latter doesn't agree with him and, to show him that he is right, he takes a fruit from a basket and drops it out of the window. The fruit crosses the roof located lower and finds itself impaled on the end of a spike. "You've made your point", admits Bond.

Bond and Trevor then witness a scene where Kim Feng's men arrive at the fortress and are greeted by Kwang and La Font. Bond saves Kwang from a grenade assassination. Kwang vows revenge on Feng.

After that Trevor ironically congratulates Bond announcing that he is from Double-O Section and that his real mission is to eliminate Kwang.

> - Bond: Why didn't you tell me?
> - Trevor: I didn't trust you. I still don't know if I do. But I had to risk it now before you pull another howler.

Bond asks him what interest MI6 has in Kwang? Because of the deal made with the Pathet Lao to transform the Golden Triangle into a base used to launch raids against neighboring countries.

After that there are the scenes where Bond discreetly flirts with Betje near the natural pool in the jungle where the concubines are.

Then comes the attack on Feng's camp coordinated from the DC3. A watchtower equipped with machine guns prevents the attackers from advancing, Bond flies nearby and Trevor throws grenades at the foot of the tower (the treatment gives also an alternative in which Bond hits the base of the watchtower with the tip of one of his wings to make it collapse). La Font and his men manage to capture Feng.

Song, who is Kwang's pilot (who acted as co-pilot here), congratulates Bond. Trevor tells James that he has made a new friend (but also to be wary of him: Song is a Pathet Lao agent).

Back at the fortress we bring Feng to Kwang who is still painting the same landscape. Before dying, Feng said he heard that a team of assassins was sent to kill Kwang. After asking La Font to "make him [Feng] comfortable", Kwang adds "change of plan" to his intention: they must tell Song and his men that they must prepare to leave tomorrow.

There is a party to celebrate the victory where the clothes/jewelry Kwang wears look like they belong to Manchu's treasure. Betje slips to Bond a paper on which it is written that they must see each other: she will leave a window open.

Bond then joins her in the concubines' quarters. She tells him that she is desperate because Kwang will leave the Golden Triangle tomorrow to retire in South America where he would peacefully devote himself to painting and that he wants her to go with him. Although she is grateful for everything Kwang has done for her, Betje can no longer stand him touching her since she known Bond.

Betje explains that Kwang wants to retrieve the treasure where he left it at the time and that he will share it with the Pathet Lao who will provide him with men to recover it. Kwang will fly far away with his share and the Pathet Lao will recover Kwang's fortress in addition to their own share. Betje adds that she is not personally interested in the treasure which she describes as stained with the blood of [many] men, but that she wants to live with Bond forever, even in poverty.

Kowtow overhears the two lovers' conversation, enters and attacks Bond with headbutts (his fighting style is to literally use his head). Bond defends himself by impaling him in the eye with the rhino horn. The other concubines heard the fight and as Bond and Betje flee, they are confronted by La Font and his men who overpower them.

In the fortress cells, Trevor is brought to Kwang who explains that Bond killed Kowtow in the concubine quarters while he was with Betje. Bond tries to defend Betje by saying that she didn't consent, that he somehow tried to rape her. Kwang says Betje will die the way unfaithful concubines do, "the thousand cuts". As for Bond, he decides to be lenient with him since he previously saved his life: he will simply be decapitated. But Trevor has other plans. He suggests that Kwang torture Bond in order to extract information from him.

In his room Trevor assembles an object from the shaving kit given by Q which turns out to be a silenced gun. James is whipped with bamboo canes by La Font's men. Trevor joins them and asks if Bond has already talked: no. Trevor asks to try himself to torture him; Bond calls him "swine". Suddenly Trevor kills the two La Font's men with the silenced pistol and frees Bond:

- Bond: Couldn't you have suggested brain washing instead of torture?
- Trevor: I thought I'd appeal to his sadistic instincts. At least you're still wearing your head. How badly hurt are you?

Before escaping the fortress, Bond asks to go get Betje. Trevor reminds him of rule 1: never fall in love on a mission. Bond replies that he thought the rule number 1 was to never lose control of yourself. He adds that the young lady didn't hesitate to take risk to help them; Bond won't leave without her.

- Trevor: Not even if I tell you it's an order?
- Bond: Stuff your order, Trevor. I can't let those bastards cut her to pieces.
- Trevor: [...] You'll never make an agent, Bond. Your priorities are screwy. Try to hold yourself together now while we have a go at springing your girl friend.

They go to the cell where Betje is, naked and with her wrists tied, and free her by killing the men who were ready to torture her. They go out into the courtyard and Trevor give a new rule at Bond: "Rule number five: always look for a way out". Arriving at the jungle, Trevor tells him about another part of the mission that he "forgot" to tell him about: they are going to contact Felix Leiter using SHORAN to give him the code "Thunderclap", that is meant to trigger an airstrike carried out by the Thai army on Kwang Fortress.

Very quickly they heard horsemen approaching them and understood that their escape had been discovered. Bond, weakened by torture, addresses Trevor: "I don't think I can make it. Take Betje and go on without me".

Trevor doesn't abandon him and they hide in the vegetation to observe their pursuers. Among them we find Kwang and La Font. Bond, Betje and Trevor crawl towards thicker bushes.

As Trevor prepares to go on reconnaissance, Bond points out that Q's silenced pistol is a little light and hands him a revolver. "I'd say there's hope for you yet, James", Trevor said, calling Bond by his first name for the first time.

Unfortunately, Trevor is spotted by the horsemen and a group of soldiers on foot. Before his weapons are empty, he manages to eliminate some of the attackers and even dying on the ground, he continues to bring them away from Bond and Betje's position.

The next morning, near the jungle pool where the concubines were bathing, Betje heal to the wounds on Bond's back and torso and gathers berries for them to eat. They make the decision to go to the airstrip. They see Kwang, La Font, Song and thirty of his men board the DC3. Kwang is wearing the outfit of a Chinese Commissar of Antiquities, Song the one of a colonel of the Chinese army. Bond figures out Kwang's plan.

The DC3 takes off, Bond knocks out a guard, grabs his gun, climbs into a small two-seater plane dating from the Second World War and invites Betje to join him.

Bond sets off in pursuit of the DC3. When Betje asks him why follow Kwang (instead of flying away from him), he replies that he has "unfinished business". They lose the DC3 but see the landscape that is the subject of Kwang's paintings.

Meanwhile, on the ground, Kwang is talking with some villagers. He explains to them he is the Minister of Antiquities and that he is there to transport the artifacts from the old cemetery to museums in Beijing, Canton and Hang Chow. The village will be sealed off for 24 hours and the help of the villagers will be required to evacuate the treasures. A village official tells Kwang that cooperation might be difficult because villagers believe the area is haunted: that prevents them from entering the cemetery, especially at night. Kwang doesn't like this "pre-revolutionary nonsense" and says the villagers will work or be punished.

Bond lands the small plane in a field and covers it with foliage with Betje's help. He tells her to stay there but she insists on going with him.

Farm workers have finished clearing the entrance to the tomb of an ancient Chinese emperor, and Kwang and La Font goes inside the catacomb with torches. In the crypt there are hellhounds' stone statues, life-size representations of soldiers, as well as chests containing the Manchu's hoard. La Font didn't expected it will be that big and Kwang tells him that he hasn't seen anything yet: gold coins are hidden in the evil dog statues. However Kwang is only interested in gems and jewelry; the coins being too heavy for the DC3.

Hidden in a wooded area, Bond and Betje observe men loading the chests onto the plane. Betje says they'd better leave but Bond is still determined to reach DC3's radio. He waits until nightfall to do his approach.

Now the DC3 is almost finished loading, Bond climbs aboard and the takes advantage on Song and gags and ties him with the help of Betje. She looks in one of the chests and understands Bond's plan: "So this is what you planned all along! To hijack the plane with the treasure in it!". Bond doesn't reply and goes to the cockpit where he contacts Leiter via the SHORAN. He gives him his position and very briefly explains the situation (asking him to alert the Chinese army) and announce him Trevor's death.

Betje begs Bond to take off but instead he sabotages the plane so it can't take off again. She starts crying: "The world was ours!", to which Bond reply "The world is not enough".

Leiter makes contact again via radio and informs him that the Chinese have been warned and they will take action immediately.

- Bond: So am I.
- Betje: Oh, my God! You are an agent!
- Bond: We'll see about that.

Bond exits the plane and puts on a tunic and cap belonging to a worker and enters the tomb. Betje can't help but follow him into the crypt where she comes face to face with mummified bodies in the burial chamber, which frightens her. The two find themselves separated. Betje explores the tomb of an Empress while Bond tries to get a clear line of fire to take down Kwang.

He is spotted by La Font and his men. The echo of their shots reverberates throughout the burial chamber.

Bond takes refuge through the life-size statues of soldiers. Running out of ammo, Bond snatches a battle ax from one of the statues as Kwang walks towards him. Bond realizes that the evil dog statues are filled with gold coins, but La Font and his men get closer.

Betje then emerges from the Empress's tomb, wearing a gold dress and a mask resembling a golden skull. The sudden appearance, intensified by the reflections of the torches, frightens the men of La Font who flee. Kwang is momentarily frightened and moves towards some stairs; he spots Bond and shoots. Bond breaks one of the evil dog statues with his ax and the flowing gold buries Kwang. Betje grabs an empty bag and begins to fill it with gold coins, Bond try to remove it from her hand. She clings to the bag despite everything.

They walk towards the entrance and face two men. Bond takes care of one of them while Betje takes care of the second with her bag full of gold. La Font spots them and starts shooting. They try to escape the shots, but the bag slows them down. Bond then rids Betje of the bag and the heavy dress, which doesn't delight her.

Once outside, the Chinese Red Army has arrived in helicopter and their commando are putting an end to Kwang and Song's operation. Bond and Betje head towards the two-seater plane, but realize that La Font has beaten them to it. He forces Bond to serve as his pilot by threatening him with his gun. Betje vehemently objects, but Bond basically tells her not to worry. As they talk, La Font lets his guard down and Bond takes action by snatching the gun from La Font. The latter tries to retrieve it, the weapon fires and La Font collapses.

Bond and Betje then board the plane and take off. She complains that the Red Chinese will collect all the treasure. Bond tells her that it belongs to them anyway, that she will be happy in London and that she will still be able to sell her story. He also reminds her of the diamond she stole. Betje then takes out a 40-carat diamond which she happily admires.

Then, without being dumped by Betje in this treatment, Bond returns to London where he is assigned the number 007 and a new mission concerning Dr. No...

Abandon the reboot

So why The Living Daylights isn't it finaly a reboot? The reason is Cubby Broccoli, who vetoed the idea, as Maibaum explains:

- Richard Maibaum[4] : We did write a treatment and I thought it was a very good one where we were going to get a very young guy about 23 or 24 years old to play Bond and the picture would be "How did James Bond get to be the great 007". And we put together a damn good script about it, but Mr. Broccoli, as I say, who is a marvelous showman, he eventually said, "No, the public does not want to pay to go and see a tyro, an amateur James Bond learning his trade. They want to see James Bond at the peak of all his power, you know the superman, the great lover, the everything, the confident fellow he is; that's the image, the escape image that Bond is for many people all over the world". [...] I thought that Broccoli was right. I don't know that it would have been successful. To have a guy kind of learning his trade, you know. It was an interesting idea I thought, but I, we never got a chance.

- Michael Wilson[5] : One of the ideas [...] was a possibility of exploring Bond's roots. To show where he had came from, to show his background; he's always been a veteran character, he's been a fellow who is experienced. Cubby felt we shouldn't really look backward.

- Richard Maibaum[6] : Naturally, if you tell that story, you have to show him making mistakes and how he learned his trade. It cuts out too many of the things the audience enjoys watching Bond do.

Fresh start: going from the sort-story to the Soviet-Afghan War

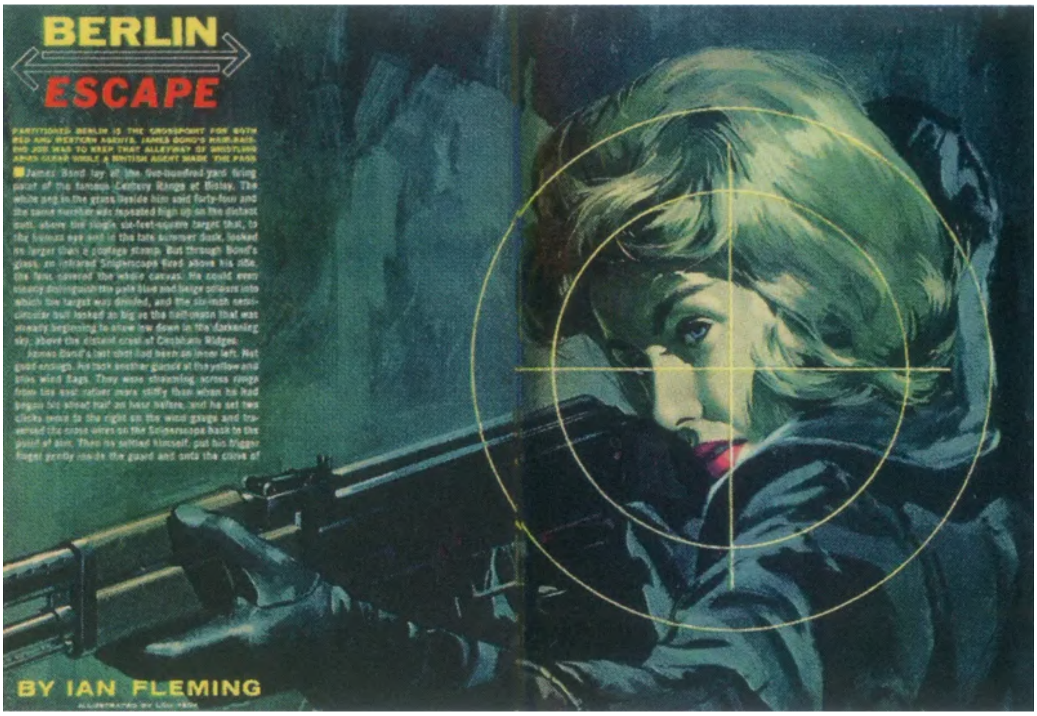
With the reboot concept shelved, the writers decided to return to a Fleming's short story for plot development. First published under the title of Berlin Escape in a supplement to the February 4, 1962 issue of the Sunday Times; the short story tells us about 272: a British agent holed up in Nova Zembla since the end of the war. He plans to return to the West with vital information on the USSR's rockets and atomic weapons.

272 will try to cross the border into Berlin, but unfortunately for him a double agent has informed the Russians of the affair. The KGB has charged its best shooter, "Trigger", to prevent him from providing his information.

James Bond, as a Double-O agent licensed to kill, is sent by M to West Berlin to eliminate this shooter before he kills 272. Before leaving, 007 trains on the shooting range of Bisley with a modified Winchester .308 sniper rifle.

Arriving in Berlin, Bond meets Paul Sender of Station WB (West Berlin) and they take up position with the Winchester in a building near the border, overlooking a rough terrain that 272 must cross in one of the next three evenings.

On each of the three evenings, 007 sees and hears a female orchestra arriving for a concert and then leaving; his gaze falls particularly on a beautiful blonde violoncellist.



Once 272 begins crossing the border, Bond sees Trigger getting into position to kill him and realizes that Trigger is the violoncellist. 007 adjusts his aim at the last moment and shoots Trigger's Kalashnikov instead of killing her; 272 manages to cross the border.

Afterwards, Bond admits to Sender that he didn't shoot to kill because Trigger was a woman. Sender says he will be forced to include this in his report, but apologizes for having to do so.

"Okay. With any luck it'll cost me my Double-O number. But tell Head of Station not to worry. That girl won't do any more sniping. Probably lost her left hand. Certainly broke her nerve for that kind of work. Scared the living daylights out of her. In my book, that was enough", Bond replies.

Berlin Escape was republished twice before being included in the collection Octopussy and The Living Daylights where the short story adopted a new name for the occasion: The Living Daylights.

("The Living Daylights" is not an easy title to translate abroad, which is perhaps why we have to settle for a banal french equivalent of From Berlin with Love in the French edition. In general it is an expression used to say "[specify a word] the living daylights out of" which means doing the thing specified to (someone) with great severity/intensity. The most used form (and the one which is at the origin of the title of the short story and the film) is "[scared] the living daylights out of [her]" which means "to have scared the hell out of [the violoncellist]").

The short story turned out to be a "good springboard"[7] for the film's story, but then the writers were faced with "how to make a two-hour movie out of this story. We had to ask ourselves: Who is the defector? Is he really a defector or is he coming to be a double agent? What is he up to? Who is the woman? Why was she there? Was she really going to kill him?", remembers Maibaum[8].

The other thing that will inspire the screenwriters is the Soviet-Afghan War (1979-1989) then in progress.

In 1978, the People's Democratic Party of Afghanistan (PDPA), a communist party, seized power in the April Revolution of Saur, which led to radical reforms that were unpopular, especially among the predominantly rural, traditionalist, and religious population. The PDPA government responded to opposition with brutal repression, sparking uprisings and the formation of armed resistance movements of the "mujahideen" (to really simplify: the resistance). The PDPA was also plagued by internal conflicts and divided into two main factions: Khalq (led by figures like Hafizullah Amin) and Parcham. Khalq held the dominant position in the government.

The Soviet Union, concerned about the country's instability, the brutality of the government, Amin's inability to stabilize Afghanistan, and his potential rapprochement with the United States, decided to invade the country in December 1979. They killed Amin and installed Babrak Karmal from the Parcham faction in his place. They send troops to support this new government against the mujahideen.

Following this invasion, many Afghans joined the ranks of the mujahideen armed groups in order to fight: they wanted to chase foreign Russian forces out of Afghanistan and remove the PDPA/communists from the government.

Supported by foreign countries (notably the United States, Pakistan, Saudi Arabia and the United Kingdom) and using guerrilla tactics, the mujahideen led fierce resistance against the Soviet army; similar to what the Americans experienced in Vietman against the Vietcong. A number of resistance leaders focused on increasing opium production in their regions to finance their resistances operations. (The Soviets decided to withdraw in 1989, leaving the country in the grip of a civil war leading to the takeover of power by the Talibans).

1981: Mujahideen on the wreckage of a shoot down Soviet helicopter. Later during the war, the CIA notability provided Stinger rocket launchers to help the mujahideen against the Soviet aircrafts.

A friend of Albert Broccoli (Baron Enrico di Portanova) had helped finance a documentary on the Afghan resistance a few years earlier the writing of the film, Courage Is [Our/ Their] Weapon[9]: perhaps this had an impact on the decision to include this conflict in the film?

Likewise, perhaps the defection of KGB Colonel Vitali Yurchenko to the United States in August 1985 also inspired the screenwriters? Three months after his defection to the West, Yurchenko escapes his CIA chaperones to mysteriously go to the Soviet embassy to defect back; he is welcomed with open arms with a press conference to announce his return to the East.

The screenwriters had also read an article from the Los Angeles Times about arms smuggling towards Iran, a country which was subjected to an American arms embargo.

Denisov, Sanchez, casino and a trip with Leiter

I unfortunately don't have complete treatments of the early non-reboot versions of Bond 15. I know that some were completed on 5[10], 16 and 23[11] December 1985. I have however have several loose pages of various treatments and ideas.

In summary, if we put the puzzle together, the first drafts of the scenario looked like this:

On some pages you can find a pre-title sequence; it had to be in the vein of those of the reboot versions. Bond is in bed with a girl (this time unnamed), "where have you been all my life?", then a lover who is not happy that Bond is fornicating with his sweetheart tries to kill him in an "in hopefully sensational aerial action not to be divulged at this time".

After this we can notice that it was originally intended to name Bond's contact in Czechoslovakia (and Vienna) Sender, as in the short story (although he will become Saunders in some versions). The defector they had to protect was aptly named Georgi, but Georgi Denisov (and not Koskov). This one is described as "Khrushchev type". The plan is to protect Denisov with a sniper rifle while he runs to a car. Once he will reaches it, Denisov will be able to go with it outside the city where he will be picked up by a helicopter in order to cross the border.

Bond finds out the violoncellist, that the screenwriters decided to name Kara, is the enemy sniper. Bond shot her gun to allow Denisov to reach the car.

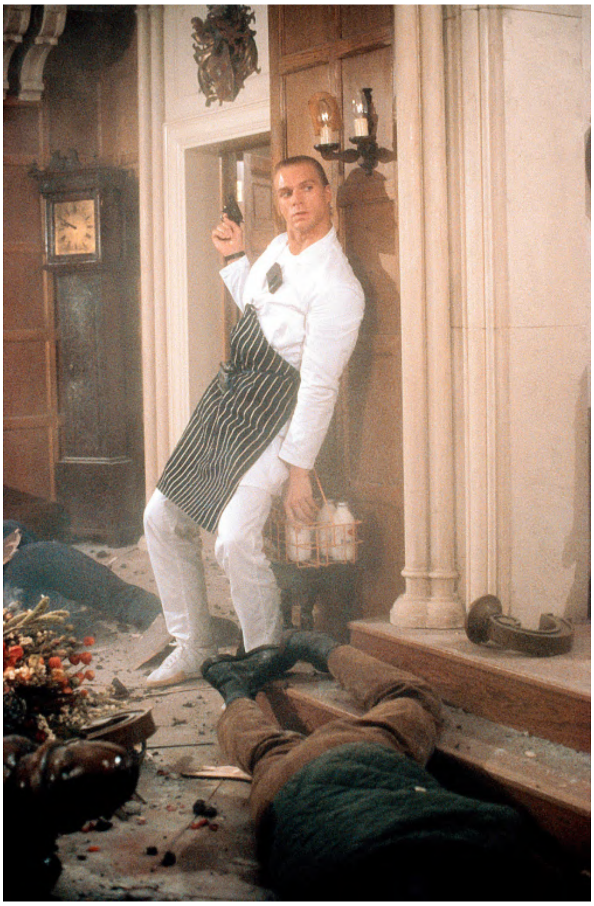
There is later a debriefing of Denisov in a house in England in the company of M and a minister. Bond goes there, Denisov says that he defected because General Gogol[12] has seen his personality completely changed since the last films.

Originally it was General Gogol that the defector denounced. However, since actor Walter Gotell was getting old and wasn't at the best of his health, the insurance company behind the film demanded a very high price to insure the film with Gotell in such a role. Thus, a new character named Pushkin to be played by another actor will be created later in the writing process.

Now opposed to détente, Gogol is said to have a program of assassinations of foreign spies called "Operation Smiert Spionem". He will soon be in Tangier with his secretary Olga Rubavitch (who was present in previous films) where he will attend a convention.

Then we have a certain Franco who murders a milk delivery man. However, the character having been described at one point as "an international terrorist assassin, a Carlos counterpart" (the Jackal, whose real name is Ilich Ramírez Sánchez), it is not surprising to note that on other pages Franco was renamed to Sanchez. Then on even more recent pages he adopts his definitive name: Necros.

Now disguised as the milkman, Sanchez/Necros goes to the house where Koskov was debriefed and spills the liquid contents of the milk bottles which catches fire on contact with the air. While guards call the firefighters, Necros finds Denisov and knocks him out / sticks a syringe in him or even uses chloroform. While carrying Denisov, Sanchez exchanges gunfire with the guards and takes him outside; they leave in a medical helicopter that flies over the burning house.



After this, with MI6 convinced that Denisov's defection was real, M orders 007 to assassinate Gogol. This does not delight Bond, who doesn't believe that Gogol could be as Denisov described him.

Bond decides to return to Czechoslovakia to investigate the sniper cello girl who has been identified, in order to find out more before eliminating Gogol.

- Richard Maibaum[13] : [It] is an opportunity to see that Bond is not a thoughtless killer, who they push a button on and he'll go out and kill somebody. So, this is one picture where a man wants to be convinced before the man he is assigned to kill is killed. It was a departure for us, as James Bond would be trying to avoid assassinating someone before he has damn good reason to do so.

Bond tails Kara in car and sees her arriving at her apartment where KGB agents and Gogol are waiting for her. After they leave, Bond goes to ring Kara's apartment. She opens the door for him and he sees that the apartment has been ransacked. By talking to her he learns from her that Gogol doesn't know that Denisov has defected; Gogol is just investigating his disappearance. Bond sees things more clearly and pretends to be a friend of Georgi to her. They must go and join him in Vienna, Bond tells her.

There's a KGB' lookout outside Kara's apartment. She distract him while Bond sabotages his car. 007 picks up Kara in a car and the KGB' man, unable to follow them because of the sabotage, goes to telephone: however he is killed by Sanchez at the telephone booth.

(Unpursued and without retrieving a cello), Bond and Kara go to the mountain. There they get out of the car and unload skis but are spotted by border guards. As a chase begins, we see that the skis go together with a sort of parachute. With Kara (presumably tethered) in front of him, Bond is able to ski up (rather than down) a hill, propelled by the wind in the parachute. And once they reach the top, they can descend and just fly to Austria with the parachute.

In Tangier, Denisov is with Whitaker (the arms dealer) and Necros (or Sanchez depending on the version). Sanchez explains that he didn't kill the girl because Bond was with her and he didn't want to get rid of him right away (since 007 has to kill Gogol). Necros is described as a Greek terrorist who occasionally works for Whitaker in exchange for cheap weapons for international terrorist groups such as the IRA or the Red Brigades. They figure that they need to kill another British agent in order to get Bond to kill Gogol more quickly.

Bond and Kara arrive at a hotel in Vienna; she mentions the name Whitaker. They go to the opera where Bond meets Sender and asks him for papers. Later Bond goes to the Universal Exports building in Vienna to collect the said papers. There he found Sender dead of a bullet in the head in his office, a note on the body is saying "Smiert Spionem". Bond and Kara leave for Tangier.

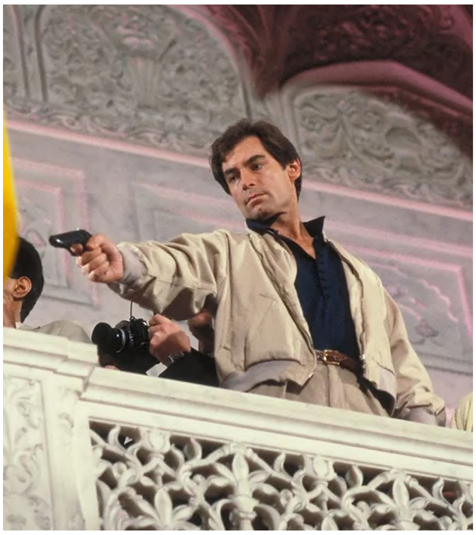
Bond follows Gogol from the convention center to Whitaker's villa. Gogol meets with Whitaker and tells him that the arms order that Russia made for its troops in Afghanistan is canceled because Whitaker never used the deposit Russia gave him. Gogol/Russia wants to be reimbursed as soon as possible.

Bond explores Whitaker's villa and hears about a drug deal in Afghanistan that will be made by using Gogol's money. In another version of this scene he also hears that Sanchez is going to kill Gogol in 24 hours if Bond doesn't do it himself. 007 falls inopportunely through the ceiling and a chase occurs in the villa at the end of which he is saved by Leiter who had bugged the villa.



In other versions Bond never goes to Whitaker's villa. 007 confront Gogol at the hotel in Rubavitch's room similar to the film. Afterwards Bond pretends to kill Gogol during the conference by firing blank bullets. Bond emerges from the conference center, followed by two men. 007 who assumes they are working for Gogol tells them that he is supposed to escape. The two men knock him out and take him to Felix Leiter on a yacht.

In another version, after Gogol's fake assassination, Bond flees the scene by car and arrives in an area where there is apparently construction work. He follows the construction signs which lead him to an isolated street. There, workers point their guns at him and force him to climb into a van where Leiter and his surveillance equipment are located.

In any case, once Bond finally meets Leiter, this character is about to have a bigger role than he have in the film.

Bond explains to Leiter that he is working with Gogol to find out what Denisov and "Charley Whitaker" are up to. Leiter explains that he is monitoring Whitaker because he is stealing American high technology to resell it to the Russians.

Meanwhile Denisov rejoices at Gogol's death; Whitaker asks Necros to keep an eye on Denisov.

Bond goes to find Kara, he reveals to her who he really is while she had doubts (he is not drugged by her unlike in the film). After that they make love, then Leiter joins them.

Leiter asks Kara if she knows anything that could help and she tells them that over the past year, Denisov has traveled to Afghanistan several times to meet with the Snow Leopards. "Biggest heroin dealers in the Golden Crescent", comments Leiter.

Bond and his CIA friend then understand Georgi and Whitaker's plan, how they want to use the Russians' deposit to first buy drugs, resell it with a huge profit, and only then buy the weapons for the Russia.

Bond and Leiter then wonder what to do: monitor luxury clubs and restaurants. Believing Gogol dead, Denisov will no longer remain hidden.

So we find Bond sitting opposite Denisov at a gambling table in a casino near Tangier. They bet together and win. Denisov congratulates 007 on Gogol's death and Kara joins them; she tells Denisov that she hate him. Bond and Kara then explain to Denisov that they are aware of his plan to get rich and that they will not inform Moscow or Washington if they also get a share of the pie: Bond says that he wants a nice little sum for his retirement.

Denisov responds to their proposal by saying that he must discuss it with his partners and leaves to consult them. In one version Kara asks Bond how she was: "great!", Bond replies, adding that she was born to be a performer. "Only with a cello. Without it I'm just an ordinary girl", she adds.

Leiter joins them and tells them that Denisov left by taxi for the airport. Leiter has someone who will check his destination. Kara wants to come with them; Bond and Leiter refuse. 007 asks Leiter to find a hideout for her.

As they leave the casino they are followed by Sanchez or a man from Whitaker (ultimately named Shagg) who will see where this safe house is.

We then find Bond and Leiter on an American aircraft carrier at night. They climb into a tactical bomber which takes them over the region of Afghanistan to which Georgi is heading. They parachute from the bomb-bay and meet on ground rebels supported by the CIA. One version give the name Ranjit to one of the Afghan resistance leaders they meet.

With the help of the rebels, they observe the Snow Leopard deal and, disguised, Bond and Leiter hide in a truck which leaves for a Russian air base where the drug is unloaded into a large helicopter. Bond and Leiter steal the helicopter while the rebels attack. In flight, they run out of fuel and apparently land on the American aircraft carrier?

In any case Bond and Leiter have recovered the drug shipment and Denisov and Whitaker find themselves without it and without a penny.

There is a finale where Bond and Leiter return to the CIA safe house to find Kara. On the way they are attacked by what appeared to be a gang of thieves. The men bring Bond and Leiter into the safe house and Bond and Leiter are then suspended on a hook near Kara. Denisov and Whitaker are there with a hot iron and want to know where the drugs are.

However Gogol, accompanied by a Russian commando, comes to the rescue, kills Whitaker (and Sanchez in the versions where he is present in this scene), frees our heroes and takes Denisov as a prisoner.

In one version 007 then tells Kara that she can sell her story in London in order to rent the Royal Albert Hall to give a concert. After the concert, Kara says "goodbye" to Bond. "Goodbye? I was just going to ask you to marry me". "I know, darling, but in your profession there is no place for a wife, and I must live now only for my music".

"I've lost out with girls before, but never to a cello!", comments Bond.

At one point in the writing process it was written on a memo that (for unexplained reasons) Denisov should be renamed something else. Pages are then written where the villain is renamed Georgi "Kovitch", other pages have "Kotkin".

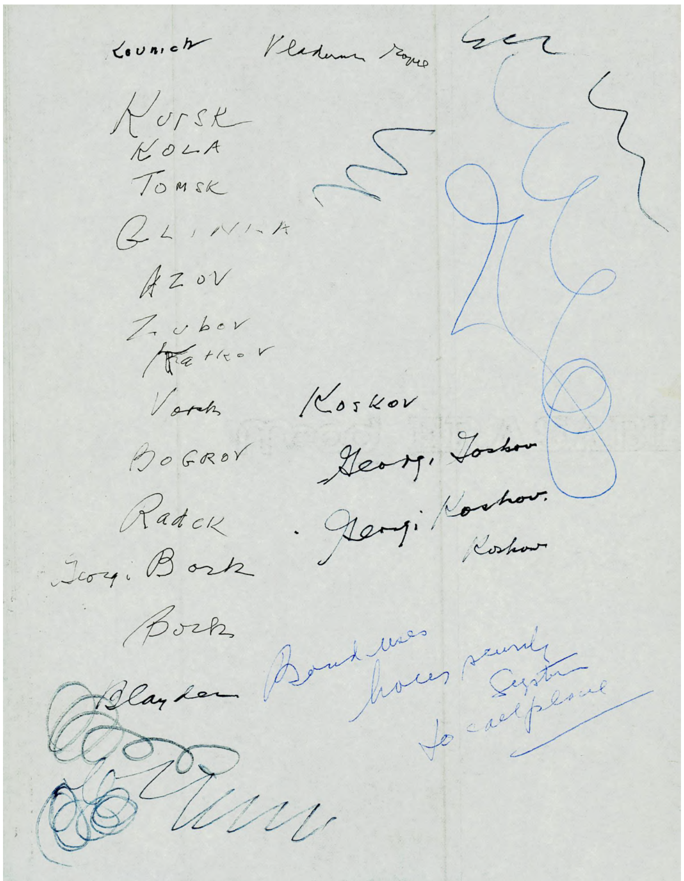
The two CIA girls Liz and Ava who help Leiter are also added at this time. They experience a fatal fate during the finale when Bond and Leiter encounter a beggar on their way back to the safe house. They enter the safe house and come across the bodies of the CIA's girls. The beggar suddenly come up behind them and point a sawed-off shotgun on them, before they join Kovitch and Whitaker who want to know where their opium is.

It was also considered at one point, after being saved by Gogol, that at the very end Necros might show up at the Royal Albert Hall concert where there would then be "a big fight".

Eventually Kovitch was renamed Koskov. On certain pages Bond goes to the casino where Koskov is playing, luck on his side. 007 plays against him, Koskov's luck changes. Bond suggests going to dinner and Koskov states that he took advantage of the panic following Gogol's death to manage to escape from where the KGB were holding him. Now he intends to enjoy life in the West. They toast to "freedom" when suddenly Koskov almost chokes when he sees Kara arriving in the dress that Bond had bought to her.

Koskov tries to give her an explanation but Kara tells him to stop his bullshit, she knows how he used her. Bond and Kara tell Koskov that they are well aware of his scheme with Whitaker and expose it to him; Koskov again feigns ignorance. They don't ask him a part of the money, instead:

> - Bond: Would you care for a little friendly advice? [...] I don't relish my license to kill. So turn yourself in to either the Russian or British consulates. Before the new orders I've requested arrive. They concern you.



Kovitch

Kursk
Kola
Tomsk
Glinka
Azov
Zubov
Katkov
Vorak
Bogrov
Radek
Georgi Bork
Bork
Blayden

Koskov
Georgi Koskov
Georgi Koskov.
Koskov

Bond uses horses security system to cool place

Draft on which Maibaum was trying to find names. We can read "Koskov" and "Blayden".

Koskov gets scared, "good evening Mr. Bond. I am expected elsewhere". Leiter put a tail on him: he's heading towards Karachi.

Later, at the Russian air base, Bond and Leiter are forced to steal the plane (rather than a helicopter) loaded with the drugs. Leiter starts the engines while Bond is shooting from the door. 007 must descend to remove something preventing the plane from moving forward; once done Feyador jumps on him. Bond now has to run to catch up with the plane and manages to get on board.

Koskov and Necros chase the plane down the runway in different trucks. Leiter takes off in front of a plane landing in front of them, complemented by Bond who presses the button to raise the landing gear to avoid impact. Necros manages to jump on the plane and knock out Leiter who had gone to close the cargo bay door. He then goes to the cockpit and tries to strangle 007 (I don't know what happens next).

In a reworked version closer to the film, in which Kara drugs Bond and ends up with him in the cells of the Afghan base, it is written: "exciting action escape sequence. That night, using his gadget which contains small but powerful explosives, Bond breaks out of the brig, overpowers dazed guards, frees Kara, steals a Russian army truck, is chased by Red Army vehicles, eludes them and reaches the Khyber Pass".

The storyline develops

The first complete treatment that I have in my possession is 35 pages long and is undated.

It is still considered to introduce the new actor in a pre-title sequence involving a cheated lover/husband who becomes vengeful when he discovers that Bond is sleeping with his lady.

The credits fade to Austria at night, near a border with Czechoslovakia which takes the shape of a river. Bond meets Saunders who explains the situation to him: as in the film, 007 must cover a defector named Georgi Koskov, whom the treatment describes as "portly" and 45 years old. 007 spots the violoncellist Kara with a sniper rifle and shoot her rifle. Koskov manages to cross the street to the river where a boat picks him up to take him to Austria.

Back in London, Bond consults with Q the list of known female members of the KGB when the "new Miss Moneypenny" asks him to go to Blayden. There Bond meet M, Koskov, the minister (and the Chief of Staff) while a milkman is strangled. Here Necros is still described as a counterpart of Carlos, but also by the words "Rutger Hauer type".

- Rutger Hauer[14] : I heard those rumors too [about me being considered for the role of Bond]. I don't know about James Bond, but they asked me three times to play Bond's bad guy.

Koskov talks about Gogol and "Operation Smiert Spionem".

Necros fights a guard in the kitchen and ends up killing him with a cleaver before quote-unquote "kidnapping" Koskov with explosive milk bottles that he passes off as a gas leak. The scene is well detailed and already very similar to the film.

007 go to see M who is [angry and] personally outraged by Gogol's assassination program. Furthermore, the recovery of Koskov by the KGB will make MI6 the laughing stock of world' intelligence services. A decision was made to eliminate Gogol at the first opportunity. M gives Bond the mission to kill Gogol in Tangier. 007 is not the most enthusiastic. M asks why and Bond replies: "I've dealt with General Gogol several times. I find it hard to accept Koskov's account of his recent psychotic behaviour". [M takes a large photo of Gogol and studies it grimly]. "So did I. The man has been in this office. I found him likable and amusing. Until yesterday when this was found in Athens on the body of Double-O Six".

Dutch actor Rutger Hauer in a promotional photo for Blade Runner (1982).

Bond reads the note produced by M aloud: "Smiert Spionem. Death to Spies". "You may be next, Double-O Seven".

M is also troubled by Saunders' report on Bond's shooting. He tells 007 that he is giving him a chance to rehabilitate himself with this mission to eliminate Gogol. Bond responds that the Archives were unable to identify the girl as associated with the KGB despite the accurate description they were given.

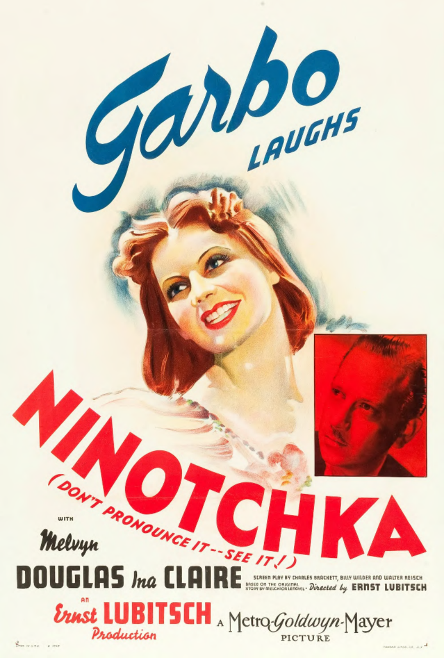
M asks if he lost his guts or determination to take a Double-O job. This happens sometimes; it's called accidie, disgust for one's profession. M can find a suitable office job for Bond and put someone else on the job, 007 decline and decides to accept the mission.

Before leaving Bond goes to see Q who gives him a "new revolver" (pistol) and an undefined gadget which is a watch, a pen or a cigarette case whose function is not revealed to the audience. Bond also goes to see Moneypenny who has identified the violoncellist as Kara Milovy.

007 will observe the latter at the Bratislava conservatory. He discovers that she hid the sniper rifle behind a board somewhere in the building. Bond examines the weapon, discovers the blank cartridges, then follows Kara in car until she arrive at her apartment. KGB men are there and we can strangely read that Bond instinctively puts his hand on his "Walther PPK" when he sees Gogol leaving (while Q is supposed to have given him a new weapon...).

Bond avoids the KGB men and goes to knock on Kara's door. He learns things from her and pretending to be a friend of Georgi; they leave for Austria with the parachute-ski scene.

After that we have Leiter, described as in his mid-30s, watching Gogol arriving at Whitaker's villa. Things are similar to the film except that Whitaker's hobby of recreating historical battles in miniature is not present. Then Koskov, Necros and Whitaker say that the death of an additional agent could accelerate the elimination of Gogol by the MI6.



Bond and Kara arrive at a swank hotel in Vienna. "This should be a kind of Ninotchka sequence for Kara, a girl from behind the Iron Curtain getting her first experience of high style life in the West. And who better than Bond to have it with?", write the screenwriters. Kara brings up Whitaker's name and after buying her a dress, they go to the opera. 007 will speak with Saunders to tell him that he needs papers to send the girl to London where he wants her to be interrogated.

After the opera, there is a scene at the hotel where Kara makes Bond a vodka martini. They dance a little and kiss, but it doesn't go any further. Bond then goes to the Universal Exports building and finds Saunders dead.

After collecting the papers in the room, Bond goes to find Kara and they leave for Tangier. There Bond follows Rubavitch to her hotel and discovers her room number. 007 writes a card for a date in her room, which he signs Rubavitch and sends to Gogol.

007 therefore confronts Gogol in pages where his weapon is again described as a "Walther", just as during the false assassination which follows (it is clarified that Rubavitch really didn't know that it was a fake one).

Bond is chased by the authorities in a parking lot and crawls under cars to disappear from their sight. Then he climb with Liz and Ava who take him to see Leiter (who is not in a yacht, but in a safe house of the CIA).

After that Bond is drugged by Kara when he joins her and they find themselves with Koskov and Necros on a plane heading to Afghanistan. 007 discreetly asks Kara to retrieve his cigarette case.

Further Bond uses it to escape the cells and flees the base with Kara via the boarding stairs (they haven't encountered any Afghan so far). Bond and Kara then cross rocky landscapes alone towards Pakistan.

They finally arrive at Landi Kotal, a place in Pakistan near the border which hosts several Afghan refugees. "A location never seen before in a feature film", the screenwriters say.

The screenwriters during their research notably read two articles from National Geographic on Pakistan: An Eye for an Eye: Pakistan's Wild Frontier (January 1977) and Pakistan Under Pressure (May 1981). Landi Kotal is briefly mentioned in these and there is also a photo of a drug dealer in Darra with the caption "A half-pound [225 grams] cake of hashish brings the equivalent of four U.S. dollars; in New York City it would sell for at least $5,000 on the street". One can wonder if this caption didn't inspired a whole part of the plot...

They pass through Landi Kotal market and 007 says he needs to contact Ranjit, one of the Mujahideen leaders. Bond tries to ask local people in order to contact him.

As he ask questions, Bond and Kara are approached by three women dressed in burquas who take out weapons from under their tunics. They force Bond and Kara into a carriage taxi and remove their burquas: they are in reality bearded mujahideen. They take our heroes to Ranjit's base.

Bond explains the situation to Ranjit and together they understand Koskov and Whitaker's plan. In the evening, Bond and Kara make love.

The next day Bond and Ranjit will attend (without Kara) the Snow Leopard deal: planting an explosive to blow up all the drug is impossible since the opium is dispatched in several trucks. They will have to follow the trucks and wait until everything is unloaded in a single place before doing so. This is done when the drug is loaded onto a plane at the Russian air base.

Ranjit will create a diversion while 007 will sneak toward this plane. The Afghan and his men launch an assault on the base while Bond plants the bomb. However being spotted, Bond can no longer get out of the plane and puts himself at the controls to now try to take off with the plane. Things happen similarly to the film: Bond avoids another plane taking off while Koskov, who chases 007 in a truck, end up crashing in it; Necros managed to enter the plane.

Necros attacks Bond in the cockpit and they fight in the cargo hold of the plane which is out of control because it has no pilot. The bag containing the bomb is ejected from the plane during the fight, then 007 also throws Necros from the open cargo hold door (there is no fight on a net suspended in the air in this treatment).

Bond, pursued by Russian fighter jets and lacking fuel, heads towards an American aircraft carrier. The Russians jets give up the chase and turn around. After verifying his identity, 007 is authorized to land on the carrier. However, he is forced to jump from the moving plane because the aircraft carrier's landing strip is not long enough for the plane to stop. The plane with the drugs inside it end up in the water.

Bond returns to Leiter (and Kara) at the safe house of the CIA in Tangier. However he finds Liz and Ava gagged. Shagg, one of Whitaker's henchmen, point a sawed-off shotgun at him. Whitaker and Koskov are there and are holding Kara and Leiter: they want their heroine. As Bond counterattacks, Gogol and his commando come to the rescue.

In the final scenes Kara performs at the Royal Albert Hall in London. There is no longer any question of marriage but she still says "goodbye" to Bond: she is going on an American tour for six months. "I've lost out with girls before, but never to a cello", says 007. She adds that they still have until Sunday to spend time together before she leaves...

January 23, 1986' treatment: iceboat, improvised sled and Prater

Maibaum and Wilson completed another 49-page treatment dated January 23, 1986. Compared to the previous one, the pre-title is now completely undefined.

Koskov's extraction from Bratislava is now more detailed, with the presence of a certain Halas who helps Bond and Saunders (we will have the opportunity to detail how later in a script). Many of the dialogues in this section were written, including one that echoes the short story when Saunders says: "[That's] plenty of time for a crack KGB marksman using a Kalashnikov gas-operated machine gun to make strawberry jam out of Koskov unless you squeeze off your shot first".

Kara, however, uses a rifle and after neutralizing her, Bond, Saunders and Koskov get into a car to join Q who is alongside a mini-submarine that Bond calls a Q-boat. Koskov gets in to cross the border.

Back in London where can notably observe one of the experiments carried out in Q's laboratory, "perhaps an unsuccessful attempt to walk on water".

Bond goes to Blayden in a "Bentley?" where Necros' fight against a guard in the kitchen. Further on the idea of giving Bond a new weapon was dropped and the gadget that Q provides is the key ring with an incapacitating gas function and another explosive function.

Now Bond finds Kara's rifle in her cello case which she leaves on a trolleybus while she is being interrogated by the KGB. After talking with her, they leave for Austria. This treatment forgets the parachute-skis to recycle unused ideas from For Your Eyes Only (when Kriegler in a Mercedes chased Bond and Ferrara in the Lotus on a frozen lake).

So Bond and Kara begin by stealing the car of the KGB agent who is supposed to watch her. Pursued, they arrive on a lake where an iceboat race is ongoing. There is an action scene where Bond borrows one of these iceboats (we will talk about it with more details later). The finale includes the sledding scene on the cello case:

> - John Glen[15] : I have to take full credit for that. We were writing the film out at MGM and I was in my room working out action sequences. I said to Cubby, Dick and Michael, "I've got this idea to use the cello case as an escape vehicle. Maryam can sit on one side and Tim can sit on the other side, and go down the mountain". Cubby pulled a face and Dick thought it was the worst idea he'd ever heard.

> - John Glen[16] : Cubby [...] said "Oh, it's not possible". So I rang the music stage at MGM and sure enough, there was an orchestra there and they had several cellos there. So we all trooped over to the music stage. They stopped what they were doing while we sat in the case. I sat in one side of the cello case, and Cubby sat in the other side. I proved that it was possible to do and Cubby bought into the idea and it worked very well.

Arriving at the border post, Bond had to hit with the cello a guard who was starting to draw his gun.

- Bond: Say it with music!

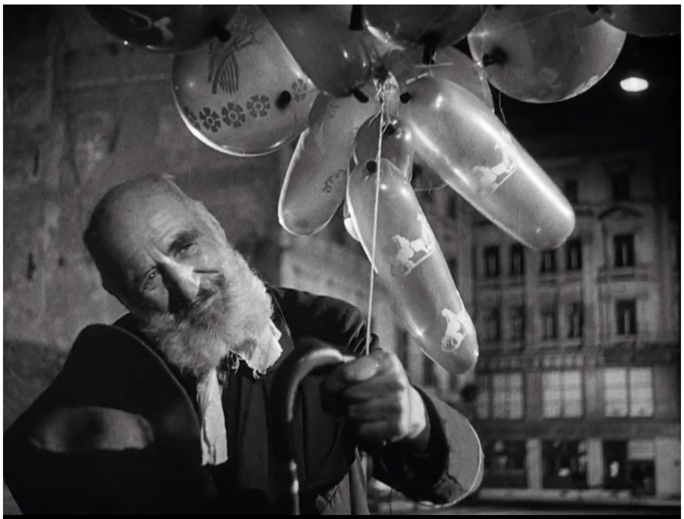
The scenes in Prater Park with the Ferris wheel and Necros disguised as a balloons salesman have now been added instead of the visit to the Vienna offices of Universal Exports. Necros in particular "asks Saunders in German if he wants to buy a balloon".

- John Glen[17] : At Prater Park there's a love scene in the Ferris wheel; it was the same one where Orson Welles and Joseph Cotten filmed The Third Man. This brought back a lot of memories for me, as I had worked as a junior assistant on that film. I did consider giving the



Many years earlier, John Glen had worked as an assistant sound editor on the 1949 film The Third Man, which included scenes at the Prater Park Ferris wheel. The Necros dialogue heard in the film, "Balloons, mein herr?", is a reference to this film in which a balloon seller (photo above) says the exact same words.

Vienna scenes The Third Man flavor, by doing lots of fancy angles, but I decided against it.

After the fake assassination of Gogol in Tangier, Bond uses the mechanism of a flag pole to descend along the conference building, attached to the cable. A little further on, he join a tourist group with which he had come before the assassination, in order to blend into the crowd. The tour guide who scolds him for being late is described as a "Barbara Woodhouse type" (the dog trainer to whom Octopussy referred to in the tiger scene). "We'll be late for the dog cemetery", she adds.

Bond no longer meets Leiter in a safe house but on a yacht called Thetis.

Further on, Ranjit is now in a cell in the Russian base. Bond and Kara go with him to Landi Kotal where there is now an action scene against trackers named Kim and Kahn who were following them from the air base. This includes a shootout in the market and a warehouse full of fireworks that Bond detonates with Q's key ring (here too we will have the opportunity to talk more about this on a section about a script).

Ranjit turns out to be a mujahideen leader, he explains that he was taken prisoner after being discovered searching an air base's office disguised as a worker, in order to prepare an attack on the base.

In this treatment Bond hides in a heroin truck to return to the base and a large "bulldozer" has been added for Ranjit during the attack on the base. At the time of the battle against Necros, the scene on the net outside the plane is present (Bond tears a bag of drugs with a knife, a "cascade of powdered white heroin engulfs Necros and he loses his grasp on net"). Also now present: Bond destroys a bridge by dropping his bomb to help the mujahideen.

The final scenes remains unchanged since the last treatment studied, except its not takes place in a safe house but on the Thetis.

So in this treatment, James Bond only sleeps with one woman. The film will add one more in the pre-title sequence but the fact that Bond sleeps less than before (something noted by critics at the time of the film's release) was something coherent with the rise of AIDS:

- Richard Maibaum[18] : You can't have him [Bond] alley catting around anymore in the era of AIDS.

- Michael Wilson[19] : We felt like the AIDS epidemic had caught up with us. Certainly, people were thinking about becoming more monogamous. There was this whole idea of safe sex. So people commented about: "Is Bond going to become a one-woman man?".

- Richard Maibaum[20] : [I was interviewed] [...] and so I was rash enough to say that in this age of AIDS, James Bond and other motion picture heroes cannot go alley-catting around anymore. I said [it], that's just plain common sense. Wow, did I get a call from the MGM Publicity Department. "What are you doing to us, to say that James Bond isn't going to have a lot of girls on the show, and all that sort of stuff?". I got an awful lot of flack from that.

January 31, 1986' treatment: escape method and royal cameo

In a new treatment from January 31, 1986 (55 page), the method of crossing the border for Koskov is finally the pipeline followed by the Harrier. A certain "Micklos" is present: he is a man unlike in the film.

Apart from that, this treatment basically doesn't change anything else, except at the very end when Kara gives a concert at the Royal Albert Hall. Here the screenwriters write that Prince Charles and Princess Diana are visible among the audience.

Similar to what was done on For Your Eye Only by hiring a Margaret Thatcher lookalike (Janet Brown), the production had secured two Charles and Diana lookalikes for this scene: Peter Hugo and Isabella Connell[21]. However, before filming it was discovered that Hugo had recently served a prison sentence in a case of pedophilia involving a 14-year-old boy. The idea of filming this scene will thus be abandoned[22].

Finally, there is no longer "goodbye" from Kara. She falls into our hero's arms with a classic "oh, James!".

February 10, 1986' treatment: pre-title and Rosika

New 63-page treatment on February 10, 1986. With it, the pre-title in Gibraltar is finally included on separate numbered pages.

It is already almost identical to the film, except that there is a first part in London M's office where the 00 agents are briefed on their mission before we find them on the plane. The handle of Bond's parachute is also "inadvertently" pulled by the imposter when the Land Rover falls, and Bond lands in a villa. A woman who resides there turns to her butler: "fetch another glass [for him], Trevor".

(A second undated copy I have of this treatment adds in the pre-title scenes with Moneypenny in the MI6' offices part. Also the girl is now named Linda and is now on a yacht instead of a villa; the butler disappeared in the process).

- John Glen[23] : I had spent a holiday on Gibraltar, many years before with a friend who worked for the war department. I was able to go and see all these fantastic places, which a tourist wouldn't be allowed to see [...]. When we came to make The Living Daylights, someone suggested we write a sequence involving a NATO exercise that goes wrong. [...] So I adapted that idea and developed the sequence with my knowledge of Gibraltar.

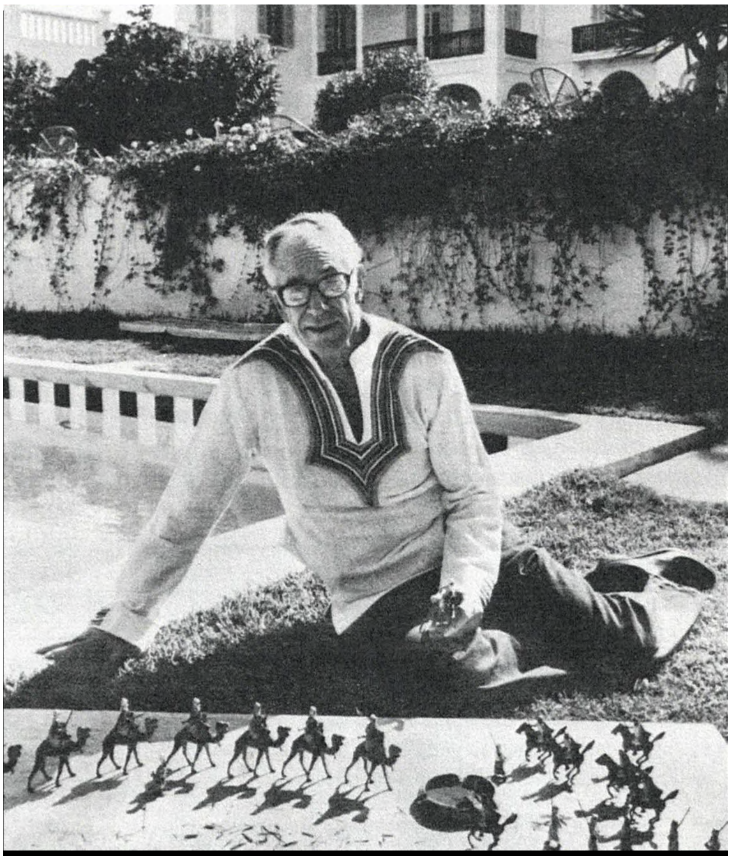
Micklos is now a woman named Rosika "Miklos" (with no C) and she has a scene where she has to distract a supervisor with her charms.

Much further on, on the plane that takes them to Afghanistan, Kara offers a glass of water to Bond who replies, no thanks "I've had my dose", in reference to the previous scene with the sleeping pill. Seeing her drink from it, he ends up accepting it.

April 11, 1986' script: section 26 and toy soldiers

The story being sufficiently well defined, the screenwriters move on to writing a script. One of 126 pages with pages dated April 2, 8, 9, 1986 is produced; it was followed by another almost identical one on April 11, 1986 (approximately 130 pages). Compared to the treatment of February 10, the screenwriters notably added the scenes concerning "section 26, paragraph 5". There is now only one iceboat on the lake (instead of a whole group racing).

One of the most important additions is that Whitaker now collects toy soldiers in his villa. For the inclusion of this into the film, say thanks to billionaire Malcolm Forbes. One of his passions was collecting toy soldiers and recreating historic battles with them. Forbes's collection was located in his Tangier villa, which the filmmakers chose to be Whitaker's villa in the film (although the major part of the interior shots were filmed on a set created in Pinewood).



Malcolm Forbes; his collection accounted approximately 115,000 toy soldiers.

- John Glen[24] : [Forbes] had this beautiful villa, which he kindly allowed us to use. We made Whitaker play war games with toy soldiers because Forbes had all these fantastic toy soldiers and we wrote them into the film.

- Michael Wilson[25] : We were looking for a grand house that could be the villain's house and someone said: "why not the Malcolm Forbes's house?". So we went over there, we look at it. [...] I was taken by the idea of, the eccentricity of having all these toy soldiers there. We get have a great end sequence, might kind of eerie, with these soldiers and Joe Don [Baker] playing these war games. [...] And of course, whenever you see something in a glass case in a James Bond film: you know that it's not long for this world.

Kara's cello is an Amati and the chase over the rooftops in Tangier is now present. The saying 007 gave to Georgi on the plane was: "spread enough manure around and someday you'll be up to your neck in it".

Later, in the action scene at Landi Kotal a passage is added where Bond pushes one of his pursuers into a pit of red clothing's dye.

Mujahideen disguised as women wearing burqas still approach Bond and Kara at the end of the scenes in Landi Kotal. When they draw their weapons, Bond comments: "I'm all for women's lib, but this is a bit much".

Generally speaking, this script is almost identical to the "second draft screenplay" which we will study in detail just after.

25 April 1986' "second draft screenplay"

It's time to study a 137 pages "second draft screenplay" dated April 25, 1986. I also have a copy from April 28 that contains almost no discrepancies with it. With the exception of the italic passages, the following is complete sections from the script (adapted somewhat for prose format, so that it doesn't take up too many pages).

London, Trafalgar Square, the camera angles past Nelson's Column statue to focus on an office building in the background. There is general pedestrian activity around it. On the front door is a sign lettered "UNIVERSAL EXPORTS". The door to Moneypenny's office opens and Bond's hand, holding hat, appears in doorway and poises to throw it toward costumer in background. Two hats are already on pegs. Moneypenny watch the flight of hat onto costumer peg above other hats.

- Moneypenny: They're waiting for you, James. M's blowing up a storm.

M stands behind his desk, a pipe in his hand, and faces two other gentlemen in well-cut civilian clothes. Bond joins them (all three have backs to camera) and M begins in an ironic tone:

- M: With your kind permission, Double-O Seven, we can now proceed to Her Majesty's business...

M now sits at his desk, beside a blowup of Gibraltar photo with a radar complex visible near top of the rock. (See National Geographic, July, 1966, page 120).

"Well, keep searching," said Colonel Gareze without much hope.

The colonel's responsibilities as commanding officer of the Gibraltar Regiment extend far beyond his complement of apes. Gibraltarians are subject to conscription, and at 18 every able-bodied male receives four months of military training in the Gibraltar Regiment (preceding page). He then becomes an active reservist until the age of 28. Thereafter, he remains in an inactive reserve status until he reaches 41.

Soldiers Train Under Mothers' Eyes

Training the Gibraltar Regiment presents a problem peculiar to the Rock.

"You'd never dream how hard it is," a corporal remarked ruefully to me. "Gib is so small that the lads are never more than a few hundred yards from their families. How can you forge a soldier with his mother plucking constantly at your sleeve?"

I met no one on either side of the frontier who expects that the Gibraltar Regiment will ever be called upon to repel a Spanish attack. When this siege ends—as one day it will—perhaps Rock and Campo will return to their pleasant and promising interdependence. Bitterness has no place in the sunny natures of either Gibraltarians or Andalusians.

A Spaniard in Algeciras expressed it best. "Look," he told me, "I have friends in Gibraltar. Before the border closed, I often visited them and they visited me. Now suddenly we're expected to hate each other? No, hombre! There will never be trouble between them and us. Between our governments, yes. Between our peoples, never." THE END

120

Running wing and wing—mainsail to port, jib to starboard—Albacores race across Gibraltar Bay. Members of the Royal Air Force crew the sailboats in a regatta sponsored by the Royal Gibraltar Yacht Club, one of the oldest outside England.

Bathers at Catalan Bay cavort by an enormous boulder in the warm waters of the Mediterranean. Vacationing Rita Krogh from Norway prefers a dip in the pool at the Rock Hotel.

Long a day's stop-over for tourists en route to Morocco or Spain, Gibraltar today advertises a temperate climate, little rainfall, and comfortable though crowded hotels as inducements for travelers to linger on longer visits. Although Spanish border restrictions hamper the peninsula's plans, air and ocean liners still bring thousands to enjoy the sights, shops, and sea at Gibraltar.

121

On previous page: National Geographic, July 1966 – pages 120 and 121.

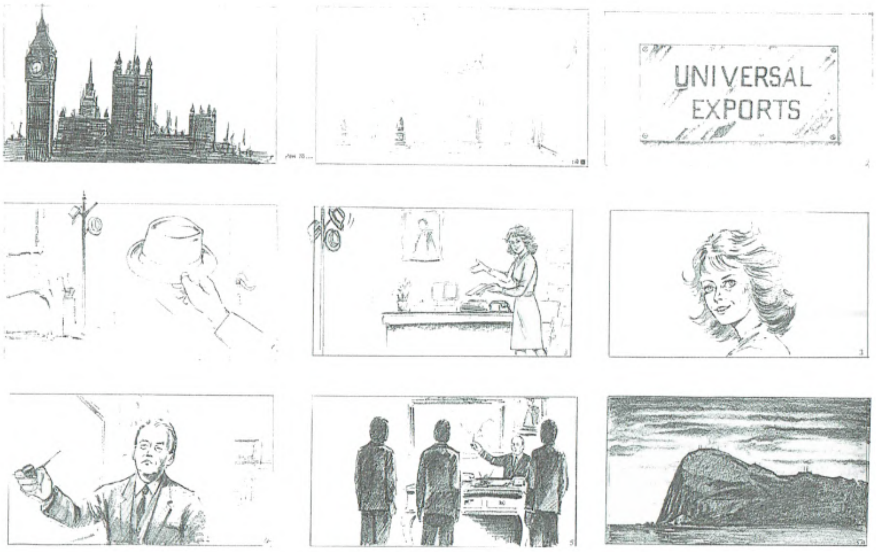
- M: ...A top secret Admiralty exercise at Gibraltar. They have requested three of our Double-O men to attempt a simulated penetration (using pipe as indicator at map) of these vital NATO radar security defenses...

The camera now takes a long full shot of the rock of Gibraltar (dawn), an impressively majestic view as seen from the strait.

- M: ...Key to our control of the Mediterranean.



Long shot of a C-130 Hercules plane approaching the rock from the sea.

- M's voice: A special detachment of SAS men will augment the regular counter-espionage force stationed there

The camera moves closer to the Hercules as the rear bay opens.

- M's voice: So the opposition will be tough.

A shot of the interior of the Hercules shows the three Double-O men in commando dress and parachute packs. Helmets and goggles conceal their faces. A dispatcher, hand raised, stands with them at bay as they await orders to jump.

- M's voice: They'll make every effort to prevent your success. Don't let me down...

His voice fades as the dispatcher gives the order to jump; what they do one by one.

The rest of the pre-title is very similar to the film: the three Double-O land, "Imposter" kills two of them. Close-up on 007: "[We] now see his face. James Bond, at last!". Bond discovers the corpse of one of his colleagues (with the monkey) and jumps on the roof of the Land Rover with which the imposter flees, then lands in parachute on Linda's yacht.

After the credits we find ourselves in Bratislava (Czechoslovakia). On a street where there is light pedestrian and vehicular traffic, Bond, dressed as a tourist, stops outside a bookstore. He glances at a three storey music conservatory across the street.

Several students are in near the entrance of the conservatory and Bond enters the bookstore.

Halas, the elderly book-wormy proprietor, looks up disinterestedly as Bond approaches him. Most of the books displayed appear to be Czech government propaganda publications. Posters feature recognizable Communist leaders like Lenin, Gottwald, etc.

- Bond: Have you a Czech first edition of Karl Marx Das Kapital?

Halas responds by indicating a short flight of stairs. Bond goes up it. He arrives in an attic-like area stacked and littered with pamphlets, leaflets, magazines, etc. where Saunders is. Early forties, Saunders is a testy, somewhat officious Exec Officer type, rather than an agent operating in the field. As Bond enters he nods curtly.

- Saunders: Saunders, head of Section V, Vienna.

He glances pointedly at his watch.

- Bond: The border guards gave me a few bad moments about my tourist visa.

Saunders leads Bond to a wooden crate with a hammer and sickle, etc. stenciled on it, and starts to open it.

- Saunders: Let's understand one another, Bond. General Koskov is a top KGB mastermind. His defection is my baby. He contacted me. I've planned this out to the last detail.
- Bond: What's your escape route?
- Saunders: Sorry, old man. Section 26, paragraph 5, that information is on a "need to know" basis only. I'm sure you understand. Koskov's under intensive KGB surveillance. A sniper has been assigned to watch him. He expressly asked for you to protect him.
- Bond: Why me?
- Saunders: He's under the impression you're our best.
- Bond: Where's my equipment?

Saunders shows Bond the equipment and they start looking around.

A bus stops in front of the conservatory. Musicians of both sexes, obviously students, get off the bus carrying their instruments. Kara Milovy, unusually sexy beautiful girl in her middle twenties emerges from bus with her cello. As she goes up steps towards the entrance of the conservatory:

- Bond: That girl with the cello case... Marvellous body...
- Saunders: Never mind her. Look for the sniper. ["Forget the birds for once, Bond. Look for the sniper", in another script].

At the end of the concert Koskov escapes through the toilets, they discover Kara is the sniper and Bond neutralizes her then takes Koskov to the pipeline. There, Halas opens the portal that leads to the installation containing the pipelines and introduces Rosika Miklos to Bond and Koskov ("a huge but attractive young woman" according to the script). Rosika distracts the supervisor and Koskov passes to the west via the pipeline where he is picked up by Q. Bond joins Saunders at the border.

After the scene with Q and Moneypenny, Bond drives his Bentley to the Blayden country house to meet M and Koskov.

In the salon, M, the Minister, the Chief of Staff, Koskov and a male secretary are seated around a table as Bond enters. The group was in the process of debriefing Koskov who rises as Bond sets hamper down on table near tea cups, trays of scones, etc.

- Koskov: James!

He throws his arms around him, kisses him loudly on both cheeks.

- Koskov (exuberantly): Never will I forget what you did for me! (Seeing the hamper) Ah, from Harrods. A God-send!
- Bond: I recommend the pate.
- Koskov: Da, da. As Russians say, "Hearts and stomachs good comrades make".

There is general amusement as he opens jar, takes spoon out of teacup, and scoops up caviar with it. He fills his mouth as Bond hands M yhe sales slip.

- Bond: Harrods bill, sir.
- Koskov: Caviar is peasant food for us but with champagne is not bad. (Seeing the label) Bollinger RD, the best!

He starts to open champagne as M glances at bill, then scowls at Bond.

- Bond (innocently): The brand on the list was questionable, sir. So I took the liberty of choosing something else
- Koskov (tasting the champagne): Superb! Order case for me.
- M (hastily): I suggest we resume the debriefing.

Bond sits down at table with others.

Meanwhile, Necros murders a milkman. The script tells us that Necros is a "notorious Greek terrorist assassin who speaks many dialects and languages and uses a variety of disguises". A gate house, a guard from Blayden moves to take a bottle of the (explosive) milk from him, but Necros advises him to get another (real) one because this one is "fresher" (this will be filmed but cut during editing).

- Koskov: I have been party member for twenty years. I love Mother Russia. So why I defect? Forgive me. I am Slav. We have saying. "Tears of Slavs flow like Volga". I tell you why I defect: General Gogol is why.
- Minister: Your KGB superior?
- Koskov: We were like brothers. But now he is different man. Sick. Like Stalin. He hates our new policy of détente.

Necros move into attack and kidnaps Koskov. After a debriefing with M, Bond goes to get his equipment from Q's laboratory, there is an interesting line there when Q hands him the key ring:

- Bond: Not novel, Q [the key ring]. My maiden aunt was handing them out as presents last Christmas.

Bond returns to Bratislava where he follows Kara to a tram. Gogol stops the tram and one of his men, Klek, brings Kara down. While searching through the cello case, Bond discovers that Kara's sniper was loaded with blanks and he goes to her apartment to wait for her. 007 confronts her and they decide to leave the country together while Klek watches Kara's apartment from his car.

Kara comes out her tenement and crosses the street. Klek looks after her and sees that she is going into a small cafe. Klek gets out of his car, locks it and follows her. The patrons chat, read the newspapers, eat their breakfast. Kara sits at a table near the front window and Klek sits where he can observe her.

Meanwhile, Bond comes out Kara's tenement with bags. He crosses the street, sees that Klek is not in his KGB car, stops at it, waits until several pedestrians pass him, then swiftly picks lock with skeleton key among others on ring of Q's gadget, and opens door with it.

Kara looks through the window and leaves unobtrusively the cafe. Klek rise and start to follows her but is momentarily detained by a fat couple blocking aisle between tables. His jaw drops when he finally sees Kara getting behind the wheel of his own KGB car and driving erratically out of sight around corner. He runs after it when he sees a man making a phone call in a telephone booth.

- Klek: Hang up! I am KGB and must make an official call!

The man turns: he is Bond. 007 hands Klek the receiver, steps out to let him into booth. As he enters, Bond hits him from behind. Klek slumps to the floor, immobilized. Bond closes door and Kara returns with the KGB car; she mounts the curb and knocks over dust bins. Bond jumps out of the way and goes to car.

- Bond: Where did you learn to drive?
- Kara: Georgi taught me.
- Bond: Move over!

She does so and Bond gets in behind wheel. As they drive, Kara suddenly remembers something:

- Kara: My cello! It's at the Conservatoire.
- Bond: We'll get you another in Vienna.
- Kara: No! It's a Stradivarius. Georgi got it for me. We must go back for it!
- Bond: In a KGB car? No way!

In the next camera shot we see the KGB car on a mountain road with a cello case strapped to the roof. Kara is asleep, her head resting on Bond's shoulder. Classical music plays softly over car radio and she suddenly awakens with a start. [...]

- Kara: I'm sorry, where are we?
- Bond: The Austrian border's only a few kilometers away.

A voice is heard in Czech over the radio, Kara listens intently.

- Kara: The authorities are searching for a stolen car. A man and a woman.
- Bond (dourly): And a cello.

The KGB car drives past a police car which is parked on the side of the road. The two police officers inside pulls out and follows.

- Bond: I think they just found it.

He accelerates and the chase down narrow winding road begins. The police speak into radio, hears reply and suddenly their car slows down.

- Kara: They are slowing down.
- Bond: That's what I was afraid of.

The KGB car continues its route near a frozen lake and Bond reacts to the activity ahead: a snowcat pulls out of woods and stops across road, blocking it. Several armed soldiers jump out of it and take up positions on either side of road. A motorcycle policeman pulls up next to snowcat at side of road and two more polices cars approach in background.

Bond slows down, looks behind to see the first police still following. He makes a quick decision: turns wheel sharply and going off road, down slope on to the frozen lake. A single "Ice Yacht" is sailing in the distance. The first police car follows the KGB car. In it, a policeman takes an automatic rifle and fires at the KGB car, hitting the front tire which burst.

Bond, now having difficulty controlling his vehicle, turns the wheel and accelerates; he is now going in circles as its tireless wheel rim cuts through the ice. The police car, unaware of [Bond's intentions], drives onto the circle and begins to sink.

Two other police cars drive down bank on to lake, Bond and Kara jump out of the KGB car. 007 inspects the damage, shakes his head as the Ice Yacht approaches in the background. The driver of the Ice Yacht approaches the policemen who are in the sinking car with a rope to rescue them.

- Kara: What do we do now?
- Bond: Come on!

He runs the Ice Yacht, thinking Kara is behind him.

- Bond: Get in! (Then looking around) Kara!

She's still near the KGB car, struggling across the ice with the cello case. Bond yells to her:

- Bond: Forget that!

The police car is almost completely underwater. The yachtsman, pulling policemen to safety, looks around toward yacht. He lets go of the rope. The policemen fall back into water as the yachtsman runs off toward yacht, shouting.

Bond is helping Kara on to deck, leaving cello case on ice.

- Kara: The cello.
- Bond: Kara, we can't take it.
- Kara: Then I stay.

She starts to climb out. Bond shoves her back, hands her the cello, then pulls the main sheet taut. Suddenly the yachtsman jumps on him. While they grapple, the Ice Yacht starts away. Kara cannot control it. Bond pushes the yachtsman down and runs after the yacht. He grabs a trailing rope and is dragged along. 007 makes his way hand over hand up the rope as he is dragged over the ice. Finally he reaches the stern and pulls himself aboard.

Just as he settles down, the motorcycle policeman pulls alongside and draws gun. Bond releases cleat controlling mainsail and pushes Kara's head down. Boom whips across the stern and bowls the policeman off his motorcycle.

Two police cars chase the Ice Yacht on the lake, they pull up on opposite sides, firing. Kara is horrified as a bullet hit the cello case. 007 gauges distance and at a precise moment he releases main sheet and pulls the rudder hard.

The Ice Yacht is then executing a 180 degree turn on one runner. The opposite runner rises into the air and passes over the top of the second police car. The Ice Yacht sails back in opposite direction. The polices cars attempt to turn [...]. They spin out of control on slippery ice surface and crash together.

One of the two police cars is still able to continue the chase while steam escapes from the hood of the other. The Ice Yacht and police car approach a dam at the end of the lake. The dam wall slopes upward at 45 degree angle to high fence, with signs in several languages prohibit entry into "No Man's Land", an area one kilometer from the Austrian border. A road and a hut are behind the barrier. A snowcat trundles along road and stops, several armed soldiers jump out. The police car pulling alongside Bond and a policeman fires out of window at Bond and Kara.

- Bond: Stay down and hang on.

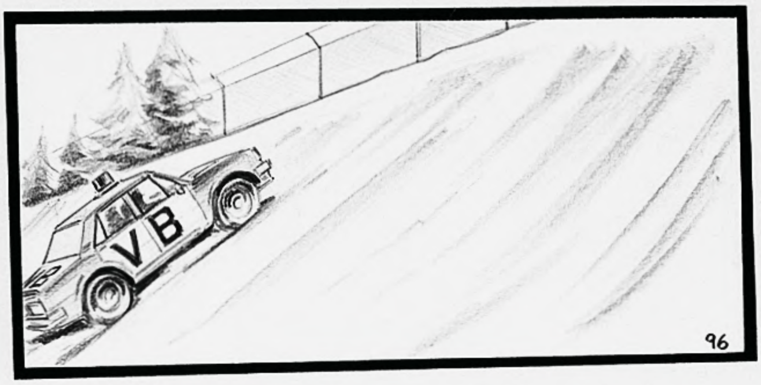
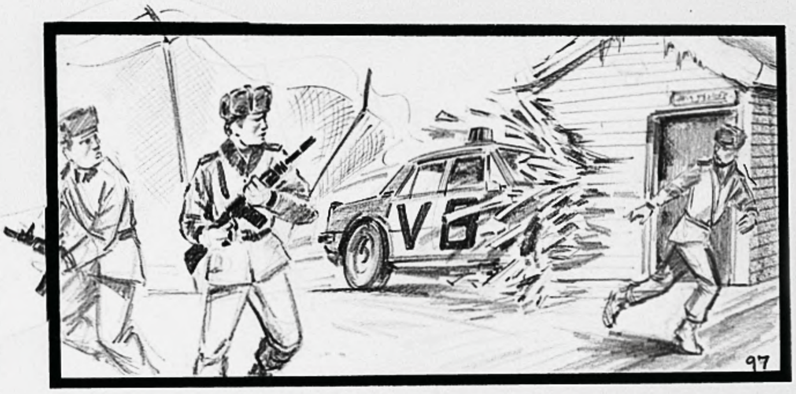
On the Ice Yacht, Bond pulls sheet and accelerates to maximum. The second police car accelerates to keep up. The Ice Yacht and police car approach the fences at the end of the lake. They hit the 45 degree incline leading up to top of the dam. The Ice Yacht and the car become airborne. The Ice Yacht sails over fence above astonished soldiers. The second police car hits the top of fence, flips over, crash into the guard hut then slides down opposite slope of road.



96. POLICE CAR SPEEDS UP SLOPE - AFTER BOND - AND TOWARDS FENCE



97. POLICE CAR SMASHES THROUGH FENCE AND ON INTO GUARD HUT - SOLDIERS RUN IN ALL DIRECTIONS.

Going down the slope, the Ice Yacht passes over wall and lands hard. The mast snaps. Bond attempts to control the Ice Yacht as it careers out of control toward woods. The Ice Yacht crashes through trees, losing outboard rudders and remnants of sails and rigging. Only Bond and Kara remain on the central body of the craft as it passes out of woods and crashes into boulders. They spill out on to snow.

- Peter Lamont[26] : Tom Pevsner and I flew out to Munich very early on and went ice yachting in [Weissensee, Austria]. Originally it was going to be an ice yacht chase rather than a car chase.

Kara and Bond sit up and survey the situation. A snow-covered slope below leads to the Austrian border. They turn at sound of snow cat full of soldiers approaching. The sound gets closer.

- Kara (unhappily): We almost made it.

Bond looks down at the cello case.

- Bond (deadpan): I'm glad I insisted you take the cello.

She looks up at him bewilderingly. Meanwhile approach cautiously then stop abruptly, startled, and fall back.

Bond and Kara pass the soldiers. They are sitting in the open cello case, riding it like a sledge down toward the Austrian border crossing. Bond, holding cello, uses the pointed stand as a rudder. They reach a snow covered road, then approach a barrier pole of border crossing.

Bond and Kara lean back flattening themselves to pass under barrier. He tosses cello in air as they pass under barrier and catches it on the other side. Bond and Kara skid to a stop next to a guard hut. An Austrian guard steps out, and is speechless with amazement when he sees them. Bond hands cello to Kara, stands up, takes passport and Kara's papers out of pocket and presents them confidently to the guard.

- Bond: Our papers. All we have to declare is one Stradivarius.

The guard is still too dumbfounded to respond.

General "Anatol" Gogol visits Whitaker in Tangier. In the next scene, Whitaker meet Koskov and Necros by a swimming pool and tells them that he wants to see Gogol dead (this scene appears a little later in the film).

At the Vienna railway station, Bond and Kara carry the battered cello case. They are in the same clothes as the last scene, looking the worse for wear. Bond passes line of taxis, stops at horse drawn carriage.

- Bond: Let's go in style. (To the driver) Hotel Sacher, bitte.

He hands cello case to the driver who stores it next to him. Bond and Kara enter carriage. Were are now in Stadtpark as they passes bandstand, musicians and couples dancing a waltz.

- Kara: It's beautiful. Just like Georgi said.
- Bond: You care a great deal for him, don't you?
- Kara: I owe him everything. My scholarship at the conservatoire. The cello. My flat.

[She sees the Opera House in the background].

- Kara (delightedly): The Opera House. Maybe someday I will play there. Then Carnegie Hall in New York. Georgi has rich American friend who can arrange it, Mr. Whitaker.
- Bond: Oh, yes, Whitaker.
- Kara: We see Georgi now?
- Bond: I hope so. But he may have had to move on. If he did I'm sure he left a message for us.

Bond and Kara go to the Opera House and 007 takes the opportunity to meet Saunders. Bond and Kara then go to Prater Park and get on the Ferris wheel, Bond sees from his cabin Saunders being approached by a balloon seller (in a clown costume):

- Balloon man: Balloons?
- Saunders: Nein.

A close-up shows that the balloon seller is actually Necros. Bond and Kara in the Ferris wheel are startled by a sudden stop of the wheel. She is thrown against him. He turns from the window to grab her.

- Kara: What happened? Why do we stop?
- Bond (smiling): I arranged it.
- Kara (smiling back): We could be here all night.

She snuggles close to him. Their eyes meet. Slowly they move closer and kiss. The wheel starts up again abruptly, separating them. She turns away ruefully. Bond looks down toward the huts below and sees the balloon seller walking away from huts; Saunders is nowhere to be seen.

They get out of the Ferris wheel and past line of people waiting at entrance, [...] he stops her:

- Bond: Wait here a moment. I may have word from Georgi.

He leaves her and continues to the maintenance huts where we last saw Sanders. Bond looking around for him and sees something in shadows: Saunders' body. Bond kneels beside it, feels for pulse, and sees impression of strangler's cord on neck. His face sets grimly as he realizes Saunders is dead. He sees a card sticking out of Saunders's breast pocket. He takes it and read "Smiert Spionem". 007 pockets the card, then searches Saunders's jacket pockets. He finds Kara's passport [that he had previously ordered].

In the background, Bond sees a person holding balloons and chases him before realizing that it is just a child.

In Tangier, Bond follows Gogol to a hotel. The general goes with a bouquet of flowers to date what appears to be his mistress/secretary, Rubavitch. Gogol opens the bedroom door but there is no one there; however, candles and flower petals suggest a romantic setting. Finally Gogol enters the bathroom and discovers Rubavitch naked in the bath. Suddenly James Bond comes out of the shower curtain with his gun and confronts Gogol (same dialogues as in the film with Pushkin, except that Gogol asks at one point if Bond is there to kidnap him and there is no passage where the general warns one of his guards via his watch).

In the casbah [citadel], stall vendors hawking all kinds of colourful food and goods along sidewalk. A tourist bus stops at the entrance to the casbah and a group of English and American tourists, mostly older women and a few men including Bond, emerge from it. They are led by bossy English woman tour leader who leads them into the casbah. A pair of American divorcees have taken a shine to Bond. 007 walks away from the group while the tour leader speaks:

- Tour leader: We will meet back here in one hour sharp. Don't be late. I recommend the leather goods. Beware of pickpockets. Good hunting!

Bond then goes to the conference building and pretends to kill General Gogol during his speech in front of Necros. Pursued by the authorities, he fled from roof to roof before reaching the ground of the casbah.

Bond moves towards the exit among the crowd of the eastern casbah. It turns out that a police car stops at the exit, two police officers and the chief of security get out. They study crowd passing through exit of the eastern casbah. Bond seeing police halts, then pauses to inspect merchandise of a street vendor while glancing toward exit.

- Tour leader: Mr Bond! Where have you been?

Bond turns to see the tour leader, arms akimbo, glowering at him. Other members of tour are behind her, burdened with junk purchased from the casbah.

> - Tour leader: You simply cannot wander off like that. You've made us late for our tour of the Dog Cemetery.

She approaches him with the others.

> - Bond: I'm sorry, I just ran into an old friend who was dying to see me.

The tour leader continues past on the way to the exit.

> - Tour leader: Just see it doesn't happen again.

The rest of the tour members passes Bond. He comes across the two American divorcees [now wearing fezes and carrying obviously cheap purchases]. Bond takes a few of their purchases.

> - Bond: Let me help you.

While the women chatter, Bond exits the Casbah with them hoping not to be noticed by the police. The chief of security is not in sight.

> - First Divorcee: Oh, thanks, Mr Bond. Boy, did we have fun!
> - Second divorcee: Such bargains!

They get into queue to board the tourist bus. Bond looks toward front of bus. [The second divorcee holds a miniature stuffed camel].

> - Second divorcee: We got everything half price! ["They wanted 60 dirhams", in another script].

The chief of security steps out into Bond's view at front of bus and looks over tourists. [007 glancing about for escape route. First divorcee holds up second stuffed camel].

> [- First divorcee: But we got two for one hundred].
> - Bond: You're too clever for them, girls!
> - First divorcee: We stopped at this cafe. Sally thought she'd ordered some exotic drink. It turned out to be mint tea. Ugh!

The divorcees laugh.

Two girls, Liz and Ava, pull up in a convertible next to Bond and invite him to get in (the divorcees are then disappointed). It turns out that they are members of the CIA who take him to see Felix Leiter on a yacht, the "Thetis". On this occasion we can see that Bond has a second weapon on him: a Beretta .25.

A little later 007 joins Kara; Necros disguised as a waiter comes to bring them dry Martinis. Bond becomes aware that a sleeping pill was in his drink; he confronts Kara then loses consciousness. 007 is taken by ambulance to a plane and talks with Koskov, here the dialogue is different from the film and the previous script:

- Koskov: What defection? I was on secret mission for General Gogol to disinform British intelligence. I am first and last Soviet patriot. This I am sure famous Double-O Seven can understand.
- Bond (imitating Koskov's accent): We have old saying, Georgi. "Bullshit"!

The plane lands at a Russian military base in Afghanistan. They are greeted by Colonel Feyador then Bond and Kara are escorted to cells. In one of them is Ranjit. Unlike the film, Bond doesn't fight the prison guards:

Bond in his cell whistles Rule Britannia. A puff of white smoke comes from the key ring and envelops the guards. The first jailer, having just locked Bond's cell, drops his keys, then passes out, as does the second jailer. The keys have fallen too far away from the cell to be reach from between the bars.

007, still handcuffed, squeezes both arms between bars in a futile attempt to get them. Kara, who has been amazed by the key ring, starts to unbutton her blouse.

In Feyador's office, an Afghan diamond expert (Achmed) examines diamonds and then places them in plasticize packets as he keeps running total of his appraisals on calculator.

We find Bond in his cell, now holding Kara's bra which she has evidently removed and given him. He uses bra cup to snag the Jailer's keys, then draws them to him. He opens cell door.

Bond and Kara escape, passing over the airport fence using a boarding stairs. On the other side of the fence, a Russian sentry point a gun at them and they raise their hands in the air. Suddenly Ranjit jumps from the boarding stairs and falls on the sentry, knocking him out.

- Ranjit: Follow me. It is only ten miles [16 kilometers] to Pakistani border [...] Bond and Kara follow him beside stream cutting a steep gorge through the mountains. They approach ruins of small village. They walk through smoking ruins, there are twisted wreck of Russian trucks blocking the road. They looking at devastation as they walk past.

- Ranjit: The mujahideen. Never let the Russians rest.
- Bond (to Kara who has an inquiring look): Afghan resistance fighters.

The sound of a helicopter is heard, Ranjit rushes into the ruins.

- Ranjit: Hide! Hurry!

Bond and Kara run after him and drop to the ground near him inside a ruined house. One wall has collapsed and part of the roof has fallen. Ranjit gets to his knees and peeks out of window. The Russian helicopter flies over ruins and begins to circle. Kara, Bond and Ranjit flatten themselves against the wall, out of sight. The gunner studies ground below, while they watching through window as the helicopter circles overhead.

Ranjit is ready with the gun. Bond pushes Kara toward far wall, out of danger. She backs into something against the wall. She turns and screams as a the decomposed body of a Russian soldier falls against her. Bond grabs her and stifles her screams with his hand. The gunner who didn't heard gestures to pilot to fly on and the helicopter flies away. Inn the ruin, they all breath a sigh of relief.

(At one point of the writing process, it was also imagined after Kara's screaming, of having the helicopter to lands. A gunner leaps out of it: are our heroes has been spotted? False alarm however: the gunner retrieve an Afghan's swords he saw in the rubble and climb back in the helicopter with it. The aircraft then flies away as ours heroes breath a sigh of relief).

At the Russian air base, Koskov, Necros, Feyador and the two prison guards are near an armored vehicle where Bond, Kara and Ranjit escaped; the boarding stairs are still by the fence. Kim and Kahn [sometimes spelled "Khan"], two tough-looking Afghan trackers collaborating with the Russians, search the ground. Kim sees tracks leading toward distant mountains. He runs up to Feyador and speaks in local dialect. Feyador turns to the jailers.

> - Feyador: They're headed for Landi Kotal. Go with the trackers and bring them back. Don't let Bond get to Pakistan.

The jailers nod glumly.

Bond, Ranjit and Kara halt at the top of a rise. Below them they see the world's largest thieves' market: Landi Kotal. It is an enormous bazaar complex selling all kinds of consumer goods from rare jewels to dishwashers. Directly ahead of them are hundreds of oriental carpets are spread out over the hillside. Bond, Ranjit and Kara look toward the market:

> - Bond: Looks like they laid out the red carpet for us.
> - Kara: What is this place?
> - Ranjit: Landi Kotal, Khyber Pass, free zone on the Pakistani border. You are safe now. The Russians want no trouble with the Pathan tribesmen who live here.

A jeep drives on the road leading to Landi Kotal and stops at the market entrance. Kim, Kahn and the two Russian jailers get out.

At Landi Kotal, Bond, Ranjit and Kara walk through the crowds of natives and tourists bartering vociferously with open air vendors. One shop is stocked with washing machines and frigidaires [refrigerators]. Another is filled with Russian and American armaments. Drugs are sold openly. Mingling incongruously with the tourists are hooded swathed native women and fierce-looking Afghans, heavily armed with criss-crossed bandoleers. Bond turns to Ranjit as one passes:

> - Bond: Resistance fighter?
> - Ranjit: No. Bandit.
> - Bond: I must meet with the resistance people. I have some important information.
> - Ranjit: The mujahideen are difficult to meet. They are afraid of Russian assassins.

They stop at a money changer's booth where three men swiftly conduct complicated currency transactions..

- Ranjit: I will try to reach them. Meet me here. One hour.

Ranjit turns and disappears into crowd.

- Kara (looking around): All these shops. They have everything! Let's look.

Bond follows her deeper into the market, they turn a corner. Suddenly Bond grabs her arm: Kim, Kahn and the two Russian jailers heads towards them in the throng. 007 pulls Kara into an alley between rows of stalls.

- Bond: They spotted us.

The first jailer points towards the entrance to alley and the others approach it. Bond and Kara hurry and reach the end of the alley before exiting. Kim and Kahn follow them, drawing their guns.

Bond and Kara reach some carpet sellers outside a fenced enclosure, they go into it through a gap in fence. Inside the enclosure there are dye pits where dyers are busy dyeing woolen clothes in vivid colors: green, blue, red, yellow.

Bond and Kara pass the pits, then move toward lanes in the background formed by threads of already dyed hanging from overhead wires to dry. The camera tracks them through the lane, then holds as Bond spots something through threads and stops abruptly.

He motions Kara back, slips between threads where he comes behind the second jailer who is holding a knife. The man hears him, wheels swiftly and stabs at him with the knife. Bond avoids thrust, elbows the jailer in the face and grapples with him. The camera tracks them as they struggle, moving away from hanging threads to the edge of the nearest pit, filled with red dye. Several dyers at other pits turn toward them, startled. Bond and the man are still grappling. 007 clamps a hammerlock on him, wrests knife out of his grasp, and holds it against the jailer's throat.

- Bond: Better red than dead.

Bond heaves him into the pit while the dryers watch, open-mouthed. He slips back through hanging threads, where Kara is waiting breathlessly. He grabs her arm and disappears with her among the threads. The jailer climbs out the pit, all covered in red. Other dyers gather around him sympathetically.

Bond and Kara held up among a spellbound crowd that is watching an Indian action film playing simultaneously on screens of twenty TV sets displayed in a row on a long saw-horse table. The camera moves closer to our heroes as Kara spots Kahn, rifle slung over his shoulder, approaching through the crowd, obviously searching for them. She nudges Bond, indicates Kahn. He sees him, pilots her carefully to the end of the table, then ducks down with her and they crawl around the end, crouched behind TV sets. Kahn stops in front of a set masking Bond and Kara from him, he looks around for them.

Kim also looking for them among the people engrossed in the film. Kahn tries to get Kim's attention by waving, doesn't, then whistles, but this causes the key ring in Bond's pocket to whistle back.

Kahn, on other side of table hears, this. He unslings rifle as he hurries around end of table. Bond and Kara runs toward other end of table. Behind them, Kahn, crouching down so as not to be seen by people watching screens, tries to level rifle and steady it as he runs after them to get close enough for a sure shot.

Bond reaches up, grasps back of TV set and heaves it off table to the ground. Kahn falls over it. Bond follows Kara who has kept running. He pulls another set off table, then another. Kahn regains footing and follows them, avoiding smashed sets.

The crowd watching the film is at first bewildered by action behind table, as sets vanished from in front of them, they start to voice loud complaints. Bond and Kara are reaching the end of the table. 007 kicks the saw-horse supports from under it. The table collapses, several sets topple off table-top around Kahn, knocking him down again. Bond and Kara disappear around end of table as Kahn struggles groggily to his feet. Bond and Kara push their way through the unhappily crowd.

Kim, still wide-eyed at incident, sees Bond and Kara and starts to follow. A horse-drawn ornately decorated native wooden taxi cuts off his view of them. When the taxi disappears, Kim has lost sight of them. Kahn, still somewhat unsteady, joins him. Kim points to where he last saw their quarries. They resume searching for them.

Bond and Kara find themselves in a deserted area of low wooden buildings behind shops and stalls used to store goods. 007 tries open a door made of iron bars, like a cell door, and secured with a large padlock. He uses the keys that Q gave him to open the lock. They enter. Kim, Kahn and the two jailers, one now dyed red, fan out to search the warehouse area.

Inside one of these warehouses, Bond reaching through iron bars of door puts the padlock back in place but has difficulty relocking it from inside. He hears someone approach and ducks away from door. Kim approaches the door, a camera shot shows us that the padlock is still open.

In the warehouse, Bond and Kara move into the shadows. He checks side window, sees it opens from inside.

Outside, Kahn stops by door and looks toward the opened padlock: he gestures to call the others. Bond and Kara cannot see Kahn outside. In dim light she inspects large cardboard crate in middle of floor and whispers:

> - Kara: Chinese?

Bond studies the characters on crate.

- Bond: Fireworks!

He looks around: the warehouse is filled with identical crates. They turn at sound outside door: the bad guys are removing the padlock and slowly opening the door.

Bond puts his key ring on top of the box. Holding finger to his lips he beckons Kara to follow. They move to the side window and climb out. Kim and the others are now in the warehouse. Kahn nods to Kim who whistles. The key ring beeps back. They close in toward the crate for the kill, thinking Bond is behind it. They approaches and discover only the key ring; they look around looking puzzled.

Outside, Bond and Kara round the corner of the next warehouse and stop. Bond puts fingers to lips and blows a sharp, loud wolf whistle. An insert shot on the key ring shows us that it has a light that flashes red before exploding! Inside the warehouse, fireworks go off in rapid succession. Roman candles, colorful exploding rockets, starbursts fill the air. Kim and Kahn drop their weapons and join the jailers as they rush out of building. Their clothes are torn and smoking. Bond and Kara slip away back toward shops, etc., as people from there, attracted by the sound of the fireworks, start to gather excitedly.

Bond and Kara are now in the crowd near Landi Kotal's money changer' booth. They wait, Bond is glancing at his watch. A general hubbub is heard as the three money changers transact business. At a near distance we hear the sound of galloping horses. The money changers hastily shut up the booth, then, lugging cash boxes, hurry away from it. The sound of the horses' hooves grow louder and the rest of the crowd, seeing the money changers take off, also hustle away from the booth until the area around it is deserted. Bond and Kara look around.

- Bond (puzzled): Tea break?

A boy runs past them, shouting something in Afghan. It sounds ominous.

- Bond: I think we had better...

Before he can finish five fierce-looking armed mounted men who look like bandits ride up to them. One holds reins of riderless horse. They surround Bond and Kara, gesturing with their guns for Bond to mount the extra horse. He does, pulls Kara up behind him. Then riders flank Bond's horse. One of them leans over and lashes horse's haunch. All gallop out of scene. Hoofbeats die away. It looks as though Bond and Kara have been kidnapped. Actually the "bandits" are mujahideen freedom fighters.

They arrive at a ruined fortress, the adobe walls are weathered and eroded giving the impression it was abandoned long ago. Bond, Kara and the others on horseback gallop into foreground toward fortress.

The group rides through the gates into walled square leading to fortress. Children playing there scatter as horses gallop in. They halt and dismount. Bond and Kara are roughly pushed through doorway into fortress by two of the freedom fighters who follow them inside. They enter a surprisingly luxurious hallway decorated with beautiful Afghan mosaic tiles, antique oriental runner leads to grand brass-studded wooden door at end of hall. Bond and Kara stop at door. The mujahideen opens it, urges them forward.

As they are brought to the reception room, they see Ranjit now bathed, shaved, in silken robes, reclining on pillows, attended by several beautiful concubines elegantly dressed. Ranjit rise: he is actually a sophisticated, cultured, attractive man.

With a smile he says:

- Ranjit: I am Ranjit Khan. Please forgive me for the theatricals. Unhappily they are necessary. (Holding the jail keys) Thank you both for your help.

He tosses the keys to freedom fighters then turns to Kara.

- Ranjit: No doubt you would like to freshen up.

She glances apprehensively at Bond.

- Bond: It's alright. I'll be along shortly.

Ranjit gestures to the concubines who accompany Kara out.

- Ranjit: I am partial to European women ever since my university days. I'm afraid my appearance in the brig was not very Oxonian. I was caught reconnoitering the air base. We are planning to raid it. Luckily I was not recognized.
- Bond: You're mujahideen?
- Ranjit: Commander of the Eastern district. And you?
- Bond: James Bond, MI6 British agent working with the CIA. You have unofficial ties with both, I think... We've uncovered a plot involving the illegal sale of hi-tech weapons to the Russians. Arms that could be used against your freedom fighters. Shall I continue?
- Ranjit: Please do.
- Bond: I believe the Russian down payment was diverted by KGB General Koskov to purchase a bucketful of diamonds instead. They must have been brought here to buy something.
- Ranjit: Opium, of course. Diamonds are always used for payment. Since the invasion the price has plummeted. Too difficult to smuggle out. Anyone who can do so could make a tenfold profit
- Bond: That's it! The last piece of the puzzle. I heard Koskov arrange for transport tomorrow. It must be for opium. We have to stop it.
- Ranjit: You have given me a problem. I work with the Snow Leopard Brotherhood from time to time.
- Bond: I know of them. The biggest drug producers in the Golden Crescent.
- Ranjit: I could care less if Russians die from my bullets or their heroin. And we need the money. They have hired me to protect an unusually large shipment tomorrow. It has to be the same deal.
- Bond: I want to be there.
- Ranjit: The Brotherhood is dangerous to cross.
- Bond: You won't cooperate?

- Ranjit: Not openly. But if the caravan is not interfered with until after they are paid I will do what I can... How do I know you are not a KGB provocateur?
- Bond: Felix Leiter of the CIA is in Tangiers. Can you contact him?

Ranjit takes what appears to be a remote control unit for a TV and pushes the button. A panel on a magnificent carved antique breakfront slides open revealing state of the art communications complex.

- Ranjit: If Leiter vouches for you I will help you. If he doesn't I will shoot you, and the girl.
- Bond: It's a deal.

It is night, Bond is in a bedchamber of the fortress which he paces impatiently under the gaze of a guard. Ranjit enters, then two concubines with Kara. She has been bathed, coiffured, perfumed and dressed in an elegantly embroidered silken native pyjama suit.

- Ranjit: We leave at first light.

He gestures for Kara to join Bond. She does.

- Ranjit: I'll have dinner sent up.

The concubines giggles. Ranjit reprimands them in Afghan with mock severity. The concubines leave and he follows them out. The guard also leaves, closing the door behind him. The camera move closer on Bond and Kara. He gazes at her approvingly.

- Bond: Sihani, (as she looks at him puzzled) that means "beautiful" in Afghan.

He puts his arms around her, draws her close, kisses her. She responds ardently.

- Kara (after they break): Where are we going tomorrow?
- Bond: Ranjit and I have something to do. You'll have to stay here.
- Kara: You're going back for Georgi, aren't you? (As he remains silent) It's too dangerous, James. Don't do it.
- Bond: Afraid I have to.
- Kara: Then I'm going with you!
- Bond: No way, darling.
- Kara (after a beat, huskily): might never see you again.
- Bond: Of course you will. We'll be together later.
- Kara: Later? (Half sob) Maybe only now.

She kisses him passionately. He responds. They sink down onto the bed.

The night sky is flooded with stars. On the terrace, the camera shoot the bedroom through the blowing curtains, Kara is now nude, reclining on heaped up pillows, they are dimly visible by starlight as they continue making love.

The main difference between this second script and the previous one from April 11 is the fact that after this, Kara no longer stays at the fortress (from where she usually left for Tangier off-screen). Instead she join Bond and Ranjit at the Snow Leopard deal.

So the next day Bond and Ranjit go by camel and horse to the meeting place with members of the Snow Leopard. Suddenly a lone horseman approaches them, Ranjit draws a gun and Bond deflects it when he realizes it is Kara.

- Bond: I should have known.
- Ranjit: I can't spare the men to send her back.
- Kara: I'm not afraid of the Russians.
- Ranjit: It's not the Russians I'm worried about. Try not to look like a woman.
- Bond: That could be difficult. Stick close to me.

The exchange takes place.

- Ranjit: Neither trusts the other. We will unload one camel at a time. They pay, and we bring the next.
- Bond: How much is involved?
- Ranjit: 50 million. A quick profit of 500 million.
- Bond: And another five tons of heroin on our city street. You have the plastic I asked for?

Like in the film Bond is going to plant his bomb in a bag of opium but finds himself trapped in the truck that is transporting it. The bags are then unloaded onto a cargo plane and Bond is spotted. The mujahideen arrive and a fight begins on the Russian airfield. Kara approaches Bond's plane on horseback, but falls when an explosion takes place near her.

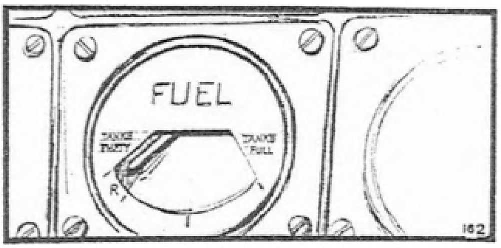
007 then gets off the plane to pull her inside. Bond prepares to take off with the plane and Necros manages to invite himself on board. While going to defuse the bomb, Bond stumble on him and a fight begins on the net which holds the bags. Necros ends up falling into the void and Bond defuses the bomb before joining Kara in the cockpit.

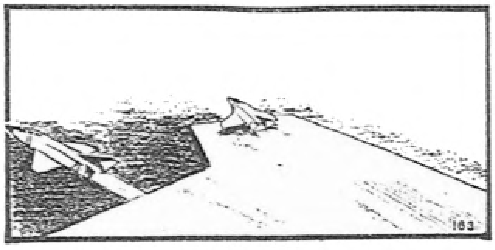
After avoiding a collision with a mountain, Bond helps the mujahideen being pursued by tanks by throwing the bomb onto a bridge from the plane.

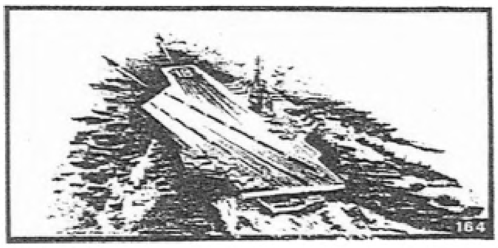
Over the Indian Ocean, Bond at controls sees the fuel gauge getting low. In the cokpit, Bond and looks forward and down. He see an aircraft carrier in the distance from which two [Hawker] SeaHawks take off. Bond speak to mike:

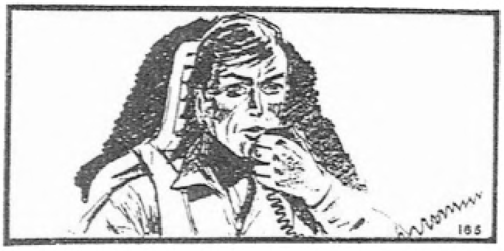
- Bond: U.S. Carrier, disregard my markings, I am James Bond, British agent, flying commandeered estimated cargo of twenty tons of raw opium. I have a fuel problem. Request permission to land.
- Voice: Permission refused. If you attempt to land we will take armed offensive action.
- Bond: Bond to carrier. Urgent you contact MI6 London to verify my identity.

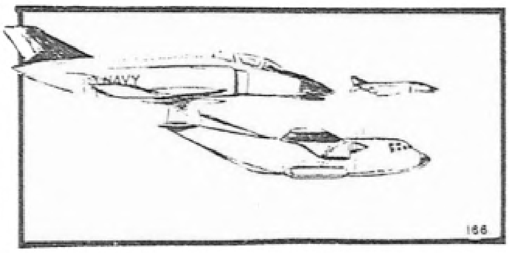
Both SeaHawks are heard while the fuel gauge is almost empty.

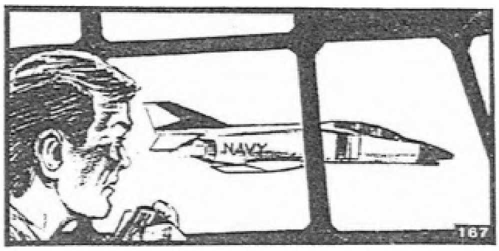












Miss Moneypenny rushes into M's office.

> - Moneypenny: Message concerning Double-O Seven, sir.
> - M: Where is he? What's he doing?
> - Moneypenny: It's from Captain Flynn, U.S. Carrier in the Indian Ocean... (M's jaw drop, Moneypenny start to read) Request your immediate confirmation James Bond official Afghanistan mission to permit his landing in Russian turbojet with twenty tons raw opium, and a Czech female defector.
> M almost slides under his desk.
> - Moneypenny: What shall I reply, sir. The message is classified most urgent.
> - M (gesturing weakly): Affirmative, affirmative; it could only be Bond.

Moneypenny runs out. M starts to shakily pour himself a glass of water from carafe on tray with glasses on desk.

> - Q (taking a large Sherlock Holmes meerschaum pipe out of his pocket): I suggest something more stimulating, sir.

Q screws the bowl off the stem and pours whiskey out of it into another glass, and hands it to M.

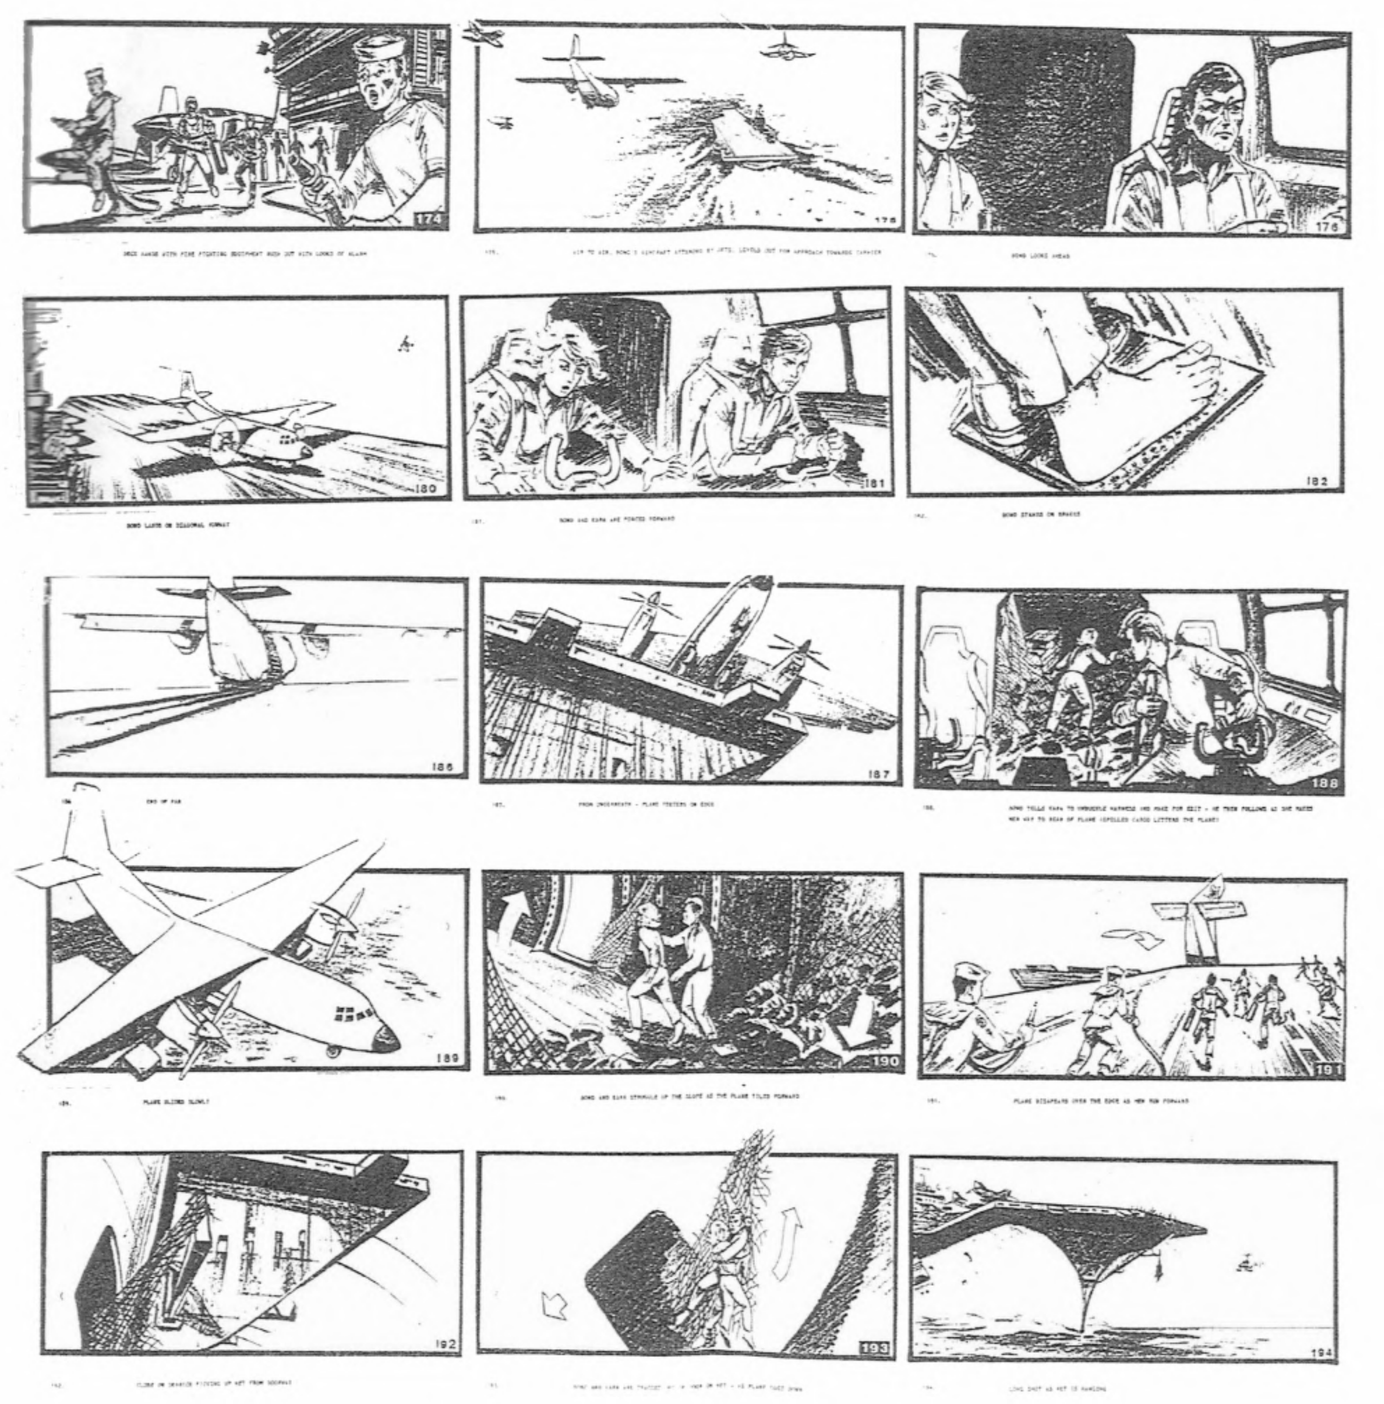
The Russian turboprop plane loses altitude. In the cockpit, Bond looks at the fuel gauge which is almost empty. Speaking into mike glumly:

> - Bond: Bond to carrier, I'm about to ditch....
> - Voice (over speaker): Carrier at Bond, permission to land granted.

The plane approaches the carrier, [...] through windscreen carrier deck comes up before Bond. Kara's knuckles turning white. Bond lands, the camera tracks the plane from bow to stern.

The plane, with no hook to catch braking line, slows down but not enough. Bond hits the brakes, they burn. Full flaps, the plane reaches the end of the stern and stops half-over it.

Bond and Kara run toward rear of plane. She is caught in cargo net; he stops to help her. The plane teeters on the edge. It slips off stern, hitting water and sinking. Carrier deck officer men run to stern. They look over and see the end of cargo net hooked on end of retrieving hook. Bond and Kara are caught in net dangle over the end of stern.



Bond, carrying a cello case, leaves a Tangier hotel with Kara. She is obviously overjoyed. The camera track them toward a doorman who signals for a taxi as they approach. The doorman opens taxi door, Bond and Kara get in with the cello.

- Bond: The airport.

The driver nods and Kara slips her arm affectionately through Bond's and holds it tightly.

- Kara: I hope we won't be late.
- Driver: We're right on time, lady.

Suddenly the driver points a short double-barreled shotgun directly at her. We now recognize him as Stagg, one of Whitaker's tough henchmen. We've seen him before [when Whitaker, Koskov and Necros were at a pool]. A second Whitaker henchman appears outside window beside the diver. He opens door. Stagg, still covering Kara, slides over to make room for him to drive. The second henchman sits down behind wheel, closes door, then turns taxi into street.

[Bond and Kara are taken to Whitaker's villa]. Bond and Kara, with Stagg's shotgun held to the back of her head, precede them into the display room. Two other henchmen are there.

- Koskov (same old con man): Such a pleasant reunion!
- Whitaker (to Stagg): He's clean?

The second henchman pulls Bond's Walther and Beretta out of his own pocket showing that he has already disarmed Bond. He repockets them.

- Koskov: Do not be alarmed, Kara. We are all friends who have had a little misunderstanding.
- Whitaker: Get down to brass tacks, Koskov!
- Bond: So you're Whitaker. (Indicating Gettysburg display case) Pickett's charge was up Cemetery Hill not Little Round Top.
- Whitaker: On your knees!
- Bond: I'm not ready to say my prayers yet.

Whitaker gestures to Stagg who clobbers Bond across the shoulders with the barrel of his rifle. Bond sinks to his knees. Kara bursts into tears.

- Whitaker: Where's our opium?
- Bond: Bottom of the Indian Ocean!

Whitaker nods to Stagg who clobbers Bond again. He almost falls forward but manages not to.

- Whitaker: You expect me to believe anybody would dump half a billion bucks in the ocean?
- Koskov: This is breaking my heart, James, but we have big financial commitments...
- Whitaker: Once more, then if he doesn't talk... We'll see about her.

As Stagg hits Bond again, 007 clamps the gun barrel with his hand, pinning it to his shoulder. He lunges forward, causing Stagg's trigger finger to fire the gun. The henchman standing beside Whitaker is hit and goes down, wounded. Camera angle widens as Bond throws Stagg over his head into Whitaker. Both crash back into the battle of Gettysburg display case which somehow activates battle sounds, bugles, galloping hoofbeats, rifle and cannon fire, rebel yells, etc.

Bond gets to his feet. Third and fourth henchmen close in on him. He uses karate and judo against them. Stagg has recovered his shotgun and dodges about looking for a clear shot at Bond.

Behind Kara, Koskov is visible, taking refuge behind Stalingrad display case. It, too, is activated to produce battle sounds as Bond, third and fourth henchmen, struggling, brush against it. Sounds include diving bombers, screaming rockets, clanking tanks, etc. Koskov looks for way out. 007 lays out the third henchman and breaks away from the fourth, grabs Kara by the hand and pulls her after him into the hallway.

A black clad figure holding machine pistol appears in it ahead of them. Bond drops to floor, pulling Kara down with him. Stagg, having recovered shotgun, emerges from the display room. The figure passes Bond and Kara and fires a burst at Stagg who falls back through doorway, dead. The figure continues toward the display room. Bond and Kara get to their feet and follow him.

The black clad figure enters the display room, knocking Koskov out of his way. He tumbles into a display case. Whitaker picks up Stagg's shotgun as Bond and Kara follow the figure in. Whitaker levels the shotgun at Bond. There is a burst of fire through arched doorway leading to the garden area. Whitaker, hit, is killed. A moment later Gogol enters through the arched doorway, holding a smoking machine pistol.

Koskov, who was has stumbled on the recreation of Waterloo, tries to make Gogol believe that Whitaker was holding him prisoner, but it doesn't work; he is placed under arrest.

In the next scene, Kara plays cello at the Royal Albert Hall in London and the audience applauds at the end of the performance. A camera shot is expected to show Prince Charles and Princess Diana applauding among the audience. M and Gogol also attend the performance:

- Gogol: To bad Commander Bond is not here.
- M: Unfortunately he's on an important case...

The cello case is leaning against the wall of Kara's dressing room. Kara enters, turns back, throws kisses to enthusiastic concert goers outside in corridor, then closes the door. She heaves huge sigh of happy relief then puts cello down, slips out of gown, and steps behind a screen. It turns out that Bond is waiting for her there, his shirt already unbuttoned. She gives a startled gasp.

Diana and Charles visiting the production at Pinewood on December 11, 1986.

- Bond: You didn't think I'd would miss this performance, did you?

She laughs delightedly, takes off his shirt. They sink back upon a chair along the wall behind screen. The camera stays on this screen for a long moment.

> - Kara (from behind the screen): Oh, James!

Then silence. THE END.

May 16, 1986' script: flying carpet, gorilla and helicopter

A new script entitled "revised second draft screenplay" of approximately 130 pages was completed by Maibaum and Wilson on May 16, 1986.

As in the film, the pre-title now begin directly in the plane (no more scene in London) and we note that the suits of agents 00 are a kind of wingsuit: "the sleeves of their suits have webb-like wings that help them control their direction and speed". This is not the case in the film.

Much further on, the first name "Brad" is given to Whitaker, as well as a slight accent from the state of Virginia. Effigies of him as various historical military leaders made in wax, "reminiscent of Madame Tussaud's", are also introduced into this script. Whitaker's possible past such as his time at the West Point military academy is mentioned.

Saunders is now killed along with the restaurant doors at the Prater Park, rather than near huts off-screen.

After the fake assassination of Gogol, Bond still flees the conference center by jumping from roof to roof but this scene has been extended. Indeed, on a roof, an elderly Arab named Abdul beats carpets suspended on ropes with a carpet beater.

Bond approaches him. A policeman reaches the roof, sees Bond and draws a gun. Abdul hits the policeman with the carpet beater, the policeman falls backwards to the door he came from.

- Bond: Thanks, Abdul. Where is it?

Abdul points to a carpet that is in a corner of the roof. 007 picks up this carpet which is mounted on a metal frame. He goes to a corner of roof where a pair of telephone lines are affixed. They cross road to roof of the opposite building. Bond places the frame on the lines, and rides over and across the road on the telephone lines.

Down on the road, a policeman look up and watch in astonishment as Bond riding a "magic carpet". The policeman speaks excitedly into his walkie-talkie. The street sign above the policeman's heads reads: "Calle du Zoo".

Bond arrives on the roof opposite and climbs on, taking the carpet with him. He goes to the opposite corner where there is another set of telephone lines and looks down in surprise. He sees that the lines are lying on the ground, a telephone employee is currently repairing them.

Bond throws away his "magic carpet" disgustedly. He looks around for an escape route and sees a heavy metal grate on the roof. On another roof where there is washing, policemen see Bond.

The part with the flying carpet will be filmed.

007 is busy removing the bolt securing the grating when bullets fired by the policemen hits near him. Bond duck down where the grate was; it is dark. He walks crouched down this narrow, dimly lit corridor and comes to a place where there is another grate in the floor. He removes the bolts and opens it. Here too, it is dark below.

On his knees, he stick his head down through the hole to take a look. Suddenly he is pulled inside by something.

Bond falls headfirst into a sort of slide and lands on a pile of hay. He looks around and sees a crowd of natives, tourists and children behind bars. They laugh and point at Bond. 007 turns towards the slide when he hears the sound of a tremendous pounding.

A 190 kilo gray-backed male gorilla (named Djum) hurtles down towards Bond. The animal lands in front of him and grabs him. The gorilla pulls him closer, then reaches out with his huge hand and plucks out one of Bond's eyelashes.

Behind the gorilla, the chief of security goes down the slide feet first and hits Djum's back. The gorilla drops Bond and turns toward the head of chief of security.

Bond then rushes to door of the cage as a keeper opens it. A baby gorilla jumps into his arms. Bond hands it to the keeper.

- Bond: Burp him.

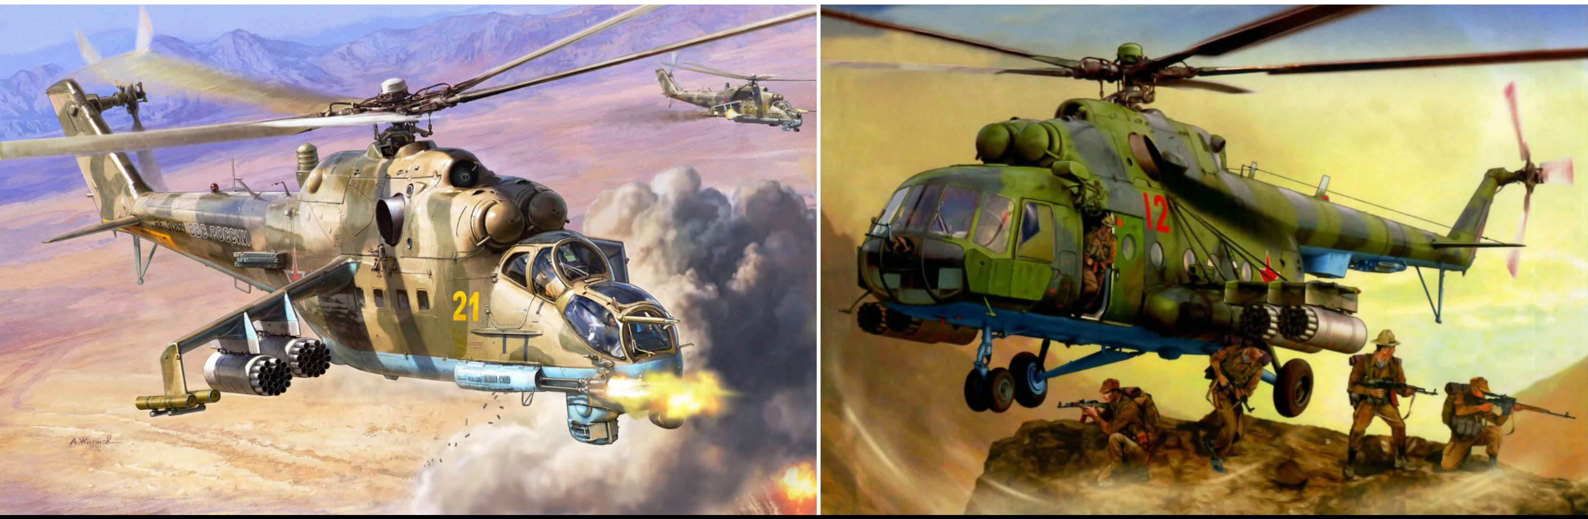
He exit the cage. In the background, the gorilla wrestles with the chief of security from whom Djum plucks out an eyelash.

Mingling with the crowd, Bond finds his group of tourists and meets Liz and Ava.

Further away, in Afghanistan, after their first escape from the Russian air base, Bond, Kara and Ranjit no longer go to Landi Kotal in this script. Instead there is an action scene as they pass through a ruined village when a Russian helicopter suddenly flies over it.



The Russian Mil Mi-24 "Hind" assault helicopter (left) is one of the symbols of the Soviet–Afghan war. The Mi-8 (right) was also heavily used during the conflict.

Inside a ruined house, Bond and Kara run and drop to the ground near Ranjit. A wall of the house collapsed and part of the roof felt inside. The door opposite the entrance leads to other rooms. Ranjit gets on his knees and peeks out the window.

- Ranjit: We're safe here.

Bond joins him at the window.

- Bond: Unless they pick up our body heat on their infra-red detector.

Outside, the helicopter makes a turn towards the house. The gunner opens fire. Bond pulls Kara to a cover, bullets hit near them.

- Bond: They did!

The helicopter flies at low altitude above the ruined houses and returns. His weaponry sweeps the area near them again. The helicopter makes another pass.

Our heroes get up and pile up splintered wood and rags in a corner of the room then Bond pours oil from a broken lamp over the pile before lighting everything and pulling Kara into the next room. Ranjit and the camera follow them across several rooms.

The helicopter banks again for another pass. A camera shot shows the pod beneath the aircraft: an optical scanner sweeping the area.

Inside the aircraft the co-pilot studies the infrared screen and points to the hot spot.

The helicopter banks towards the house and hovers; the gunner concentrates his fire on this specific area. Bullets completely destroy the room where the fire is.

The helicopter slowly descends towards the ruined house and hovers, the gunner fires into the building through the roof.

Bond climbs on the top of a wall which is just below the helicopter, and unseen by it's crew, he takes Q's key ring from his pocket and then arms it. A tiny red light flashes on the key ring. Bond stands on his tiptoes and manages to magnetically attach his gadget to the helicopter's infrared pod, then jumps off the wall.

The gunner stops firing and the pilot maneuvers to land the helicopter beside the ruined house. The gunner, taking the machine gun from its mount, jumps to the ground as the helicopter lands. He approaches the house.

Bond puts his fingers to his lips and does the wolf whistle but the key ring doesn't explode. The whistle was obviously not loud enough. The gunner, who heard Bond's whistle, fire in his direction. Bond and Kara duck as the brick around the wall is shattered by bullets. The gunner approaches them, firing.

Bond and Kara run along the wall. 007 whistles again, Kara tries as well. Together they make a loud wolf whistle. The red light on the key ring flashes and the gadget explodes. The helicopter disintegrates in a fire ball, the gunner is thrown to the ground by the explosion. He gets up dazed. Bond knocks him back down with a punch.

Kara joins Bond as the aircraft burns in the background; they are looking around for Ranjit.

- Kara: Where did our friend go?
- Bond: Took off. With the rifle.

On a deserted road during the day, Bond and Kara trudge wearily. The sound of approaching horses is heard. Bond looks and sees horsemen in a cloud of dust galloping towards them on the road. A close-up on the horsemen shows us six fierce-looking, heavily armed Afghans. One of them holds the reins of a riderless horse. Kara and Bond look for somewhere to run but there is nowhere to hide.

The riders stop around them. They gesture with their guns for Bond and Kara to mount the extra horse. Bond does so and helps Kara get in behind him. They are taken to Ranjit's fortress.

Later, after landing on the U.S. aircraft carrier (or should we say: after trying to do so), the screenwriters change the ending. Bond and Kara are no longer get kidnapped by Stagg.

Instead we are in Tangier at night, Bond in a wet suit emerges from the water and reaches the beach of Whitaker's villa. In the background we see the yacht Thetis on the sea.

Bond moves to some foliage and removes the rebreather and his wet suit to reveal the black recce suit underneath. He moves towards the villa in the background, reaches the gardens, and moves stealthily towards the building again.

Bond will confront Whitaker inside with dialogue close to the film. Whitaker grabs an assault rifle with a laser sight. 007 dives to the ground while Whitaker machine-gun the window display and takes a mini rocket launcher from the drawer. Bond pushes the display/model, the drawer closes on Whitaker's hand who drops the assault rifle but manages to retrieve the rocket launcher.

007 jumps on his enemy and fights with him in hand-to-hand combat; they crash into various battle showcases. Whitaker manages to recover the rocket launcher and fires at Bond who dodges it. Whitaker now tries to hit him with the rocket launcher out of ammo; Bond grabs a bust of Wellington and beats Whitaker to death with it. His body collapses in the window display of the Battle of Waterloo.

Stagg hows up with a weapon but Gogol and his men intervene and shoot him, then have Georgi arrested.

Revised 05.1986 to 01.1987' script: Pushkin, Aston Martin and Kamran

PROD. "THE LIVING DAYLIGHTS"
JOHN GLEN ALEC MILLS
SLATE TAKE
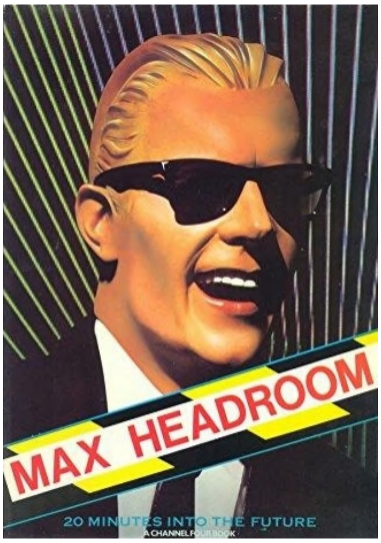
1
1
26th AUGUST 198

On May 12, 1986 Pierce Brosnan did a screen test at Pinewood studio for the film[27]. He will ultimately be retained to be the next Bond but following the last-minute renewal of the TV show Remington Steele, in which Brosnan play the male lead role, he wasn't able to be Bond in this movie in the end[28]. The filmmakers needed to find a new Bond again and Timothy Dalton did a screen test on July 29[29].

Maibaum and Wilson completed a new draft of the script on May 22, 1986. My copy contains revisions dated July 4, 11, 18, August 12, 22, 26, September 2, November 12, December 2, 16, 1986 and 8, 5 January 1987. In total, these revisions brought the script to 135 pages.

The section where Bond has to cover Koskov's escape with a sniper is closer to the film (no more Halas for example). When Saunder tells him he's a little overdressed:

> - Saunders: This is a mission, not a fancy dress ball.
> - Bond: Had to attend a reception at the ~~embassy~~ consulate. We have time. Where's our man?



Further Necros is described as blond with swept-back hair and steel-rimmed glasses, "so he looks like a cross between Max Headroom and Clark Kent", we can read.

Pushkin is introduced to the script, most of the time his name was handwritten to replace some crossed out "Gogol". And when we find it typed on pages dated December, we read "Anatol Pushkin"! (The film will change this to Leonid Pushkin. Hovewer in another May 22, 1986 heavily revised script I have, there was a "Leonid Pushkin on a page dated from September 19, 1986).

Further on when Bond returns to see Q, he not only gets a key ring but also an "Aston Martin" being winterized. There is also in Q's laboratory the couch that swallows laboratory assistants and a gadget that appears in a scene deleted from the film: a pen whose drawn can be monitored. Q order to an assistant:

> - Q: Get that one over to Downing Street this afternoon. (Turning to Bond) The P.M. wants to present it to the Russian Ambassador for his birthday.

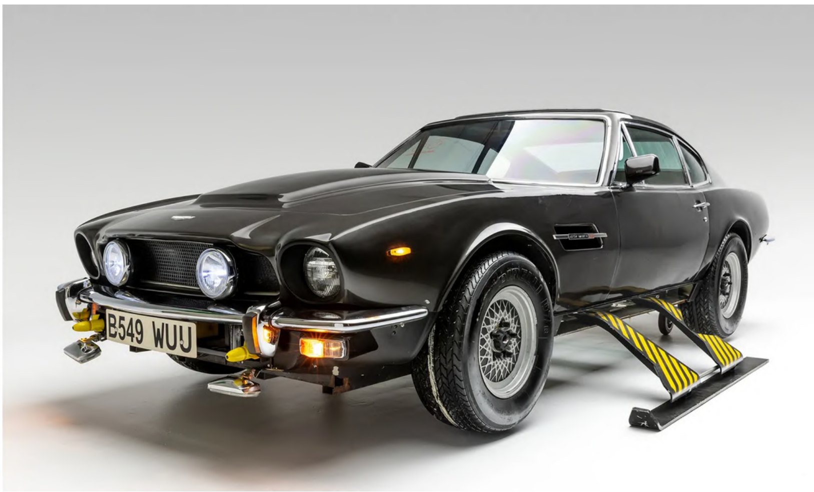
- Michael Wilson[30] : We had changed the Bond's cars over the years, but we thought that as we were introducing a new Bond, we'd bring back the classic Aston Martin: a real bonus for many Bond fans.

Dalton with Michael Wilson.

Since the iceboats and their crew could not be on site in Austria at the time of filming, "they were in Finland or something" remembers Glen[31], this script changes the method of escape of Bond and Kara.

This new version features the Aston Martin and its gadgets on pages dated around August 22. So no more KGB car or iceboat theft.

If the scene is very similar to the film (police radio, laser, rockets), we will however note the absence of the barn dragged by the car. Also instead of circling with a flat tire, Bond uses a flamethrower gadget that comes out of the back of the car; he melts the ice behind him with it. Thus the police car pursuing him falls into the water.



Bond deploys the skis and ends up using the "rocket motor [booster]" gadget to jump a dam but the landing doesn't go smoothly (forcing them to abandon the vehicle to slide on the cello case).

Direction Vienna: as in the film our heroes stay at the Schwarzenberg Palace (it was the Sacher Hotel in previous versions of the story).

Bond and Kara are in a cabin of the Prater' ferris wheel when it suddenly stops. Bond turn quickly from the window and keeps her from falling forward off padded bench they are sitting on by throwing his left arm across her.

- Kara: What is wrong? Why do we stop?
- Bond (smiling): I arranged it. We could be here all night... (he leans towards her and graze her lips with his) ...Making love.
- Kara: On a ferris wheel?
- Bond: There's a first time for everything.

- Kara (gazing at him, nodding): Yes. For me it is the first time to find a man like you: strong, brave, gentle.
- Bond (playfully): Handsome, amusing.

He starts to kiss her again. She turns her head away. He gently turns her head towards him.

- Kara: Please, don't tease me. It's impossible. Knowing you only two days and all I can think of is how we would be together.
- Bond (pulling her closer): Don't think. Just let it happen.

This time, when he kisses her, she responds hungrily. They slowly recline onto the bench. The camera goes to the window, through it, as the wheel starts again. Kaleidoscopic visuals of fun fair lights and rides.

Memo (author unknown) on the writing: the "picture doesn't need any more action or killing than we already have. We're not making a Rambos [movies], thank God... Which are full of senseless contrived action. If Bond kills Klek, does Pushkin know it? If he does, how can he work with Bond? Let's not forget what our film is about. A killer who doesn't want to kill a man unless he's convinced it's justified. [...] As for killing Klek the way Bond killed the Prof [Dent, in Dr. No] [...]".

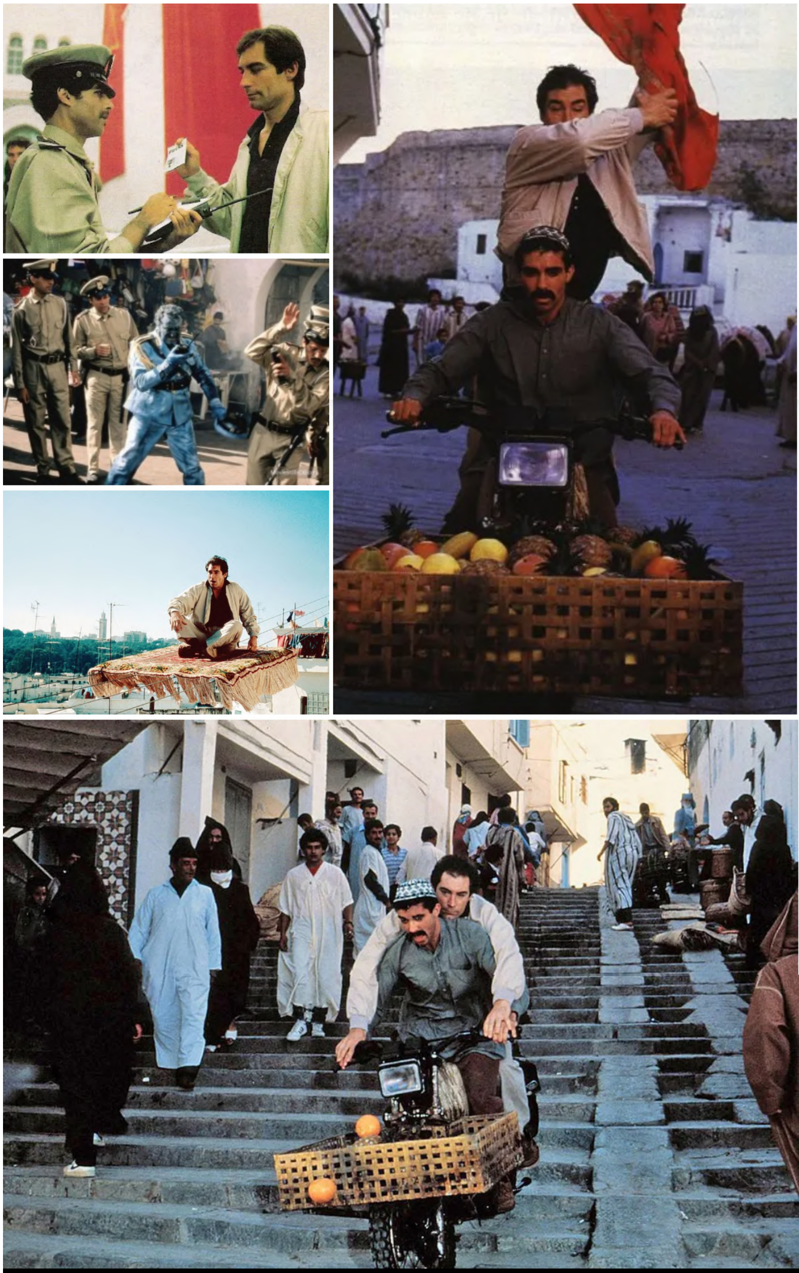
Further on we notice that 007 uses a press card to enter the conference center where Pushkin is giving his speech.

After the fake assassination, Bond flees to the rooftops and still goes to meet Adbul. When Adbul knocks down the chief of security with his broom, the chief lands in a well of indigo/blue dye.

Bond still rides the "flying carpet" on the telephone lines but there is no longer the scene with the gorilla.

Instead, workers are raising a banner that passes in 007's path. Bond grabs onto the banner and arrives down at street level, where he lands behind a passing biker. Bond behind the driver reaches out to grab the gas and sends the motorcycle down some stairs. He gets out of the vehicle and joins the crowd where he meets Liz and Ava in a convertible.

Later in Afghanistan, there is now a prison fight (instead of having to use Kara's bra). By escaping from the base, as in the film, they stumble directly on the mujahideen. So there is no longer the scene where they were attacked by a Russian helicopter.



These scenes were filmed but cut during editing.

Strangely in the rest of the document the Afghan leader is almost always named Ranjit in the descriptions, while in the dialogues he now introduces himself to Bond and Kara as "Kamran Shah", the name that the character will adopt in the movie:

> - Ranjit: I am Kamran Shah.

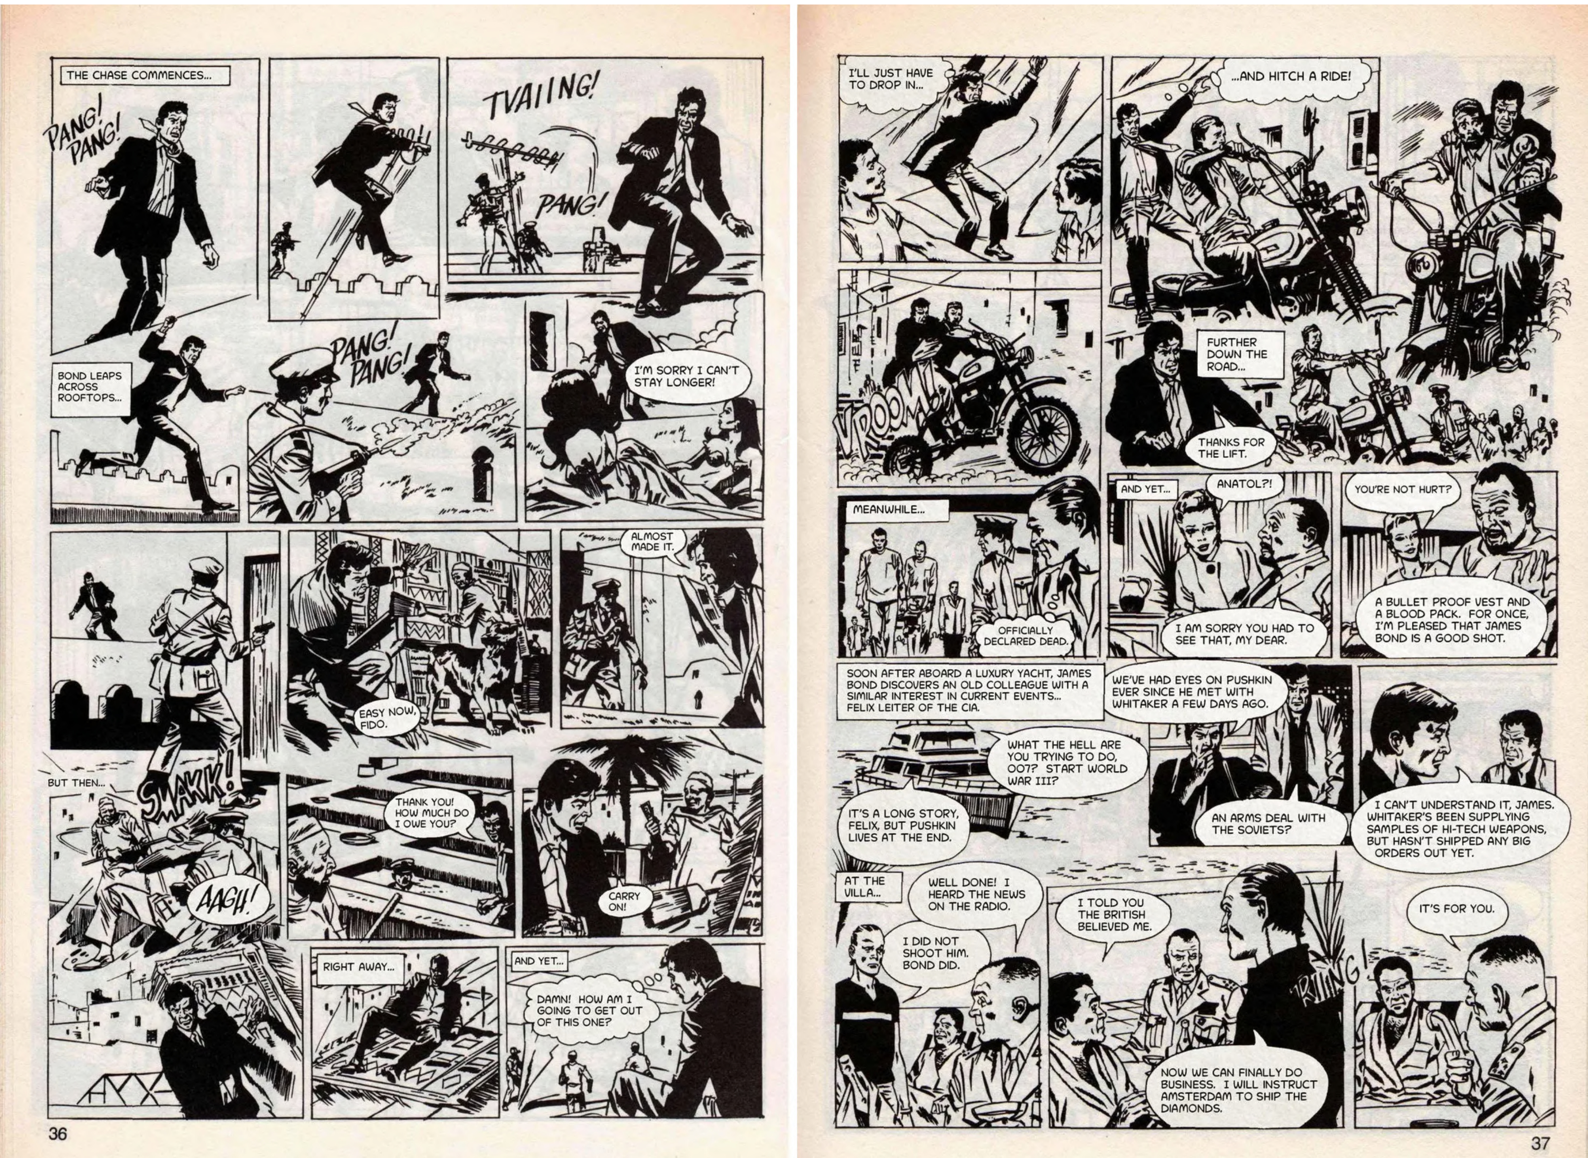
On the air base, Kara now gets behind the wheel of a "jeep" and climbs into the cargo bay of the plane piloted by 007.

This script forgets about the U.S. aircraft carrier when they run out of fuel, the scene is instead closer to the movie: Bond and Kara parachute out of the plane with the jeep.

The final battle against Whitaker is also changed in the way that it will be filmed.



THE CHASE COMMENCES...
PANG! PANG!
TVAIING!
PANG!
BOND LEAPS ACROSS ROOFTOPS...
PANG! PANG!
I'M SORRY I CAN'T STAY LONGER!
ALMOST MADE IT.
EASY NOW, FIDO.
BUT THEN...
SMAKK!
AAGH!
THANK YOU! HOW MUCH DO I OWE YOU?
CARRY ON!
RIGHT AWAY...
AND YET...
DAMN! HOW AM I GOING TO GET OUT OF THIS ONE?
36
I'LL JUST HAVE TO DROP IN...
...AND HITCH A RIDE!
VROOM
FURTHER DOWN THE ROAD...
THANKS FOR THE LIFT.
MEANWHILE...
OFFICIALLY DECLARED DEAD.
AND YET...
ANATOL?!
I AM SORRY YOU HAD TO SEE THAT, MY DEAR.
YOU'RE NOT HURT?
A BULLET PROOF VEST AND A BLOOD PACK. FOR ONCE, I'M PLEASED THAT JAMES BOND IS A GOOD SHOT.
SOON AFTER ABOARD A LUXURY YACHT, JAMES BOND DISCOVERS AN OLD COLLEAGUE WITH A SIMILAR INTEREST IN CURRENT EVENTS... FELIX LEITER OF THE CIA.
WE'VE HAD EYES ON PUSHKIN EVER SINCE HE MET WITH WHITAKER A FEW DAYS AGO.
WHAT THE HELL ARE YOU TRYING TO DO, 007? START WORLD WAR III?
IT'S A LONG STORY, FELIX, BUT PUSHKIN LIVES AT THE END.
AN ARMS DEAL WITH THE SOVIETS?
I CAN'T UNDERSTAND IT, JAMES. WHITAKER'S BEEN SUPPLYING SAMPLES OF HI-TECH WEAPONS, BUT HASN'T SHIPPED ANY BIG ORDERS OUT YET.
AT THE VILLA...
WELL DONE! I HEARD THE NEWS ON THE RADIO.
I DID NOT SHOOT HIM. BOND DID.
I TOLD YOU THE BRITISH BELIEVED ME.
RIING!
IT'S FOR YOU.
NOW WE CAN FINALLY DO BUSINESS. I WILL INSTRUCT AMSTERDAM TO SHIP THE DIAMONDS.
37

We find certain passages missing from the film in the adaptation of the film into comics by Semic.

> - Richard Maibaum[32] : I happen to think that Timothy Dalton gives us a new lease on life. We can go back to the more realistic espionage stories rather than the far-out fantasy tales.

1 "When the Snow Melts: The Autobiography of Cubby Broccoli" by Albert Broccoli and Donald Zec (2012 edition).
2 "Nobody Does it Better" by Mark A. Altman and Edward Gross (2020).
3 "James Bond's unseen family" by Bruce Bebb in The Hollywood Reporter (July 14, 1987).
4 Symposium by Richard Maibaum for the Writer's Guild of America, Beverly Hills, California, October 1987; via "Speaking of Writing" by Sylvia Kamion Maibaum and Richard Maibaum (2019).
5 "Inside The Living Daylights" DVD bonus.
6 "Richard Maibaum: Veteran Screenwriter for a Brand-New Bond" interview by Lee Goldberg and Edward Gross in Starlog magazine (issue #120, July 1987).
7 "Richard Maibaum: Veteran Screenwriter for a Brand-New Bond" interview by Lee Goldberg and Edward Gross in Starlog magazine (issue #120, July 1987).
8 "Richard Maibaum: Veteran Screenwriter for a Brand-New Bond" interview by Lee Goldberg and Edward Gross in Starlog magazine (issue #120, July 1987).
9 "The Making of The Living Daylights" Charles Helfenstein by (2012).
10 "The James Bond Archives" by Ellen Cheshire and Paul Duncan (2012).
11 "The James Bond Archives" by Ellen Cheshire and Paul Duncan (2012).
12 For the insert about Gotell and the insurance, see "The Making of The Living Daylights" Charles Helfenstein by (2012).
13 "Richard Maibaum: Veteran Screenwriter for a Brand-New Bond" interview by Lee Goldberg and Edward Gross in Starlog magazine (issue #120, July 1987).
14 "Hauer, Ruger Hauer" in BondFanEvents website: https://bondfanevents.com/hauer-rutger-hauer/
15 "The James Bond Archives" by Ellen Cheshire and Paul Duncan (2012).
16 "In conversation with Director John Glen, Part 2" on 007.com: https://www.007.com/in-conversation-with-director-john-glen-part-2/
17 "The James Bond Archives" by Ellen Cheshire and Paul Duncan (2012).
18 "No! James!" by Leonard Klady in The Los Angeles Times (June 14, 1987).
19 (Sorry, I don't remember where I found this; neither the eventual exact quote). (Inside doc?? mais pas que)
20 Symposium by Richard Maibaum for the Writer's Guild of America, Beverly Hills, California, October 1987; via "Speaking of Writing" by Sylvia Kamion Maibaum and Richard Maibaum (2019).
21 "Royal Cameo" article on MI6-HQ website: https://www.mi6-hq.com/sections/articles/the-living-daylights-prince-charles-princess-diana-joke-cameo-criminal?id=04862
22 "Royal Cameo" article on MI6-HQ website: https://www.mi6-hq.com/sections/articles/the-living-daylights-prince-charles-princess-diana-joke-cameo-criminal?id=04862
23 "Some Kind of Hero: The Remarkable Story of the James Bond Films" by Matthew Field & Ajay Chowdhury (2015).
24 "Some Kind of Hero: The Remarkable Story of the James Bond Films" by Matthew Field & Ajay Chowdhury (2015).
25 "Inside The Living Daylights" DVD bonus.
26 "Some Kind of Hero: The Remarkable Story of the James Bond Films" by Matthew Field & Ajay Chowdhury (2015).
27 "The James Bond Archives" by Ellen Cheshire and Paul Duncan (2012).
28 "The James Bond Archives" by Ellen Cheshire and Paul Duncan (2012).
29 "The James Bond Archives" by Ellen Cheshire and Paul Duncan (2012).
30 "Some Kind of Hero: The Remarkable Story of the James Bond Films" by Matthew Field & Ajay Chowdhury (2015).
31 "The Making of The Living Daylights" Charles Helfenstein by (2012).
32 "Richard Maibaum: Veteran Screenwriter for a Brand-New Bond" interview by Lee Goldberg and Edward Gross in Starlog magazine (issue #120, July 1987).

Release date (premiere) :
13 June 1989

Writing credit as per title sequence:
"Written by Michael G. Wilson and Richard Maibaum"

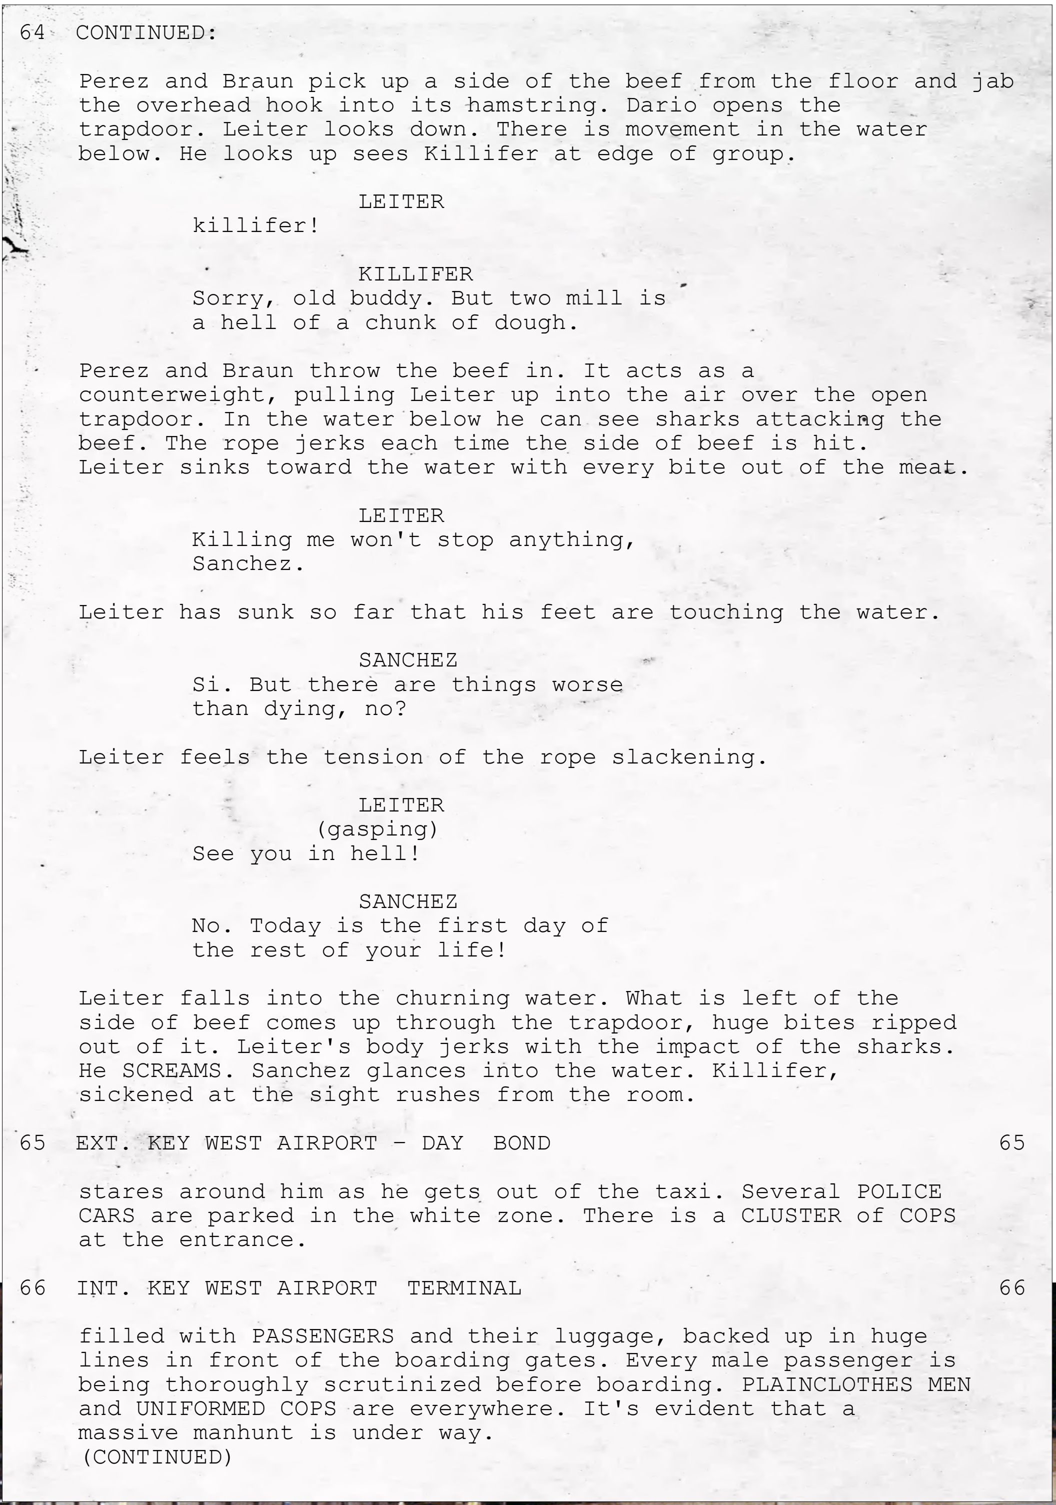
Director :....................................John Glen
Producers :.Albert Broccoli and Michael Wilson
Associate producer:....Barbara Broccoli
Director photography :.............Alec Mills
Set Designer :........................Peter Lamont
Composer :.......................Michael Kamen
Editor :....................................John Grover
Title sequence :...............Maurice Binder
Title song vocals :..............Gladys Knight



64 CONTINUED:

Perez and Braun pick up a side of the beef from the floor and jab the overhead hook into its hamstring. Dario opens the trapdoor. Leiter looks down. There is movement in the water below. He looks up sees Killifer at edge of group.

LEITER
killifer!

KILLIFER
Sorry, old buddy. But two mill is a hell of a chunk of dough.

Perez and Braun throw the beef in. It acts as a counterweight, pulling Leiter up into the air over the open trapdoor. In the water below he can see sharks attacking the beef. The rope jerks each time the side of beef is hit. Leiter sinks toward the water with every bite out of the meat.

LEITER
Killing me won't stop anything,
Sanchez.

Leiter has sunk so far that his feet are touching the water.

SANCHEZ
Si. But there are things worse than dying, no?

Leiter feels the tension of the rope slackening.

LEITER
(gasping)
See you in hell!

SANCHEZ
No. Today is the first day of the rest of your life!

Leiter falls into the churning water. What is left of the side of beef comes up through the trapdoor, huge bites ripped out of it. Leiter's body jerks with the impact of the sharks. He SCREAMS. Sanchez glances into the water. Killifer, sickened at the sight rushes from the room.

65 EXT. KEY WEST AIRPORT - DAY BOND 65

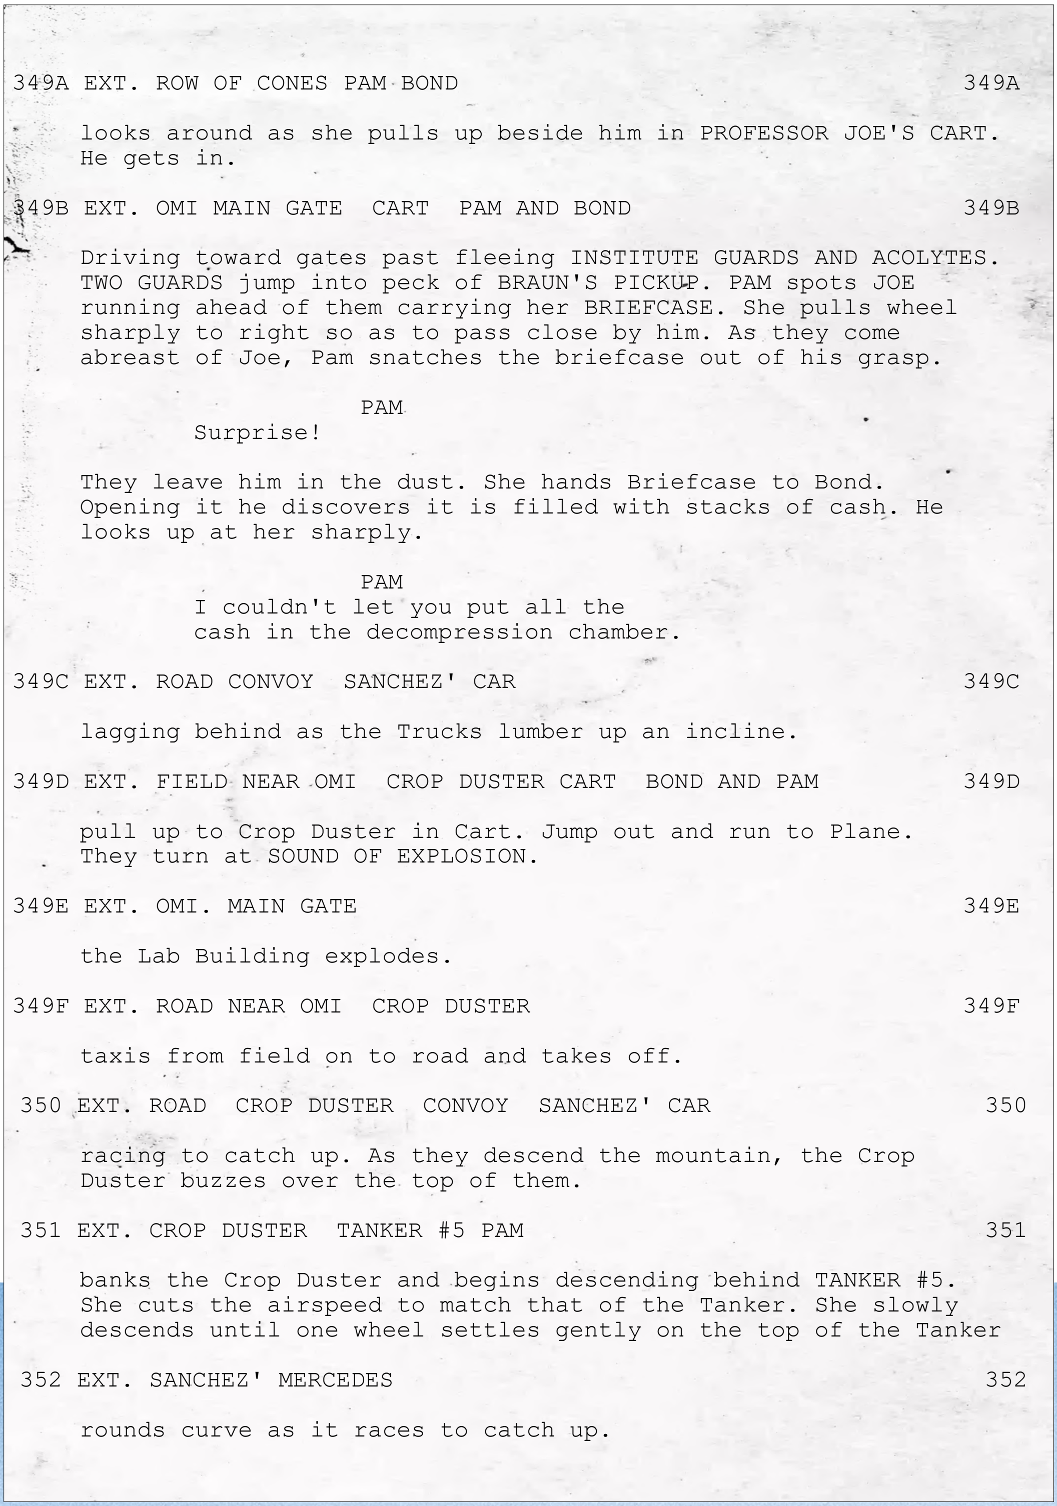
stares around him as he gets out of the taxi. Several POLICE CARS are parked in the white zone. There is a CLUSTER of COPS at the entrance.

66 INT. KEY WEST AIRPORT TERMINAL 66

filled with PASSENGERS and their luggage, backed up in huge lines in front of the boarding gates. Every male passenger is being thoroughly scrutinized before boarding. PLAINCLOTHES MEN and UNIFORMED COPS are everywhere. It's evident that a massive manhunt is under way.
(CONTINUED)

CHAPTER 16

SHARK HUNTER



349A EXT. ROW OF CONES PAM BOND 349A

looks around as she pulls up beside him in PROFESSOR JOE'S CART. He gets in.

349B EXT. OMI MAIN GATE CART PAM AND BOND 349B

Driving toward gates past fleeing INSTITUTE GUARDS AND ACOLYTES. TWO GUARDS jump into peck of BRAUN'S PICKUP. PAM spots JOE running ahead of them carrying her BRIEFCASE. She pulls wheel sharply to right so as to pass close by him. As they come abreast of Joe, Pam snatches the briefcase out of his grasp.

PAM Surprise!

They leave him in the dust. She hands Briefcase to Bond. Opening it he discovers it is filled with stacks of cash. He looks up at her sharply.

PAM
I couldn't let you put all the cash in the decompression chamber.

349C EXT. ROAD CONVOY SANCHEZ' CAR 349C

lagging behind as the Trucks lumber up an incline.

349D EXT. FIELD NEAR OMI CROP DUSTER CART BOND AND PAM 349D pull up to Crop Duster in Cart. Jump out and run to Plane. They turn at SOUND OF EXPLOSION.

349E EXT. OMI. MAIN GATE 349E

the Lab Building explodes.

349F EXT. ROAD NEAR OMI CROP DUSTER 349F taxis from field on to road and takes off.

350 EXT. ROAD CROP DUSTER CONVOY SANCHEZ' CAR 350

racing to catch up. As they descend the mountain, the Crop Duster buzzes over the top of them.

351 EXT. CROP DUSTER TANKER #5 PAM 351

banks the Crop Duster and begins descending behind TANKER #5. She cuts the airspeed to match that of the Tanker. She slowly descends until one wheel settles gently on the top of the Tanker rounds curve as it races to catch up.

352 EXT. SANCHEZ' MERCEDES 352

Cast:

James Bond :......................Timothy Dalton
Franz Sanchez :.......................Robert Davi
Pamela "Pam" Bouvier :......Carey Lowell
Lupe Lamora :..........................Talisa Soto
Milton Krest :.....................Anthony Zerbe
Felix Leiter :.......................David Hedison
Dario :..............................Benicio del Toro
Heller :....................................Don Stroud
Joe Butcher :.....................Wayne Newton
Truman-Lodge :................Anthony Starke
M :.......................................Robert Brown
Moneypenny :.....................Caroline Bliss
Q :...............................Desmond Llewelyn

Main filming locations: Mexico and Florida

Licence to toughen up the tone with this film which tackles the scourge of drug trafficking. As the subject requires, the atmosphere is more brutal and violent than before and this perfectly suits Timothy Dalton who presents a colder, manipulative and driven by revenge 007. To embody evil, Robert Davi delivers an excellent performance as a drug lord and even infuses him with a certain charm. A film which will have disconcerted fans, some finding it too Americanized and too far from Bond's usual style. Concerns that personally don't bother me. The movie has regained recognition since its release and that's something that makes me happy; in any case we can at least agree that this trucks chase is worth to be watched.

LICENCE TO KILL

Table of contents

Licence to Kill

Writing for Dalton, going to China and the Hildebrand rarity....1040
Bond and the treasures of China....1043
Small variations....1054
No longer going to China....1056
Back to almost square one....1057
The foundations are laid....1061
January 19, 1988' treatment: The Guadeloupean Job....1065
February 12, 1988' treatment: new pre-title and Braun....1074
March 4, 1988' treatment....1076
On strike....1093
May 5, 1988' revised script: Sharky, Truman-Lodge and Heller....1095
"Final draft" script....1096
Novelization....1107

Writing for Dalton, going to China and the Hildebrand rarity

Promotional photo of for Licence to Kill. Richard Maibaum was close to 80 years old when he started to working on this film.

- John Glen[1] : When we started writing it [The Living Daylights], we just didn't know who Bond was going to be. It had been decided Roger wasn't going to do it anymore, but at the same time we weren't sure who it was going to be. Pierce Brosnan was the most likely prospect at that time. We saw Pierce as being in the [Moore] type of not too heavy, slightly good-humored entertainment.

After all, Brosnan's character in Remington Steele was reminiscent of a Roger Moore's Bond.

- John Glen[2] : So we didn't really change our star dramatically on that film. It was written with Brosnan in mind. Dalton wasn't cast till within, I think, six weeks of shooting. We had to do quite a bit of rewriting. Obviously we could not change the whole nature of the beast, but Licence to Kill has bee, tailor-made for Timothy Dalton and I think you'll see that when you see the film.

Just has Dr. No, On Her Majesty's Secret Service and Live and Let Die weren't been written with a specific actor in the screenwriters' minds; The Living Daylights was also not written specifically for Timothy Dalton (nor Brosnan); Dalton joined the production after the script was already in its final stages. Obviously once on board some small adjustments took place as John Glen mentioned, or Dalton himself who said during the promotion of the film that he managed to delete certain lines that he thought ill-advised: "I cut most of those flippant lines. They had to go"[3].

Dalton also "said: Don't worry about giving me a lot of dialogue, I would rather play it quietly. He believes there's more menace and strength in a man of few words", adds Wilson[4].

Upon his arrival in the role, Timothy Dalton took James Bond seriously, going so far as to reread Ian Fleming's novels[5]. The actor wanted to return to the tone and character of the original novels[6] while still retaining a little humor:

- Timothy Dalton[7] : I think there should be humour I think it should be of a certain kind. I think it should be sardonic, morbid or fatalistic humour.

After Dalton's performance in The Living Daylights and knowing the actor was really willing to present a tough, serious and "Flemingian" James Bond, the screenwriters decided to follow this path for the new film. However, the actor will apparently not be consulted during the heart of the writing: "On [Licence to Kill], I think I saw the script about two weeks before we started shooting. You know, that's not great, is it?", Dalton will remember[8].

- Michael Wilson[9] : When we wrote The Living Daylights we didn't know who was going to take over as James Bond. The script was finished and we were well into pre-production before Timothy Dalton was cast, so Tim played Bond as he saw it in our script. This time, having seen his ideas - and there's no doubt about it, the films are influenced by the way the actor plays Bond - we saw that Tim has a certain way of doing things.

"This time, from the beginning, we were talking about how Timothy could play the part. The result was a more serious film with a contemporary plot", says Wilson[10]. "I think that [...] Licence to Kill was tailor made for Timothy Dalton's style"[11].

However, at the start of the writing process, the screenwriters will dust off the plot imagined for the reboot version of Bond 15; who had been written for an undefined, twenty-something year old, actor. In doing this, Maibaum and Wilson nonetheless don't aim to propose a reboot but rather to adapt the reboot's plot into a classic adventure with an already experienced Bond who will be played by Dalton.

The goal was also to include China, as Cubby Broccoli explains: "We had planned originally to make the next James Bond film in China, where the regime was trying to encourage commercial interest from the West. There was plenty to tempt us in this big, strange country with its contrasts between primitive rural areas and ultra-modern cities with luxurious Western-style hotels"[12].

Michael Wilson adds: "We has been asked to visit China by their government. They wanted to explore the possibility of us making a Bond there"[13].

- Cubby Broccoli[14] : Michael, Barbara, Dana and I flew to the film festival in Tokyo, where we screened The Living Daylights. [...] From Tokyo, Michael, Barbara, Dana and I, with an entire film crew, flew to Hong Kong and then, in early October 1987, on to Beijing. We planned an extensive recce of China, including seeing what must be another Wonder of the World. The incredible Terracotta Army is a masterpiece comprising sculpted soldiers in full uniform and marching gear, each face individually modeled. What a set-up for a Bond picture! [...] So too was the Great Wall, another art director's dream.

After seeing the place John Glen will draw the conclusion that "It was an interesting trip [...] We'd obviously have to use the Forbidden City, the Great Wall, Xian [the terracotta army]"[15].

- Michael Wilson[16] : I re-read the Ian Fleming novels from time to time and I remembered The Hildebrand Rarity had this character Milton Krest and his ship, the Wavekrest, a sort of brash American.

Krest had seized his prize. Now he was THE HILDEBRAND RARITY
by IAN PART TWO

The Hildebrand Rarity, published in magazines Playboy and Today in March 1960 (and later added to the short stories collection For Your Eyes Only) is a short story from which the screenwriters will draw ideas for the film.

In this one, while he is resting in the Seychelles where he is hunting a sea ray, James Bond accepts the invitation of a friend, Fidele Barbey, to participate to a small scientific expedition aboard the Wavekrest. The owner of the ship, a certain Milton Krest, seeks to find the "Hildebrand Rarity": a rare specimen of fish which was discovered in 1925 near an island in the Indian Ocean.

It turns out, however, that Krest is a most unpleasant person, even going so far as to whip his wife Elizabeth, and relations between the three men soon become sour during the trip on the ocean. Nonetheless, they manage to capture the fish and Krest is later found dead on the boat, murdered, with the Hildebrand Rarity stuffed in his mouth. Bond doesn't know who the assassin is: Fidele Barbey (?), Elizabeth Krest (?), a crew member (?), but decides to clean up the crime scene and make it all look like an accident in order to prevent an investigation leading to a trial.

Bond and the treasures of China

After or before the scouting trip to China, the following 37-page, undated treatment was written by Maibaum and Wilson. The story, as you will see, has a tendency to go in all directions.

Our treatment begins with a pre-title sequence in which Bond, in diving gear, approaches a Malaysian junk moored on an island. He boards, discreetly subdues a guard and finds a jade bust from the Ming dynasty called the Emperor's Concubine.

Bond is discovered and flees: he dives with his diving gear, fights against frogmen who pursue him and avoids explosive charges thrown from boats. Meanwhile, men were ordered to evacuate the bust from the junk. Bond at one point shoots his harpoon at what he thinks are the floats of a catamaran but discovers that they are actually those of a seaplane and finds himself water skiing behind it, in a scene that will be similar to one present in the film.

> - Michael Wilson[17] : Bond was underwater and running out of air [...]. He gets hold of a harpoon gun [...] goes to the surface and finds out he's attached to a seaplane that's taking off. Sparkey Green, who had directed the aerial unit on The Living Daylights, gave me the idea and storyboarded it.

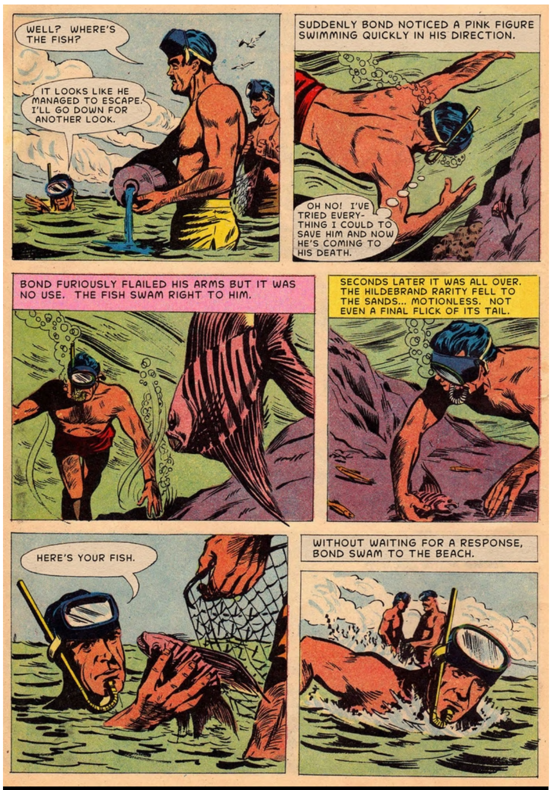
The seaplane takes off and Bond manages to go up his harpoon line, get rid of the co-pilot and the pilot, and take control of the plane. He turns around and discovers that the jade bust is in the seaplane.

After the opening credits, direction the Government House in Hong Kong where Bond, M and a certain Gordon (who represents the Hong Kong police) meet Jing Bong (basically Bond's counterpart at Chinese state security, sic!) and Dr. Feng from a department of antiques. Moneypenny is there (as secretary), as is the jade bust. We learned that it had disappeared from a Chinese museum and that the Chinese had asked the British for help with the antiquities smuggling problems they are facing.

With a tag attached to the bust reading the words "wave" and "crest", it appears that Milford (not Milton) Krest, a Chinese-American entrepreneur, may be involved in this art smuggling as he usually conducts his business from his yacht named the Wavekrest. M asks Bond to investigate him.

Posing as a certain "James Robertson", Bond contacts Krest by radio and tells him he has to discuss an important matter with him. 007 is welcomed on the Wavekrest by Krest who makes him wait while he directs his crew which is in search of a rare fish: the Hildebrand Rarity.

Krest ends up to having time for Bond; the latter presents him with a photo of the jade bust and offers Krest to buy it. Krest is clearly not interested in the bust; compared to his fish. Since Krest is understaffed, he asks Bond if he would be interested in helping him to catch the fish. 007 accepts and joins Krest's diving team.



WELL? WHERE'S THE FISH?
IT LOOKS LIKE HE MANAGED TO ESCAPE. I'LL GO DOWN FOR ANOTHER LOOK.
SUDDENLY BOND NOTICED A PINK FIGURE SWIMMING QUICKLY IN HIS DIRECTION.
OH NO! I'VE TRIED EVERYTHING I COULD TO SAVE HIM AND NOW HE'S COMING TO HIS DEATH.
BOND FURIOUSLY FLAILED HIS ARMS BUT IT WAS NO USE. THE FISH SWAM RIGHT TO HIM.
SECONDS LATER IT WAS ALL OVER. THE HILDEBRAND RARITY FELL TO THE SANDS... MOTIONLESS. NOT EVEN A FINAL FLICK OF ITS TAIL.
HERE'S YOUR FISH.
WITHOUT WAITING FOR A RESPONSE, BOND SWAM TO THE BEACH.

The Hildebrand Rarity, Zig Zag's comics adaptation.

Meanwhile, in the back of the photo of the bust brought by Bond, Krest notices the written address of a post office box.

In the water Bond spots the fish but has come to so abhor the boorish Krest that he lets it go. Frustrated at still not having caught it, Krest orders (as in Fleming's short story) poison to be poured into the water; hundreds of dead fish then float to the surface, including the Hildebrand Rarity.

In the evening Krest celebrates the catch of the fish on his yacht while drinking a lot of alcohol. His "new" English wife, Liz, thinks it's a shame that such a beautiful fish ends up in a jar of formalin, dead. Krest castigates her and sends her back to her cabin. Alone with Bond, Krest says he is a respectable businessman: he will not touch his jade bust which Bond probably obtained illegally.

Later in the evening Bond hears Krest whipping his wife (with a whip made from a ray's tail, as in the short story); Krest falls asleep. Bond finds Liz on the deck of the boat, ready to jump off. He tries to comfort her by offering help; she says she knows something about Krest that no one else does, but they are joined by Krest (who is still drunk). She leaves Bond to return to her husband.

The next day, as he is about to leave the yacht, 007 asks Krest where his wife is: not on board, she must have gone for a morning swim, the businessman replies. A small fishing boat comes to dock next to the Wavekrest: in his nets hundreds of fish and the naked and lifeless body of Liz! Krest's cold reaction increases Bond's disgust toward him, but 007 leaves without making a fuss.

Back to Hong Kong where 007 reports to M: there is no tangible evidence that Krest is involved in antiquities smuggling. M tells his agent that Jing Bong is currently investigating a certain Li Dao, a man from Krest's company who daily visits a Ming tomb where antiquities have recently been exhumed. Bond asks M for permission to work with Bong.

At the excavation site near Beijing, Bond finds his Chinese counterpart. They pose as tourists to visit unnoticed; while archaeologists, geologists and others people work on the site (the treatment tells us that it is not a real place but rather a composite of several places, which include terracotta soldiers).

The Terracotta Army from the mausoleum of Emperor Qin is certainly one of these composites. The place is so huge that even today, 50 years after its discovery in 1974, archaeologists still diging soldiers statues. In all, more than 8,000 terracotta soldiers (plus 670 horses and 130 chariots) were dig up to this day (and reconstructed, the statues are in broken state when unearthed).

All theses statues were painted back in the day, but after spending more than 2000 years underground, the paint is gone. As Cubby said: each statue has a different and unique face.

They spot Li Dao and approach him to ask questions like curious tourists. Dao says he is not an employee, just a member of the Krest Company whose job is to train technicians in the use of scientific instruments that Krest's company generously provided for the excavations.

The next morning Bond receives a phone call from Jing Bong who says he will pick him up from his hotel in 10 minutes. Bong lands a helicopter in the hotel parking lot, Bond gets on board and the Chinese explains that Li Dao received a call on his phone (which is bugged): he has to meet someone at "the usual place". The men responsible for tailing him lost him in traffic, so they will try to find his car with the helicopter. They succeed and when Dao spots his yellow car near the Great Wall of China; they climb out of the helicopter to follow him on foot.

On the Great Wall they see Dao exchanging an envelope for a package with a man (who seems English). The man doesn't seem satisfied and leaves. Jing Bong tells 007 to tail Li Dao; he will tail the other man. Dao returns to his car when he spots Bong's men as well as 007: trying to escape, he steals a motorcycle.

With Bong's men blocking his path, Dao heads towards the Great Wall and climb/drive over it with the motorcycle. 007 run to the helicopter and asks the pilot to chase the motorcycle.

The helicopter gets closer and Bond jumps from the aircraft and lands on Dao, knocking him off the motorcycle. There is then a hand-to-hand fight on the Great Wall and although Dao is an expert in martial arts, 007 eventually manages to knock him off the parapet. Bond goes down to search the corpse's pockets and finds the package which turns out to contain some sort of grayish charcoal briquette.

A little later we find Bond in the company of Jing Bong in the latter's car driving through the streets of Beijing. The Chinese tells him that the person Dao met has been identified as Professor Jarvis Lacey: a man who has been invited by the Chinese government to work with some of its scientists on a secret project important enough that he may well earn a Nobel prize.

They go to Peking University where Lacey's office and laboratory are located. The treatment tells us that on campus there are "lots of pretty coeds for Bond and Jing" and as they approach a building, our heroes see Kowtow (a bald Chinese eunuch with an imposing build who will play a role later in the story) get out.

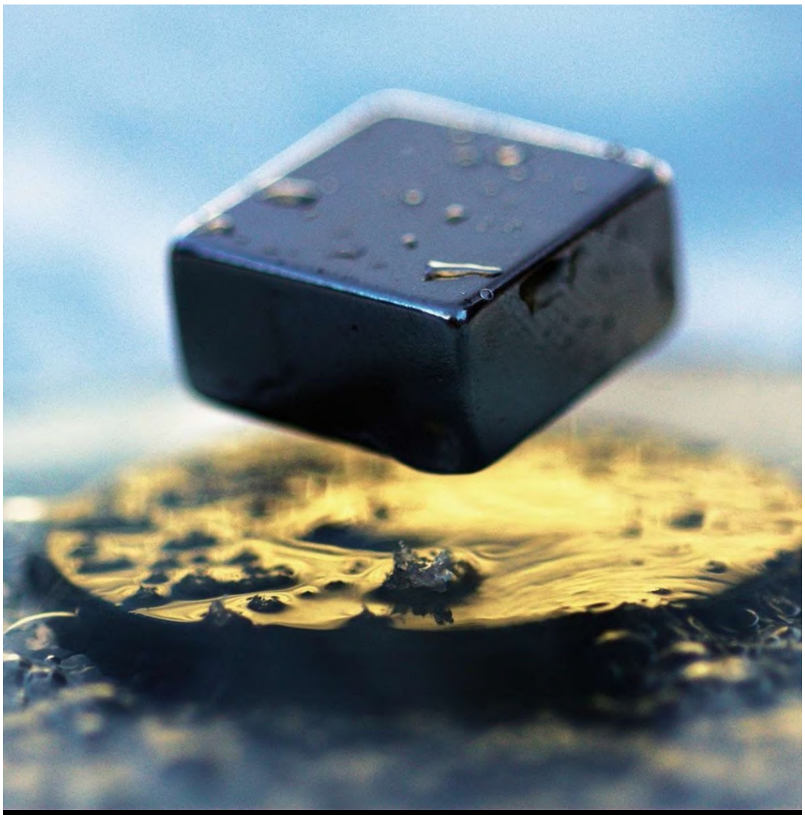
They are escorted by a receptionist to the laboratory where Bond notably notices an electromagnet similar to one that was used at the excavation site. Entering the office, they find Jarvis Lacey dead (with a large bruise on his forehead); the place was also robbed. In Lacey's pocket they find the envelope that Li Dao had given him: a piece of paper saying that $50,000 had been deposited into his bank account.

Bond notices some sort of grayish charcoal briquettes in the office and decides to take them to the laboratory to test them with the electromagnet: nothing happens. He then tries with the one recovered from Dao's body: it levitates slightly.

Bond explains to Jing that Lacey and his associates worked on superconductivity. This requires yttrium, "an electric current can pass through it at room temperature with no resistance". Screenwriters/Bond tells us that this is revolutionary in terms of energy source, "Oil, coal, nuclear energy would all eventually become obsolete". It appears that Lacey may have tried to sell his discovery to Krest rather than share it with his fellow Chinese scientists.

Back to Hong Kong where M tells Bond that Krest and his yacht have disappeared. For Bond it has become "something of a personal vendetta", M doesn't like it and is about to reassign Bond to another mission. 007 requests an additional 24 hours: granted.

In the streets of Hong Kong, Bond spots (by chance?) Kowtow accompanied by a young Eurasian woman named Betje Bedwell. He follows them and at one point Betje "loses" her chaperon (Kowtow) on a ferry. Bond continues to follow her to Kowloon where she buys something from a Chinese apothecary before confronting Bond: "why are you following me?".



All materials have a certain electrical resistance: they more or less oppose the flow of the current, part of which is then dissipated in the form of heat and therefore lost. Today we are capable of creating/operating in very low temperature environments (around -273.14°C, absolute zero) superconductors: materials that allow the passage/transport of electricity without any loss. In the superconducting state, materials also have the property of completely expelling the magnetic field surrounding them, which can manifest itself by levitation effects similar to a magnet. In this treatment Lacey invented a superconductor that works at room temperature (which therefore doesn't need to be cooled by a complex and expensive processes): something that scientists, even 30 years after the writing this treatment, never succeeded in inventing.

They go to a bar and he simply introduces himself to her as "James"; he asks her why she dumped the guy she was with: "I was bored" she replies. They end up spending the evening together: there is a series of shots of them at cinema, eating, dancing in a nightclub, while Kowtow searches for her.

Eventually they end up in Bond's hotel room, she kiss him and goes into the bathroom. Meanwhile Bond searches her bag and discovers that the thing she bought from the apothecary is a rhino horn. He phones Gordon and informs him that he is with a girl who could lead him to a lead about Lacey's murder. During this conversation the viewer learns that rhino horns are supposed to have aphrodisiac properties. Betje comes out of the bathroom while Bond pretends to have a business call; she unbuttons his shirt:

> - Gordon: I'll send over two men right away. Can you hold her there for half an hour?
> - Bond: I'll do my best.

After hanging up and making love to her, Betje says that although it was the most wonderful night of her life, they will never be able to see each other again. She leaves, Gordon's men try to approach her but are overpowered with headbutts by Kowtow who had arrived. Kowtow and Betje already left before Bond had time to catch up with them. Gordon, however, has good news: someone wrote to the post office box address (that Bond had left with Krest) to set up a meeting.

In the evening 007 goes to his meeting at dock 42 in Aberdeen where he is accosted by a certain Wu who takes him by boat to a rather disreputable floating restaurant.

JUMBO
TAI PAK
SEA FOOD

I imagine the writers had in mind the Jumbo Kingdom: the famous floating restaurant of Hong Kong.

There Bond meets Pamela "Pam" Bow (thirty-something, American) who explains to him that she is a smuggler who has a client (who wishes to remain anonymous) for his jade bust.

Bond orders a vodka martini and refuses the $10,000 deposit she gives him: "where the bust goes, I go". Two men from the Tong (a sort of Chinese mafia) enter the room and we find a situation and dialogues that end up in the film:

> - Pam: You carrying? [He opens his jacket to reveal his PPK] [You] call that a gun? [She has a sawed-off double-barreled shotgun] If anything happens dive under the table and stay there.

The two men arrive at their table and ask Pamela where their money is. They will have it in two days, she said. Two other men bring Wu who has visibly been beaten (this doesn't stop Pamela from continuing to eat). Suddenly she thrusts her Chinese chopsticks into the nose of one of the men before keeping the others at bay with her shotgun.

A man jumps on her and a general melee ensues in the restaurant. Pamela ends up breaking a window with the butt of her gun, and she and Bond push Wu through it and join him. They are fished out by the crew of a junk belonging to Pam while they are being shot at; the junk moves away from the floating restaurant.

This quiet moment is an opportunity to learn more about Pam: her father bought this junk a while ago and ended up becoming a smuggler. She took over after he was killed by rival smugglers and was forced to borrow money from the Tong. She hopes she can repay them with her business with Bond. She arranges to meet him on Lantau Island the next morning.

During the night Bond goes to a Hong Kong airfield where a local "SWAT" team is preparing. He enters the control tower where there is a situation room with M, Q and Moneypenny. They are joined by Jing Bong and Gordon who says that Pam once went through the US Army's Special Forces school and is nicknamed "Pambo" (which seems to be an obvious reference to Rambo, note that in the restaurant scene the description of her clothes called for a "knotted scarf around her head", a headband like Rambo). The Coast Guard is ready to tail Pam's junk to Krest's yacht. Q explains that a tracking beacon have been hidden in the jade bust, and the treatment at one point writes about Moneypenny that she "still hasn't lost hope that some day he'll [Bond] will succumb".

Bond goes to his meeting on the beach at Discovery Bay where Pam arrives in a PBY seaplane; she invites Bond to come on board with the bust. Suddenly a limousine arrives on the beach; Betje and Kowtow come out. All these people board without Bond and Betje exchanging a single word, and the seaplane takes off.

The screenwriters substituted the DC3 of the Bond 15 reboot story for a PBY seaplane.

In the situation room it's a bit of panic, they expected Pam to come by junk and not by a seaplane: Gordon shout for a bigger map to be brought to him. They are about to lose their position (Pam flies very low to escape radar).

Meanwhile the plane piloted by Pam flies over the ocean and forests, Bond asks her who the two other passengers are: she doesn't know. A man named LaFont contacted her to tell her she would have these two extra passengers. Bond volunteers to strap down a few crates in the plane and discreetly activates the plane's emergency locator transmitter. When he returns to the cockpit, he learns from Pam that her client is apparently a certain general Kwang.

They end up landing on an airstrip located in the jungle of the Golden Triangle where they are welcomed by the man named LaFont: a French mercenary who fought in the Indochina War. He tells "M'sieu Robertson" (Bond's cover) that the transaction will take place somewhere a little further away; Pam is not too keen to stay but LaFont asks his men to surround them and transport the bust. LaFont, Bond and Pam mounts horses, heading toward somewhere.

In the situation room, even if the plane have been located, thanks to the transmitter that Bond activated, there is still panic: sending troops to this region is a difficult task. Jing Bong leaves for Beijing to assemble a Chinese commando.

Bond, Pam and LaFont arrive at Kwang Fortress (Chinese type, which is "in the style of the Forbidden City", but with heads on spikes). LaFont tells them that the general is not there presently (he is currently practicing falconry) and they are shown their room. 007 sees outside that Betje and five other Kwang's concubines are going somewhere; he decides to discreetly leave his room (while LaFont had told him to stay in) via the bathroom window. He jumps onto a wall and extracts a piano wire hidden in the welt seams of his shirt before rappelling down to ground level.

It turns out that the concubines are going to bathe naked in a kind of natural pool in the jungle, under the supervision of Kowtow and another eunuch. Bond approaches quietly through the reeds and pulls Betje toward him. He explains that he doesn't want to hurt her and removes his hand from her mouth. She retorts that he must stay away from her: if anyone suspects they are lovers, they will be executed. Bond asks Betje what does Kwang have to do with Krest? She doesn't know any Krest. Is Kowtow carrying scientific secrets in his suitcases? She doesn't know. Does Kwang have a lab nearby? There is a place where men in white coats work.

It's time for the concubines to return, Bond and Betje separate (she begs that he doesn't try to see her again). It turns out that a concubine, Sheonie (Malaysian), sees Bond getting dressed in the bushes...

As Bond returns to his room, Kwang arrives at his fortress in a sort of palanquin carried by six people. LaFont knocks on the Bond/Pam's room door as Pam holds out a towel (which seems too short) to the bathroom window, for Bond to grab onto and join her. LaFont, who has become impatient, ends up unlocking the door and entering: he finds (a little to audience's surprise) Bond and Pam in the bathroom: he managed to climb in time. LaFont says the general wants to see Bond.

LaFont escorts Bond to Kwang who is studying calligraphy in the company of Betje and Kowtow. Kwang turns around: it's Milford Krest!

- Krest/Kwang: How nice to see you again, Mr. Robertson.

His refined and calm manners contrast with those of "Krest". Kwang explains that "Krest" is a cover to operate in the business world. The blood of the Ming emperors flows in his veins: he plans to one day claim the throne that is rightful his. They walk to a reception room decorated with Chinese masterpieces that Kwang describes as authentic, having belonged to his ancestors. The jade bust is part of the collection: "What am I to do with you, Mr. Robertson?", Kwang asks, adding that he was behind its first theft.

Bond clings to his cover of an art dealer: he can expand Kwang's collection with new pieces if he is willing to pay the price. But Kwang shows Bond Q's location beacon hidden in the bust; Kowtow headbutts 007. Bond has fallen unconscious on the ground, Kwang asks Sheonie if he is the man she saw at the pool with Betje: yes.

But what should he do with Pam? Kwang cannot let her go for fear that she could indicate the authorities the location of his fortress. An idea comes to him: to make her one of his concubines. While Jing Bong is still waiting for authorization from his superiors to set off with his commando, concubines make Pam a little more feminine (makeup, manicure, etc.).

When Bond regains consciousness, he is alone in an infirmary. With the help of a scalpel he manages to open the door and ventures into the corridors until he sees a room similar to Lacey's laboratory at Peking University. Kowtow and a soldier (the treatment calls Kwang's men "soldiers") approach, 007 hides in a cupboard: they see that Bond is no longer in the infirmary. To find him Kowtow uses a device that looks like a walkie-talkie and which causes Bond to feel great pain in his jaw and fall to the ground.

Kowtow brings Bond to Kwang who is on his throne. Kwang also has a controller and shows 007 an X-ray image of his skull. We see that Bond has an implant in one of his teeth. When the controller is activated: this sends a signal to a nerve (trigeminal) which causes unbearable pain. Kwang has a few questions that Bond meekly answers:

> - Kwang: Who are you?
> - Bond: The name is Bond, James Bond, Commander in the Royal Navy, seconded to MI6.
> - Kwang: In the Double-O section, with license to kill? I am aware of your exploits, Commander, and gratified and gratified you are co-operative. I detest the unnecessary use of force. How deeply have your people penetrated my organization?
> - Bond: Completely. We know you are behind the theft of Chinese art treasures. And along with the Chinese we know your man Li Dao bribed Lacey to turn over his superconductivity research. There's no way you can escape, Krest.
> - Kwang: You're quite right. There is no way out for Krest. So he will simply disappear. Presumed a suicide. Confidentially I'll be glad to rid myself of him. He is nothing but a boorish swindler with a mediocre talent for business and no appreciation of art or literature. [...]

Kwang says there are only three people in the world who know that he is Krest, and they are all at the fortress right now. Kowtow brings Betje; Kwang asks her how well she knows Bond. She says that she only saw him on the plane but Kwang tells her she is a liar and that they are actually lovers. 007 claims he threatened to kill her in the pool and Kwang tells him to shut up. As Bond is still trying to speak, an enraged Kwang uses his controller: Bond collapses in pain.

Bond is walked out of the room as Betje begs Kwang to spare her; it doesn't work: she will die in the manner that concubines who disappoint their emperor do, by a torture called "a thousand cuts".

In the concubines' quarters Pam is waiting for Kwang in her room. Through the window she sees Bond being dragged out of a building by Kowtow and a soldier. She discreetly leaves the concubines' quarters.

Arriving at the laboratory, Bond decides to take action by attacking Kowtow and the other soldier who is dragging him. Bond notably plants the scalpel in Kowtow's hand who then lets go of his controller. At one point Kowtow uses his signature headbutt and his momentum sends him and Bond through a window. The fight then moves into the lab where they use what they have at hand (chairs, containers filled with acid, a drill, etc...) and Bond ends up killing Kowtow with a crowbar.

Meanwhile, outside the lab, Pam was distracting a guard (who was interested by the noise inside) by charming him before knocking him out. Pam joins Bond and he hands her the electric drill, telling her to drill his molar which contains the implant. Reluctant, Pam decides to do as she had been told.

Pam gives back to Bond the tooth she extracted, telling him to put it under his pillow for the "tooth fairy". In a corridor they overpower two soldiers and put on their uniforms. 007 tells Pam to go to the plane, wait for him there for 20 minutes and take off if he doesn't come back (the treatment tells us that she has a hint of "jealousy" when she understands that Bond is going to go save Betje during this time).

Betje is prepared for her torture, Kwang is there and doesn't understand why she betrayed him while he gave her everything she wanted. He found her in the woods when she was 11, when men had burned down her Dutch father's old house. Kwang took her under his wing, even sent her to study in Switzerland and Hong Kong, before making her his favorite concubine.

Pam reaches the airstrip and boards the plane after knocking out a guard.

Kwang takes the ceremonial knife to administer the "thousand cuts" to Betje but changes his mind: he will whip her 1000 times with a stingray tail instead. He starts doing so but sees Bond, armed, behind him. He stops and tries his controller: nothing happens. Since Bond doesn't dare to shoot, fearing the noise will alert the guards outside, Kwang takes this opportunity to put the ceremonial knife under Betje's throat. Bond then tries a psychological approach:

- Bond: Just let her go Krest.
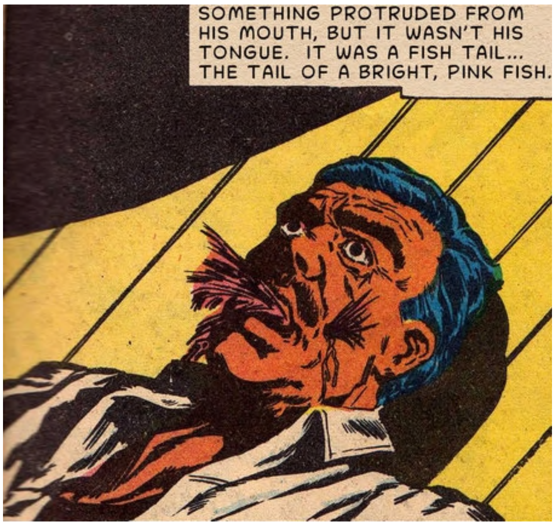
- Krest/Kwang: Don't call me Krest! He doesn't exist! I invented him!
- Bond: You're wrong. Krest invented you. You need a rhino horn to get your jollies! Krest only needs his whip. That's why you put the knife down and picked it up. Krest compelled you. You're insane. A dual personality. With Krest in control. He's your master. You're his puppet.

This confuse Krest so much that he drops his knife and collapses into a chair. Bond begins to untie Betje but Kwang comes to his senses, gets back to his feet and uses the whip on Bond. During the ensuing fight in which Kwang shouting like a crazy, some pieces of art are destroyed and a hand-to-hand fight takes place.



SOMETHING PROTRUDED FROM HIS MOUTH, BUT IT WASN'T HIS TONGUE. IT WAS A FISH TAIL... THE TAIL OF A BRIGHT, PINK FISH.

At one point Kwang gains the upper hand and begins to strangle Bond who is pinned to the ground. With his hands Bond grabs the Hildebrand Rarity's fish (whose fins are like needles, and whose jar was destroyed during the fight) and shoves it into Kwang/Krest's mouth/throat. Kwang lets Bond go, takes a few steps and dies of suffocation at the sight of the guards.

In the seaplane the 20 minutes time is up but "Pambo" decides to not follow Bond's instructions; she ties her hair with a scarf and takes out a shotgun and a cartridge belt from a compartment of the plane and gets off the aircraft.

Bond frees Betje; LaFont looks at Kwang's body and orders his men to surround the building. A soldier enters and Bond kills him, they dive to the ground while other soldiers outside machine-gun the residence.

Pam arrives in the fortress armory and takes grenades; she blows up the armory and joins Bond. She helps him repel the assault of LaFont's men. Betje ends up being shot in the leg and just as the situation seems hopeless, Jing Bong and his commando arrive with four armed helicopters; LaFont's men begin to surrender.

LaFont and Duval (another Indochina War veteran) try to catch our heroes by surprise by passing through an upper floor window. Bond shoots Duval, but due to lack of ammunition, he has to attack LaFont with a knife and thus kills him with it. Pam cries because she thinks Bond is dead but he turns out to be alive; he kisses her. Pam asks about Betje: "I think she'll do just fine", he replies.

The Chinese commandos load the stolen pieces of art into their helicopters. The scientific notes on superconductivity were recovered but not the samples; Jing breaks the one recovered from Li Dao's body in half and gives one half to Bond, saying "let us see whose scientists first figure out how it was made".

In the situation room, M, Gordon and Moneypenny see that Pam's PBY seaplane is heading to Shanghai. However, they are unaware that inside the aircraft Pam and Bond have just made love...

Small variations

A number of other similar pages, written before or after the treatment just seen (they look earlier), show some differences. Among the notable:

- Gordon is introduced as "M's man in Hong Kong" (not a representative of the Hong Kong police).
- A different action scene on the Great Wall of China. In this version, when Li Dao spots Bond: he tries to lose him in the crowd. He is unable to lose him and a hand-to-hand fight begins between the two men during which Li Dao takes out a 4-bladed throwing knife. Bond takes off one of his shoes and uses it as a shield: the thrown knife sticks into it. Bond removes the knife and advances with it towards Li who then decides to jump of the parapet of the wall, committing suicide. Tourists who witnessed the scene notified the police and the police is now heading towards Bond. Bond tries to flee and fight, but is overpowered.
- Bond sees that the thing Betje buys from the Chinese apothecary is rhino horn. This gives a little dialogue when they meet:

> - Betje: Powdered rhinoceros horn. Some people use it for an aphrodisiac. (She smiles) Do you?
> - Bond: Never touch the stuff.
> - Betje: Somehow I didn't think you did.

- When 007 first meets Pam, she introduces herself as "Pambo". Also when Bond orders a "dry martini" (shaken, not stirred), she calls it a "pantywaist" drink and explain to him that shaken is not a good choice for consume it because broken ice dilutes the gin. This amuses 007 who tells her that this is the reason why he ordered it like this: because he "hasn't much of a head for alcohol".
- Pam also says that she is a smuggler who transports anything (except heroin) on her junks without asking any questions (a phrase which recalls the reputation that Universal Export had in the reboot treatments of Bond 15). Also it is not a sawed-off double-barrel shotgun that she has with her in this version, but a ".65 Magnum Colt" (which does not exist). The dialogues are less similar to the film. Wu (beaten) is not brought into the restaurant by the Tongs.
- The gadget with which Q equips the bust has another utility here: it's basically a button that Bond must press to give the signal to the authorities to intervene (it's not a tracer).
- When Bond and Pam arrive at the fortress and see the concubines, Pam says, "He lives like the Emperor of China", to which LaFont responds, "Exactly".
- LaFont's first name is finally revealed, it's Jacques.
- A finale against LaFont is not quite the same, taking place in the pool where the concubines went to bathe earlier. Nothing exciting happens there, most of it takes place off screen in fact. Then a little further after having met Jing who came by helicopter with his commando, Betje asks the latter if he is an officer. Jing tells her no, that he is from state security. "A policeman? I just love policemen", says Betje...

In a single page memo/treatment, Bond saves the Hong Kong Governor's son in the pre-title. There's talk of a fire in a Krest factory (no idea if this is pre-title related or if that's supposed to be the next scene).

A stealth plane goes missing and Bond must investigate Krest. He meets him during a cigarette boat race. 007 is winning the race and Krest presses a remote control to put an obstacle in his way: Bond loses (his co-pilot is killed in the process). Krest's wife accepts the cup on behalf of her husband.

After the race, Krest fires his driver and offers Bond to be his new driver. 007 accepts and is invited on the Wavekrest where he participates in the hunt for the rare fish and notices that Krest is whipping his wife. She is later found dead.

On the Wavekrest Bond had overheard a conversation between Krest and Li Dao who said that Lacey was close to the goal. Bond follows Li Dao to Beijing and the Great Wall where he sees Lacey delivering a package to Li Dao. The latter recognizes Bond and tries to escape when a certain Jing arrives by helicopter and introduces himself as Chinese state security.

Bond gets in the helicopter and there is the motorcycle/helicopter chase on the Wall. The rest of the outline follow the treatment seen before: university, superconductor, Betje, Pam Bow and "Krest as Chinese general".

We are told that once in the jungle the stolen stealth plane is present and that it will be used in a raid on a secret laboratory. Bond and Pam must take part to it, so when their bodies would be found, suspicion will falls on the United Kingdom and the United States.

No longer going to China

And then suddenly communist China no longer seemed to be that attractive:

> - Cubby Broccoli[18] : I'm certain the Chinese film authorities would have liked to become involved with a James Bond film. In fact, when we showed The Living Daylights to them in Shanghai they were excited by the idea. [...] The Chinese film co-production people were attentive and goodnatured hosts. But eventually we decided the conditions and the logistics ruled out our making a picture there. The bureaucracy was stifling and the political intrusions, with scripts having to go back and forth between officials, would not have given us the essential elbow room to operate freely.

> - Michael Wilson[19] : We wrote two treatments for this one in China. It involved the treasures of China and was a quite different story. There was a question of whether we were getting a good result, though, and how expensive and what problems there might be working in China.

> - John Glen[20] : The Chinese said that they would want to vet the script and take out anything they considered was a bit provocative, Cubby said that was impossible and we just didn't go.

> - Michael Wilson: Most of the film people we met there were very enthusiastic. The powers that be were not, so nothing ever came of it in the end.

> - Richard Maibaum[21] : We thought about putting it [the film] in China. And there are terrible restrictions in writing a James Bond picture in China. You can't have any violence, you can't have any love scenes, you can't have anything that makes a James Bond picture. [...] No, as a matter-of-fact today, today we're having a hell of a time with a story that's supposed to take place in China. As a matter of fact, I brought up the fact, I said, "well, John Gardner has written five or six of these books, why don't we look into them?". I've read several of them, but they haven't got the thing that Ian Fleming's work has. [...] [China], they're too restrictive for what they will allow you to do and that's terribly expensive [to film there].

On the other hand, the 1987 release of the film The Last Emperor filmed in China and its Forbidden City perhaps also killed the novelty effect a little?

Back to almost square one

Since the story of the imagined treatment is very inseparable from China, the filmmakers almost have to start from scratch now the country has been excluded from filming locations.

The screenwriters start by asking themselves what is the greatest evil/threat of today? With Gorbachev at its head, the Soviet Union probably appeared to them as a less dangerous threat than in the past. On the other hand, the drug lords of South and Central America appear to be serious candidates.

> - Richard Maibaum[22] : The area of evil had to be with what was contemporary since we ran out of the Fleming novels and short stories. What is the great Satan today? The drug lord.

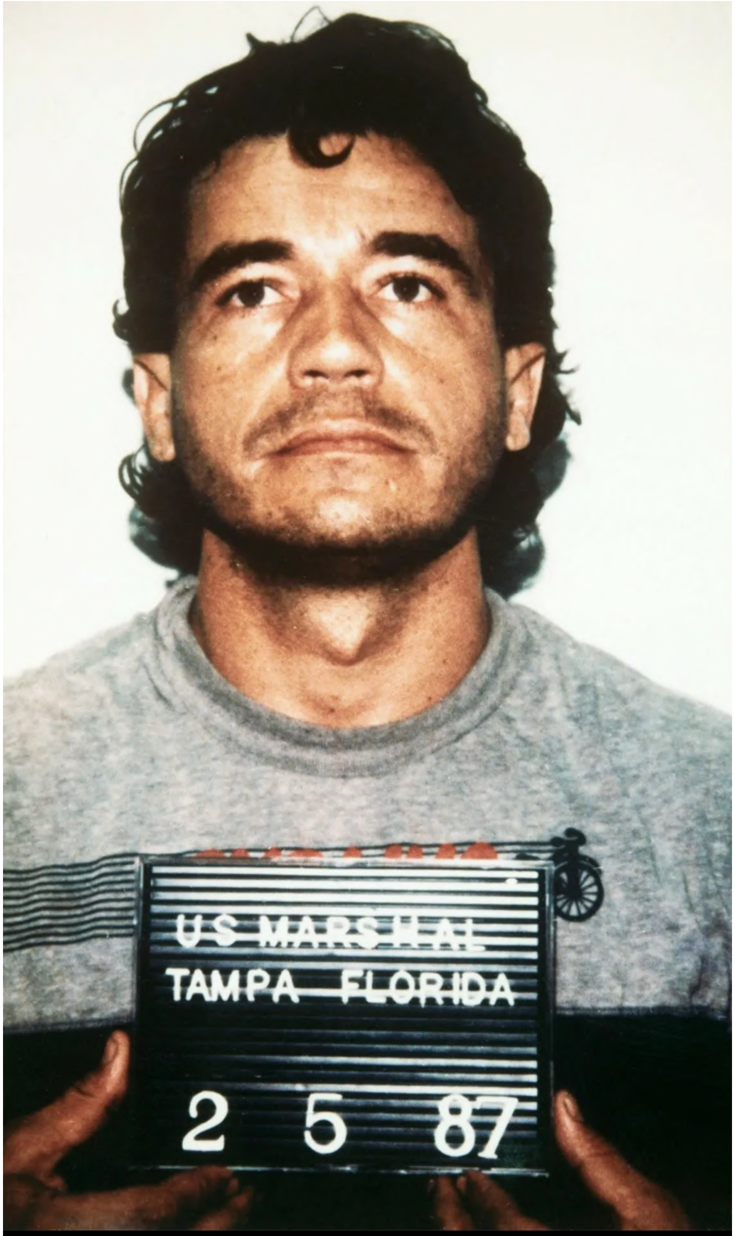
> - Richard Maibaum[23] : We've been fortunate in that we have been neck and neck with History in many of our pictures, and here we've caught up with General Noriega, which I think is luck and will do the picture some good. The drug lord from Central America is the villain of the day. There's no doubt about that, so why duck it?

Drugs were then very popular in the cinematographic landscape of the time, with big hits among the public such as Beverly Hills Cop, Lethal Weapon, RoboCop 2, Scarface, without forgetting the television series to which some critics of the time will compare Licence to Kill: Miami Vice.

This is also the case in society and the news reports with names such as traffickers Pablo Escobar, Carlos Lehder or the leader of Panama, Manuel Noriega.

> - Michael Wilson[24] : We had a case in the United States last year [...] with a Colombian guy called Carlos [Lehder] who was one of the "Big Five" in a drugs consortium. Apparently the other four didn't have too much contact with him; they decided he was too violent and crazy to deal with! Then there was General Noriega, who I thought rather colorful, who was giving the US a two-fingered salute over the Panama Canal while harboring all the drug criminals, dealing in protection such like. [...] So I thought this character taking a bit of both of them and thought he would be a colorful character to oppose Bond; hence [Klaus/Franz] Sanchez complete German/Spanish name!

Maibaum says: "We wondered whether we should do it, because there have been other Bond movies [like Live and Let Die] that have [already] dealt with drugs"[25].



Carlos Enrique Lehder Rivas, born in 1989 from a German father named Klaus and a Colombian mother. He was a drug trafficker and co-founder of the notorious Medellín Cartel. In particular, he had set up a transit point for planes used to transport cocaine, on the island of Norman's Cay, a few hundred kilometers off the coast of Florida in the Bahamas. As an associate of Pablo Escobar, he amassed a fortune estimated at over $2 billion. Arrested on February 4, 1987, he was sentenced to life (plus 135 unnecessary years) in prison in the United States. His sentence will however be reduced to 55 years after he testimony against Manuel Noriega. He was finally released in 2020 and deported to Germany where he now lives under a new identity.

Manuel Noriega (1934?-2017), born in Panama, joined the army in his youth while being an informant for the CIA. He accessed the spheres of power in 1968 through a coup orchestrated with Omar Torrijos. After the latter's death in 1981, Noriega became Panama's new strongman as one of its military leaders, a position he held until 1989. Thanks to his considerable influence, he exercised power without even occupying the post president of the Republic of Panama. He amassed a personal fortune amounting to several million dollars by establishing close ties with powerful Colombian drug cartels, notably the one of Medellín. Reports indicate he used banks in Panama and abroad to launder the money. Noriega also allegedly protected some drug traffickers in exchange for money and political support. If Americans have long turned a blind eye to this (despite the damage caused by drug trafficking and its other dubious activities) because of Noriega's impact/help in the fight against communism and in maintaining stability in Central America: at the end in the 80s he fell into disgrace. In 1988, Noriega was indicted by federal grand juries in Miami and Tampa on charges of racketeering, drug trafficking and money laundering. In the months following the release of Licence to Kill, the United States launched an invasion of Panama,Operation Just Cause, after negotiations to obtain his resignation failed and that Noriega canceled the 1989' Panamanian general election. Noriega was captured and flown to the United States, where he was tried on the Miami indictment, and found guilty of most of the charges. He then spent the rest of his life until his death in prisons in the United States, France and then Panama.

- Michael Wilson[26] : We wanted to create a situation where the top people in government were under the control of a drug lord, like General Manuel Noriega in Panama. The baddies don't have loopy ideas about living in space or under the sea; they are cocaine-peddling drug barons. Drugs were an issue in popular cinema of the time, but it hadn't been addressed in this way. This was an effort to say, "If you look at what's happening in the countries where drugs are grown and exported, is it true you're not hurting anyone but yourself when you do drugs?".

- Robert Davi (Sanchez)[27] : [When preparing myself for the role] I went into the documentaries about Noriega, Escobar, and Carlos Lehder.

- Richard Maibaum[28] : This was a deliberate attempt to tackle a more serious problem and by doing so, you cannot take the same airy approach to it that you have in other Bonds, where you have, let's say, things like breaking into Fort Knox, which is pure fantasy. It was clearly in everybody's mind that this time, we wanted something dark and something more serious, because we're dealing with a very serious and terrible evil in the world.

The theme requiring a certain seriousness as mentioned by Maibaum, and this will be reinforced by the idea of having a James Bond who acts in a personal way, out for revenge, and even against the orders of M. "We never really saw Bond go for revenge before. It wasn't a very developed idea in those films [Diamonds Are Forever And Goldfinger]", Wilson explained[29]. "I think you always want something where there will be some surprise. The problem with any sequel or series is meeting that criteria"[30].

Revenge is introduced by the use of a passage from the novel by Live and Let Die in which Leiter is mutilated by a shark.

- Richard Maibaum[31] : It is less fantastical [...]. It's more realistic, deals with a very important subject and very well suits Timothy Dalton's capacity to be real and actual, not cute and arch. As a matter of fact, I like Timothy very much. He brings a great reality to the situation.

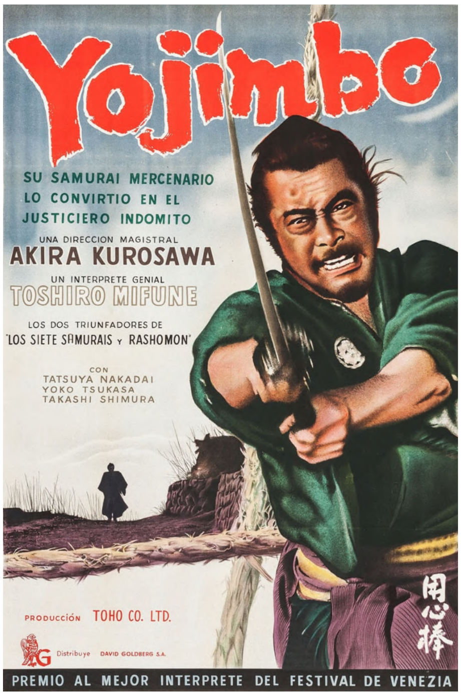
"Michael and I talked around the subject for a long time and decided that we would go for an altogether more realistic, gutsier James Bond", Broccoli recalls[32]. "We had no doubts about Timothy Dalton in the role. It was just that our story, based on a theme of personal revenge, required this additional, more muscular dimension. The central character, a plausible monster with political muscle running a massive drugs operation, was criticized by some as being too fanciful. This was ironic, considering the script was based on a real-life character named Noriega"[33].

- Michael Wilson[34] : Roger Moore's talents and abilities worked better in the more humorous and fantastic style. Timothy's talents work best in a different style.

One of the other influences on the writing of the movie is the film Yojimbo (1961), which sees the arrival of a samurai in an ill-famed town. Through subtle and skillful means, the samurai bring peace to the town by manipulating the two ruling criminal gangs into killing each other. Sergio Leone had made a sort of remake of Yojimbo with his western A Fistful of Dollars (1964).

- Michael Wilson[35] : It was kind along the line of the Yojimbo film. If you remember, the Akira Kurosawa's film where the samurai goes into a town and without really attacking the villain and all his cohorts, by just sowing the seeds of distrust, he manage to have the villain bring himself down.

In a similar way to Yojimbo, Bond would try to turn two villains (Sanchez and Krest) against each other so that they will eliminate themselves.



Yojimbo
SU SAMURAI MERCENARIO LO CONVIRTIO EN EL JUSTICIERO INDOMITO
UNA DIRECCION MAGISTRAL
AKIRA KUROSAWA
UN INTERPRETE GENIAL
TOSHIRO MIFUNE
LOS DOS TRIUNFADORES DE "LOS SIETE SAMURAIS" Y "RASHOMON" CON
TATSUYA NAKADAI
YOKO TSUKASA
TAKASHI SHIMURA
PRODUCCIÓN TOHO CO. LTD.
Distribuye DAVID GOLDBERG S.A.
用心棒
PREMIO AL MEJOR INTERPRETE DEL FESTIVAL DE VENEZIA

The foundations are laid

A new 7 page "Bond XVI" treatment is completed by Maibaum and Wilson at an unknown date. It includes filming locations in Latin America.

It opens with an (undefined) action scene which involving Bond and Leiter, in order to "reminding audience" of the "long, close professional and personal relationship" between the two men.

> - Richard Maibaum[36] : Frankly one thing the picture suffers from is that for one reason or another we've had so many actors playing Felix Leiter. There have been six of them. David Hedison is repeating from Live and Let Die, but it isn't enough. The audience had sort of forgotten him. In Licence to Kill, you didn't get the feeling that there had been this close life and death relationship between Bond and Leiter. [...] Which is particularly detrimental to this story in which Bond's concern for Leiter and his desire for revenge is such an important part of the plot. It would have been better if there had not been so many Leiters [...]. I do think that Dalton is so good that he is able to compensate somewhat.

After the credits, Leiter is temporarily assigned from the CIA to the DEA where he must accompany a US Army Commando tasked with arresting a drug lord in Central America: Klaus (not Franz) Sanchez. Leiter does the job: he arrests and extradites Sanchez.

Bond, on leave in Florida, visits Leiter, his wife and their 6-year-old son at their Key West home. The two men go fishing.

Meanwhile Sanchez escapes from prison, thanks to a bribe. During their fishing session, Leiter says he had been trying to catch Sanchez for 5 years and our two agents end up at a bar reminiscing about old memories.

When Leiter returns home, Sanchez's men are waiting for him there. They take him to an (outdoor) aquarium located on water's edge and Sanchez is there to supervise that Leiter is dipped with the sharks. When Bond returns to Leiter's house, he discovers that the latter's wife and child have been butchered, that the place has been ransacked and finds Leiter's body half alive (one leg missing) with a message like: "Something ate him he didn't agree with". Bond asks him if it was Sanchez: yes.

Bond goes to the aquarium where he is attacked by a guard: he overpowers him and threatens to throw him to the sharks. 007 then learns that Sanchez is doing business with a cocaine trafficker named Milford Krest who owns a boat designed to catch sharks. The guard tries again to throw Bond among the sharks but ends up falling into them by himself.

Bond meets M who tells him that MI6 cannot be involved in his vendetta; 007 wishes to resign, M refuses but withdraws his license to kill.

Bond sees that Krest's boat is going out to sea; with diving equipment he clings to the hull and climbs on board. The boat docks near a small uninhabited island and cocaine is transported from a seaplane to Krest's boat in exchange of money. Bond is spotted and like in the film he ends up water skiing behind the seaplane and take it over (with all of money on board).

Jim and Tammy Faye Bakker, American televangelists from the PTL [Praise The Lord] Club who made headlines in 1987 after a sex and fraud scandal.

Listening to a tape he found at Leiter's house, Bond learns that Klaus Sanchez uses his own casinos to launder his money as well as his own bank in the Caymans and a televangelists couple "like the Bakkers".

Leiter also had someone feeding him information: Pamela "Pam" "Pambo" Bow, a former CIA pilot who also worked for Sanchez. Bond meets her in a cafe where they are attacked by Sanchez's men. They flee by boat. We now learn more about our Bond Girl, like the fact that she participated in an arms deal involving the Contras in the past or more importantly: that she hates Sanchez because one day she transported for him men who were supposed to be illegal immigrants but who turned out be to drug traffickers. Since then, she has been unable to return to the United States because of the charges against her.

The character of Pam, a former CIA pilot who carried out arms deliveries for the Contras, seems to refer to the recent "Irangate" scandal. It arose when it was discovered that senior US government officials had made secret arms sales to Iran (despite an arms embargo imposed by the United States itself). The goal was to finance armed anti-communist groups in Nicaragua, known as the Contras, who were fighting against the Soviet-backed government (even though the U.S. Congress itself at that time blocked further aid to the Contras)...

Bond contacts Q who provides him with gadgets. With Pam he robs Sanchez's bank; they find in particular diamonds in a box which they destroy with sledgehammers.

After that Bond goes to one of Sanchez's casinos located in Acapulco (Mexico). It turns out that Sanchez and Krest are also there. During the evening Bond tells Krest that Sanchez put a contract on his [Krest's] head; so he better leave. Bond explains to Krest that he is warning him because he likes to bet on winners and for him Krest (not Sanchez) is one. Bond adds or implies that he hopes that Krest will remember this and reward him. Krest leaves quickly.

Bond then plays (against Sanchez?) at the casino and wins. He tells to Sanchez that it was Krest who robbed his bank. Bond, with Pam as support, enters a Sanchez property ("spread") in Mexico where he allows himself to be captured and taken to the drug lord. Bond claims to Sanchez that he is a hitman who was hired by Krest to kill him. However, he likes to bet on winners and he thinks that Klaus is a winner...

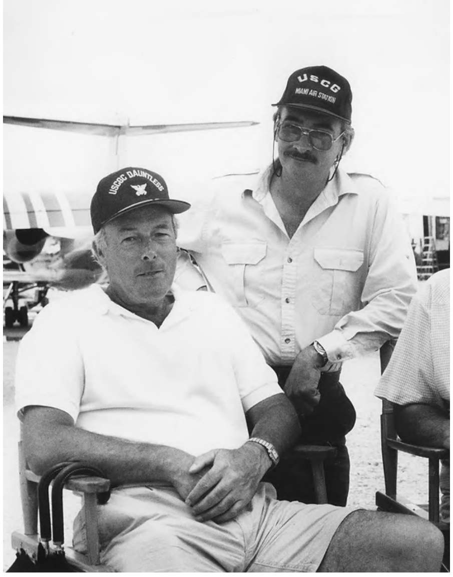
Sanchez thinks about hiring Bond. Sanchez's girlfriend, Betje Bedwell, falls in love with Bond. Sanchez finds out and tortures Bond, "with implanted tooth?", we can read. Bond confesses that he is a British agent and as he and Betje are about to be executed, Krest and his men attack Sanchez's property. During the big battle that follows, Krest is killed and Bond and Betje escape with Pam's help.

[There are two paragraphs crossed out, unreadables]. Bond rehabs/detox Betje who is apparently addicted to drugs. Sanchez, abandoned by most of his men, has gone to hole up in his castle in Portugal where he wants revenge on Bond no matter the cost. Betje tells 007 where Sanchez must be and he goes to the castle with Pam.

Sanchez, who thought that Betje would reveal his location, prepared a trap into which Bond and Pam fall (he releases narcotic gas and captures them).

Sanchez having stolen a British stealth plane, his plan is to load it with cocaine and make it crash, on autopilot, onto Buckingham Palace with Bond and Pam on board. The stroke of genius is that Bond will be in possession of Sanchez's dentition, so everyone will believe that Sanchez is dead. As a bonus it will be believed that Great Britain helped Sanchez in his drug trafficking via the stealth plane and with the help of a former member of the CIA (Pam). Obviously, Klaus Sanchez plans to parachute out of the plane before the crash and will be picked up by a cigarette boat.

Like any great Bond villain, Sanchez cannot resist the pleasure of telling to Bond his diabolical plan. We will never see Bond again, but his name will forever be associated with betrayal! As for Sanchez, he will just have to disappear and, after plastic surgery, create a new empire elsewhere under a new identity!



In flight, a henchman of the drug lord goes to strangle Bond, but James, somehow, manages to get away with it. Indeed the details surrounding the scene are not included in the treatment, the screenwriters only indicating: "the [details of the] action Bond takes against Sanchez will have to be devised by J. Glen, world's greatest action director"! However we are told that we could imagine that Bond frees himself from his bonds with a gadget from Q and reanimates Pam who helps him in a memorable fight while the plane plunges into Buckingham Palace.

Bond manages to take the control of the plane just in time and lands it on the nearest US Air Force base. Once landed, Sanchez is transferred to another plane and returns to the prison from which he escaped, to serve a life sentence.

When M learns all this, he tries to contact Bond to tell him that all is forgiven and to come back quickly. It turns out that Bond is visibly in bed with Pam and Betje at the same time (note that this sentence was crossed out with a pen)...

Bond and Pam go to visit Leiter who is still recovering from the shark mutilation. 007 is about to leave and Pam tells him that she is going to stay a little longer with Leiter. Bond returns to his hotel alone, where Betje Bedwell is waiting for him.

After making love, Betje leaves and Pam comes to see Bond. The phone rings, Bond answers while doing sex with Pam. On the other end of the line Moneypenny is still trying to get M call through. Moneypenny realizes that Bond is busy and tells M that Bond's line is busy. To which M responds wryly, "So what else is new?".

Besides this treatment, a few other (earlier?) pages show somewhat different ideas:

- It is envisaged that Leiter talk about Pamela to Bond before the scene where he end up in the shark tank.
- The stealth plane is not British but Russian. The Buckingham Palace target is also not present. On the other hand we can read that Bond "somehow" receives help from Pushkin (from The Living Daylights) to stop Sanchez's plan to fake his dead with the plane crash.
- Sanchez dies in a hand-to-hand fight against Bond on the plane (so he is not delivered alive to the American authorities).

Actor John Rhys-Davies, who played KGB General Pushkin in The Living Daylights, remembers being approached for this new film: "They did ask me to do a couple of scenes. My answer was: well, if the scene was integral to the story, yes, I'd be happy to. But if not, let's not"[37].

January 19, 1988' treatment: The Guadeloupean Job

In January 1988, scouting trips took place to find filming locations[38]. Peter Lamont remembers going to Los Angeles, Miami, Key West, Guadeloupe and Martinique[39].

Let's now focus on a treatment of approximately 85 pages (!) dated January 19, 1988. It is actually a revised version of a treatment dated December 17, 1987. The header page says "Bond 16" as the (provisional) title and Richard Maibaum and Michael G. Wilson as its authors.

(Note: we will pass a little quickly over certain points similar to a treatment dated March 4, 1988 which we will study in detail later).

The treatment opens on the ranch of the drug lord Franz (and no longer Klaus) Sanchez located in Colombia: with a hacienda, coffee fields, livestock... Franz is riding some horse in the company of the former Miss Colombia (and winner of Miss Galaxy): Lupe Lamora. He carries with him a whip made from a stingray tail that the men who produce cocaine on the property also see.

There is noise, Sanchez tells Lupe to go back to the hacienda and goes to investigate at the entrance. It turns out that the noise comes from a woman with a newborn who asks to see him. She tells him that her child needs an operation because he has a clubfoot deformity, the child grabs Sanchez's hand; he smiles and tells his mother that his personal doctor will help them, gratis. The mother thanks him by kneeling and kissing his feet and Sanchez returns to his hacienda.

There Lupe is being massaged almost naked by a man named Jesus. Sanchez doesn't take it badly, he chats a little with Lupe then brings the whip towards her buttocks in a "playfully" way, she is "amused". According to the treatment it's a bit like a sadomasochistic game between them.

Trucks loaded with coca leaves approach and enter the property; suddenly soldiers come out from under the leaves and point their weapons at Sanchez's guards. A Colombian colonel named Hernandez asks his men to secure the area. Lupe sees the Colombian commando approaching, just like Jesus who takes out a .45 from under the massage table and opens fire. Jesus is killed in return and the commando blows up the doors of the hacienda.

Sanchez is inside with two of his men: Dario and Perez; he tells them not to fight. Colonel Hernandez and his men enter:

> - Sanchez: What's the matter, Colonel. Didn't your commander get his check this month?

A helicopter lands on the patio and Felix Leiter gets out with some kind of extradition warrant. A handcuffed Sanchez is brought to the helicopter (he seems to know Leiter since he tells him before seeing the warrant "I think you are in the wrong country, Leiter", before adding that he is a dead man). Sanchez asks Dario to take care of Lupe in his absence and tells the latter "See you soon, my love".

Sanchez is brought to a military prison in Georgia where he has a conversation with DEA agent Killifer similar to the one in the film.

Near a church in Key West, James Bond (and Pam Bouvier) attend (separately) the wedding of his friends Leiter and Delia. The party continues at Leiter's house, where Felix notably introduces Jericho to Bond: a tall and impressive black local fisherman. He and Leiter are about to partner in a fishing business.

Things happen similarly to the film and on a bridge, Sanchez escapes with the help of Killifer while he was taken to court in a van.

After the wedding, Leiter carries his sweetheart to the bedroom where Dario and another man are waiting for him. Leiter gets knocked out and is brought to Sanchez in a Milford Krest's warehouse. Sanchez told him: "For me there are only two kinds of DEA men. Friends I make rich [pointing to Killifer] and... Shark bait". So Leiter is plunged into a pool containing sharks.

The next day, when Bond reads "Cocaine King Escapes" in the newspaper at the airport; he gets in a taxi to Leiter's house, forgetting to take his luggage with him. He finds Della strangled to death and Leiter in a bad state, having been mutilated by sharks. Bond and Jericho go to investigate near the Krest' warehouse because sharks can be found there.

Inside, 007 comes across guards, including a certain Carl whom he places in a maggot incubator (he dies of suffocation there, it is written). There is also the one who ends up electrocuted by the electric eel and Bond also finds Killifer, whom he will make fall towards the sharks with the suitcase full of money, similar to the film.

A little further on Bond is in a house that he rented on a beach when M comes knocking on the door and revokes his licence to kill. Bond joins Jericho and they set off at sea towards Krest's boat. It is written that the crew of the Wavekrest collecting marine specimens before Bond sneaks aboard.

On the ship Bond stumble on Lupe; however, he is spotted and captured. Krest has no time to deal with him at the moment and asks his men to escort him to a place where he will be locked up. Lupe helps Bond get rid of his escort and tells him "take me with you". Bond replies he will come back for her and flees alone in a manner similar to the film. It can be noted that during the underwater fight, Krest at one point asks the operator of the Sentinel to hit Bond with it (which happens).

After Bond escapes with the seaplane, there is a small scene where a tramp who was sleeping on a bench wakes up. Near him is the plane abandoned by Bond. While searching his pocket for matches, the tramp is surprised to find a wad of banknotes (which Bond probably slipped in his sleep).

It goes even further. Indeed, a little later when Bond examines a floppy disk found at Leiter's house (on which Pam is mentioned), a television news report relates that mysterious large sums of money have been anonymously deposited on the steps of schools, hospitals and orphanages!

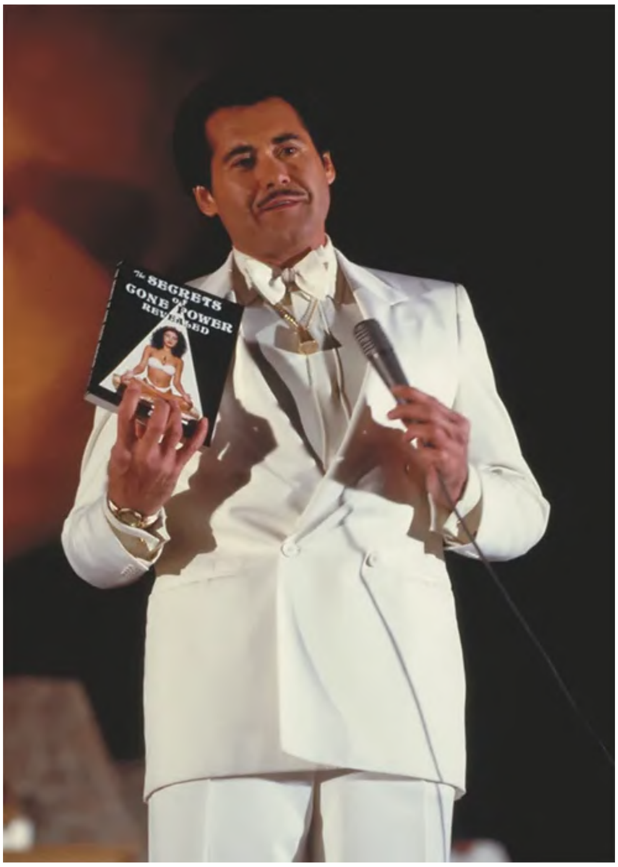
Much of the film takes place in Isthmus City (a fictional country). However, in this treatment the action takes place in France, or at least in overseas France, since we are in Guadeloupe. Moreover, just before Bond meets Pam at the Barrelhead, we find a scene where Franz Sanchez arrives in Guadeloupe by air and goes through immigration disguised as a reverend named Lopez. He is greeted by Shekli (his personal accountant) who escorts him to his limousine and tells him the bad news (the problems with Krest).

Bond and Pam leave for Guadeloupe and stop at their hotel, with slightly different dialogue from the film.

From there things become interesting because the treatment moves away from the film since after that Bond goes to the port where he asks in particular when the Wavekrest should arrive: tomorrow at 23h30. The employee asks him why he wants to know, Bond replies that it's a secret: he's planning a surprise party for them. The receptionist swears she won't leak it.

Bond returns to the hotel where a receptionist tells him that his uncle has arrived. Bond therefore meets Q who was taking a nap on a chair in the room. Q explains that he is on vacation and there thanks to Moneypenny. Bond tells him to go spend his vacation elsewhere because it's dangerous; Q retorts that he too was a friend of Leiter. Pamela joins them, more feminine than ever; Bond makes the introductions. Bond asks Q, "What do you know about cheating?", to which Q replies: "Cards or dice?".

At night we find Q and Pam playing baccarat in a casino. They use a ring that marks the cards with invisible ink. Bond is at the bar and Dario (wearing bandages and a neck brace following the altercation at the Barrelhead) is in the building but don't see them. Sanchez and Shekli are watching televangelists couple Joe and Deedie Butcher's show. Mafiosi (led by a certain Big Benjy) are also watching in a Chicago building. Big Benjy is unhappy: "One, two, twelve dollars a gram! That Sanchez is getting too cocky"; which, however, didn't prevent him from ordering 500 kg of drugs via the show. There is a kind of accountant named Covucci who calculates the delivery costs for Big Benjy.



The SECRETS of GONE TOWER REVEALED

Bond is now also playing baccarat where he loses. He opens a briefcase full of money and asks if we can increase the limit because "I'll never get my money back at this rate" and orders another drink. Thinking they had a good pigeon there, they allow him (with Sanchez's permission) to play without limits. On TV, Deedie Butcher concludes her show by saying there will be a conference and a seminar at their institute located in Tijuana and invites all their "chapels" in the United States to participate. In Chicago, Big Benjy is keen to go: "I'm going. I'll tell him what I think of his new prices".

Bond takes out a monocle that allows him to see the invisible ink on the cards that have been marked by his companions and thus begins to win. He plays until he has "broken the bank", the table is forced to close because the casino can no longer afford for him to bet again.

Bond is paid by check which he goes to cash at the bank of Guadeloupe. The manager, however, gives him a note saying "payment refused, sucker" and a certain Duval, apparently the chief of police, joins them and examines Bond's passport (Sanchez had asked Duval to investigate the person who won at the casino). Duval basically says they don't like cheaters around and that he'd better leave Guadeloupe; he nevertheless lets Bond leave freely and alive the bank.

Meanwhile Q was talking to an employee (with a bag full of money in his hand) about opening a safety deposit box in the bank. Q is shown around the bank vault and when he asks if his money will be safe, he is assured that it will be the case: "we are protected by a triple alarm system. The vault can only be opened by a time lock".

Q joins Bond and Pam at the hotel and hands them lists. There is a "montage" of the three characters making preparations to rob the bank: Pam buys a black van, Q and Bond buy equipment in a junkyard, Bond burns a hole with a blowtorch in the van.

Back at the hotel, Q is on a computer showing the specifications of the safe door. It is too thick to blow or pierce, they will have to be more subtle like disrupting the clock/timer. Bond is worried that they won't have enough time (the Wavekrest arrives in the night), but Q is confident.

At Sanchez's penthouse, Duval reports to the drug lord: Bond works for Universal Export and Duval's contacts at the Deuxième bureau confirmed to him that it was an MI6 front. Dario is there and sees the photo of Bond who he recognizes as the man he saw with Pam at Barrelhead. Sanchez thinks his presence may have something to do with Leiter; Duval offers to help him by putting Bond under arrest but Sanchez decline: he will take care of it himself.

So at the start of the evening, Dario and other henchmen burst into Bond's hotel room with shotguns. They riddle the place with cartridges, but discover that there is no one there.

Outside the bank of Guadeloupe, Bond parks the van on top of a manhole cover. Pam (equipped with a speaker/microphone headset) goes into what appears to be the sewers (?) through the hole Bond had made in the van; this in order to locate the cables of the three telephone alarms. She plugs crocodile clips into cables (connected to an oscilloscope that Q operates from the van, he tests the cables to determine if they are the correct ones). They eventually locate the three cables and plug their own phones into them.

At the entrance of the bank, Bond installs a device that allows him to pick the door. He opens it while Q intercepts the alarm via one of the phones. Bond goes inside and Q tells him that he intercepted the second alarm: the one of the motion detector located in the hall.

However, it turns out that a police car stops near the bank and two police officers get out to inspect the van and the surrounding area. Wanting to avoid being spotted by the flashlight of one of the police officers outside the building, Bond hides towards the vault: which activates an alarm sensor and makes the third telephone ring. The ringing of the phone startles the police officer who was inspecting the van and was about to look under it (and discover the cables). Q says out loud, "Jim and Pam are not here right now, but if you leave your name and number they'll call you back shortly". A mobile telephone with an answering machine says the impressed police officers to his partner (don't forget, we are in 1988) before drawing up a parking ticket and leaving.

Inside the bank Bond locates a fuse box and follows a cable until he finds a space wide enough to be able to grab another cable (connected to an electric motor) which Pam sends to him (from the hole where she is). He connects this new cable to the fuse box and Q increases the number of revolutions of a motor, causing the safe's clock (and its hands) to run faster than normal as Q increases the rpm. Q explains to Pam that by increasing the "frequency of the power" of the bank, the clock controlling the opening of the vault speeds up. The motor reaches 1000 rpm and begins to spin out of control; smoke and sparks come out. Bond runs to the fuse box and cuts the power. It seems the clock is right on time and the vault's door unlocks.

Pam and Q join Bond in the bank and load the money from the vault belonging to the casino. There's a lot of stuff, Bond order to just focus on the stacks of 20$ notes. On a shelf there's a VCR tape of Shekli that Bond also takes. Concerning the financial securities (like stocks) that they cannot take with them, Bond decides to put them in a paper shredder of the bank. Q imitates him.

The Wavekrest is now approaching the port. Here things start to happen again in a similar way to the film (Bond and Q are on a pilot boat, Pam who pilots Wavekrest and crashes it), except that Pam, during the confusion on the boat, goes to Lupe's cabin and tells her to come with her: "I'm with the man who said he'd come for you".

On the pilot boat, Q shows Bond a jar containing two liquids separated by a diaphragm: it is a homemade bomb which is armed when the pressure (of the air) increases and explodes when it is reduced, he explains. Bond dives and joins the Wavekrest through the Sentinel's hatch which Pam opened from the inside; Lupe is happy to see him again. Bond and the girls place the money and the bomb inside the boat's decompression chamber, Bond activates it and they start to leave:

- Lupe: I can't swim!
- Bond: Time to learn.
- Pam: Just take my hand and hold your breath.

They swim and join Q; Lupe kisses Bond: that doesn't amuse Pam. Dario spots the money on the Wavekrest and tells Sanchez who was chatting with Milford Krest like in the movie. They go to the decompression chamber. Sanchez orders one of his men to take the money out of there and whips Krest with his stingray whip then beats him to death with a gaff that was on a wall. He thinks it's the money from the seaplane deal.

When one of the men opens the decompression chamber, the bomb explodes but the explosion misses Sanchez and Dario. The banknotes are nevertheless ruined. Bond, Q, Lupe and Pam return to the van (passing the port officer's office where the real pilot boat pilot and his assistant are tied and gagged on the floor). Q takes a photo of Lupe before they get in.

Outside the Wavekrest in flames, Duval arrives and runs to Sanchez to tell him that there is a problem at the bank.

The van arrives at the airport as Q puts the finishing touches on Lupe's fake passport made with a special typewriter and appropriate stamps. Police cars accompanied by Sanchez arrive at the bank and the latter then sees that its safes are empty and that the remains has been shredded. Shekli wonders why the thieves only took the 20$ notes with them. The only thing left intact is the check from the casino to Bond with the note "payment refused, sucker". Sanchez orders his men and Duval to head towards the airport.

There, Sanchez machine-gun a plane which acts as a diversion while Pam steals and takes off with the jet from Sanchez's casino. Once in the air, Lupe in the plane' shower asks Bond for shampoo and they begin to make love. Pam hears this and rolls the plane; "Bitch!" exclaims Lupe!

Back at the casino penthouse, Duval presents "wanted" posters depicting Bond and his accomplices to Sanchez and says he sent them to Interpol. Shekli tells Sanchez that they are short on cash: they should consider canceling the conference at the Tijuana institute. Sanchez categorically refuses and asks his accountant to sell or mortgage whatever property he can. Shekli is also worried that Bond will figure out what's on the tape he stole from the bank, Sanchez replies that "then he will save me the trouble of sending men to find him".

On the plane Bond has just finished watching the VCR tape which contained a recording of the televangelists' show where the conference was announced; he asks Pam to direct the plane to Tijuana.

There, the descriptions of the street try to transcribe the local atmosphere with Mexican clichés (including sombreros). Bond tells Lupe to go with Q to take the next flight to Miami where Q would brief Leiter. Q and Lupe are reluctant to leave Bond and Pam but do so.

Outside their hotel there are Americans with clothes emblazoned with the letters T.B.I. (Tijuana Bible Institute). Inside, Bond and Pam are informed that all the rooms are already taken except the bridal suite; he reserves it under the name of Mr. and Mrs. Smith-Jones. They hear that a bus will leave for the institute the next morning, Bond makes a remark about the function of a bridal suite to which Pam responds: "all I know is you get the couch". On the way to the suite they come across Shekli; Pam tells Bond who it is. It seems that Shekli didn't see them.

Pam and Bond arrive by bus at the institute. In the lobby, the receptionist tells Bond and Pam that they are not on the conference list. 007 opens a suitcase full of money and says he wanted to donate it to a good cause; Deedie comes to join them and says that "we can always make room at our inn". They receive their visitor badges. A DC3 lands on a runway behind the building, Sanchez gets out and supervises men who unload the cocaine from the plane.

The receptionist takes a walkie-talkie to tell Shekli that the people he is looking for are here and that she has given them blue visitor badges. Shekli informs Sanchez who is now near five tankers trucks being filled or emptied. Bond and Pam take part in the guided tour where they see preparations underway for the Butcher's show, Love One Another.

The tour also includes a visit to an automated printing press where the institute's bibles are printed. One of the machines consists of some sort of sharp knives that go up and down to cut the sheets to the desired sizes. Dario and five bigwigs (including our Big Benjy from Chicago and a certain Muscles Mulrooney) also take part in the guided tour; their conversation seems to indicate that cocaine is contained in the pages of printed bibles.

Dario and the bigwigs move away from the visiting group. Bond asks Pam for her gun which was under her hat, and leaves to follow the bigwigs after she asks him not to "commit suicide". Pam stays with the tour group.

The bigwigs are given surgical masks and head to a laboratory, Bond enters a sort of locker room, overpowers a technician and takes his clothes and mask. On the guided tour side, the receptionist spots Pam.

Bond in disguise joins Sanchez, Dario, Shekli and the five gangsters in the laboratory where there is a man named Armando Rios (described as a "burly mustachioed Pancho Villa type" with a golden toothpick; he is apparently the leader of a group local bandit responsible for escorting the tankers to Mexicali). Cocaine is being mixed with gasoline in a large vat. Big Benjy opens the conversation by saying that Sanchez is on a slippery slope and that the proposal for which he brought them together better be a good one. Sanchez explains his process for transporting the drug via gasoline by doing (himself) the demonstration during which he notably asks Bond to pass him an Erlenmeyer flask (Bond hesitates, and Sanchez points to the vial "that, idiot!").

Meanwhile, Pam has spotted the guard who is following her and she is heading towards the women's dressing room. Dario receives a phone call saying that Bond is not with her.

Pancho Villa

The gangsters decide to accept Sanchez's proposal and go out to talk with Shekli. Sanchez and Dario have spotted Bond and sensing this is the case, James begins to sneak away. Dario draws his gun and literally unmasks Bond, who then grabs an Erlenmeyer flask and throws it in his face. Rios, however, manages to overpower Bond. Sanchez confronts him:

- Sanchez: So, señor British Secret Agent, we are finally face to face.
- Bond: The honor is all mine.

- Sanchez: What have I done to cause this British vendetta against me?
- Bond: Britain is not involved. It's purely personal. I'm a friend of Felix Leiter. Let's leave it at that.
- Sanchez: Then I will have another surprise for him: your head! Despite what you and he have done to ruin me, I am about to achieve the greatest coup of my life. I will regain everything. Once again I will be the great Franz Sanchez, richer, more powerful, more feared than before. And Señor Leiter is living proof for all to see what happens to those who oppose me. What have you to say now?
- Bond: You finished, Sanchez?
- Sanchez: Arrogant English! (To Dario) Cut him down to size. Call me when you are ready.

While Pam is still stuck in the women's dressing rooms, Bond is strapped to a conveyor belt that leads to the printer sheet-cutting machine. Sanchez says goodbye to him and that he is sure that he "will be a bestseller".

Bond survives by managing to put his feet in a stainless steel bucket lying nearby; the blades hit the bucket and break. Sanchez orders Dario to catch Bond; Dario and Bond fight over a machine containing ink in which Dario dies. "Ink drips out of apparatus; red ink". Sanchez sends guards after Bond who runs towards the auditorium where the Butcher's show is being recorded live. He goes on stage where a member of the institute says to him:

- Member: Brother, do you want to be saved?
- Bond: The sooner the better!

The planned filming location for the auditorium was the Sala Nezahualcóyotl at the Centro Cultural Universitario of Mexico.

Q, Lupe and Hawker or Hawkens (a member of the DEA who will be renamed Hawkins in the film) watch the broadcast with Leiter in the latter's hospital room. On screen they see Bond jump on stage and shout "Hallelujah, I have seen the light!" and walk toward to Deedie and Joe to give them a hug. In a room the director of the show tells his team and his cameramen to "Stay on that yo-yo. He's great!". Bond speaks on TV:

- Bond: I want to send a message to my brother in Florida! About the wonderful work Deedie and Joe are doing here. Right now they're sending glad tidings to chapels everywhere! Through Mexicali, hallelujah! Yes, Mexicali! Believe me, brother. Don't hesitate! Believe and spread the word before it's too late!

A guard whisper something in Deedie's ear, from the dressing room Pam sees what's happening on stage. Deedie addresses the audience by saying she is afraid that Bond will have a nervous breakdown because he seems so moved by his conversion; she tells the guards that a few minutes in the meditation room should do him good. Pam joins Bond on the stage and they start fighting with the guards. Deddie asks the choir to sing the institute anthem. Bond and Pam flee behind the scene and manage to escape the guards by going through a trapdoor.

Bond and Pam manage to get out of the building and see a convoy of five tankers accompanied by cars and a utility truck (which appears to be a semi-trailer containing the equipment to extract drugs from the gasoline), escorted by Rios and his men in vehicles. From there begins a long action scene very similar to that which we will find in the treatment of March 4, 1988 (we will talk about it later). Unfortunately the last pages of this truck chase are missing, as well as the end pages (if they ever existed).

February 12, 1988' treatment: new pre-title and Braun

Another treatment completed on February 12, 1988 (56 pages) is basically very similar to the one seen previously. Still written by Maibaum and Wilson, the treatment is this time entitled "Bond XVI".

The pre-title sequence opens like in the film with a coastguard helicopter interrupting Bond and Leiter on their way over the Seven Mile Bridge to Felix's wedding. We can note that Jericho is however not in the car with Bond and Leiter (he is in the church). Sanchez is in "Midge Cay" (not "Cray Cay"): it seems that his plane had to make an emergency landing there following a technical problem.

We're told Sanchez hangs around with a stingray tail whip near the pilot who's fiddling with his plane engine.

Dario tells Sanchez that Milford Krest is on his way to pick them up with his Wavekrest. The helicopter carrying Bond and Leiter arrives, but it doesn't immediately go into a shootout compared to the film: Sanchez telling his men "we talk first".

Leiter and "Hawkins" come to inform Sanchez that he is under arrest and handcuff him. Dario decides to take up arms and Bond (dressed in a pilot's helmet which hides half of his face) jumps on him before he can riddle Leiter and Hawkins with an Uzi. Bond overpowers Dario while Sanchez tries to escape on foot. He is almost instantly recaptured by the DEA men (there is no escape by plane) and put in the helicopter. Lupe, in a beach towel, begs Bond to take her with him but he tells her "some other time, muchacha" before getting into the helicopter.

The helicopter goes somewhere in Key West where Sanchez is handed over to "Federal Marshal" Killifer before taking off again to go to the church where Leiter is getting married.

After the credits, things happen as in the January 19' treatment, with a few exceptions:

- Leiter tells Della that their honeymoon will have to be postponed because of his job (she takes it nicely).
- Before Sanchez escapes, there is a scene where Bond and Jericho both go fishing and open a bottle of rum.

- The henchman Braun appears in this treatment (and his sidekick Perez is more present; in the January 19' treatment he was only mentioned in the pre-title sequence).
- The tramp scene is still there and part of the adventure is still set in Guadeloupe while another is still set in Tijuana.
- It's M who asks Q to join 007 (and not just Moneypenny).
- There is a small scene where Sanchez examines the cards after Bond wins ($700,000) at the casino and discovers the invisible ink. He asks Duval to find out who this guy is.
- Dario goes (alone) try to kill Bond in his hotel room and with a pistol equipped with a silencer (instead of a shotgun). In bed he discovers that the figures he shot at were effigies of clown masks under melons.
- During the bank robbery there is only one alarm, the police stay shorter and the thing that Bond plugs in is an electric generator (and not a motor).
- The scene at the Tijuana hotel is shorter.
- The bigwig Muscles Mulrooney was renamed on one page to Muscles Malone.
- "The print on the emerging pages turns from black to red", we can read for the sequence where Dario dies in the machine containing ink.
- The truck chase ends similarly to the March 4' treatment (with Bond lighting Sanchez on fire), Bond adding to Pam's benefit: "My mother told me never to play with matches".
- The epilogue is the same as that of March 4' treatment (that we gonna analyze just now).

March 4, 1988' treatment

In 1985 the British government ended the Eady Levy subsidy/tax from which the James Bond films had benefited. Due to this and other financial aspects, the filmmakers believe that staying in England/Pinewood to film this new agent 007 adventure would be financially unreasonable[40].

The production estimates that filming abroad can save a significant amount of money, as when they went to France to film Moonraker.

This time the filmmakers decided to choose Churubusco Studios, located in Mexico. Peter Lamont began moving in on site in March 1988 in order to prepare (and renovate) everything that needed to be done[41].

Since the production will be based in Mexico and the scenario will require that Sanchez has corrupted the politicians/authorities, Guadeloupe will be left out of the film to be replaced by the fictional country of Isthmus (filmed in Mexico) in a new treatment dated 4 March 1988; still entitled "BOND XVI".

In addition to the 66 pages that constitute this treatment by Richard Maibaum and Michael Wilson, my copy contains 8 additional pages of drawings including the water skiing sequence behind the seaplane and truck stunts by Rémy Julienne. Drawings to which this treatment (and the one of February) make references.

The story begins with an AWACS patrolling the Caribbean. Inside, the crew spots Sanchez's plane and decides to forward the information to the DEA in Key West.

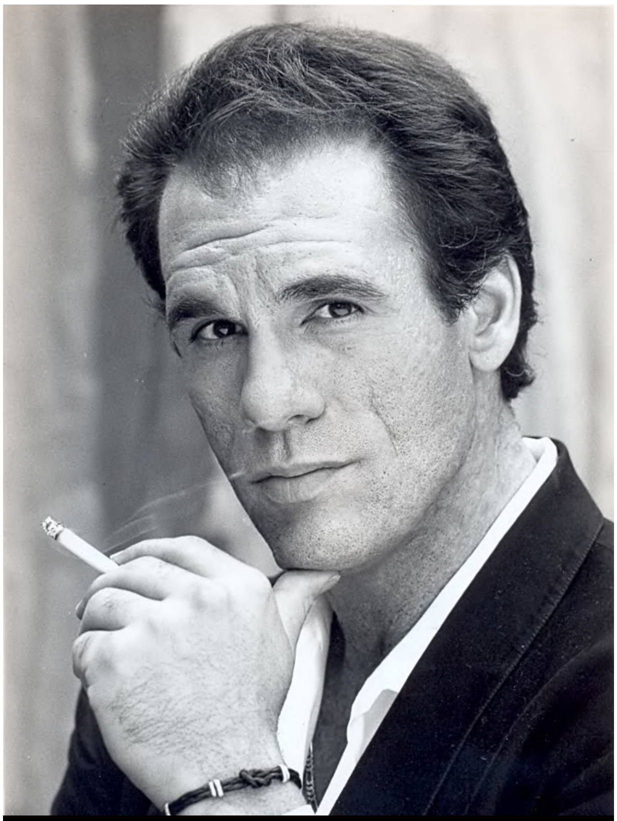
On the Seven Mile Bridge there is a limousine in which Bond and Felix Leiter are going to the latter's wedding, where they must meet his future wife, Della Dale (and not Churchill). The car is driven by Leiter's "black friend", Jericho, when Felix receives a phone call and then sees a helicopter in which Hawkins, his "assistant" at the DEA, is.

Hawkins tells him that Sanchez is on his way to Cray Cay. The treatment gives some details about this character: "Sanchez is the legendary Colombian drug kingpin, an ex-army officer known as Colonel Crack. Now with the D.E.A. Leiter has tried to arrest him for five years".

- Richard Maibaum[42] : I know I was watching a thing on television called Terrorist on Trial: The United States vs. Salim Ajami [in which actor Robert Davi played the terrorist]. I went into the studio the next day, and I saw a copy. I said, "I know who could play Sanchez", and Cubby said, "Davi. I was watching it, too".

Leiter and Bond board the helicopter, leaving Jericho alone to explain the situation to Della (Bond notably says that he'd "rather face Sanchez than Della").

Meanwhile, Sanchez's plane lands. The drug lord comes out, accompanied by two trusted henchmen



Like Noriega, Robert Davi have a pock-marked face.

(Perez and Braun), his "chief [...] bodyguard" (Dario), as well as... Lupe Lamora, his current partner! She is described as a "voluptuous Colombian girl, winner of the Miss Galaxy beauty contest"; Franz managed to seduce her with little attentions and gifts, but "she now feels trapped by his possessiveness". Sanchez asks Dario to stay on the plane with Lupe: he won't be long...

Sanchez and his other men therefore head towards a bungalow in which there is a Colombian who is in charming company in a jacuzzi. "Velasquez?", exclaims Franz before asking the girls to leave. Velasquez says he doesn't understand the reason for this visit, but declares himself honored although "it's risky". "Risky for you", Sanchez retorts before throwing a bunch of banknotes into the jacuzzi, saying: "I sell real dope, I want real money". The ink from the counterfeit bills begins to dilute in the water and Velasquez says that won't happen again. Sanchez assures him that he is right: Braun and Perez drown him in the water of the jacuzzi.

The Coast Guard helicopter arrives just as Sanchez and his men are returning to their plane on foot. Leiter and Hawkins go down, and Bond, still in the helicopter (he doesn't get out) sees Sanchez fleeing with Velasquez's plane. The helicopter pilot picks up Felix and his colleague, and like in the film, Bond does his act where he attaches the helicopter's winch to the back of the plane.

While Della is still waiting at the church, the helicopter still carrying the plane lands at the Coast Guard base where it is surrounded by armed guards. Bond gets off the tail of the plane; Felix goes to meet Sanchez, saying "Welcome to the U.S., Colonel Crack". Then he returns to the helicopter with Bond to go to at his wedding.

Credits: where we see the wedding ceremony in the background. It ends as Felix and Della, followed by Bond, come down the steps of the church in a shower of rice.

After the end of the credits, we see the two newlyweds driving away. Bond looks for a taxi, sees Pamela and offers her the taxi. After a moment of hesitation she refuses and walks away. Bond shrugs with a small smile and gets into the taxi.

In the Coast Guard interrogation room, Killifer and Hawkins talk with Sanchez who offers two million to anyone who will free him.

Scenes from the wedding were filmed but cut during editing.

Back to the wedding reception where Della asks Bond to go see Felix and tell him to leave his office for a bit. Bond goes there, sees Pamela again, they go out to cut the cake, Killifer free Sanchez on the bridge... Everything happens as in the film, with the exception that Bond never receives any lighter as a gift from the married.

As Leiter and Della prepare to celebrate their honeymoon, they are greeted by Braun and Perez; Dario knocks out Leiter with a sawed-off shotgun.

We are now at "Milford Krest's Ocean Exotica Warehouse" where Sanchez assures the owner that his recent problems will not affect the drug supply. When Krest suggests getting rid of Killifer, Sanchez refuses: "Always reward loyalty. It's good [for] business", and hands over the suitcase of money to the traitor.

Dario arrives and Leiter is brought near the shark feeding hatch. For Sanchez, Felix is "nothing but a cockroach to be stepped on. But he can be useful as an example of what happens to those who stand in his way". Felix is tied up before being thrown into the sharks where he is mutilated. "Pull him up, I want enough left for his people to see".

The next morning Bond is at the airport but turns around when he reads "Colonel Crack escapes" on a newsstand. He goes to Leiter's house where he finds what remains of the latter as well as Della's corpse; he calls 911.

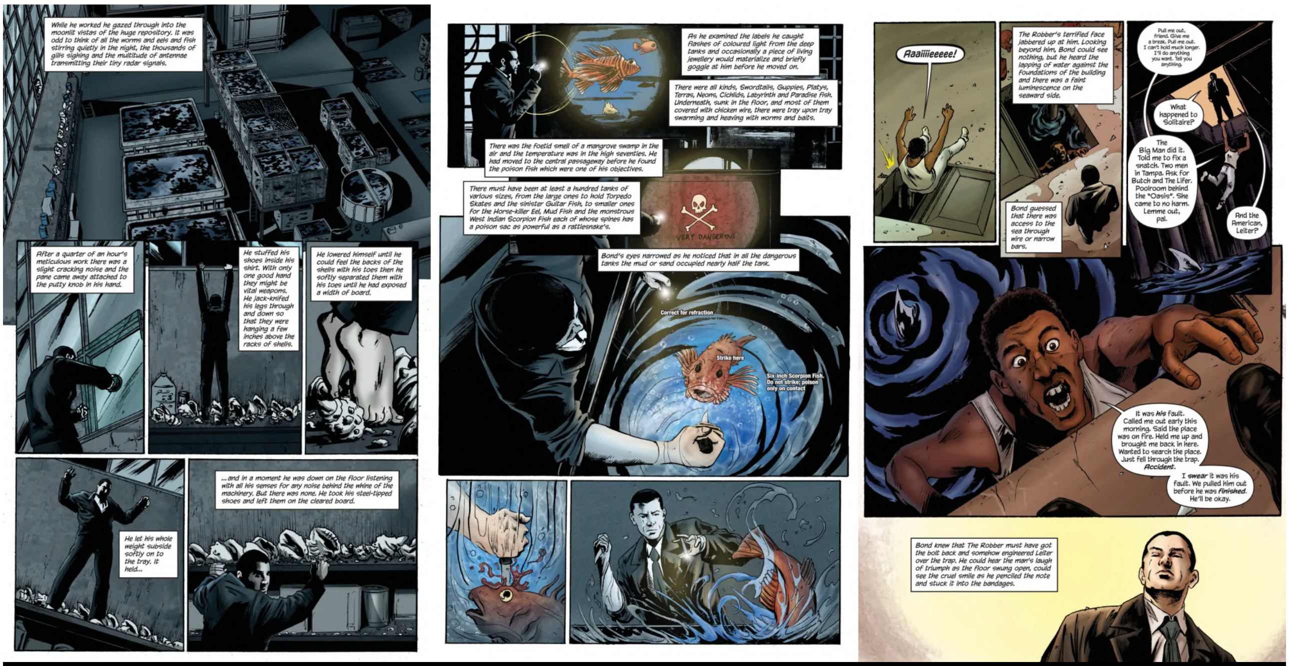
A little later, still at Leiter's house, a doctor informs Bond of his friend's state of health: he "lost the lower part of a leg. Might be able to save a badly damaged arm. Looks like he was mauled, bitten by a large animal". Noticing that his hair was soaked with salt water, 007 thought it was a shark. A man from the homicide squad, Rasmussen, lightly questions Bond and as soon as his back is turned, 007 takes the opportunity to retrieve a floppy disk that was on the ground to put it in his pocket.

Bond goes to the port officer and delivers a telex message to the operator beginning: "Urgent to Universal Exports, London". The operator tells him, "The rest is gobbledygook. What are you? Some kind of secret agent?", Bond replies that he has just terminating a contract and that he doesn't want his competitors to find out.

Outside Jericho is waiting for him, 007 asks if there have recently been shark attacks in the area. His friend tells him no but at Krest's warehouse they sell rare fish, including large sharks.

Bond and Jericho therefore infiltrate Milford Krest's place, where Killifer is still present. 007 approaches the building, walks on a grate and is sent into the air by a shark which was under it; he manages to catch himself on a stair rail.

There is a scene that contains some sort of reference to the novel Live and Let Die located before the passage of the maggot incubator, a scene in which Bond has the impression that there is enough sand at the bottom of the aquariums to hide something. He dips a crowbar into an aquarium to check and is attacked by a moray eel which bites the crowbar. The rest of the action plays out like the movie except Jericho never enters the building (Killifer's feet get caught in a rope instead).



While he worked he gazed through into the moonlit vistas of the huge repository. It was odd to think of all the worms and eels and fish stirring quietly in the night, the thousands of gills sighing and the multitude of antennae transmitting their tiny radar signals.
After a quarter of an hour's meticulous work there was a slight cracking noise and the pane came away attached to the putty knob in his hand.
He stuffed his shoes inside his shirt. With only one good hand they might be vital weapons. He jack-knifed his legs through and down so that they were hanging a few inches above the racks of shells.
He lowered himself until he could feel the backs of the shells with his toes then he softly separated them with his toes until he had exposed a width of board.
He let his whole weight subside softly on to the tray. It held...
...and in a moment he was down on the floor listening with all his senses for any noise behind the whine of the machinery. But there was none. He took his steel-tipped shoes and left them on the cleared board.
As he examined the labels he caught flashes of coloured light from the deep tanks and occasionally a piece of living jewellery would materialize and briefly goggle at him before he moved on.
There were all kinds, Swordtails, Guppies, Platys, Terras, Neons, Cichlids, Labyrinth and Paradise fish. Underneath, sunk in the floor, and most of them covered with chicken wire, there were tray upon tray swarming and heaving with worms and baits.
There was the foetid smell of a mangrove swamp in the air and the temperature was in the high seventies. He had moved to the central passageway before he found the poison fish which were one of his objectives.
There must have been at least a hundred tanks of various sizes, from the large ones to hold Torpedo Skates and the sinister Guitar Fish, to smaller ones for the Horse-killer Eel, Mud Fish and the monstrous West Indian Scorpion Fish each of whose spines has a poison sac as powerful as a rattlesnake's.
VERY DANGEROUS
Bond's eyes narrowed as he noticed that in all the dangerous tanks the mud or sand occupied nearly half the tank.
Correct for refraction
Strike here
Six inch Scorpion Fish. Do not strike; poison only on contact Aaaiiiieeeee!
The Robber's terrified face jabbered up at him. Looking beyond him, Bond could see nothing, but he heard the lapping of water against the foundations of the building and there was a faint luminescence on the seaward side.
Bond guessed that there was access to the sea through wire or narrow bars.
Pull me out, friend. Give me a break. Pull me out. I can't hold much longer. I'll do anything you want. Tell you anything.
What happened to Solitaire?
The Big Man did it. Told me to fix a snatch. Two men in Tampa. Ask for Butch and The Lifer. Poolroom behind the "Oasis". She came to no harm. Lemme out, pal.
And the American, Leiter?
It was his fault. Called me out early this morning. Said the place was on fire. Held me up and brought me back in here. Wanted to search the place. Just fell through the trap. Accident.
I swear it was his fault. We pulled him out before he was finished. He'll be okay.
Bond knew that The Robber must have got the bolt back and somehow engineered Leiter over the trap. He could hear the man's laugh of triumph as the floor swung open, could see the cruel smile as he penciled the note and stuck it into the bandages.

Excerpt from the comic book adaptation of Live and Let Die by Dynamite.

007 voluntarily sets off the fire alarm and joins Jericho who sees from the boat the money floating on the surface of the bloody water; Bond tells him: "Forget it, it's blood money".

The next morning James Bond is at the house that he rent on the beach, Jericho tells him on the phone he has located Krest's yacht with the help of other fishermen. Suddenly there is a knock at the door: it's M. "What's this about resigning, Double-O-Seven?". His agent explains to him that it's because of Leiter and M reprimands him. "I'll keep your telex in my pocket. Your license to kill is revoked. You will have no contact with Her Majesty's government. In three months if you're clean I'll tear up your resignation. Otherwise I'll sack you". Bond doesn't try to defend himself, he barely reeplies "Thank you, sir", before M gets up and quietly walks out the door, adding, "Take care, James".

A little later, Bond and Jericho observe the Wavekrest from a boat with binoculars. 007 sees the crew collecting marine specimens and Lupe in a bikini. Krest over a loudspeaker asks them to leave, saying he has divers in the water.

Meanwhile, at the hospital, Hawkins tells Leiter that firefighters responding to a false fire alarm found drugs (in the gravel under the fish tanks) and dead bodies in Krest's warehouse; Leiter has a little smile...

At night, Bond dives and infiltrates the Wavekrest like in the film (however he doesn't disguise himself as a manta ray. He is well picked up by the sonar but hides from the Sentinel, Krest deduces that the sonar echo was caused by a large fish). When 007 puts his knife to Lupe's throat and realizes that it's not Sanchez, the dialogue is quite poor:

- Bond: Don't be afraid. I won't hurt you.
- Lupe: Who are you?
- Bond: I was at Cray Cay. Is Sanchez here?
[She shakes her head in denial].
- Bond: Where's Krest?
- Lupe: In the next cabin. This is his. He gave it to me.
- Bond: you're not his girlfriend?
- Lupe: No. Sanchez['s]. I didn't know what I was getting into. The drugs, killing people. I wish I never met Sanchez.
- Bond: So walk out.
- Lupe: It doesn't work that way with Franz.

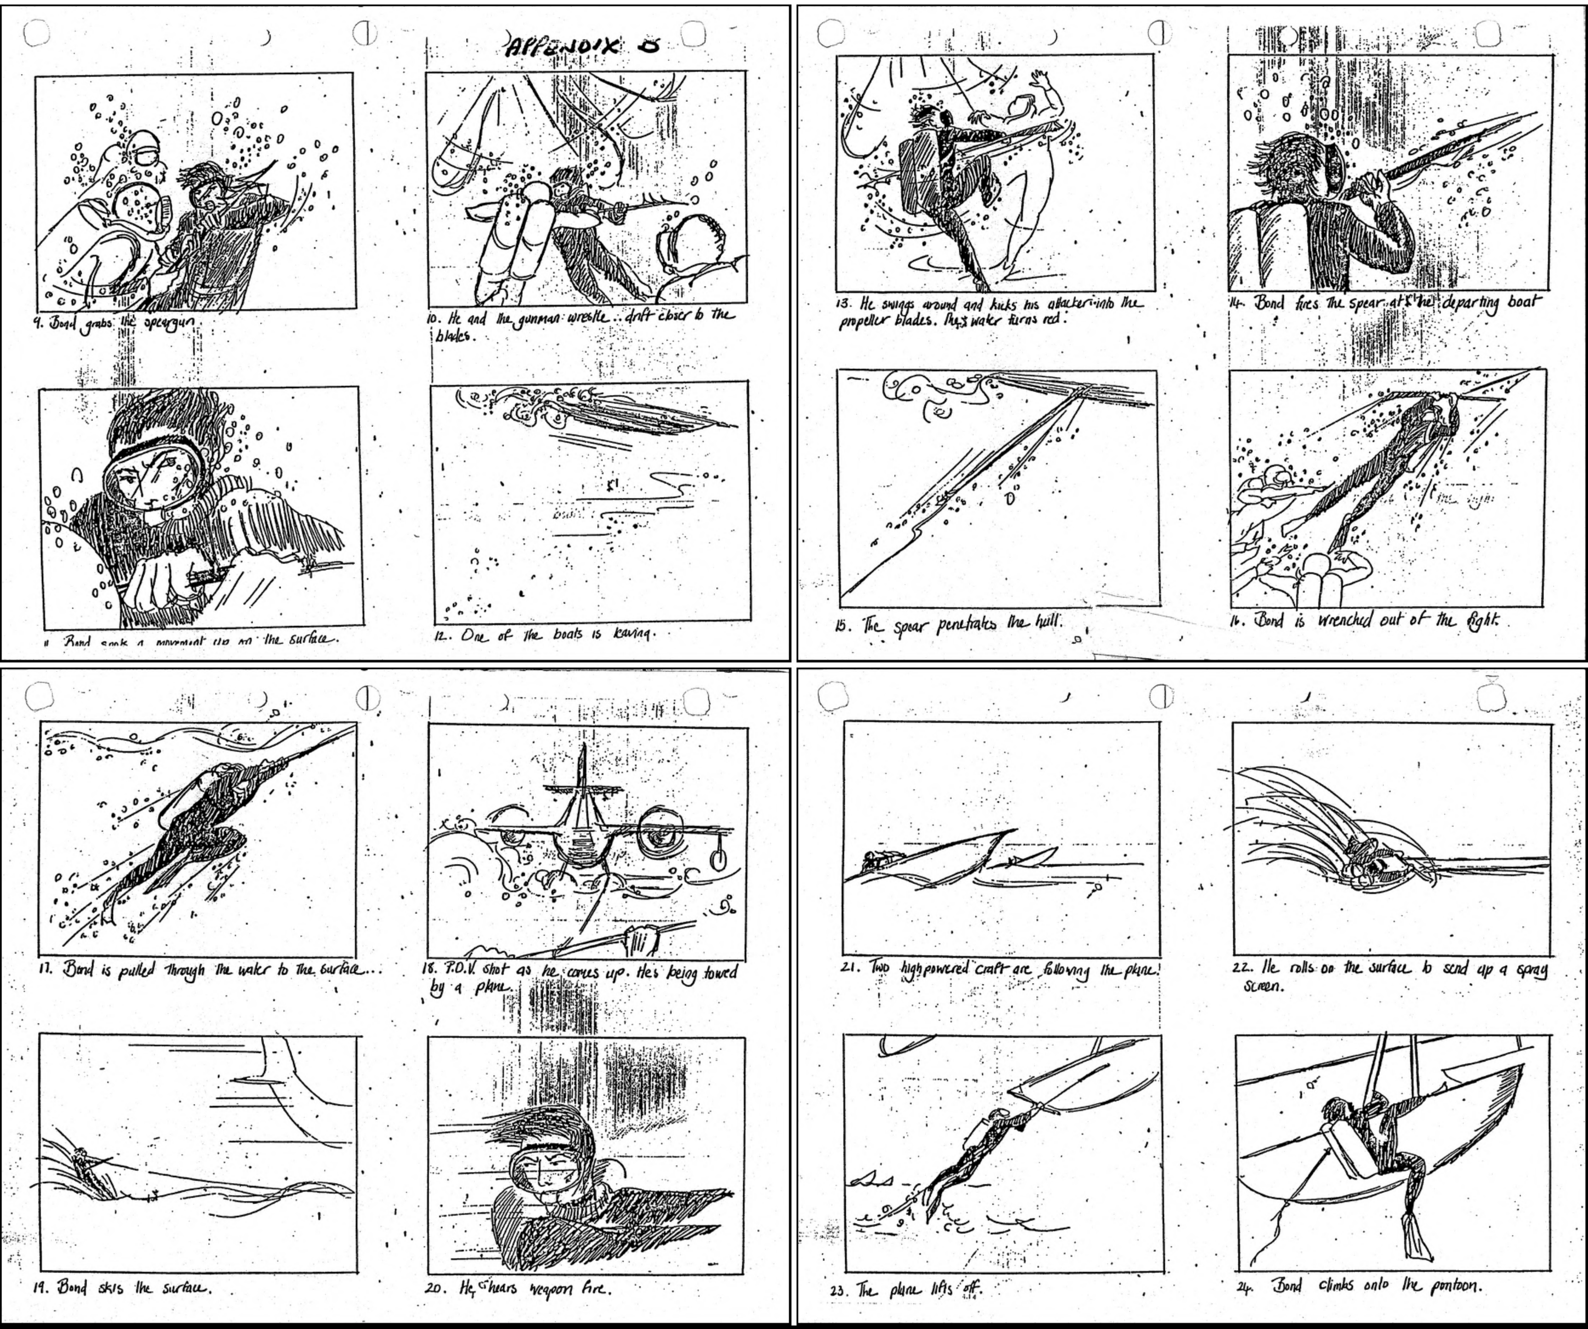
There is noise in the hallway. Bond leaves Lupe (there is no mention of lashes on her body) and fights a man in this hallway. A shot is fired, the entire crew is alerted and Bond is surrounded, he has no choice but to surrender.

Bond is disarmed, brought to Krest, and he plays the idiot when he is asks who he is and the reason for his presence. He replies that he was taking a midnight swim and that he got on the boat because he had a cramp. Bond gets beaten up and is brought to the bridge where the boat of Jericho, a character who has just been killed by Krest's men, docks. "Friend of yours?", Milford Krest asks.

A seaplane approaches and Krest orders his men to put Bond in the anchorage, he will take care of him later. Lupe deliberatly opens a door which was between Bond and a guard and 007 is thus able to get rid of his escort with karate chops. He whispers a "thanks" to Lupe and throws one of the divers who were on Jericho's boat overboard.

Having fallen into the water with the diver, Bond strips him of his equipment. The Sentinel is launched towards the plane and Krest is informed of Bond's escape, who is now clinging to a rope connected to the Sentinel. Krest sends boats and divers after him and then everything happens as in the film: Bond opens the bags of cocaine with his knife, underwater combat, water skiing with the harpoon gun, hijacking of the plane (the pilot shoots however with an Uzi instead of a revolver; this lead to a short dangerous scene where the Uzi shots break the windshield and the plane dives, Bond briefly passes through the broken windshield and narrowly end up in the propeller of the plane).



APPENDIX D
9. Bond grabs the speargun
10. He and the gunman wrestle.. drift closer to the blades.
11. Bond sees a movement up on the surface.
12. One of the boats is leaving.
13. He swings around and kicks his attacker into the propeller blades. The water turns red.
14. Bond fires the spear at the departing boat
15. The spear penetrates the hull.
16. Bond is wrenched out of the fight.
17. Bond is pulled through the water to the surface...
18. P.O.V. shot as he comes up. He's being towed by a plane.
19. Bond skis the surface.
20. He hears weapon fire.
21. Two high powered craft are following the plane!
22. He rolls on the surface to send up a spray screen.
23. The plane lifts off.
24. Bond climbs onto the pontoon.

Storyboards included with this treatment.

We find Bond directly at the house on the beach (there is no longer the scene with the tramp) where he slips the floppy disk found at Leiter's place into a computer. Thanks to this he learns that his old friend wanted to place under protection a person named Bouvier, who can be contacted at 200-3036 by leaving a message containing the word "Lexington". Bond does this and focuses his attention on the television where Sanchez is on CNN from Isthmus. Bond turns off the TV and returns to the computer where he receives a message telling him that Bouvier will meet him at the Barrelhead at 20h00.

After buying a cigarette boat with the money contained in the seaplane, Bond goes to the "disruptable cafe" that is the Barrelhead. There he meets Pamela Bouvier and orders a vodka-martini, shaken not stirred, but the waiter tells him: "No fancy drinks, you take it the way it comes". So 007 takes a vodka on the rocks and chat with her. She knows that Leiter is in a bad shape, but Dario arrives. Compared to the film there is not the whole passage where Bond hits Dario's sidekick in front of the waitress; then there is the fight (less fanciful than in the film), the hole in the wall and the escape by boat.

Pam happened to have a bulletproof vest, "What the girl who has everything needs", Bond quips. "Mother said never to be without it. Where are you going?". Bond tells her that he is going to the airport to chase Sanchez. "You're nuts. He's surrounded by bodyguards, protected by the army", "Leiter got to him", "And look where he is". Pam changes clothes and the boat runs out of gas.

They wonder what they are going to do until they arrive at the coast, Bond suggests a little nap, she replies that she had misjudged him: "I thought you were just a chauvinistic English wimp about to get his ass kicked". And what does she think of him now? "You didn't get your ass kicked. I'm keeping an open mind about the rest" and she approaches him. "Careful, I have a bruised back, remember?" and she leans back to reverse their position, telling him that she obviously has things to teach him. Finally the camera moves towards the starry night...

At dawn, the engines restart (she found the emergency tank), which wakes Bond. Pam pilots the boat to shore, "driving Cigarette boats is my profession. It's the vessel of choice for short haul smuggling". She tells him flying is better for long distances and that she used to transport things that way for the CIA (that's how she met Felix) before doing the same for Dario/Sanchez (before being indicted because she was transporting supposed Mexican illegal immigrants who turned out to be Colombian hitmen).

Pam tells him that she is taking him to the airport to take him to Sanchez, Bond wonders why she changed her mind and seeing that she does not respond, he tells her that she must have slept on it...

London: M is unhappy with Miss Moneypenny who made five typos on the first page of a memo. She tells him that Bond has gone to Isthmus City. "Who ordered a priority one surveillance on Double-O-Seven? [...] Whatever he's doing has nothing to do with this office. I've told you that before". When M leaves, Moneypenny calls Q and asks if he is free for lunch.

Aerial shot of a Beechcraft King Air; Bond and Pamela land at Isthmus airport where they see Asians getting off a jet: "Pigeons Sanchez is bringing to his casino" she tells him. Bond and Pam go to a luxurious hotel room, the person carrying the suitcases asks Bond what's so heavy in it and he jocularly replies: "Money, don't believe in banks".

After inspecting the room, Bond sits on the bed to test the mattress and Pam comments: "Don't get any ideas, last night was pure lust. Knocking off Sanchez will be tough enough without mixing up sex in it". She asks him what his plan is and he shows her the banknotes and says, "He's going to find us".

He hands her a wad of money and tells her to buy some clothes, she will be his secretary. Pam replies "Ok" but Bond tells her "Start acting the part, say: Yes, Mr. Bond". She gives him a dirty look and walks out saying "I should always trust my first impressions".

Accompanied by Pamela, now described as a "stunning blonde", Bond goes to the bank to open an account like in the film (except Sanchez is not there showing the Asians around the bank).

At nightfall, they go to the casino in a Rolls. Bond plays blackjack while Sanchez and Shekli watch a show on television, a telethon for the Oaxaca Bible Institute presented by a couple, Joe and Deedie Butcher "who reminds us of you know who".

The Butcher's show is obviously a sort of teleshopping for drug dealers, and the treatment still requires a shot in a Chicago building where a certain Big Benjy is unhappy: "One, two! Twelve bucks a gram! Sanchez is boosting his price again!". Colonel Crack receives a phone call saying that an Englishman wants to play without limits at the casino, Sanchez accepts.

As Bond's stacks of chips continue to grow, Sanchez calls Lupe to ask her to meet him; Shekli also tells Sanchez that he heard about the Englishman from the bank manager. Under the eyes of Kwang and Loti, now present in the film's plot, Bond tells the dealer that he wants to take a break and asks Pam to keep his seat warm (she will take the opportunity to play, but not knowing anything about blackjack, she will reduce his stack of chips).

He heads towards the bar (he had just seen Lupe arrive) and she joins him. Lupe tells him that Sanchez sent her to find out about him and Bond asks her to take him to his companion.

Bond is therefore taken to Sanchez where he is relieved of his weapon and his passport. The drug lord asks him why he carries around a PPK and 007 replies that it's because he keeps large sums of money on him... "Your credit rating is impressive. What business are you in?", "Your business, Señor Sanchez. I distribute pharmaceuticals in London.. [...] I have a proposition that could be mutually profitable". Sanchez finds his direct approach refreshing but doesn't want to talk business in front of women; he asks Lupe to leave and ask Bond his proposal.

"I want the East Coast business. [...] I'm interested in Milford Krest's operation". Why would Sanchez trust him and do without Krest? Because "Krest is finished. The DEA turned over his warehouse in Key West. They took everything. Krest's so desperate he's ripped someone off". How does Bond know this? (and implicitly, wouldn't it be me he ripped off?). "He's put 500 keys on the London market at bargain prices". Sanchez says he has to study the case, it will take a few days.

Before leaving, Bond tells Sanchez to be careful because it is dangerous to corner a desperate man. The baron tells him not to worry, he has known Krest for years and they are like brothers, 007 replies "ask your favorite evangelists to tell you about Cain and Abel" while pointing to the television.

John Glen and June Randall (the continuity supervisor of the script) with the actors during the filming of this deleted scene findable in the DVD bonuses.

After this, Bond joins Pam at the casino. In a similar way to a deleted scene from the film, she asks him what he was doing with that "hot tamale" (Lupe)? 007 replies that she took him to Sanchez, that he thus learned the windows are armored and that he gave his enemy something to think about.

They return to their hotel where the receptionist tells them that Bond's uncle has arrived. They therefore meet Q (in the treatment, 007 is suspicious but doesn't attack him when he enters the room; there is also no passage with the weapon that Pam keeps against her leg). Q explains that he is there thanks to Moneypenny, without M knowing, and that he is also a friend of Leiter. Of course he gives Bond gadgets: the tube of explosive toothpaste and the signature gun (there's no gag with a laser camera).

The next night Q drops Bond off at the casino. 007 rides in an elevator with a waiter's cart and goes to the roof where he unties a rope. Below Sanchez, accompanied by Shekli and Colonel Rios (there is no more Duval in this treatment, Rios inherits his role), is in a meeting with the Asians.

The dialogue is similar to the film, however there is an interesting line where Sanchez explains that Rios is the commander of the president's personal guard (president whose name is never mentioned in the treatment) as well as the person in charge of the safety of their operation. Bond rappels down the facade to the meeting room windows and places the plastic contained in the tube of toothpaste. A detail to note is that Bond raises Rios' suspicion by bumping into the window (instead of the pigeons trick).

007 leaves the casino and crosses the street to stand in the building opposite with his sniper rifle. He climbs the fire escape and positions himself while Kwang tells Sanchez he wants to see more of his operations before committing. Sanchez accepts, finally the meeting ends and the baron finds himself alone in the conference room (as in previous treatments, there isn't a whole Stingers sub-plot contrary to the film). Bond blows out the window and is about to shoot Sanchez when he is interrupted by a ninja. 007 defends himself but other ninjas arrive and manage to capture him.

Bond is taken to a bungalow outside of town where he is tied to a chair. Kwang and Loti try to determine who he is and are helped by a man named Fallon, an "Englishman from Hong Kong". He deduces that Bond is from "MI5" and Kwang explains they are narcotics from Hong Kong and that they have been trying to bring down Sanchez and his empire for years. Unfortunately for them, Sanchez and Rios attack the bungalow with soldiers. Kwang and Loti are simply shot dead without interrogation (although there is no cyanide capsule in the treatment).

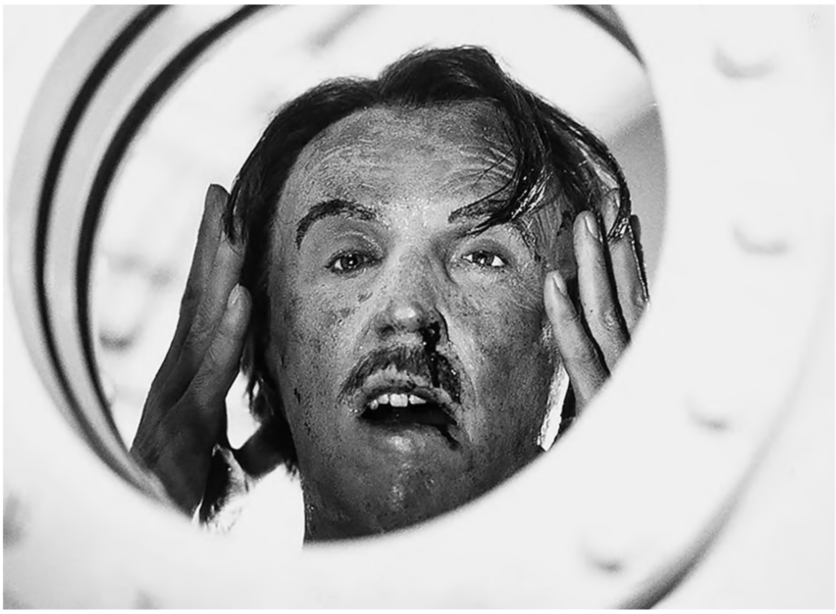
When he regains consciousness in the morning, Bond is in a room on the top floor of the casino. Lupe sits next to him and tells him that Krest is coming that evening. Sanchez enters, accompanied by a doctor named Mendez (who is dressed in a camel hair coat, a broad brimmed fedora, and a pair of dark sunglasses). He examines Bond. Sanchez expresses his gratitude to Bond and tells him that they are now "hermanos" (brothers) and that the territory of the east coast could soon be his. He lets Bond rest but tells the doctor in the hallway to give him a sedative to put him out for six hours and ask Dario to stay in the penthouse to keep an eye on his guest.

Doctor Mendez returns to 007's room to give him an injection, but Bond turns the needle on Mendez. In the hallway, Dario hears the doctor fall and enters the room with gun in hand, approaches the bed and sees Mendez sleeping. Bond smashes a lamp over Dario's head. This has little effect, except to anger him, and a furious hand-to-hand fight ensues. Meanwhile Lupe tries to prepare another syringe but Dario stops her from injecting him; eventually Bond will succeed in planting it in Dario's butt. Bond wonders what was in the syringe and reads "equine tranquilizer" on the bottle. They hide the unconscious Dario in a closet. Bond tells Lupe this is her last chance to get away from Sanchez and Krest; she accept to go with him.

Pam and Q are still in their hotel room and worry about 007 who has disappeared. The phone rings, it's Bond: he's at the casino and wearing Doctor Mendez's clothes. He tells in particular to Pam to go to the airport to find out where Sanchez is going to take the Asians and to come meet him at the port officer's office in the evening.

Bond goes to the bank to collect all "his" money and Pam asks for the flight plan of Sanchez's plane on which she reads: "Oaxaca, Mexico".

At nightfall, the Wavekrest preparing to dock. Bond and Q are on a pilot boat and the events happen as in the film: Pam pilots and crashes the Wavekrest, Bond swims with the banknotes and places them the decompression chamber, Sanchez climbs on board. Eventually Krest is locked in the decompression chamber and Sanchez blows his head off.



Shekli joins Sanchez and explains to him that Bond put Dario out of service, left with Lupe and withdrew the money from the bank. The drug lord takes one last look at the decompression chamber and orders his men to go to the airport to catch Bond.

It is now dawn, the black van stops in front of an airport barrier. Inside, Q puts the finishing touches on Lupe's passport made with a kit to create fake documents. Bond hands the passport to a guard but sirens are heard in the distance, the guard picks up a phone and draws his gun.

Bond drives off and breaks down the barrier, Sanchez in a limousine and Rios in a police car arrive at the guard. The villains head towards the plane Bond and Pam arrived on; this one is taking off. Dario begins to machine-gun the plane with an Uzi and it crashes. The limousine stops, Sanchez takes the Uzi from Dario's hands and heads towards the remains of the plane while shooting: he discover that the plane is empty.

In the airport, a Gulf Stream II begins taxiing down the runway, Pam is at the controls and Bond emerges from behind a parked plane and boards Pam's plane. Sanchez raises the Uzi to shoot the plane but the weapon is empty. He orders his men to shoot but they hesitate. As the plane passes overhead, we can read on the fuselage: "ISTHMUS CASINO" and hear Dario say "But it's your plane, patron!". Sanchez is almost convulsed with rage and frustration.

Bond and Pamela are in the cockpit. Q is seated behind them, until then he "never knew it was so much fun in the field". Bond tells Pam that he wants to finish off Sanchez; she will try to bring him to Mexico.

To rest a little, Bond goes to the rear of the plane where there is a luxurious cabin dominated by a large double bed. He hears water running, opens a door and finds Lupe in the shower. She smiles, asks 007 for a towel, who gives it to her; she opens the shower door and takes it (while he was planning to pass it to her over the door). In the cockpit, Pam presses a "listen" button and hears:

> - Lupe: James, what will we do? Franz will follow us. Kill us.
> - Bond: Not if I get him first.
> - Lupe: But he is powerful, more even than the United States. I am frightened. Please hold me for a little while.

Bond puts his arms around her and Pam looks at Q: he has fallen asleep. While they are in bed, Pam is still listening and shaking the controls; a few bumps are felt in the plane but not enough to distract Lupe whose ardor becomes more vocal... Pam switches the intercom to the "Talk" position and says: "Please fasten your seat belts. We're about to go through some turbulence" before doing a barrel roll with the plane! Lupe is thrown off the bed and lands on the floor, Bond is amused but not Lupe who shouts "Bitch!".

At the casino, Sanchez and Shekli wonder about Bond. Who is he? What does he want? "To destroy me". What was he doing with Kwang? In doubt, let's tell our people in Oaxaca to be on their guard and look for him.

Bond just happens to be in a taxi in Oaxaca. The treatment plans to recreate the local atmosphere: "the streets are crowded with tourists shopping or sightseeing. Music is audible from cafes and a strolling mariachi band in colorful native costume". We won't really find this kind of thing in the film.

Bond tells Lupe that Q is going to bring her to Leiter on the next flight to Miami, she is reluctant to leave 007. As they stop at the hotel, a bus from Oaxaca Bible Institute is parked nearby. On the clothes of the young Americans coming out, Bond notices the portrait of Deedie and Joe Butcher and the slogan "Salvation is as near as your T.V.". He makes the connection with the show he saw at Sanchez's casino and tells Q to inform Leiter that this institute could be a cover for Sanchez.

Bond and Pam, dressed "appropriately", board the bus to go to the institute. They arrive there, the place is simply described as: "a large stucco building with a red tile roof surmounted by a tower. Landscaped around it are palm trees, cacti and other desert shrubbery".

As they walk towards the entrance, a DC3 lands on a runway behind the building. Sanchez gets out, accompanied by Colonel Rios and a dozen men. Dario is surprised to see Sanchez in person: "I had to come, the Chinese are having second thoughts. They've heard rumors about Krest. That Kwang business upsets them. Then Bond taking Lupe and my plane. I have to show my face to prove everything's alright".

In the lobby, an old lady tells Bond and Pam that they are not on the list for the conference. 007 opens a suitcase full of money and suddenly they are welcome, even if the old woman takes a walkie-talkie to warn Shekli of their presence.

Bond and Pam participate to the guided tour where they are shown a chain, somewhat like an assembly line, that processes all the letters sent to the institute; the guide ensures that Deedie and Joe read absolutely all of them. Meanwhile Shekli is also making a private visit to the Asians further away, from his point of view we see that the letters actually end up in a shredder (after the notes and checks contained inside have been extracted).

Sanchez gets out of an armored van and greets the Asians, telling them that the biggest problem in this business is to know what to do with the cash. After all, a surplus of 10 million dollars per day is not nothing: it represents half a ton of money!

After seeing currency-counting machine and a sort of warehouse/vault where money is stacked by a forklift (!). An Asian man is a little worried about the safety measures regarding the employees. Sanchez reassures him: "We have an honor code. The employees work in groups of three. They are honor bound to report any infractions. If anyone breaches the honor code, he and every member of his group are immediately executed".

At one point Bond sees that Dario is there and that he is entering into an unauthorized area. He asks Pam for her gun which is under her skirt, attached to her leg, and leaves to follow Dario after she asks him to "don't commit suicide". Just like the Asians, Dario heads towards the lab where cocaine is manufactured. 007 enters a locker room, overpowers a technician with karate chop, takes his clothes and his badge which identifies him as a certain Jose Pico.

Meanwhile, a guard observe Pam and warns his colleagues that Bond is no longer with her. Sanchez asks Dario to find Bond and explains to the Asians that drugs can easily mix with gasoline and offers them a little demonstration. A chemist begins to carry it out but asks Bond, who had joined them, to bring him some ammonium hydroxide (ammonia). Bond hesitates, the chemist gets impatient, Bond take the wrong vial and Sanchez becomes suspicious. Finally Bond brings the correct flask and the chemist continues his demonstration.

Sanchez explains that they then put the cocaine-gasoline mixture on planes that go to every major city in the United States. However, to deliver to Hong Hong, they will use a tanker-boat. In the afternoon a group of tanker trucks will leave the Institute to fill the boat which is currently located at Acapulco port. After some further explanations, the Asians enthusiastically accept the deal and Sanchez escorts them to a helicopter that will take them to Acapulco so they can observe the loading. At the door Sanchez whispers to Rios to hold Jose Pico until he returns.

In the auditorium, Pam listens to Deedie and Joe Butcher and sees Dario enter. She gets up from her seat, goes backstage and disguises herself as a choir member before going on stage.

Rios and two men head towards Bond who, feeling he has been spotted, sneaks away. However, Rios draws his gun and unmasks Bond, who then grabs an Erlenmeyer flask and throws it in Rios' face. The other men, however, manage to overpower Bond; Sanchez returns to the lab accompanied by Braun and Perez:

- Sanchez: What is this vendetta, Señor Bond?
- Bond: Felix Leiter.
- Sanchez: The American drug agent? What is he? Nothing!
- Bond: My friend. A man you couldn't buy.
- Sanchez: Too bad for him. So where is he now? Selling pencils in the street?
- Bond: No, Sanchez. He's after your head. You can't stop men like him.

- Sanchez: Bravo! Big talk. For a dead man.

Sanchez asks Shekli for the "red key". With the key, Sanchez opens a panel behind which there is a detonator which he sets for ten minutes. Shekli obviously asks him "Why?" and Sanchez replies that if Bond knows about the Institute, he must have told others. "When the police come, what will they find? Ashes".

Braun and Perez tie Bond's hands. Then Sanchez said, "Dario owes you some pain. I promised he could have you" before leaving 007 alone with Dario and other men. Further on, Shekli asks Sanchez if they shouldn't tell Dario that there are only seven minutes left before the explosion... Sanchez replies "No! He has made too many mistakes lately".

While Leiter and Hawkins watch the Butcher's show from the hospital, Dario places Bond on the conveyor belt that leads to the letter shredder. Bond still escapes by putting his feet in a steel bucket that breaks the blades. Perez runs towards Bond but 007 manages to overpower him. He now fights against Dario, still with his feet in the bucket... While Bond is in bad position, Pam appears in "her" choir clothes lit by light which gives her an "etherial appearance". As in the film, Dario tells her "you're dead" and she replies that he "took the words right out of my mouth" before shooting him; Dario ends up to fall in the shredder.

Braun and Perez run off and Bond takes Pam through the mail processing room. Guards chase them through the auditorium where the television show that Leiter is watching is taking place. There's only a minute left before everything explodes. Bond comes on stage and says he "work at the in Acapulco". Leiter then told Hawkins to contact the commander Rojas from the Mexican police to tell him that there is something going on at the city's port.

Finally the Institute is shaken by a big explosion, the public goes outside where it rains banknotes that everyone tries to collect. Outside Bond sees a convoy of five tankers accompanied by cars and a utility truck (semi-trailer); he tells Pam to return to the institute to notify the police. She does so and Bond heads towards the trucks which haven't yet started.

This is the beginning of a long action sequence that John Glen had already attempted to develop earlier for the pre-title of A View to a Kill.

- Michael Wilson[43] : The truck chase in this film is something John Glen has wanted to do for years.

- John Glen[44] : It's a scene I'm very proud of, because I'd been developing it so long. Like eight years. [...] Originally, I had devised it as a pre-title sequence.

Bond prepares to knock out one of the drivers of a stationary trucks but is interrupted by Sanchez's limousine approaching. He hides under the tank then enters through the rear door of the utility truck where he hides in a toilet inside because armed men also get into this trailer. The toilet is separated from the driver's cabin by a louvered window and Bond uses his belt buckle to unscrew the louver.

As the convoy drives off, Pam sees three armed men in the institute and looks for a place to hide. Finally she sees an agricultural plane on the runway.

In the utility vehicle, a man goes to the toilets and is surprised to find them locked; he breaks down the door but it is already too late: he sees 007's feet disappearing through the window. Bond is now between the cabin and the truck's trailer where there is an "emergency box", including flares. From the toilet, the man begins shooting at Bond through the window and warns Sanchez via walkie-talkie.

As the limo turns around, 007 throws flares in the window and grabs the man's rifle. With the weapon, he goes towards the cab of the truck, gets inside and asks the driver to jump out.

As Bond gets behind the wheel of the semi-trailer truck, the limo approaches the cab and Sanchez and his men begin shooting (the truck driver lands on the hood of the limo before ending up on the ground). The two vehicles collide in each other, Sanchez ends up moving away and contact Rios by radio to tell him to set up a roadblock a little further away...

Bond accelerates, overtakes a tanker on winding roads; they crash into each other and the trucks go into a spin. The trailer of 007's truck goes off the road and is now over a precipice. Bond comes out of the cabin and the entire semi-trailer (with Rios' men inside) is about to fall into the void. He climbs on the bumper to prevent the semi-trailer from falling and asks for help from the tanker's driver (who had also gotten out of his vehicle). The tanker's driver then comes to join him on the bumper. Bond climbs down, leaving the driver alone to counterbalance, and leaves with the latter's tanker truck.

At an intersection, Rios lined up several cars to create a roadblock. As Pam takes off with the agricultural plane, Sanchez asks his men to find the fifth tanker truck that has gone missing.

A car sent to find the tanker end up in the ditch while trying to avoid the tanker driven by Bond coming in the opposite direction. Pam sees the roadblock and starts flying in a circle to warn 007.

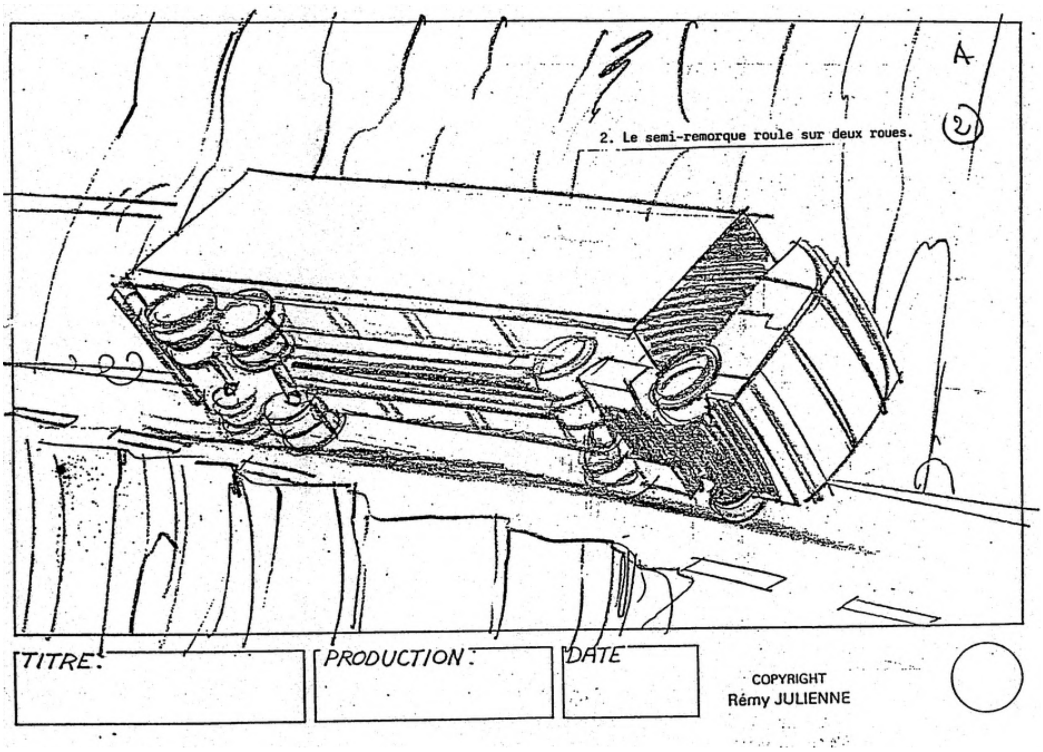
Bond arrives at the roadblock with the tanker, accelerates and steers; the truck slides sideways and thus clears half of the vehicles from the roadblock (see drawing A1 below, although this one is made with a semi-trailer and not a tanker truck, also the treatment doesn't contain the demi-tour [U-turn] mentioned on the drawing).

1. Eliminer successivement 5 voitures et 5 autres voitures alignées en barrage. (photos)

BOND arrive en face de la ligne constituée de 10 voitures, place sa remorque en dérapage et en heurte 5 qui sont éliminées.

Il effectue un demi tour acrobatique et revient pour éliminer les 5 restantes.

Under a hail of bullets, Bond accelerates and continues on his way; Rios tells Sanchez that he will personally stop Bond. Rios' men place explosives on a road that runs along a cliff and detonate them. Half the road collapses and Bond, who is arriving quickly, uses a sloping part of a rock formation on the side of the road to tilt the tanker which is thus on two wheels, and passes like that the precipice (see drawing A2).



A
2
2. Le semi-remorque roule sur deux roues.
TITRE :
PRODUCTION : DATE
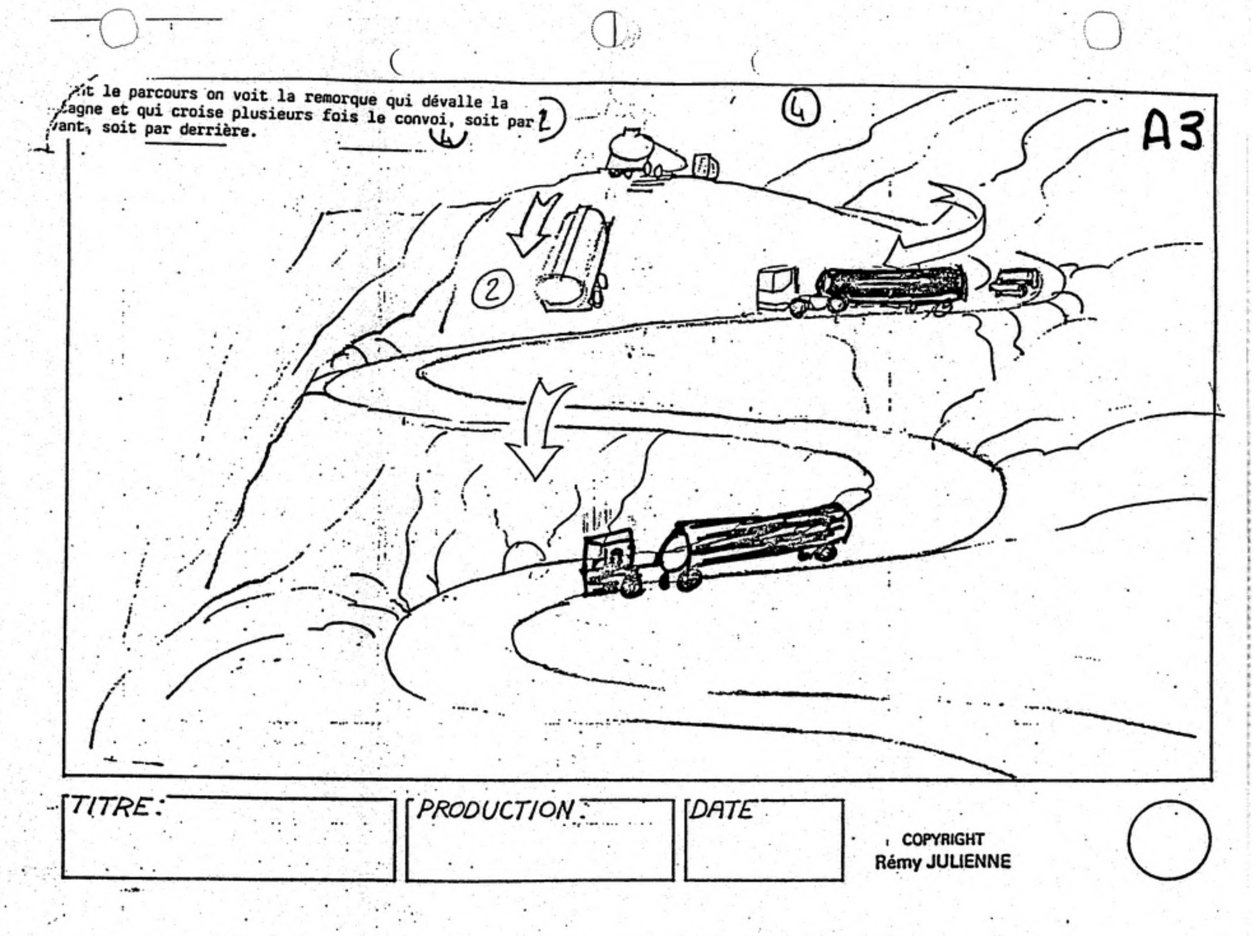
COPYRIGHT
Rémy JULIENNE

Bullets still crackle on Bond's truck and hit the tires of the tanker. Bond loses control of the vehicle. As in the film he stops, uncouple the tank which then goes down the slope to crash into another tanker truck bellow while Pam forces Rios' men to stay on the ground with her plane (see drawing A3).



t le parcours on voit la remorque qui dévalle la agne et qui croise plusieurs fois le convoi, soit par ant, soit par derrière.
2
4
4
A3
2
TITRE :
PRODUCTION : DATE
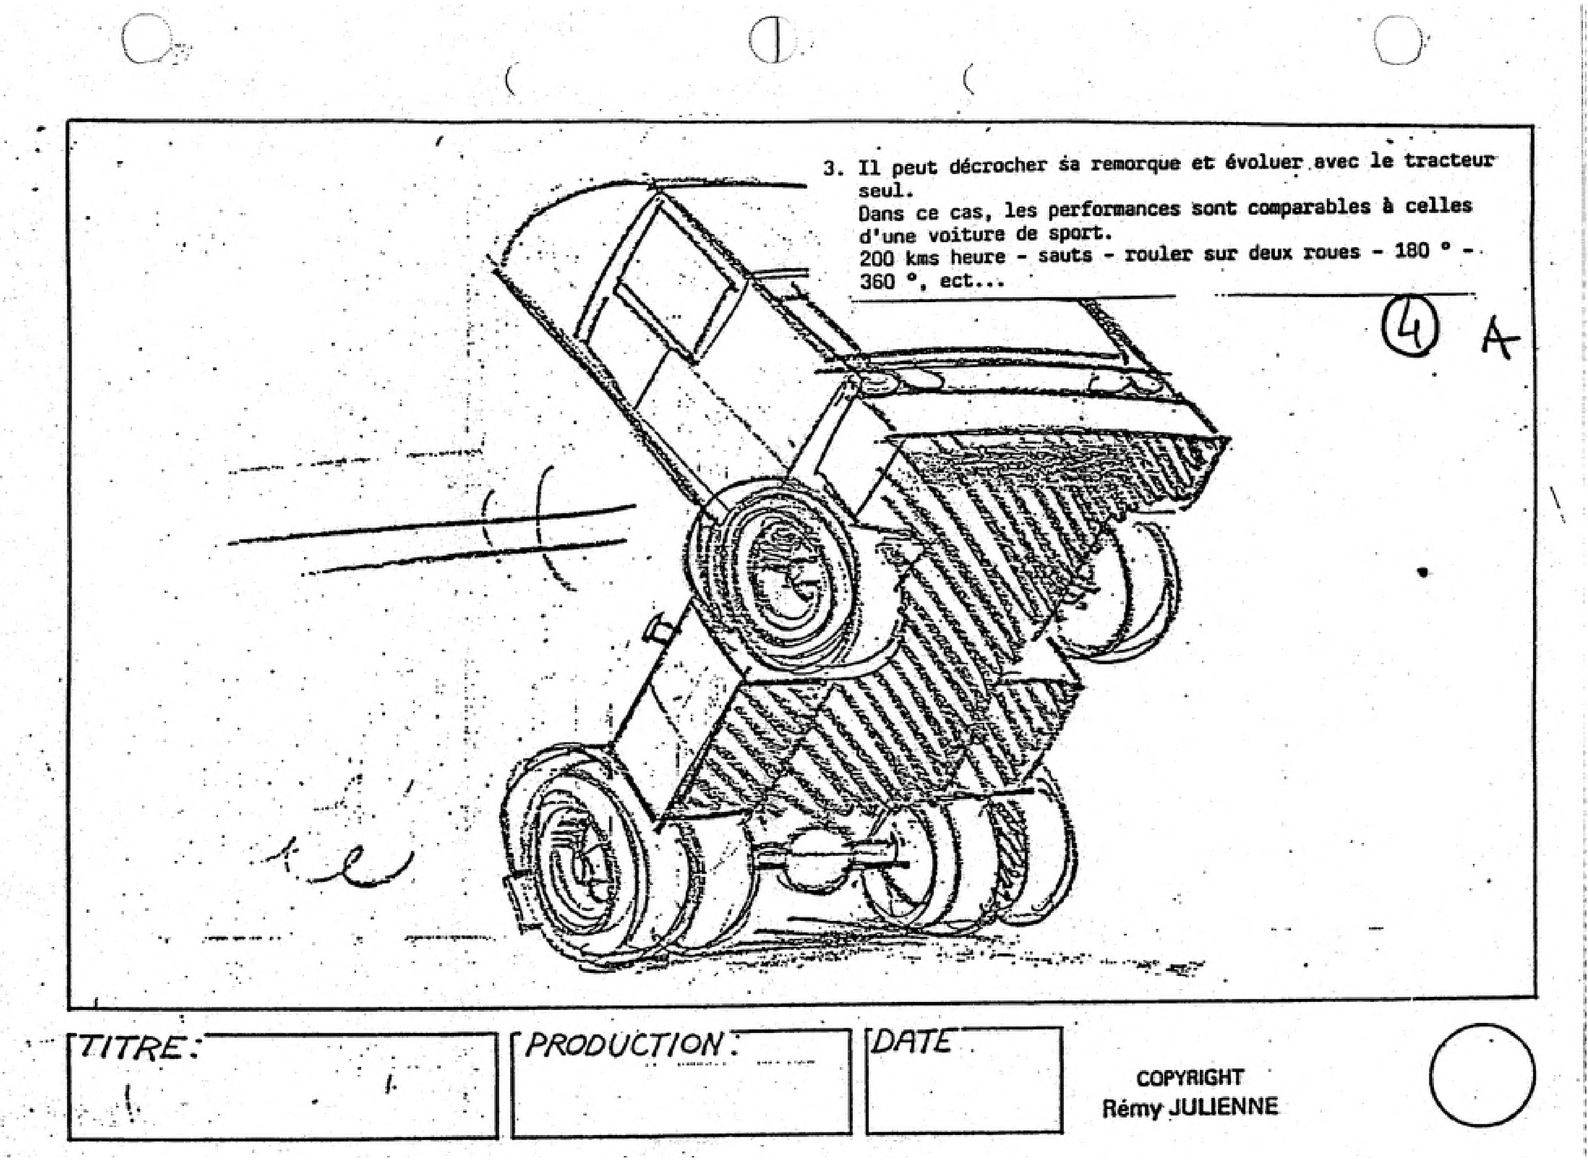
COPYRIGHT
Rémy JULIENNE

Shekli and Sanchez are furious: that's two tankers less and less. Bond gets back into the cab of his truck and Pam dumps insecticide on the other tankers. A driver, blinded, almost smashes the limousine and crashes into the side of the hill where his truck explodes.

Sanchez and his accountant get out of the limousine and Shekli says the words that will be fatal to him: "Boss, we're through, Bond beaten you!". "Traitor!", Sanchez responds before killing him and getting into the cabin of one of the two remaining tankers. (Note that the treatment doesn't precise Rios's fate).

Bond approaches, Rios' men begin to open fire on his vehicle. He then does a wheelie with his truck so that the bullets ends up under the truck and not on the windshield (see drawing A4 below).



3. Il peut décrocher sa remorque et évoluer avec le tracteur seul.
Dans ce cas, les performances sont comparables à celles d'une voiture de sport.
200 kms heure - sauts - rouler sur deux roues - 180 ° - 360 °, ect...

As in the film, 007 catches up with another truck, gets behind it, gets out of his cab and climbs onto the tank of the truck in front of him before turning the gasoline-cocaine valve. The mixture spills onto the road, causing the vehicles behind that contained other Rios men to slide and crash.

Bond signals to Pam who then approaches the tanker with the plane. He clings to the aircraft and drops onto the other tanker truck further ahead in which Sanchez is. He opens the valve, Sanchez orders the driver to stop and he gets out to kill Bond with a machete. The brake cable is cut by the machete and the truck goes down the road, Sanchez and Bond continue to fight.

At the port of Acapulco there are several limousines and police cars. The Asians are handcuffed and the commander Rojas watches as the tanker on which Bond fights Sanchez approaches the port. The tanker hits several cars and rolls onto its side...

Bond is stunned, Sanchez approaches him with the machete, ready to decapitate him. 007 suddenly does a sort of roll, takes out one of the flares he had taken from the "emergency box" and ignites Sanchez, whose clothes are soaked in gasoline. The tanker explodes. Pam lands her plane on the road and runs to Bond, she pulls him away from the flames. The tears in her eyes tell us how much she cares for him; Bond looks at her and smiles.

Later there is a fiesta in Acapulco. Pam is upset that Bond is spending time with Lupe. Finally she sees Lupe pushing Felix who is in a wheelchair; "It seems Lupe has found her true vocation taking care of Leiter", states the treatment.

Q explains to Bond that M wants to see him for reassignment, but Pam says, "You need R and R [Relaxation and Rest] first. Why don't you buy a yacht for a three month sail on the Caribbean with me". Bond asks her with what money and she opens her jacket which reveals several wads of cash: "You didn't think I was going to let you put all that cash in the decompression chamber, did you? I'm a practical woman".

Bond tells her that he's not going to be of much use to her with one arm (one of his arm is in a sling), but she replies: "For what I have in mind, you won't need your hands"...

On strike

THE WRITERS GUILD STRIKES
GUILD OF AMERICA

In 1988 the Writers Guild of America goes on strike. Its demands against the major American film/television studios included fairer remuneration of their "residual" rights (continuous payments to creators for each rerun or sale of their works on home video media such as VHS). On the other hand, the screenwriters wanted to be more involved in the choice of actors and directors in order to preserve their visions of the script they write.

When the Guild decides to be on strike, its members/ writers basically have the obligation to be on strike. The Guild prohibit its member to perform any writing services during the time of a strike. Screenwriters of the Guild, even if they don't wan't to be on strike themselves, have to stop working anyway if they not want to risk to be sanctioned and sacked by the Guild in the future.

The strike would last from March 7 to August 7, 1988, affecting the production of various films and television shows, with thousands of screenwriters on strike.

One of the writers on strike was Richard Maibaum. Maibaum was a member of the Writers Guild of America and had his own convictions too.

We will remember in particular that during the previous major strike of the Guild, in 1960, Maibaum chose to leave MGM-TV where he was executive producer in support of the strikers. He stated in his resignation letter: "I find it increasingly difficult, under present industry conditions, to fulfill wholeheartedly the duties of Executive Producer, and at the same time maintain what I consider a proper personal relationship to my fellow writers. That relationship is based on more than 25 years as a writer for stage, screen and television".

Maibaum being on strike, Michael Wilson consequently found himself alone to continue writing the film; including the task of moving from the treatment form to the script from.

- Michael Wilson[45] : The script was developed with Richard, but when the screen Writers Guild went on strike, he was unable to work. As a non-resident writer of the Guild, employed on a foreign contract, I wasn't subject to the strike and continued [to write the film] on my own.

- Lee Goldberg, journalist/writer[46] : Maibaum & I walked on the picket line at CBS together in 1988. He was furious at Michael Wilson for continuing to write on Licence to Kill. "He's not really a writer", Maibaum said. Maibaum wasn't interested in "keeping the production moving along", quite the opposite, to force studios to improve conditions for his fellow WGA writers. Wilson's loyalty was to the studios, not writers.

On May 5, Wilson completed a 142-page script titled License Revoked, based on the treatment previously developed with Maibaum[47]. Two revised scripts followed on June 23 and July 4[48]. Unfortunately I don't have a copy of these scripts.

May 5, 1988' revised script: Sharky, Truman-Lodge and Heller

It turns out, however, that I have in my possession a script dated May 5, 1988 on the cover, but with revisions dated June 25 and July 4, 14, 16 and 19, 1988. The cover page reads "Screenplay by Michael G. Wilson, from a story by Richard Maibaum and Michael G. Wilson". However, we can notice that Maibaum's name was later added by hand in the screenplay section on my copy.

Its title is "License Revoked": for the first time in the history of the saga, a film will use an original title, not one taken from a work by Ian Fleming.

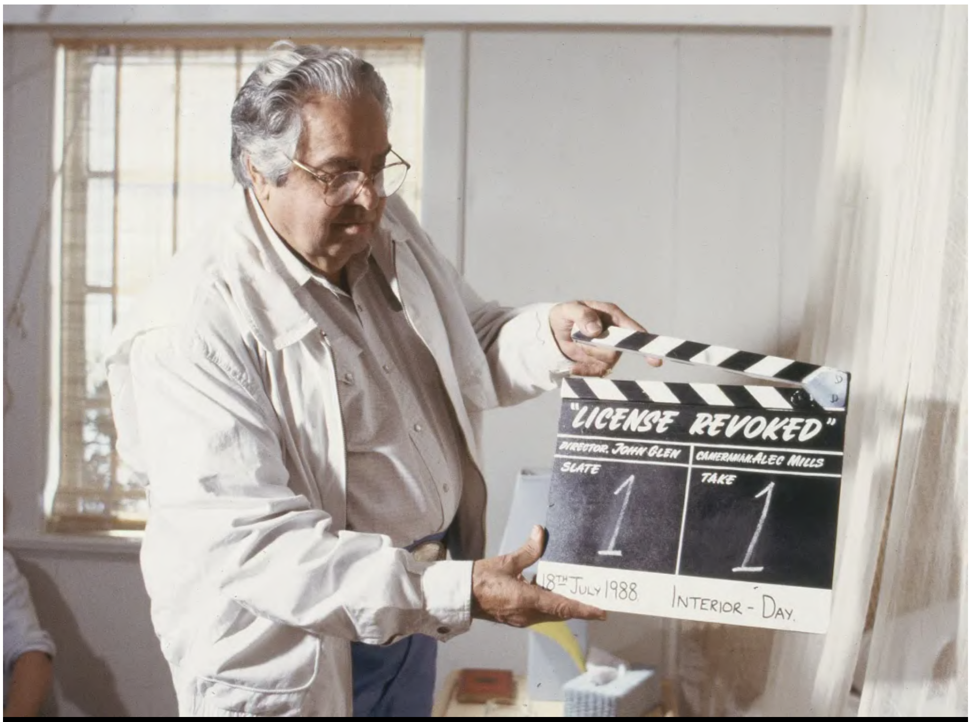
This script is very much like the film: most of it (and its deleted scenes) is already in place; only a few minor changes should be noted. In it we can see that since March 4, Jericho has been renamed "Sharky" (the film will end up spelling the character Sharkey with an E), Shekli became William Truman-Lodge, and Rios has been transformed into Heller. On the other hand, Krest is still named Milford.

This script is practically identical to the "Final draft" that we will study in the pages after, so I will not dwell on it. You just need to know that the small differences compared to this "Final draft" are:

- At the end of the credits superimposed on a wedding montage, there is "Pam in B.G [background], noticed by Bond".
- "Sharky" isn't helping Bond to get rid of Killifer: instead Bond sends a hook flying towards Killifer, which hits him in the face.
- Some dialogue differences when Bond is questioned by Kwang and Fallon like:

> \- Fallon: This is experimental [the rifle], it hasn't been issued to field operatives yet. Where did you get it?
> [...]
> \- Kwang: I've got Sanchez taking me to the center of his operation tomorrow. When I get there, I'll bust the lot of them and close down his whole operation.
> \- Fallon: Killing [Sanchez] now would only leave his Empire intact for one of his lieutenants to inherit.

"Final draft" script



The shooting of the film began under the title License Revoked.

- John Glen[49] : The original title of Licence to Kill was Licence Revoked [License Revoked, with an S] but MGM told us that no one in America would understand what "revoked" meant and pressured us into changing the title to Licence to Kill.

Let's now talk about a 144-pages script marked "Final Draft" and titled "License to Kill" (which was corrected by hand on my copy in Licence To Kill, with a C). No date is however specified, quite a few pages are in fact revisions dated July 14, August 5, 26, September 12, 20 or even October 13, 1988. The credits indicate "written by Michael G. Wilson and Richard Maibaum" (the film credits will appear under these terms and in the same order).

The script opens as the film. The first difference worth noting is that Bond, Felix (who looks "like he's about to be shot" in anticipation for his wedding) and Sharky are in a Bentley (and not a Rolls-Royce) on the bridge. Before the coast guard helicopter comes to meet them, the dialogues are a little different:

> - Leiter (for the 5th time): You're sure you've got...
> Bond is ahead of him. He opens his hand. The ring sits in its demure jeweler's box in his palm.
> - Bond: Right here. Relax Felix, it'll all be over soon.

(In the film Bond does not interrupt Felix: "Now, you're sure you've got the ring?" and Bond just says "Relax Felix").

They go to meet the helicopter (there is no transition like in the film where Perez strangles a guard, this scene comes a little later in the script). Felix wants Bond to inform Della of the situation but he wants to go with him and says: "I'd rather face this Sanchez than Della". They leave a silent Sharky behind (while in the movie, he yells at them).

This script specifies in its description of Lupe that she is a "former Miss Galaxy". Interestingly, when Sanchez asks Dario to give Alvarez's heart to Lupe, Dario "hesitates" and Sanchez then shouts at him,

"Hacer lo! (Do it!)". A camera shot showing the mutilated body falling to the ground was also requested.

The script specifies that the man who says "I told you it was a mistake" to Della Churchill is her elderly uncle.

Before Leiter gives a gun to Bond, there is a scene in the helicopter not present in the film where:

> - Leiter: The papers?
> Hawkins hand him a sheaf of legal papers.
> - Hawkins: Indictment, arrest warrant, extradition request.
> - Bond: You're not going to let him off on a "technically".
> - Leiter: Damn right I'm not. I've been after Sanchez for five years.

A little later Leiter will tell the pilot they don't have time to wait for reinforcements to arrive and, when Sanchez flees by plane, to abandon the captured pilots because they are "small fry". The pre-title ending is similar to the film and the script calls for a "montage of the wedding" for the credits.

Sanchez is interrogated, here we can notice that Hawkins stops Killifer before he touches Sanchez and a little more text (the passages in brackets bellow are not in the film):

> - Killifer: [No way!] We've got a private cell waiting for you in Quantico. [Your boys will have to fight their way through a battalion of Marines to get you out]. And I'm going to personally see you get there.

In another small passage absent from the movie, Della extract Bond from a group of three female guests before kissing him and asking him to go get Felix. A little later Bond meets Killifer who says he can't have a drink because he is "on duty" (will be replaced by "Gotta get back" in the film). Other small changes follow (example: the lighter given to Bond is in gold in the script).

When Bond infiltrates "Milford" Krest's warehouse at night, things become more interesting. Here Bond uses the gaff more, notably to force the opening of a trapdoor before entering, and just afterwards in a scene referring to the novel Live and Let Die located before the passage of the maggot incubator:

> Bond moves among the fish tank. One tank looks empty. The base of the table supporting it seems suspiciously thick. Bond reaches into the tank to shift the sand. His arm is not long enough. He uses the crowbar. A moray ell lunges out from behind the rocks. Its jaws crunch down on the gaff almost jerking Bond into the tank. He lets go of it and stares with amazed respect as the moray snaps it in half.

Also when Bond inspects the incubator (causing its temperature to drop), a camera shot showing a red light in the guard station is requested. On the other hand, the "Bon appetit" spoken by Bond when he closes the incubator with the guard inside is absent from the script. However, no gaff for Bond when he propels the other guard into the electric eel pool (he uses his hands in the script).

Dirty Harry 4 : "Go ahead, make my day".

When Killifer shows up the description of the scene refers to the film Sudden Impact: "in one hand is a .357 Magnum make-my-day gun".

Further on, the script provides for the former house of the American writer Ernest Hemingway as the location for the scene where M withdraws Bond's licence to kill. Bond then refers to the novel A Farewell to Arms of Hemingway when handing over his gun to M.

The deleted scene where Bond and Sharky observe the Wavekrest through binoculars is present. Lupe is on the deck sunbathing and painting her toenails:

> - Bond: Well, well. The girl Sanchez left behind and the man from the warehouse.
> - Sharky: That's Krest. You think Sanchez is on board?
> - Bond: I hope so. If not, they will tell me where it is.
> [Krest sees Lupe looking towards Sharky's boat].
> - Krest (annoyed): Get the bimbo below before she starts waving. And keep those fishermen away.
> - Man from the *Wavekrest (with a loudspeaker): Ahoy, fishing vessel. Stand off. Divers in the water.
> - Bond (to Sharky): Get around that headland out of sight. And be careful, we're being watched.
> [They see the periscope of the Sentinel in the waters near them, disappearing underwater].

The script however doesn't require Bond to wear a bob. On the other hand, it confirms Krest's alcoholism, saying a little later about him that he is "in his usual state of semi-drunkenness".

Things play out similarly to the film and include the deleted scene where Bond sees, on CNN, Sanchez and Lupe getting out of a limousine in front of his casino:

- Journalist: Isthmus City is aglitter tonight as Franz Sanchez arrives at a party that some say is to celebrate his recent escape from custody in the U.S...
[Heller is behind Sanchez, the journalist approaches them with her microphone].
- Journalist: Señor Sanchez, Señor Sanchez. You were recently described in a leading American newspaper as a drug lord...
Sanchez turns toward the television camera.
- Sanchez (interrupting vehemently): I know nothing about drugs. The United States should not blame me for its drug problems. I am a businessman running a gambling casino. I love the Americans people. They are all welcome here. We have better odds than in the U.S. : only one zero on the roulette wheel. Excuse me, I must greet my guests.
[The military police push the television crews as Sanchez goes to meet President Hector Lopez who gets out of a limousine].
- Journalist: And as Franz Sanchez escorts his guest, president Hector Lopez of Isthmus, into the gala evening, this is Anna Rack for CNN News, live from Isthmus City.

PRESIDENTE
HECTOR LOPEZ

Bond turns off the TV and opens his briefcase. The lighter offered by Leiter falls and 007 takes it to light a cigarette. The flame shoots up, he adjusts it and puts it in his pocket. He detaches the inside of the briefcase where his Walther PPK is hidden and slips it into his holster.

We then find Bond in a marina, where he observes a man tinkering on a cigarette boat:

- Bond: Can I rent your boat?
- Sportsman (without looking up): Not a chance.
- Bond: How much to buy it?
- Sportsman: More than you got, wise ass.
- Bond: Name your price.
- Sportsman (thinks Bond is nut): Okay. A hundred grand.
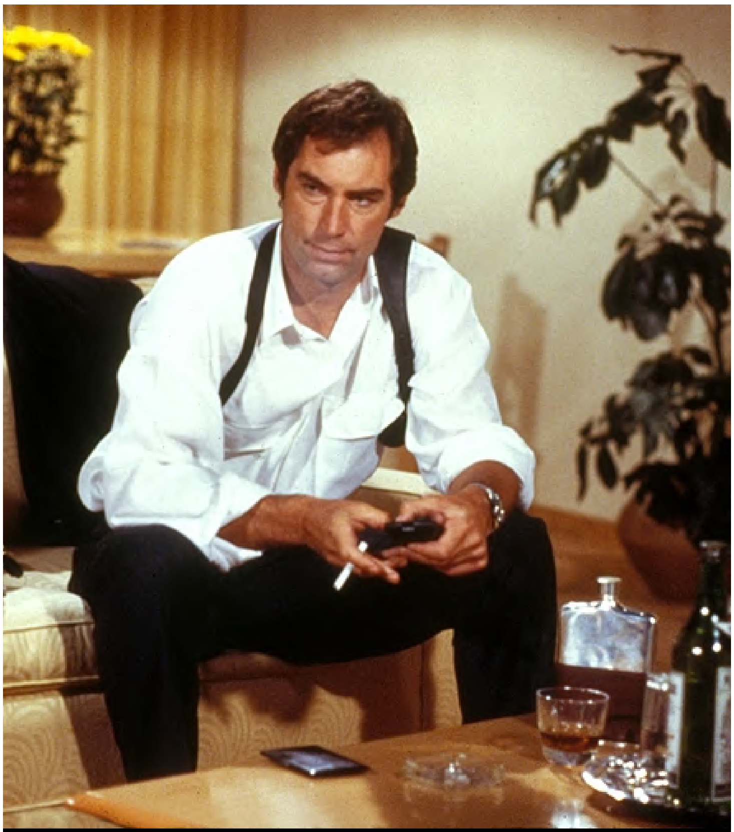
- Bond: Does that include a full tank of petrol?



Bond takes his PPK from a flask of alcohol and not from a briefcase in what was filmed but cut.

The purchase of the boat was also cut during editing.

Bond takes the money out of his pocket and hands it to the man who is stunned.

In the evening, Bond arrives with the boat at Barrelhead. The scene of the fight in the bar/cafe is not really detailed in the script, it is still missing a lot of elements that we will find in the film. Likewise, the horn joke when Bond and Pam kiss is absent (on the other hand, she calls him a "weekend warrior" in a previous exchange).

Bond and Pam arrive at Isthmus City airport in a Beechcraft Baron. While their luggages are being unloaded, Bond's eyes are drawn to a private jet marked "Isthmus Casino" from which six Asian men are disembarking. They are greeted by William Truman-Lodge, Heller and hostesses who escort them to limousines.

- Pam: The blond is Truman-Lodge. Sanchez' financial whizz kid. He's wanted at home for insider trading on Wall Street.
- Bond: Did you recognize any of the others?
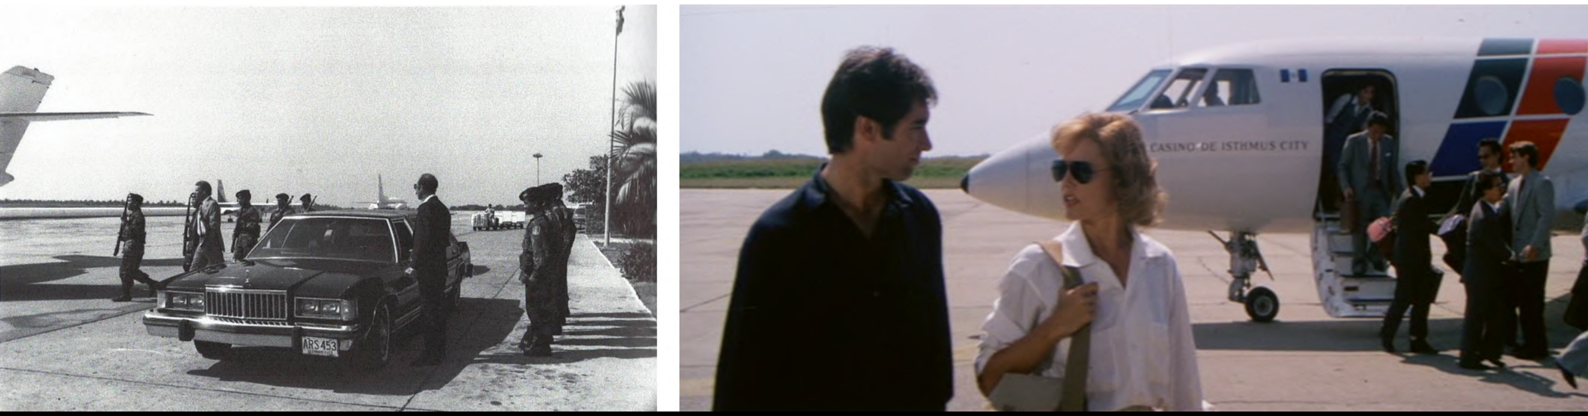
- Pam: The tall one's Heller. Ex-Green Beret Colonel. Handles Sanchez' security. The Feds would love to get their hands on him too.

From the terminal gate, an Englishman named Fallon watches Bond's arrival with intense interest...



This too was filmed but cut.

007 and Pam go to their hotel. Bond then goes to the bank and suddenly heard someone shouting "Hay, amigos!" in the lobby. "Bond looks up to see Sanchez coming down the stairs towards him. For a moment it looks as though Sanchez is calling to him, but he soon realizes it is someone behind Bond. [Bond] turns to see Truman-Lodge and the [the] oriental group". This scene was filmed, but left on the cutting room floor.

"Bienvenido, amigos!"

When Sanchez and Truman-Lodge give the Asians a tour of the bank, the scene is a little longer: Truman-Lodge explains that the people behind the computers are traders and that they operate the largest private investment fund in the world. "In other words, we run the world's biggest laundry", adds Sanchez.

- Richard Maibaum[50] : Sanchez is an absolute monster in a very sophisticated and clever way, and I must give Robert Davi credit for that. He's one of the best villains we've had, and the amazing thing is that he has this tremendous capacity to project evil, while at the same time you want to kick yourself because you like him for his occasional charm. It's a very, very skillful job, and I think Davi does it magnificently.

The script specifies that the bank manager's assistant is named Consuela. Pam Bouvier introduces herself as Bond's secretary, Miss Kennedy (is it a reference to "Jackie" Kennedy, whose maiden name was Bouvier?).

When later Sanchez and Truman-Lodge watch the Joe Butcher show, there is remains of the Deedie Butcher character who was virtually removed from the film's plot. Also the script precise that Truman-Lodge is a "Harvard Business School graduate".

When Bond first met Q, the latter was supposed to be dressed in shorts and a Hawaiian shirt. The dialogues in this part are a little shorter in the script but Q has brought an additional gadget which is in the shape of a passport that Bond begins to inspect:

- Q: Don't open that Double-O Seven! It'll explode in your face. Perfect diversion if questioned too closely by the local police.

Likewise, the signature rifle is assembled here from "various innocuous objects in his bag" (and not from a camera). Q's remark after Pam uses the laser camera is not a criticism: "Ten shots. Best for close-ups".

In the scene where Bond rappels down the facade of the casino he doesn't make birds fly away, instead after having installed the detonator (which is not shaped like a packet of cigarettes), he loses his balances and taps against the glass of Sanchez's office. (Heller hears that and goes to inspect but finds nothing suspicious).

During the meeting with the Asians, Kwang is a little less tactful: "How do we know you have the capacity" (replaced in the film by "Surely if you were to invest 100 million, you would want some reassurance"). In fact it is Sanchez who uses this argument a little later when Truman-Lodge asks him why show them around the laboratories: "Would you put up 100 million dollars without a little reassurance?".

Bond ends up being captured by Kwang and is interrogated. Scenes later when he wakes up at Sanchez's house and talks with him, the script called for the sound of a helicopter approaching. Sanchez leaves, saying to Bond "I have to go meet some people". A little later we can notice that the deleted scene where Bond and Lupe separate after leaving by boat from Sanchez's villa takes place in a deserted dock and not on the edge of a beach:

- Bond: Hurry!
- Lupe: [No], I'm going back.
- Bond: You love him?
- Lupe: No! I hate him.
- Bond: Then why don't you come with me?
- Lupe: Because you're crazier then he is.

When Bond confronts Pam about her relationship with Heller, there is an interesting detail about his past and the Stingers:

> - Bond (interrupting): No more stories, I want the truth. I saw you with Heller.
> - Pam: I am telling the truth. Heller wanted to make a deal with the U.S. We were friends back in my army days. So he asked me to contact Felix for him. Sanchez has bought four hand held missiles from the Contras.
> - Bond: Stingers?
> - Pam: Yes, new prototypes. Infrared target lock. Sanchez has threatened to shoot down an airliner if the DEA doesn't lay off. The letter Felix gave me is from the Attorney General promising Heller immunity if he gets the missiles back.
> - Bond: Did Heller go for the deal?
> - Pam: Everything was set, but then you missed Sanchez. Heller panicked. He told me that the deal's off. I was dead meat if he ever saw me again. That's the thanks I got for trying to help him out. Sanchez has tripled his security. We'll never get another shot at him.
> - Bond: Don't have to. We're going to finish Kwang's job. Sanchez is going to live just long enough to see his empire crumble around him. Meet us at the Harbor Master's office in two hours.

A little later, when Perez goes to inform Sanchez that he found the money on the Wavekrest, there is a short scene where Braun takes the opportunity to take banknotes from the decompression chamber and stuff them in his pockets while he is quote-unquote alone (this is where Pam takes the opportunity to join Bond in the water)!

The script contains a deleted scene from the movie that is missing from the DVD bonus, featuring Sanchez returns home after his expedition to the Wavekrest:

> In the living room of Sanchez's house, the Orientals and Truman-Lodge are having cocktails. Perez, Sanchez and Lupe enter:

- Sanchez: Gentlemen, excuse me for being late. I had a problem suddenly blow up at the office. We'll have dinner in a few moment.
Sanchez, Perez and Lupe cross the room going towards the stairs.
- Sanchez: You look tired, baby. Get some rest.
They stop at Lupe's door.
- Lupe: Good night, Franz.
They kiss affectionately. Sanchez spots Bond's suitcase and briefcase in the hall by Bond's door.

In the following scenes inside Bond's room the dialogue is a little different: Bond notably doesn't allude to the fact there could be several traitors. When he searches his suitcase he looks for his "extra gun" hidden in a flask of alcohol. Finally we learn a little more about Lupe:

- Lupe: No! I spent the first fifteen years of my life getting away from there [my family]. I was one of ten children with no food, no hope... As bad as Sanchez is, he got me out.

- John Glen[51] : Dick Maibaum came up with the name Lupe for Talisa Soto's character. [...] Originally, we submitted the script to the people at MGM/UA and they came back to us and said, "The Lupe character is a little sketchy, underwritten. We don't know who she is". And so we developed the character a bit more. We made her the kind of girl that has to have a man around.

A little further on, Q doesn't have a micro broom but a micro hoe (and he doesn't throw it away after use). Also when Sanchez joins Dario and the Stingers at the helicopter, Heller offers to store them in the safe but Sanchez tells him that he wants to keep them close to him.

Arrived at the Sanchez drug refinery at the OMI (Olympatec Meditation Institute), there are a few additional details like Dario who opens a palm-recognition door after getting off the helicopter or Truman-Lodge who explains that the drug-gasoline mixture is sent to the United States hidden in auxiliary fuel tanks of planes of the Institute. On the other hand, Pam doesn't shoot in Joe's sanctuary and he doesn't bless her when she locks him there.

When Truman-Lodge tells Sanchez they must try to save the refinery, Sanchez has a line in his tirade that is not in the film "our cover's blown" (in the film he only gives financial arguments). Speaking of finance, when Pam steals the bag of money from Professor Joe in the golf cart, Bond takes a look in and she tells him, "I couldn't let you put all the cash in the decompression chamber".

During the treadmill scene, we notice that it is Bond who says the line "you took the words right out of my mouth" (and not Pam).

During the final chase, the script wanted Sanchez to be in a Mercedes (it will be a Maserati in the film). In itself, the start of the truck chase remains very similar to what the audience will see on the screen with a few differences (notably the fact there is an additional tanker truck, so there is five of them in total). This dialogue after Sanchez gave the Stinger to Perez is, for example, not in the film:

> - Truman-Lodge: Each of these tankers is worth 40 million!
> - Sanchez: Cheap price to pay to be rid of him.

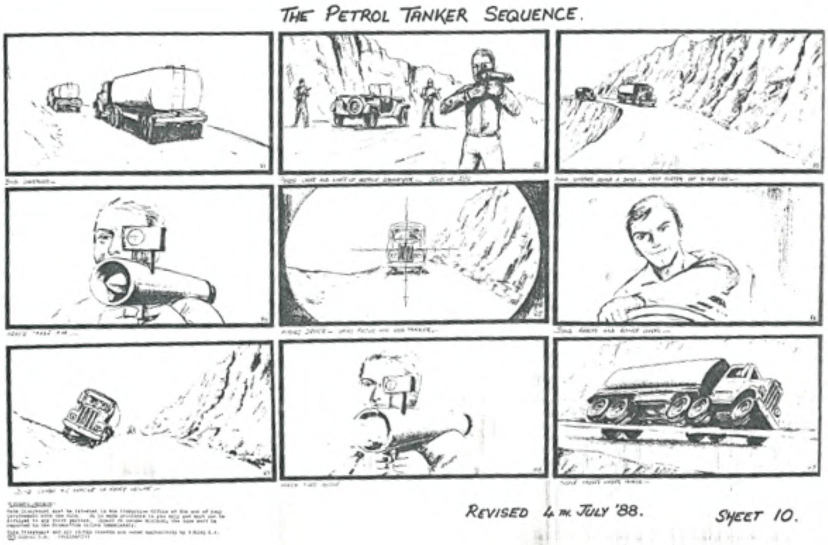
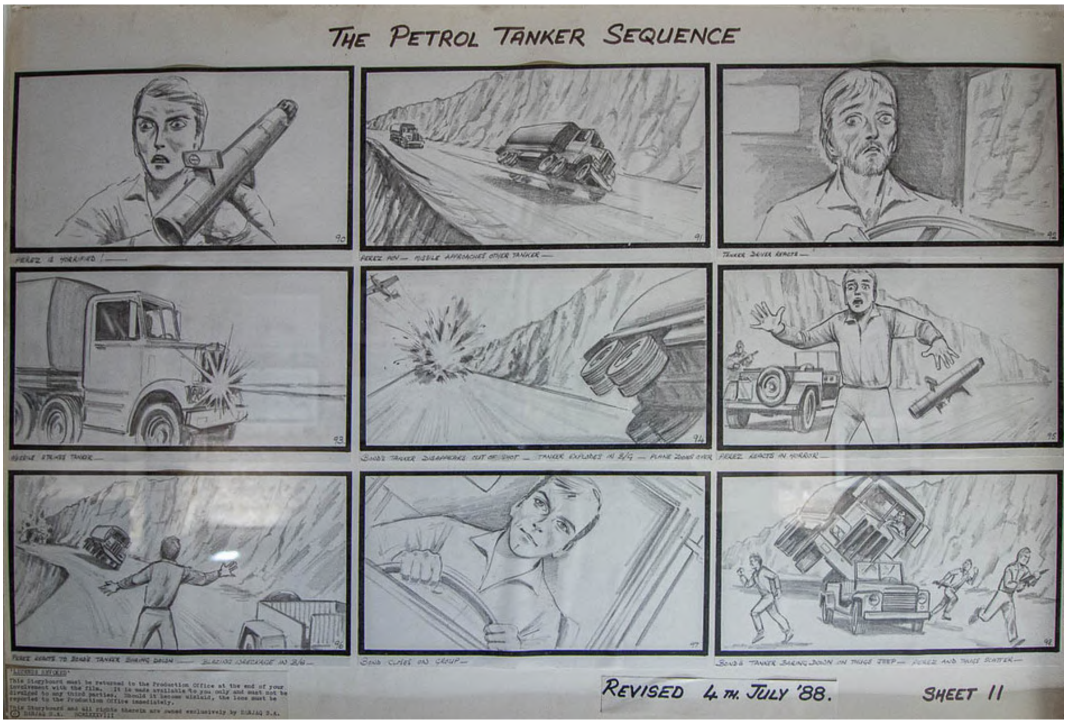
The scene in the film where a truck hits a rock was not originally intended by the filmmakers; this was an accident that occurred during filming which was later included in the film.

> - Arthur Wooster, second unit director[52] : We were doing a shot of two lorries coming around the corner, trying to pass each other. One of the lorries got pushed into the rock. We were shooting all this, and it was more exciting than the stunt because if was the real thing. I phoned John Glen up, and said, "Look, we've had an accident. It could be useful to us. We could make this work, and build it into the story". John looked at the rushes, and we used it, building on it.

So in the script Bond manages to overtake the truck without sending it into the rock and heads towards Perez and Sanchez. Here the "infrared" function of the Stinger mentioned earlier in the script had to be used. The missile launcher's display had to show thermal images with the two trucks' engines as the hot spot where the missile is trying to lock up. At one point the two trucks are standing one behind the other and only one engine is visible on the Stinger's display. Perez ends up shooting, Bond goes two-wheeling, the Stinger locks onto the other truck's engine behind instead of Bond's one. The missile passes underneath Bond and ends up in the other moving truck behind him.



THE PETROL TANKER SEQUENCE.
REVISED 4TH. JULY '88.
SHEET 10.



THE PETROL TANKER SEQUENCE
90
PEREZ IS HORRIFIED! —
91
PEREZ POV — MISSILE APPROACHES OTHER TANKER — 92
TANKER DRIVER REACTS —
93
MISSILE STRIKES TANKER —
94
BOND'S TANKER DISAPPEARS OUT OF SHOT — TANKER EXPLODES IN B/G — PLANE ZOOMS OVER 95
PEREZ REACTS IN HORROR —
96
PEREZ REACTS TO BOND'S TANKER BEARING DOWN — BLAZING WRECKAGE IN B/G — 97
BOND CLOSES ON GROUP —
98
BOND'S TANKER BEARING DOWN ON THUGS JEEP — PEREZ AND THUGS SCATTER —
REVISED 4TH. JULY '88.
SHEET 11

Also Bond's tank doesn't go down the hill on its own in the script, but with a little help from Bond who had to pushes it. After rear-wheeling past the barrage of flames, Bond approaches another truck which doesn't contain Sanchez (he is in a truck even further ahead) but a driver to whom Sanchez had given an Uzi. As in the film, Bond activate the cruise control on, climb on the tank of this truck, and open the valve to eliminate Braun and Perez behind.

Except that in the script Bond doesn't close the valve. As the flames reach the moving tanker, Pam flies her plane towards it. By placing a plane's wheel on top of it, she signals for Bond to get in and he does so. They move away from the tank just before it explodes. They then head towards the last tanker truck where Sanchez is located and who is trying to use a Stinger on their plane. Bond jumps from the plane onto the tank of Sanchez's truck and with suddenly less weight from Bond's body, the plane rises and the missile only hits the tail of the plane.

Bond opens the truck's tank valve and the rest unfolds as in the film. When Bond clarifies the reason for his vendetta to Sanchez, the villain doesn't read the lighter but learns it out loud from Bond who says to him: "Felix Leiter".

> - Richard Maibaum[53] : I personally think the sequence [with the trucks] was a little too long with too many explosions, but what happens is that they shoot it and the material is so good that they don't want to cut it. There's one thing I always keep telling them when we write it and make it: less is more. It's still something I can't convince them about.

During the finale at Sanchez's villa (with Q having "an elegant lady in each arm") we learn that Hector Lopez gave the villa to Lupa and that he no longer runs Isthmus:

> - Lupe: Hector gave me this house.
> - Lopez: My last official act.
> - Lupe: He's had to resign in disgrace.
> - Lopez: It's not the first time, probably not the last.

Likewise when Bond jumps to join Pam, there is not a swimming pool below but the roof of the living room. He ends up finding Pam near the pool (but not in it), similar to the film.

> - Richard Maibaum[54] : There was very little fantasy about Licence to Kill. The villain's caper was bland when you compare it to destroying Fort Knox or the food supply of the world. And Bond shouldn't be so damn funereal. There should have been more humor.

- Cubby Broccoli[55] : Eventually Licence to Kill was released to impressive box-office figures throughout the world. But the American public didn't respond the way they always had to previous Bond pictures. The film just didn't seem to go right in the US. This was a rare experience for us and we spent a lot of time thinking about it. [Cubby explains that competition with other films such as Lethal Weapon 2 or Batman released almost at the same time partly explains it]. The press were less than fair. They criticized our plot and totally misunderstood our intention to expose top-level corruption in the drug scene. [...] It was obvious that Michael and I had to do some serious rethinking. We agreed that in making Bond an altogether tougher character, we had lost some of the original sophistication and wry humour. Bond is not a Superman, or a Rambo. He is the kind of guy who has a tremendous will. He capitalizes on his luck and tries to limit the downside. Sometimes it works, sometimes it doesn't. But he's not superhuman. He is, as Fleming insisted, a skilled professional: ruthless and sardonic in his work; gentle, witty and stylish off duty. That is the way the public want him and it's clear we had to get back on to that track. Back to a lighter touch, with more fun and capers like we had with the earlier Bonds.

Novelization

JAMES BOND IS BACK in the motion picture written by Michael G. Wilson and Richard Maibaum
LICENCE TO KILL
JOHN GARDNER

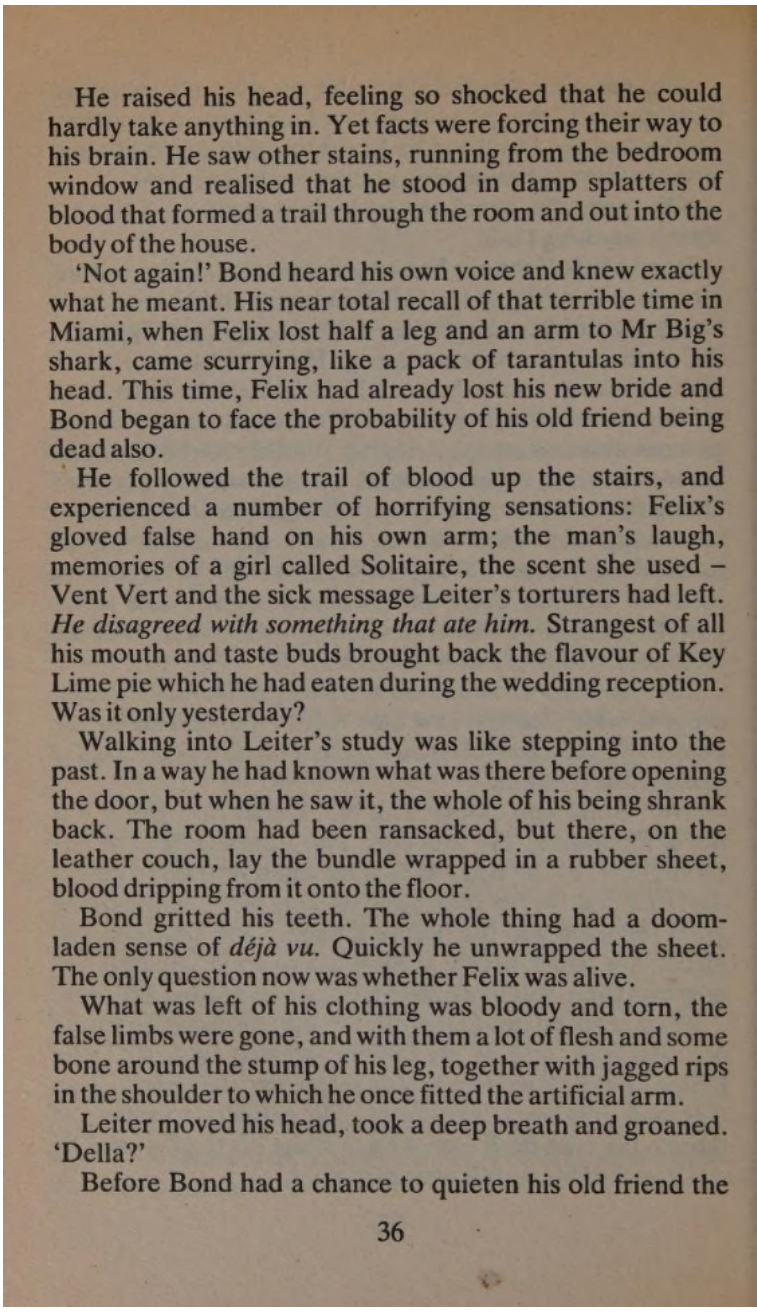
Licence to Kill will be the subject of a novelization, something that hasn't happened since Moonraker. This one was written by John Gardner, the novelist who was in charge of the literary adventures of James Bond at the time.

Gardner modified the story a little so that it takes place in the world of Fleming's novels and also of his own ones. Thus Gardner writes that this is the second time Felix Leiter is mauled by a shark, the first being in the novel Live and Let Die... However, the author seems to be getting confused since he specifies that Leiter had also lost his first wife during the events of Live and Let Die, which is not the case. However, this concern for continuity is two-tiered since there is no mention of the Milton Krest who died on the Wavekrest in the sort-story The Hildebrand Rarity...

From the point of view of additions compared to the film, the novelization therefore specifies this is the second time that Felix has married and what's more, this time with one of 007's oldest friends. Bond is busy finding a girl with whom leaving at the end of the wedding... Leiter had been waiting for Sanchez to come to the United States for five years. Lupe Lamora won the Miss Galaxy beauty contest, Pam spent two years in the United States Air Force as a pilot, and Truman-Lodge's first name is William.

In terms of differences, James Bond doesn't parachute with Felix after capturing Sanchez. The reader doesn't directly witness Sanchez's interrogation but learns about it in a dialogue between Felix and Killifer, moreover we learn that the latter is the traitor at the same time as Bond. More surprisingly, we don't witness Leiter's mutilation, it is only described when Bond imagines it after discovering his friend's body. The shark mainly mutilated Leiter's artificial limbs as well as the flesh and bones at the stumps.

007 doesn't use a Walther PPK but a P38K. A scene was added where Bond lands the seaplane, paying attention to avoid the authorities, before going to a hotel (a certain David Wolkowsky is mentioned during this



He raised his head, feeling so shocked that he could hardly take anything in. Yet facts were forcing their way to his brain. He saw other stains, running from the bedroom window and realised that he stood in damp splatters of blood that formed a trail through the room and out into the body of the house.

'Not again!' Bond heard his own voice and knew exactly what he meant. His near total recall of that terrible time in Miami, when Felix lost half a leg and an arm to Mr Big's shark, came scurrying, like a pack of tarantulas into his head. This time, Felix had already lost his new bride and Bond began to face the probability of his old friend being dead also.

He followed the trail of blood up the stairs, and experienced a number of horrifying sensations: Felix's gloved false hand on his own arm; the man's laugh, memories of a girl called Solitaire, the scent she used – Vent Vert and the sick message Leiter's torturers had left. He disagreed with something that ate him. Strangest of all his mouth and taste buds brought back the flavour of Key Lime pie which he had eaten during the wedding reception. Was it only yesterday?

Walking into Leiter's study was like stepping into the past. In a way he had known what was there before opening the door, but when he saw it, the whole of his being shrank back. The room had been ransacked, but there, on the leather couch, lay the bundle wrapped in a rubber sheet, blood dripping from it onto the floor.

Bond gritted his teeth. The whole thing had a doom-laden sense of déjà vu. Quickly he unwrapped the sheet. The only question now was whether Felix was alive.

What was left of his clothing was bloody and torn, the false limbs were gone, and with them a lot of flesh and some bone around the stump of his leg, together with jagged rips in the shoulder to which he once fitted the artificial arm.

Leiter moved his head, took a deep breath and groaned. 'Della?'

Before Bond had a chance to quieten his old friend the sequence but it is strangely not specified if he is or not the same character as in the Bond's novel Scorpius written by Gardner).

36

The gadgets are very slightly different, there is no laser camera and the detonator is shaped like a pen instead of a cigarette pack. Bond also places microphones in Sanchez's office, which is how he learns of the scheme with Professor Joe's show.

Gardner also provides Pam's point of view for the scene where she follows the convoy by plane to the Temple of Meditation (the one that start at Sanchez's villa, not the later trucks' convoy) and 007 doesn't do a wheelie the truck. The Stingers are replaced by other prototype missile launchers and Q arrives with the cavalry in helicopters at the Temple of Meditation.

Sources/references from chapter 16: Licence to Kill

1 "Acting Bond" by Mark A. Altman in Cinefantastique magazine (vol. 19, issue 5, July 1989).

2 "Acting Bond" by Mark A. Altman in Cinefantastique magazine (vol. 19, issue 5, July 1989).

3 "Timothy Dalton: The Knight of The Living Daylights" by Lee Goldberg in Starlog magazine (issue #123, October 1987).

4 "Making a living with The Living Daylights" by Lee Goldberg in Starlog magazine (issue #122, September 1987).

5 "A conversation with Timothy Dalton" by Richard Schenkman in Bondage magazine (issue #15, May 1987).

"MTV Movie Special: Licence to Kill" promotional documentary on MTV (1989).

6 "Timothy Dalton: The Knight of The Living Daylights" by Lee Goldberg in Starlog magazine (issue #123, October 1987).

"Acting Bond" by Mark A. Altman in Cinefantastique magazine (vol. 19, issue 5, July 1989).

7 "MTV Movie Special: Licence to Kill" promotional documentary on MTV (1989).

8 "Timothy Dalton opens up about Penny Dreadful, leaving James Bond, and the demon in all of us", interview by Scott Meslow on The Week (2015): https://theweek.com/articles/447045/timothy-dalton-opens-about-penny-dreadful-leaving-james-bond-demon-all

9 "Serious Bondage" interview of Wilson by Gary Russell in Starburst magazine (issue #131, July 1989).

10 "The James Bond Archives" by Ellen Cheshire and Paul Duncan (2012).

11 "Serious Bondage" interview of Wilson by Gary Russell in Starburst magazine (issue #131, July 1989).

12 "When the Snow Melts: The Autobiography of Cubby Broccoli" by Albert Broccoli and Donald Zec (2012 edition).

13 "The James Bond Archives" by Ellen Cheshire and Paul Duncan (2012).

14 "When the Snow Melts: The Autobiography of Cubby Broccoli" by Albert Broccoli and Donald Zec (2012 edition).

15 "Some Kind of Hero: The Remarkable Story of the James Bond Films" by Matthew Field & Ajay Chowdhury (2015).

16 "Serious Bondage" interview of Wilson by Gary Russell in Starburst magazine (issue #131, July 1989).

17 "The James Bond Archives" by Ellen Cheshire and Paul Duncan (2012).

18 "When the Snow Melts: The Autobiography of Cubby Broccoli" by Albert Broccoli and Donald Zec (2012 edition).

19 "Nobody still does it better" by Mark A. Altman in Cinefantastique magazine (vol. 19, issue 5, July 1989).

20 "Some Kind of Hero: The Remarkable Story of the James Bond Films" by Matthew Field & Ajay Chowdhury (2015).

21 Symposium by Richard Maibaum for the Writer's Guild of America, Beverly Hills, California, October 1987; via "Speaking of Writing" by Sylvia Kamion Maibaum and Richard Maibaum (2019).

22 "Nobody still does it better" by Mark A. Altman in Cinefantastique magazine (vol. 19, issue 5, July 1989).

23 "Licensed to Thrill" interview by Edward Gross in Starlog Yearbook magazine (issue #5, 1989).

24 "Serious Bondage" interview of Wilson by Gary Russell in Starburst magazine (issue #131, July 1989).

25 "Licensed to Thrill" interview by Edward Gross in Starlog Yearbook magazine (issue #5, 1989).

26 "The James Bond Archives" by Ellen Cheshire and Paul Duncan (2012).

27 "Bond villainy" by Mark A. Altman in Cinefantastique magazine (vol. 19, issue 5, July 1989).

28 "Licensed to Thrill" interview by Edward Gross in Starlog Yearbook magazine (issue #5, 1989).

29 "James Bond Final Mission?" by Lee Goldberg in Starlog magazine (issue #146, september 1989).

30 "Nobody still does it better" by Mark A. Altman in Cinefantastique magazine (vol. 19, issue 5, July 1989).

31 "Licensed to Thrill" interview by Edward Gross in Starlog Yearbook magazine (issue #5, 1989).

32 "When the Snow Melts: The Autobiography of Cubby Broccoli" by Albert Broccoli and Donald Zec (2012 edition).

33 "When the Snow Melts: The Autobiography of Cubby Broccoli" by Albert Broccoli and Donald Zec (2012 edition).

34 "Nobody still does it better" by Mark A. Altman in Cinefantastique magazine (vol. 19, issue 5, July 1989).

35 "Inside Licence to Kill" DVD's bonus.

36 "Licensed to Thrill" interview by Edward Gross in Starlog Yearbook magazine (issue #5, 1989).

37 Starlog magazine (issue #145, August 1989); via "Some Kind of Hero: The Remarkable Story of the James Bond Films" by Matthew Field & Ajay Chowdhury (2015).

38 "The James Bond Archives" by Ellen Cheshire and Paul Duncan (2012).

39 "Some Kind of Hero: The Remarkable Story of the James Bond Films" by Matthew Field & Ajay Chowdhury (2015).

40 "Some Kind of Hero: The Remarkable Story of the James Bond Films" by Matthew Field & Ajay Chowdhury (2015).

"Nobody still does it better" by Mark A. Altman in Cinefantastique magazine (vol. 19, issue 5, July 1989).

41 (Sorry, I don't remember where I found this; neither the eventual exact quote).

42 "Nobody Does it Better" by Mark A. Altman and Edward Gross (2020).

43 "James Bond Final Mission?" by Lee Goldberg in Starlog magazine (issue #146, september 1989).

44 "Nobody Does it Better" by Mark A. Altman and Edward Gross (2020).

45 "The James Bond Archives" by Ellen Cheshire and Paul Duncan (2012).

46 Lee Goldberg on Twitter: https://x.com/LeeGoldberg/status/1654663120630210562 and https://twitter.com/LeeGoldberg/status/1654997206254907392

47 "The James Bond Archives" by Ellen Cheshire and Paul Duncan (2012).

48 "The James Bond Archives" by Ellen Cheshire and Paul Duncan (2012).

49 "The James Bond Archives" by Ellen Cheshire and Paul Duncan (2012).
50 "Licensed to Thrill" interview by Edward Gross in Starlog Yearbook magazine (issue #5, 1989).
51 "Nobody Does it Better" by Mark A. Altman and Edward Gross (2020).
52 "The James Bond Archives" by Ellen Cheshire and Paul Duncan (2012).
53 "Licensed to Thrill" interview by Edward Gross in Starlog Yearbook magazine (issue #5, 1989).
54 "The Complete James Bond Movie Encyclopedia" by Steven Jay Rubin (2003 edition).
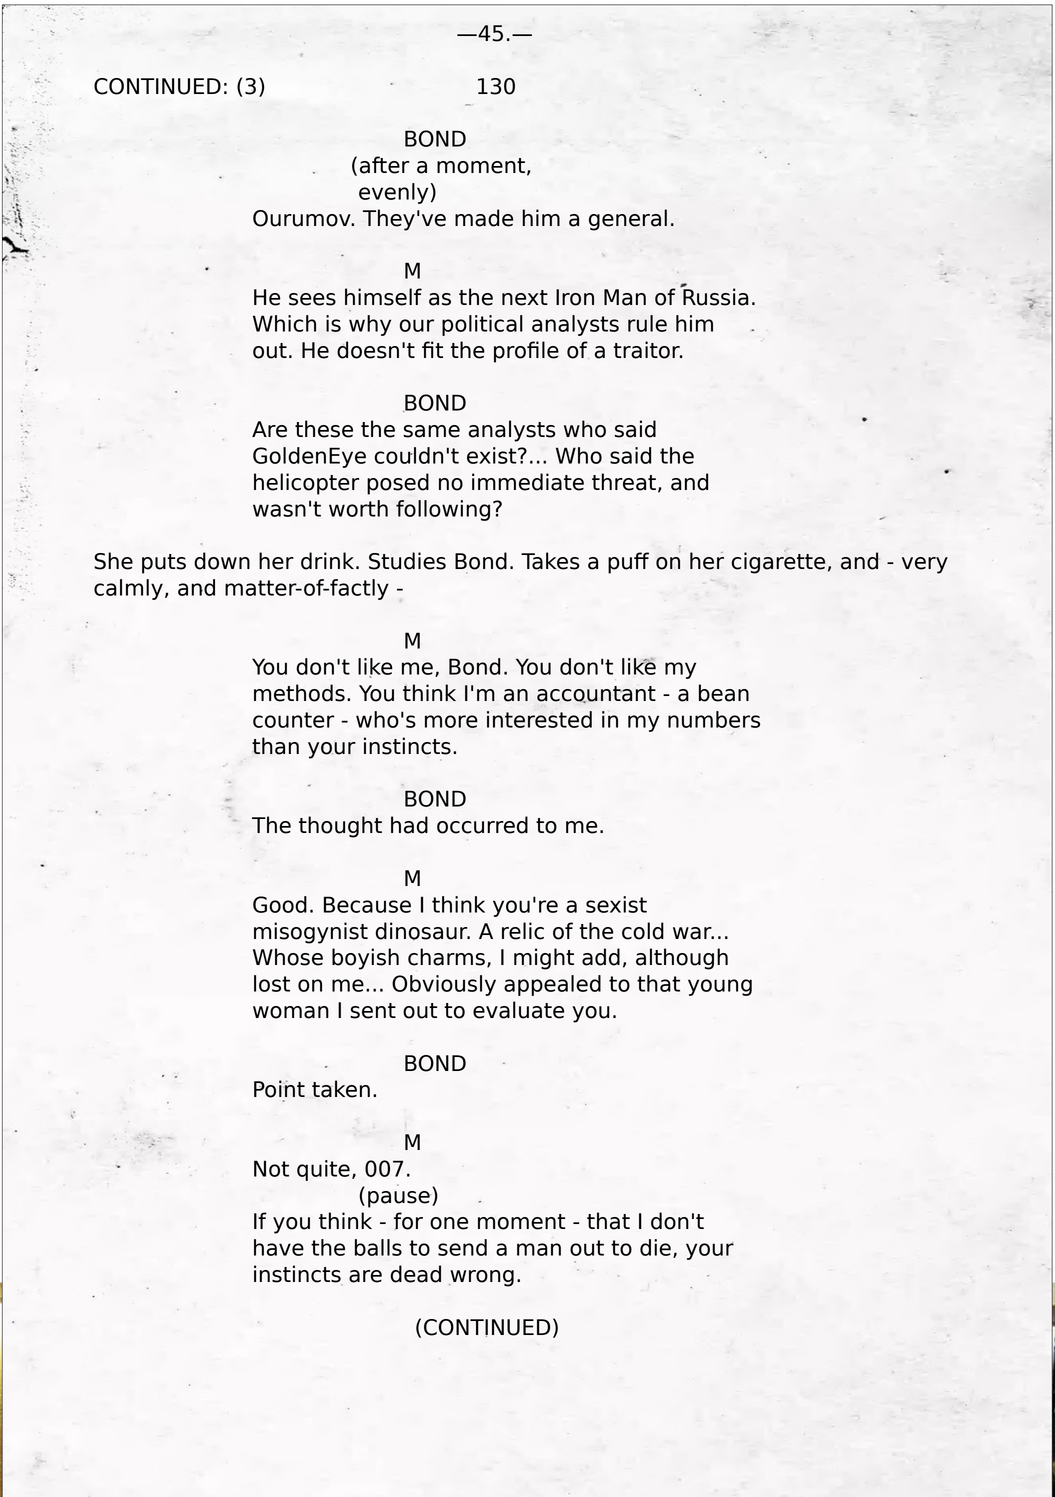
55 "When the Snow Melts: The Autobiography of Cubby Broccoli" by Albert Broccoli and Donald Zec (2012 edition).

007
GOLDENEYE
No limits. No fears. No substitutes.

Release date (premiere) :
13 November 1995

Writing credit as per title sequence:
"Screenplay by Jeffrey Caine and Bruce Feirstein ; story by Michael France"

Director :........................Martin Campbell
Producers :...............Michael Wilson and Barbara Broccoli
Director photography :........Phil Meheux
Set Designer :.......................Peter Lamont
Composer :...............................Eric Serra
Editor :..............................Terry Rawlings
Title sequence :..............Daniel Kleinman
Title song vocals :.................Tina Turner



—45.—

CONTINUED: (3) 130

BOND
(after a moment, evenly)
Ourumov. They've made him a general.

M
He sees himself as the next Iron Man of Russia.
Which is why our political analysts rule him out. He doesn't fit the profile of a traitor.

BOND
Are these the same analysts who said
GoldenEye couldn't exist?... Who said the helicopter posed no immediate threat, and wasn't worth following?

She puts down her drink. Studies Bond. Takes a puff on her cigarette, and - very calmly, and matter-of-factly -

M
You don't like me, Bond. You don't like my methods. You think I'm an accountant - a bean counter - who's more interested in my numbers than your instincts.

BOND
The thought had occurred to me.

M
Good. Because I think you're a sexist misogynist dinosaur. A relic of the cold war...
Whose boyish charms, I might add, although lost on me... Obviously appealed to that young woman I sent out to evaluate you.

BOND
Point taken.

M
Not quite, 007.
(pause)
If you think - for one moment - that I don't have the balls to send a man out to die, your instincts are dead wrong.

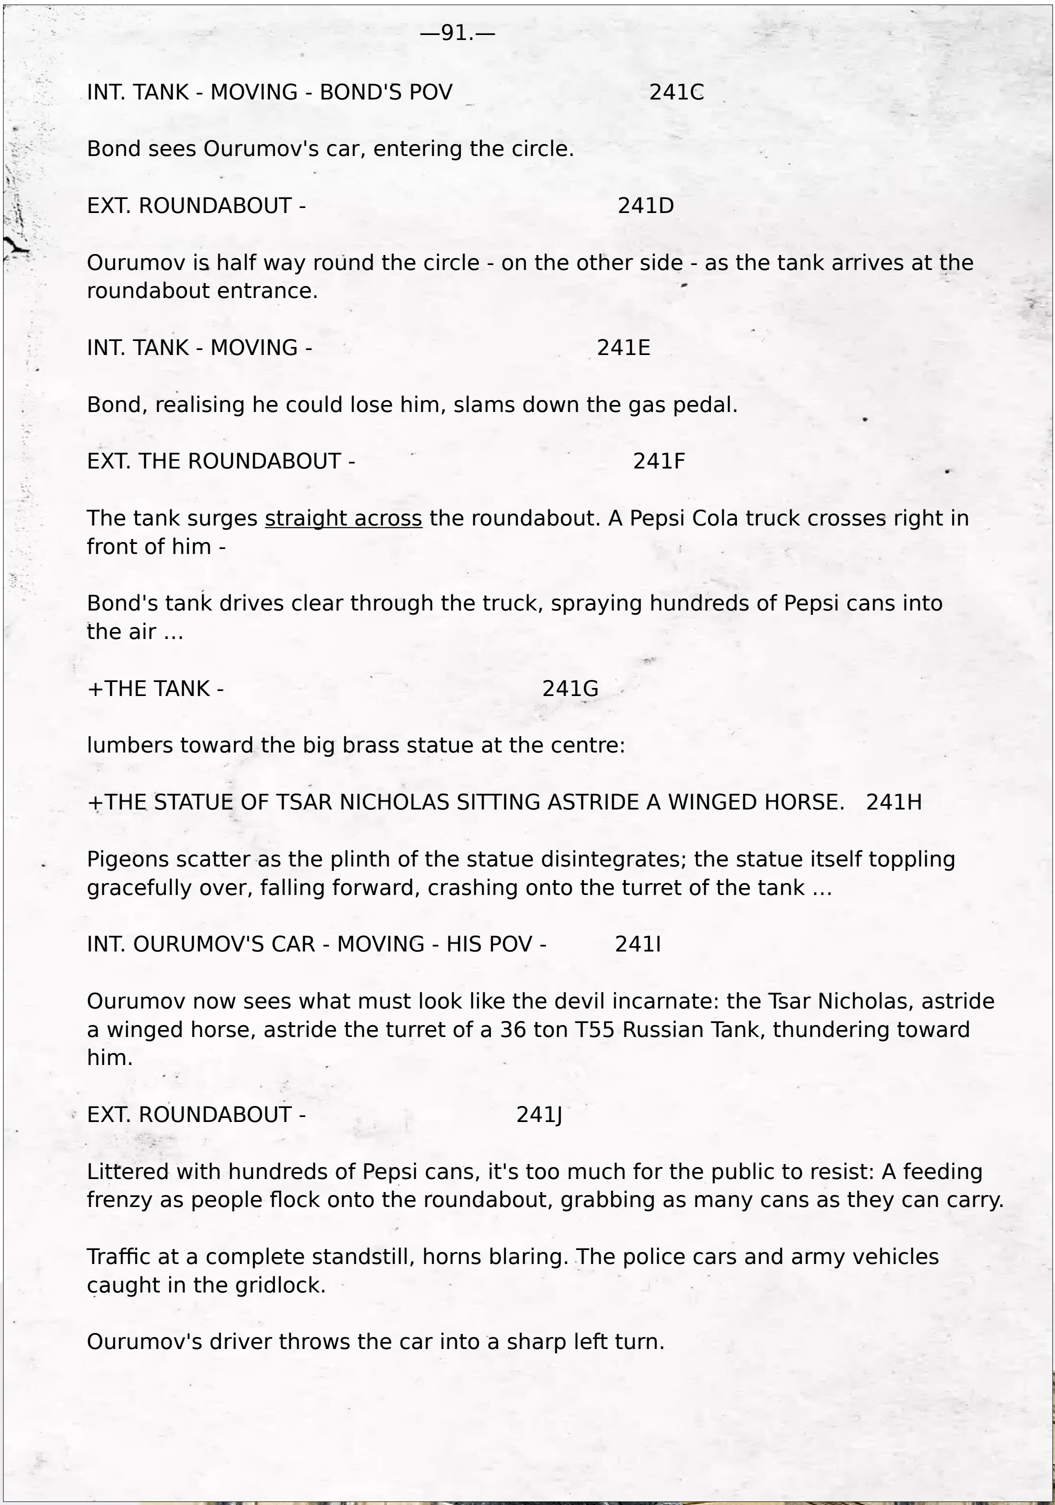
(CONTINUED)

CHAPTER 17

GOLDENEYE



—91.—

INT. TANK - MOVING - BOND'S POV 241C

Bond sees Ourumov's car, entering the circle.

EXT. ROUNDABOUT - 241D

Ourumov is half way round the circle - on the other side - as the tank arrives at the roundabout entrance.

INT. TANK - MOVING - 241E

Bond, realising he could lose him, slams down the gas pedal.

EXT. THE ROUNDABOUT - 241F

The tank surges straight across the roundabout. A Pepsi Cola truck crosses right in front of him -

Bond's tank drives clear through the truck, spraying hundreds of Pepsi cans into the air ...

+THE TANK - 241G

lumbers toward the big brass statue at the centre:

+THE STATUE OF TSAR NICHOLAS SITTING ASTRIDE A WINGED HORSE. 241H

Pigeons scatter as the plinth of the statue disintegrates; the statue itself toppling gracefully over, falling forward, crashing onto the turret of the tank ...

INT. OURUMOV'S CAR - MOVING - HIS POV - 241I

Ourumov now sees what must look like the devil incarnate: the Tsar Nicholas, astride a winged horse, astride the turret of a 36 ton T55 Russian Tank, thundering toward him.

EXT. ROUNDABOUT - 241J

Littered with hundreds of Pepsi cans, it's too much for the public to resist: A feeding frenzy as people flock onto the roundabout, grabbing as many cans as they can carry.

Traffic at a complete standstill, horns blaring. The police cars and army vehicles caught in the gridlock.

Ourumov's driver throws the car into a sharp left turn.

Cast:

James Bond :......................Pierce Brosnan
Alec Trevelyan :.......................Sean Bean
Natalya Simonova :......Izabella Scorupco
Xenia Onatopp :................Famke Janssen
Arkady Ourumov :.............Gottfried John
Boris Grishenko :..............Alan Cumming
Jack Wade :..........................Joe Don Baker
Valentin Zukovsky :........Robbie Coltrane
Dimitri Mishkin :.................Tchéky Karyo
M :...Judi Dench
Bill Tanner :.....................Michael Kitchen
Moneypenny :..................Samantha Bond
Q :................................Desmond Llewelyn

Main filming locations: Monaco, Saint Petersburg, Puerto Rico, Switzerland and UK

It was a long road to GoldenEye, but what a film! Pierce Brosnan plays a James Bond who is full of charm and yet with a brutish go-getter side. Well balanced between action, espionage and humor, the script is a strong point of the film which has many such as its casting, its sets, the direction, the stunts, the special and miniature effects, as well as its villains. Eric Serra's soundtrack is not unanimous but brings a certain atmosphere to the film with its mysterious and quite unique sounds in the saga. A successful modernization of Bond, the film even has a brilliant legacy, thanks to the release of the video game on Nintendo 64, that is considered one of the best of the 10th art.

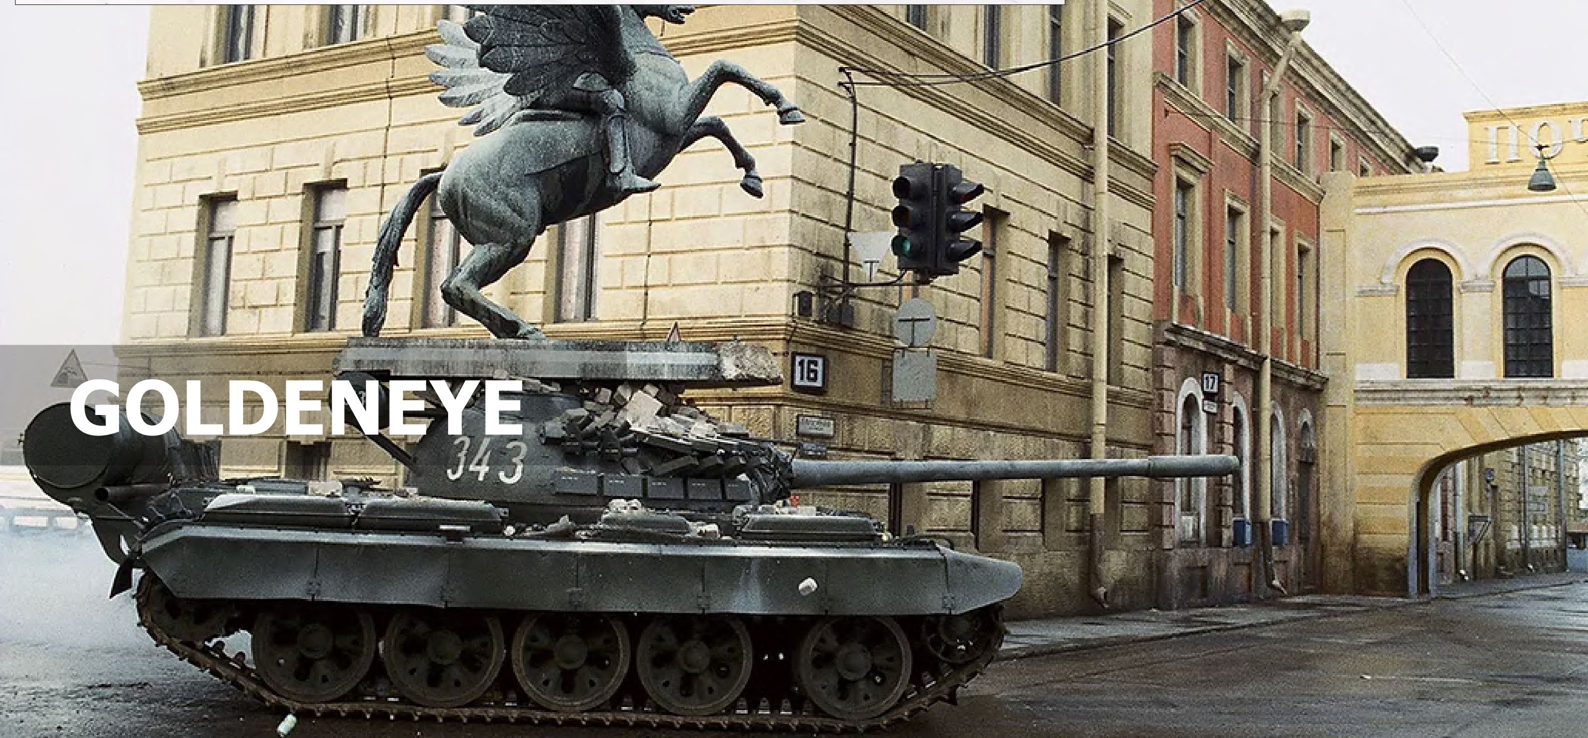


Table of contents

GoldenEye

New blood with Alfonse Ruggiero....1114
May 10, 1990' treatment: Asia, robots and burglar....1117
July 6, 1990' script: hang gliding, Canada and virtual reality....1137
Enter Davies and Osborne....1156
January 2, 1991' script: outdated, stealth plane and Las Vegas....1158
The problems....1173
Restarting the machine with Michael France....1177
France's January 1994 script: Trevelyan, Tempest, Marina and action....1181
March, 11 1994' script: Morozov's mansion, Kremlin and 001....1206
April 15, 1994 script: brewery, Katya, casino and statues graveyard....1213
Enter Jeffrey Caine....1219
Enter Kevin Wade....1225
Real men write James Bond: enter Feirstein....1226
Shooting script?....1230
November 21, 1994' script....1241
Novelization....1245

New blood with Alfonse Ruggiero

Despite good results across the global box office, Licence to Kill struggled to establish itself in the United States in the summer of 1989 compared to other blockbusters such as Batman, Lethal Weapon 2 or Indiana Jones 3 which competed against it. Cubby and Wilson are attentive to this and say to themselves that a too violent and too serious Bond seems to be doing them a disservice.

Licence to Kill had certainly disconcerted American critics with its violence but it wasn't the only one: this summer saw articles flourishing, saying that the entire action cinema genre seemed to tend towards this violence.

Pre-production for Bond 17 begins and Timothy Dalton is ready to don the tuxedo for his third adventure. It was soon announced that John Glen, who had notably directed the last five films, as well as Richard Maibaum, who had worked on thirteen screenplays of the sixteen films in the saga, would not return for this film[1].

> - Richard Maibaum[2] : We knew that they were going to use some new people. That's all I can say. I didn't object. They had a right to do that. I have to be honest: I think these films have lasted a long time, and they've had a wonderful run. I've enjoyed and am proud of my work with them. After all, 13 films, including the first four, I think I set the tone for the whole series. So I wasn't upset about it. I just wished everybody in the whole enterprise well. And that's about it.

Glen and Maibaum left EON while the press was of talking a "bloodless coup"[3].

> - Richard Maibaum[4] : I think what was happening was much overhyped. I have no comment to make on it. Neither Mr. Glen or myself had any commitment to do anything beyond Licence to Kill and so the company was free to do whatever they wanted. It was by mutual consent, I must say. I wished them all well and I hoped they would make a lot of successful pictures whether I'm associated with them or not. After all, when a series has run as long as ours did, it's not as exciting as it used to be.

To respond to the rumors at the time, Albert Broccoli even wrote to the press that Glen and Maibaum had not been "sacked" for Bond 17 contrary to what the press said[5]. Cubby adds that the two didn't have contracts for this film and that Glen wanted to explore other opportunities after Licence to Kill[6].

It seems that the saga, whose creative team had remained the same for several years, needed new blood and new perspectives.

The newspaper Variety reported that Cubby Broccoli or Michael Wilson was interested by the director of Rambo 1, Ted Kotcheff[7]. John Landis (who had once worked on the script for The Spy Who Loved Me) and Roger Spottiswoode (Tomorrow Never Dies) were apparently also considered[8]. Variety also reported that Broccoli was in talks with director/writer John Byrum to take the helm on the film along with screenwriters Willard Huyck and Gloria Katz[9]. The problem with rumors is, as always, that we don't know if there is truth in them or not.

Steven E. de Souza, the co-writer of Commando and Die Hard remembers being approached:

> - Steven E. de Souza[10]: I was offered the opportunity to write the film; I had dinner with Barbara Broccoli about doing it. But several weeks go by and I asked my agent, "What happened with that?". He said, "I blew them off. They wouldn't pay your price". I go, "What do you mean they wouldn't pay my price?". [...] He said he was trying to get my quote up and I said, "[But] I would have paid them [to do the film]!" [...] I ended up firing my agent over that. As it turned out, the opportunity got lost, because this was right before they had that legal problem and they didn't make a Bond movie for four [six] years.

To replace Maibaum on the writing and collaborate with Wilson on it, EON would eventually call on Alfonse Ruggiero Jr.

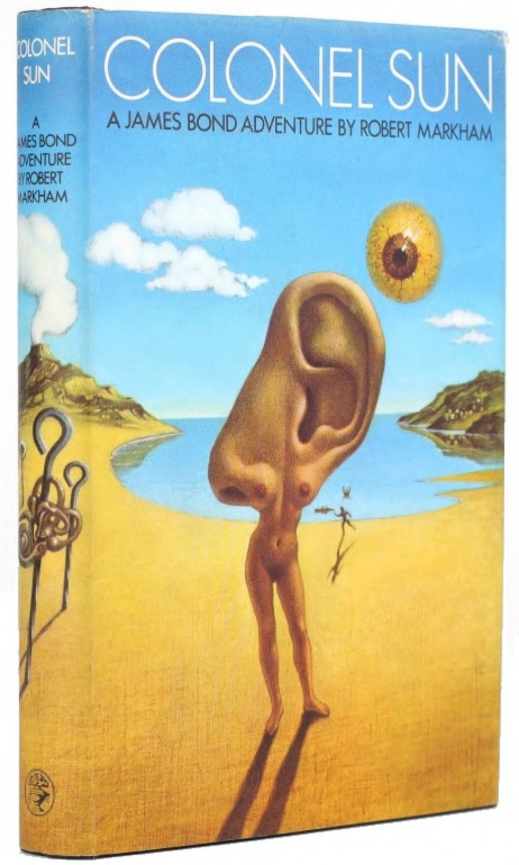
Very little is known about him, except that he wrote a few episodes of Wiseguy, Miami Vice and of Airwolf[11]. Fortunately he gave an interview for the book The Lost Adventures Of James Bond by Mark Edlitz which was very valuable to my research, since all his following quotes come from it:

> - Alfonse Ruggiero[12] : I was doing Wiseguy at the time. Wiseguy was a bit of a darling for writers of the time. [...] A music manager that I knew used to have dinner parties, and Barbara Broccoli [Cubby's daughter] came to one of them. I met her there. There was no talk of me writing a Bond movie. [...] One day I got a call from my agent who said, "They're interested in you doing a Bond movie". [...] Barbara and I had a dinner meeting. We hit it off, and I threw out some ideas. [...] They made the deal with my agents [...] I was going to write with Michael Wilson.

Ruggiero recalls discussing many ideas with Wilson during the writing process and having a look with him at "various short stories that Fleming had written but which had not been made into films"[13]. The two screenwriters also consider Colonel Sun by Kingsley Amis[14], one of the first continuation Bond novels published after Fleming's death, in 1968.

The novel sees Bond travel to Greece to pursue M's kidnappers. There Bond discovers the plans of a certain Colonel Sun Liang-tan of the Chinese army who expect to sabotage a conference organized by the Soviet Union for a rapprochement between East and West.

"We went this route for a while", Ruggiero says[15]. "We threw around a lot of ideas. [...] Michael is great. He had a million ideas. It was fun to be in a room with him and talk to him"[16]. Ruggiero adds that his partner was "very collaborative and supportive"[17], which left him a little "shocked"[18] because he initially "thought he might be a bit dictatorial because [Bond] was his and his family's baby"[19].



COLONEL SUN
A JAMES BOND ADVENTURE BY ROBERT MARKHAM
COLONEL SUN
A JAMES BOND ADVENTURE BY ROBERT MARKHAM

The two writers work together in an office in the MGM building and they often go out to eat with Cubby during the break[20]. Ruggiero remembers that Cubby then used to tell stories about the old Hollywood and George Lazenby[21].

Alfonse Ruggiero had read Fleming as a youth and wanted to "make Bond edgier again. I wanted to go for hard crime and foreign lands"[22]. He also remembers talking to Timothy Dalton about ideas and that at one point he was supposed to go fishing with him in the Caribbean but that didn't happen, "he's a big fisherman" adds Ruggiero[23].

Regarding the title of the film:

> - Alfonse Ruggiero[24] : GoldenEye was a possibility. I don't remember how it was brought up. I think Michael just said, "I think GoldenEye would be a good title for this". [...] We [also] thought about Colonel Sun, which is also good.

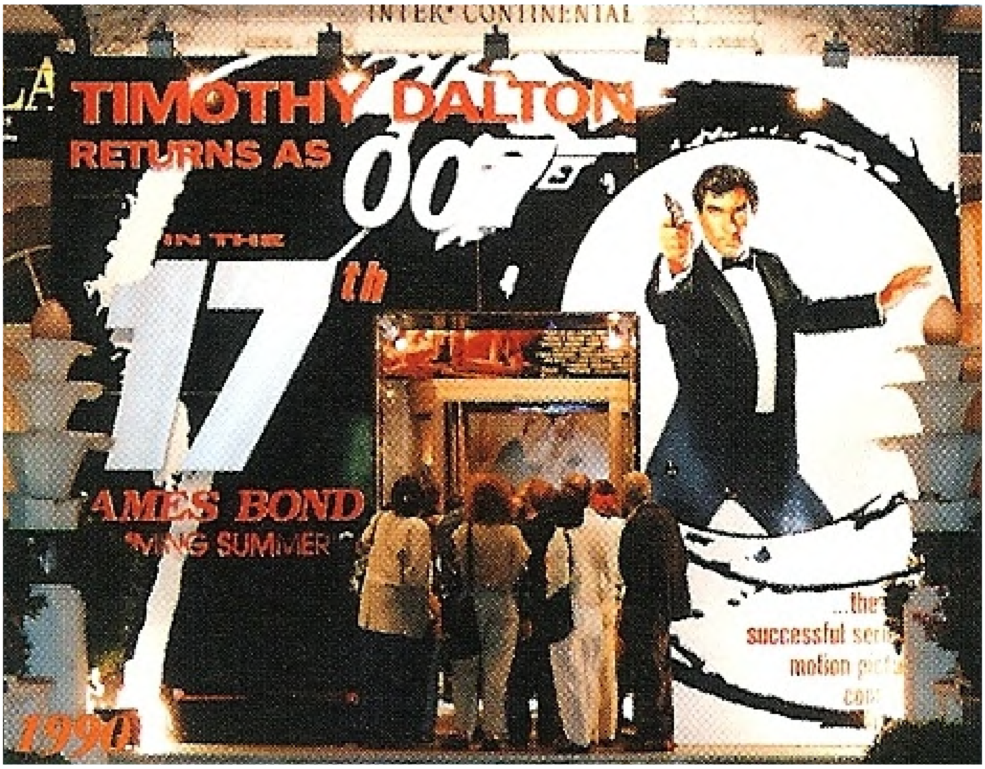
Goldeneye.

Goldeneye was the name of Ian Fleming's villa in Jamaica, where the author wrote the first drafts of his James Bond' novels.

In the years that followed the scrapping of these early plans for Bond 17, rumors have spread that the title The Property of A Lady would have been considered for the film. However, no synopsis for the film has apparently ever carried this name. This is just an urban legend (so stop calling it like that on the internet, thank you).



At the Cannes Film Festival in 1990 or 1991, we could saw a sort of large poster displayed on the facade of the Carlton Hotel announcing that Timothy Dalton would return in the 17th film of the saga during the summer. However, fans would have to wait much longer to see the next adventure of their favorite spy, and without Dalton…

May 10, 1990' treatment: Asia, robots and burglar

Michael Wilson and Alfonse Ruggiero completed a treatment for the film in May 1990, "Bond 17 Outline". The one we are going to talk about is a revised version on which we can find the dates of May 5, 8 and 10, 1990. Below is the full treatment (and not just a summary) of the 17 pages that constitute it. (Note that the treatment doesn't always have the headings in which the locations are specified. I took the liberty of adding a few to make reading easier).

ALBERT R. BROCCOLI'EON PRODUCTIONS PRESENTS
TIMOTHY DALTON
AS IAN FLEMING'S
JAMES BOND 007
IN
A WHISPER FROM HELL
ALBERT R. BROCCOLI'S EON PRODUCTIONS PRESENTS
TIMOTHY DALTON AS IAN FLEMING'S JAMES BOND 007 IN "A WHISPER FROM HELL"
ANTHONY HOPKINS LUCY LIU KEN WATANABE ELIZABETH HURLEY
MUSIC BY JOHN BARRY PRODUCTION DESIGN BY PETER LAMONT SCREENPLAY BY MICHAEL FRANCE AND BRUCE FEIRSTEIN
PRODUCED BY MICHAEL G. WILSON AND BARBARA BROCCOLI DIRECTED BY MARTIN CAMPBELL
007 Gun logo Symbol © 1962 Danjaq, LLC and United Artists Corporation. All rights reserved.
James Bond, 007 Gun Symbol Logo, and Other Bond-related Trademarks TM Danjaq, LLC.
Inspired and based on elements and materials from EON's movies and visuals.
© 2011 - Stéphane TRON - http://007art.free.fr

"A Whisper from Hell", a completely imaginary title on this fan-art created by 007 Art.

Note [preface]:

The robotic devices referred to in this outline are complex and exotic machines designed for specific tasks and environments. They are not humanoid in form. They are to be designed especially for the film for maximum dramatic and visual impact.

Pre-title:

[No indication is given for the film's pre-title sequence, other than that they planned to do one. Only the two words "Opening sequence" are readable in the treatment. Unless these two words designate the gunbarrel?].

Scotland, chemical weapons lab:

Military technicians huddle outside while an elite "Bomb Squad" completes a fine comb search of the building with everything from the most modern equipment to sniffer dogs. The officer in charge reports to Nigel Yupland, a young rising star in-the Ministry of Defence, that the area has been searched thoroughly. He would stake his reputation on the facility being totally safe. Yupland says that's exactly what he is doing and orders the technicians back into the building. Deep inside the Lab robotic devices resume performing tests behind a thick glass wail while being observed by technicians. Suddenly one of the robotic machines runs amuck. A fire breaks out, the technicians run from the room. Seconds later Yupland and the Bomb Squad officers dive for cover as the whole building explodes in a fireball behind them.

London, House of Commons:

A bitter debate rages as the opposition questions the Prime Minister about the explosion at the Lab in Scotland. They demand to know if the safety and security at secret Government facilitates are adequate? The British people must be protected at all cost. The Prime Minister, in hurried whispers, consults her expert on the subject, Nigel Yupland. She then assures the House that the full resources of the Government are being used to investigate the matter.

M's office:

Bond is summoned to "MI5" headquarters. He is buzzed into M's office where he is greeted by a somber M and Nigel Yupland who tells Bond that he here only at the request of the Prime Minister. He [Yupland] has no love for the Double 0 section. In fact, his recent reevaluation of the Secret Service in light of recent events in Eastern Europe [the Cold War was coming to an end at this time] concluded that the entire Double O section is outdated and recommended it should be closed down. In time, he is sure that the Prime Minster will concur. Meanwhile, because of the P.M.'s outdated reliance on M during previously national emergencies, he has been asked to include MI5 in the investigation. A week ago a letter was received threatening destruction of a chemical weapons testing plant in Scotland. Oddly, no demands were made. It seemed a prank or the work of a lunatic, but a complete security check was made of the facility just in case. Then yesterday, in spite of all possible precautions, the lab was destroyed. Our experts have been unable to ascertain exactly how it was done. A second letter was received this morning threatening a serious incident in 72 hours at a government base in Hong Kong, again no demands are made. It sounds like the work of a demented terrorist Yupland concludes. "Yes, but with the capability to circumvent our most stringent security checks", M observes dryly. They have 72 hours to find out who is behind it. What they plan to do. And to stop it. Yupland leads M and Bond to the Situations Room he has set up.

Yupland's Situations Room:

A furry of activity as top Government experts shift through what clues they have compiled. The walls are covered with photographs of various government facilities around the globe. Yupland explains they have only one slim lead. Over the last six months there have been a rash of break-ins at high tech Government and military contractor facilities. These break-ins were given a low priority because in each case nothing was reported missing. The break-ins have taken on new importance in light of yesterday's events. The Scottish Lab was on the list of facilities broken into. At Yupland's request Scotland Yard has turned over all their files. He goes around the room pointing to the pictures on the wall. In each case the MO is the same. A single perpetrator, at night, no evidence that anything was taken. They move from one set of photos to the next. The clues are meager; a broken lock, a climbing rope, safety glass cut from a skylight, obviously the work of a pro. Bond spots a picture of a figure, dressed in black, face blurred as the head twists away from the camera. The picture is from a video tape made when a remote security camera was accidently tripped by the burglar. Yupland tells them that the picture is too blurred for forensic to make anything of it, a team of experts have exhausted all possible reconstruction methods. Bond removes the tape from the video player. He will have Q take a look at it.

Q's Lab:

Using an experimental Computer, Q begins a program to reconstruct the image. He shoos Bond out of his lab. He's not promising anything, if it works it will take a minimum of 8 hours.

Tokyo, night, Kohoni Industries site:

The sleek form of a black Lamborghini knifes through the back alleys with a dark clad figure at the wheel. The Lamborghini shuts off its lights and coasts to a stop. The Black Clad Figure gets out, straps on a small pack, nimbly scales a security fence and disappears inside a building marked "Kohoni Industries".

Inside the Building the Black Clad Figure quickly and professionally uses a combination of climbing agility and sophisticated electronic jamming devices to efficiently neutralizing the building's security system. The Figure moves to the work shop area where electronic and robotic apparatus are being repaired. The Figure moves to a crate addressed to a location in Nanking, China. After prying the top off, the figure unwraps a specialized tool kit and deftly disassembles one of the robots. It removes a small subassembly and substitutes another in its place. Outside several private security cars pull up at the guard's gate. Inside one of the cars we see the Kohoni twins, two enormous Japanese brothers, the heads of the Kohoni industrial empire. Inside the building the black figure senses something amiss and quickly zips the subassembly inside the pack.

Tokyo streets and docks:

Outside, the Kohonis order their well armed men to quietly storm the building. They rush inside only to find a mountaineering rope dangling from a skylight. One of the twins orders his men outside. Using an infrared scope he spots the Dark Figure balancing across the roof tops. He commands the Figure to stop. The Figure fires a Schermuly Pains-Wessex Speedline [kind of cable launcher] to the roof of another building and with the security guards firing skyward swings high above the Kohonis drops next to the Lamborghini. The Figure jumps behind the wheel and with Kohonis in pursuit speeds off.

Following the speeding tail lights in the fog, the driver of the Kohonis' car barely manages to slam on his brakes before plunging off the end of a dock into the sea. Kohonis jump out of the car and watch the amber tail lights disappear into the fog as if the Lamborghini was riding on the water. On the water we see that the Lamborghini has driven on to a small high speed ferry. On shore one of the Kohonis raises his infrared scope and zeros in on the speeding ferry. He can just make out the name of retreating vessel. Back on board the vessel, the Dark Figure gets out of the Lamborghini, removes the scarf and ski mask disguise revealing the cat burglar to be Connie Webb, a beautiful: American adventuress in her early 30's. She removes a computer chip from the subassembly she took from the lab and inserts it into a bracelet on her wrist.

England, Q's laboratory:

Bond, Yupland, and Q looking at Connie's likeness which has been reconstructed by the computer from the video tape. Q's already checked her out. She is the only daughter of a master cat burglar. She was recruited by the CIA and trained to penetrate high security facilities such as embassies to plant bugs and gather intelligence. She went free lance about two years ago. Q says she arrived in Tokyo from Hong Kong two days ago, ostensibly for a skiing holiday. Q suggests they have the local police pick her up for questioning. Yupland demurs. He admits rather sheepishly his department actually hired her last year for a sensitive job in the Mideast. He suggests a more subtle approach. They will place her under surveillance. Bond should make contact, gain her confidence, then find out who she is working for. Bond requests a cover story and some bait. Q has just the bait, he has been asked to evaluate a room temperature superconductor. He will give Bond a sample, it should do the trick. Bond asks if he can have some special equipment. Yupland quickly vetoes the idea. "The cowboy days are over, Bond. I want you reporting to me every step of the way". After Yupland leaves Q takes Bond into a store room. Under a canvas cover is one of the original Aston-Martin DB V's. Q's been ordered to junk her, he can't bring himself to do it. He still has some friends in the Royal Air Force, give him a couple of days, he'll get the car out to him. Bond says he'll have to be quicker then that, they have less than 62 hours to go.

Tokyo:

Bond is met at passport control by Denholm Crisp, five years from retirement from the Service. His once hard edge has been dulled after twenty years in the Far East by age and duty free drink. Bond's arrival has invigorated him, bring a new spring to his step. He has booked Bond into a ski resort, the same place Connie Webb is staying.

Japanese ski resort:

A nondescript Toyota pulls into the exclusive ski resorts parking lot and parks next to the red Lamborghini. Bond gets out of the Toyota, looks longingly at the sleek lines of the sports car, then carries his bag into the hotel. Later that day Bond matches the photo with the real life suspect and follows the red Lamborghini to a private airport. Connie gets out, loads her skis on to a helicopter and is wisked off toward the mountain peak. Bond hops into a waiting helicopter and tells the pilot, "follow that chopper".

Snowy volcano side:

Bond's chopper breaks through the clouds cover at top of a snow covered volcano where they spot a single skier traversing through the deep powdered snow far below. Despite the pilots warning Bond demands to be set down. Bond is lowered as close to an impossible 70-degree vertical drop as the pilot can maneuver and he leaps out of the helicopter, dropping 50 feets into the pristine powder and skis after Connie. She spots him and speeds up. He gives chase; they challenge each other with spectacular stunts down the sheer glacier faces, going airborne for incredible distances. Connie exhilarates in the sheer recklessness of the chase heading for a short cut below a dangerous overhang of snow. Bond pulls up and shouts a warning. She blithely ignores him and attempts to shoot the gap, only to be buried beneath a wall of snow. Bond skis to the spot Connie disappeared and begins digging madly. Finding a leg, then an arm he finally manages to pull Connie out of the icy tomb. As she collects her equipment Bond tells her she is crazy to ski in the mountains alone if she can't spot avalanche danger. She says she knew the danger; that's what makes it fun. She cuts his berating short with "Last one down buys dinner!" and streaks off.

Restaurant:

Later that night, Denholm watches as Bond pays for dinner at a table overlooking the outdoor "jungle baths", natural thermal pools where the skiing jet set bathe au natural. Connie now dressed elegantly, tells Bond not to feel bad about losing, she was an Olympic caliber skier who missed making the American team because of an injury. She reveals only that she searches for excitement wherever she goes or in whatever she does. Bond is equally evasive. Bond walks her to her room. At her door she gives Bond a passionate kiss and invites him in for a drink. From the end of the corridor Denholm smiles when he sees that Bond has things well in hand and decides to call it a night.

Connie's room:

Once inside her suite, she orders a drinks from room service. She tells Bond she has the distinct feeling that their meeting was not unintentional. Bond replies that he can assure her his intentions are purely dishonorable. He hands over a small box containing the super-conducting material Q gave him. As Connie examines it, he tells her it is extremely valuable, but he needs an introduction. There is a finder's fee in it for her. She is not impressed with the small grayish lump. Just get me to the top man, Bond tells her, "he will be". She holds out the box for Bond to take telling him she doesn't know what he is talking about, obviously he has mistaken her for someone else. "I don't think so", he tells her. At that moment the door bell sounds. Thinking it is room service, he goes to answer it. As he opens the door, Bond is knocked flat on his back by a karate kicked to the chest. Before he can recover, he finds himself looking down the bore of a .44 magnum in the hand of a vicious Japanese hood. Behind him the Kohoni twins and two more men file into the room. Connie pockets Bond's box as she stands. The hoods roughly disarm Bond. Bond's wrists are handcuffed to the arm of the chair.

The Kohonis have only two questions they want answered: what did Connie take from their plant, and who is she working for? Connie tells them that she doesn't have any idea what they are talking about. She demands that they let Bond go, he is just somebody she met for the first time skiing today, he doesn't have anything to do with this. One of the hoods hands over Bond's gun. The Kohonis aren't buying her story. They become enraged. Does she think they are fools? Neither Bond or Connie is leaving alive unless their questions are answered. Connie tells them that she makes it a policy to work only through intermediaries, she has no idea who hired her. One of the twins fires a taser into Bond's leg and turns up the juice. He shuts it off when Bond blacks out. Connie will talk or her lover will suffer. Bond protests he hardly knows her. He turns up the juice once more, sending a larger electric charge through Bond's body. Bond thrashes violently. He finally manages to tip the chair to the ground and grab his tormentor's leg, electrocuting him as well. In the confusion Connie kicks out, knocking down the nearest hood. Bond splinters the chair arm rest and uses his manacled hand to smash the nose of one his captors and elbow chops another. Still handcuffed, he pulls Connie toward the window. She lays out the last twin with a flying kick, just as Bond crashes through the window pulling her after him.

Japanese ski resort:

They fall one story to the ground and pick themselves up and run like hell for the garage. Connie gets to her red Lamborghini, but Bond, slowed by his handcuffs is separated from her. He manages to delay and evade the Kohonis in a wild chase trough the ski resort' annual torch light parade.

After eluding them, Bond wakes Denholm up and tells him to call someone to get the cuffs off.

Driving quickly along the rural roads in her Lamborghini, Connie dials her car phone. The call is answered by Otto Winkhart, a bent Swiss lawyer who is Connie's go-be-tween. She is shaken by the visit from the Kohoni twins. She just wants Winkhart to pay her so she can disappear for a while until things cool off. He asks if she has the chip. She fingers her bracelet telling him it is safe. She also has something else he might be interested in, some new high tech material a man wants her to sell for him. Winkhart tells her to go to the airport, he will send a private plane to bring her to Hong Kong.

Hong Kong, dawn, Ching's offices:

Winkhart drives through the center of Hong Kong to the rear loading dock of a tall, ultra modern office building. The door rolls up admitting the limo. He disembarks and proceeds through an elaborate security system. Once inside he is escorted by guards through a labyrinth of scientific laboratories. The group finally halts when they see Sir Henry Lee Ching, a brilliant and handsome thirty year old British-Chinese entrepreneur, approaching from the far end of a long corridor flanked by offices and small scientific labs. Sir Henry progress towards him is slow, interrupted frequently by employees asking for decisions. One shows him the schematic for a complex circuit. He understands it at a once, redesigning it in the matter of a few paces. Another asks if they should okay a shipment of a second radar control system to Iraq. "Not until the one we shipped to Iran is up and running, we don't want either one stronger then the other, that's bad for business".

He comes to a stop a few steps from Winkhart when Dr. Lombardy, his head of R&D, shows him a computer print out. After Sir Henry nods his approval to Dr. Lombardy, Winkhart moves to his side, speaking softly in his ear. He holds out the small box Bond gave Connie. Sir Henry nods for Lombardy to take it. Lombardy opens it up. Winkhart and the others in the room strain for a look. Lombardy holds up the small grayish-brown cube and stifles a laugh. Everyone in the room begins to laugh, everyone, that is, except Sir Henry. He snatches the cube from Lombardy, looks at it closely, then turns on his heal. The rest follow his brisk pace into one of the labs. He tells the technicians to vacate the room. Then, while the others gather round, Sir Henry puts the cube on the center plate of an electromagnet. When he switches on magnet, the cube levitates, rocking and turning slowly, suspended inches above the table. Sir Henry smiles: could it be someone has finally discovered the elusive room temperature superconductor? He tells Winkhart that if this checks out, it could be worth a lot of money to Connie and her English friend. He tells Winkhart to find Bond and invite him to the party tonight, he wants to get a look at him.

Ching's Control Room:

Sir Henry motions for Winkhart to follow him. They pass a security check point deep in the heart of the high rise office building. The room they enter looks like NORAD. A word situation map is projected against one wall. Operators at consoles monitor the situation. Sir Henry demands to know if the Chinese have acknowledged his letter. No. "Well, let's see if we can get their attention". He points to a spot near Nanking. The Chinese run an atomic power plant there. "Let's have a little accident, shall we?".

In a room of the atomic power plant in Nanking, full of automated equipment constantly adjusting the rods in the core of the reactor. A robotic device looking like the one we saw Connie tamper with at the Kohonis' plant in Tokyo performs tests while being observed by technicians in another room from behind a thick glass wall. Suddenly the robotic machine runs amuck, smashing the rods. A fire breaks out, the technicians ran from the room. Seconds later the whole building explodes.

Back in his control room Sir Henry turns to Winkhart. His mind has moved on the another subject: he cannot have the Kohonis throwing their weight around. Winkhart is to set up a meeting at their office here in Hong Kong, tell them Sir Henry has a proposition to put to them.

Japanese ski resort:

Bond and Denholm discussing what to do next. They are at a dead end, Connie has disappeared with the bait. As they enter the lobby, the receptionist hands Bond an envelope. Inside is an airplane ticket and a reservation at the Imperial Hotel, Hong Kong. It looks like Bond's bait has hooked a fish, Denholm tells him. He'll have Q reroute his special equipment to Hong Kong.

Hong Kong, Kohonis' offices:

Sir Henry's steps out from the rear of his black limo as it stops at the entrance to Kohonis' modern high rise office building. Otto Winkhart, who has been waiting for him at the front door greets him gravely, "We've got problems. They don't want to sell". Sir Henry is full of cheer. Otto continues as they walk toward the entrance, "The Kohonis' are Yukza [Yakuza?], Japanese mafia. They play tough". Sir Henry tells him to relax.

A heavy set motorcycle dispatch rider wearing full helmet and black leathers carrying a bag enters the security control room at the rear of the Kohonis' building. It is Rodin, Sir Henry's hired killer. The guard behind the desk tells him he has come to the wrong place, messengers are to go to reception at the front of the building. Rodin looks around the room. Through his eyes we see his visor is a heads-up targeting display. The position of each of the three men in the room is locked into the display as Rodin looks at them. The thermal image of a fourth man behind a door a fifth in the next room are also targeted. Rodin flicks open a compartment at his hip, a small futuristic gun on its own gimbal independently aims and fires killing all the men in the room including the two in the next room in a split second. Rodin snaps the weapon back into the compartment at his hip and moves toward the service elevator.

Sir Henry and Otto step off the elevators and pass through a metal detector. A tough Yukza type escorts them to the conference room. Security is high; a dozen armed guards stand at check points the way. A steel door is unlocked by a guard, one of the men who chased Bond and Connie. He wears a bandage over his nose, where Bond hit him. Sir Henry quips, "I don't think a nose job is going to make all that much difference, Kiren". Kiren just glares and ushers Sir Henry and Otto inside. The twins and their henchmen sit around a long table. He bows to them, they nod almost imperceptibly in return.

On the roof of the building. An armed guard patrols. He is suddenly hit from behind. As he sinks to his knees, his assailant is revealed: Rodin carries a bag to the edge of the roof where the automatic window cleaning scaffold is stored. Rodin changes the nozzles and hoses on the washer. He removes a canister of cleaning solution and attaches a new canister.

Back in the conference room Sir Henry compliments them on there security precautions and offer some helpful hints. One of the twins tells him the Kohonis, "don't need to be lectured about security". He proudly points out that the walls are six inches thick, the door is steel plate and the large plate window along the wail is armour plated glass. The room is totally sound proof and is swept for bugs twice a day. "Nobody uninvited gets in". "Hard to get in. Hard to get out", Sir Henry observes cheerfully. He asks if they have considered his offer. One twin says they prefer not to sell. Sir Henry explains that with World becoming one market, only the strong will survive. A scientific company like theirs, with only the Japanese market cannot possibly compete. Now if it is a matter of price, he is prepared to increase his offer significantly. The other twin blows his top. They don't want to sell, period. Sir Henry has been buying up electronic companies throughout Europe, America, the Far East, even Eastern Europe, but he's not going to get a foothold in Japan. The Kohonis have it locked up. Sir Henry laughs, then there seems little more to discuss, he bids them good day.

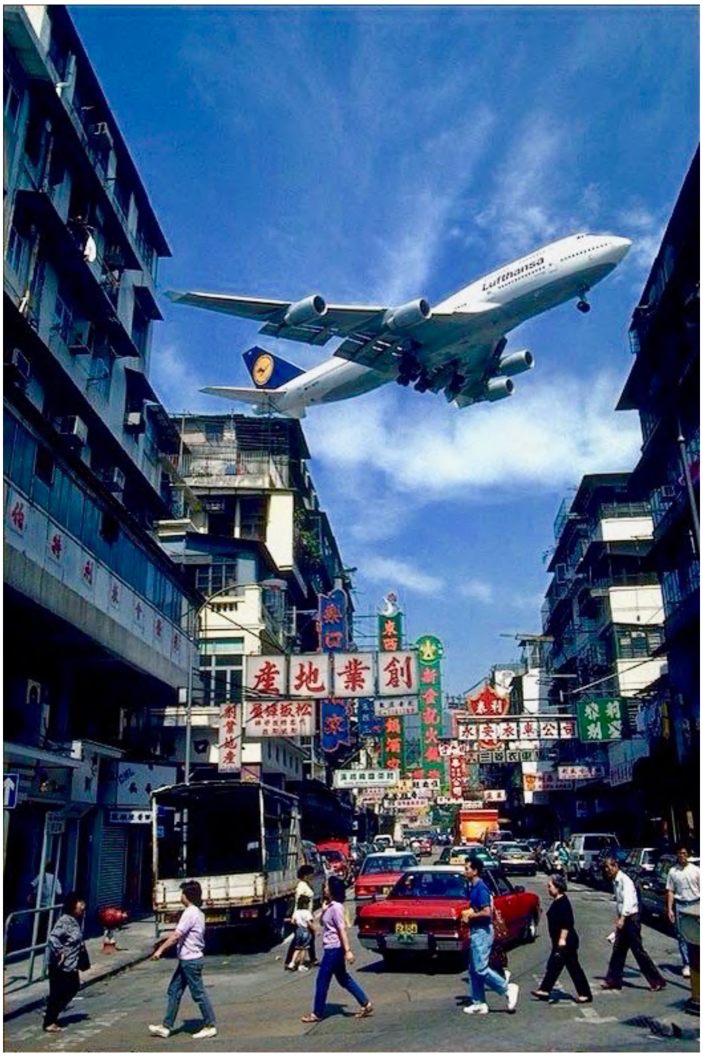
In front of the building:

As they exit the building, Otto seems relieved that they did not have a confrontation with the Kohonis. Across the street Rodin sits astride his motorcycle. Sir Henry glances towards him and nods imperceptibly. Rodin pushes a radio controlled device. On the roof the automatic window washer starts down the side of the building.

Inside the conference room the Kohonis are congratulating themselves for having stood up to Sir Henry. Outside the large window the window washing scaffold comes into view. No one pays it much attention. It stops outside the conference room windows, the sound of high pressure gas issues from the row of spray gun tips of the washer. A spark ignites the gas. A ball of flame emerges from the spray gun tips; they have been turned into a row of high powered flame throwers! The men in the room panic. They rush to the door, banging on it to be opened. The glass window begins to warp, sag, then finally explode; flames engulf the room.

Sir Henry stands by the car with Otto. The lawyer is philosophical about losing the deal. "It's just as well they didn't say yes. With the Kohonis we would have had anti-trust problems, tax problems, SEC problems". He looks up at the sound of an explosion. Flames billow out from the conference room on a floor high above them. Sir Henry turns to the baffled Otto. "Now we only have an estate problem. Make a deal with the widows".

Hong Kong airport:



The commercial airliner carrying Bond and Denholm flies thorough a canyon of tall office buildings on the final approach to Hong Kong airport. It is a sight that Bond has seen many times before but never tires of.

Bond and Denholm wait as a British military transport taxis toward them. Denholm reports that none of his contacts have spotted Connie yet, but he thinks she must be here. He has one bit of news ugh, Yupland is arriving in Hong Kong tonight to take charge of the investigation personally. A disgruntled Q comes off the plane with his baby, the Aston Martin DB5. He tells Bond that he had to pull a lot of strings to get here in record time. He gives Bond a quick rundown of the updates he has made on the classic Aston. Bond thanks him for his efforts as he and Denholm get in. With Q yelling after him to take good care of his beloved car, Bond peels out on the runway.

Imperial Hotel:

Bond is checked into the Imperial by the Assistant Manager, Mi Wai, an attractive Chinese women, who takes a special interest in the new arrival. As she escorts him through the lobby past a new year's party celebration, she tells him they have arrived on the day of the Chinese New Year. One of the photographers snapping pictures of the festivities surreptitiously takes Bond's picture with an electronic disk camera. The photographer immediately sends the image over the pay telephones in the lobby to an undisclosed location where it is perused by Quen Low, who we will later come to know as Bond's opposite number in mainland China. Bond is shown to his suite by Mi Wai. The porter leaves his bags in the bedroom.

After they leave Bond strips off his jacket and shirt. He heads for the bathroom. When he opens the door he sees there is water running behind a glass wall at the end of the room. He turns off the light in the bath so he can see through the glass. Behind the wall is an environmental room (a super kind of steamroom/sauna which are found in luxurious suites in some top hotels). A low glow emanates from the room. Through the droplets on the glass Bond can make out, among the ferns and plants, a sleek nude female form. He opens the door to the room and steps inside. There is a light mist in the room, one has the impression of being in a tropical rain forest. Connie Webb looks up from the banquette she is lying on, "Welcome to the tropics, Mr. Bond. Your sample impressed some important people. We're invited to a cocktail party tonight". She hands him a tropical drink. "To our partnership". Bond sips the drink and moves close to her, their lips almost touching, "I was thinking more of a merger". They kiss. She reaches behind him on the wall and turns a dial. A soft rain begins to fall. She tells him she always wanted to make love in a tropical rain forest, but there are too many bugs. They continue love making, the rain increases building to a climax with a flash of lighting and a roll of thunder.

Streets of Hong Kong:

Later that night the Aston Martin winds its way through the New Year's revelry clogging the streets of the city. Inside are Bond in black tie and Connie in gown. Bond is curious about the Kohonis, why did they ask if anything was missing? Connie does not answer him directly, instead she tells the story of a master jewel thief who would substitute copies of the things he stole, often the deception would not be discovered for years. Before Bond can question her further, they arrive at the entrance to Sir Henry's high rise office building.

Ching's offices:

They walk through an elaborate security device where a laser scans their invitation, then their faces before admitting them. In the security control room, deep in the interior of the building, Rodin stands by an operator watching the computer monitor as Bond's image and name are cross checked by the data base. No match is found. Rodin is not satisfied, he doesn't like the look of Bond. "Do a deeper search", he orders.

The lobby is filled with big wig politicians and military types, Sir Henry's best customers from around the globe. Bond does his best to blend in. After pointing out their host, Sir Henry, Connie goes off to get a drink. Bond spot Denholm at the buffet table speaking to Mi Wai, the assistant manager from the hotel. She looks over and smiles. Bond nods in return.

Connie returns with their drinks. Bond's hand instinctively moves towards his shoulder holster a split second before a burst of automatic weapon fire sounds. Outside a black clad elite commando unit suddenly repels down the glass windows from the roof. Pandemonium breaks out in the crowd as the lights dim and the doors are sealed. Connie clutches Bond's arm in fear. He suddenly relaxes, dropping his hand from the butt of his gun under his jacket. "Look", he tells her. She follows his gaze to Sir Henry who watches the reaction of the crowd with an amused smile on his lips as the building automatically begins to repel the invaders. The commandos automatic weapon fire ricochets ineffectively off the bullet proof glass, hidden machine guns return fire, finally security robots subdue the rest of the commandos. The attack is neutralized in a matter of seconds; a frighting and convincing display.

The lights come back on and Sir Henry stands at the podium. He thanks Col. Kim of the Hong Kong Royal Guard for helping him with the demonstration. The fallen commandos rise as Sir Henry address the room. Sir Henry explains that they are in the office building of the future. Everything is completely automated, operated by a computer. Fire, heating and air-conditioning, have of course, been automated for some time. But in this building all maintenance, cleaning, and security are automated as well. His building is almost a living being in its own right. It keeps track of everyone in the building and where they are at all times. And as they have seen is completely impregnable to terrorists attack.

Connie takes Bond over to the table of Otto Winkhart, who greets him warmly. They sit. Winkhart tells him that Connie mentioned the encounter with the Kohoni twins. Bond need have no further fear of them there was a terrible incident at their offices today, the entire Kohoni Clan was wiped out. Winkhart's Cheshire Cat grin leaves no doubt of his involvement. A waiter arrives with New Year's fortune cakes which he serves to the table. Bond opens his cake and takes out the fortune which reads: "FLOATING RESTAURANT - ABERDEEN - TONIGHT AT 10:00". "Interesting fortune?", Bond looks up into the face of Sir Henry. He pockets the note and shakes the industrialist's hand. Sir Henry takes a seat next to Bond. He asks what brings Bond to the island. Bond is trying to make some business contacts, he has something to sell, an invention, for several million dollars. Connie balks. Without batting an eye, Sir Henry tells him that an invention without know-how is seldom worth that much money. Bond says he thinks he can get the know-how. Then Sir Henry sees no reason why Bond should not get what he is asking. At that moment Sir Henry notices a friend behind Bond in the crowd. He waves him over. Bond turns at the sound of a familiar voice. It is Nigel Yupland. He greets Sir Henry warmly, then slaps Bond on the back. "Getting a little R & R?". He turns to Sir Henry, "I see you've met one of our seasoned agents, James Bond. He's down here to give me a hand with that matter I spoke to you about". Sir Henry smiles like a cobra, "An agent?". Connie looks as if she is about to lose her dinner. Winkhart is impassive. Bond rises to go. Connie tries to leave but Sir Henry's hand grips her like a vise below the table, "Don't you have something for me?". Her hand goes to her bracelet, she surreptitiously removes the computer chip, then holds out her hand to Bond bidding him good evening. He shakes her hand and exits. As Bond makes his way through the crowd, Yupland shouts after him to stop by the office in the morning. Bond doesn't look back. At the door he looks down at the computer chip Connie slipped him. The words "Kohoni Industries" are printed on the top.

After Bond exits, Denholm spots Rodin guiding Connie firmly to the elevators obviously against her will.

Hong Kong, Aberdeen, floating market, New Year's celebrations:

Bond drives the Aston to the entrance of the restaurant. One hand holds the wheel, the other, out of sight behind the seat, holds his gun. He relaxes when he sees Mi Wai, now dressed in festival costume, pulls open the passenger door and gets in. Mi Wai tells him it is too crowded here, she Suggests a restaurant in the countryside.

Ching's offices:

In the loading dock area of Sir Henry's building, he and Rodin walk up to a brilliant black prototype stealth, robotic sports car. The car is a "fun vehicle". Sir Henry has designed along the lines of a fighter plane to hunt and destroy other vehicles. Sir Henry clearly relishes the idea of pitting himself against the best MI5 has to offer. Rodin, dressed in a black fire suit, dons a special helmet and swings into the front seat. He plugs himself into the car and flicks a switch. A digital display incorporating the most sophisticated radar and infrared tracking devises are displayed heads up on Rodin's helmet visor. "Good hunting", Sir Henry tells him as he slams the door shut. Rodin peels out of the loading dock area. Sir Henry buoyantly moves to a viewing theater where Winkhart, Dr. Lombardy wait. Two henchmen bring Connie into the room. Connie tells Sir Henry that they will have to let her go if they want to get their hands on the chip. Sir Henry only laughs. He flicks on the monitor, the black car's forward point of view is projected on the screen in high resolution computer graphics. To Connie it appears an elaborate video game.

Road:

Mi Wai directs Bond to a remote mountain road. He speeds up when he notices Rodin's black sports car following them. Rodin consults the electronic map on one of his displays, then turns off his lights and switches to night vision. Although it is dark outside, Rodin can see almost as clearly as if he were driving in daylight. Back in the viewing theater Sir Henry and his cronies are shouting encouragement at the screen.

For a moment Bond relaxes when he no longer sees headlights in his rear view mirror. But when the headlights of an on coming car passes Bond and then illuminate Rodin's car briefly, Bond's instincts go on full alert. Mi Wai asks what is wrong, Bond says they are being following. Rodin targets Bond's car with the round sight of his 20 mm cannon. Bond decides to switch off his lights. His headlights switch to infrared. He drives for a moment in total blackness then the windshield glows red, illuminating the landscape in an eerie red glow. From Rodin's point of view it seems the Aston has suddenly disappeared into the blackness.

In the screening room the audience groans. But they cheer when Rodin switches on his Track-While-Scan radar and Bond's car can be clearly seen once more. Bond's car is outlined by a box on Rodin's heads-up display. Rodin arms a radar guided missile. A diamond shape is superimposed over the box and the words "Target lock" flash on the heads-up display. In Bond's car a buzzer sounds and the radar warning light flashes. Bond immediately engages electronic counter measures. Rodin's thumb is about to push the fire button when the target locking diamond switches off.

Now both cars are locked in a one hundred mile per hour high speed dual along a narrow seaside road. Back in the viewing theater, Connie slowly comes to the realization that this is no game. The Aston drops a few time delayed grenades in Rodin's path. They explode harmlessly as Rodin deftly avoids them. Rodin switches to his infrared targeting system. When the Aston is locked on he fires a missile.

In Bond's car all hell breaks lose as the warnings of a missile launch are detected. Bond launches a hot flare just as Rodin's missile is about to hit the rear of the Aston, the missile chases the flare and explodes as it hits a nearby tree.

The speed of the Aston is no mach for Rodin's car. Only Bond's quick reflexes and ingenious maneuvering keeps them from death. The two vehicles continue to duel like fighter jets across the countryside. Rodin comes right up to Bond's rear bumper and locks on to the fleeing Aston. He then engages his 20 mm cannon and opens fire on Bond. Bond raises his bullet proof shield but clearly it will only be a matter of seconds before the shield is annihilated by the relentless hail of the 20 mm gun.

Realizing that the killer car is mirroring his exact moves, Bond accelerates crashing through the safety barrier and over the cliff. Rodin's car still locked on the Aston veers after it. Rodin, caught by surprise, tries desperately to abort the sophisticated system: too late. His car follows Bond's flying hundreds of feet off the seaside cliff. Mi Wai braces herself for the worst. But the roof of the Aston slides away and Bond fires the ejection button. Both he and Mi Wai, still strapped to their seats, are rocketed out of the Aston and parachute to safety.

Boos fill the screening room at the sight of Bond's parachute. The group grows silent as Rodin's vehicle plunges into the sea and the screen goes black. The only sound is an involuntary exclamation of triumph from Connie. Sir Henry furiously orders him men to take her up to his penthouse.

Trapped inside, Rodin sinks to the bottom of the bay. With superhuman strength, he smashes out the windshield only to have tons of sea water rush in on him.

Bond removes his parachute harness and turns to find the decidedly unpleasant barrel of a pistol thrust against his temple. Mi Wai tells him to keep his hands in sight as she speaks rapidly into a small hand held radio. In a few moments Bond hears the distinctive beat of a helicopter. Suddenly the area is illuminated by bright landing lights as a helicopter touches down. Mi Wai prods Bond forward. As Bond climbs aboard he see the insignia of the Chinese Red Army on the side of the helicopter. They buckle up. The chopper lifts off heading toward the mainland.

Chinese camp:

As they fly deeper into China, the jungle tree tops below gradually give way to more and more desolate land. They finally touch down at a temporary camp of the Red Army. Bond is hustled into the commander's tent where he stands in front of Quen Low. Barely able to rein in the anger the mere sight of Bond provokes, Quen demands to know why Bond is in Hong Kong. Bond give him an evasive wise ass answer. Quen tells him it is a well known fact that wherever James Bond goes, death and destruction follow. He reminds Bond that they have had conflicts before. Bond tells him that times change. Quen says he has a long memory; about the British and Bond in particular. Bond says Quen has not brought him all this way for a simple chat about British-Chinese relations, what is going on? Quen lays his cards on the table. His government received a threat demanding the Chinese declare Hong Kong a free and independent state [Remember that in 1990, a constitution was adopted in anticipation of the handover of British Colony's Hong Kong to China, which would take place in 1997] or a disaster would befall one of their nuclear power plants. The Chinese thought the threat was the work of a lunatic. Unfortunately they ignored it. Quen hands Bond a radiation suit.

Remains of the Nanking' power plant:

They enter an armored car and proceed across the checkpoint. Fallen livestock litters the countryside. As they near the nuclear plant which we saw Sir Henry destroy from his Command Center, soldiers in radiation suits mop up nuclear waste. Quen tells Bond it was a close call, if atmospheric conditions had not been perfect thousands of persons would have been killed by the fall out. Bond asks to view the plant. The radiation is so high they can only stay inside for a few minutes. They don radium detectors and go inside to view the wreckage.

With the detectors chattering wildly Bond quickly finds the remains of a robot at the center of the core. Quen tells them the robot ran amuck causing the accident. Bond turns it over, examining its ID plate. The manufacturer: Kohoni Industries, Tokyo. He removes the controller subassembly and inserts the chip Connie slipped him at the party. It fits perfectly.

Outside the reactor Quen Low tells Bond he suspects the British are hatching a plot to renege on returning Hong Kong to Chinese rule in 1997. Bond's presence in Hong Kong confirms his fears. Bond now understands what is going on. He hands over the computer chip. Sir Henry hired Connie to substitute his computer chip for the one originally in the Kohoni robot. The robot was then under Sir Henry's control. Quen verifies that the robot had just arrived the day before. Bond tells him the same sort of things have been happening to the British, he is sure Sir Henry is behind the plot. But why?

He wants to know what Bond has to do with Sir Henry? Quen tells Bond that Sir Henry's father was a General in Chian Kai Shek's Army. When Shek was defeated, Sir Henry's father fled south to Burma with the Shek's treasury and raised an army. He ruled as a War Lord. Making his money in the opium trade. As a young man Quen was sent in to destroy the war lord and his poisonous trade. The father and most of his men were killed but Sir Henry and his English mother escaped to Hong Kong. Sir Henry has managed to keep his true origins secret. Utilizing his genius for electronics he has managed to build financial empire. But Quen knows Sir Henry, "The fruit never falls far from the tree". He is a criminal just like his father and will not rest until he has extracted a terrible revenge against China. Quen becomes disgusted as he tells the story, Sir Henry is a menace, but the British are so blind they knighted him. Bond tells him he needs to follow up some leads in Hong Kong.

Like it or not they will have a better chance of solving this if they work together. Mi Wai agrees. They only have 24 hours until the next threat is carried out. Despite Quen's misgivings he allows Bond to go.

Hong Kong, Universal Exports' Asian offices:

Mi Wai drops Bond off in front of a nondescript building in a busy commercial area of Hong Kong. She says she will wait, they don't have much time. He enters the far east office of Universal Exports. The reception area has the quaint atmosphere of a bygone era; old wooden desks and mechanical Chinese typewriters. There is little activity save a few clerks hand entering accounts in large old ledger books. An elderly receptionist recognizes Bond immediately. She buzzes him through a steal fire door marked "NO ADMITTANCE".

Bond walks into a totally different world of high tech communications, bustling with activity. He tells the harried receptionist he's here to see Yupland. While she announces Bond over the phone, he walks past her into Yupland's office. Yupland wants to know what is hell is going on, where has Bond been, why hasn't he been given updates on the investigating. While Bond has been cavorting around the city a third letter has just been delivered. "Demanding the British withdraw from Hong Kong", Bond tells him. Yupland is stunned, how would Bond know that? The letter was delivered only minutes ago.

Bond reports on his trip to the reactor in Nanking. One of the Kohoni robots which had been reprogrammed by Sir Henry, entered the core area and tampered with the rods causing a meltdown. Sir Henry had the Kohoni twins killed when traced the break-ins at their plant back to him.

Yupland tells him that is preposterous, he refuses to believe Sir Henry is involved with anything like that. Industrially espionage is part of the high stakes game Sir Henry plays, but not murder and certainly not terrorism. And as far as the Kohonis are concerned, Yupland has a list as long as his arm of people who wanted them dead. Sir Henry is one of the most important suppliers of military equipment to Britain. He has been checked and double checked by Yupland's department and been given a clean bill. He is a key element in the future of Hong Kong. When other businessman are deserting Hong Kong in droves before Hong Kong reverts to Chinese control in 1997, he is making new investments. With an English mother and a Chinese father, he is the perfect spokesman for the future of Hong Kong. He is a knight of the British Realm. Yupland has even asked Sir Henry to help with this case.

Bond tells him he has put the fox in charge of the chicken coop. His blind faith in Sir Henry almost got Bond killed when he blew his cover. God only knows what happened to Connie. Yupland tells Bond he is off the case. Bond tells Yupland to stop being a bloody fool, they only have 20 hours left. They should order a commando raid on Sir Henry's complex immediately. Yupland is fed up with Bond's paranoid ranting. He orders Bond back to England on the next flight. Bond tells him to go to hell and storms out of the office. Yupland calls security and tells them to arrest Bond.

Ching's apartment:

Sir Henry on the balcony of his penthouse atop the High Rise: he looks over the city which will soon be his. Posed provocatively in the doorway behind him is a beautiful woman, Nan. He gets a call on a visual monitor from inside the room. Nan steps aside to let him pass. A technician on the monitor informs that he has located Bond.

As Bond enters the hallway at Universal Imports, he passes a security robot. With a sense of foreboding, he peers at the machine; it is completely impassive. Cut to the reverse: Bond looking into the fish eye lens of the security robot as seen on the monitor in Sir Henry's room. Sir Henry is delighted, "There's our ubiquitous Mr. Bond". He strokes Nan's leg, "Send Rodin to find him". The technician informs him Rodin is already on his way.

Streets of Hong Kong:

Bond walks briskly to Mi Wai's car. He gets in. He tells her Yupland refuses to believe Sir Henry is involved. He will need her help. She pulls out into the traffic passing a helmeted messenger on a motorcycle at the side of the road. It is Rodin. Strapped to the side of his cycle is a document tube, or is it?

Mi Wai drives along the coast road. She tells him that she thinks Sir Henry's control center is in the sub basement of his building. But it is impossible to penetrate the security. The place is a bomb proof. What can they do without a full scale military operation? Rodin follows behind them on the motorcycle. He lines up the document tub with the rear of her car. Suddenly he hears the sound of a siren overtaking him. A jeep of Royal Marine MP's pass him and pulls Mi Wai over Rodin stops across the road from them.

The Marines approach the car and ask Bond to step out. Across the road Rodin shoulders the document tub, which is actually a portable missile launcher, locks on Mi Wai's car, and fires. The rocket explodes under the car sending it flying over the dock into the water below. The Marines hit the deck. The burning car sinks out of sight. Bond, temporarily unconsciousness, floats out the open door. Mi Wai has been killed instantly.

The Marines radio for help. Out of sight on the other side of the cove, Bond struggles out of the water. Confused, in shock, he just manages to crawl under the dock.

Ching's apartment:

Flanked by Rodin, Connie sits stiffly in Sir Henry's penthouse. The door to the bedroom opens and Sir Henry strides out, flushed from love making, and fill with vigor. Through the open door Connie spots Nan lying prostrate on the bed behind a curtain of white flowing gauze. Sir Henry takes Connie's face in his hands, "Tell me, my dear, why did you bring a British Agent to spy on me?". Connie tells him that she had no idea that Bond was an agent. It was a simple business deal, Bond attached himself to her. She is glad to be rid of him. She would like to be paid and be on her way. Sir Henry is pleased to hear that he tells her, because the meddlesome Bond is dead. Connie's eyes well with tears. She shrinks from his touch. Sir Henry misinterprets Connie' grief for Bond as fear for her own well being. He tells her not to worry, to harm such exquisite female flesh would be a crime. He has plans for her. In the meantime he has a few things to attend to. Nan will keep her company. She looks up to see Nan standing in the door way of the bedroom for a moment before turning away disappearing inside.

Streets of Hong Kong:

Later, Q, Denholm and Yupland watch as a wrecking crew haul what is left of Mi Wai and her car out of the Water. It is impossible that Bond could have survived. Denholm tells them that if the divers don't find the body by nightfall they never will. "Sharks", he explains. Q turns away, there are tears in his eyes. Yupland notice Q for the first time. He asks who authorized Q's trip. Q lights into him, they just lost their best agent and they have ten hours to save Hong Kong and Yupland is worried about a bloody air ticket. He storms off before Yupland can reply.

Crisp's quarters:

Denholm and Q enter Denholm's quarters drunk as skunks from drowning their sorrows with vast amounts of gin. The first thing they see are a pile of dirty clothes on the chair. Then they hear someone in the bath. They open the door. Bond is in the tub! Q has to sit down. He thought Bond was dead. Bond tells Q there is a list on the desk of things he will need. And he is going to need Denholm's help. Bond is kicking himself, Mi Wai was killed because got careless. Q gets up to get the list. Bond tells them not a word to anyone, he is officially dead and wants to stay that way. It is the only edge he has and he wants to keep it.

Hong Kong sewers:

Denholm leads Bond through the maze of sewers beneath the city of Hong Kong. From time to time he consults the ancient map he has brought with him. The stench is so overpowering, they are forced to don re-breathers like firemen wear to enter smoke filled buildings. Finding the pipe they have been searching for, Denholm wishes Bond God's speed as Bond squeezes himself into one of the sewer outlet pipes.

Bond pushes a bag of equipment ahead of him as he shimmies through the pipe. It is the pipe that carries the waste effluent from Sir Henry's building. When Bond reaches the end of the pipe he takes out an acetylene torch and cuts a hole just wide enough for his shoulders. He pulls himself out and strips off his overalls.

Ching's building:

He is now in the bowels of the building in a forest of pipes, generators, and other equipment. But he is inside the security perimeter. He searches for the fire mains. It is a red pipe about 24 inches in diameter. He finds the manual shut off valve and squirts quick setting epoxy resin into it. Then, using a portable electric hacksaw, he cuts the valve handle off and tacks it on again with a dollop of epoxy. A maintenance engineer almost discovers him. After checking over the area, nothing seems amiss, so the engineer returns to his duties.

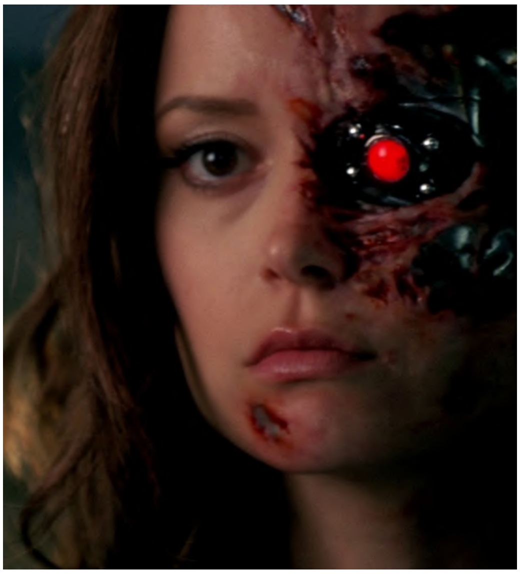
Bond then goes to the fire pump which provides high pressure to the upper floors of the building in the event of a fire. He disassembles the control switch for the top floor and inserts a timer which will close the circuit and start the pump in ten minutes. Before closing up the control panel Bond disables the pressure governor. Then, evading surveillance robots and a few human maintenance engineers, he heads for the elevator shaft with his bag.

In his impregnable bunker immediately below the basement, Sir Henry is beginning his countdown to destruction.

Ching's apartment:

Now in the elevator shaft, Bond climbs atop an elevator and rides it to the penthouse where Connie is being held. He gets on to the gantry and into the air-conditioning ducts. He snakes his way through the ducts to her room. He removes the grate and climbs down into the room. Connie can not believe he is alive. She falls into his arms. Bond tells her they have to hurry.

In the door way of the bed room Nan appears in form fitting corset and spandex shorts. She glides gracefully into the room. Connie says that she is Sir Henry's mistress, totally harmless. Bond apologetically explains they will have to tie her up. Nan wordlessly comes face to face with him. She suddenly lashes out knocking him across the room. Connie grapples with her, grabbing the top of her corset. Nan flings Connie aside, the corset comes off in her hands reveling metal breast works. Nan is a lethal security robot! [Sic!]. As Bond scrambles to his feet Nan suddenly springs at him attacking with surprising speed and power. Bond finally maneuvers her to the window and steps aside as Nan moves in for the kill, she crashes through the window setting of alarms.



Bond grabs Connie and pulls her into the duct. The security system no longer show Connie as present in the building. Rodin slips on his helmet and automatic gun and rushes up to investigate. Bond gets her back to the elevator shaft. They quickly strap on repelling harness. Rodin finds her room empty. He rushes to the elevator shaft, forcing the doors open, he sees Bond and Connie repelling down. He calls the elevator and rides it down after them. Connie and Bond have to swing out of the way to avoid being crushed by the hurtling high speed elevator. Rodin stops the elevator below them and climbs out the emergence hatch at the top. He then begins to stalk them in the elevator shaft.

In the basement control center Sir Henry, is readying his diabolical attack. The Bond's timer switches on the fire pump. A dial shows a pressure build up in the pipes leading to the top floor. In the building's security control room a red light goes on indicating the fire pump is activated. But there is no indication of a fire. It must be some kind of malfunction, security is asked to check it out.

Bond and Connie put up a good fight but are eventually subdued by Rodin and his men. They are taken to Sir Henry in the Control room.

Ching's Control Room:

Sir Henry is amused to see Bond and Connie. He is still trying to decide what kind of catastrophe to cause. Maybe Bond would like to suggest something? Bond tells Sir Henry that the authorities will soon find out who is behind the terrorist attacks and come to visit him. Sir Henry is not worried. It can cause them more problems than they can imagine. Besides robotics, he has other devices he can control. Every navigation, communications, weapons and missile guidance system in the world has essential components manufactured by one of Sir Henry's companies. "Fools believe their weapons make them invincible. In their paranoid whims, they waste billions on weapons systems built by my companies, but in reality they have become imprisoned by their own armor. Every military and commercial unit in the world can be instantly paralyzed from this room", he boasts. The perfect demonstration comes to mind. Would Bond like to see what would happen if he released a clandestine computer virus that he programmed into one of the Royal Navy's Polaris submarines so that it ordered a missile attack on Shanghai? It would be fun. He orders his men to begin the countdown.

Sir Henry is amused to see Bond and Connie. He is in the final stages of trying to decide what kind of disaster to choose. Perhaps Bond would like to suggest something? Bond tells Sir Henry the authorities will soon learn who is behind the terrorist attacks and come after him. Sir Henry is not concerned. He can cause them more trouble then they know. Besides robotics he has a whole array of other devices that he can call upon. All navigation, communication, weapon, and missile guidance systems in the world have critical components manufactured by one of Sir Henry's companies. "The fools believe their weapons give them invincibility. In paranoid flights of fancy they lavish billions on weapons systems built by my companies, but in actuality they have become imprisoned in their own armour. Every military and commercial unit in the world can be instantly paralyzed from this room", he boasts. The perfect demonstration suddenly occurs to him. Would Bond like to see what would happen if he unleashes a clandestine computer virus he programmed into one of the Royal Navy's Polaris submarines that orders a missile attack on Shanghai? This will be fun. He orders his people to begin the countdown.

Ching's building:

A guard patrolling the upper floor corridor reports nothing unusual over his walkie-talkie. The pressure indicator on the fire pump has moved into the red danger area sounding an alarm. Back in the corridor the guard hears a noise from the fire hose which is folded up in a glass enclosed case. He peers through the glass at it. Suddenly the valve explodes sending a torrent of water into the hose. The hose inflates in a fraction of a second shattering the case and knocking the guard off his feet. At the same time the valves of the ceiling sprinklers in the rooms on the top floor burst shooting out a torrent of water. In the corridor the fire hose bursts and water gushes out of the open valve.

A guard patrolling a floor below the upper floor notices a drop of water coming from ceiling. He goes into the emergency staircase and notices water running down the stairs. On the upper floor he see water gushing from the open fire hose valve like an open fire hydrant. He reports the break over his radio and tries to shut off the valve but it has been shattered by the force of the water.

In the security control room they notify maintenance of the problem. The maintenance engineer rushes to the fire pump, the on/off switch doesn't work. He reports the problem to Sir Henry in the control room. Sir Henry smiles at Bond, has he been playing silly games? He tells the engineer to switch off the electric mains. He then orders the control room to prepare to switch to auxiliary power. He turns to Bond; this pathetic attempt to disrupt his plans will come to nothing.

The engineer shuts down the power mains in the building. All the lights go out. Sir Henry orders his men to go on to auxiliary power and continue the count down.

The guard in the upper floor corridor tells the control room that the water flow has only slightly lessened, the situation is totally out of control. The engineer says he will have to turn off the fire mains. When he tries to shut off the valve, it breaks off in his hands. "I think we have a problem", he tells the control room. Sir Henry is amused by the challenge. He looks at Bond with renewed respect. Just what is Bond's plan? He tells his men to hurry up the countdown.

The guard on the upper floor sees water running from under a conference room door. He opens it. The water level in the room is head high, it surges out into the corridor sweeping the guard off his feet to the stairwell. He shouts a warning into his radio just as he and the water cascade into the stairwell in a great water fall.

In the control room Bond takes advantage of the panic to grab Connie and race for the door. Rodin follows them into the stair well spotting Bond and Connie just as they dive to safety through a door on the floor above. Rodin enters the stairwell just as the cascade of water hits. He is knocked off his feet and swept to his death.

Sir Henry has almost finished his countdown when the great wave of water floods the control room. He escapes but most of his men are drowned. He manages to get up to the next higher level. The water is rising all around him. He sees Bond and Connie carried by the water into the darkened maintenance area. He dons Rodin's night vision helmet and pursues them. Bond gropes his way to the hole he cut in the sewer line and pushes Connie inside. The water is rising dangerously high all around them. Sir Henry catches up with them in the dark using the night vision glasses. He fights Bond who is handicapped by the darkness. Bond finds welding torch, ignites it, and thrusts the blinding flame into Sir Henry's visor overloading the night vision circuits. Now it is Sir Henry who is blinded. Bond dispatches him and dives into the sewer pipe and escapes with Connie in the nick of time.

ALBERT R. BROCCOLI PRODUCTIONS PRESENTS
TIMOTHY DALTON
AS IAN FLEMING'S
JAMES BOND 007
IN
A WHISPER FROM HELL
ALBERT R. BROCCOLI'S EON PRODUCTIONS PRESENTS
TIMOTHY DALTON AS IAN FLEMING'S JAMES BOND 007 IN "A WHISPER FROM HELL"
ANTHONY HOPKINS LUCY LIU KEN WATANABE ELIZABETH HURLEY
MUSIC BY JOHN BARRY PRODUCTION DESIGN BY PETER LAMONT SCREENPLAY BY MICHAEL FRANCE AND BRUCE FEIRSTEIN
PRODUCED BY MICHAEL G. WILSON AND BARBARA BROCCOLI DIRECTED BY MARTIN CAMPBELL
007 Gun logo Symbol © 1962 Danjaq, LLC and United Artists Corporation. All rights reserved.
James Bond, 007 Gun Symbol Logo, and Other Bond-related Trademarks TM Danjaq, LLC.
Inspired and based on elements and materials from EON's movies and visuals.
© 2011 - Stéphane TRON - http://007art.free.fr
UA

July 6, 1990' script: hang gliding, Canada and virtual reality

> - Alfonse Ruggiero[25] : Michael decided that I should type the script. I never typed up to that point, I used a number two pencil and [being dyslexic] I had an assistant for 20 years at the studio. I type now but I didn't then. So he made the computer code on this computer that he got from somewhere. It was one of the first portable computers and it weighed about 40 pounds. But it was a computer system that he installed. I'm not sure there was a Word program at that point.

Ruggiero explains that the script was written at Wilson's house, who lived in Malibu[26]. The screenwriter remembers that they discussed the story while Wilson was baking his own bread or while hiking with him[27].

Alfonse Ruggiero Jr. and Michael G. Wilson eventually turned their treatment into a complete 135-pages script. This "first draft screenplay" is dated July 6, 1990 and the story-line is very similar to the previous treatment that we have just seen. We notice that the production company indicated on the header page is curiously not EON Productions but "Warfield Productions" (the banner under which Chitty Chitty Bang Bang had been produced).

FADE IN:

Gun Barrel Logo - BOND THEME MUSIC - Bond turns and fires his gun. Blood trickles down the screen as the circle of the gun zooms out to-

EXT. LUSH MOUNTAIN TOP - DAY

SOUND OF STARTING PISTOL. MAN and WOMAN CONTESTANTS attached in tandem to hang glider run off edge of cliff and soar into space gliding a thousand feet above a vast plane.

to reveal the mountainside is alive with bright splashes of color as MORE CONTESTANTS in multi-colored jump suits ready their equally colorful hang gliders as they wait their turn to start the International Mixed Tandem Team Hang Gliding Championship. Next in line are A MAN (whose face is hidden while he makes a final adjustment to his equipment) and ALLISON IVES, an attractive world class hang gliding champion pressed into service by MI5 as an Agent.

ANNOUNCER
(over PA system)
The next contestants are a British team, the three time world champion runner up and Captain of the British Women's team, Allison Ives, and a new comer to Hang Gliding Competition, her partner...

CLOSER ON MAN

as Announcer gropes for his name. He looks up, it is JAMES BOND.

BOND
Bond, James Bond.

WIDER INCLUDING ALLISON

as they step forward to take their marks, each wears a hip pack. Allison is uncharacteristically nervous. At the SOUND OF THE STARTING SHOT they run to the edge and leap off.

EXT. AIR TO AIR HANG GLIDER - DAY

Allison and Bond drop sharply then gain speed and soar out across the sky. They expertly trim the Glider, then fall into line following the team ahead of them around a promontory out of sight of the Crowd at the starting line.

Suddenly they move away from the other competitors, pass through a narrow opening between rocks, and arrive in sight of an industrial complex called Jallial Chemical Fertilizers.

> - Bond: This will be a piece of cake. The satellite infrared photos show there are no guards inside.

As they fly over the roof of one of the buildings, Bond detaches himself from the hang glider to land on the roof while Allison goes to join the other competitors (while inflating a sort of mannequin, to make it look like that Bond is still with her).

007 uses special tools to shut off the alarm system and rappels down inside the building from a skylight of the roof. Once inside, he discovers that everything is ultra-modern since as he is facing a production line (of nerve gas) automated via robotic machines. He puts on a gas mask and wraps his belt (which contains plastic explosives) over a tank and inserts a detonator which he sets for 3 minutes.

A security robot described as "four wheeled [...] fabricated from layers of teflon and kevlar making [...] silent and quick" picks up Bond via its infrared sensors. Its lights change from green to red and it warns soldiers located further away who then get into a Jeep. The robot approaches Bond:

> - Robot: Halt! You are to wait for security personnel.

Bond turns around, ready to throw a throwing knife at the person who said these words, but discovers that it is a robot three times smaller than him.

No time to be relieved as the robot illuminates a laser pointer between his two eyes and when Bond moves away, deploys a light and sound device that emits a blinding flash and a deafening explosion noise. Bond falls to his knees and the robot knocks him down again when he tries to get up.

> - Robot (in 5 languages): This is your second and final warning.

007 decides to get up and the robot tries to taser him between his eyes but Bond is faster and avoids it.

A sort of Uzi sub-machine gun pulls out of a compartment of the robot and spits its bullets towards Bond who then has to jump through a crusher to avoid them. Bullets hit a vat of sticky toxic waste and Bond tries to take a route that causes the robot to pass under the liquid falling from it. It works: the liquid covers the laser that allow the robot to moves; the latter is now "blinded".

Suddenly a radar dish deploys from the robot and the chase resumes. 007 goes to his rope from the skylight and climb it up to the roof.

INT. INDUSTRIAL COMPLEX - OBSERVATION ROOM

The radar scanner on the SSR [Self-propelled Security Robot] retracts and a parabolic microphone pops out in its place. The microphone sweeps the ceiling. It comes to a stop where it picks up the SOUND OF BOND'S FOOTFALLS. The gun turns and trains on the spot.

EXT. INDUSTRIAL COMPLEX - ROOF

Bond crossing the roof. Suddenly bullets start peppering his footsteps. He bounds across the roof and leaps off.

INT. INDUSTRIAL COMPLEX - PRODUCTION LINE

INSERT TIMER

The last seconds tick off.

EXT. INDUSTRIAL COMPLEX - ROOF

Building is rocked by explosion.

EXT. INDUSTRIAL COMPLEX

Bond lands on the roadway and begins to run for the fence. Behind him there is a second explosion which lifts the roof off the complex.

EXT. INDUSTRIAL COMPLEX - MAIN GATE

Jeep jerks to a stop, Officer and DRIVER duck for cover. Officer grabs Mic and speaks excitedly into the radio.

EXT. INDUSTRIAL COMPLEX - ELECTRIFIED FENCE

Bond screws a metal stake into the ground which is connected by a one inch copper wire to a switch. He connects the wire on the other end of the switch to the electric wires on the fence, then closes the switch.

EXT. ELECTRIC FENCE - TRANSFORMERS smoke, then short out.

EXT. INDUSTRIAL COMPLEX - ELECTRIFIED FENCE

Bond snips his way through fence and wiggles out. He cuts across road and runs down hill.

EXT. MOUNTAINSIDE

Bond making his way down toward A SUSPENSION BRIDGE across deep gorge.

The soldiers arrived in a Jeep chase Bond who finds himself trapped in the middle of the bridge with soldiers at each end.

Allison approaches Bond with her hang glider when suddenly a "black" helicopter called by the soldiers as reinforcements arrives behind her. She is machine-gunned but manages to stop under the bridge by hanging on to it; Bond joins her and they take off again together (there's a quip: "He had an inflated ego" when Bond drop out the inflated dummy).

They avoid the ground at the last moment and the helicopter (with a machine gunner) chases them in the air.

At one point Bond maneuvers to position himself facing the helicopter; Allison think he his crazy and tries to regain control but he unbuckles her harness and she falls into a river.

As the hang glider is about to hit the helicopter, Bond unbuckles his own harness. The helicopter crashes into the hang glider before veering towards a cliff where it explodes. Bond and Alison hurtle down river rapids, coming close to death, they approach a waterfall but manage to recover the hang glider (which has also fallen into the water) and take off with it.

With it they cross the finish line of the race and even finish first! As the spectator crowd applauds, Allison kisses Bond.

> - Alfonse Ruggiero[28] : We studied robotics and that became part of the opening that we did. Michael wrote the beginning and I think I wrote the rest of it. [...] Cubby came in and said, "This is the best Bond opening we've ever had".

OPENING CREDITS.

Shot of an aircraft carrier and several Harriers patrolling the China Sea. Suddenly one of the planes seems to have a technical problem, the pilot ejects. However, instead of crashing, the plane's instruments come back to life "on their own" and the plane heads unmanned towards China.

We find James Bond at the wheel of a "vintage car" which parks at Blenheim Palace. He sees a helicopter landing and Nigel Yupland, "a young rising star in the Ministry of Defense", getting out.

A Harrier fighter jet.

The Blenheim Palace is in this script the headquarters of the Secret Service.
The building would later be used in the 2015' film Spectre (doubling the exteriors of the organization's meeting place in Rome).

INT. BLENHEIM PALACE - RECEPTION HALL

Bond shows BLENHEIM GUARD I.D. He is directed through Library to Office.

INT. BLENHEIM PALACE - LIBRARY

Bond walks through enormous Library to door leading to Office. He knocks and enters.

INT. BLENHEIM PALACE - MONEYPENNY'S TEMP OFFICE

MONEYPENNY turns from the file cabinet. Bond surveys the opulent Quarters.

BOND
Pity to see you roughing it temporary billet, Moneypenny.

MONEYPENNY
I. wish I had time to enjoy it, James. But all manner of hell has broken out. You're to go right in.

Moves to open the door. She pauses, her back to the door leading to M's Office.

MONEYPENNY
And how was your trip with Ms. Ives?

BOND
It had it's ups and downs

MONEYPENNY
(with envy)
I'm sure you did.

BOND
Why, Moneypenny, you have a standing invitation to go hang gliding with me any time.

MONEYPENNY
I'm not so sure I'm ready for that, James.

Unseen the door opens silently behind her, M appears in the doorway.

MONEYPENNY
(spread her arms as if hang gliding)
Being strapped into a harness and abandoning myself completely to you...

M interrupts them and Bond follows him through the library to the ballroom (converted into a briefing room with video projector, photos on the walls, etc.) where Yupland awaits them. He is a man who attempted to dismantle the 00 Section before, we learn. Yupland begins by saying that he/they are here only at the request of the Prime Minister and that:

> - Yupland: One more thing, Double-Ought-Seven. The "cowboy days" of fancy sports cars and unlimited expense accounts are over. And report to me every step of the way.

An Admiral named Stalward comes to report on the disappearance of the Harrier and tells us that the plane crashed in a very populated area of a Chinese city (satellite photos and local television news on the screen behind him). Yupland is skeptical: for him nothing prove it was the Harrier which was at the origin of the explosion, and he rather thinks of Chinese propaganda, aimed at influencing the negotiations on the subject of the handover of Hong Kong which must take place in 4 days, "I'm not falling for it!". He gets up and leaves.

McGreggor, a chief inspector from Scotland Yard who was attending the meeting, approach Bond and M. He tells them that recently, there have been a series of break-ins at various British factories where strangely nothing was apparently stolen. One of them manufactures automatic pilots for Harriers. McGreggor has a photo of the burglar's face, but the quality is not good.

We find Q behind a computer, trying to improve the quality of the picture with Bond. However the computer is not powerful enough (the Q-lab is deserted, Q tells 007 that it has been decided to close it due to budget cuts). Q tells him to come back tomorrow: he will try on a Cambridge computer. Before leaving Bond sees the Aston Martin DB5 in the laboratory:

> - Q: They've told me to junk her. I can't bare it. Like selling off one of your children.
> - Bond: The world's running out of old classics, Q. See you in the morning.

Meanwhile in Vancouver (Canada), our burglar is infiltrating a Chinese-British industrial complex belonging to "Koho Nee Industries". He lowers himself from a skylight via a rope and places a kind of sight over one of his eyes which allows him to see otherwise invisible laser rays. He goes to a crate addressed to Nanking (China) and replaces a component of a robotic machine located inside with a similar one. Just like in the May 10, 1990' treatment, two twins arrive at the complex: the Koho Nee brothers described as Chinese and resembling heavyweight sumo wrestlers.

They come to investigate an alarm that has gone off, rush inside and only find the mountaineering rope hanging from the skylight. Using an infrared scope, they saw the intruder balancing on the roofs and they order him to stop. There is still a scene on the roofs where the burglar uses a Schermuly Pains-Wessex Speedline before joining a black Lamborghini. The Koho Nee pursue him with their limousine but exactly as in the treatment, they lose him when the Lamborghini gets onto a boat. There we discover that the burglar is actually a woman: Connie Webb.

TWO OTHER CREWMAN unroll a high pressure hose on the deck behind her. She turns to face her car at the WHINE OF A HIGH PRESSURE PUMP. The men aim the jet of water from the hose at the car. The black paint washes away, uncovering the bright red paint below.

CLOSE ON CONNIE

As she snaps the bracelet closed, she smiles at a job well done.

DISSOLVE TO:

INT. Q'S LAB MORNING CLOSE ON COMPUTER MONITOR

Connie's likeness has been reconstructed into a clear image.

M (O.S.)
Constance Webb age 28.

ANGLE BOND, M, Q AND MCGREGGOR studying the reconstructed image.

M
Only daughter of Henry Leeland Webb.

BOND
The cat burglar?

M
The same. She was recruit by the CIA in '84. Trained at Langley to penetrate high security facilities. Plant bugs that sort of thing. Went free-lance about two years ago.

BOND
Any leads on where Ms. Webb is now?

M
We put out a global on her. Section C had some luck. She arrived in Vancouver two days ago, ostensibly on a ski holiday.

MCGREGGOR
It's a simple matter of having the local police pick her up for questioning.

BOND
She's a pro. She'd know the Canadians have no charges to hold her on. They'd get nothing out of her.

Bond decides to instead approach her with a cover, the one of someone who has a technological item to sell her. Q gives him a room temperature superconductor for this.

Arriving in Canada, Bond follows Connie's Lamborghini behind the wheel of a nondescript Toyota (although the action no longer takes place in Japan in this script). Things follow the May 10' treatment: she goes to a helipad, Bond boards another helicopter. She goes skiing on the Bugaboos mountains, he jumps from a helicopter on skis as in The World Is Not Enough to join her. A reckless chase between the two takes place with jumping, dodging trees, and they arrive at a steep cliff which she begins to descend. They jump from ledge to ledge but Connie slips and almost falls before getting back on track. Finally there is the scene where she ends up falling through an overhang of snow, Bond digs to get her out of the snow, "last one down buys dinner".

The scene at the restaurant overlooking the outdoor "jungle" baths is still present and contains dialogue that reflects what was previously written in the treatment (although we can note that a waiter calls Bond "Mr. Baker" and that they are not observed by Denholm Crisp but by a member of the Tong). He takes her back to her room:

> - Connie: You never said what kind of work you do.
> - Bond: I'm supplier of high tech items. I find people's needs and fill them.
> - Connie: Doesn't sound very exciting.
> - Bond: You'd be surprised.
> - Connie: Surprise me.

He kisses her and she lets him enter into her room. The dialogues are again similar to the treatment, we can however add when she opens the box of the superconductor:

> - Connie: Somehow I was expecting something more... Impressive. Diamonds, maybe.
> - Bond: It's worth considerably more than diamonds.

They are interrupted by the Koho Nee twins accompanied by Tongs in a scene similar to the treatment (handcuffs, asking questions, taser, through the window). Then things change as they head towards the garage to reach the Lamborghini.

While she starts it Bond fights against a Tong. She tells 007 its been some date, but that she is going to abandon him before having him killed because of her. With that she leaves in the Lamborghini and the Koho Nee chase her with their limousine on the icy mountain roads (no chase during a torch light parade with Bond in this script). There is a "[stunt to be arranged]" that allows Connie to get rid of her pursuers.

Connie then phones to Otto Winkhart. In Hong Kong the latter joins Sir Henry Lee Ching at his building. Things are a little different from the treatment. Ching is in a pagoda, in the eastern garden of the building where there are scientists, Rodin (described as an Eastern European bodyguard type) and Nan. "The atmosphere is like a University campus" and Henry is described as "a youngish 30 year old electronics genius [...] he has managed to build a technical empire unparalleled in the world".

Winkhart tells Ching (who is not constantly interrupted by his employees) that the Koho Nee have rejected his offer; the latter replies to organize a meeting with them. Winkhart shows him the superconductor; this greatly interests Ching who asks Winkhart to tell Connie to invite Bond to the party tomorrow night: he must meet him.

They go further into the building: the laboratories, where (Italians) scientists design exotic/futuristic military vehicles (tanks, helicopters, etc.). "It looks as if Giorgio Armani had been suddenly let loose in the laboratory", the screenwriters write to describe this. Henry tells Winkart that the important thing in this job is the image/aesthetic:

> - Ching: How else can you explain why the Americans would have lavished billions on the Stealth Bomber, a plane that isn't even as fast as a World War II fighter?

During the rest of his conversation, Henry says that he owns 82% of the robotics control market and that his company supplies at least one component on every weapons system in the world. This means "the power to decide the outcome of every military engagement. Even the power to start a war".

Meanwhile, still at his hotel in Canada, Bond is approached by a receptionist who tells him that someone has sent him a plane ticket to Hong Kong.

Accompanied by his chief scientist, Dr. Lombardy, Henry passes through other rooms of his building. Lombardy tells him that the Chinese haven't made an "announcement". Henry puts on a "virtual reality" suit and sits on a seat located in a spherical room. Lombardy goes behind computers and, in his virtual reality headset, Henry finds himself immersed in:

> A computer generated virtual-reality world in vivid colors which duplicates the core of the atomic power reactor in Nanking, China. We see the room through the eyes of the Koho Nee maintenance robot [the one Connie tampered with in their warehouse and which has since been delivered].

With a gauntlet, Henry controls the robot, which reproduces his exact movements, and begins to remove the rods from the reactor core. Suddenly a maintenance technician, having seen the robot going crazy, tries to dismantle it with a screwdriver. Henry sends him flying with the robot's claw arm but he comes back with an iron bar: Henry ends up strangling him with the robot's claw. Our villain resumes his work on the bars until the reactor core explodes. Lombardy comes to take an exhausted Henry out of his virtual reality equipment.

> - Henry: It was like being the machine. Like breathing life into it, then experiencing its death. It's like being... God.

An airliner lands at Hong Kong airport and 007 disembarks among the passengers. When going through customs, an officer asks Bond to follow him and takes him to a room where there is an Englishman (with a Scottish accent) of around 55 years old wearing a Hawaiian shirt. It is:

> - Man: Denholm Crisp, Chief of Section H, welcome to Hong Kong, Double-Oh-Seven.

Denholm grabs a bottle of Glenlivet from a basket marked "undeclared items" and pours him a glass (which Bond declines). 007 tells him he'll need a gun and Denholm says "I brought along your favorite" before handing him a "Walther P-9". "Should do nicely", Bond comments. They get into Crisp's vehicle.

BOEING YC-14
BOEING
YC-14

DENHOLM (CONT'D)
[Something else is going on in Nanking, right across the boarder. Very hush-hush. Overnight they brought down two] divisions from the North. Their Navy is on full alert. It's a powder keg, one spark... we could have a war on our hands.

In the distance it sounds like a small war has commenced.

DENHOLM
As if things weren't confusing enough, today's the start of the New Year's celebration; the Year of the Sheep.

BOND
Or Goat depending on whose translating.

DENHOLM
Right you are. There she is...

Denholm yanks the wheel making a suicidal turn, pacing a YC-14 as it taxis to a stop at the RAF Hanger. Denholm parks and they get out.

CLOSE ON YC-14 NOSE

as it yawns open and Q moves down the ramp looking understandably disgruntled after traveling half the globe.

ANGLE BOND AND DENHOLM

Watch as the DB-V [DB5] is unloaded.

BOND
Q, how did you manage it?

Q
You underestimate me, Double-Oh Seven, I still have friends in low places.

BOND
(rubs hand over sleek lines)
Some how I feel - less naked.

Q
I assumed that was a sensation you cultivated.
(off Bond's look))
Nevertheless, I'd rather you have her than turn her in for scrap. Although, if things run true to form, it won't make much difference.

The film must therefore mark the return of the DB5 (it was a time when this was still an innovative idea, not something that we find basically in almost each new opus).

Q adds that he's made some modifications to the car to update it, but before he finishes explaining, Bond drives away, leaving good old Q with Crisp and the bottle of Glenlivet.

Without knowing it, Bond crosses paths with Sir Henry's limousine which is heading towards the Koho Nee building. There takes place a scene very similar to the treatment (Henry wants to buy the twins' company, they don't want to, Rodin eliminates guards with his high-tech equipment and replaces the cleaner in a window washer; the Koho Nee die in the flames).

Bond arrives at the Imperial Hotel and checks in as Mr. Baker; he then meets Mi Wai. Here things also happen as in the treatment (tropical shower with Connie and the Aston Martin DB5 drive to Ching's party but with different dialogues). They go through security, including a scanner that produces a 3D rendering of all their possessions (Rodin sees that one of Bond's shoes is equipped with a throwing knife).

007 meets Winkhart and sees Henry who seems to be the host of the evening. To get information about him, Bond goes to see Crisp who is also at the party:

> - Crisp: He has the morals of an arms dealer in the brain of a genius, dangerous combination. Father was a big wig General during the war. Got on the wrong side of the China revolution. I'll wager in spite of all his English pretensions, our Sir Henry has never forgiven the British for not helping the Nationalists.

As before there is the little commando attack demonstration; Henry speaks up about his security system and ends up with "and [in case you're wondering] yes, there are salesmen available to take your orders". 007 opens his fortune cake and speaks with Henry (introducing himself as "Baker, James Baker").

SIR HENRY
Then the Year of the Goat will be a especially profitable for you.

Sir Henry smiles and waves to someone behind Bond.

YUPLAND (O.S.)
Sir Henry!

Bond's blood runs cold as he recognizes the sound of Yupland's voice behind him. Yupland, on his third whiskey, slaps him on the back.

YUPLAND
Having a little R & R, Bond?
[Rest and Recuperation]
(turns to Sir Henry)
I see you have met one of our seasoned agents, the legendary, James Bond - modern knight errant and scourge of Her Majesty enemies.
(conspiratorial to Bond))
I've enlisted Sir Henry's aid in the Hong Kong negotiations - never hurts to have genius on your side..

SIR HENRY
An Agent? Could have fooled me.

Winkhart is impassive. Connie slowly simmering.

YUPLAND
(to group)
Well, have to mingle. Drop by the office in the morning, Bond.

And he moves off into the crowd. Connie's eyes dart to Rodin who materializes at Sir Henry's side. Bond cooly glances a this watch - it is quarter to 10.

BOND
Afraid I have another appointment.
(stands, to Connie)
Can I give you a lift back to the hotel?

ANGLE RODIN'S HAND

clamping down firmly on Connie's shoulder to keeping her in her seat. Connie's system pumps adrenaline: flushed, nostrils flaring almost sexually, she stares at Bond.

CONNIE
I think I'll stay for a while.

Rodin relaxes his hand.

Connie slips to Bond the chip she stole from the Koho Nee's warehouse and Bond leaves.

> - Henry: Good night, Mr. Bond. And be very careful... It's New Year's, there are some deadly drivers on the road.
> - Bond: You'd be surprised how safety conscious I am. Good night.

Bond joins in DB5 the floating restaurant indicated in the fortune of his cake. There he meets Mi Wai who climb with him in the car and there is a chase lasting on several pages, between the Aston Martin DB5 and Henry's robotic car, which we are not gonna to talk again since it follows what was written in the treatment. There are, however, some modifications or clarifications that are interesting to note. Regarding the DB5, Bond activates a rear machine gun gadget at the same time he raises the rear armored shield; the ejection seat 2.0 is activated via the red button on the gear lever like in Goldfinger. The biggest change is that the enemy car is not driven by Rodin but by Sir Henry, remotely, via his virtual reality device. Henry also has several lines of dialogue such as:

> - Henry: The British are down to issuing antiques to their field operatives. Let's be sporting [by choosing the 20mm gun].
> [...]
> - Henry: He wants to play games [when Bond turns off his headlights].
> [...]
> - Henry: Say goodbye to Mr. Bond [when he locks on his missile].
> [...]
> - Henry: Killing Bond is more fun than I expected [during the chase].

Bond and Mi Wai parachute onto the beach, she points a gun at him; they board a Chinese helicopter. While they are in flight, Henry sends men to the beach who report that they found nothing apart the two parachutes.

On Henry's orders, Nan knocks out Winkhart "with all the form and grace of an NFL place kicker making a 50 yard field goal". Then Rodin throws the body into a chute which lead it into an automatic trash compactor where Winkhart is crushed.

007 and Mi Wai arrive at the Red Army camp where there is a meeting with Colonel Quen Low. The latter says that it is well known that wherever James Bond goes, death and destruction follows, and he has a list as long as his arm of crimes committed by Bond against his country. Bond asks Low what does he wants: "the truth", and if he doesn't give it to him, Bond will disappear forever. The Chinese received a note asking them to declare the independence of Hong Kong:

> - Bond: You think this has something to do with us?
> - Low: There is a pattern. The village destroyed by your Harrier. The demands in this note. Then this new disaster. [...]

Low adds that their two countries are on the brink of war.

> - Bond: If you want help, tell me the whole story.

They go by armored vehicle and anti-radiation suits to the remains of the Nanking power plant, things happen as in the treatment even if Henry's past is no more (and is rather less) developed in the script.

Bond and Mi Wai return to Hong Kong; she drops him off in her "roadster" in front of the Universal Exports offices. Bond has a little discussion with Yupland (again less dense than it was in the treatment). We note that at one point Yupland says to 007 that the Chinese must have manipulated him (Bond) by hiding an incident linked to their own incompetence at the power plant with a conspiracy theory that he swallowed. At another point Bond grabs Yupland by the collar. This goes further, Yupland chases after him, shouting that he will court martial him, as Bond heads towards the exit of the building. Bond draws his gun and aims in the direction of Yupland, who "falls back in panic", and shoots at a security camera (through which Henry was observing him, instead of a robot as in the treatment).

Rodin blows up the roadster with his motorcycle's document-holder rocket launcher; Mi Wai dies while Bond manages to survive.

After listening to a tape of Connie's interrogation, Henry is sure she knows almost nothing.

Meanwhile, the authorities fished out the roadster out the water. Q and Crisp return drunk to the Imperial Hotel and discover that Bond is still alive (Q kisses him on his cheeks in joy). We note that during the scene Bond is not sure which side Connie is on (and if he whether also going there to save her or not).

Crisp leads Bond through the sewers and the latter infiltrates Ching's building for a long sequence inside, perhaps inspired by the success of the recent Die Hard (1988)?

Bond sabotages some equipment then begins to climb the elevator shaft. There is an interesting difference with the treatment here since Ching and Lombardy are at this point using the elevator to get to the penthouse. This causes a dangerous scene with Bond having to hang on to the side of the elevator, having to dodge an oncoming elevator, do a jump, hang on to a beam; in short: he dodges death several times.

Henry visits Connie and tells her that everything is okay now that Bond is dead, then he leaves.

> - Rodin: Shall I deal with her?
> - Henry: No. I think I'll leave it to Nan. When I get back.

007 from a ventilation grill beckons Connie to join him by holding out his hand. Suddenly it's Nan who grabs his hand and pulls him out of the conduit. There is a fight between the three, interspersed with scenes where Henry and his technicians take remote control of a surface-to-air missile from a British frigate to send it at the Chinese equivalent of Air Force One containing Chinese dignitaries including the Minister of Foreign Affairs (accompanied by Quen Low).

INT. ROBOTIC CONTROL ROOM

Sir Henry steps up to the next Technician. He leans over to examine the screen.

INSERT AIR TRAFFIC CONTROL SCREEN showing progress of Chinese Jumbo jet.

TECHNICIEN #1 (O.S.)
They'll be in range in about ten minutes, Sir.

INT. PENTHOUSE LIVING ROOM

Connie cradling Bond's head as he comes around. Nan saunters into the room. She pushes Connie aside and roughly pulls Bond to his feet. Nan wallops Bond with palm thrust to the chest sending him over the couch. Connie grabs her by the back of her top...

CONNIE
Okay, you asked for it, bitch.

Nan effortlessly flings her down. As Connie is slammed to the floor, she stays hold of Nan's top, it rips away in her hand.

CONNIE'S POV OF TOP

false breasts sown into it.

CONNIE

looks up. Her puzzled expression turns to horror.

CLOSE ON NAN'S BARE CHEST

a finally polished stainless steel plate with inset machine screws. Nan is a robot!

PLAN PLUS LARGE

Nan grabs Bond by the arm and throws him against the wall. Their fight is quick and brutal. As he starts to rise she punches at his head. Bond ducks just in time, her fist shatters the plaster on the wall. Connie smashes a vase over her head, with little effect. Nan, still using her coquettish manner pursues Bond with vengeance. She launches a series of flying kicks. Knocking him over with the first. Hitting the wall next to his head with the next. He maneuvers to the plate glass window. Nan kicks at him again shattering the window and sailing through it, but not before clipping Bond in the side of the head with the tip of her elbow, stunning him.

Nan, however, manages to grab onto the metal structure of the window and by "extending her leg at an unnatural angle" manages to get back into the room. Connie, however, pushes her back through the window, but like Hans Gruber at the end of Die Hard: Nan grabs onto Connie and pulls her towards her and the void. 007 intervenes and using a wire saw (which he used earlier to sabotage the building's equipment) begins to saw off the metal arm of Nan (suspended above the void) who is grabbing Connie. The arm ends up coming loose (with vision of all the electronics inside) and Nan ends up falling from the penthouse to the ground.

Bond and Connie throw phosphorus grenades into the building: the guards activate the fire system... Which, thanks to Bond's sabotage, start to flood the building. Guards arrive and a shootout begins as Sir Henry is informed of what is happening. It turns out that Bond and Connie are trapped in the water, the surface is barely a few centimeters from the ceiling of the penthouse:

> - Bond: Everything's gone perfectly according to plan. Except we're not supposed to be here.

However Rodin and other guards arrive at the penthouse in an elevator and are greeted by a torrent of water when the elevator doors open. Under the weight of the water, the elevator cables break and it (with Rodin inside) falls from the top of the tower to Ching's control center, which the water begins to fill "with the force of [the] Niagara Falls" (just few seconds before Henry pressed the button to send the missile at the Chinese's plane).

Still in the penthouse, 007 and Connie let go of the pipe they were hanging on to. Bond looks down the elevator shaft and comments, "Looks like Sir Henry's all washed up".

We later find our two partner in a suite at the Imperial Hotel while the new year fireworks can be seen in the distance. Bond receives champagne and other dishes from a bellboy. Someone rings the bell and Bond goes to open the door and find himself in front of a man, like a motorcycle's courier, with a package. We see from the courier's point of view that his helmet begins to display things similar to Rodin's one in the Koho Nee's building scene. Once the targets have been acquired, the courier raises his visor and we discover that it is Sir Henry.

> - Henry: I never indulge in the luxury of hate, but in your case I'm making an exception. Keep your hands where I can see them!
> - Bond: Of course. Have a drink?

Bond pops the cork from the champagne bottle which lands in Henry's eye. Our villain puts his visor back on and acquires their infrared silhouettes through the wall of the next room; the automated weapon strapped to his backpack begins spewing bullets towards Bond and Connie. 007 shouts at the latter to set the temperature of the shower (the tropical one seen earlier) to maximum.

Bond empties all 16 bullets from his Walther P-9 into Henry but it has no effect on his kevlar suit. A firework saves 007 when the auto-aim system targets it rather than Bond.

Henry tries to stalk Connie in the bathroom when Bond, hiding behind a torrent of cold water, suddenly jumps on him. 007 tries to strangle him and during the fight Henry's helmet is removed from his head. Henry finally manages to gain the upper hand and is about to kill 007 with a piece of glass (from the broken shower) when suddenly Bond turns the helmet towards him. The backpack's automated weapon fires at the newly acquired target: Henry's head, killing him.

Bond, noticing the state of the hotel room:

> \- Bond: I think we'll have dinner out tonight.

They kiss with fireworks in the background. END.

Enter Davies and Osborne

Barbara Broccoli became co-producer in Bond 17, she now finds herself very involved in the writing process of James Bond films.

Albert "Cubby" Broccoli, now in his eighties, is no longer young and this is starting to take its toll on his health. Variety reports that he will now delegate the reins of the franchise to his stepson Michael Wilson and his daughter Barbara Broccoli[29].

Barbara had become actively involved in the franchise since The Spy Who Loved Me and had slowly moved up the ranks, overseeing certain aspects of these films' production and certain sequences; until rising to the rank of associate producer on Licence to Kill.

It is her, in particular, who will end up bringing most of the screenwriters who worked on this 17th Bond.

Somewhere during the writing process, it was decided to bring in two new screenwriters: the British duo William Davies and William Osborne, whose only credits at the time were basically a comedy with Arnold Schwarzenegger.

"I came to screenwriting in a rather roundabout way"[30], begins William Osborne (at right on the picture), who after writing a little for theater and radio, is preparing for a career as a barrister[31]. "Once I was an actual barrister, I found that I missed the writing, and as luck would have it, I ran into someone I has sat next to on a play going to American in my gap year to American High School on a scholarship. His name was William Davies (at left on the picture). We both found we loved film and decided we should become a screen writing team. I resigned as a barrister and he took time off (had just got a job as reporter for the Daily Mail[32]). We wrote two screenplays over the course of a summer, took them to Hollywood sold them the first day we arrived and never looked back"[33].

Their only preparation for this new career was to purchase a book simply titled Screenplay and read it five times[34]. Thus they participate together in the writing of the TV film Student Exchange (1987) then comes the film Twins (1988), a comedy starring Arnold Schwarzenegger and Danny DeVito.

"Two days before we were leaving to come back to the UK on our inaugural trip our newly acquired agent got us a meeting with Ivan Reitman. He told us that Arnold wanted to make a comedy. [...] We went to the beach and dreamt up the story of Twins. We went back on the day we were supposed to leave and pitched him the story. He bought it in the room.", Osborne recalled[35].

After their work on the 17th Bond, they will write together Stop! Or My Mom Will Shoot (1992), The Real McCo (1993), Ghost in the Machine (1993), and Dr. Jekyll and Ms. Hyde (1995).

On his own, William Davies will participate in the writing of the Johnny English trilogy, parodies of James Bond, the first film of which was co-written with Neal Purvis and Robert Wade. Still for actor Rowan Atkinson, he will write the mini-series Man vs. Bee (2022). During his career he also wrote Mia and the White Lion (Mia et le Lion blanc, 2018), the animated films How to Train Your Dragon (2010) and Lyle, Lyle, Crocodile (2022). He also produced a few films.

On his own, William Osborne will participate in the writing of The Scorpion King (2002) and Thunderbirds (2004). He also wrote three novels.

> - William Osborne[36] : Basically, we had been in Hollywood for three years by 1990 [...] we were doing projects with Dylan Sellers and Fred Zollo, Barbara Broccoli's partner at the time [and soon to be her husband], and he introduced us to Barbara and then to Michael Wilson and then Cubby and Dana. They got in touch with our agent [...] and we went for a meeting. There was I remember quite a long period of dating with many dinners where we just talked Bond, ideas, anything.

Osborne recalls that there was initially an outline by Alfonse Ruggiero and Michael Wilson, "which I think we basically threw out and came up with our own structure and story"[37].

> - William Osborne[38] : We began to talk about what was going to be the next Tim Dalton movie. We then sat down with Tim Dalton and we talked to him about it and his point of view. We had this particular take, Bond was now feeling slightly like he was getting too old for it, he was beginning to feel like somebody in his forties. The life he was living, and the action sequences he was getting involved in, were starting to cost him more than they had in they past. We could never make it work sufficiently for Michael. We did two or three drafts and then we came off.

"We wanted to place Bond at this transitional point in his life where he is beginning to doubt his own abilities, losing a little bit his joie de vivre", Osborne continues[39]. "Cubby was still very much in creative meetings. Barbara and Michael were trying to push it [out of his comfort zone to reinvigorate Bond], whereas he was more: if it ain't broke why fix it?[40].

> - William Osborne[41]: It was all [the writing] going on during the Gulf War. I do remember having creative meetings and CNN would be on television and we would be watching Saddam Hussein launching scud missiles at Israel. The brief was to try and bring it into the real world as it existed in 1991.

January 2, 1991' script: outdated, stealth plane and Las Vegas

The script we are going to study is dated January 2, 1991 and is credited to the names of William Davies, William Osborne, Alfonse Ruggiero Jr and Michael G. Wilson. This is a 121 pages "First draft screenplay" strangely titled "Bond XVIII" (18?!). Compared to the July 1990 script, this is primarily a new plot, although a few scenes and characters from the previous iteration make returns.

The script opens with a phone ringing in a hotel room (at night). James Bond, very crumpled after being suddenly awakened from his sleep, reach out for it.

A man at the other end of the line tells him that he is late and that he has twenty minutes to get off or he will call London. 007 pours himself two aspirins and looks in the bathroom mirror, "he looks terrible":

- Bond (to himself): You're getting too old for this, Bond.
- Woman: James?

A pretty woman comes to join him in the bathroom and asks him to come back to bed with her.

- Bond (to himself): On the other hand, maybe you're not.

After introducing us to a Bond who is not in top form and who talks to himself, the screenwriters continue to break the codes by introducing the gunbarrel sequence only now!

After the gunbarrel, we see Bond driving his Aston Martin Virage and park it on a quay in Tunis. Dressed in a pilot's outfit, he joins a young agent (who will never be named):

- Young agent: Oh so, mister Bond has finally decided to grace us with his presence.

007 pours himself a coffee while the agent tells him he made a report to London about his inappropriate behavior. "I hope it made you very happy", Bond comments laconically before launching himself into a tirade:

- Bond: What the hell's wrong with you young agents today? All you want to do is stand around and exchange compass bearings... When I was your age I'd have been in my hotel room making passionate love to some over-sexed croupier.
- Young agent: Yeah, well those days are over.
- Bond (grin): Not quite.

They board a fast boat and join the starting line of a (boat) race called Tunis 2000. During it Bond puts on a harness and goes parasailing, towed by the agent. Bond cuts the rope connected to the boat near a Libyan cliff and lands on it, near a chemical factory, while the agent continues the race on his own.

As 007 picks a lock thinking it will be an easy mission; two Rottweilers run towards him. Bond hurries to finish lock-picking (will he make it in time?) and manages to open the door and close it behind him before the dogs reach him. However, he is not out of the woods since a guard standing in front of him aims at him with a Kalashnikov:

> - Bond: Oh good morning, the name's Bond, James Bond, I'm here to blow up the plant. [The guard cocks his rifle] Its obviously not a good time, I'll come back tomorrow.

Other guards accompanied by a colonel (of the state police) named Al-Sabra come to join them; the "falafel Gestapo" comments 007. He attacks the guards, gets rid of them and throws a rifle at the head of Al-Sabra who ends up knocked out.

> - Bond: Imperialist swine: four. People's revolution: nil.

Things happen as in the July 1990 script: Bond wraps an explosive belt around a vat of nerve gas and is surprised by a security robot.

> - Bond (seeing the robot): R2D2, right?
> [The robot illuminates a laser pointer between its two eyes].
> - Bond: Luke went that way, Princess Leia was with him.

After these references to Star Wars, the robot deploys a light and sound device that knocks Bond to the ground. However he recovers and empties "his Beretta" (and not a Walther) on the robot which begins to smoke.

> - Bond: One thing I don't bloody do, is take orders from tin cans.

The robot tries to taze him and Bond avoids it while saying "there's a possibility I may have underestimated you". The robot deploys its Uzi-like gun and things happen as the other script. 007 managed to reach the roof:

> - Bond: This is the last time I ever work with machines.

The robot shoots in the direction of the footsteps and Bond jumps from the roof but... No explosion as expected. "This is really turning out to be a bad day", comments Bond and he's not yet out of his surprises as reinforcements arrive in Jeeps. There is only one way to escape: jump into the ocean from a 60 meter cliff. Bond rules out this option, thinking he is "definitely too old" ~~for this shit~~ and start putting his hands in the air to surrender! However, since he's being shot at, he finally takes the plunge.

As he surfaces an armed boat heads towards him. However, the young agent arrives in his racing boat and fishes out Bond, asking him what happened. "Everyone has off days, okay?". Suddenly the factory explodes and a piece of robot debris lands near them. "Fortunately this wasn't one of them".

Dissolution (no indication of credits) to a scene in which an American aircraft carrier arrives at the port of Seattle. Not far away, DEA agents are preparing to catch a drug trafficker. Meanwhile a pilot takes off from the aircraft carrier on an irregular basis with an experimental stealth fighter/bomber aircraft named the Scimitar:

- Air traffic controller: Tower to Scimitar, there are no test flights scheduled today.
- Pilot: Gimme a break, Gordy, we got to give it back to the British tomorrow, I wanna throw it around one more time.
- Air traffic controller: Fifteen minutes, Jack, and it'd better be back in one piece.

DEA agents notice the plane taking off. In the air, the pilot switches to stealth mode and heads towards a landing strip in the woods. He landed there to deliver bags of heroin, which were hidden in the plane, to gangsters in exchange for money.

However, everything didn't go as planned since we discovered, when the DEA agents finally arrives at the landing strip, the body of the dead pilot and the bags of drugs. "All they wanted was the plane", one of the agents understands.

007 arrives at Universal Exports (Trafalgar Square) in his Aston Martin Virage. Moneypenny seems more beautiful than usual so he suggests that they spend a weekend together at 005's Scottish cottage. She replies that she thought she would never live long enough to see this day come, but that it came too late. She shows him a ring on her finger:

> - Moneypenny: A girl can't wait forever, James.

She tells him that the lucky guy is an engineer from Harrow and that they are "going to have lots of children". M interrupts them and Bond joins him. A third man joins them: the "Junior Minister for Defence", Nigel Yupland, whose first sentence sets the tone:

> - Yupland: I don't need to be buzzed through, Miss Moneypenny, I own this department and I can walk into whatever bloody office I want.

Yupland says that Moneypenny should be fired and Bond says that would be a mistake. "Who the hell are you? [...] So this is the famous James Bond, is it?".

> - Yupland: Did you know, Double-Oh-Seven, that you are the single most expensive item on this department's budget?
> - Bond: But I get results... Sir.

Yupland tells him that the Cold War is over and the kind of results he specializes in cost too much. M begins to tells Bond about his mission: the Scimitar has been stolen, we must investigate. It is believed that this could be a hit by American organized crime: the underworld would be linked to the thefts of several hi-tech weapons from the American army which happened in recent months. One of the mafia families, the Vinellis, has a warehouse in Canada not far from where the plane was stolen: that seems like a good place to start the investigation.

Before he leaves, Yupland makes a point of giving Bond a book containing a series of new rules and budgetary guidelines for field agents. Bond says that he is not going to bring it with him: "we wouldn't want it falling into enemy hands" otherwise, he adds to M, "we'd be a laughing stock".

> - Yupland: We give you people a license to kill, Commander, not a license to print money, and if you fail to understand that you're going to be out of a job.

Bond goes to the Q-lab and discovers that the staff is closing up shop: Yupland is "closing me down" explains Q. Bond sees the scrapped DB5: the cost-effectiveness ratio is not in the car favor says Q, who adds that he is being push to forced retirement. Bond looks at "his old friend" and asks him what he is going to do now:

> - Q: I honestly don't know, James... This lab's been my whole life. Send me a postcard sometime, Double-Oh-Seven...

007 returns to the parking lot where an attendant gives him keys. However he cannot open the Virage with it; the attendant explains that he has been assigned a new car: a Honda CRX. "Forget this", Bond said before throwing away the keys.

A 747 lands in Vancouver and Bond goes to a rental agency where he normally has to pick up a small Hyundai; but instead opts for a Ferrari Testarossa, telling the rental company to put the bill in Yupland's name!

In a scene which is reminiscent of one of the previous scenarios, Bond infiltrates the Vinelli's warehouse through the roof, activates night vision which highlights laser beams and sees that he is surrounded by crates on which he reads "Nanking Shipping". 007 discovers that he is not the only intruder in the warehouse: another person present is spotted by guards. The intruder retorts with a Mac-10 and flees with a Schermuly Pains-Wessex Speedline; Bond, who is also spotted, then also uses the rope.

The intruder flees in his car (which here is a Mercedes 560SL), Bond has just time to see that it is a woman.

We find her later (at this point you've guessed her name is Connie Webb) in a penthouse in Vancouver, making a phone call to a certain Sir Henry Ferguson (no longer Ching). This one is in a Colonel Blimp-like gymnasium, doing fencing. But we realize it's a deathwatch; he cuts his opponent's throat and tells his butler "get me another instructor" before picking up the phone.

Connie tells him that the plane must have been in the warehouse given the traces of fuel on the ground, but that it is no longer there. What does Henry want her to do? "They must have moved it back to Las Vegas [...] stay close to them and keep in touch", Henry says.

We now see Connie parking her Mercedes near a mountain river pier and getting into a kayak. Bond's Ferrari also parks just after and 007 climbs into another kayak (donning a life jacket). He catches up with her and introduces himself to her as "James Baker"; she replies that she's not there to have company and a few lines later "See you at the bottom". It's a scene similar in spirit to the skiing scenes in the previous scenarios, but with kayaks. Seeing that she is rushing into rapids, Bond says to himself that there is no way he will do the same and begins to turn around when he is dragged (and manhandled) by them.

Connie sees Bond's upside-down kayak emerge from the rapids near her and a wet Bond climbs out of the water and turns himself right side up. She tells him that what comes next is worse and that maybe she should help him get back to shore? Bond decides to take his courage in both hands and rushes towards the next rapids; he manages to cross them without flipping over.

> - Connie: You strike me as the kind of man who thinks that sort of macho bullshit'll get him a date for dinner.
> - Bond: Eight thirty, wear something expensive.

We find them at a Vancouver restaurant, Connie dressed in Moschino. Bond is ordering wine with great precision when Connie tells the waiter that she'll have vodka:

> - Bond: I take it you don't like wine.
> - Connie: I like wine fine, its the wine snobbery that bores me.
> - Bond: Well, I think there's a distinction to be made between snobbery and connosseurship.
> She can't help laughing.
> - Bond: Did I say something funny?

Connie tells him a little about her life: that her father was an international burglar who taught her everything, that she worked for the CIA. She laughs again and tells him that she's in reality in hotel business. Bond then tells her that he a British secret agent before laughing and saying that he works in reality in the farm equipment business.

She asks him if he is really hungry because she wants to "have mad, passionate, uncomplicated sex" with him, she says. Bond starts laughing, thinking she's joking again, but when he discovers she's not, the camera shot cuts to "mad, passionate, uncomplicated sex" in Connie's apartment.

When Bond wakes up he has a sore back and thinks he is "definitely too old for this". He discovers that Connie is no longer there and finds a note saying that the night was superb, "have a nice life". Bond, dismayed, said out loud to himself "she dumped me"!

Bond phones M and tells him that he is going to take a vacation to Las Vegas because a girl broke his heart. M is stunned but Bond tells him he was joking: he is going to Vegas to investigate the Vinellis, since the town is the center of their operations. M tells him that he is in no position to make jokes: Yupland has received the bill for the rental of the Ferrari and he is fuming. Bond responds to tell him he has everything under control... Then we find out he was calling from the wheel of a Lamborghini Countach on the Las Vegas Strip!

007 arrives at his hotel (which the script doesn't identify) where he sees female bodybuilders posing for "Pumping Iron IX".

Arriving in his room, Bond discovers a "skinhead" who introduces himself as "Jennings, west coast liaison" (he seems gay and at one point tells Bond that he has beautiful eyes; Bond is embarrassed but remains polite). (The character is poorly introduced by the screenwriters, including a "macho bullshit" line on his part which causes confusion, so understanding that he is a member of MI6 is not easy).

On the balcony, Jennings shows to 007 the Vinellis HQ: the "Golden Sands Hotel". Bond points binoculars at the penthouse of the building and sees Guido Vinelli (the father) and his two sons Tony (who has a scar) and Tiny. Jennings also brought a directional rifle mic. They hear Guido remonstrating his offspring and notably saying:

> \- Guido: Fucking arms trade, its not our business, its not what this family's about; gambling, drugs and prostitution, that's what we're about.
> \- Tiny: Papa, we're gonna make more money off this plane deal than all that crap rolled together.

(And... This source of disagreement will never be exploited by the screenwriters in the rest of the script). 007 decides to go take a bath while Jennings continues surveillance. As he comes out of it, Colonel Al-Sabra (his face bearing the scars from the explosion at the chemical weapons factory) appears in front of him, a weapon in his hand:

> \- Bond: Aw, Jesus [in swearing mode]...
> \- Al-Sabra: His name is Allah, Mr. Bond.
> \- Bond: I ache too much to argue, just pull the trigger.

007 headbutts Al-Sabra who ends up knocked out. He picks up his wallet, throws Al-Sabra's weapon in the bathtub and leaves (without finishing him). On his way out Bond is faced with two of the female bodybuilders he had seen before and they begin to attack him (like Bambi and Thumper in Diamonds Are Forever). They send Bond flying across the room; he says that he doesn't usually hit women but that there is a beginning to everything. He takes down an iron bar:

> \- Bond: I've got nothing against big women in principle, I want you to know that.

One of the female bodybuilders grabs the bar with her hand and throws it like a javelin towards 007 but misses. Bond delivers a few blows which seem to have no effect given the lack of reaction from his opponent. One throws a weight at him like a Frisbee but Bond ducks and the weight ends up in the other girl. 007 grabs a hand dumbbell and delivers a blow which knocks out one of them. The other pushes Bond towards the bathroom and plunges Bond's head into the tub.

As 007 appears to have drowned, he grabs the gun he had previously thrown into the bathtub and kills Al-Sabra (who had regained consciousness) and shoots the female bodybuilder several times; she continues to come towards him a little more at each shot before finaly collapsing in the bathtub.

> \- Bond: Gotta hand it to her... She went the whole ten rounds.

Bond returns to his surveillance and hears the Vinellis talking on the phone with a certain "Sir Henry" about an exchange of 50 millions for the plane. Henry, however, has one condition: one of his men must see the plane first. Tony says they will then take the man to the plane.

007 climbs into the Lamborghini and races to the parking lot of the Golden Sands Hotel where he sees two limousines parked. He sneaks into the trunk of one of them. The limousines then head towards the desert and once it stop Bond gets out of the trunk and discovers that they are in a large warehouse in which there is the Scimitar and crates (similar to the other warehouse) containing Stinger missiles.

007 is spotted by a guard and captured, Tony searches him and finds Al-Sabra's wallet. Tiny tells him to kill him, to which Tony responds, "I'm not friggin killing him, he's a Libyan spy, that makes him the government's responsibility... Take him to the government, Sal". Bond then gets knocked out.

When Bond regains consciousness, he is trapped in the hulk of an old Sherman tank. Bond glances outside and sees more military wreckage when suddenly one of them explodes: Bond is at a military training ground for M1 Abrams tanks in the desert!

007 tries to find a way out as more wreckage explodes nearby. He removes an old shell from the cannon, extracts the explosive powder, pours it into an old military helmet which he places near the hatch before throwing a match into it. Bond manages to get out of the tank just before a shell explodes it.

We now find Bond, along with Jennings, in a helicopter flying over the Hoover Dam: they are taking a look at the abandoned airfields in the area. It was the last of the day and nothing fruitful came of it; Bond then wants to return to the hotel but Jennings tells him that the Vinellis are at a rodeo.

The helicopter lands in the parking lot of the "Las Vegas Professional Rodeo Championship" located not far from the Golden Sands Hotel, and Bond gets out. There are stands, horses, an arena, bulls, etc. Bond spots the Vinellis (and Sir Henry's man/pilot) in the distance with Connie Webb. Entrance is reserved only for people registered on a list and Bond goes to a mobile dressing-room where he knocks someone out before coming out dressed like a cowboy.

He approaches Connie ("Well howdy, Miss Webb!"), she helps him to enter. They ask each other what the other is doing here: Connie says it's part of her job, the Golden Sands Hotel being a sponsor of the rodeo:

> - Bond: Your bosses aren't exactly low profile people, honey, but you're all so close you probably know that.

She tells him to leave before he gets hurt, "Are you threatening me?", "I'm warning you, for your own good". 007 tells her that she hasn't stopped lying to him and she replies him that he has done the same.

> - Bond: Now we've got that clear shall we say dinner, eight thirty? Or shall we just cut straight to the uncomplicated sex?

She slaps him and calls out some cowboys to whom she tells that Bond/Baker thinks that being a cowboy is a "homosexual" thing; she would like them to find him a mount.

Bond is forced to climb onto a bull and ends up in the arena. Tony sees him and recognizes him as the "towelhead" (Libyan spy) from the warehouse and asks a certain Sal to eliminate him. Bond sees the Vinellis leaving and manages to get off the bull in one piece. Bond sees Sal and his men; he comes across two cowboys whom he overpowers and takes the revolver from one of them.

> A spaghetti Western beat as Bond's eyes lock onto Sal's. Then the gangsters go for their guns.
> But Bond is way too fast.
> BLAM! BLAM! BLAM!
> He blows them all away, smashing back the hammer of his revolver Clint Eastwood-style with the palm of his hand in a continuous movement.
> Then he grins, and blows the imaginary smoke from the end of his barrel.

Bond sees the Vinellis leaving in a limousine direction the Strip, followed by Connie in her Mercedes. He notices three monster trucks parked and gets behind the wheel of one of them while henchmen chasing him take the other two. On the Strip the monster trucks cause the destruction of traffic lights, fire hydrants, bus shelters and pass above/between (via their heights) a bench on which there is a tramp.

CC
Summit
RACING EQUIPMENT
Bigfoot
Firestone
ODYSSEY
HOTEL

The limo turn off the Strip and Bond crunch cars/buses/trucks of a traffic jam; one of his pursuers does the same but ends up on the side while crashing into a hotel. Bond and his remaining pursuer cross a casino then an Elvis Presley-style chapel at the wheel of their behemoths. Back on the road, a man from the enemy monster truck shoots Bond with an Uzi, 007 responds with the revolver and hits a tire. The enemy monster truck then does a series of rolls before landing in the swimming pool of one of the hotels.

Later Connie arrives at the Hoover Dam, and having lost the limousine, stops. Bond comes up behind her on foot; she puts him on the ground. He asks her to tell him who she really is when suddenly they see part of the dam opening and the Scimitar taking off (sic!). As Bond wonders where the plane is going, Connie knocks him out.

Nigel Yupland arrives in Nevada and more precisely at the brothel Chicken Ranch. The manager asks him if he is looking for a particular type of girl; Yupland wants an oversize one. We see him following the girl to

Chicken Ranch
BROTHEL
World Famous & Historic...
VOTED #1
NEVADA BROTHEL
OF THE YEAR
The World Famous
CHICKEN RANCH

a room and we discover that the brothel hides an NSA antenna. An agent tells him to take back his man who caused so much trouble (the NSA was monitoring the Vinellis, in particular); Yupland joins Bond in the interrogation room:

> - Yupland: [...] I told you to be discreet and what do you do? You destroy half the city and squash an eighteen month investigation by our most important ally's, most powerful security agency; the damage you've done is incalculable!
> - Bond: In the field, sir, you can't...
> - Yupland: You're not going to be in the field any longer, Bond, you didn't even find the bloody plane!

Yupland says they found nothing at the dam. They are going back to London: Bond is suspended.

An airliner arrives at the Hong Kong airport and mobsters get off, including the Vinellis. They pass through immigration ("construction", "trucking", "waste disposal" are the professional reasons given by the thugs to the immigration employees) and join limousines sent by Sir Henry.

Henry himself is not there, we see him in a Lincoln limousine elsewhere, in the Chinese countryside. He is accompanied by a certain Suzy (a character who is almost always at Sir Henry's side whenever he appears in the script, but the screenwriters never tell us who she is. Some sort of secretary?). An armored steam train stops near them and a Chinese general named Han gets off with troops. While his soldiers go to pillage a village near the train, Han asks Henry if he has the plane. The latter remains vague on the subject but didn't come empty-handed: he brought with him 3rd generation's Stingers. Han radios for a plane to take off; a MiG-29 soon appears in the sky and Han accidentally fires a Stinger at the village (which he wanted to destroy anyway). He loads a second missile with which he fires and manages to explode the MiG (!). Han seems satisfied and Henry tells him that he will have 2,000 delivered to him within the week.

Jennings accompanies Bond to the Los Angeles airport where he is to board a plane get back to London. Bond is complaining: if they are looking for an agent who is discreet (!) or who reads their memos: they can find themselves someone else.

> - Bond: If I was half the man I used to be, I'd be catching the first bloody plane to Hong Kong, finding that goddamn plane, and ramming it so far up Yupland's arse he'd never sing God Save the Queen again!

Then we find Bond on a flight to Hong Kong. Meanwhile Henry arrives at the hotel where the mobsters are staying; just like Rodin disguised as a motorcycle courier. A scene similar to those with the Kohoni / Koho Nee from the previous scenarios then takes place, with Rodin and his helmet that sees through walls and his automated rifle, then the replacement of the window washer with flammable liquid.

While Rodin is doing this, Henry (accompanied by Suzy) is in a meeting with the Vinellis, who show Henry their security system, "We're not nervous, Henry, just careful; I trust the niggers more than the chinks". Henry has a proposition for them: once Hong Kong will be his, he intends to make a lot of money in different fields, but when it comes to narcotics, gambling and prostitution, he wants to leave it to experts like the Vinellis.

The Vinellis ask him how Hong Kong could be his while it is the property of the British and the future of the Chinese in 1997. "You'd be surprised", he simply says before answering their doubts about the presence of other mafia families in town: "Its a big market [...] it'd be like Chicago in the old days". Finally Henry tells them the sentence that upset them: 50% of their profits will go into his pockets if they accept. The Vinellis take it badly, and in any case: for them everything Henry said is nothing other than fine promises. Henry leaves and the Vinellis perish in the flames when Rodin activates the window washing machine.

> - Henry: Well, you know what they say... If you can't stand the heat, get out the kitchen.

Bond's plane arrives in Hong Kong and he is greeted directly by "Gordon Denholm", the head of section H (still in his fifties and in a Hawaiian shirt, but he no longer has a drinking problem). Denholm tells him that he is a big "fan" (of Bond), "I have followed your career with interest for years", and adds that Jennings explained everything to him. (Even Denholm's driver seems to know who Bond is!). Denholm tells him that he investigated the "Nanking Shipping Company" that Bond had seen on the crates: this company belongs to Sir Henry Ferguson (of Scottish origin) who is at the head of an empire in electronics. He has a private island near Kowloon. Denholm also has a surprise for Bond.

He takes Bond to a plane from which the Aston Martin DB5 is unloaded. 007 leaves alone before Q can finish his explanation and arrives at the Imperial Hotel where there is his first meeting with Mi Wai as a member of the hotel staff. The scene, however, ends there (no Connie in his room), instead we find Bond discreetly swimming at night towards Henry's island, in the middle of which there is a kind of colonial house. Inside there are some pieces of art like Picasso paintings. Bond dodges a few guards, deactivates an alarm system, and begins searching the premises. At one point he unintentionally makes noise and a guard comes to investigate but finds nothing suspicious.

007 sees Henry and Connie in a room. Henry says he is not interested in her conversation and asks her to undo her dress instead. She starts to do so then stops, saying she can't. Henry is furious: is he not paying her enough? While he watches, Bond's foot passes through a laser, an alarm goes off and within seconds guards capture Bond.

Henry asks Bond who he is. James Baker, he replies, adding that the reason he was here was to steal art. Henry smiles and takes Bond to his gym:

> - Henry: I admire your kind of desperate courage, Mr Baker, so I'm going to offer you a chance to get off this island alive. All you have to do is beat me in a fair fight.

He throws a sword at him and a sword fight takes place; it moves into the living room. The screenwriters write "and so the fight resumes, as if Sergio Leone were directing Errol Flynn". Finally Bond manages to knock Henry's sword out of his hands and press his own against the villain's throat:

> - Bond: Boy, I bet you feel stupid now.
> - Henry: I underestimated you, Mr Baker, but I'm a man of my word. You win, you're free to go. You're an interesting man Mr. Baker... We should do this again.
> - Bond: I'll call you.
> - Henry: Miss Webb'll take you back to the mainland.

We find Bond and Connie on a speedboat. They talk: Bond admits that he lied to her when he told her that he was in the farm equipment business, he is actually an art thief. She responds by telling him that she knows he is a British agent, James Bond, 007:

> - Connie: I know because I'm an American agent and it was my operation that you singlehandedly destroyed in Las Vegas.

They arrive at the port. Bond walks to his DB5 and tells her he's going home: "I cost too much, I'm out of date, and I'm in your way". He is about to leave, telling her to "have a nice life" when she opens the door and gets him out of the car. She tells him that he accomplished in three days what it took her 8 months to do: "you made me look like an amateur [...] I need some help here, okay? I want you to help me".

Bond dismisses her but she starts to undress and Bond pushes her against the hood of the DB5 where he kisses her.

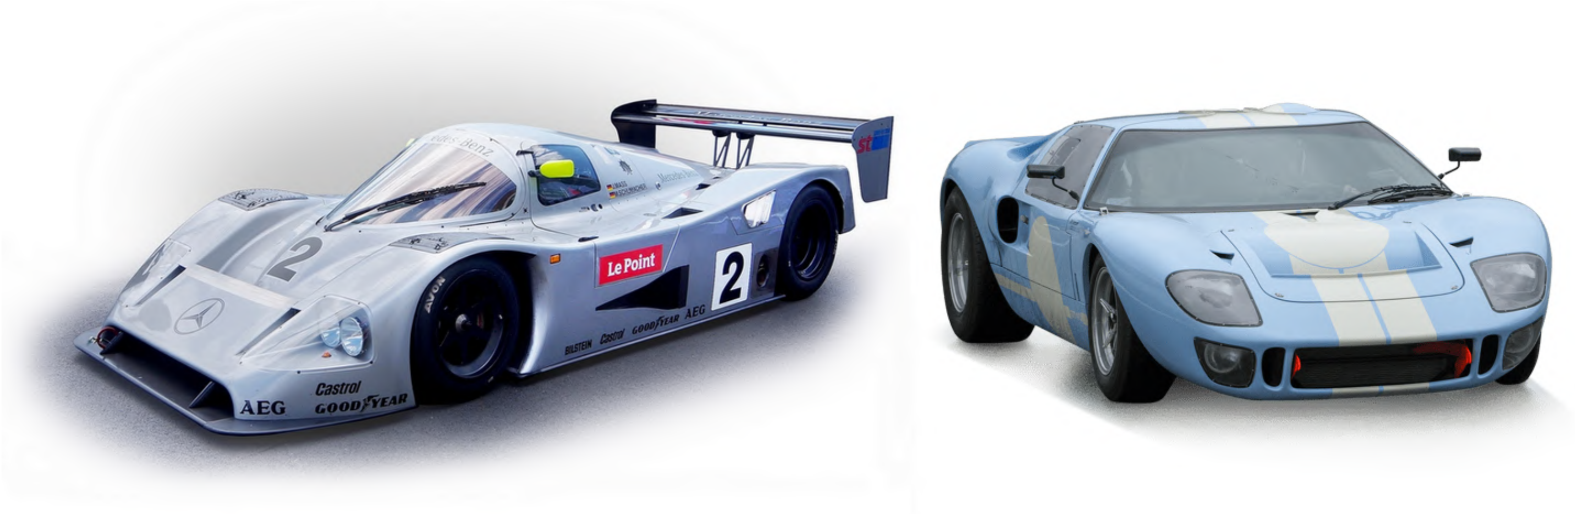
We cut to a scene in which a customs officer inspects a Sir Henry supertanker in Hong Kong harbor, but doesn't discover the tanks and other armored vehicles hidden inside. We find Bond and Connie observing the harbor from a rooftop. 007 says that given the sizes of the boats, if Sir Henry hid weapons like he saw in Vegas in one of them: he has enough to start a war. Connie replies that since the Tiananmen Square massacre (1989), the Chinese government is under an embargo preventing them from importing weapons: they could pay Henry a fortune if he is willing to supply them. 007 doesn't think the plane is inside one of the boats: but where to look? Henry have a tower in the city, the "Nanking Tower":

> - Bond: You honestly think anyone's gonna hide a plane in a skyscraper?
> - Connie: The Vinelli's hid it in the Hoover dam, James.
> - Bond: What happened to all those girls I used to meet, the ones who looked great but let me say the smart line?
> - Connie: Like the dinosaurs, James, they just died out.

We find Yupland at the Government House of Hong Kong, scolding Denholm and Q: he wants to know where Bond is, "that bloody maniac". Suddenly he receives a phone call from an "acquaintance", Sir Henry Ferguson. The latter would like information on a Briton, a certain James Baker:

> - Yupland: Sir Henry, I don't believe this, Baker is one of my people. [...] Art thief? [...] Well, technically speaking I shouldn't reveal this, Sir Henry since until I can find him and fire him he is still On Her Majesty's Secret Service, but Baker's real name is Bond. [...] That's right, sir, he's one of our agents.

At his hotel, Mi Wai tells Bond that he received a message. Bond leaves his hotel and gets (alone) into his DB5. He barely had the time to leaving the parking lot, that he is chased by Rodin who is at the wheel of what the script calls the "computer car": a "sports car [...] futuristic-looking [...] a cross between something like a GT40 and a Mercedes Le Mans" (and no longer a fighter plane).



Once on a country road, Bond notices the car behind him. Rodin presses a button that activates a heads-up display on the windshield and presses another button and two machine guns deploy. While the DB5 is under fire, Rodin prepares to fire a missile (still with the diamond-shaped reticle). "Oh shit", Bond exclaims, trying random buttons on his Aston:

> - Bond: One day, Bond, you're gonna bloody well listen to Q when he explains all this.

One of the buttons he presses prevents the missile from locking on (this script strangely doesn't drop the words "electronic counter measures" to explain the why and how). 007 fiddles with another button: the cabin light comes on. "What about this one?", "claymore mines" dropping from behind the DB5 answer his question.

Rodin manages to avoid them enough so that his car is still operational despite the damage suffered and launches a missile. "You better have this covered, Q", Bond says before successfully deploying a flare that will guide the missile towards the sea (and no longer into a tree). Rodin activates a 20mm cannon and 007 responds with the rear shield of the DB5. Seeing that the shield will not hold (in this script there is no question of the enemy car replicating the same movements as his) Bond attaches harnesses located on his seat and deploys the ejection seat while saying "Hope this still works". Distracted, Rodin falls into a precipice following the DB5.

We find Bond getting out of a taxi on the docks. Mi Wai shows up in front of him with a gun and tells him to climb in a Sikorsky helicopter. Bond complies.

There is a series of scenes in which: 1) we see Denholm, Q and Connie in a surveillance van in front of Nanking Tower 2) Suzy informing Henry that General Han has launched his coup 3) A Chinese camp being blown to pieces by an army of tanks/troops commanded by Han 4) Connie, infiltratingin the tower, is on the roof of the elevator that takes Sir Henry up to his Penthouse where the Scimitar equipped with nuclear bombs is located; Connie is spotted and captured.

In (another) Chinese camp, Bond is taken to Quen Low, the head of Chinese military intelligence. Low believes that it is the Americans and the British who are behind the coup taking place in his country: after all the conspirators are using weapons/technologies from these Western countries. Bond says that these weapons were stolen from them but Low doesn't believe it. He adds that Beijing has received a threat of a Scimitar's nuclear strike: he gives Bond one hour to reason with his leaders and warn them that China will respond to a nuclear attack with an attack of the same magnitude on London and Washington. To support his words, a scene shows the crew of a Chinese submarine preparing to fire in 60 minutes.

Bond is returning to Hong Kong in a Cesna plane piloted by Mi Wai. He radios Denholm and Q who inform him that Connie found the Scimitar in the tower but that they lost radio contact with her. 007 asks them to gather all the troops they can but knows that Yupland will not let them: so he jumps from the plane, in flight, to land in the swimming pool of the roof of a skyscraper located in front of Sir Henry's one! Q and Denholm join him:

- Bond: Did you see that? Did you see what I just did? [...] Can you believe that?

Q gives Bond a sort of grappling hook. The agent shoot a rope in the direction of Henry's building, jumps into the air in a swinging motion and fires a machine gun at a window before thus entering the interior of the Nanking Tower. Then 007 overpower a guard who was determined to welcome him.

Sir Henry is ordering his men to execute Connie as troops begin to take up positions around his building. There's a camera shot of Yupland shouting to someone on the phone: "James Baker is not the US Secretary of State, he's my bloody agent[...]!".

Henry decides to activate the defenses of his building; machine guns hidden in statues and tear gas repel the assault of the troops.

With only 5 minutes left before the Chinese submarine fires, we see Bond disguised as a guard approaching the Scimitar, knocking out the pilot and boarding it. Under the bullets of Henry's men, Bond takes off and fly away from the tower; he contacts Quen Low by radio who cancels the submarine's strike.

The troops manage to penetrate the building, Connie takes advantage of Henry's men being distracted by them to free herself but she is captured again by Sir Henry himself.

While Bond seems to be having problems in the plane, Henry explains to Connie that the Scimitar doesn't need a pilot: its missions are programmed. 007 cannot override the autopilot of the aircraft heading towards its target. Noticing this, Quen Low reactivates the submarine's countdown.

On board of the plane, Bond tries to find a solution and activates the manual fuel ejection control:

- Computer voice: Primary target now out of range.
- Bond: I'm a bloody genius.
- Computer voice: Switching to secondary target.

The new target is Shanghai; but due to lack of fuel, the Scimitar's artificial intelligence also cancels it and the aircraft switches to manual control. Low calls off the submarine's firing again while Bond, out of fuel, is falling dangerously.

While trying to flee the assault troops, Henry comes across the rope of the grappling hook that Bond arrived with and decides to borrow it. As he's climbing it, Bond arrives and impales him with the Scimitar! The plane ends up crashing on the ground... And more precisely on Government House: it crosses Yupland's office (who is on the phone with the Prime Minister) where it stops (with Sir Henry still impaled on it). Bond gets out of what's left of the plane:

> - Bond: Good morning, sir. The good news is I found your plane.
> - Yupland: Sir... Hen... Sir Henry...
> - Bond: You spotted the bad news then.
> - Yupland: YOU'RE FIRED! YOU IDIOT! YOU'RE INSANE! YOU'RE.... YOU'RE...

Bond punches him in the face, saying he should have done it a long time ago, and walks out of the wreckage of Government House. He sees Connie running towards him:

> - Connie: I suppose you think that kind of macho bullshit is gonna get you a date for dinner.
> - Bond: I'm counting on it getting me a hell of a lot more than that.

Gordon Denholm comes to congratulate Bond, as does Q who tells him "you even managed to impress me this time": the way Bond stole the plane, overrides the autopilot and disarmed its nuclear warhead; genuinely impressive. Connie asks Bond if he indeed disarmed the warhead "didn't you?", "Well, I... The thing is, Yupland was...", and the scene cuts as we see Q, Connie and Denholm rushing towards the plane to deactivate the warhead.

We later find Bond and Connie kayaking and then camping, lying in a double sleeping bag around a fire in a forest. They argue because she still blames him for forgetting to defuse the warhead. She ends up kissing him and telling him that he needs to learn to be less sensitive about the mistakes he makes.

> - Connie: Being vulnerable makes you sexy.
> - Bond: Really? Did I ever tell you about the time Blofeld dumped me in a pool of sharks? [...] And then there was this chap Oddjob, I was always underestimating him. [...] And Goldfinger made me look like a complete idiot... [...]
> - Connie: I said vulnerable, not stupid.
> - Bond: God, you're a difficult woman.
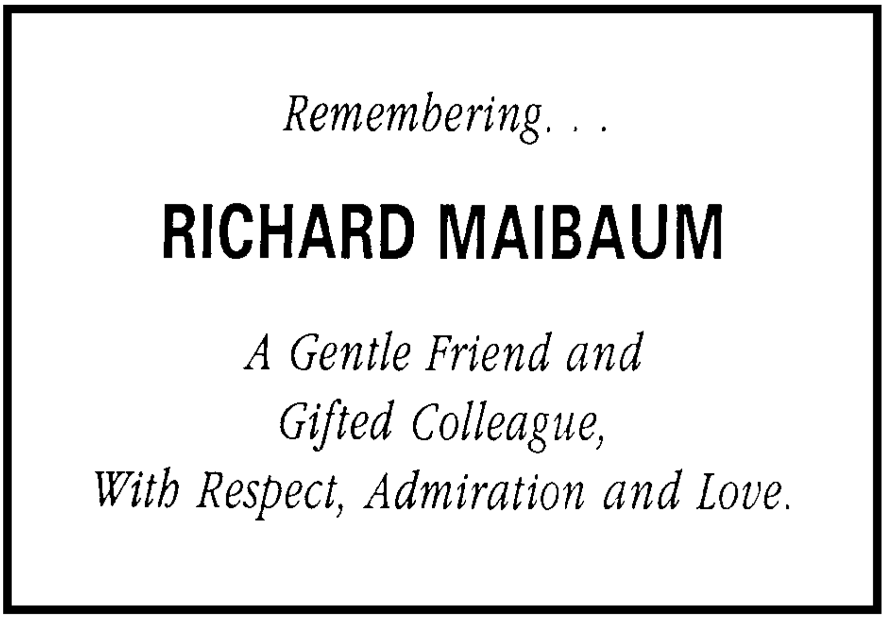
> [...]

He presses a button on something that looks like a television remote, which put out the fire; we are in darkness and the script ends with the sounds of blankets rustling under their bodies...

The problems



Remembering. . .

RICHARD MAIBAUM

A Gentle Friend and Gifted Colleague,
With Respect, Admiration and Love.

Cubby and Wilson's short tribute to Maibaum in a full page of Variety magazine (January 11, 1991).

Two days after the completion of this script, Richard Maibaum died on January 4, 1991. He was 81 years old. Any potential temptation to bring him back or consult him that could have existed one day or another, died with him.

In its February 1991 issue, the magazine Cinefantastique writes: "Disney is also rumored to be working on the special effects for the new Bond project. Reportedly, Imagineering, the Disney effects branch which devises mechanical and electronic wonders for the company's theme parks, has been hired by the Bond producers to build the single most sophisticated anthropomorphic robot ever conceived for the movies"[42].

> - William Osborne[43] : We would have loved to stay on but after three drafts they were locked into litigation and we had a ton of offers on the table, so we moved on.

The litigation that Osborne speaks of and which would keep James Bond out of cinemas for several years was linked to MGM/UA Communications Co. which financed and distributed the Bond films.

Back a few years earlier, in 1986, the owner of the MGM/UA, Kirk Kerkorian, sold a portion of the MGM, including its films library to Ted Turner. By the end of the decade, Kerkorian was now looking to sell the rest.

The MGM/UA is thus for sale and it attracts an Italian businessman with a controversial reputation: Giancarlo Parretti.

Indeed, Parretti and his partner Florio Fiorini had been involved for several years in affairs that were at best immoral, when they were not totally fraudulent in the eyes of the law[44]. They had set up a sort of Ponzi scheme[45], all fueled by the French bank

Metro Goldwyn Mayer
ARS GRATIA ARTIS

Giancarlo Parretti.

Crédit lyonnais (LCL, especially its Dutch branch, Crédit lyonnais Bank Nederland), thanks to certain high-ranking executives of the bank basically bribed by Parretti[46]. At the end of the 1980s, the Crédit lyonnais had become the largest lender in Hollywood[47], thanks to Parretti and Fiorini, who had themselves borrowed a total of around one billion dollars by the end of the decade[48]! With it Parretti and Fiorini had notably bought the production company Cannon Group[49]; Parretti had renamed it Pathé Communications in anticipation of the takeover of the French production company Pathé that he was planning (a purchase which ultimately never happened, the French government having opposed Pathé being sold to such a shady businessman).

In March 1990, while he had been convicted in absentia of fraud by a court in Naples (Italy)[50], Parretti announced his intention to buy the MGM/UA, which was then for sale[51]. To buy the company, Parretti and Fiorini need the considerable sum of 1.25 billion dollars[52] (the price would eventually rise to $1.34 billion when they asked and obtained more delay to pay[53]).

To help to finance his purchase, Parretti is considering linking up with several investors: in exchange for their money, he will negotiate with them the broadcasting rights to several MGM/UA licenses when MGM will become his[54]. It was reported in the press that Time Warner company had decided to lend $650 million to Parretti in exchange for the rights to distribute the studio's television and video offerings and the movies not already owned by Turner[55] (the offer was reduced to a more modest $125 million later[56]).

> - Cubby Broccoli[57] : While all this was going on, my attorneys, with Michael alongside, were closely observing the state of play. Then we discovered that James Bond appeared to be a sizeable sweetener in the pot [for who would acquire MGM]. We learned that our sixteen Bond pictures were being sold off as part of Parretti's cash-raising in order to clinch the purchase of MGM/UA. Moreover, it was clear, to us at least, that these pictures were to be sold off at bargain-basement prices in a number of foreign TV and video licensing deals. The longer we looked at the fine print, the more our attorneys, Michael and me were convinced that not only an alleged breach of contract was involved. This was becoming a question of the virtual survival of James Bond.

As a result, Broccoli took legal action against MGM/UA and Pathé Communications to block the sale of the broadcast rights of the previous Bond films[58].

> - Cubby Broccoli[59] : I had nothing personal against Parretti. But I had the strongest objections to his using the Bond pictures as cut-price sweeteners in his scramble to raise the $1.3 billion to buy MGM/UA.

With the support of his investors[60], other shady money sources[61] and above all of the Crédit lyonnais (the bank had loaned at least 76% of the $1,3 billion needed of the sale[62], cause of Parretti's deceptions and bribes[63]), Giancarlo Parretti and Florio Fiorini officially became the new owner of MGM/UA in November 1990[64]; MGM/UA and Pathé Communications then merged into MGM-Pathé Communications. As previously seen with the January 1991' script, work on the Bond 17 script continues with Osborne and Davies.

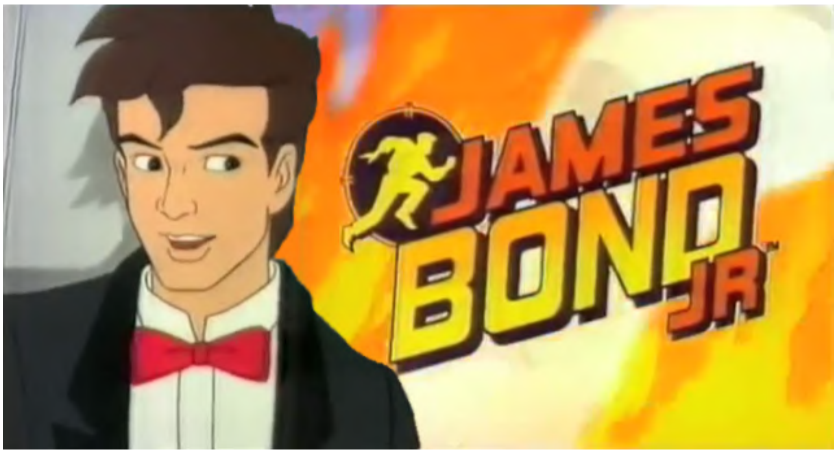
> - Cubby Broccoli[65] : Frustration was the dominant theme in the early months of 1991. We should have been filming, but legal wrangling had put the film in limbo. A variety of legal roadblocks prevented an early [court] hearing of our > action against MGM/UA Communications. We had terminated our contract with them [...]. With the hearing not scheduled until 1993 or later, our production as far as the next Bond film was concerned, was stymied.

The production is idling, difficult to make a new film while EON is planning to sue the organ that is supposed to finance and distribute it.



The emphasis is instead placed on the development of James Bond Jr, an animated series for children recounting the adventures of 007's nephew (65 episodes of questionable quality were released for this serie between September 1991 and March 1992). According to Cubby at this time "Barbara commuted between Los Angeles and London, talking to writers, commissioning outlines for future film production"[66] and "while he waited for Bond to get back on track, [Wilson] wrote two excellent non-Bond scripts"[67].

A few months after its merger, MGM-Pathé Communications is dangerously on the verge of bankruptcy and has a series of unpaid debts[68]. Thelma & Louise opening is delayed because of lack of money[69] while girls kept by Parretti (with the company's money) are seen at his office where sex sounds could be heard...[70] MGM-Pathé Communications was loosing money at the rate approximately $1 million per day[71]. New Crédit lyonnais loans help the studio to stay ahead of bankruptcy[72].

Now the big Ponzi-like skein of debt began to unravel[73] and a lawyer representing the creditors to whom the company owes money filed an official complaint[74]. This very worries the Crédit lyonnais, which at the same time has become increasingly aware of Parreti's criminal record[75]. The judge might seize the control of the MGM, so they had to worry[76].

The Crédit lyonnais agrees to help the struggling studio with further loan, but only on the condition that Parretti is removed from his post[77]. Alan Ladd Jr. was appointed as the new head of the MGM by the bank[78]; soon after Ladd and Parretti began engaging in an internal power struggle[79]. On June 17, 1990, the Crédit lyonnais seized control of MGM, removed once for all Giancarlo Parretti from the company, and began a lawsuit against him in the USA[80]. In mid-1992, the company changed its name back to Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer[81]. (Few years later, Parretti, Fiorini and some Crédit lyonnais executives would be condemned to few year of prison on fraud charges, by few courts, in Europe and USA[82]. An excellent documentary on the subject was produced by the BBC in 2024, The Man Who Definitely Didn't Steal Hollywood, which include the participation of Parretti and Fiorini).

In the fall of 1992, the case opposing Broccoli against MGM finally reached court and an out-of-court settlement satisfactory to Broccoli/Danjaq/EON was reached around Christmas[83] (Broccoli's additionally court case against MGM's former owner Kerkorian also settled to Cubby satisfaction[84]). Everyone involved can actively get back to work on Bond 17.

MGM is still in financial difficulty and they needing to restore their image (the Crédit lyonnais, which now owns MGM, have to resell it before 1997, accordingly to the American banking regulations[85], and intends to make the most money of it). In other words: MGM needed to release a successful film...

- Michael Wilson[86] : I can maybe clarify what happened with the lawsuit. Paretti took over MGM in a proposed leverage buyout situation. We brought an injunction to say if the leverage buyout went ahead the company would be bankrupt. The Federal court rejected the motion for an injunction and four months later they were bankrupt. And then we had about two years of negotiations. It took that long for the bank to take control and put in new management, we were then able to start afresh.

Restarting the machine with Michael France

Bond was definitely back on track in May 1993, when MGM's vice president of creative affairs, Elizabeth Robinson, announced that she was working on the 17th film with the Cliffhanger's screenwriter, Michael France, who was writing a brand new script[87]. Variety discloses having understood that the scenario included "global implications" and that France's salary would amount to $400,000 or $700,000[88].

Two weeks later, Variety reports that Richard Smith has been hired to work on future scripts for upcoming James Bond films, as well as John Cork[89]. An EON spokesperson, Charles Juroe, said:

> - Charles Juroe[90] : There is no question about it: France is writing Bond 17. These other two gentlemen are writing for future Bonds down the line, assuming [the revived series is] a success, [...] When you get up to 17 in one series, you do things differently. You don't wait until 17 is a success to say, "Oh, we better do another one". This two-year cycle does not give Danjaq the luxury to wait 10 or 11 months down the line to get started on the next one. They've learned they have to be ahead of the game. When United Artists say they're ready to do another one, they're expected to have one ready.

Juroe also hints that Timothy Dalton will likely return for Bond 17[91].

"When I was a kid, I wanted to be Richard Maibaum, not Bond".

Michael France[92] was born in 1962 in St. Petersburg (Florida, United States). At the age of 10, he saw what would become his favorite film and which would make him want to become a screenwriter: Goldfinger. He attended the University of Florida before leaving after a year, and in the 70s, he published a short-lived 007 fan magazine called Kiss Kiss Bang Bang.

In the early 80s, France worked as a projectionist in a small cinema. Then came a graduate degree from the film school of Columbia University in New York.

France moves to Los Angeles where he manages to sell a script of Cliffhanger (1993), which would eventually starring Sylvester Stallone. "When I was writing the thing, I thought it was so expensive it would never get made. I thought it would just turn into a writing sample so I could get assignment work. It sold and it went into production almost immediately, and it was very expensive to make, but it turned out alright".

After his participation in GoldenEye, he will participate in the writing of only three other films, based on superheroes from Marvel comics: Hulk (2003), The Punisher (2004), and Fantastic Four (2005). France was a big comic book fan himself.

In 2007, France purchased the Beach Theater in St. Pete Beach for $800,000, extending the survival of a decades-old single-screen movie theater from where he watched movies as a child.

For five years he presented classic, independent and foreign films, generally unavailable in multiplexes, as well as recent hits to "pay the bills". Eventually, as attendance decreased and for financial reasons, France closed the doors in 2012.

Michael France died in 2013, following diabetic complications, at the age of 51. "He wanted to reopen the theater, wanted to start writing again. Obviously he didn't think he was as sick as he was", his sister Suzanne said.

> - Michael France[93] : I learned how to write action movies from watching Bond films. I always wanted to write one, and I had my agent pester Michael Wilson and Barbara Broccoli. Once they got past the legal problems they had faced for a couple of years, I was invited to lunch with Barbara and Michael at an Italian restaurant on Pico Boulevard in West Los Angeles [....]. This was in January 1993. Before the meeting I crammed on everyone's bios, and as soon as I showed up they started quizzing me, basically on what my attitude toward the character was, what I knew about 007, what I could bring to a new film to make it fresh and different from the blizzard of action movies that had come out in recent years.

"They said I was the first one they talked to", France continues[94]. "I had Cliffhanger behind me, so it was easy for me to get them to read it"[95].

France recalls hearing nothing more about Bond for two months until production finally called him back and hired him in March 1993[96]. He was given the chance to start from scratch[97].

> - Michael France[98] : When I started on it, my assumption was that Bond would be Timothy Dalton, although that was uncertain at the time. [...] I kind of wrote it that way, not very funny, not very verbose, kind of a dark, quiet character. What happened with a lot of the revisions, of course, is that it was being tailored more toward Pierce Brosnan. More of a sense of humor.

France explains that from the start everyone agreed on not going into comedy, without becoming as serious as on Licence to Kill[99]. "As far as Bond's character, I wanted to bring out a little more of the darker stuff from some of the Fleming novels and present a Bond that is exactly like the [one] of Goldfinger", adds the screenwriter[100]. "The movies we kept coming back to in our discussions were Goldfinger and From Russia With Love, which I think are the best two movies on a number of levels"[101].

"My view has always been that if you treat Bond as a realistic character, you can wring endless suspense and jeopardy out of the situations he gets into. If you treat him as a self-parody or an exaggerated cartoon, which is sometimes easy to do, you get into trouble fast", France continues[102]. "But on the other hand, these [films] are fantasies, and there's a line you can['t] cross. I don't think anybody wants to see Bond parachuting into a Bosnian concentration camp, for instance"[103].

France is doing research about unusual weaponry, "that was what led me toward the electromagnetic pulse stuff"[104]. Doing a lot of research is even more important because "if you don't really know what you're talking about on the scientific end of this stuff, Michael Wilson will rip you to shreds"[105].

Russia is being considered as a filming location. The Cold War had ended since the release of Licence to Kill and the country, still considered a few years earlier as very mysterious/intriguing and inaccessible, is now in the phase of being able to welcome film crews from Western countries without trying to interfere/censor more than that in the creative aspect of their films. Also according to Michael Wilson "the collapse of the Soviet Union [...] means that there are literally thousands of specially trained agents looking around for work. Weapons of mass destruction [and conventional arsenal] are just sitting around waiting to be offered to the highest bidder. This is a world in which Bond is needed more than ever"[106].

France is not worried about the impact of the end of the Cold War on the saga: "[some people saying] Bond being old hat due to the end of the Cold War was a lot of nonsense. [...] Even at the hottest points of the Cold War, the Russians were rarely anything other than tangential villains. The real villains have always tended to be characters who manipulated the Cold War to their own ends, like SPECTRE"[107].

"At an early point in the story, we were looking at France and Scotland and other places as locations, but eventually we decided on Russia, since it would finally be possible to shoot there", France explains[108].

> - Michael France[109] : The producers had sent me out to Saint Petersburg before writing the script, and Moscow, to do Russian research. [...] When we decided to set a big part of the movie in Russia, because Bond has never really gone there before in movies, [...] I told them that I needed to go and see these places to work out the action scenes, and also to look for the kind of Russia that you're not used to thinking about. [...] I ended up seeing a variety of different things, a lot of picturesque places and Saint Petersburg. And also things like airfields where they have planes stored. I worked out a way to break into KGB headquarters that didn't quite make it into the movie.

France continues: "I was able to go to Red Square, talk to some atomic scientists and KGB agents, [...] and see some of the new Russia, which included casinos. The nicest one in Moscow was Casino Royale"[110]. "Probably the stupidest thing I did in Russia was to very, very obnoxiously photograph the [main KGB] headquarters up and down, left and right, high and low for over an hour while I was trying to figure out how Bond would get in and out"[111].

"Everywhere I went, there were public squares with concrete and metal bases with nothing on them. Obviously, the giant statues of Lenin and Stalin were coming down. I asked my guide what had happened to all of them, and I was told that there's a huge junkyard somewhere full of them. [...] That's obviously an irresistible visual for Bond"[112].

France thinks he remembers that it was Michael Wilson who had the idea of using the Arecibo radio telescope in Puerto Rico for the finale of the film[113]. "Logically, there's no really good reason for the villains to use an antenna that size [...], but it's a great location for a Bond climax", admits France, who would also have liked take a scouting trip to Puerto Rico[114]. "I told them I could write the script faster if they got me a three month bungalow on that beach but they wouldn't go for it"[115].

One of the aspects that concerns the screenwriter the most are the action scenes and being able to do something new compared to previous Bond films and better than the competition' films with Schwarzenegger, Stallone, Willis, Seagal or Mel Gibson:

- Michael France[116] : The most daunting thing about taking the job on GoldenEye was trying to come up with more and more stunts; things that hadn't already been done in the first 16 movies. As it turned out, I came up with a few too many; there were some that got rolled over to the next few films [like The World is Not Enough]. My intent was to make sure that the action was bigger than it's been in some of the other pictures. Not so much that it was bigger than Bond, but other mainstream American action movies, most of which I don't think are very good and which have unimaginative action scenes. I wanted to make those as big as possible, because I knew these were the producers who could pull it off.

- Michael Wilson[117] : At the time there were reports that True Lies forced us to make changes to the [GoldenEye] script. I read that and was very surprised. I don't know where that came from [but it's false].

The screenwriter also notes that the other 00 agents are not people who have been seen often in the franchise. "I thought it would be interesting to get a look at a friendship and a betrayal and just think about what would happen if one of these guys went bad. Somebody who had the same training as Bond, and was just as clever as Bond, and decided to put that knowledge to work for himself. It's not something you've seen"[118].

France describes the writing process as "very collaborative. We had meetings twice a week for several months with Michael, Barbara, Cubby, and Dana; either at Cubby's house in Beverly Hills or at MGM. I also talked to some technical people like stuntman B. J. Worth and aviation coordinator Corkey Fornof"[119].

France's January 1994 script: Trevelyan, Tempest, Marina and action

After perhaps (?) writing treatments, Michael France writes scripts. The one we are going to talk about weighs 157 pages. The cover reads "GOLDENEYE", "first draft" and "1-94".

The gunbarrel fades on a train traveling through the French countryside by daytime. This train, which passes through Paris and Bordeaux for its inaugural journey, is quite special since it is levitating in relation to the rails; it's a kind of very fast magnetic levitation train. "The wheels retract like the landing gear of an airplane: the train is now virtually flying, bound to the track only by an inch-high magnetic field".

James Bond is on board, responsible for its security. He notices that a sommelier serves champagne to a man, instead of serving first the women near him. We (and Bond) also immediately meet the main female character, Marina Varoskaya, who is on board because:

> - Marina: You shouldn't worry. Every function on this train is computer controlled. There is no safer way to travel.
> - Bond: I'm glad you're sure of that.
> - Marina: Entirely. I worked on the train's design.

(The script tells us her face has hard Slavic lines, her hair is auburn and she have a Russian accent).

Finding the sommelier suspicious, Bond follows him. A camera shot was then supposed to show that the people in the train's engine room were dead and a bomb clock which now dropping below the four-minute mark.

Bond goes to meet the fake sommelier in a wagon containing automobiles and tries to confront him orally:

> - Bond: What I said, monsieur, was that a genuine sommelier would have served champagne for the ladies first, not for the host...

The man takes a weapon out of the cart he was pushing: "it's a machine gun on top, a [explosive] shell-firing shotgun underneath". He sends his cart towards Bond who dives to avoid it. 007 rolls onto the hood of a Lamborghini and hides behind another car as the sommelier's cartridges hit the Lamborghini's gas tank. Bond can't move forward because of two burning cars, the sommelier shoots again and 007 dives again as a Ferrari "explodes in a $400,000 fireball" right behind him! Bond is pinned with only one car left to hide behind, and when this one is about to explode, he finally break a window with his Walther P88 (not PPK) and exits the carriage; he grabs onto the side of the train which is traveling at 483 km/h (300 mph), "this is like hanging onto the outside of a jet"!

Meanwhile Marina, who heard the explosions of the cars, disengages electronically the passenger wagons from the rest of the train.

Bond "fights the wind that threatens to peel him off the train's side, but he allows himself a split second to look back at Marina, intrigued: who is this brave, beautiful woman who's falling behind him?". Marina "stares at Bond too, but she's far more doubtful of this cold bastard hanging on the side of a burning train"!

Bond manages to climb onto the roof of his part of the train but an explosion causes a car in the carriage below him to go through the roof and Bond narrowly misses falling. "Bond desperately grips the smooth siding of the train: the design looks sleek, but just try getting a handhold on it".

A helicopter approaches and the train enters a tunnel, the helicopter follows it inside! "There's sufficient room in this tunnel for the copter to hover over the train".

While Bond still try to stabilize himself on the roof the train, a chain lashes at his hand. The fake sommelier, who is now on the roof for trying to escape via the helicopter (similar to the future Mission Impossible 1), holds that chain.

The smellier slashes at Bond with the chain, forcing him to goes toward the front of the train. Following another car explosion, "both Bond and the smellier fall and roll toward the front of the engine and down the sloping nose" of the train. "Bond stops himself, grabbing a crevice under the train's windshield; only his fingertips are holding him". There Bond takes a corkscrew from the sommelier's pocket and slash his arm with it. The guy's chain then gets caught in something and he is propelled under the train where he dies.

Bond break the windshield, reach the engine room and is preparing to defuse the bomb: only forty seconds remains before the explosion. Suddenly the helicopter machine-gunning the train: Bond chooses to abandon the defusing and goes to a carriage. "Close on Bond's hand which is turning an ignition key: the steering wheel bears the silver winged Aston Martin insignia". We now seeing Bond driving a DB7 out of a tear in the roof that acts as a ramp, climbing on to the train's roof, racing the car toward the nose of the train. He rams with it the helicopter which, losing control, crashes into the train which nevertheless continues on its way. The train explodes because of the bomb and after bursting out of the tunnel with his Aston Martin, flames/explosions just right behind him,

Bond comes across a French woman on the side of the road with whom he will obviously do things afterwards:

> - Aimee [Aimée]: Thank you so much for stopping. Are you going to Bordeaux?
> - Bond: Not today, apparently...
> - Aimee: Merde. I shall never make it to the wine auction in time. That's a Petrous '61; it's worth at least ten thousand francs. Now what am I to do with it?
> - Bond: My plans have gone off the rails too... Wouldn't it be a shame to waste both that bottle and this afternoon?
> [Bond pulls from his pocket the corkscrew he had picked up from the sommelier].
> - Aimee: Oui.

Opening credits.

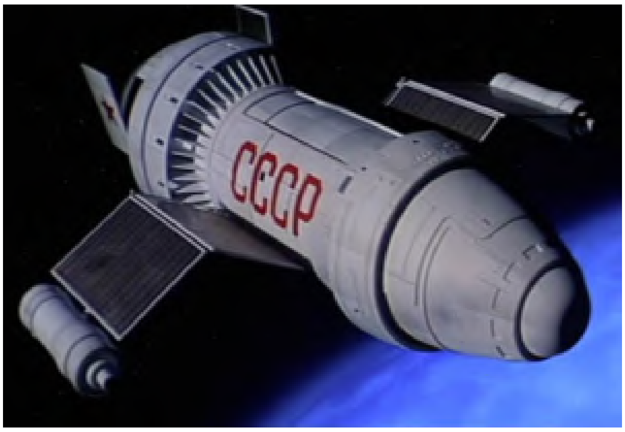
In addition to being the control center for an electromagnetic weapon called Tempest, "Severnaya" is a Russian site where there are several silos which contain nuclear missiles. On this day, several helicopters (with an odd design) approach Severnaya, claiming on the radio that a radiation leak has been spotted and that all personnel must evacuate the base. We find what we could call a precursor of Boris: a young "Russian technician" from Severnaya named Victor who confirms the threat to his colleagues.

A communications officer of the base senses that something is wrong, particularly because Victor is not trying to go outside unlike the others. He approaches Victor to confront him and discovers on the latter's computer that it's a false alert. Victor tries to attack him but the officer puts two bullets into the traitor's body, the officer then destroy the nuclear missiles's controls to prevent any use. In one of the helicopters approaching:

> - Trevelyan: Not yet. Allow them a final look at the dawn.

Once outside and after this moment of respite, the Severnaya staff members are killed by weapons mounted on the helicopters.

Several men descend from the helicopters including Augustus Trevelyan ("he is in his 60s, unmistakably British, yet just as unmistakably at home in Russia"), Savatier ("a mute, remorseless killer with a notably scarred throat") and Alexei Makvenio (a "scientist" who resembles Boris Grishenko, but with a less pronounced 'geek' side). On the other hand, it is not mentioned that Xenia is present.



After taking down the last survivors, the bad guys steal some kind of laptop and activate one of the Tempest satellites, setting Severnaya as the target. However the alarm has been raised and four Russian MiG planes which took off from an aircraft carrier (not a base) are approaching. The villains get back in the helicopters, the Tempest explodes in a manner similar to that what we can see in the film, and the helicopters used by Trevelyan which had deployed a strange anti-EMP "shield" escape at the last minute, unharmed while the MiGs are hit by the EMP just before having the chance to open fire on the helicopters. "The Migs, with no operational systems at all, drop out of the sky as randomly and soundlessly as toy gliders, and explode into fireballs, one after another, cartwheeling on the ice".

In a "chalet" at Paris, Xenia Labyakova (not Onatopp) kills a Russian (named Peter) with whom she is sharing a shower, by pressing on a vital point above his heart.

On the Mulholland side of Los Angeles, Savatier in a Ford Bronco repeatedly rams into a gold Mercedes 560SL driven by a Russian woman (named Sasha) and runs her off the road. Savatier leaves without even deigning to look at the explosion of the Mercedes that he knocked into a precipice.

At London, a Russian couple (Anatoly Razhnov and his wife Larisa) leave a restaurant. A valet (Morley) brings them their Jaguar and a camera shot shows the valet with his gloved hands retrieving something from under the door handle that Anatoly has just touched. While driving the Jaguar around the city, Anatoly seems not to be feeling well and loses control of the car which crashes gently into a lamp post. Anatoly says the word "kaggabe" (meaning KGB) while the audience thinks the man is going to die of poisoning.

We now find James Bond in London, at his office at Universal Exports. This passage presents a 'Flemingian' character: Loelia Ponsonby, Bond's secretary (Bond simply calls her by her first name, although she is nicknamed Lil in the novels) whose script tells us that she is in her twenties. They are talking about what happened on the french train when M contacts Ponsonby to tell her to send 007 to his office:

> - Bond: The rudest waiter I've ever met. Even by French standards.
> [Computer screen shows a photo of the fake sommelier].
> - Loelia: Emil Griffini, formerly with the Red Brigade as an explosives expert. He's listed here as inactive, James.
> - Bond: He was certainly active on that train. Pull up his known associates, Loelia.
> [...]

In Saint Petersburg, Marina Varoskaya sees a fake repairman (Illya Borchenko) taking a gun out of his toolbox as she walks home. The fake repairman pursues her without hurrying. She manages to take refuge in her apartment that she lock, she then discovers that a gas pipe is burst. The fake repairman sends the building's elevator to Marina's floor, which should trigger the gas explosion via a device. (There are a few elements to increase the tension during this sequence, such as the fact that a panicked Marina must search for the right key to open her door or the presence of bars on her window that she must dislodge). Marina jumps from her apartment's window as it explodes; she is still alive.

Outside Universal Exports's conference room:

> - Q: Good morning, 007...
> - Bond: Is the DB7 back up to speed, Q?
> - Q: Really, 007. Aston Martin only makes one hundred cars a year. You wind up demolishing half of them.

007, Sir James Molony (the Service's consulting neurologist, in his fifties), Q, M and the Minister of Defense meet in the conference room. The viewer learns that Anatoly Razhnov is a Russian scientist who recently defected to the West and who was about to brief MI6 on a space program called Tempest which he worked on while he was in the Soviet Union. Molony says Anatoly survived, but he is no longer able to speak. After analyzing satellite images of the remains of Severnaya, the protagonists hypothesize that Russia has succeeded in creating a weapon capable of sending electromagnetic pulses:

> - Bond: Pull that image back a bit, Q... That's a tight wreckage pattern...
> Those planes were destroyed on impact, not in mid-air. Something caused their operating systems to fail in flight... Like... An electromagnetic pulse.
> - Q: Precisely my thoughts, 007.

M then sends his agent to Moscow to investigate about the Tempest and the people had interest in it.

(Note that Miss Moneypenny is not present in the script. There is also no scene where Q provides gadgets to 007).

Then comes a scene where Trevelyan, holds a Blofeld-like meeting around a table, in a country house near Moscow. The script tells us that "the interior and furnishings are equally fit for a Czar, which is clearly how Trevelyan views himself". Around the table are several guests like Xenia, Savatier, Alexei Makvenio and an American named Jordan.

> - Jordan: The codes are hard to come by, and even harder to recode, but we'll be ready for firing in two days, Mr. Trevelyan.
> - Trevelyan: Excellent. Well... Now that we've discussed the future of the Tempest, I want to make sure that its past has been completely swept away. Savatier? At the same time, I've arranged for a little parlor game; just to let you know how much I appreciate the superb work you've all done.
> [With that said, Savatier takes out a long curved blade from a wooden box on the table].
> - Trevelyan: One of the twelve chairs you're seated in, even I'm not sure which, has a jeweled dagger that belonged to Nicholas II sewn into the rear cushion. Whoever's seated in that chair gets to keep the dagger, which is priceless, incidentally. While we wait to see who's won, if you wouldn't mind reporting your progress.
> [Savatier stands behind Xenia].
> - Xenia: Software specialist Peter Oronov suffered a fatal heart attack in Paris.

[Savatier tears the cushion behind Xenia with his blade; there is nothing in it. Savatier moves behind the next guest].

- Morley: Anatoly Razhnov suffered a very timely stroke in London.

[Savatier tears the cushion behind Morley with his blade; there is nothing in it. He moves behind the next guest].

- Tyson: The train attack in France meant to eliminate cryptographer Marina Varoskaya... Failed.

[Savatier doesn't tear the cushion].

- Trevelyan: And why is that?
- Tyson: A British agent on board... James Bond... Discovered my men before...

Trevelyan's poker face is split by a slight smile.

- Trevelyan: James Bond? Tell me... Did your men kill him?
- Tyson: ...No...

[Savatier tears the cushion behind Tyson with his blade; there is nothing in it. Tyson breathes a sigh of relief: he's still alive. Savatier moves behind the next guest].

- Trevelyan: Splendid. I want to see Bond once more before he dies.
- Illya: On the second attempt, Marina Varoskaya was killed in an "accidental" gas explosion in her home.
- Trevelyan: There was no sign of her body in your elaborately arranged "accidental" fire. Marina Varoskaya is a brilliant woman, who is no doubt used to being spied on by the KGB. You underestimated her... She now knows she is a target. She has gone into hiding. That makes her a very significant threat to our entire operation.

[Close-up on Illya's frightened eyes as Savatier raises his blade. Savatier finally plants the blade in Tyson. We don't see the blade or the blood, just the surprise in Tyson's eyes].

- Trevelyan: Had you used trustworthy people, my dear old colleague James Bond would never have even been on that train. And we would be spared a great deal of trouble.

[Savatier removes the knife from Tyson's body and plants it in Illya's chair: Nicholas II's dagger is inside].

- Trevelyan: This is your lucky night after all. Find Marina Varoskaya. And kill her. We must leave nothing to chance.

[The atmosphere returns to relaxation, with waiters bringing desserts and coffee as if nothing had happened].

Bond is now in Moscow's Red Square, smoking a cigarette while waiting to meet his contact. Finally, it is a certain Valentin Kosygyn (in his sixties) whose surname is Romaly, who introduces himself; this one appears to be from MI6.

- Romaly: You have been to Russia before, James?
A dark cloud passes over Bond's face...
- Bond (terse): Once.
Romaly remembers, and instantly regrets his error.
- Romaly: Stakhanya, I am an old fool, James...
- Bond (cuts him off): Forget about it, Romaly. It was a long time ago. And we've got work to do.

007 and Romaly go to a diplomatic reception at the Grand Kremlin Palace (reception which has the theme of nuclear disarmament). Bond comes across General Leonid Pushkin from the "KGB's Counterintelligence Directorate" (and also from The Living Daylights) and abruptly asks him if he was behind the attempted murder on Anatoly:

- Pushkin: So, James Bond.
- Bond: General Pushkin.
- Pushkin: It is always a pleasure to see you under peaceful conditions... If that is what they are. What can I do for you, Bond?
[Pushkin takes a knife and stops in front of two jars of caviar, he seems to be hesitating which one to choose].
- Bond: Just answer one question, General... Did you initial a termination warrant for Anatoly Razhnov?
[Pushkin is surprised].
- Bond: The royal beluga is superior, General, fresh from the Astrakhan coast. The other one I wouldn't feed to a koshka.
- Pushkin: We do not kill defectors, Bond... Particularly not now.
- Bond: Well, someone did... Someone with access to KGB toxins. And it happened less than a day after that nasty bit of weather you had in the Arctic. What's the Russian word for it? Beurya [which means Tempest in Russian according to the script]?
- Pushkin: I am very pleased that tensions between our countries have eased to the point that we can have a conversation inside the walls of the Kremlin. But I must warn you that if you pursue this conversation any further, 007, it will be finished inside the walls of the Lubyanka [KBG headquarters which also housed a sinister prison].
[Xenia, who is a few meters away, has heard the conversation. Pushkin approaches a KGB agent].
- Pushkin: Please see that James Bond is escorted to his car. Immediately.

(Note that contrary to what the script indicates, the KGB no longer existed at this time, having been replaced by the FSK and the SVR). On his way out, Bond runs into Trevelyan:

- Trevelyan: Well... James Bond.

> - Bond: Augustus Trevelyan...
> - Trevelyan (indicating reception): I'll miss this particular struggle, won't you, James? As Frederick the Great once said: "Diplomacy without armaments is like music without instruments". Now that it's over, I can tell you: part of my charade is that I'm buried right over there, three plots down from Khrushchev. Seems childish now. You are surprised to find me still alive, I suppose?
> - Bond: More than that. I'm delighted. It's always been a great disappointment to me that I wasn't able to kill you personally.
> [Trevelyan laughs even though it's a real threat].
> - Trevelyan: Don't be ridiculous, Bond. It was a schoolboy's game that we played a long time ago. Two empires, battling to change the world. The battle is over... And it seems to me that the world has not changed so much for it. Now, men like you and I look for new games. That is all.
> - Bond: Is that how you live with betrayal and murder, Trevelyan? By calling it a game?
> - Trevelyan: That question is beneath both of us, James. I might as well ask you if the vodka martinis ever completely still the voices of all the men you've killed... Or if you ever find forgiveness, in the arms of all those women, for the one that you failed to protect. My conscience is clean, James. Yours, I think, is rather crowded.
> - Bond: Certainly there's room for one more...
> - Trevelyan: Please, James, no embarrassing bravado, no vows to kill me; you had your opportunity some time ago. You won't get another.

> - Michael France[120] : There's a moment in GoldenEye when Alec Trevelyan comments on whether or not all those vodka martinis drown out the sound of all the women Bond couldn't save. The first version of that line was to the woman he couldn't protect, meaning Tracy.

A KGB agent intervenes, asking to Bond to go to his car as Pushkin wanted. Once outside the kremlin, he joins Romaly in a limousine:

> - Romaly: You were supposed to draw out the tigers, James, not jump-start the Cold War back into existence.
> - Bond: I thought Trevelyan was dead.
> - Romaly: You were meant to. The KGB faked his death after his defection so he could run the Active Measures directorate in secret.
> - Bond: "Active Measures", the KGB euphemism for "assassination".
> - Romaly: Trevelyan has planned or approved every KGB murder for years. But he retired eight months ago. The government granted him honorary diplomatic status.
> - Bond: Diplomatic status... For that bastard...
> [...]

Then comes a Metropol hotel swimming pool scene which is largely similar to the one in the film. While Bond is in the pool, he notices a presence, goes toward it and "abruptly grabs someone's arm in the darkness, applies a leverage hold and throws whoever's there into an individual steam room". He step into the room, Walther in hand, and discovers Xenia, completely naked since she lost her towel when Bond throwed her in here:

> - Xenia: Good evening, Mr. Bond.
> - Bond: Well... The face is familiar. And the rest is exquisite... Generally I don't undress a woman until after meeting her.
> - Xenia: My name is Xenia Labyakova. I understand you are asking questions about Razhnov... and Tempest... I came to give you a few answers.
> - Bond: Thank you for being so forthcoming... But the name's familiar too, Xenia. You work for the Active Measures directorate. Thoughtless of your superiors to send you up here to kill me... Unarmed.
> [She laughs and approaches him].
> - Xenia: Really, James, can I call you James? If I'd wanted to kill you... I wouldn't need one of these...
> [She takes the Walther out of Bond's hand].
> - Xenia: There are six ways I can kill you, right here, Right now...
> [Xenia caresses his chest, near his heart].
> - Bond: I knew Russian training wasn't very good...
> [Bond removes Xenia's hands from his chest and pulls her against him].
> - Bond: ...I can think of nine, at least.
> [Bond kisses her].

In the film, Bond never have sex with Xenia, but in this script he does, in a suite of the Metropol hotel. Here she tells him (without Bond seeming to ask why!) that he will find files on Tempest in the Lubyanka and shows him a way to infiltrate the building (this is obviously a trap). Xenia makes Bond doing her love once more.

The Lubyanka, the Moscow building which housed the headquarters of all Soviet political police, from the Cheka to the KGB, also infamous for its prison where a certain number of people were locked up, tortured and executed. Since the dissolution of the USSR, the building has housed the headquarters of the FSB, one of the heirs of the KGB. Curiously, the script describes the building as "grey".

While Bond goes to infiltrate Lubyanka, Xenia joins Trevelyan in a limousine.

> - Trevelyan: As I told you, there are two things James Bond cannot resist: a beautiful woman... And an obvious trap. He is always willing to try to get into the former... And out of the latter.
> [...]
> - Trevelyan: ...The Russians will be certain that the British are trying to steal their technology when they find your diagram on Bond.
> - Xenia: Suppose Bond is as skilled with the latter, as he was with the former?
> [Trevelyan grin grows wider].

By the metro, Bond infiltrates by the path that Xenia indicated to him, he carries a gadget with him: an electronic diary/dayplanner which notably has, as we gonna discover, the functions of thermal scanner, access card reproducer, camera, self-destruction and capable of transmitting data remotely.

Arriving next to a door, he places his diary against the wall, which reveals via thermal imaging that there are people on the other side. He tries it against another metal door: no one on the other side of this one. Bond then uses a felt-tip pen on the door, which has the particularity of having acid instead of ink, in order to open it. Suddenly Bond's feet trigger a pressure sensor which causes a Plexiglas cage to deploy around him. As Trevelyan explains to Xenia at the same time:

> - Trevelyan: Six years ago, we caught the Chinese trying to get into that shaft with some listening equipment... And I convinced the Internal Security directorate to leave the access to the shaft open... With a little pest control installed... It's a derivative of Sarin. [...].

Bond therefore finds himself trapped in this sort of gas chamber and sets about applying the remaining acid to the door. When he tries to open it, no way: there's a pile of junk piled up behind the door. Finally 007 manages to open the door by levering it with a rotten beam and thus escape from the gas chamber. Now inside the Lubyanka, Bond removes his jacket to reveal a black jacket and tie that makes him look like some sort of high-ranking KGB officer.

Trevelyan's trap triggered a silent alarm when activated and Lubyanka security is now on alert. The Russians notably use an armed and remotely controlled mini-helicopter/drone to monitor the premises (in addition to surveillance cameras). Xenia is now there and guards inform her of the intrusion; Pushkin is also in the building.

Bond mingles with the crowd and goes to a room where files are stored (the ceilings of the 3 floors are made of translucent materials), he opens the door with the access card reproducer from his electronic diary then asks in Russian to a secretary the files that interest him, such as if he were a KGB general. While Bond consults the files and takes a photo or video of the members of the space directorate (in which we see in particular the photo of Anatoly and Marina), the secretary goes deliver other files to Pushkin:

- Secretary: As you requested, General, the complete dossier on British agent James Bond.

What a surprise for the secretary when she sees a photo of Bond inside the file as Pushkin opens it. Security and Xenia are alerted by the secretary of the presence of 007 in the file room. Bond ends up encrypting the photos or video he took and leaves the room when an elevator door opens and Xenia begins machine-gunning towards him.

He responds by destroying an electrical circuit and Xenia is then temporarily stuck in the elevator. Pursued by security, Bond uses his diary's remote send function to transfer the data to the MI6's station in Moscow.

The Russians launch the machine-gun-equipped mini-helicopter in pursuit of Bond across the Lubyanka; they follow Bond on the trail of the signal emitted by his electronic diary. Security personnel move into position bellow and fire trough the translucent ceiling, only to discover that Bond has left his diary on a moving cart. As the diary's self-destruct function is initiated, a large explosion rings out.

Bond now heads towards the roof of the Lubyanka but finds himself cornered by security members; jumping into the void is not really an option given the height of the building. Xenia orders them to kill the intruder but 007 finally manages to escape by jumping into the void while grabbing the skids of the mini-helicopter, which should allow him to break his fall to the street. Xenia fires but her bullets are lost in the rotor and while Bond is still five stories above the ground, security cuts the helicopter's engines. Bond still manages to land quite smoothly on the top of a streetcar, destroy the mini-helicopter (he unhooks the machine gun from the drone and turns it against itself to do so) and flees the area.

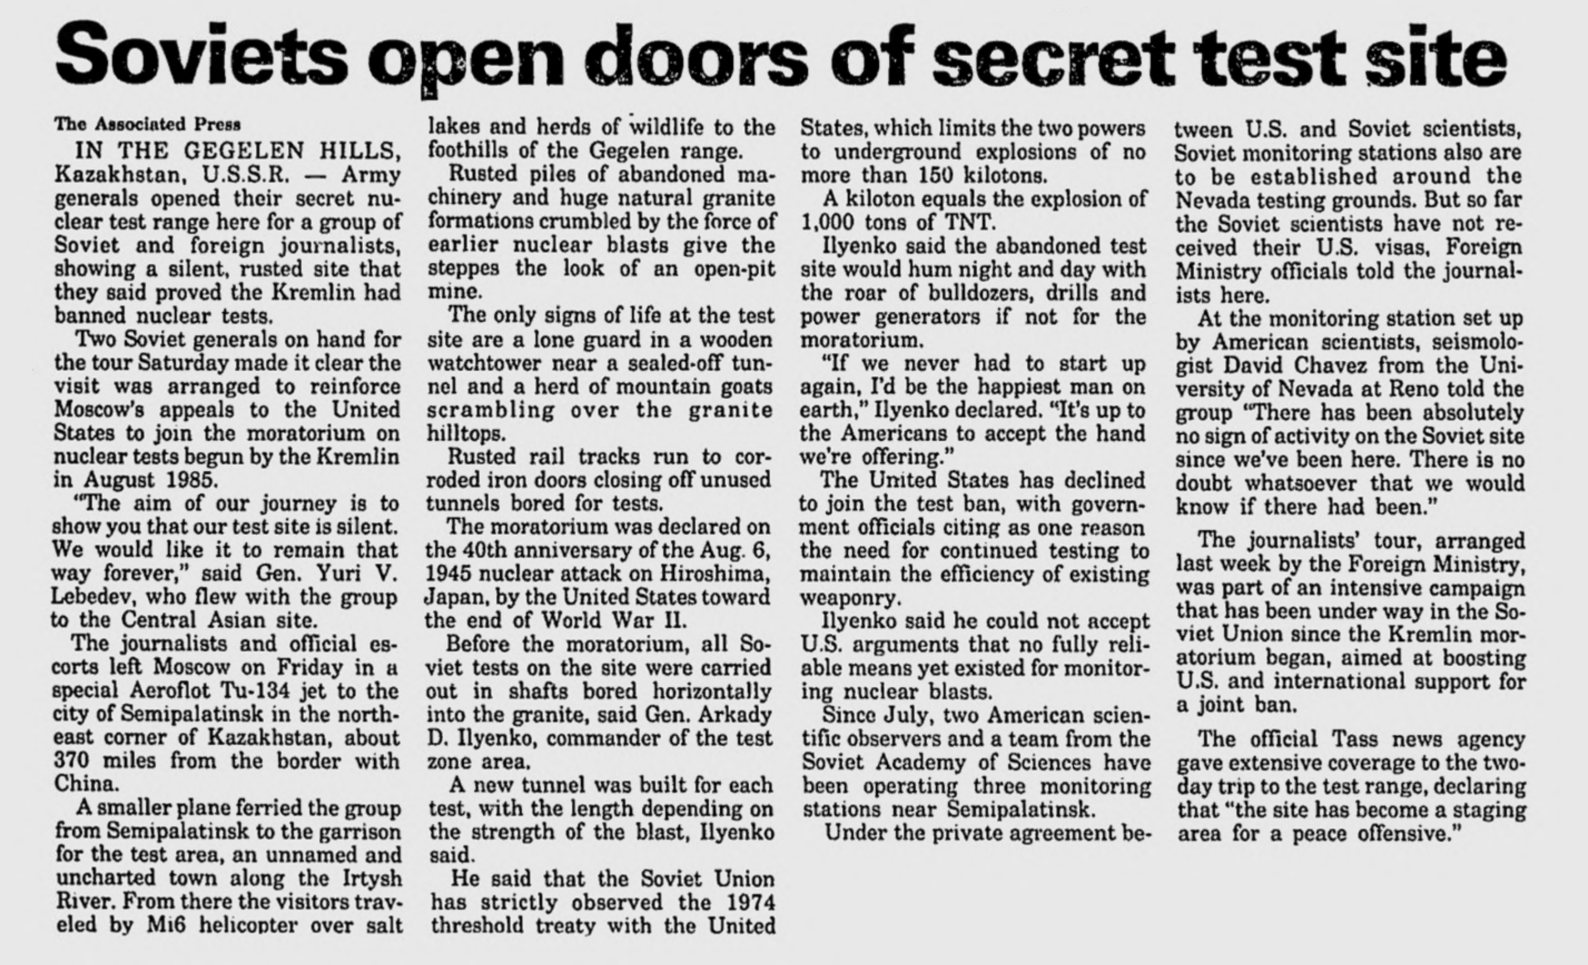
Bond then joins Romaly in a cafe near Gorky Park; the two men play chess while talking. Romaly tells him that M is furious, he had to made the Russians believe that Bond is an agent who gone rogue. Romaly also tells Bond that the scientists from the photos he recovered are dead (except Anatoly, they still believe Marina dead at this point) except for a certain Alexei Makvenio who is overseeing the destruction of nuclear warheads in Kazakhstan. Bond begins to speculate that it was Trevelyan on his own and not the Russians who were behind the scientists' assassination; the scene ends with Bond checkmating Romaly's king (even though Bond's pieces were originally in a very difficult position).

For some reason, the following scene in Kazakhstan is reminiscent of the film The World Is Not Enough. We are at "Gegelen hills", a former Soviet nuclear test site isolated from the world (having really existed, the right spelling is "Degelen" mountain. In 1986 the Soviet Union notably invited the foreign press there for a visit to show that they had indeed suspended the tests as planned by Gorbachev in his 1985 unilateral moratorium on the ban on underground testing. This is probably what will inspire this scene).

A NATO spokesman explains to those present that Dr. Alexei Makvenio will activate a nuclear device in two hours which is supposed to detonate in a controlled area underground and thus destroy 300 nuclear warheads from the former Soviet arsenal.

Marina arrives at the site and goes to see Alexei who was her mentor. She tells him that everyone else who worked with them on the Tempest program at the Arzamas Sixteen site were killed, except for the two of them. She tells Alexei that she wants to reveal the existence of Tempest to the press but she is quickly knocked out by Illya Borchenko before being transported to the room where the warheads are located. She is locked in a cylindrical box which is the size of a bomb.

- Illya: Trevelyan was right, she did want to protect her old mentor.



Soviets open doors of secret test site

The Associated Press

IN THE GEGELEN HILLS, Kazakhstan, U.S.S.R. — Army generals opened their secret nuclear test range here for a group of Soviet and foreign journalists, showing a silent, rusted site that they said proved the Kremlin had banned nuclear tests.

Two Soviet generals on hand for the tour Saturday made it clear the visit was arranged to reinforce Moscow's appeals to the United States to join the moratorium on nuclear tests begun by the Kremlin in August 1985.

"The aim of our journey is to show you that our test site is silent. We would like it to remain that way forever," said Gen. Yuri V. Lebedev, who flew with the group to the Central Asian site.

The journalists and official escorts left Moscow on Friday in a special Aeroflot Tu-134 jet to the city of Semipalatinsk in the northeast corner of Kazakhstan, about 370 miles from the border with China.

A smaller plane ferried the group from Semipalatinsk to the garrison for the test area, an unnamed and uncharted town along the Irtysh River. From there the visitors traveled by Mi6 helicopter over salt lakes and herds of wildlife to the foothills of the Gegelen range.

Rusted piles of abandoned machinery and huge natural granite formations crumbled by the force of earlier nuclear blasts give the steppes the look of an open-pit mine.

The only signs of life at the test site are a lone guard in a wooden watchtower near a sealed-off tunnel and a herd of mountain goats scrambling over the granite hilltops.

Rusted rail tracks run to corroded iron doors closing off unused tunnels bored for tests.

The moratorium was declared on the 40th anniversary of the Aug. 6, 1945 nuclear attack on Hiroshima, Japan, by the United States toward the end of World War II.

Before the moratorium, all Soviet tests on the site were carried out in shafts bored horizontally into the granite, said Gen. Arkady D. Ilyenko, commander of the test zone area.

A new tunnel was built for each test, with the length depending on the strength of the blast, Ilyenko said.

He said that the Soviet Union has strictly observed the 1974 threshold treaty with the United States, which limits the two powers to underground explosions of no more than 150 kilotons.

A kiloton equals the explosion of 1,000 tons of TNT.

Ilyenko said the abandoned test site would hum night and day with the roar of bulldozers, drills and power generators if not for the moratorium.

"If we never had to start up again, I'd be the happiest man on earth," Ilyenko declared. "It's up to the Americans to accept the hand we're offering."

The United States has declined to join the test ban, with government officials citing as one reason the need for continued testing to maintain the efficiency of existing weaponry.

Ilyenko said he could not accept U.S. arguments that no fully reliable means yet existed for monitoring nuclear blasts.

Since July, two American scientific observers and a team from the Soviet Academy of Sciences have been operating three monitoring stations near Semipalatinsk.

Under the private agreement between U.S. and Soviet scientists, Soviet monitoring stations also are to be established around the Nevada testing grounds. But so far the Soviet scientists have not received their U.S. visas, Foreign Ministry officials told the journalists here.

At the monitoring station set up by American scientists, seismologist David Chavez from the University of Nevada at Reno told the group "There has been absolutely no sign of activity on the Soviet site since we've been here. There is no doubt whatsoever that we would know if there had been."

The journalists' tour, arranged last week by the Foreign Ministry, was part of an intensive campaign that has been under way in the Soviet Union since the Kremlin moratorium began, aimed at boosting U.S. and international support for a joint ban.

The official Tass news agency gave extensive coverage to the two-day trip to the test range, declaring that "the site has become a staging area for a peace offensive."

The Times-News, September 29, 1986. Other newspapers will report very similar things.

Meanwhile Bond also arrives at "Gegelen hills". He goes through security with a United Nations ID card that appears genuine and while rummaging through a Makvenio's briefcases, he finds a strange ivory object that he seems familiar with. Bond heads to the room with the warheads which the script describes as "segmented into five zones, separated by irising blast doors that are at least four inches thick and now open. A small cargo rail system runs down the center of it. [...] There are three hundred atomic warheads inside, some casings eight feet long, some shorter, all neatly stacked horizontally, like cordwood, in the wider parts of the chamber, held back from tumbling down the chamber by a network of steel chains".

Once the elevator arrives in the room with the warheads, Bond goes towards Alexei to question him about what is really happening. Indeed, Bond thinks that Alexei is an ally of Trevelyan and that he wants to test how an EMP would behave via this explosion of warheads. Meanwhile Illya comes from behind 007, hits him, disarms him and holds him at gunpoint with a machine gun.

- Illya: So this is James Bond. I can't say I'm impressed.

While Alexei program the explosion, Bond manages to grab an iron bar and hit Illya's arm, who thereby pulls the trigger of his machine gun. Stray bullets kill Alexei and he then sets the bomb's timer to 3 minutes instead of 30 as his body collapses. Bond runs away from Illya who begins to open fire; he hears a noise coming from a warhead, the one in which Marina is locked. 007 frees her but she hits him and runs away, thinking that he is one of the bad guys. On her way out she touches a button which causes the blast doors to begin to close.

Illya continues to hunt down Bond and there is a small explosion triggered by a spark that causes over a hundred of warheads to roll across the ground in all directions. Bond manages to get through a blast door just before it closes completely; Illya, who then finds himself trapped inside, ends up disintegrated by the nuclear explosion. "Before he can complete his turn or start his scream, Illya's gun melts as he's vaporized against" a wall. Bond then manages to get out of the collapsing underground areas, notably with the help of a cable (he grabs onto it and releases a counterweight, which causes him to rise vertically), but is captured on the way out by a Russian guard named Rosskovich.

When Bond regains consciousness, his hands are handcuffed and he is in a troop transport helicopter flying over the Ural Mountains. He sees Rosskovich and a guard sitting near him, as well as Marina who also has her hands handcuffed; he explains to her that he is not her enemy:

> \- Marina: How many did you kill?
> \- Bond: I didn't kill any of them, Marina. Listen to me, you're still in danger. The control to Tempest has been stolen from the Russians...
> \- Rosskovitch: Zatkneis.
> \- Bond: I don't think the Russians know how to deactivate it, and the Americans don't even know it exists.
> \- Marina: Why should I believe you?
> \- Guard: Nyet! Zatkneis!
> \- Bond: Believe anything you like. But I just heard them send for General Pushkin. They're taking us to a safehouse for interrogation. Whatever happens, tell them how to shut the damned thing down...

The guard threatens Marina with a gun, Bond tries to intervene and the guard hits him with his gun. The helicopter lands near an isolated house; the landscape is snowy. Bond falls back into unconsciousness.

A brief flashback reveals why Bond is bear a grudge with Trevelyan: Shot of the country house at night. "Something is off-kilter here; this is the same mountain and country house, but we can see this isn't the present, because it's a different season: there's no snow, no ice".

A younger James Bond in camouflage clothing is near the house with a sniper rifle in the company of 003 and 005 (a woman); it is clear that he is in charge. 007 furtively observes the house where it appears that Augustus Trevelyan is being interrogated by Russians. The Double-Os separate and Bond takes a shooting position in a wild strawberry bush (he nonchalantly eats one in the process). Guards take Trevelyan outside and 007 hesitates to kill Augustus; ultimately preferring to kill the guards instead and signal Trevelyan to move. Augustus grabs the gun from one of the killed guards, and suddenly intentionally gives Bond's location to the other Russian guards before killing 003 and 005. Bond manages to escape into the woods but he has taken this betrayal very close to heart...

Back to the present: Bond regains consciousness while Marina, connected to a lie detector, is pre-interrogated by a certain Kolkhazhna while waiting for Pushkin to arrive:

[...]
- Kolkhazhna: I ask again: do you have any prior relationship with the other prisoner?
- Marina: No... I... Yes, we met once... But...
- Kolkhazhna: In that meeting, did you and the prisoner discuss your plans to murder Alexei Makvenio?
- Marina: No... He tried to kill me...
- Kolkhazhna: He tried to kill you... Are you certain of that?
[...]

Trevelyan and his men arrive in an attack helicopter and attack the country house with missiles! Bond manages to pick the lock of his handcuffs in time to avoid a missile that was aimed directly at him. Trevelyan, Savatier, Morley and other henchmen descend from the helicopter and kill everybody in their path. Bond, unarmed, comes face to face with Trevelyan. Augustus, gun in hand, then explains to him the reason for his betrayal:

- Trevelyan: Pity destroying this place. I still pay it a visit every spring. The first strawberries of the season always seem to show up over the graves of 005 and 003... I am genuinely sorry to have put you through that charade years ago, James. But when I defected, the Russians were skeptical. The head of MI6 simply crosses over? They thought I was laying out some sort of trap for them.
- Bond: So to convince the Russians, you set a trap for me.
- Trevelyan: I persuaded them to leak news of my "capture" through a diplomatic frequency I knew Whitehall had tapped. I was certain that you'd want to attempt a rescue... I'm much obliged. After your visit, the Russians believed every recognition cipher, every safehouse location, every operative's name I supplied them with.
- Bond: You bastard.
[...]
- Trevelyan: You must have had orders to kill me if I couldn't be rescued, so the Russians wouldn't interrogate me. I gave you one clean shot. You chose not to take it. Lock your hands behind your back.
[Trevelyan presses his pistol against Bond's head].
- Trevelyan: Because you lacked the nerve to shoot me back then, James, it's your finger on this trigger, not mine...
- Bond: Go ahead, shoot. I only wish I could see the look on your face two days from now when you try to fire Tempest.
[Trevelyan hesitates, his men haven't found Marina yet].

- Bond: Makvenio told me everything, Trevelyan. Before I was picked up, I called in Tempest's control codes to our Moscow Station. By now, the satellites have been recalibrated or destroyed.
- Trevelyan: If Makvenio had told you anything at all, you'd know that isn't possible. [...] I can detonate Tempest at the time, or target, of my choosing.
- Bond: Is that the threat you'll make? Global blackmail?
- Trevelyan: [...] Was your imagination always so limited? I intend to use the weapon, James... To the fullest possible advantage. I am sorry you won't see that happen. But I promise to come back here next spring... For your first crop of strawberries.

Bond then benefits of what Roger Ebert calls "the fallacy of the talking killer": a Russian officer left for dead shows up in the doorway, Trevelyan turn toward him to shoot time; in his death the Russian shoots in the direction of Trevelyan and Bond. 007 then takes advantage of this distraction, which is long enough, to escape by jumping through a window. He joins Marina in the house but she has grabbed the gun from Kolkhazhna's assistant; she intentionally shoots toward Bond, telling him not to come any closer.

Morley arrives with a flamethrower and Bond pulls Marina away from the flames just in time. 007 grabs a poker and fights Morley. As Bond is about to be killed, Marina shoots the flamethrower's tank. Since the tank is made of reinforced steel, this has no effect, but a second shot at the joint between the tank and the pipe causes flammable liquid to now escape from the flamethrower. Bond kicks Morley and takes Marina by the hand; they exit the house as the flamethrower explodes along with Morley.

- Marina: Who are you?
- Bond: My name is Bond, James Bond. (At sound of gunshots) Would you mind if we discussed the rest later?

They run towards a frozen lake as they are shot at by Savatier, other men, as well as the helicopter pilot who opens fire from a machine gun mounted on the side of the aircraft. Bond stops briefly and destroys the helicopter by shooting the aircraft's missiles with at gun. 007 and Marina continue their race towards a seaplane located on the lake and board it.

Two henchmen take motorcycles from the house's garage while another begins targeting the plane with a Stinger. The Stinger missile is fired and Bond "only has one idea and he clearly doesn't like it much": he shoots at the ice around the plane's floats to crack it. 007 accelerates and moves away from the dock where the missile ends up crashing and exploding.

Bond picks up speed in preparation for takeoff, steer propeller first toward henchmen who scatters, one of the motorcyclist falls on his side to avoid the plane's wing. Still pursued by one motorcycle, Bond heads towards rapids. He tries to steer the plane into the current to avoid obstacles, the biker tries to stop the plane with grenades, as a result the plane almost loses both of its floats. Finally Bond manages to make the plane fly just after passing a huge waterfall, the last float detaches from the plane and falls into the path of the biker who gets caught in it and falls into the void before exploding in the air because of his unpinned grenade.

The plane being badly damaged, Bond crash-lands it near a canyon. "With the strain of landing, the left wing tears of, the rest of the plane skids across the snow, out of control, burrowing into the snowdrift at forty miles an hour [...] and stops, half-buried, at the precipice's edge". After that Bond gets off the plane, which is balanced on the edge, it falls into the void and explodes (Marina had already left the plane without worrying about Bond). Luckily, 007 and Marina are not far from a sort of workshop in which there are skis.

- Bond: I don't expect any thanks for getting you out of that abattoir, but I'd appreciate it if you'd stop running away from me.
- Marina: You're a dangerous man to be with, Mr. Bond. Things have a tendency to explode around you. What do you want with me?
- Bond: You designed the control codes for Tempest? Is there a destruct code as well as activation code? You can ski, I hope.
- Marina: Only a little better than you can fly.
- Bond: Then we're going to the nearest phone and you're going to tell NATO how to shut Tempest down.
- Marina: That is impossible... The codes aren't a collection of numbers and letters, they're built into a hard cryptography chip. One is in each of the three satellites, and the only other one is in the coding computer. Without that chip, there's no way to communicate with the satellites.
- Bond: What about tracking the satellites, themselves? To shoot them down?
- Marina: Makvenio camouflaged all of them, one might transmit weather data, another might seem to be a surveillance satellite. And even if they could be tracked, they have defensive lasers.
- Bond: Congratulations, I suppose. You and Makvenio seem to have thought of everything. Except what happens when that thing detonates over a city.
- Marina: As long as you're interrogating me, Mr. Bond, I'll tell you precisely what happens when it's fired at a city. In a millionth of a second all electrical power will cut out. The surge will start electrical fires in old buildings, petrol stations, anywhere that a spark can start a fire. Backup generators in hospitals won't work, odds are they'll explode instead. All engines will fail, in a dense city, automobile traffic will instantly halt, and all air traffic over the city will crash and explode. Fired at the right target it will create a ring of fire one hundred miles wide.

[There is no pride in her voice, she is about to cry. She clearly feels ashamed and angry for creating this weapon].

- Marina: They had me run computer simulations on every target, Mr. Bond. The denser the city, the higher the kill probability. In Washington D.C. the projection was four hundred thousand. In London, six hundred thousand. In New York City it topped a million.

[Bond realizes how much she wants to destroy the Tempest*].*

- Bond (not an accusation): Why did you build it then?
- Marina: I suppose you became a killer for your government of your own choice, Mr. Bond. Mine didn't give me the option... If you've come for me because your government wants me to build another of the weapons, then you may as well kill me now.

- Bond: That's not why I'm here.
- Marina: Then what do you want?
- Marina: The same thing you do. To make sure that Tempest is never fired.

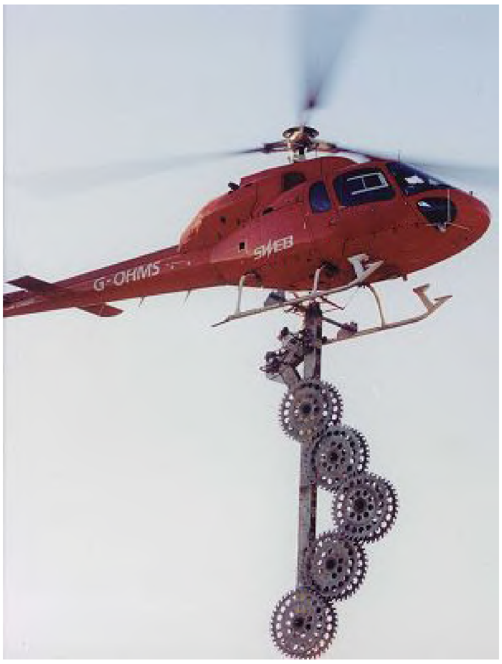
Meanwhile, Trevelyan's men head to the smoking wreck of the seaplane, using a helicopter hijacked from a logging camp; it is the same type of helicopter as in The World Is Not Enough, with saws hanging underneath (aerial stuntman B. J. Worth saw that this type of helicopter was used in the United States and Canada and showed a tape of them to Michael Wilson[121]).



The helicopter arrives and cuts up the workshop with its saws, Bond and Marina flee on skis and they are chased through a wooded area. The pilot focuses on Marina, the saws passing through the trees like butter, Bond tries to catch up with her but is slowed down by having to avoid falling trees.

She skis near a crevasse/canyon and Bond manages to catch her by jumping over this crevasse. A henchman shoots at Bond from the helicopter but 007 draws his gun and kills the shooter while skiing; the man falls from the aircraft and ends up in the saws where he is torn into a thousand pieces.

Running out of ammunition, Bond throws away his gun. He is now coming straight towards a cliff wall, a dead end, and the pilot tilts his helicopter so that Bond will end up in the rotor if he stops. 007 finally manages to avoid this and jumps in order to hang on to a skid of the aircraft. Bond misses the skid and falls towards the saws but manages to hang onto an electrical wire connected to the saws; the frame the saws is on now swinging as the pilot tries to follow Marina.

Bond, who has now removed his skis, tries to climb up the cable and almost falls. At one point Bond's feet narrowly miss coming into contact with the saws and the script tells us that "an inch off, and the next thing Q's making is a pair of prosthetics".

Bond waddles on the frame so that the saws find themselves on a trajectory where they will collide with a cliff, Bond then jumps from the saw's frame to fall onto the ice six meters below. The electrical cable gets caught in something in the rock and the helicopter then stops dead in place before crashing against the wall of a canyon. The wreckage of the aircraft slides down a slope heading dangerously towards Marina. She manages to dodge it and the four saws, which are also sliding, catch up with the wreckage of the helicopter and crash into it. The script tells us that "you'd need THX sound to separate the grinding from the screaming" of the pilot who was still alive!

In a video from GoldenEye's pre-production period, we can see special effects supervisor Chris Corbould showcasing the helicopter's saws (before this sequence was removed from the film).

> - Marina: My God... Are you all right?
> - Bond: Yes, but he certainly cut out of here in hurry.

Pushkin finally arrives at the country house in the mountains, or at least what remains of it, and gives the order to transmit to all civil authorities that Bond must be captured, or even killed if he tries to resist.

Bond and Marina take a train to Saint Petersburg, 007 notably makes the conductor believe that they are a couple who are running away to get married. At one point they are about to kiss but the conductor interrupts them by bringing them caviar and vodka; Bond then decides not to try again to get closer to Marina.

It turns out that militiamen (Militsiya was Russian's police name at the time) are waiting for them at the Saint Petersburg train station. Bond wakes Marina and they discreetly exit the train, however a militiaman spots them and captures them. Strangely the militiaman brings Bond and Marina away from his colleagues, and while Bond succeeds in disarming him, Romaly's voice is heard: "please don't hit him James... As it stands, I already owe him a very large favor". The militiaman is in fact a friend of Romaly. They get into a silver Rolls-Royce limousine:

> [...]
> - Bond: How did you find us?
> - Romaly: You are joking? Such a swath of destruction has not been cut through Russia since the invasion of Napoleon.
> [...]

007 then goes to the "Kronstadt Bank" on Nevsky Prospekt with Marina. There he takes out the strange ivory object that he had found in Makvenio's briefcase in Kazakhstan; this acts as a seal/stamp and allow them to access a bank's safety deposit box. In the said box they find a folder named "GEOCOM" and a floppy disk (which contains a computer program which will basically be of no use in the rest of the plot).

Jordan, previously seen at Trevelyan's dinner, works in the bank and sees Bond leaving the building. He grabs a guns and sets off in pursuit of 007, but by the time he gets to the exit, Bond and Marina are already out of sight, disappeared into the crowd. "The camera crowds into Jordan's face because he knows his fate, there is the sound of a gunshot" when he later joins Trevelyan at his office. Trevelyan killed Jordan in front of Xenia.

It's sunset and Bond and Marina meet Romaly (whom they don't know is being watched by someone) at the Palace Square in Saint Petersburg, where there is a festival dedicated to the Romanov era.

- Romaly: Follow these directions to Toksovo, and you'll find a KRG-33 that a friend of mine has liberated from the old Kharofskav airfield.
- Marina: My first job was in Air Defense Directorate, that plane is a terrible design...
- Romaly: ...But an excellent price. Where else but Russia can you buy a military plane for two thousand dollars and a case of American bourbon? I've checked on that name, Geocom is a new firm, established eighteen months ago to take satellite photographs for petroleum and mining companies.
- Bond: That's a perfect cover. Trevelyan would have all the equipment he needs to activate Tempest. Where is it based?
- Romaly: A small island in the Caribbean called St. Latrelle. There is something puzzling, though, James. You say Trevelyan will fire the weapon tomorrow but London reports that no threat, no blackmail demand, no communication of any kind has been made, on any frequency, to any government.

Militiamen arrive and spot Bond; 007 separates from Marina and Romaly and the militiamen set off in pursuit. Bond is quickly caught by three militiamen who bring him to Pushkin while Marina and Romaly are pursued by Xenia and Savatier through the crowd. Savatier discreetly takes out a pistol with a silencer and aims his laser sight at Romaly and Marina; Romaly is hit and falls to the ground. Romaly tells Marina to leave him while Savatier approaches him to finish the job before pulling the trigger.

Meanwhile 007 tries to set the record straight with Pushkin:

- Pushkin: Assassinating our scientists was needless, 007... The weapon has been destroyed.

> - Bond: Has it? Did you find even a scrap of the control computer when you combed through the Severnaya wreckage?
> [Pushkin's face says "no"].
> - Bond: General, I know you can't deactivate the weapon. The only person alive who can is that woman, and if I don't get her to the control computer in the next twenty-four hours, the Tempest is going to be fired. Possibly against a Russian target... And if your Tempest is used against a Western city tomorrow, how much longer do you think peace will last?
> - Aide: He's obviously lying, General...

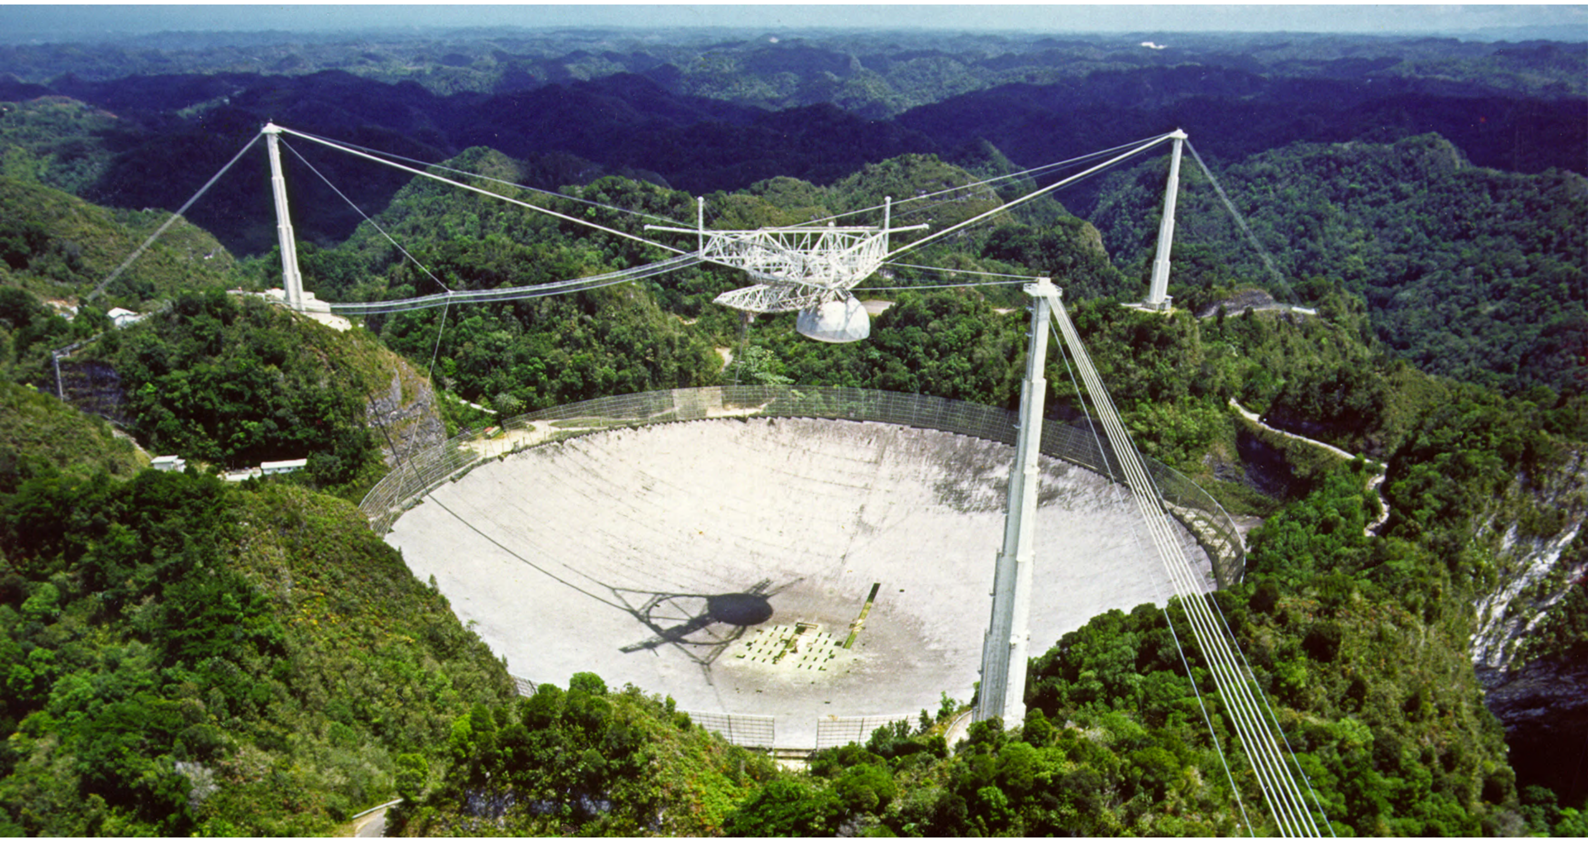
Bond sees a carriage and finally decides to run away. He attacks the militiamen then climbs on a horse. Pushkin's aide draws a gun, he has a direct line of fire on 007 but Pushkin deflects his gun: his "troubled face shows he isn't sure he can believe Bond, but he can't afford to take the chance that it wasn't true". Bond stops his horse when he sees that the crowd is gathered around someone: Romaly's corpse.

Meanwhile Savatier and Xenia track Marina in the Summer Garden. Galloping, Bond arrives at the Garden and sees Xenia who is strangling Marina (with earrings that form a garrote). Bond jumps from his horse on Xenia and thus separates her from Marina. Xenia takes out a gun and 007 disarms her, however Xenia manages to give him several blows which take his breath away. "Xenia is getting a physical thrill from this, killing men is better than sex". As she prepares to give Bond the final blow by pressing a vital point located at his heart, Marina grabs Xenia's weapon and kills her.

Bond then grabs Marina and they both get on the horse, other horse-riding militiamen and Savatier approach. Bond's horse jumps over a stone wall, one of its legs striking Savatier's head, who then falls to the ground. Savatier comes to his senses and discharges his weapon, but misses all his shots. Bond and Marina are chased by the militiamen, Bond zigzags between the columns of a building (the horses of several militiamen refuse to do the same). Militiamen in cars appear, Bond directs his horse onto a frozen watercourse (the Neva), which holds firm under their weight, but the militiamen abandon the pursuit because the ice has become fragile. Once safe, Bond and Marina kiss.

Apparently following a report made by Bond, NATO is looking for the two Tempest satellites. Q gives M and his American counterpart, a certain Orbach, the position of the enemy satellites. Two NATO satellites try to destroy them but both Tempest satellites have defense weapons, such as cluster bombs and magnetized mini-mines, which neutralize or destroy the two NATO satellites.

> - Orbach: Well, gentlemen, grab some seats, make yourselves comfortable, and start making bets on where those things are going to be fired... It looks like all we're going to be able to do is watch.



Bond and Marina fly over St. Latrelle in a plane and see a large hollow where there is an antenna and a giant satellite dish (the setting looks like an Arecibo radio telescope, even if the latter is not mentioned in the script). As they observe the location, a helicopter without a tail rotor (therefore supposed to be more maneuverable than normal according to the script) machine-gunning Bond and Marina's plane. 007 presses the control of the machine guns of his military plane but nothing comes out it except for a few sparks on the control panel.

- Bond: Who built this bloody plane?
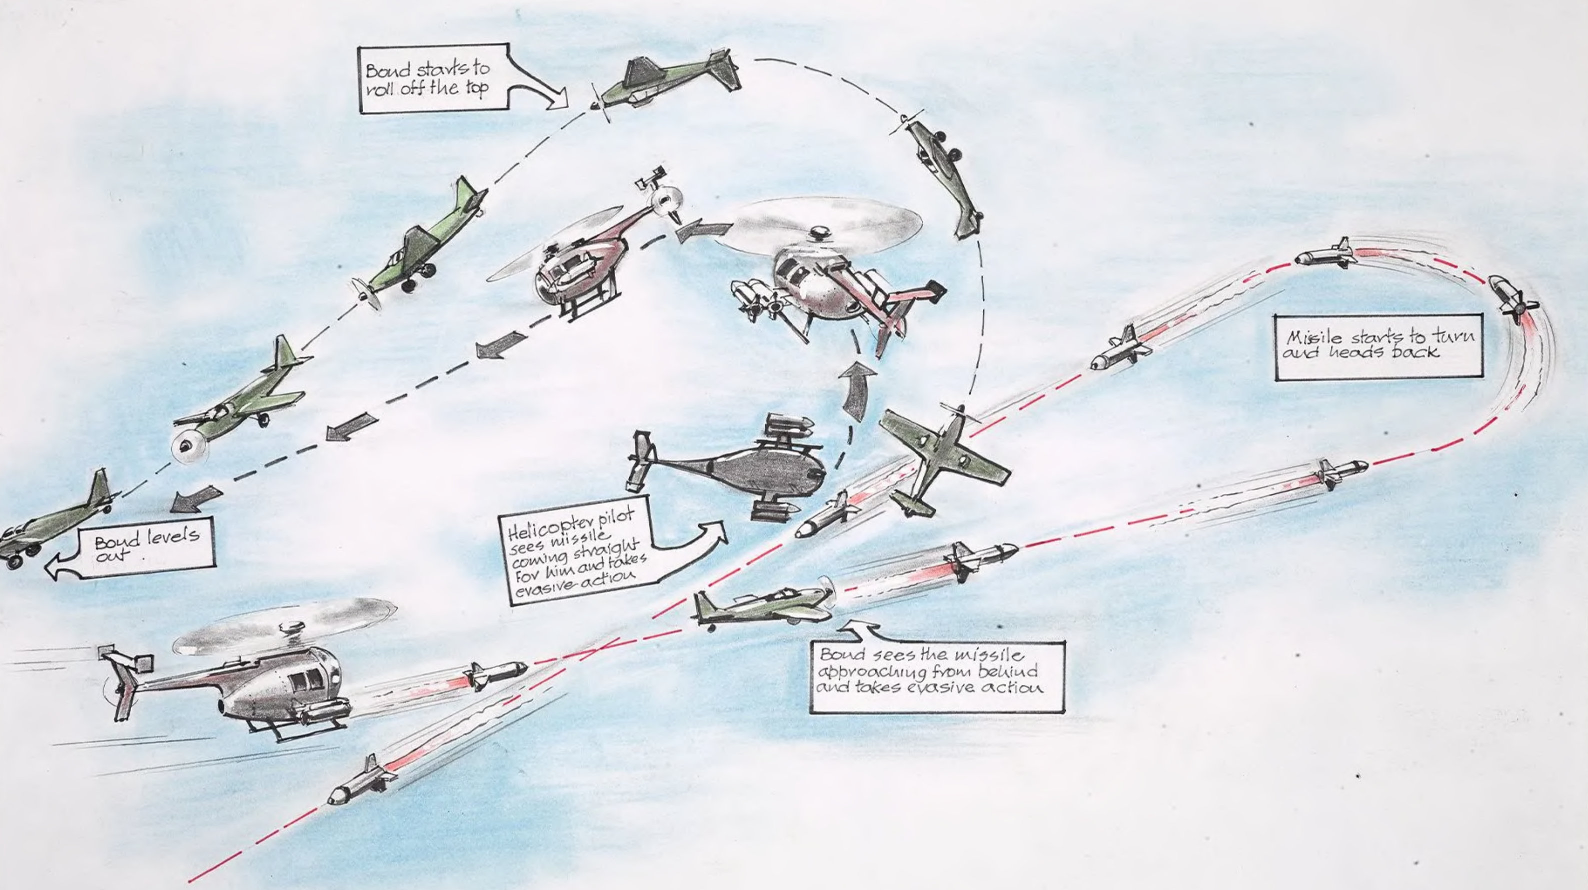
- Marina: Air Defense Collective Nine in Minsk. We lost more pilots in training exercises than in entire Afghan war.

Three other helicopters join the chase; one of them fires an air-to-air missile which Bond narrowly manages to dodge; the missile crashes to the ground. Bond flies near the antenna, under the suspended bridges that go to the heart of the antenna; guards located on these bridges opened fire. One of these guards hits a helicopter while trying to shoot Bond and the helicopter collides with part of the antenna and explodes. The three other helicopters are still chasing Bond who is dodging a new air-to-air missile.



Bond starts to roll off the top
Missile starts to turn and heads back
Bond levels out
Helicopter pilot sees missile coming straight for him and takes evasive action
Bond sees the missile approaching from behind and takes evasive action

Concept art by Syn Cain.

The helicopters surround the plane (one on the right, another on the left and the last one behind): Bond can only go forward... Where there is mountain. Fortunately there is a narrow cavern entrance in this mountain and Bond enters in it, the two helicopters located on the right and left stall while the one behind pursues Bond's plane inside the cavern.

Bond maneuvers to avoid the cavern walls under a hail of bullets. He sees the end of the cavern and pushes a lever which releases fuel from the wings, the helicopter behind the plane is sprayed with the fuel which ignites because of the shots fired by the gunner. The helicopter explodes and Bond's plane exits the burning cavern as the other two helicopters return to attack.

Their plane being damaged, with a wing on fire due to a shot, and locked by an air-to-air missile, Bond and Marina escape by parachuting (one for two, as in Quantum of Solace movie). The plane explodes in mid-air and debris passes near Bond and Marina as they fall, a helicopter tries to shoot them down but Bond draws his gun in the air and shoots onto the cockpit. The helicopter crashes, Bond and Marina fall into the hollow of a cavern and 007 then opens the parachute.

As they descend to the cavern ground, flaming debris from the helicopter and plane passes by them. The remaining helicopter lands at the top of the cavern and the gunner lowers into the hole with a winch. Bond jumps on the man and they fight hanging in the air on the winch cable, their bodies swinging as they hit the cavern walls. 007 manages to kill the gunner and climb up the winch cable with Marina; he gets rid of the pilot and they get into the helicopter.

With the stolen helicopter (on which there are no missiles left), they head towards one of the three towers from which cables extend, some of which support the large structure. Inside the tower they find computer equipment, Bond returns to the helicopter while Marina stays behind to try to enter codes or something like that, in order to destroy the Tempest's satellites before theirs activation.

007, who has donned pilot clothing, lands on a landing zone where there is an entrance to Trevelyan's base. He overpowers a man who comes to meet him and takes his clothes before sneaking into the base. The elevator he takes goes down to a floor where weapons are stored: mines, machine guns, nerve agents, rocket launchers, etc. "The storage level looks like Charles Foster Kane's attic: it goes on and on". Bond grabs Semtex. He descends from another floor and comes across a cavern transformed into a landing strip filled with fighter planes of various nationalities; he places Semtex on one of them into which he inserts a detonator contained in his Rolex watch.

Bond is eventually spotted and captured before being taken to Trevelyan, who is in a control center full of computers, described "like the New York Stock Exchange as designed by Ken Adam".

> \- Trevelyan: James Bond. Even Rasputin had the courtesy to die after the fourth attempt on his life... Where is Miss Varoskaya?
> \- Bond: Dead.
> [Trevelyan doesn't believe him and signals his guards to look for her].
> \- Trevelyan: She will be, soon enough.
> \- Bond: Your armory is impressive, Trevelyan. But I wouldn't have bought so many Russian airplanes.
> \- Trevelyan: Oh, I have American weaponry as well. It's as easy to find. I'm stocking them here, and in several other locations, for... An opportune moment. [...] Both of them [British and Soviet empires] ended for exactly the same reason: for want of money. It's time to think, perhaps, about building a new one. With the money I'm about to receive, I will be prepared when the next opportunity comes.

Trevelyan explains his plan to Bond: the World Trade Center in New York processes more than a trillion of dollars from around the world every day. After the 1993' bombing (in which a car bomb exploded in the underground parking lot), Trevelyan placed his own man at the World Trade Center when the new security protocols were just being created. Today he plans to electronically steal several billion:

> \- Trevelyan: Ten billion? James, you have lost your imagination.
> [...]
> \- Trevelyan: They [the World Trade Center] must process over a trillion dollars worth of wire transactions daily. A trillion and a half. But I'm not greedy, James. I have my eye on a mere six hundred billion.
> [...]
> \- Bond: Just before the Tempest goes off over New York. It'll destroy the proof of the theft, the computer itself, and all the recorded data... As well as a million people.
> \- Trevelyan: A matter of accounting. We're both men who've had to make decisions about human lives, James. What it costs to spare them, what it costs > to take them, what it costs us to make that choice. Six hundred billion dollars balanced against one million lives? Merely dust on the globe.

> - Bond: The theft will be traced.
> - Trevelyan: To whom? To what? New York City in flames from a "terrorist" attack, Washington and Moscow scrambling to blame each other for the incident and cover up the true cause? Searching for deposit slips in the rubble will be the last thing on anyone's mind. By tomorrow, I'll have withdrawn the money... And, in fact, I expect to make a handsome profit on the currency exchange. I'm playing a hunch that the dollar will take a sharp drop this afternoon.

Savatier joined them with Marina whom he had just captured:

> - Trevelyan: I thought I told you early on in your training, James, [to] never bring a woman into combat with you. When you do, you bring a second heart. A second target.

The villains enter New York as a target but an (unnamed) technician tells Trevelyan that Marina has reprogrammed the satellite to target St. Latrelle. As Trevelyan turns to Marina, the Semtex placed by Bond blow up, causing the planes to explode and a chain reaction. Bond and Marina flee while Trevelyan's technicians desperately try to reposition the satellite... Which should end up above them in about five minutes.

Bond and Marina are temporarily safe in an elevator but 007 have received a bullet which pierced his left arm. As there is a chance the technicians can reprogram the satellite to position, Bond wants to make sure Trevelyan's plan won't work. He kisses the girl and then heads towards the antenna structure, which Marina says will be electrified when the Tempest will have fired; but he is resigned to doing so even though "he knows there's no way he can get back off that platform alive".

However Savatier was waiting for Bond on the antenna structure and a hand-to-hand fight between the two men began during which 007 manage to place an iron bar in the antenna's rotation mechanism (like in the movie). Meanwhile there is panic in the control center as Trevelyan watches his technicians who cannot reprogram the satellite. The Tempest ends up being activated and Savatier, surrounded by conductive metal beams, dies electrocuted (in any case he was already falling into the void with part of the antenna). Bond escapes by clinging to a non-conductive rope.

Part of the antenna falls onto the underground control center of Trevelyan which is located under the dish (dish which is the round part sunk into the ground and whose surface is made up of several aluminum panels assembled together). The rope Bond is holding begins to give way and 007 falls several meters towards the dish but lands on it alive.

007 is now sliding across the surface of the dish and manages to stop in a net as explosions from the control center bellow send some aluminum panels flying near him. What's left of the antenna is about to fall on the dish (the antenna's shadow is above Bond). Marina sees 007 trying to run up the slope of the dish and she grabs a rope to throw it to him.

The antenna eventually falls (as does one of the support towers), creating a large hole in the dish, the aluminum panels begin to slide towards the hole with Bond on it. Marina's rope lands near 007 when suddenly, Trevelyan, who "looking disheveled from his escape from the lower levels, but more than that, he looks enraged", appears behind Marina and pushes her into the dish, saying:

> - Trevelyan: Tell me, James, do you ever tire of watching the women you love die?

During her fall, Marina passes near Bond (he cannot catch her because she passes by his injured arm) and falls into the hole. However, inside it she hits a net or a mish-mash of flimsy cables which prevents her from falling into the flames further down. Furious, Bond pulls on the rope that Marina had handed him, it gets caught in Trevelyan's legs and it is Augustus turn to slide on the surface of the dish.

Trevelyan rolls up to Bond and crashes into him; they both fall to the edge of the hole. As they fight, the aluminum panels they are on come loose. At one point Trevelyan draws his pistol and Bond delivers a powerful kick to the panel on which his enemy is located. The aluminum panel comes loose and Trevelyan falls into the hole with it; a fall of 60 meters towards the flames of his control center in which another explosion rang out.

Bond goes to Marina and extends his good hand to her, just in time before the structure she was still hanging on gives way. They hurry to climb up the slope of the dish and get away from it.

As fire or blasts reach Trevelyan's armory and everything explodes, they escape in the helicopter which manages to restart despite being hit by the EMP.

From the NATO control center M, Q and the Americans inquire about the damage and where the explosion occurred. They know 007 was in this area.

> - Q: If the Tempest was fired there, there's no electricity, no telephones, no communications of any kind... Heaven only knows what survival conditions he's being forced to deal with.

At the same time, in a bungalow in the Caribbean night, Bond is furious that his vodka martini is stirred, not shaken: "I know you're Russian, but don't you appreciate the finer things in life?". Marina relieves Bond of his drink and pulls him towards her: "I just appreciate a smooth ride". Bond kisses her and the camera takes a wide shot of the island on which the bungalow is located...

End credits followed by "JAMES BOND WILL RETURN".

March, 11 1994' script: Morozov's mansion, Kremlin and 001

Let's now talk about a 124 pages script dated March 11, 1994 according to the cover. Michael France is the only credited author, the title on the header page is "BOND 17" and it is referred to as a "first draft" as well. For a time I tough it was written before the one we studied in the last chapter since it looked like a regression to me on certain aspect, but it now seems to me this script was wrote after.

We notice immediately that the pre-title sequence is not defined. The French train scenes don't exist in this script, only the words "pre-title sequence" appear on the page, not specifying what it consists of.

After the opening credits, direction Severnaya. What happens there is similar to the script previously seen, except that it is specified "attack" helicopters (instead of "having the size of transport helicopters"). Also in this script Severnaya doesn't host ICBMs in addition to the controls of Tempest: the helicopters therefore don't call by radio to pretend that a radiation leak has been spotted. Instead the technician named Victor looks at his watch and types something on his keyboard that sets off a fire alarm in the facility. Fire-fighting systems release halon gas to prevent the spread of the imaginary fire, which causes the staff to leave (except Victor, which cause him to be shot by a Russian officer who discovers his treachery).

After Severnaya, there is a series of assassination attempts. We notice that the vital point that Xenia presses is not located above Peter's heart but at the level of the carotid artery; the assassination of Sasha in Los Angeles by Savatier is not present in this script; and Anatoly doesn't pronounce "kaggabe"

We go directly to the scene of the assassination attempt on Marina (the scene at Universal Exports with Ponsonby doesn't exist since the train pre-title sequence neither). This one is somewhat different. Indeed in this script we find her inside a workshop in Saint Petersburg in which there are computer components (the script tells us that she is in her twenties). She picks up the phone and hears a certain Nikolai Borchenko who tells her (from a public booth) that Peter and Anatoly are dead. She asks about Alexei but Nikolai tells her that he doesn't know and hangs up after advising her to try to leave the country like him.

As Marina begins to gather her things, Nikolai leaves his phone booth and enters a pedestrian tunnel. There is a sort of tension there because a man approaches him from the other end of the tunnel but false alarm: he is just a passerby. As Nikolai lets out a little nervous laugh about his paranoia, he runs into Savatier who catches him and kills him by hitting him with his hand in the heart's zone. From there, things happen similarly to the other script: Marina returns home by taxi, the fake repairman (under this disguise is Savatier in this script) and the gas explosion.

Without any dialogue about an Aston Martin DB7, we find ourselves directly at the briefing at MI6 with slightly different people: Bond, Q, M and Leolia (instead of Loelia) Ponsonby (who is not Bond's secretary here):

> - M: You're late, 007... You know our senior analyst, Leolia Ponsonby, of course.

The beginning of the meeting is similar to the other script (Ponsonby has quite a few lines that are James Molony's ones in the script seen before), but no one at the end of this meeting suggests that Severnaya could had been hit by an EMP (on the contrary Bond and Q seem to think that the damage is due to some sort of aerial battle which took place above the base). In fact MI6 doesn't know what kind of weapon is hidden under the words Tempest mentioned by Anatoly (who didn't survived in this script), but M intends to find it out by sending his agent to Russia.

Before Bond leaves the briefing room, M warns his agent not to "settle any old vendettas", particularly "the oldest" one. 007 replies that he was never satisfied with the resolution of this mysterious matter for the audience. M dryly replies that neither does he, before repeating his warning to not cause any trouble.

No Blofeld-like scene at Trevelyan's place, we go directly to the meeting between Bond and Romaly at Moscow's Red Square.

007 and Romaly then go to a diplomatic reception which takes place at Savva Morozov's mansion (instead of the Grand Kremlin Palace). Bond approaches Pushkin, we notice the line "I am very pleased that tensions between our countries have eased to the point that your second visit to Russia is more pleasant than the first". Pushkin doesn't ask Bond to be escorted out and more importantly: 007 doesn't meet Trevelyan at this reception.

- Romaly: You were supposed to draw out the tigers, James. Not initiate a new Cold War.
- Bond: I think I'm going to head back to the hotel, Romaly. I have a feeling the tigers will show up there soon enough.

From inside a limousine driving through the streets of Moscow, Bond gazes out at the Kremlin. Suddenly a flashback occurs: "a different night, the Kremlin".

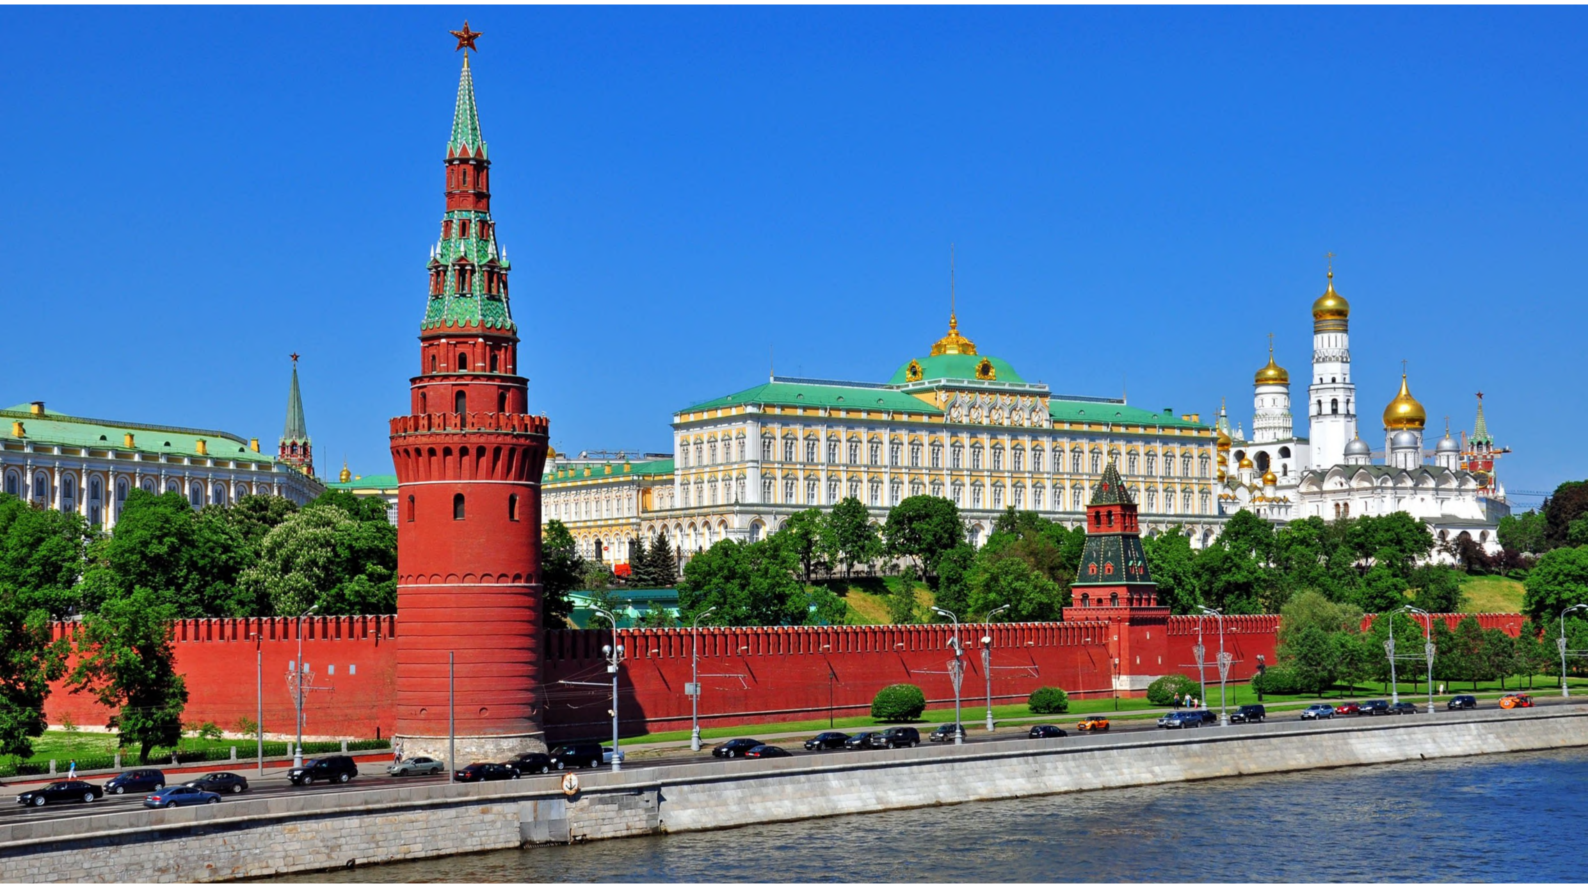
Unlike today the building is covered in snow; the place seems to be on state of alert. In the darkness we see a "younger" James Bond dressed in black and perched on a Kremlin wall. He looks down at a man who is running in a garden, chased by guards who are trying to shoot him. A spotlight illuminates Bond: he destroys it. The man moves closer to the wall and Bond releases a rope toward him. The man begins to climb but is shot down by the guards and falls to the ground. The script writes that the man is an "agent" (even if nothing can indicate this to the audience at present. We will learn later that the man was Trevelyan, but his face is not clearly shown to the audience in this scene). Bond is forced to flee as bullets rain down near his position.

Back to the present: the script tells us that "Bond wondering for the thousandth time what he could have done to prevent this". He arrives at the Metropol hotel and there is the scene with Xenia Labyakova in the baths, then he have sex with her. Xenia tells him that he will find files on the Tempest at the Kremlin (not at the Lubyanka).

After this passage in Bond's hotel room, we have a meeting at Trevelyan's, different from the Blofeld-type one in the previous script. In this one there are only Xenia and Trevelyan (who is playing the piano). Xenia tells him that the man the British sent happens to be James Bond and asks him if he knows him; Trevelyan replies that he actually knows Bond "very well". She asks if she should kill him: Trevelyan tells her to wait until Bond gets first the Tempest's files from the Kremlin (he ask her to help him to retrieve them).

- Trevelyan: After finding his body, the Russians will be certain that the British stole the Tempest control computer, the British will conclude that the Russians are behind the assassinations, and no one will be left to stop me.

At his hotel Bond telephones to Romaly to ask him to find $50,000 (the sum that Xenia asks him for her help) and anything he can find concerning the architecture of the Kremlin.



Xenia's Mercedes approaches the Kremlin, guards check her accreditation and let her pass. We discover that Xenia's driver is none other than Bond. 007 parks the car next to the archives building and Xenia tells him the files are on the fourth floor and that she arranged to have a door opened for him. Bond wonders why she doesn't accompany him, to which she explains that it's wiser if he goes alone: she's used to attracting a lot of attention (from men) there.

They'll meet up in an hour and he'll give her the rest of the money. Before leaving, Xenia tells Bond that there are metal detectors everywhere in the building: he then gives her his Walther.

Bond goes to the door that Xenia had indicated to him and an old man opens it. He makes his way into the archives building and finds the files of the members of the space directorate which he photographs with an electronic diary type of gadget and transmits the photos remotely. Bond starts to leave but stops: he decides to head towards another group of files.

Meanwhile Xenia heads to the door she told Bond about, and kills the old man with 007's Walther. She calls security to say that "there is a spy in the archives". She puts Bond's gun in her bag and pulls out a "gigantic automatic pistol [...], most men couldn't hold this with two hands but she easily grips it with one".

We see that Bond has stopped to look at a shelf which has numbers "all prefaced with double zeros". Outside, soldiers and vehicles surround the archives and the large metal doors at the entrance of the Kremlin (through which Bond and Xenia arrived with the Mercedes) closes. Bond searches through the Double-O agents files (the script tells us that 007's one is three binders thick!) and finds the one he's looking for: 001.

In 001's file he finds a photo of himself on the Kremlin wall (from the night of the flashback) as well as one of 001's body at the foot of the wall. It's shows that 001 and Trevelyan are the same person: "this is a shock to us, but to Bond it's just a grim reminder of a fallen friend". There is also a page of text: Bond looks shocked as he reads it. Before we can more fully gauge his reaction, Xenia arrives and opens fire on Bond.

007 flees and she chases after him, Bond knocks over a shelf, blocking Xenia's path, and disappears into the maze of file's shelves in the room. Just as was the case in the other Lubyanka's script, the ceilings of the ten floors of the Kremlin archives are made of translucent materials (no mini-helicopter drone in that script however). On the floor below, soldiers spot Bond above them and open fire. Bond runs for his life but reaches a dead end; the commandant below knows this and has ordered his men to position themselves below it before 007 gets there.

A figure arrives at the dead end and the soldiers riddle it with bullets; it is not Bond but a cart full of files that the latter has pushed. With the shots, the lucite (the translucent material) cracks and the soldiers scatter as the cart falls on them. Above 007 goes to an elevator, places his electronic diary inside and presses a button to make the elevator go down (but doesn't take it). Xenia spots Bond and shoots; he dives into the elevator shaft and grabs one of the cables while, bellow, the elevator has just exploded because of the electronic diary's self-destruct function.

Bond slides down the cable and lands on what's left of the elevator. The explosion blew up a wall behind which there is an old tunnel that Bond takes; the rotten beams/boards below him begin to give way.

As he stops, a soldier comes up behind him; Bond tries to disarm him and they both fall through the boards until they land on a relatively solid beam. The soldier tries to strangle Bond by pressing his rifle to his throat. With his feet Bond hits the wooden frame which gives way, the guard falls further down through some planks and catches himself on something. The soldier is then illuminated by a light which comes closer, he turns around with a scream that cannot be heard because it is drowned out by the horn and the impact of an underground metro train which tears him away as it passes by 60 km/h. Bond is hanging on to a higher piece of wood which is breaking: he falls onto the roof of the subway and rolls until he manages to hang on at the last moment. He gets off at a station, under the stunned gazes of metro users but manages to blend into the crowd.

Bond then meets Romaly at the cafe near Gorky Park. Here Romaly doesn't add that M had to made the Russians believe that he is a rogue agent. Having seen the scientists' files, Bond now believes that the Russians have developed a satellite capable of sending an electromagnetic pulse anywhere on Earth. However, he has no idea that Trevelyan is behind the recent events.

Romaly seems to sense that something else is troubling James and asks him what it is. Bond responds that he saw in the Kremlin's archives a document mentioning an interrogation of 001 which would have taken place two days after his supposed death. Romaly sees three main possibilities: 001 is either dead, captive or a traitor. Bond refuses to believe the last hypothesis, thinking it "impossible". He asks Romaly to find where 001 is being held while he goes to investigate Alexei Makvenio in Kazakhstan.

Unlike the other script, here we find Bond directly in the installation, in a white laboratory coat with a UN badge, near the NATO spokesperson who explains how the nuclear warheads will be destroyed. From the room where he is, he sees Marina arriving on the site. A surprise since he thought she was dead. There is eye contact between the two of them: each looks at the other (she doesn't know Bond). He decides to follow her.

Marina goes meet Alexei Makvenio similarly to the other script (she doesn't, however, talk about revealing the existence of Tempest to the press); Alexei knocks her out himself (Illya Borchenko doesn't exist in this script) and locks her in the cylindrical box of a bomb.

Alexei is setting the timer on the nuclear device when Bond arrives (in this script he didn't search Makvenio's suitcase, so there is no question of an ivory object here). 007 confronts Alexei with the same dialogues as in the other script (minus the mention of Trevelyan) when suddenly Marina regains consciousness and makes a noise in her cylindrical box. Makvenio takes advantage of the fact that Bond turns towards the noise to attack him with an iron bar; Bond avoids the blow, draws his gun but a blow sends it flying. 007 avoids another blow which lands on the timer of the nuclear device and activates it (on 2 minutes). The timer keyboard also gets destroyed by the blow, making it impossible to change the time remaining before the detonation.

Alexei tries to grab a keychain that was attached to the keyboard. Bond takes the opportunity to give him a few hits and get the keychain for himself. The action scene that follows is almost identical to the one of the other script. Bond manages to escape the underground in the same way, except that instead of Rosskovich, it is Marina and 20 Russian guards who are waiting for him on the surface:

> - Marina: That's him. (Points at Bond) That's the man who killed Makvenio!

Direction the Ural house by helicopter. Things are similar to the other script (although there is no character named Rosskovich and of course no flashback). Marina, connected to a lie detector, is pre-interrogated while waiting the arrival of Pushkin. Except that in this script it is not Kolkhazhna who questions her, but Xenia.

> - Xenia: I'm sorry to have put you through that again, Miss Varoskaya... Your transport has arrived. Please wait here.

A helicopter lands outside the house (unlike the other script, this one doesn't arrive by attacking with missiles). The door opens and Trevelyan enters the building.

> - Trevelyan: It's not such a bad spot for a debriefing, is it? They only bring the most important prisoners here. I am surprised to find you still alive, James.
> - Bond: I could say the same for you.
> - Trevelyan: It was dramatic, wasn't it? (He raises his arms, imitating the mortuary posture he had in the Kremlin). I apologize for putting you through that, James... But it was a perfect defection... You sold it for me. Your reaction that night dispelled any doubts the Russians might have had about my sincerity.
> - Bond: So they believed every recognition cipher, every safehouse location, every operative's name you supplied them with. You bastard...

- Trevelyan: You disapprove? I thought, by now, you'd understand. You take this job and you're in for life. That's what they tell you, at the start. Remember, James? That's what I told you, at the start... There are so many other things they neglect to mention. For instance, that Double-Ohs rarely see their forty-fifth birthday. I've made mine. I thought you would have grown tired of this game by now.
- Bond: Is that how you live with betrayal and murder, Trevelyan? By calling it a game?
- Trevelyan: That question is beneath both of us, James. [...] My conscience is clean, James. Yours, I think, is rather crowded.
- Bond: So tell me, what do you call your new game, Trevelyan? Beurya? Or Tempest? Pity you won't get to use it, after all your trouble. Makvenio told me everything.

[...]

- Trevelyan: [...] In two days, I intend to use the weapon... To the fullest possible advantage. (He walks towards the door) Goodbye again, James.
- Bond: All those years ago, Augustus, it was hard watching you die.
- Trevelyan: I am sorry for that, James. Truly.
- Bond: Don't be. The next time, I intend to enjoy it.

Trevelyan smiles and returns to the helicopter where Morley and Savatier are waiting for him. The helicopter takes off while Xenia, Morley and Savatier remain on the ground. Through the window Marina sees Savatier and recognizes him as the fake repairman who blew up her apartment. Xenia is busy seducing one of the Russian officers before strangling him with her earrings which act as a garrote. Morley heads towards Bond, and Savatier towards Marina, riddling the Russian guards on their paths with automatic rifles and grenades (including smoke bombs). 007 manages to lock-pick his handcuffs before Morley enters the room where he is: he jumps on him. They fight briefly and Bond runs out of the room and closes the steel door: Morley is locked inside this sort of cell and cannot get out.

Savatier arrives at the room where Marina was being held and discovers that she is not there: she used her knowledge in electronics to unlock the electronic door lock by using the lie detector. In the smoke-filled house she runs into Bond; she intentionally shoot towards him, telling him not to come any closer. Savatier hears the shot and come towards them. Bond sees Savatier and dives at Marina (who is still threatening him with her gun) to move her away from Savatier's line of fire and thus saves her life. Bond returns shots towards Savatier and hits something in the bag the latter is carrying, which then begins to emit sparks. Savatier gets rid of the bag before it explodes and destroy a part of the house.

Marina begins to understand that Bond is on her side and she start to run with him towards the frozen lake. Locked in the room upstairs, Morley sees them through the window and tries to shoot them. "After the hundredth shot concentrated in the same spot" the bulletproof glass of the window finally gives way, but too late: Bond and Marina have already left his line of fire. They reach the seaplane parked on the lake and the action scene that follows is similar to the one of the other script (except that it is not Trevelyan's henchmen but Russian guards who are chasing them).

After landing, the dialogues with Marina are similar but we notice an addition: Bond takes out the keychain taken from Alexei Makvenio and notices that there is a key to a safety deposit box on it. He opens a cylinder of the key fob and also sees a small ivory object that Bond recognizes as a personal stamp used in some Chinese banks.

The helicopter with the saws arrives (it is piloted by Morley in this script) and cuts up the workshop. Bond and Marina run towards the forest (they don't have skis in this script), the saws passes through the trees like butter and very soon Marina falls while running and slips; Bond catches her before she falls over a precipice. At one point when the helicopter is almost at his height, Bond jumps over a precipice (while Morley shoots him while piloting) in order to hang on to one of the helicopter's skids. Bond misses the skid and falls towards the saws but manages to hang onto an electrical wire connected to the saws. From there the rest of this action scene is similar to the other script.

Pushkin finally arrives at the house in the mountains and gives the order to arrest Bond (he sees video surveillance which shows 007 with a gun in his hand fleeing the house). Bond and Marina take a train towards Saint Petersburg, however there are no militiamen/Romaly waiting for them at the station. Instead we have a scene at an airport where Trevelyan, Xenia and Savatier are heading towards a private jet:

> - Trevelyan: How many times can you fail to kill one man and one woman?
> - Xenia: Bond is a fugitive. Chances are slim he'll make it through the day, and slimmer still that he'll stop us.
> - Trevelyan: Don't underestimate him, and don't give me any more excuses. Find Bond, track his Moscow contact, and kill him!

Bond and Marina go to the "New China Bank" on Nevsky Prospekt (not the Kronstadt Bank) where 007 uses the ivory object to access Makvenio's safe and finds the folder named "GEOCOM" and a floppy disk. There is no Jordan that see them here (this scene doesn't exist here, neither a character called Jordan).

Bond and Marina goes meet Romaly at Palace Square in Saint Petersburg; the action scene that takes place there is almost identical to the one of the other script. We will just note that in his dialogue with Pushkin, Bond adds that it is Trevelyan who is behind all this, that Marina kills Xenia while she was strangling Bond with her garrotte (instead of preparing to press a vital point) and that the brief passage where the horse zigzags between the columns of a cathedral is absent.

The scene with M, Q and Orbach where NATO tries to disintegrate the satellites Tempest doesn't exist in this script. As a result, we directly find Bond and Marina flying over St. Latrelle with the aerial action scene.

Bond drops Marina off in the computer room of one of the three towers (we notice that the floppy disk recovered from Makvenio's safe has a use here: there is a computer program on it which should help Marina to get through the defenses of a central unit).

The rest of the script is almost identical to the previous one, we just note that there are no scenes with M and Q in the NATO control center after Bond and Marina escape from St. Latrelle, that Marina's final sentence is "but I'm willing to learn" (instead of "I just appreciate a smooth ride") and the "JAMES BOND WILL RETURN" is not there.

April 15, 1994 script: brewery, Katya, casino and statues graveyard

Michael France strikes again with a 121 page "second draft" on April 15, 1994. The title of the script, we read, is Goldeneye.

The gunbarrel opens on an industrial looking building seen through a night-vision scope. This building is located on a snowy mountaintop. A subtitle read "Bulgaria - 1990".

A five members British commando in white camouflage outfit is skiing toward the building. Suddenly, hidden Russian soldiers shoot toward the commando, hitting most of the men. An agent is captured and another, injured in the leg, is about to be finished off by a Russian, when a gloved fist coming out from nowhere smash the Russian in the face, knocking out of cold. The camera then reveal James Bond: the last standing British agent.

007 take the wounded man in fireman's carry and ski away while bullets from the Russian are landing near him. He ski near a narrow ledge, few inches away from a hundreds meter drop as he heads toward a SAS's Black Hawk helicopter in movement. He take a jump and land in the open helicopter door. He drop the injured agent near a medical officer.

> - SAS Commander: What the devil happened down there, 007?
> - Bond: It was a set-up, there are Russian sentries everywhere...
> - SAS Commander (turns to pilot): Make for HMS Intrepid; the mission's scrubbed...
> - Bond: We can't leave, they're shipping that nerve gas to the mid-east tomorrow... And they've taken Trevelyan prisoner.
> - SAS Commander: Then he's scrubbed too, Bond...
> - Bond: The hell he is...

Bond jump out of the helicopter with his ski on and go toward the building; the helicopter speeds away. Bond knock out a guard and takes his jacket. He evolve like that in the building which a beer brewery, with a special part housing a nerve gas factory.

Bond place several bloc of plastique on the gas vats and set the timer. But a guard who has became suspicious (and who is the same one that Bond punched in the face earlier) train his weapon on Bond who then run under a hail of bullets. Some puncture the vats and the guard dies asphyxiated by the nerve gas while automatic safety system is sealing the room. 007 dives into a conveyor belt just as a door close behind him.

Emerging from the conveyor belt, Bond jump on a guard and land near Augustus Trevelyan: "an Englishman in his sixties who is hard and cool; a man who is, in every way, Bond's peer and equal".

> - Trevelyan: I appreciate your coming back for me, James.
> - Bond: [...] But we'd better leave the party before it's time to clean up, those charges will go off in four minutes.
> Bond stops talking, as he turns back around, Trevelyan is unmistakably aiming the gun up at Bond.
> - Trevelyan: Then I shall have to ask you to defuse them. [...]
> - Bond: You set up the ambush... Why?

> - Trevelyan: War games, of a kind... The Russians couldn't believe I'd defect either. This turned out to be the easiest way of convincing them of my sincerity. Delivering you to Moscow, alive, will quell any lingering doubts.

Bond lashes out an arm to hit a release latch on a storage cage: a stack of nerve gas barrels rolls out toward Trevelyan. While Trevelyan dodge them, Bond take advantage of this distraction to jump into the snow bellow and join a tree area where he had hidden his skis.

Four Russian skiers chase him, and by trowing a grenade behind him, Bond reduce their number to two. He then veer to a chasm: a "move that looks like suicide, [...] very, very little differentiates this from falling; just the occasional brushing of his skis on the patchy snow and jagged rocks of the wall. [Bond's POV] looks every inch of two hundred feet, dropping straight down ahead of him. Bond frantically veers left and right, avoiding protruding rocks, trying to hit his skis against the snow to slow his descent".

One of the Russian try to do the same but its end up bad for him. "Close on Bond who turns around at the sound of a scream", before he swerves to avoid the body of the Russian who was falling fast to his death on collision course toward him.

Bond now ski on the wrong rock: one that cause a mini-avalanche behind him. And Bond is isn't safe after escaping it: grenade launched from a Russian in cable car land near him. The bomb in the gas factory finally explode; the cable car with no longer cable to support it falls down.

But (of course) the cable has fallen behind Bond and slide toward him, and with it's 3 tons of momentum: it's gonna overtaking Bond. Our agent "skis out of the canyon and off the edge" and land in a river, one second before the collision with the cable car (which now explode behind him because of the remaining grenades inside).

007 is "motionless, unconscious" on the riverbank when an SAS boat come to his rescue. A female medical officer come to him for see if he is still alive; he has recover enough to pull her down and kiss her, "and she isn't fighting it, in fact, she's dropped her medical bag".

> - Boat's pilot: There does seem to be a bit of life left in him, sir.

And we dissolve to the title sequence.

After that we have familiar scene: the assault on Severnaya (where we note that the Tempest had been renamed Goldeneye) and the assassinations attempts. Here we notice that our Bond girl had been renamed Katya Varoskaya, her apartment is also at Moscow (instead of Saint Petersburg).

At Universal Exports, Bond join M, Q and "Leolia" Ponsonby. They talk about Anatoly Razhnov who was gonna to brief the MI6 on a Russian space program called "Beurya, which translates to Goldeneye" if he hadn't been assassinated.

Sent to Moscow, Bond meet Valentin "Romaly" Kosygyn at the Red Square. The first thing they do in this script is to go to the "casino Moskva", "an opulent, flashy locale that spells out the changes that have taken place in Moscow over the last few years. Amongst the tables of blackjack, roulette and chemin de fer are elegantly dressed men and beautiful women, but also amongst them are unsavory characters in Armani outfits of varying nationality".

> - Bond: Things have changed since I've been here last.

> - Romaly: For the better, don't you think?... There is more information for sale in this place than can be found in all our embassy wiretaps and satellite photographs put together.

Romaly indicate Koronin, a "formerly a member of military intelligence before one of the purges". Bond sit down at his chemin de fer table. While they are making bet, Bond says to Koronin he wants information about Goldeneye. "The word has an electric effect on several spectators, who hurry away, revealing Xenia is nearby".

Koronin see a man (to whom he gave a diskette just before) being arrested in the casino and leave abruptly the gaming table, running, but end up captured not far away by general Leonid Pushkin. He is put under arrest for smuggling nuclear firing code (the diskette).

Pushkin see Bond in the casino and goes to him:

> - Pushkin (looking Koronin's cards): Lucky Koronin, he would have won. (Turning Bond's cards over) Particularly since you ruined a perfect hand by drawing a third card, 007.
> - Bond: [...] Seeing as Koronin has cashed out, perhaps you'll allow me the chance to recoup?
> - Pushkin: While you deal, Bond, perhaps you will tell me what you were about to pay Koronin for by deliberately losing that hand.

007 mention Anatoly's assassination

> - Pushkin: The Goldeneye project, if it ever did exist, has now been neutralized. So I think your business here is concluded. (He stands) Your visa is canceled, effective tomorrow morning. If you are still in Russia after that, 007, you may continue your conversation with Koronin... Inside Lefortovo prison.

Pushkin leave the casino, as does Bond and Romaly. There is the encounter with Xenia Labyakova in the Metropol's bath, which lead to the Kremlin's infiltration scene. It didn't changed very much since the last script, the only notable difference is that Trevelyan file doesn't designate him as 001 (in fact, he is never black on white designated as a Double-O in that script!). He find however of photo of Trevelyan with Xenia (and Savatier), so in this script he have from now a hint of Trevelyan's implication.

There are the scene in Kazakhstan nuclear test site (Bond never retrieve an ivory object, there is not bank scene in this script). Then happens the Urals country house part, with Bond and Trevelyan confronting each other there:

> - Bond: First you turn on the British, then on the Russians. Betrayal seems to be a habit you can't quite shake.
> - Trevelyan: As it happens, James, I was schooled relatively early in betrayal; with both England and Russia as my instructors. My father was one of the Lienz Cossacks, in World War II.
> - Bond: Good God...
> - Trevelyan: He was nowhere to be found that day, I'm afraid... You're familiar with the incident, James? My family was part of a group of Cossacks who had escaped from Russia, through Kazakhstan, and into Austria in the forties. We left to get away from the tyranny of Stalin; only there was a new tyranny in Austria. Toward the end of the war, the Cossack men were pressed into service > by the Germans to fight in Russia. My father was among them. The Cossacks didn't mind, because they hated Stalin, but they were happy to see the fighting end when the Allies won... At the war's end, the British took control of the Cossacks who were being held by the Nazis, and they were moved to Lienz in a holding camp. The Cossacks didn't mind. They thought they'd be treated fairly. But with the stroke of a pen, the British government gave something to their friend and ally, Stalin: unconditional return of all Russian subjects in their custody, whether they wished to go or not... So, one day, all of the men in the camp, all fifteen hundred of them [actually it was 2 479 on that May 28, 1945 day], were rounded up into armored trucks, and told they were being taken to a "conference" with a British field commander. I was seven years old, James; that day was the last time I ever saw my father... It was also the first time I saw the look in a man's eyes when he knows he's going to die... The lucky ones managed to commit suicide before the convoy reached Moscow. The rest were left to the tender mercies of Stalin, Beria, and SMERSH... At least the Russians have the stomach to commit their own atrocities. The British couldn't do better than to hire them out.

> - Bond: Is that how you live with murder, Trevelyan? By calling it vengeance?

When later Bond and Katya escape with the seaplane, we observe that the scene was shortened: no more motorcyclist sending grenades at them. We also note that Bond's get rid of his handcuff only in the scene where Bond and Marina are in the snowy workshed: "she raises the axe and swings it down, severing the handcuff chain, burying the axe head in the table".

They are then attacked by the helicopter equipped by saws. Usually after that there is a scene in a train, in a bank and at the Palace Square of Saint Petersburg: but this is not the case in this script. Instead we find Bond and Katya in an abandoned/ disrepair datcha in the Urals forest. They did a fire for the night, and she is healing Bond's wounds with strip of cloth imbibed with vodka.

> - Bond: No need to be stingy with it... Disinfectant is the only thing Ukrainian vodka is good for... You've done this before.
> - Katya: There were not many doctors where I grew up. My father worked in a Kalinin lumber camp. He came home with cuts worse than these every week.
> - Bond: How do you get from a lumber camp to a space laboratory?
> - Katya: As I said, James, I was not given a choice... I was lucky, in a way. I went to the university in Moscow when they discovered I had a - do you say "knack"? - for mathematics. I wanted to work in the space research directorate. Moscow decided to "offer" me a position with the space weapons directorate.
> [If we haven't noticed before, we see now that she has a wedding band on].
> - Bond: Is that where you were married?
> - Katya: Yes. A long time ago.
> - Bond: You don't have to talk about it, Katya.
> - Katya: No, no, it's all right... His name was Peter. We were married in my second year, but he was a... A dissident. I told him it was dangerous, but he led protests for disarmament at the university, near the Kremlin... Finally he was arrested. The government told me if I would agree to work in the weapons > directorate, he would be released. I did, to get him out, but... Peter was stubborn. He continued, and was arrested again, and again, until... I would have done anything to protect him, James. But...

> - Bond: I understand. [...] I have a friend waiting in Kirov who can get you out of here tomorrow.

They end up to kiss, "it builds into a stronger [kiss] that will last the rest of the night".

At daylight, we see Bond and Katya jumping off a slow-moving train at Kirov and heading toward "a junkyard full of scrapped airplanes of all designs and sizes from the Soviet Union's arsenal, arranged in rows, with their wings clearly severed and hanging down from the planes at an angle. Further back from the airplanes, the yard is full of a tangle of scrap metal, including a number of statues. [...] The resting place for the Soviet Union's fallen idols. There are dozens of different sized metal statues of Stalin, Lenin, Dzerzinsky, and other".

They meet Romaly here, unaware they are observed by Xenia. Romaly show him a plane in working condition. 007 ask Romaly to bring the girl back to London, she protest saying she is not gonna let him after the Goldeneye without her. Suddenly a unnamed henchman start to firing at them with a machine gun equipped with a grenade launcher, destroying the plane, "the fireball no doubt has killed Romaly".

Marina escape trough the labyrinth of communist's statues, tracked by the henchman and Xenia. 007 climb up a gigantic Stalin's statue to kill the gunman that is up there, they have a hand to hand combat with sentences like: "Bond barely manages to get a grip on Stalin's moustache, but the gunman, who is more comfortably perched on the nose, kicks at Bond's hands and pulls out a second pistol".

007 menage to get rid of the henchman while Katya is being strangled by Xenia when Bond finally arrives, jumping from one of the statues, diving straight for Xenia. They have a fight and, as before, Katya retrieve a gun and kill Xenia who was strangling Bond.

A military plane is landing near by, they approach and knock out the pilot. Inside the plane they conveniently find navigational charts which leads them to Trevelyan's lair at St. Latrelle.

There is the aerial action sequence which end with Bond and the girl parachuting in a cavern, Quantum of Solace style. But in this script the last helicopter abandon the chase, thinking they are dead (instead of having the gunner going inside with a winch).

So Bond and Katya explore the cave on foot, there is a water course. The "water dislodges something flat and green that seems to be a rock, but it flips on its edge and we see that this is not a rock: it's a disk. As it turns on its side, it rolls down, bouncing like a coin toward" them. Bond take Katya away as the disk explode: anti-personal mine explain Bond to her.

So they are in a minefield; Bond starts to lead themself through. They are a part where she fall and slide toward the mines, but 007 menage to grab her and they are now out of the minefield. As in the previous script, they separate when they reach a computer but they both end up captured and bring to Trevelyan.

New York is no longer the target of the Goldeneye in this script: it is London.

> - Trevelyan: London in flames as the result of an attack from a Russian weapon [...] and before long, they will be pointing missiles as well. Peace, I think, will turn out to be short-lived. Russia and Britain collaborated on the > genocide of the Cossacks years ago. I consider it fitting that I will now provoke them to collaborate in their own destruction.

The rest of the script follow the previous one.

Enter Jeffrey Caine

> - Director Martin Campbell[122] : When I first came on to GoldenEye, I was given a script by Michael France, who was the writer at the time. I just found the script indecipherable, and we ended up going with another writer named Jeffrey Caine.

France isn't entirely sure that what happened after him was beneficial to the film: "I wrote a script that had bigger dramatic moments between Bond and Trevelyan, and a great many different action moments [...]. I didn't think that the substitutions made during production were any improvement on what I wrote. In other words, standard first draft writer whininess"[123].

He admits, however, that "the problem with my draft was that there was too much action. [...] Every ten minutes you had a $20 million sequence"[124].

This even problematic when you know that at the time MGM wasn't sure that the film would be a success and wasn't thinking to allocate a budget for the film that they would considered unreasonable. "What we were trying to do with GoldenEye was re-launch Bond with a studio that didn't initially believe Bond was [still] viable"[125], admits Jeff Kleeman, who was "executive vice president of production" at MGM.

> - Jeff Kleeman[126] : MGM/UA weren't as enthusiastic about Bond [...]. And they had good reasons [...]. The Dalton's movie weren't tremendous successes [...] and it's had actually been a while since the Dalton's movie. So there was this fear that Bond was old news [...] like a relic. So they did a research market study to see what the interest across America was in James Bond. [...] And much to their despair, it came back that essentially every teenage boy in America either said "Who's James Bond?" or "Oh, I know who that is, that's that guy our dads likes". Which from [...] blockbuster movie marking is the kiss of death. [...] For most of them, there hadn't a really significate Bond in their lives to go to at the age of most of us went to our first Bond movie.

"There was nothing about Bond that looked like it would appeal on paper to younger males or younger females [the new generation who form the bulk of cinema-going audiences]. Every statistic, every data point went in the opposite direction", says Kleeman[127].

> - Jeff Kleeman[128] : I think what nobody really understands in retrospect is how unlikely it was that GoldenEye got made in the first place, because it was more likely not to get made than made, particularly under these circumstances.

Theses circumstances included what was said earlier, plus the fact that actions movies changed theses last years and lot of first timers into the equation. One of them was Michael and Barbara (who never produced a movie on their own before, even if Cubby was still around). Martin Campbell (who didn't had any big commercial success and who was choose, according to Kleeman, partly because his movie No Escape "got an astonishing amount on screen for what was a really small budget. It felt much, much bigger than it's budget, and what we knew already was we were going to have very little money to make GoldenEye with"[129]). And ultimately later Pierce Brosnan (whose Remington Steele days was over to talk to young audience and whose last success was playing second roles like in Mrs. Doubtfire).

The initial budget that will be allocated by MGM to the film will be around 49 million of dollars[130] : not a great one, even for the time.

> - Jeff Kleeman[131] : At this point we were already in the era of hundred million plus action movie. [...] To put it in contrast with another movie I was working on at the same time, The Birdcage, which for all purposes was six people in a room talking, our budget for The Birdcage was 60 millions.

The budget will increase later during the shooting to reach something around 56 million[132]. But for now, and to go back to Michael France's script:

> - Jeff Kleeman[133] : There was this Michael France' script. I cannot speak for Barbara, Michael, and Cubby, [...] [but] John [Calley, of the MGM] and I weren't thrilled by it. We felt it needed a lot of work.

Born in London, Jeffrey Caine[134] was educated at the universities of Sussex and Leeds. He taught English in schools and colleges for three years. He first began writing novels and published three: The Cold Room (1976, which was adapted into a TV film in 1984), Heathcliff (1977) and The Homing (1980).

After having mainly written for television between 1986 and 1992, during which his own series The Chief was successfully produced, he focused on writing films.

GoldenEye will be the first film in which his name appears. Subsequently he wrote The Constant Gardener (2005), adapted from the novel by John le Carré, which earned him several nominations such as two BAFTAs. He will also participate in the writing of Exodus: Gods and Kings (2014). Caine also wrote a number of other film scripts which were not produced.

"One of my strengths in screenwriting is that I'm a structuralist. Barbara was worried the Michael France screenplay didn't have a very well-defined structure", explains Jeffrey Caine[135], who had already worked with Barbara Broccoli in the past on an adaptation of his own novel, The Homing, as well as another non-Bond film script about the "code talker" Navajo Indians[136].

> - Jeffrey Caine[137] : I'd previously written two [non-Bond] scripts for Barbara Broccoli [...]. She liked my work. What attracted me to the project was that it was not only a "go" movie but also a chance to become involved with an iconic franchise and so become a small part of film history.

Caine received a phone call one Thursday afternoon from Barbara Broccoli asking him to come to Los Angeles to rework the script for GoldenEye[138]. Arriving on Saturday, Caine was already at work on Monday with the promise that his wife Lorna could join him in California if his work was to exceed 3 weeks[139]. This was the case (incidentally Caine remembers that his wife attended script conferences with him and even made contributions[140]).

Caine is given video copies of the sixteen previous Bond films and the script of Michael France[141]; he is asked "to keep the premise but rewrite the rest substantially"[142].

"Michael Wilson, I found [him] a bit problematic", Caine says. "He didn't really understand film structure. [...] He treated it like a mystery story, people were being killed all over Europe, scientists were being murdered, and Bond was called in to find out who was doing it and why [...] It was more Agatha Christie than Ian Fleming. I had to explain how Bond films work"[143]. Needless to say, Caine also finds France's script not Bondian enough[144].

"Wilson started from the premise that a James Bond film was largely about big, big stunts. I dug my heels in and said no. Stunts are desirable and the audience expects to see them but you don't construct a story around preconceived stunts. You find your story and then you find a stunt that will work within it"[145].

> - Jeffrey Caine[146] : The whole idea of doing this film was to get something back of the flavor of the early Bond films. If you rewatch Goldfinger or From Russia with Love, there's a lot more character stuff and dialogue scenes without bigger-than-life action. [...] I wanted to see [the action] that pulled back generally, to have more story and character dialogue, development, and interplay [...] and everybody agreed, including Martin Campbell. But little by little it was eroded and replaced by much more stunts and action than I envisioned.

> - Michael Wilson[147] : We always set out thinking why don't we try and do another From Russia With Love. Wouldn't that be great, a nice intimate story? We always start out that way, but then people say, the studios and our writers, and ourselves, we say "well, that isn't big enough. You need to have the world at risk or something". And before you know it, it grows into these films. [...] You realize that there's a huge audience and I guess you don't want to come out with a film that's going to somehow disappoint them. So you have it grow big in order to protect this expectation that people have. I don't know if we did a From Russia With Love whether we would disappoint our audience.

Timothy Dalton decided to gracefully bow out of the role and announced it on April 11 or 12, 1994[148], few says before France's April 15, 1994 script completion:

> - Timothy Dalton[149] : Even though [the producers] have always made it clear to me that they want me to resume my role in their next James Bond feature, I have now made this difficult decision. As an actor, I believe it is now time to leave that wonderful image behind and accept the challenge of new ones.

This suits perfectly the heads of MGM who didn't want the actor in the role of Bond anymore.

> - Jeff Kleeman[150] : Barbara, Michael and Cubby very much wanted Timothy Dalton to return as Bond. And John Calley and I [...] didn't particularly wanted him to return. On [reason] was we didn't want to send the signal that was [...] the Bond of ten years ago, as opposed to the Bond of today. And the other [reason] was we did want to tonally shift the movie away of the Dalton's movies.

In fact Broccoli had asked Dalton if he wanted to reprise the role for several James Bond films, but after this long hiatus of several years, Timothy was only up for one film:

> - Timothy Dalton[151] : [Around 1990] we had the script. They were interviewing directors. We were really rolling forward, ready to start. It was actually quite a good story, I thought. Because of the lawsuit, I was free of the contract. And Mr. Broccoli, who I really respected as a producer and as a friend, asked me what I was going to do when it was resolved. I said, "Look, in all honesty, I don't think that I will continue". [...] When [the next movie] did come about, it was probably four or five years later. [Broccoli] asked if I would come back, and I said, "Well, I've actually changed my mind a little bit. I think that I'd love to do one. Try and take the best of the two that I have done, and consolidate them into a third". And he said, quite rightly, "Look, Tim. You can't do one. There's no way, after a five-year gap between movies that you can come back and just do one. You'd have to plan on four or five". And I thought, "Oh no, that would be the rest of my life. Too much. Too long". So I respectfully declined.

The task of introducing a new actor is therefore added to the writing.

Caine says that in his time there was no Bond actor firmly in place to replace Dalton although Pierce Brosnan was strongly considered[152]. So Caine wrote lines that he "wrote it with Sean Connery in mind, [...] wrote lines that I could hear him saying"[153]. Brosnan would ultimately be retained and announced as Dalton's successor on June 8, 1994[154].

Jeffrey Caine claimed he had added Trevelyan during the pre-title sequence and gave him Lienz Cossack origins[155], but as we saw it was already in a France's script... Caine adds he rejuvenated the character so that he'd "be able to take on Bond in hand-to-hand combat"[156], even if paradoxically the Lienz Cossack story (that happened in 1954) stayed. Caine states he also adds a means of transport for him: "I like the armored train, I stole that from Doctor Zhivago"[157].

In a version dated July 6, 1994, the character was named Alexander Trevelyan and was 004[158].

The dam jump, on the other hand, was an idea that the filmmakers already had and which he was asked to integrate[159].

The story also includes internet and Caine not really understanding what it is, at a time when internet was not yet anchored in the daily lives of most people. Michael Wilson and a hacker hired by the production come to his aid by explaining theses part of the story to him[160].

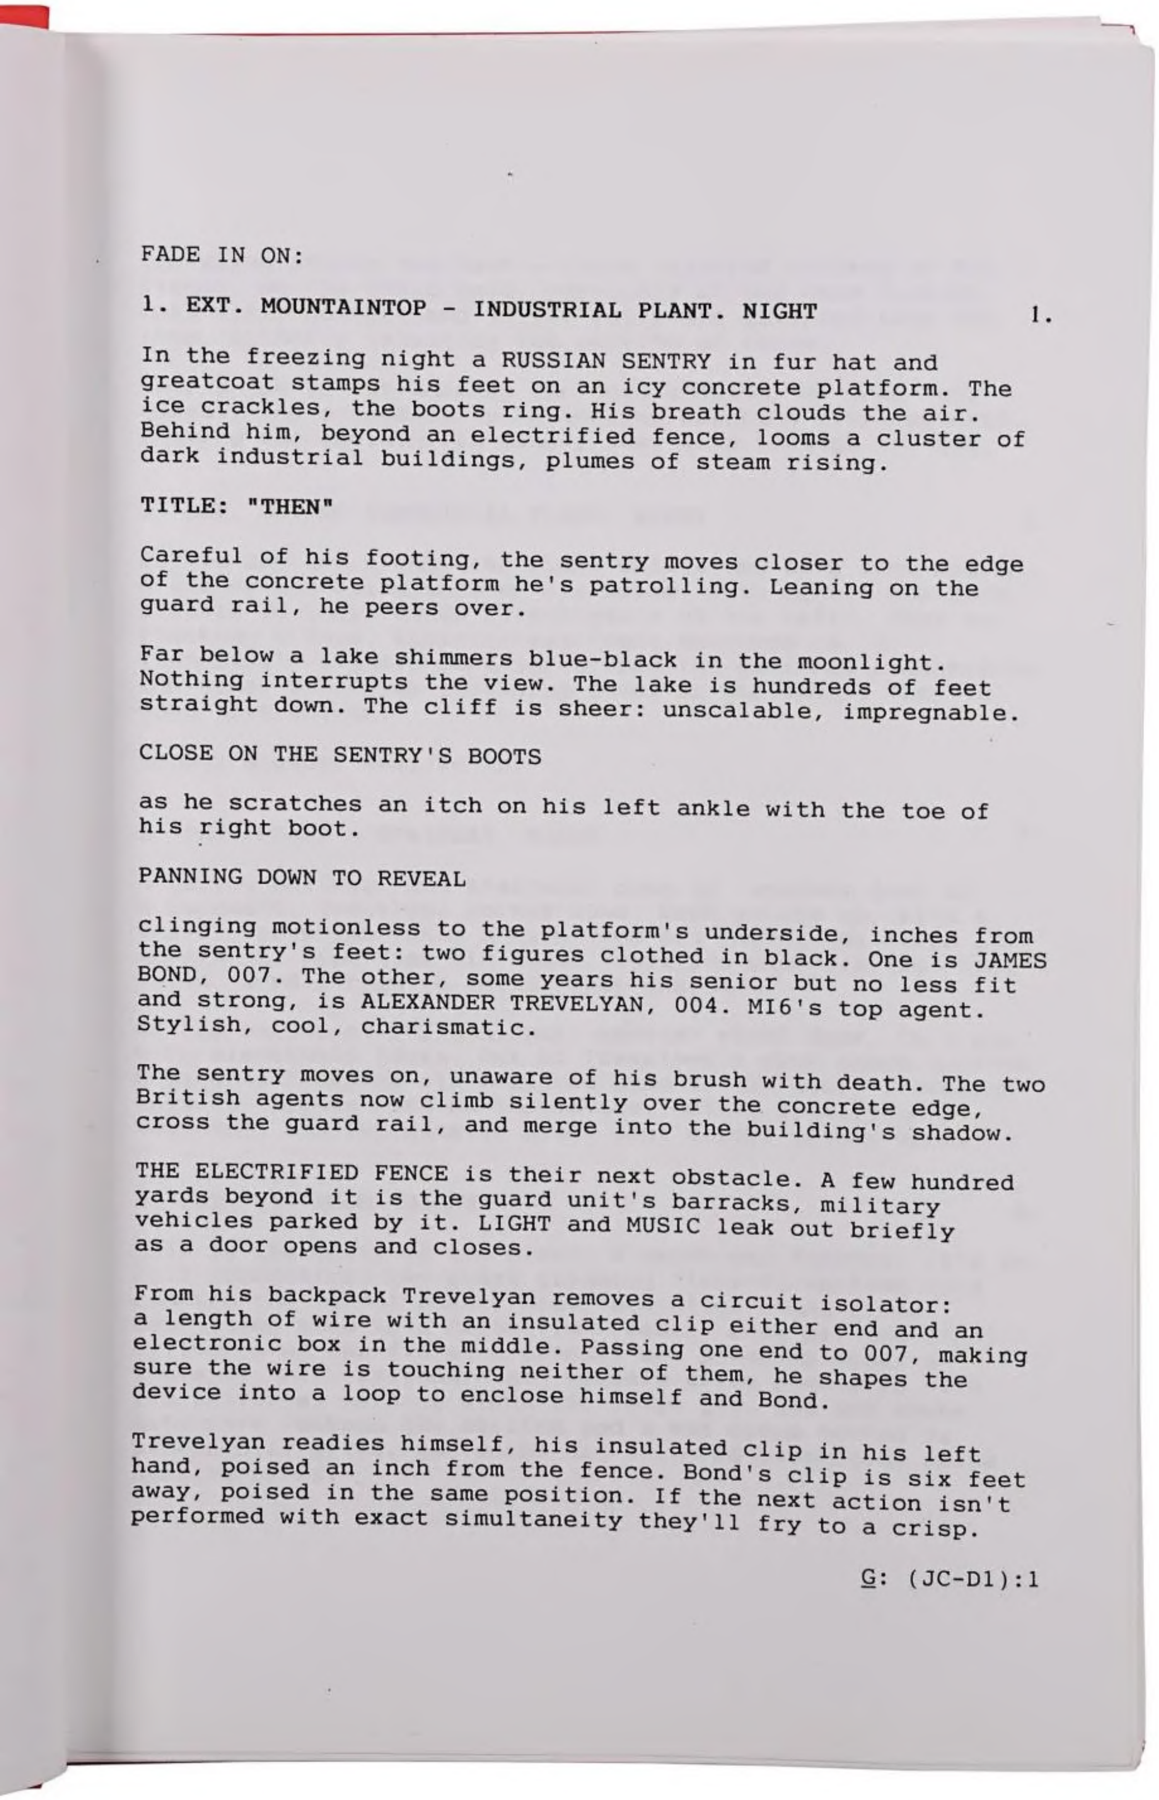
> - Jeffrey Caine[161] : I established the relationship between Bond and Trevelyan. I also added additional characters, like the Russian general, Ourumov; Boris; and a lot of scenes. My brief was to bring in as much character material as I could and work out story problems. What I wanted to do was bring in some new characters, try to add some wit, and fill in the spaces between the stunts. Sometimes it gets away from you. The powers that be decide that what we need here is yet another stunt, so some of your best stuff gets chopped out. Some of my best stuff ended up getting cut by other writers who came in after me [...]. One scene that comes to mind is a particularly good one between Bond and Alec. It was a tension created by two men in a room and a particular situation that was every bit as tense as a helicopter chase or a tank chase. A lot of stuff that survives from Michael France is in terms of the thrust of the story. Not a lot of individual scenes and very little dialogue [however].



FADE IN ON:

1. EXT. MOUNTAINTOP - INDUSTRIAL PLANT. NIGHT 1.

In the freezing night a RUSSIAN SENTRY in fur hat and greatcoat stamps his feet on an icy concrete platform. The ice crackles, the boots ring. His breath clouds the air. Behind him, beyond an electrified fence, looms a cluster of dark industrial buildings, plumes of steam rising.

TITLE: "THEN"

Careful of his footing, the sentry moves closer to the edge of the concrete platform he's patrolling. Leaning on the guard rail, he peers over.

Far below a lake shimmers blue-black in the moonlight. Nothing interrupts the view. The lake is hundreds of feet straight down. The cliff is sheer: unscalable, impregnable.

CLOSE ON THE SENTRY'S BOOTS

as he scratches an itch on his left ankle with the toe of his right boot.

PANNING DOWN TO REVEAL

clinging motionless to the platform's underside, inches from the sentry's feet: two figures clothed in black. One is JAMES BOND, 007. The other, some years his senior but no less fit and strong, is ALEXANDER TREVELYAN, 004. MI6's top agent. Stylish, cool, charismatic.

The sentry moves on, unaware of his brush with death. The two British agents now climb silently over the concrete edge, cross the guard rail, and merge into the building's shadow.

THE ELECTRIFIED FENCE is their next obstacle. A few hundred yards beyond it is the guard unit's barracks, military vehicles parked by it. LIGHT and MUSIC leak out briefly as a door opens and closes.

From his backpack Trevelyan removes a circuit isolator: a length of wire with an insulated clip either end and an electronic box in the middle. Passing one end to 007, making sure the wire is touching neither of them, he shapes the device into a loop to enclose himself and Bond.

Trevelyan readies himself, his insulated clip in his left hand, poised an inch from the fence. Bond's clip is six feet away, poised in the same position. If the next action isn't performed with exact simultaneity they'll fry to a crisp.

G: (JC-D1):1

One disappointment from Caine is the disappearance of a scene with Zukovsky[162]:

> - Jeffrey Caine[163] : It's where Bond goes to see Valentin [...] immediately a gun appears in back of Bond's head. He already anticipated this. You cut to a scene where the two of them [...] are sitting at a card table [...] a pack of cards in the middle of it, and a Walther PPK. And Valentin says: "Bond, we are going to play Russian roulette". And Bond says: "Excuse me Valentine, but one play Russian roulette with a revolver". You know it's click, click, click, bang, with a revolver; [while] with an automatic it's bang straight out the box. [...] And Valentin: "Yes, very true Bond, here's the cards, we cuts the cards whoever does the lowers [or highest] [number] fires the gun first". [...] So they cut cards and Valentine wins the draw, so you get thinking "what's he going to do. Is he gonna shoot Valentin? And then how does he get out of it if he does, because there's all Valentin's blokes in there". He picks up the gun, and he puts it to his [own] head and he pulls the trigger. And it's nothing, it's click. And Valentin laughs, a hearty Russian laughs, and said "Oh Bond, you are the only man I know who can tell difference between fully loaded [...] Walther PPK and one with no bullet in, just by the weight".

Caine clarifies that in his scripts there was no Jack Wade and that M was still a man[164].

"I didn't see much of him [Martin Campbell while he was filming], during the shoot on GoldenEye my wife was seriously ill, and I couldn't go over him to the set"[165]. She died in 1995[166].

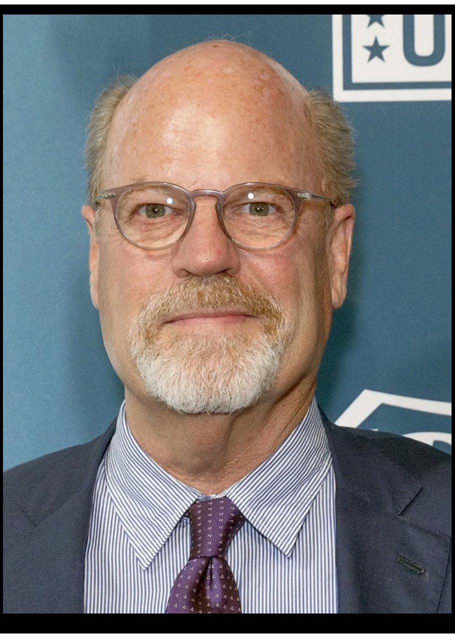
Then "Barbara phoned me one, a couple of weeks or a week after they'd received my script"[167] and said "I've got good news and bad news"[168]:

> - Jeffrey Caine[169] : [She] said: "we love it, we love it, MGM loves it, everybody loves it", and then there was a pause, and I said "yeah don't tell me: but I'm fired?". "Well... Yeah... We brought Bruce [Feirstein] in, we brought him in to write a few jokes". I said "Well you know, I do jokes, I'm actually quite a funny guy, if you'd asked me for jokes, more jokes, I'd have given them to you". "Well you know...". [...] All I know is that they paid me off and Bruce Feirstein took over. And some elements of the film are his, but most of it is mine.

But before Bruce Feirstein, there was Kevin Wade...

Enter Kevin Wade

"I don't even know what Kevin Wade did", says Jeffrey Caine, "I know what I did, and I know what France had done, but I never saw [...] Kevin Wade's draft. I didn't even see Bruce Feirstein's draft. I saw the final script, which incorporates the material from Kevin and from Bruce"[170]. "You write, you're replaced at the studio's whim like last year's shoes, you have no contact with whoever succeeds you"[171].



Kevin Wade[172] is an American screenwriter (and producer) born in 1954. Before his writing career, Wade starred in two films for Mark Rappaport, including The Scenic Route (1978). He wrote the play Key Exchange which was produced on Broadway in 1981 and made into a film in 1985.

Seven years later, he received a writing credit for the film Working Girl (1985) which earned him a few nominations. He continues with True Colors (1991) and Mr. Baseball (1992), then comes GoldenEye and the comedy Junior (1994).

His other two films are Meet Joe Black (1998) and Maid in Manhattan (2002).

He later joined the writing team of the CBS television series Blue Bloods during its first season and has also taken on the role of executive producer/showrunner since the second season.

In 2025, he will publish a novel called Johnny Careless.

The film was pushed back a few months to allow further rewrites and more time to prepare for filming in the newly created Leavesden studio[173]. Screenwriter Kevin Wade, who knew Barbara Broccoli and had attended her wedding with Fred Zollo[174], was brought on the production for about a month[175]. In particular, he was asked to rework the character of James Bond, considered more reactive than active in the latest script[176].

> - Kevin Wade[177] : I went to the bookshelf at EON, and picked up three of the original Fleming novels. I would work from eight to six every day, and then I'd go home and read the books. It helped a lot. James Bond is a fatalistic action hero, and we wanted to give him the edge that Connery once presented when he did Bond. I had to make sure that Pierce Brosnan's Bond was a direct descendant of Connery's.

"I worked fairly closely with Campbell who was storyboarding those sequences. I was really taking my cues from going upstairs and sitting with him and more or less putting down in words what he had storyboarded", Wade recalls[178].

One of his contributions was to reduce a long interlude in a Saint Petersburg' arms black market into a single scene[179].

Already having commitments with producer/director Ivan Reitman for the film Junior, Wade is not able to spend more than five weeks on GoldenEye[180]. His relatively brief stint on the film means he wasn't expected to be credited[181] (and indeed he wasn't). Wade, however, was able to console himself by having given his name to the CIA contact that Bond meets in Russia: Jack Wade[182].

Real men write James Bond: enter Feirstein

- Jeff Kleeman[183] : Bruce Feirstein was an accidental discovery, really. We were deep into pre-production on GoldenEye. One of the things we felt was that it wasn't as witty as we wanted it to be, yet. Barbara Broccoli had the idea of bringing Bruce on. I think Barbara knew him from social circles or social literary circles on the East Coast. We paid him very little money with the idea of, "Hey, come on in and just punch it up".

"Writing Bond films is a combination of things: They're terrifying (how am I going to top what's been done?), aggravating (you can't please everyone), collaborative (the producers are involved with every line, on every page) and, also, tremendous, exhilarating fun. (Hey, how often in your life to you get to sit at the computer and write "The name is Bond. James Bond" for real?)[184].

Born in 1956 in New Jersey, his first job while still in high school was changing light bulbs on the runways of Newark airport. Bruce Feirstein[185] attended Boston University, where he became editor of the student newspaper The Daily Free Press.

After graduating, he worked as an advertising copywriter on promotional campaigns for clients such as BMW, FedEx, Michael Dukakis or Sony. He then became a freelance writer for numerous publications, including the New York Times Magazine, The Washington Post, the Los Angeles Times, or Playboy.

In 1982 he published a book, Real Men Don't Eat Quiche: a satire of stereotypes of masculinity in the United States, which earned him a little more than 50 weeks on the best seller list of the New York Times. He then published in 1986 Nice Guys Sleep Alone: Dating in the Difficult Eighties (which will be the subject of a film adaptation in 1999) then Real Men Don't Bond (nothing to do with James Bond) in 1992.

Entering television, Feirstein worked very briefly on Saturday Night Live, wrote the TV movie The Best Legs in the Eighth Grade (1984), an episode of Mr. President (1987, on which he is also editor-in-chief) and another from Monsters (1991). He appears as himself in the film Naked in New York (1993).

His only credits as a film screenwriter are Pierce Brosnan's first three James Bond films; he will also participate in a few other non-Bond productions while not being credited.

After 1995 he contributed to the magazine Vanity Fair, The New York Observer and Strategy+Business. He sometimes appears on television as a political commentator.

In 2007, while continuing to write screenplays in Los Angeles and contribute to Vanity Fair in New York, he began producing films in China such as Hutong Days (2008) and Hong heh (2009).

Bruce Feirstein also participated in the writing of five James Bond video games: Everything or Nothing (2004), From Russia with Love (2005), Blood Stone (2010), 007 Legends (2012) as well as the remake of N64' GoldenEye 007 from 2010. The latter sees GoldenEye transposed into the Craig era with the theft of the helicopter now taking place in an arms fair in Dubai and a finale taking place in a Nigerian solar power plant.

At the end of the 90s, he also wrote the screenplay for Licence to Thrill, a Bond short film intended for amusement parks which we will have the opportunity to talk about again.

PANAVISION
GOLDENEYE
GOLDENEYE

The director Martin Campbell.

"I worked my way up and went from Glamour magazine to eventually end up writing editorials for The New York Times, Spy magazine, The New York Observer and Vanity Fair, but I had gone to the point where Hollywood stuff was selling, but nothing was getting made [afterward]", Feirstein recalls[186]. "I had been working on some movie projects with Barbara Broccoli's husband, the producer Fred Zollo"[187].

"I was in New York when Barbara Broccoli read some of my scripts. She called and said: would you like to come over and do a few weeks' work on the dialogue for this movie we're making called GoldenEye? I'd read an early draft of GoldenEye and said: absolutely, I'd stab myself in the back to do it"[188]. "At the same time, I knew Martin Campbell because my wife is a studio executive and had been working on the development of some movies with Martin"[189].

"There was a terrific script that represented the work of Michael France and Jeffrey Caine. They are both wonderful writers. I was brought in to do a final polish by Barbara Broccoli, Michael Wilson, and Martin Campbell. They'd all read my work, and wanted me to add some additional wit to the dialogue. Ultimately, I did more than just write the dialogue"[190].

Kleeman confirms: "Bruce ended up restructuring and rethinking and rewriting far more than we'd ever initially planned. His ideas were just so strong"[191].

- Bruce Feirstein[192] : With GoldenEye, what everybody working on the film did was to see how Bond could be updated. When I got to the script, Martin Campbell and I met and talked and we realized that the world had changed, but Bond hadn't. Every scene in that movie is filled with that conflict.

- Martin Campbell[193] : Bruce and I worked on the script for a long time. GoldenEye was the final result of that. Bruce has a great sense of humor, and he > worked bloody hard on it [...] and deserves a lot of the credit for that film. He contributed character [...]. [In] the third act Kevin [Wade] didn't really get a chance to house clean, so that needed a lot of work and Bruce did that.

One of the things that Feirstein and Campbell notably change from the previous writers' drafts is M's gender:

> - Bruce Feirstein[194] : Martin liked to get to the studio early, so we met at 6:00 one morning and he's looking across at me and states, "What are we going to do about the M scene?". I looked him and said, "I don't know. It's just a bunch of white guys sitting in a room talking", [...] I actually used those words. Martin said, "Why don't you try her as a woman?". I went off and wrote.

Stella Rimington.

It was an idea which also had the merit of being quite fitting with reality, MI5 being at that time led for the first time by a woman: Stella Rimington. (Although MI6 had a man at its head).

> - Bruce Feirstein[195] : By 11:00 I had written a draft. [...] It had the "sexist, misogynist dinosaur" line and all that. Martin liked it; Barbara and Michael agreed, but we all wondered if it could be better [...]. So I went through 31 drafts, and at the end of 31 drafts, what you see on the screen in GoldenEye is what I wrote that first morning in the first draft, with [only] one word changed. [...] After deciding to make M a woman, we [...] rewrote the scene in the DB5-Ferrari chase, making the woman an [MI6] analyst, instead of just another woman Bond picked up.

> - Martin Campbell[196] : The thing we kept talking about was how we were going to make this thing relevant, and the first thing I thought to do was to make M a female. In fact, I wanted another actress for the part, I didn't even think of Judi Dench. But [MGM's] John Calley said, "If you're going to have a woman, get a star. Get someone who is bloody good. How about Judi Dench?". So I think it was Calley who came up with that idea. We offered it to Judi and she took it.

> - Bruce Feirstein[197] : Connery was brilliant [...] and I would give anything to work for him. But he's not James Bond anymore. The idea of bringing him back today is wrong. [...] Pierce Brosnan is James Bond now. Life is different now than it was then. If the films don't reflect their time, I don't think the films will last. So as far as the politically correct charge goes… I don't buy it. True, Bond doesn't smoke. But let's get real, for a moment: Thirty years ago, baseball players drank, smoked, didn't work out. Now? They're athletes, again. Thirty years ago, Bond smoked, drank, did speed and amphetamines before the missions. Were the actual character to exist today, my bet is that he'd still love his martinis, but he wouldn't be smoking like a chimney, and he wouldn't be doing the drugs that he did in the novels, from the 50's.

Feirstein states that one of his tasks was to "shift the characters and bring the film into the nineties [...] which included rethinking the women's roles and how Bond related to women"[198].

Feirstein also participated in rewrites during the filming of the film:

> - Bruce Feirstein[199] : One of the delightful things about being a part of the Bond films is that it was like working in the middle of a circus, and it was hilarious. I would sit in my office on the third floor of what is now Warner Bros. Leavesden. Sitting there all day long, you would have [miniatures of] MiGs flying over the building as they were doing their thing, and you would look out the window and there was a tank that was crushing Russian cars.

Feirstein also has a little anecdote on the subject: "I remember one morning Barbara Broccoli pulled up to the studio and there were people there from the Ministry of Defense. It turned out they had overflown the studio and seen all of these Russian planes and military equipment on the ground, and wanted to know what the hell was going on"[200].

Jeff Kleeman adds another little anecdote:

> - Jeff Kleeman[201] : There's a story of Bruce Feirstein first coming to London to work on GoldenEye and he gets to passport control. [...] This passport control person says "business or pleasure?", [...] Bruce says "I'm a writer", [...] "[lot of questions and] what movie are you coming to work on?". Bruce says "the new James Bond movie" at which point the Customs agent bursts into a smile, stamps Bruce's passport, and says "well, you [better] take good care of our James".

Shooting script?

Let's talk about a 167-pages script of the film GoldenEye. The header page is missing but it is apparently a shooting script (no date indicated, although revisions dated 01/24/95 can be found on some pages). As a result, everything is very close to the film, but as often there are slight interesting differences.

Scene filmed but cut during editing.

The script opens on a dam in the USSR where, in a sort of gatehouse, two guards are watching the 1984' Olympic Games on a TV. One of the guards goes out to walk the barking dogs.

Meanwhile a figure dressed in black enters the gatehouse while the remaining guard is busy adjusting the television. The figure cuts a telephone cable then presses a button to open a door leading to the top of the dam. The guard, unaware of what happened, returns to his chair and lights a cigarette.

After Bond jumped from the dam, this is how a cult scene was described:

> - Bond: Beg your pardon. I forgot to knock.
> A big, fast fist rockets straight to camera.

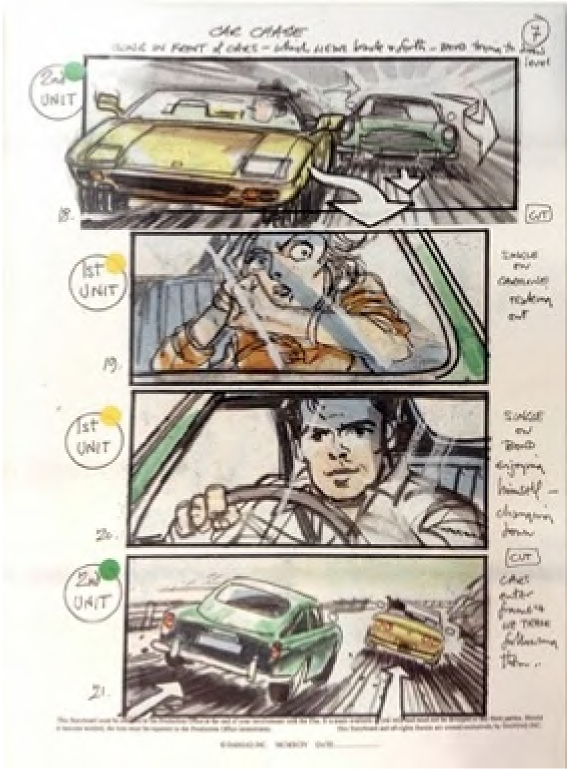
> - Martin Campbell[202] : We knew we were introducing Pierce in the pre-credit sequence, and I said, "It's a new Bond, why don't we introduce him upside down in a toilet?". I remember thinking, "What a great way to introduce Bond", right? At least that sets the tone: he's upside down in the bathroom of some chemical plant in Russia.

If you were wondering why Alec places Q's gadget (which they used to open the door of the gas production room) on the other side of it before the alarm sounds, the answer given by script is that he tries to "resets the entry code".

When the soldiers shoot at the armored glass, the script calls for the presence of a muscular soldier who breaks the glass with a sledgehammer (instead of breaking it by just shooting). Finally "Arkady Grigorovich Ourumov" captures Alec and puts a gun to his head, the script explains to us what 007 feels: "Bond hesitates. If he abandons the mission he'll save Trevelyan. If not, he'll live with he consequences forever. After a moment, he makes his decision".

Bond doesn't push a cart to escape, instead we are told that "Bond appears from behind the vat, sub-machine gun in one hand, a cylinder of deadly nerve gas in the other". He makes his way to the conveyor belt (a nervous guard who shot the cylinder is killed by Ourumov) and the rest of the pre-title is similar to the film.

9 years later we find Bond in his Aston Martin DB5 with Caroline. He races with Xenia who is in a yellow (not red) Ferrari 355. The scene is not too detailed but is similar to what we will find in the film except for one detail: it is a bus (and not cyclists) that they pass at one point.



CAR CHASE
7 level
2nd UNIT
18.
CUT
1st UNIT
SINGLE ON CAROLINE freaking out
19.
1st UNIT
SINGLE ON BOND enjoying himself – 20.
CUT
2nd UNIT
CARS enter frame as we TRACK following them..
21.

- Bruce Feirstein[203] : The first example of going back I made in GoldenEye was to bring back the Aston Martin DB5. The DB5 was not originally in the script and I remember going to Martin Campbell and saying, "We need to make this the DB5 to signal to the audience that we know who it [Bond] is". And what was funny was that the transport department pushed back and didn't want to use it, because they said the car's a piece of shit and it keeps breaking down.

In fact before Feirstein made this change, the much newer Aston Martin DB7 was to be 007's car[204]. The DB7 also mentioned in early promotional materials for cinema owners[205]. The Ferrari initially presented to the press (and in storyboard) was indeed yellow.

Arriving at Monte-Carlo casino, Bond simply responds "Thank you" in French (Merci) to the valet (who is not named Pierre). He wears a Saville Row suit (it will be a Brioni one in the movie) and Xenia introduces herself just as "Xenia Onatopp".

> - Bruce Feirstein[206] : Xenia Onatopp [literally: Above] [name] was mine; because I wanted to do a throwback to the old days of Pussy Galore, etc...

Admiral Chuck Farrel is here American (this will be changed to Canadian in the film at the request of the American army, apparently because they suffered from a bad reputation due to sex scandals[207]). Speaking of sex, we read of Xenia's technique: "this is the killing method of the boa constrictor".

On board of Manticore, the fight against the crewman is a little different:

> Bond senses movement behind him. He steps to one side just as the Manticore crewman swings at him with a gaff. It whistles past his head smashing into the bottles and glassware on the bar. Bond hits the man in the midsection with a well placed kick and follows through by smashing the man's head into the brass rail of the bar knocking him out cold.

Bond joins the French ship to stop Xenia and her accomplices from stealing the helicopter Tigre. Unlike the film, before rushing in and getting arrested, 007 had to introduce himself to a junior officer by handing him a card and saying: "Commander Bond, Naval Intelligence".

Arriving at Severnaya, the exchanges between "Natalya Fyodorovna Simonova" and Boris are longer:

> - Boris: I'll give you a hint. They're right in front of you, and can open very large doors.
> A moment, puzzled. Then she rolls her eyes and begins to type, exasperated. She types "KNOCKERS". Nothing. She glances at Boris.
> - Boris: I said large doors.
> She thinks, then types "BIG KNOCKERS". The photo de-morphs, her screen is restored. She grimaces.
> - Natalya: You are such a geek.
> - Boris: Admit it. You're hot for my hard drive. You want it bad.
> - Natalya: I think not. I hear all you've got is a three-and-a-half inch floppy.
> Just then, his computer beeps. He looks at his monitor:
> - Boris: Yes! I'm in!

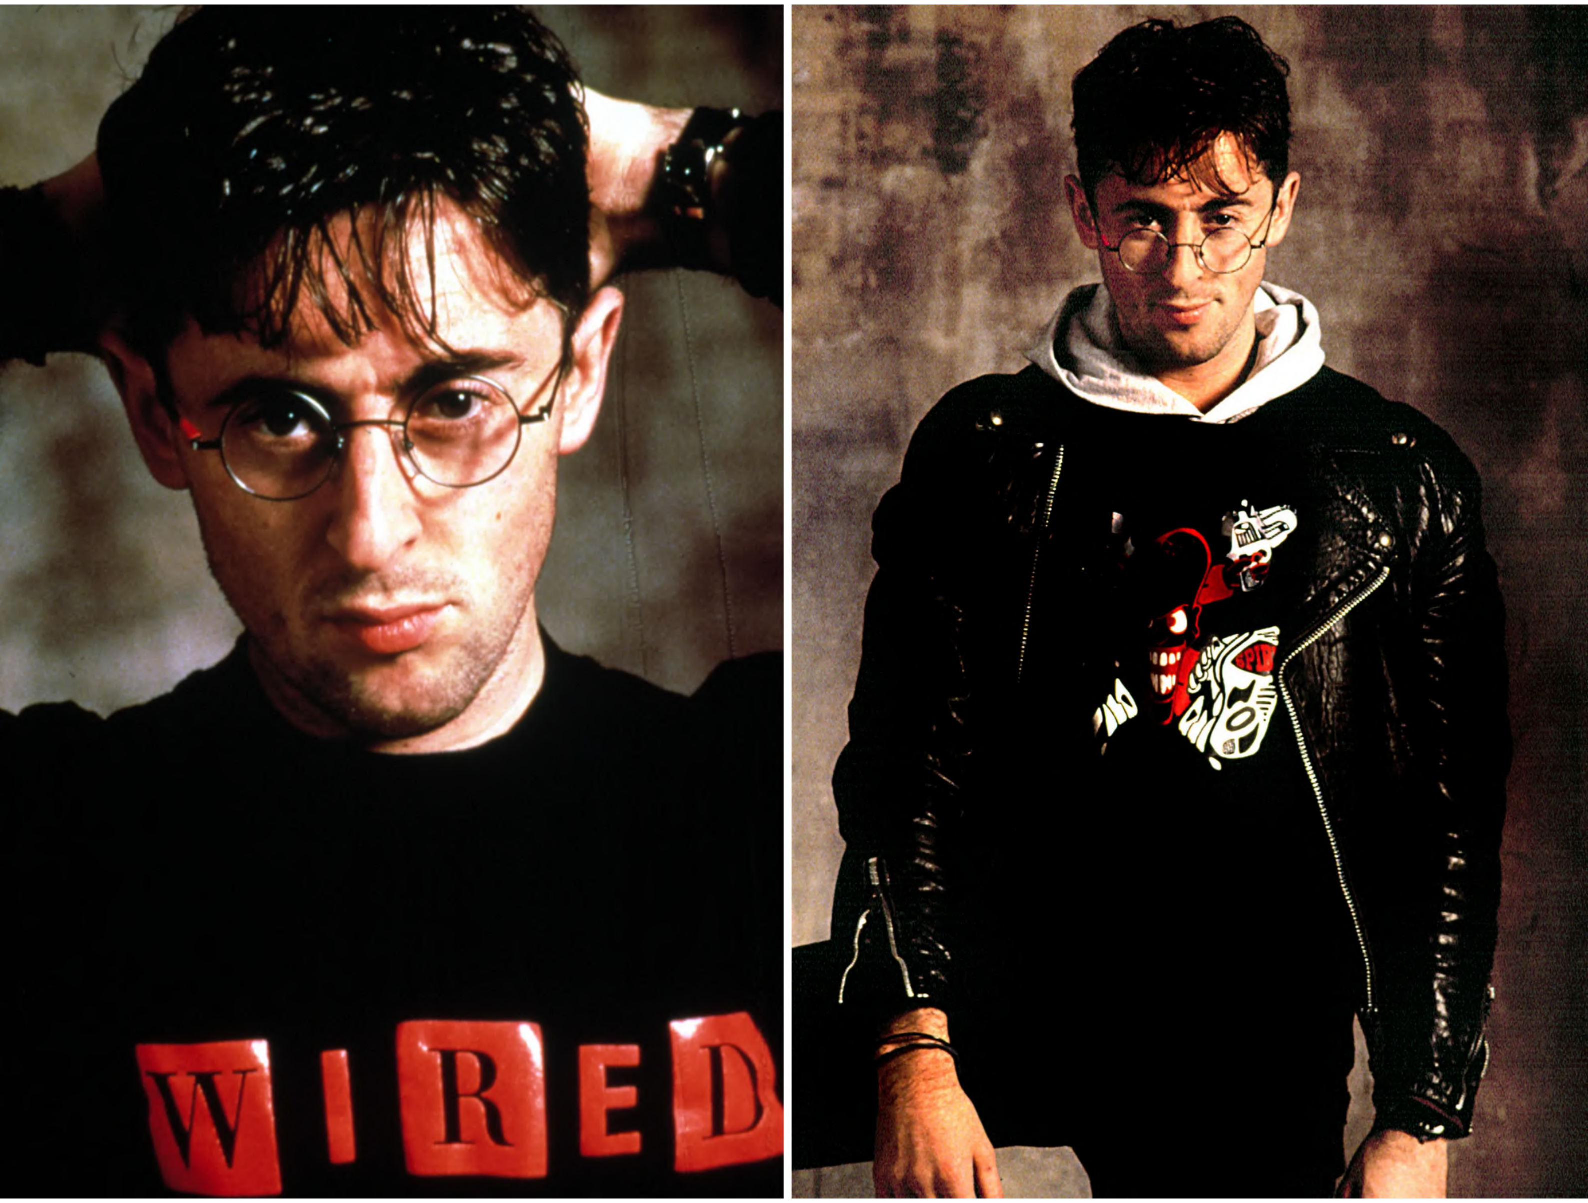
Boris Ivanovich Grishenko is described as "an edgy, imperious, wild-haired cyberpunk in his mid-twenties, wearing a Wired magazine logo T-shirt under his black leather motorcycle jacket rife with zippers and snaps".

> - Bruce Feirstein[208] : When I was working on the final draft of GoldenEye, I wrote that the Boris character should be wearing a Wired magazine [from the digital culture] t-shirt. It didn't work in the film, but he's wearing one in the publicity still.



A little later we meet the new M described as follows:

> This is M. [Late 40s]. A secure, professional, and - if there can be such a description - handsome woman. She was too insanely bright not to have been made head of MI6... And too self-aware not to have a sense of irony about it.

When she says that analyzes show that the Russians do not have the funds or technology for a space weapon, the script tells us:

> Bond meets M's penetrating glance. This is the crux of their conflict: field agent versus statistical analysis; and they both know it. They're like tigers, circling each other. Bond's response is calculated to push her, but not too far.

A little later we are told:

> His assuredness surprises her; his deductions are about to explain to her why only James Bond is James Bond.

In M's office, we notice that M is smoking (a cigarette).

> - Michael Wilson[209] : In the film, Alec says, "James Bond, Her Majesty's royal terrier", and M calls him a dinosaur. [...] Just take the stuff the critics have said [about you] for years and throw it into the script. You don't have to write the dialogue, just use the reviews.

Arriving in Q's laboratory (the scene of the ministers meeting in Russia comes later in the script), we are told that two laboratory workers are aiming at a third with a weapon: they shoot a kind of anti-riot substance which envelops man. It is not specified that the BMW has a parachute during the scene, the telephone booth with the balloon is also absent. A few lines change (it is specified that some of the pages of the Q-lab scene are dated from "24/1/95"):

> - Q: Next: This looks like a pen, works like a pen. Click once to write, once to retract.
> - Bond: Ingenious.
> - Q: ...We're working on a version that will provide you with wit. In the meantime, this is a class 4 grenade..
> [...]
> - Bond: How long did you say the fuse was?
> - Q: Shorter than mine.
> [...]
> - Q: Now 007, do try and return some of this equipment in pristine condition. The budget? Even the Queen pays taxes these days.

Q also had to bite into his sandwich before saying: "this is my lunch".

> - Jeff Kleeman[210] : We knew we wanted to give Bond a car that did stuff as part of the gadget list. We knew that was one of the things that, if previous Bond fans watched the movie, they would be hoping for, expecting. So, we gave him a car that did stuff, but in the process of getting the script and the budget to where it needed to be, everything the car did was essentially eliminated. Which left us with a conundrum. We've given Bond this car, it does all these cool things, and we want that, but we have no space for it to actually do anything. So we created, pretty last minute, that moment with Joe Don Baker [...] which doesn't really have a plot function [...] but it's just to say [...]. But we always had on our checklist: [...] if there is a next movie, we have to deliver on it.

A short scene showing Natalya exiting a train and changing direction upon seeing a police officer, was also present before Bond's plane landed in Russia. There Bond meets Jack Wade, the latter tells 007 that in Saint Petersburg people freezing their dicks (and not their butts like in the film) and there is an additional exchange about Wade's car:

> - Bond: Nice car.
> - Wade: Hey, you have any idea what the CIA is paying us agents these days?
> - Bond: To the penny. Your last defector gave an interview to the Moscow Times.

Wade at the wheel of his Moskvich drives Bond through the streets of Saint Petersburg to Zukovsky's place and takes the opportunity to tell Bond about one of his passions in a tirade which was ultimately filmed but cut during editing:

- Wade: Funny thing is, I got into gardening by accident. Back in Cambodia. Brewing up explosives... Little plant fertilizer, little diesel fuel, and one day: boom... I'd been dumping this extra fertilizer out the window, and there they were. Blooms the size of hand grenades.

They arrive at an arms black market street where Zukovsky's club is located. "Kinda' like... [The streets of] Los Angeles", Wade notes.

Meanwhile Zukovsky is at his club where some girls are singing/slaughtering Country Roads by John Denver. A Pakistani arms dealer is presenting weapons to Zukovsky:

- Valentine: The Heckler & Koch MP5 fully automatic sub-machine gun.
- Arms dealer: Exactly Sir! Very good. Very good eye. I promise you most excellent quality. 2000 pieces, next day delivery. Very good price..
- Valentin (seemingly impressed): The Glock 17. Semi-automatic pistol.
- Arms dealer: I compliment you on your taste! Excellent weapon. All the very best people are using them. Very good gun. I give you my very, very best price.

The arms dealer beams. Valentin picks up the Heckler & Koch sub-machine gun, hefts it in one hand.

- Valentine: Obsolete. (Pointing the grenades) Czech counterfeit, crap.

He takes the Glock and removes the empty magazine, dropping it on the table. Without taking his eyes off the arms dealer he holds out his hand, one of his body guards removes a full clip from his own gun and places it in Valentin's hand.

- Valentin: Now, the Glock is a weapon I admire...
- Arms dealer: Of course you do sir. You're a very clever man.
- Valentin: ...Beautifully machined. Takes to the hand like a glove...

He ever so casually slides the full clip into the pistol.

- Arms dealer: Yes. It's a very, very, very...

Click. Valentin has chambered a round. He's aiming the gun at the dealer's forehead.

- Valentin: ...But there is a batch of Chinese forgeries on the market; perfect, except for one minor detail. The Chinese...

He pulls the trigger, the gun only clicks; empty. The arms dealer gags.

- Valentin: ...Made the firing pins too short. Now get out of my sight.

He flips the pistol across the table and stands up with a heavy sigh, complaining to no one in particular...

> - Valentine: Another morning shot to hell. This free market economy is going to be the death of me.

> - Bruce Feirstein[211] : [For Zukovsky], I thought back to Casablanca and took the Sydney Greenstreet character. Sydney Greenstreet is doing all sorts of illegal things in Casablanca. So then it became an homage to that character. His first lines are, 'The free-market economy. I swear it will be the end of me". That's very much Sydney Greenstreet-ish.

After this scene with the Pakistani, which was cut in the edit, Bond stumble on him and one of Zukovsky's men stumble on Bond. The singers then had to butcher the song Memories/Memory from Cats (and not Stand by Your Man).

At the end of the interview with Valentin, there should have been two additional lines:

> - Bond: Precisely.
> - Valentine: If you are ever contemplating a change of career, Mr. Bond, let me know.
> - Bond: With people like you around, Valentin, I expect I'll always find work.
> [Alternative line: Bond: (wry smile) The offer is stirring, Valentin. But I remain... Unshaken].

After this scene Natalya meets Boris (and Xenia) at the church and is kidnapped.

We find Boris sitting in front of a computer terminal in the armored train, at night. He is joined by Ourumov who disconnects him from the system in another scene which has been cut during editing:

> - Boris (turning around, surprised): Hey, what... You disconnected me! What do you think you're doing?!?
> - Ourumov: Preventing an accident. Your practicing might be discovered.
> - Boris (playing with a pen): I am making sure there are no bugs in the program. My practicing is to prevent an even bigger accident.
> - Ourumov: I crush bugs.
> - Boris: And probably eats them.
> - Ourumov: You leave tonight. And in 72 hours... We'll see if I have to call an exterminator.

Bond goes to the swimming pool of the Grand Hotel Europe. The script called for an old woman at the entrance to the pool to give 007 a towel. Later we read that: "[Xenia] stands up, facing Bond, and the towel drops away, revealing her flawless, naked body".

During the meeting with Alec in the statues yard we can note an additional line:

> - Alec: Trust? What a quaint idea... We live in a world where today's dictator is tomorrow's statesman; where the bomb thrower catches the Nobel Prize. It's all money, James. Free-market morality; where your friends and your allies come and go as quickly as the next bus on Regent Street.

Bond and Natalya are eventually captured and taken to "Military Intelligence HQ" for interrogation. There Bond had to say to the guard who removes his handcuffs: "I don't suppose there's a mini-bar?". They are questioned by Minister Mishkin, whose first name is "Viktor" on some pages and "Dimitri" (as in the film) on others.

They end up escaping, Natalya is captured, Bond swings "à la Errol Flynn" with his Q-belt and chases Ourumov with a T-55 tank.

> - Martin Campbell[212] : The tank chase, the special-effects guy Chris Corbould came up with. Again, it was, "What haven't we done before?". [...] You just keep an open mind to anybody who comes up with ideas.

The chase is similar to the movie but there are some interesting things here. For example, after Bond's arrival, Ourumov's driver turns onto a street and gets stuck in traffic; Bond doesn't do a 360° but:

> The tank has just taken the short route onto the block, cutting the corner, trundling onto the pavement, over parked cars.
> Natalya smiles. Ourumov glares at her. Panicked, he spots a pedestrian alleyway to his left. It's very narrow; too narrow for a tank, much less a car.

In the film, at one point during the chase Bond doesn't follow Ourumov's car when it goes up a bridge. The script explains that if Bond prefers to take a parallel route at this point it is because he "realises the bridge won't support the tank [weight]". Ourumov also has this exchange with his driver at one point:

> - Ourumov: It's a tank, damn it! Can't you lose him?

Arriving at the crossroads, Bond's tank was to collide with a Pepsi truck (and not Perrier) and we have an indication of a scene which was cut during editing:

> [The roundabout] littered with hundreds of Pepsi cans, it's too much for the public to resist: A feeding frenzy as people flock onto the roundabout, grabbing as many cans as they can carry.

Finally the most notable thing is that the chase continues after the statue of Tsar Nicholas falls from the tank:

> The tank follows, and is just low enough to clear the bridge. The statue however, is not. It collides with the side of the bridge, momentarily stuck rigid, before it drops towards the road, onto the trunk of the front police car, passing underneath the bridge, causing it to rear up nose first; the front wheels stuck up in the air, the heavy statue embedded in the trunk, sending a shower of sparks as the car weaves drunkenly towards an office building across the T-junction.
>
> Inside the driver wears a startled expression as the car careens through the building entrance, the car continues inside, scattering office staff, demolishing dividing walls between offices, heading right for a brick wall at the end of the building.
>
> Cut to the exterior of the brick wall at the back of the building: there is a moments pause, then the brick exterior collapses revealing the upended car in the ladies toilet. One stall remains standing, the door closed. From behind it comes a single high pitched scream.
>
> [Further on], a formidable army roadblock being constructed, mid-block. In front of them, a straight road at the end of which it turns a corner. Behind them, a sharp bend. The sound of the tank approaching can be heard in the distance.
>
> An aerial view shows the tank speeds down one street... Keeping pace with the car... A block away, running a parallel course.
>
> At the roadblock, armoured vehicles being moved into position. A large anti-tank gun being manoeuvred to the front, soldiers preparing weapons. The sound of the tank getting closer.
>
> At the end of the parallel streets, Ourumov's car takes a sharp right, mounts the pavement, crashes through a roadwork project, only to find the tank, despite having lost ground, still in relentless pursuit.
>
> The roadblock is ready. An awesome display of firepower. Fifty soldiers silent, pointing a lethal array of weapons down the empty road... Waiting. The sound of the tank now very close.
>
> Ourumov's car careens round another corner. He again looks out the back window... No sign of the tank. Thank God.

At the roadblock, the sound of the tank is deafening. Tension. Anticipation. The Russian Commander moves forward, staring down the empty street.

- Russian Commander: Aim!!

The soldiers brace themselves as... The concrete wall bordering the road behind the soldiers disintegrates, and the tank bears down on fifty soldiers and a startled commander all facing the wrong way. The tank carves a path of destruction, through man and machine as up ahead, Ourumov's car crosses the road from a side-street.

Ourumov arrives at a train depot, which, like the statue park, is a reminder of bygone Russia. [...] The car stops.

- Driver: Shall I wait...

Phut! The sound of a muffled gunshot, and the driver slumps forward over the wheel. [...] The camera pulls back to reveal the tank foreground, parked on a rise overlooking the depot.

Later, at Trevelyan's secret base in Cuba, a guard spots Bond and Natalya near the dish and informs Trevelyan:

- Trevelyan (bemused): Alas, poor Xenia. Kill him.

Then when Bond is captured:

- Trevelyan: James! What an unpleasant surprise.
- Bond: We aim to please.
- Trevelyan: I suppose that's the difference between us... I aim to kill. Where's the girl?
- Bond: We're not seeing each other right now.

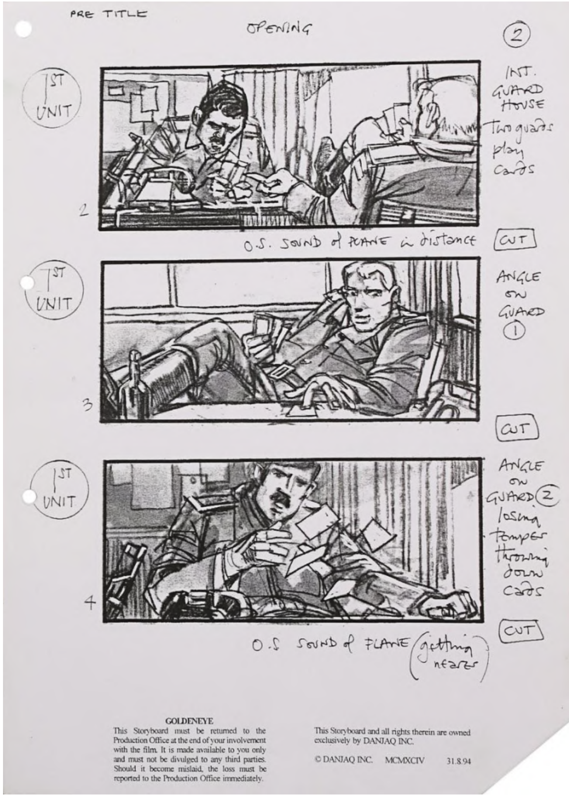
The rest of the script is similar to the movie (Wade had to have an M-16 in his hands at the end and the Marine helicopters were Cougars ones).

November 21, 1994' script

Another script (obviously written earlier than the one discussed before) dated November 21, 1994 (although the date written on all pages is November 19, 1994) of 143 pages. "By Michael France and Jeffrey Caine, revisions by Bruce Feirstein" states the hear which omit Kevin Wade. It is very similar to the script discussed earlier, below are the differences with it (and not in relation to the film):

- In the deleted scene of the dam guard post we can notice some differences: first of all the two guards are not watching TV but playing chess. As their game ends, one of the guards comes out to look at the plane that can be heard in the distance. The one who stayed inside turns around and sees Bond, whose face is still hidden in shadow from the audience POV, behind the window. Before the guard can react any further, Bond shoots him with a silent pistol shot through the window. The guard who had gone out returns as the sound of a phone ringing is heard. With no sign of his colleague and feeling that something is wrong he tries to rush towards his rifle which is placed near his desk. As he reaches it, Bond shoots him and then cuts the phone cable.
- With Trevelyan they set the bomb detonator for three minutes (instead of six).
- There is in the script a German naval admiral named Kurt Reinecker (this character will change his name and nationality in the film to become Admiral Chuck Farrel).
- When Moneypenny transmit Xenia's profile to Bond, she indicates that in addition to being a former Soviet fighter pilot, Xenia was also a former KGB spy.
- When Bond goes to the Manticore, things are a little different: he is seen by a member of the crew and tells him "James Bond to see Xenia Onatopp". The man tells him that she just left and 007 replies that he will wait for her to come back. The guard pulls out a gun and shows Bond the ladder, "On second thought, maybe I won't [wait]". Bond disarms the guard and subdues him: "Then again, perhaps I will".
- In this script the Tigre helicopter is French (and not European).



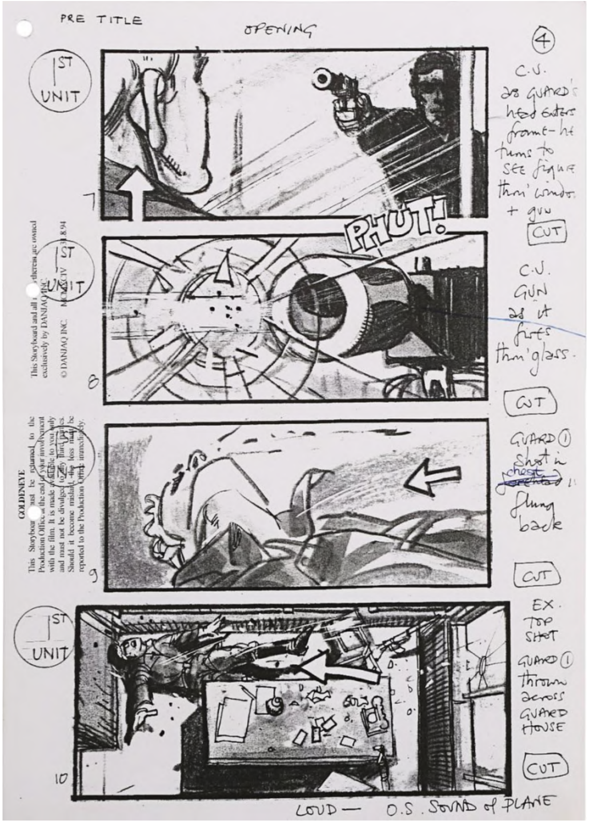
PRE TITLE
OPENING
②
1ST UNIT
2
INT. GUARD HOUSE
Two guards play cards
O.S. SOUND of PLANE in distance
CUT
1ST UNIT
3
ANGLE ON GUARD ①
CUT
1ST UNIT
4
ANGLE ON GUARD ② losing temper throwing down cards
CUT
O.S SOUND of PLANE (getting nearer)

GOLDENEYE

This Storyboard must be returned to the Production Office at the end of your involvement with the film. It is made available to you only and must not be divulged to any third parties. Should it become mislaid, the loss must be reported to the Production Office immediately.

This Storyboard and all rights therein are owned exclusively by DANJAQ INC.

© DANJAQ INC. MCMXCIV 31.8.94



PRE TITLE
OPENING
④
1ST UNIT
7
C.U. as GUARD's head enters frame - he turns to see figure thru' window + gun
CUT PHUT!
1ST UNIT
8
C.U. GUN as it fires thru' glass.
CUT
9
GUARD ① shot in ~~forehead~~ chest !! flung back
CUT
1ST UNIT
10
EX. TOP SHOT
GUARD ① thrown across GUARD HOUSE
CUT
LOUD — O.S. SOUND of PLANE

- Ourumov doesn't give an authorization code to the Severnaya officer.
- A description tries to explain the title of the film: "The duty officer opens the safe and brings out a small plastic card bearing the codes and an electronic firing key. This latter is a small golden disc with an eye in the centre through which a laser beam is fired to encode the satellites. This is the GOLDENEYE".
- There was to be a short scene where Bond arrives at the new MI6 HQ in his Aston Martin DB5 and is greeted by a guard who opens the gate for him (not unlike a similar passage in Tomorrow Never Dies).
- Behind M's back, Bill Tanner said of her: "the evil queen of numbers, the woman with the big bottom line".
- When Bond and the other members of MI6 look at satellite images of Severnaya and speculate, Bond says that "I've been in inside that kind of Russian facility [before]".
- In the scene of the sexist dinosaur, M adds "whose boyish charms I might have actually succumbed to ten years ago" instead of simply saying that his charms have no effect on her.
- Q tells Bond that the prototype of the pen-grenade "took out half the windows in Knightsbridge"! But the most surprising thing is that the BMW is completely absent from the Q-lab scene. In any case, Q's budget is no longer what it used to be: "Now pay attention, 007. Let me show you the ever-more expensive ways we're working to keep you alive on our ever-shrinking budget".
- In the scene from the previously discussed script where Bond and Wade are in an alley near Zukovsky's house, there is an exchange here where Wade says "if you get in trouble, I'll send in the Marines".
- In the Tigre, Bond asks Natalya if she has seen a red button and she tells him that it is to his right.
- The dialogues are a little different from the film during the interrogation with Mishkin.
- The dialogue at the end of the scene where Wade brings the plane to Bond and Natalya is longer: "Yo, James. You can take this guy. I go faith. You know all his moves"; "Yes. But he knows all of mine" (Bond still arrives here in a BMW).
- A little further on, during the scene on the beach, some dialogues are different:

> \- Natalya: I hate you!
> [Bond grabs her and pulls her towards him. She hits Bond's chest with her fists].
> \- Natalya: I hate you! I hate you all, with your guns, and your weapons, and your death!
> \- Bond: No...
> [Trying to free herself, she tears Bond's shirt and collapses on his bare chest, crying].
> \- Natalya: My friends. My family...
> \- Bond: I know...
> \- Natalya: They're gone! All gone!

> \- Bruce Feirstein[213] : I get called back from London and told I've got to do this scene on the beach where the two of them talk about who they are in their relationship. So I wrote that whole scene about boys with toys, and that Bond's attitude is what keeps him alone. There was the feeling that there needed to be > a deeper emotional connection between Natalya and Bond. We already had the scene in the hotel room, before the two of them flew off to the satellite dish, but there just wasn't enough there, they said. [...] With a few tweaks, improvements, from Michael, Barbara, and Martin, what you see on the screen is pretty much what I wrote that afternoon.

- The chase on the antenna between Bond and Trevelyan is a little different, it is in particular his weapon (which has jammed) that Bond stuck in the antenna's rotation system.

We can also read another script dated November 28, 1994, but there is nothing interesting to note that wasn't already been noted in the two scripts previously studied (except that at this date, Kurt Reinecker has already been changed to Chuck Farrel, American) and that Bond's pen has a green or red indicator that indicates the state of the pen (armed or unarmed).

Also in the control room in Cuba:

> - Boris: No. It's too early. I am not ready.
> - Trevelyan: I am. We're not going to take any more chances with Mr. Bond.

Finally, nothing interesting that hasn't already been mentioned earlier in a script "third draft" of January 7, 1995 (except the presence on the cover of a mysterious "Simon L. Aturif" in the credits, alongside France and Caine!), nor in one of January 24, 1995 script.

> - Bruce Feirstein[214] : I have never heard of Simon Aturif. I don't know who he is.

In 1995 GoldenEye will successfully relaunch the franchise that has been absent from the big screen since 1989, showing those who were doubtful, that 007 still has indeed its place in this new decade of cinema, despite the end of the Cold War.

Credits for the screenplay will be listed as follows: "Screenplay by Jeffrey Caine and Bruce Feirstein; story by Michael France".

> - Michael France[215] : The producers proposed that I would receive first position "written by" credit on GoldenEye. But it went to arbitration at the Writers Guild, and at least two out of three arbiters did not agree with what the studio proposed. I wound up with just a story credit, despite the fact (and I very comfortably use the word "fact") that I wrote more of the screenplay than anyone else involved. [...] The Writers Guild credit arbitration process is unavoidable and unpredictable. I believe the process generally works, but every working writer has a disappointment in dealing with that system, and GoldenEye is definitely mine.

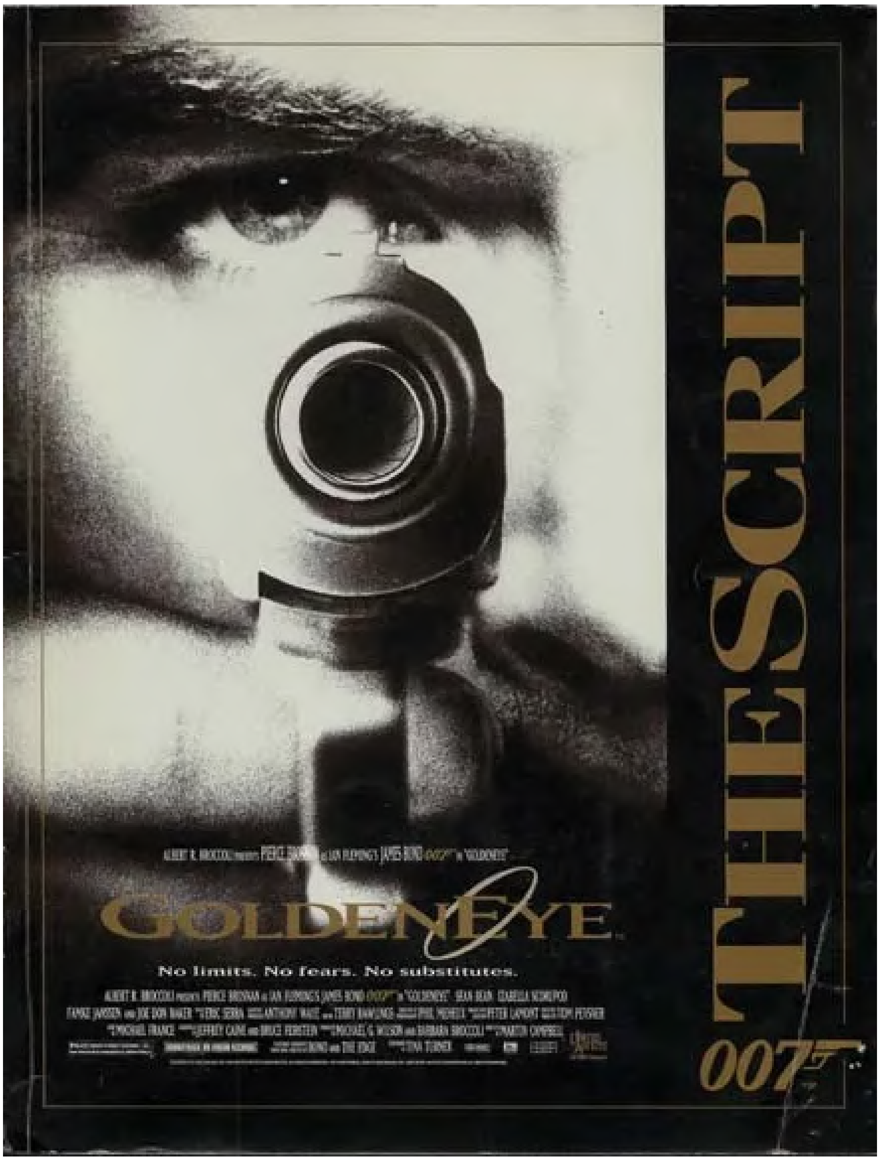
> - Michael Wilson[216] : We had a lot of ideas pitched to us by writers, agents, and the studio, but Michael France came up with what we thought was a very good idea. It had some pretty interesting plot twists and some interesting characters.

It was all there, and it worked its way through the three other writers, and it was still intact. Jeffrey Caine had come in and worked a lot on the script and made some real strong contributions.

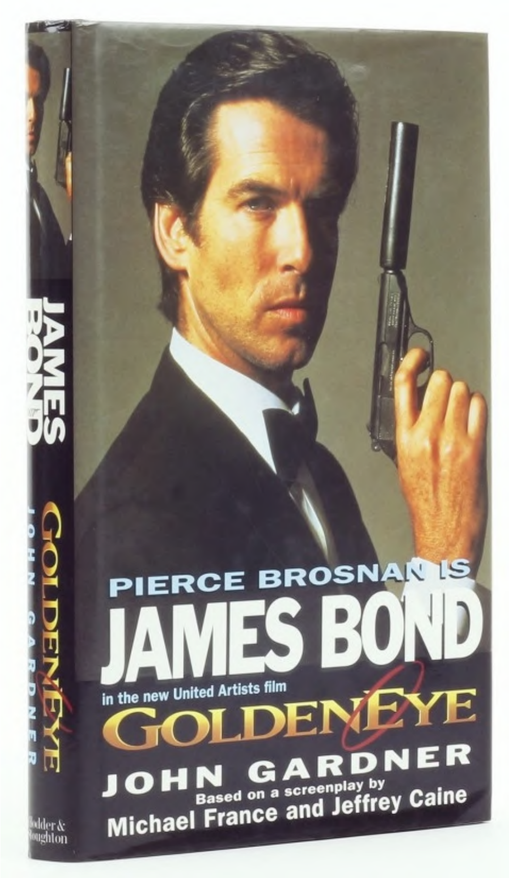
- Jeffrey Caine[217] : I think the Bond movies took a wrong turn in the eighties, becoming too comic-book in tone with Roger Moore and then too austere with Tim Dalton. I believe GoldenEye helped redress the balance in 1995 and Casino Royale (2006) has given the franchise new life again.

- Jeff Kleeman[218] : [Bond has gone] from the black sheep of the MGM's film slate to becoming the savior of MGM/UA. [...] After GoldenEye there was only one answer, which was get another Bond movie going. Because suddenly Bond was the thing that mattered most, and that's continued to this day with MGM/UA.

I don't know much about its origins but the final script was also published in book form at the time:



Novelization



GoldenEye was novelized by John Gardner.

The story begins with James Bond waking up near the dam because of the noise of two Soviet jets. We are told that he was parachuted into the area because M (the old M) thinks that 006 and 007 are his two best men. The two agents are there as part of "Operation Cowslip", which aims to slow down or stop the Soviets in their development of a biological weapon capable of destroying the organs of the human body in the blink of an eye.

The novelization have the deleted scene where Bond infiltrates the dam guard post to open the gate, but this one is more violent than what was filmed because 007 kills the two guards (with an ASP and not a PPK) instead of dodging them. This is also the only "deleted scene" that is present in the book.

Anyway, Bond bungee jumps and we learn that 006 has been infiltrating the dam for three days. From there, if the novelization added things up to this point, it begins to take away quite a bit during the two chapters that follow: no toilet scene, nor the death of the scientists, no motocross, nor the cyclists, etc... Also we can note that during the pre-title scene, Bond doesn't hide behind a cart but holds a grenade in his hand to avoid being shot at.

The second "big" addition of the novelization is a scene which takes place after the episode of the tank and the armored train. In this one Bond contacts Wade who helps him to get out of Russia with Natalya. As the Russian authorities are looking for them, they use disguises to leave the country. Furthermore, it is as the result of this that 007 obtains his BMW, not provided by MI6 but by the CIA.

Regarding minor changes, Mishkin's first name is not Dimitri but Viktor, Xenia uses an Uzi and not an AKS-74U. We also learn that the new M (who smokes cigarettes) has changed Tanner's title from Chief of Staff to Senior Analyst.

007 doesn't like it when Wade calls him Jim or Jimbo and doesn't fail to let him know. Wade also gives Bond a short tour of Saint Petersburg and 007 uses the tank's machine gun to cross a roadblock.

Contrary to what one might think in the film, Zukovsky (who here has the pox) doesn't recognize James Bond by the sound of his gun: he actually saw him enter the building, thanks to a surveillance camera. There is also a reference to the novel SeaFire from the same author and Xenia is completely naked in the baths (she takes off Bond's underwear and the two characters have a very, very brief sexual relationship)...

Alec is much more disfigured in the novelization, this notably concerns one eye, and if he falls from the antenna, it is because one of the rungs of the ladder gives way.

Finally, the Xenia's Ferrari is yellow (strangely the car color has been changed to red in the French translation).

Sources/references from chapter 17: GoldenEye

1 "P*roduction Notes - GoldenEye*" on MI6-HQ: https://www.mi6-hq.com/sections/movies/ge_production
2 "Nobody Does it Better" by Mark A. Altman and Edward Gross (2020).
3 "Bond Bombshell: 007 Goes On The Block" by Charles Fleming in Weekly Variety, (8 August, 1990); via "Some Kind of Hero: The Remarkable Story of the James Bond Films" by Matthew Field & Ajay Chowdhury (2015).
4 "Nobody Does it Better" by Mark A. Altman and Edward Gross (2020).
5 "Meet Jim Bond, all American hero..." by Richard Middleton in the Daily Mail (August 13, 1990).
Letter signed Albert Broccoli to the Daily Mail editor (August 14, 1990). The resulting apologies/correction of the Daily Mail were published under the title "Mr John Glen" (August 18, 1990). The Sunday Times who made similar allegations also issued apologies/correction under the title "John Glen and Richard Maibaum" (August 19, 1990).
6 Letter signed Albert Broccoli to the Daily Mail editor (August 14, 1990).
7 "Bond Bombshell: 007 Goes On The Block" by Charles Fleming in Weekly Variety, (8 August, 1990); via "Some Kind of Hero: The Remarkable Story of the James Bond Films" by Matthew Field & Ajay Chowdhury (2015).
8 "Some Kind of Hero: The Remarkable Story of the James Bond Films" by Matthew Field & Ajay Chowdhury (2015).
"Head of Operations" by Alan Jones in Film Review Special magazine (issue #21, 1997); via "Some Kind of Hero: The Remarkable Story of the James Bond Films" by Matthew Field & Ajay Chowdhury (2015).
9 "Bond Bombshell: 007 Goes On The Block" by Charles Fleming in Weekly Variety, (8 August, 1990); via "Some Kind of Hero: The Remarkable Story of the James Bond Films" by Matthew Field & Ajay Chowdhury (2015).
10 "Nobody Does it Better" by Mark A. Altman and Edward Gross (2020).
11 Alfonse Ruggiero Jr.'s IMBb page.
12 "The Lost Adventures of James Bond" by Mark Edlitz (2020).
13 "The Lost Adventures of James Bond" by Mark Edlitz (2020).
14 "The Lost Adventures of James Bond" by Mark Edlitz (2020).
15 "The Lost Adventures of James Bond" by Mark Edlitz (2020).
16 "The Lost Adventures of James Bond" by Mark Edlitz (2020).
17 "The Lost Adventures of James Bond" by Mark Edlitz (2020).
18 "The Lost Adventures of James Bond" by Mark Edlitz (2020).
19 "The Lost Adventures of James Bond" by Mark Edlitz (2020).
20 "The Lost Adventures of James Bond" by Mark Edlitz (2020).
21 "The Lost Adventures of James Bond" by Mark Edlitz (2020).
22 "The Lost Adventures of James Bond" by Mark Edlitz (2020).
23 "The Lost Adventures of James Bond" by Mark Edlitz (2020).
24 "The Lost Adventures of James Bond" by Mark Edlitz (2020).
25 "The Lost Adventures of James Bond" by Mark Edlitz (2020).
26 "The Lost Adventures of James Bond" by Mark Edlitz (2020).
27 "The Lost Adventures of James Bond" by Mark Edlitz (2020).
28 "The Lost Adventures of James Bond" by Mark Edlitz (2020).
29 "Bond Bombshell: 007 Goes On The Block" by Charles Fleming in Weekly Variety, (August 8, 1990); via "Some Kind of Hero: The Remarkable Story of the James Bond Films" by Matthew Field & Ajay Chowdhury (2015).
30 "Interview: William Osborne" in Norwich Film Festival website (2016): https://www.norwichfilmfestival.co.uk/blog/interview-william-osbourne/
31 "Interview: William Osborne" in Norwich Film Festival website (2016): https://www.norwichfilmfestival.co.uk/blog/interview-william-osbourne/
32 "Interview: William Osborne" in Norwich Film Festival website (2016): https://www.norwichfilmfestival.co.uk/blog/interview-william-osbourne/
33 "Interview: William Osborne" in Norwich Film Festival website (2016): https://www.norwichfilmfestival.co.uk/blog/interview-william-osbourne/
34 "Interview: William Osborne" in Norwich Film Festival website (2016): https://www.norwichfilmfestival.co.uk/blog/interview-william-osbourne/
35 "Interview: William Osborne" in Norwich Film Festival website (2016): https://www.norwichfilmfestival.co.uk/blog/interview-william-osbourne/
36 "The Lost Adventures of James Bond" by Mark Edlitz (2020).
37 "The Lost Adventures of James Bond" by Mark Edlitz (2020).
38 "Some Kind of Hero: The Remarkable Story of the James Bond Films" by Matthew Field & Ajay Chowdhury (2015).
39 "The Lost Adventures of James Bond" by Mark Edlitz (2020).
40 "Some Kind of Hero: The Remarkable Story of the James Bond Films" by Matthew Field & Ajay Chowdhury (2015).
41 "James Bond: Selling the 007 franchise" by Mark A. Altman in Cinefantastique magazine (volume #21, issue #4, February 1991).
42 "James Bond: Selling the 007 franchise" by Mark A. Altman in Cinefantastique magazine (volume #21, issue #4, February 1991).

43 "The Lost Adventures of James Bond" by Mark Edlitz (2020).

44 "The predator: How an Italian thug looted MGM, brought Crédit lyonnais to its knees, and made the Pope cry" by David McLintick and Anne Faircloth in Fortune magazine (July 8, 1996); via CNN Money: https://money.cnn.com/magazines/fortune/fortune_archive/1996/07/08/214344/index.htm

45 "The predator: How an Italian thug looted MGM, brought Crédit lyonnais to its knees, and made the Pope cry" by David McLintick and Anne Faircloth in Fortune magazine (July 8, 1996); via CNN Money: https://money.cnn.com/magazines/fortune/fortune_archive/1996/07/08/214344/index.htm

46 "The predator: How an Italian thug looted MGM, brought Crédit lyonnais to its knees, and made the Pope cry" by David McLintick and Anne Faircloth in Fortune magazine (July 8, 1996); via CNN Money: https://money.cnn.com/magazines/fortune/fortune_archive/1996/07/08/214344/index.htm

47 "The predator: How an Italian thug looted MGM, brought Crédit lyonnais to its knees, and made the Pope cry" by David McLintick and Anne Faircloth in Fortune magazine (July 8, 1996); via CNN Money: https://money.cnn.com/magazines/fortune/fortune_archive/1996/07/08/214344/index.htm

48 "The predator: How an Italian thug looted MGM, brought Crédit lyonnais to its knees, and made the Pope cry" by David McLintick and Anne Faircloth in Fortune magazine (July 8, 1996); via CNN Money: https://money.cnn.com/magazines/fortune/fortune_archive/1996/07/08/214344/index.htm

49 "The predator: How an Italian thug looted MGM, brought Crédit lyonnais to its knees, and made the Pope cry" by David McLintick and Anne Faircloth in Fortune magazine (July 8, 1996); via CNN Money: https://money.cnn.com/magazines/fortune/fortune_archive/1996/07/08/214344/index.htm

50 "The predator: How an Italian thug looted MGM, brought Crédit lyonnais to its knees, and made the Pope cry" by David McLintick and Anne Faircloth in Fortune magazine (July 8, 1996); via CNN Money: https://money.cnn.com/magazines/fortune/fortune_archive/1996/07/08/214344/index.htm

51 "The predator: How an Italian thug looted MGM, brought Crédit lyonnais to its knees, and made the Pope cry" by David McLintick and Anne Faircloth in Fortune magazine (July 8, 1996); via CNN Money: https://money.cnn.com/magazines/fortune/fortune_archive/1996/07/08/214344/index.htm

52 "The predator: How an Italian thug looted MGM, brought Crédit lyonnais to its knees, and made the Pope cry" by David McLintick and Anne Faircloth in Fortune magazine (July 8, 1996); via CNN Money: https://money.cnn.com/magazines/fortune/fortune_archive/1996/07/08/214344/index.htm

53 "The predator: How an Italian thug looted MGM, brought Crédit lyonnais to its knees, and made the Pope cry" by David McLintick and Anne Faircloth in Fortune magazine (July 8, 1996); via CNN Money: https://money.cnn.com/magazines/fortune/fortune_archive/1996/07/08/214344/index.htm

54 "The predator: How an Italian thug looted MGM, brought Crédit lyonnais to its knees, and made the Pope cry" by David McLintick and Anne Faircloth in Fortune magazine (July 8, 1996); via CNN Money: https://money.cnn.com/magazines/fortune/fortune_archive/1996/07/08/214344/index.htm

55 "What Makes Giancarlo Run?" by John Greenwald in Time (April 23, 1990): https://time.com/archive/6714689/what-makes-giancarlo-run/
"The predator: How an Italian thug looted MGM, brought Crédit lyonnais to its knees, and made the Pope cry" by David McLintick and Anne Faircloth in Fortune magazine (July 8, 1996); via CNN Money: https://money.cnn.com/magazines/fortune/fortune_archive/1996/07/08/214344/index.htm

56 "The predator: How an Italian thug looted MGM, brought Crédit lyonnais to its knees, and made the Pope cry" by David McLintick and Anne Faircloth in Fortune magazine (July 8, 1996); via CNN Money: https://money.cnn.com/magazines/fortune/fortune_archive/1996/07/08/214344/index.htm

57 "When the Snow Melts: The Autobiography of Cubby Broccoli" by Albert Broccoli and Donald Zec (2012 edition).

58 "When the Snow Melts: The Autobiography of Cubby Broccoli" by Albert Broccoli and Donald Zec (2012 edition).
"007 Producer Fires Legal Salvo At MGM" in Variety (February 17, 1991): https://variety.com/1991/film/features/007-producer-fires-legal-salvo-at-mgm-99125807/

59 "When the Snow Melts: The Autobiography of Cubby Broccoli" by Albert Broccoli and Donald Zec (2012 edition).

60 "The predator: How an Italian thug looted MGM, brought Crédit lyonnais to its knees, and made the Pope cry" by David McLintick and Anne Faircloth in Fortune magazine (July 8, 1996); via CNN Money: https://money.cnn.com/magazines/fortune/fortune_archive/1996/07/08/214344/index.htm

61 "The predator: How an Italian thug looted MGM, brought Crédit lyonnais to its knees, and made the Pope cry" by David McLintick and Anne Faircloth in Fortune magazine (July 8, 1996); via CNN Money: https://money.cnn.com/magazines/fortune/fortune_archive/1996/07/08/214344/index.htm

62 "The predator: How an Italian thug looted MGM, brought Crédit lyonnais to its knees, and made the Pope cry" by David McLintick and Anne Faircloth in Fortune magazine (July 8, 1996); via CNN Money: https://money.cnn.com/magazines/fortune/fortune_archive/1996/07/08/214344/index.htm

63 "The predator: How an Italian thug looted MGM, brought Crédit lyonnais to its knees, and made the Pope cry" by David McLintick and Anne Faircloth in Fortune magazine (July 8, 1996); via CNN Money: https://money.cnn.com/magazines/fortune/fortune_archive/1996/07/08/214344/index.htm

64 "The predator: How an Italian thug looted MGM, brought Crédit lyonnais to its knees, and made the Pope cry" by David McLintick and Anne Faircloth in Fortune magazine (July 8, 1996); via CNN Money: https://money.cnn.com/magazines/fortune/fortune_archive/1996/07/08/214344/index.htm

65 "When the Snow Melts: The Autobiography of Cubby Broccoli" by Albert Broccoli and Donald Zec (2012 edition).
66 "When the Snow Melts: The Autobiography of Cubby Broccoli" by Albert Broccoli and Donald Zec (2012 edition).
67 "When the Snow Melts: The Autobiography of Cubby Broccoli" by Albert Broccoli and Donald Zec (2012 edition).
68 "The predator: How an Italian thug looted MGM, brought Crédit lyonnais to its knees, and made the Pope cry" by David McLintick and Anne Faircloth in Fortune magazine (July 8, 1996); via CNN Money: https://money.cnn.com/magazines/fortune/fortune_archive/1996/07/08/214344/index.htm
69 "The predator: How an Italian thug looted MGM, brought Crédit lyonnais to its knees, and made the Pope cry" by David McLintick and Anne Faircloth in Fortune magazine (July 8, 1996); via CNN Money: https://money.cnn.com/magazines/fortune/fortune_archive/1996/07/08/214344/index.htm
70 "The predator: How an Italian thug looted MGM, brought Crédit lyonnais to its knees, and made the Pope cry" by David McLintick and Anne Faircloth in Fortune magazine (July 8, 1996); via CNN Money: https://money.cnn.com/magazines/fortune/fortune_archive/1996/07/08/214344/index.htm
71 "The predator: How an Italian thug looted MGM, brought Crédit lyonnais to its knees, and made the Pope cry" by David McLintick and Anne Faircloth in Fortune magazine (July 8, 1996); via CNN Money: https://money.cnn.com/magazines/fortune/fortune_archive/1996/07/08/214344/index.htm
72 "The predator: How an Italian thug looted MGM, brought Crédit lyonnais to its knees, and made the Pope cry" by David McLintick and Anne Faircloth in Fortune magazine (July 8, 1996); via CNN Money: https://money.cnn.com/magazines/fortune/fortune_archive/1996/07/08/214344/index.htm
73 "The predator: How an Italian thug looted MGM, brought Crédit lyonnais to its knees, and made the Pope cry" by David McLintick and Anne Faircloth in Fortune magazine (July 8, 1996); via CNN Money: https://money.cnn.com/magazines/fortune/fortune_archive/1996/07/08/214344/index.htm
74 "The predator: How an Italian thug looted MGM, brought Crédit lyonnais to its knees, and made the Pope cry" by David McLintick and Anne Faircloth in Fortune magazine (July 8, 1996); via CNN Money: https://money.cnn.com/magazines/fortune/fortune_archive/1996/07/08/214344/index.htm
75 "The predator: How an Italian thug looted MGM, brought Crédit lyonnais to its knees, and made the Pope cry" by David McLintick and Anne Faircloth in Fortune magazine (July 8, 1996); via CNN Money: https://money.cnn.com/magazines/fortune/fortune_archive/1996/07/08/214344/index.htm
76 "The predator: How an Italian thug looted MGM, brought Crédit lyonnais to its knees, and made the Pope cry" by David McLintick and Anne Faircloth in Fortune magazine (July 8, 1996); via CNN Money: https://money.cnn.com/magazines/fortune/fortune_archive/1996/07/08/214344/index.htm
77 "The predator: How an Italian thug looted MGM, brought Crédit lyonnais to its knees, and made the Pope cry" by David McLintick and Anne Faircloth in Fortune magazine (July 8, 1996); via CNN Money: https://money.cnn.com/magazines/fortune/fortune_archive/1996/07/08/214344/index.htm
"Parretti Ousted At MGM-Pathe" by The New York Times (June 18, 1991).
78 "The predator: How an Italian thug looted MGM, brought Crédit lyonnais to its knees, and made the Pope cry" by David McLintick and Anne Faircloth in Fortune magazine (July 8, 1996); via CNN Money: https://money.cnn.com/magazines/fortune/fortune_archive/1996/07/08/214344/index.htm
79 "The predator: How an Italian thug looted MGM, brought Crédit lyonnais to its knees, and made the Pope cry" by David McLintick and Anne Faircloth in Fortune magazine (July 8, 1996); via CNN Money: https://money.cnn.com/magazines/fortune/fortune_archive/1996/07/08/214344/index.htm
80 "The predator: How an Italian thug looted MGM, brought Crédit lyonnais to its knees, and made the Pope cry" by David McLintick and Anne Faircloth in Fortune magazine (July 8, 1996); via CNN Money: https://money.cnn.com/magazines/fortune/fortune_archive/1996/07/08/214344/index.htm
"Parretti Ousted At MGM-Pathe" by The New York Times (June 18, 1991).
81 "Old Name New at MGM" in The New York Times (May 26, 1992).
82 "The predator: How an Italian thug looted MGM, brought Crédit lyonnais to its knees, and made the Pope cry" by David McLintick and Anne Faircloth in Fortune magazine (July 8, 1996); via CNN Money: https://money.cnn.com/magazines/fortune/fortune_archive/1996/07/08/214344/index.htm
83 "When the Snow Melts: The Autobiography of Cubby Broccoli" by Albert Broccoli and Donald Zec (2012 edition).
"Bond battle settled for MGM, Danjaq" by Judy Brennan in Variety (December 9, 1992): https://variety.com/1992/film/news/bond-battle-settled-for-mgm-danjaq-102019/
84 "When the Snow Melts: The Autobiography of Cubby Broccoli" by Albert Broccoli and Donald Zec (2012 edition).
85 "MGM: le Crédit Lyonnais décidé à maintenir la barre" by Jacques Hubert-Rodier in Les Echos (September 27, 1993): https://www.lesechos.fr/1993/09/mgm-le-credit-lyonnais-decide-a-maintenir-la-barre-912086
86 Interview by Richard Ashton on Her Majesty's Secret Servant: http://www.hmss.com/films/mgw/mgw95.html
87 "Bond set for 0017th" by Suzan Ayscough in Variety (May 13, 1993): https://variety.com/1993/film/news/bond-set-for-0017th-106787/
88 "Bond set for 0017th" by Suzan Ayscough in Variety (May 13, 1993): https://variety.com/1993/film/news/bond-set-for-0017th-106787/
89 "Danjaq on bond wagon with two script deals" by Suzan Ayscough in Variety (May 26, 1993): https://variety.com/1993/film/news/danjaq-on-bond-wagon-with-two-script-deals-107186/

90 "Danjaq on bond wagon with two script deals" by Suzan Ayscough in Variety (May 26, 1993): https://variety.com/1993/film/news/danjaq-on-bond-wagon-with-two-script-deals-107186/

91 "Danjaq on bond wagon with two script deals" by Suzan Ayscough in Variety (May 26, 1993): https://variety.com/1993/film/news/danjaq-on-bond-wagon-with-two-script-deals-107186/

92 For Michael France biography (and quotes), see for the sources:
"Michael France, screenwriter and Beach Theatre owner, dies" by Steve Persall in The Tampa Bay Times (April 14, 2013): https://www.tampabay.com/news/obituaries/michael-france-screenwriter-and-beach-theatre-owner-dies/2115065/
"Beach's indy icon going Hollywood" by Jonathan Abel in The St. Petersburg Times (April 12, 2007): http://www.sptimes.com/2007/04/12/Southpinellas/Beach_s_indy_icon_goi.shtml
"Flexing his writer's muscle" by Steve Persal in The St. Petersburg Times (June 20, 2003): http://www.sptimes.com/2003/06/20/Floridian/Flexing_his_writer_s_.shtml
"Countdown to 'Hulk': screenwriter Michael France's big, green vision" by Rob Worley in CBR (June 16, 2003): http://www.comicbookresources.com/news/newsitem.cgi?id=2345
"10 Questions: Mike France" by Stax in IGN (June 19, 2003): https://www.ign.com/articles/2003/06/19/10-questions-mike-france
"Mike France - How To Write A James Bond Movie" interview by John Cork in Ian Fleming Foundation's Goldeneye magazine (issue #5 with white cover, summer 1997).
"The James Bond Movie Encyclopedia" by Steven Jay Rubin (2020 Kindle edition).
Michael France's Wikipedia page.

93 "The James Bond Movie Encyclopedia" by Steven Jay Rubin (2020 Kindle edition).

94 "Nobody Does it Better" by Mark A. Altman and Edward Gross (2020).

95 "Nobody Does it Better" by Mark A. Altman and Edward Gross (2020).

96 "The James Bond Movie Encyclopedia" by Steven Jay Rubin (2020 Kindle edition).

97 (Sorry, I don't remember where I found this; neither the eventual exact quote).

98 "Nobody Does it Better" by Mark A. Altman and Edward Gross (2020).

99 "The James Bond Movie Encyclopedia" by Steven Jay Rubin (2020 Kindle edition).

100 "Nobody Does it Better" by Mark A. Altman and Edward Gross (2020).

101 "Mike France - How To Write A James Bond Movie" interview by John Cork in Ian Fleming Foundation's Goldeneye magazine (issue #5 with white cover, summer 1997).

102 "Mike France - How To Write A James Bond Movie" interview by John Cork in Ian Fleming Foundation's Goldeneye magazine (issue #5 with white cover, summer 1997).

103 "Mike France - How To Write A James Bond Movie" interview by John Cork in Ian Fleming Foundation's Goldeneye magazine (issue #5 with white cover, summer 1997).

104 "Mike France - How To Write A James Bond Movie" interview by John Cork in Ian Fleming Foundation's Goldeneye magazine (issue #5 with white cover, summer 1997).

105 "Mike France - How To Write A James Bond Movie" interview by John Cork in Ian Fleming Foundation's Goldeneye magazine (issue #5 with white cover, summer 1997).

106 "GoldenEye: the official movie souvenir magazine" (1995).

107 "Mike France - How To Write A James Bond Movie" interview by John Cork in Ian Fleming Foundation's Goldeneye magazine (issue #5 with white cover, summer 1997).

108 "Mike France - How To Write A James Bond Movie" interview by John Cork in Ian Fleming Foundation's Goldeneye magazine (issue #5 with white cover, summer 1997).

109 "Nobody Does it Better" by Mark A. Altman and Edward Gross (2020).

110 "Mike France - How To Write A James Bond Movie" interview by John Cork in Ian Fleming Foundation's Goldeneye magazine (issue #5 with white cover, summer 1997).

111 "Mike France - How To Write A James Bond Movie" interview by John Cork in Ian Fleming Foundation's Goldeneye magazine (issue #5 with white cover, summer 1997).

112 "Mike France - How To Write A James Bond Movie" interview by John Cork in Ian Fleming Foundation's Goldeneye magazine (issue #5 with white cover, summer 1997).

113 "Mike France - How To Write A James Bond Movie" interview by John Cork in Ian Fleming Foundation's Goldeneye magazine (issue #5 with white cover, summer 1997).

114 "Mike France - How To Write A James Bond Movie" interview by John Cork in Ian Fleming Foundation's Goldeneye magazine (issue #5 with white cover, summer 1997).

115 "Mike France - How To Write A James Bond Movie" interview by John Cork in Ian Fleming Foundation's Goldeneye magazine (issue #5 with white cover, summer 1997).

116 "Nobody Does it Better" by Mark A. Altman and Edward Gross (2020).

117 "Nobody Does it Better" by Mark A. Altman and Edward Gross (2020).

118 "Nobody Does it Better" by Mark A. Altman and Edward Gross (2020).

119 "The James Bond Movie Encyclopedia" by Steven Jay Rubin (2020 Kindle edition).

120 "Nobody Does it Better" by Mark A. Altman and Edward Gross (2020).

121 "The World Is Not Enough: A Companion" by Iain Johnstone (1999).

122 "Nobody Does it Better" by Mark A. Altman and Edward Gross (2020).
123 "10 Questions: Mike France" by Stax in IGN (June 19, 2003): https://www.ign.com/articles/2003/06/19/10-questions-mike-france
124 "The James Bond Archives" by Jamie Russell and Paul Duncan (2012).
125 "Nobody Does it Better" by Mark A. Altman and Edward Gross (2020).
126 "SpyMaster Interview #71 - Jeff Kleeman" on SpyHards podcast: https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=IUvYhZNbjZs
127 "Nobody Does it Better" by Mark A. Altman and Edward Gross (2020).
128 "SpyMaster Interview #71 - Jeff Kleeman" on SpyHards podcast: https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=IUvYhZNbjZs
129 "SpyMaster Interview #71 - Jeff Kleeman" on SpyHards podcast: https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=IUvYhZNbjZs
130 "SpyMaster Interview #71 - Jeff Kleeman" on SpyHards podcast: https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=IUvYhZNbjZs
131 "SpyMaster Interview #71 - Jeff Kleeman" on SpyHards podcast: https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=IUvYhZNbjZs
132 "SpyMaster Interview #71 - Jeff Kleeman" on SpyHards podcast: https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=IUvYhZNbjZs
133 "SpyMaster Interview #71 - Jeff Kleeman" on SpyHards podcast: https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=IUvYhZNbjZs
134 For Jeffrey Caine biography, see for the sources:
Jeffrey Caine's page on MBA literary & script agents: https://mbalit.co.uk/client/jeffrey-caine/
GoldenEye official website: http://mgmua.com/bond/bond_inv/bios.html
Jeffrey Caine's Wikipedia page.
135 "Some Kind of Hero: The Remarkable Story of the James Bond Films" by Matthew Field & Ajay Chowdhury (2015).
136 "Some Kind of Hero: The Remarkable Story of the James Bond Films" by Matthew Field & Ajay Chowdhury (2015).
137 "Jeffrey Caine Interview" on MI6-HQ website (October 16, 2007): https://www.mi6-hq.com/sections/articles/interview_jeffrey_caine?id=1692
138 "Goldeneye: In Conversation with Screenwriter Jeffrey Caine" YouTube video by Lives In The Pictures : https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=KYX1BKw4r3A
139 "Goldeneye: In Conversation with Screenwriter Jeffrey Caine" YouTube video by Lives In The Pictures : https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=KYX1BKw4r3A
140 "Jeffrey Caine Interview" on MI6-HQ website (October 16, 2007): https://www.mi6-hq.com/sections/articles/interview_jeffrey_caine?id=1692
141 "Goldeneye: In Conversation with Screenwriter Jeffrey Caine" YouTube video by Lives In The Pictures : https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=KYX1BKw4r3A
142 "Jeffrey Caine Interview" on MI6-HQ website (October 16, 2007): https://www.mi6-hq.com/sections/articles/interview_jeffrey_caine?id=1692
143 "Goldeneye: In Conversation with Screenwriter Jeffrey Caine" YouTube video by Lives In The Pictures : https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=KYX1BKw4r3A
144 "Goldeneye: In Conversation with Screenwriter Jeffrey Caine" YouTube video by Lives In The Pictures : https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=KYX1BKw4r3A
145 "Some Kind of Hero: The Remarkable Story of the James Bond Films" by Matthew Field & Ajay Chowdhury (2015).
146 "Nobody Does it Better" by Mark A. Altman and Edward Gross (2020).
147 Interview by Richard Ashton on Her Majesty's Secret Servant: http://www.hmss.com/films/mgw/mgw97.html
148 "Dalton bails out as Bond" by Dan Cox in Variety (April 12, 1994): https://variety.com/1994/film/news/dalton-bails-out-as-bond-120067/
149 "Dalton bails out as Bond" by Dan Cox in Variety (April 12, 1994): https://variety.com/1994/film/news/dalton-bails-out-as-bond-120067/
150 "SpyMaster Interview #71 - Jeff Kleeman" on SpyHards podcast: https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=IUvYhZNbjZs
151 "Timothy Dalton opens up about Penny Dreadful, leaving James Bond, and the demon in all of us", interview by Scott Meslow on The Week (2015): https://theweek.com/articles/447045/timothy-dalton-opens-about-penny-dreadful-leaving-james-bond-demon-all
152 "Jeffrey Caine Interview" on MI6-HQ website (October 16, 2007): https://www.mi6-hq.com/sections/articles/interview_jeffrey_caine?id=1692
153 "Goldeneye: In Conversation with Screenwriter Jeffrey Caine" YouTube video by Lives In The Pictures : https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=KYX1BKw4r3A
154 Official James Bond 007 Twitter account: https://x.com/007/status/1799411301111976041

"Billion dollar Bond!" by Greg Bechtloff on 007 Magazine: http://007magazine.co.uk/archive/billion_dollar_bond.htm

155 "Some Kind of Hero: The Remarkable Story of the James Bond Films" by Matthew Field & Ajay Chowdhury (2015).

156 "Some Kind of Hero: The Remarkable Story of the James Bond Films" by Matthew Field & Ajay Chowdhury (2015).

157 "Goldeneye: In Conversation with Screenwriter Jeffrey Caine" YouTube video by Lives In The Pictures : https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=KYX1BKw4r3A

158 "Lot #694 - GOLDENEYE (1995) - Philip Kohler Collection: Scripts, Storyboards, Production Paperwork and Crew Jacket" in Propstore Auction website: https://ukm.propstoreauction.com/lot-details/index/catalog/299/lot/80900

159 "SpyMaster Interview #10: Jeffrey Caine" on SpyHards podcast: https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=1SD07e5M2yQ

160 "Some Kind of Hero: The Remarkable Story of the James Bond Films" by Matthew Field & Ajay Chowdhury (2015).

161 "Nobody Does it Better" by Mark A. Altman and Edward Gross (2020).

162 "Goldeneye: In Conversation with Screenwriter Jeffrey Caine" YouTube video by Lives In The Pictures : https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=KYX1BKw4r3A

163 "Goldeneye: In Conversation with Screenwriter Jeffrey Caine" YouTube video by Lives In The Pictures : https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=KYX1BKw4r3A

164 "SpyMaster Interview #10: Jeffrey Caine" on SpyHards podcast: https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=1SD07e5M2yQ

165 "Goldeneye: In Conversation with Screenwriter Jeffrey Caine" YouTube video by Lives In The Pictures : https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=KYX1BKw4r3A

166 "Jeffrey Caine" on London Screenwriters' Festival website: https://www.londonscreenwritersfestival.com/speakers/jeffrey-caine

167 "Goldeneye: In Conversation with Screenwriter Jeffrey Caine" YouTube video by Lives In The Pictures : https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=KYX1BKw4r3A

168 "SpyMaster Interview #10: Jeffrey Caine" on SpyHards podcast: https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=1SD07e5M2yQ

169 "Goldeneye: In Conversation with Screenwriter Jeffrey Caine" YouTube video by Lives In The Pictures : https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=KYX1BKw4r3A

170 "Goldeneye: In Conversation with Screenwriter Jeffrey Caine" YouTube video by Lives In The Pictures : https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=KYX1BKw4r3A

171 "Jeffrey Caine Interview" on MI6-HQ website (October 16, 2007): https://www.mi6-hq.com/sections/articles/interview_jeffrey_caine?id=1692

172 For Kevin Wade biography, see for the sources:
Kevin Wade's Creative Artists Agency page: https://www.caa.com/entertainmenttalent/books/author/kevin-wade
Kevin Wade's Macmillan publisher page: https://us.macmillan.com/author/kevinwade Kevin Wade's Wikipedia page.

173 "Some Kind of Hero: The Remarkable Story of the James Bond Films" by Matthew Field & Ajay Chowdhury (2015).
"SpyMaster Interview #71 - Jeff Kleeman" on SpyHards podcast: https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=IUvYhZNbjZs
"The road to GoldenEye" by John Cork in Ian Fleming Foundation's Goldeneye magazine (issue #4, spring 1996).

174 "The Complete James Bond Movie Encyclopedia" by Steven Jay Rubin (2003 edition).

175 "The Complete James Bond Movie Encyclopedia" by Steven Jay Rubin (2003 edition).

176 "The Complete James Bond Movie Encyclopedia" by Steven Jay Rubin (2003 edition).

177 "The Complete James Bond Movie Encyclopedia" by Steven Jay Rubin (2003 edition).

178 "Some Kind of Hero: The Remarkable Story of the James Bond Films" by Matthew Field & Ajay Chowdhury (2015).

179 "The Complete James Bond Movie Encyclopedia" by Steven Jay Rubin (2003 edition).

180 "The Complete James Bond Movie Encyclopedia" by Steven Jay Rubin (2003 edition).

181 "Some Kind of Hero: The Remarkable Story of the James Bond Films" by Matthew Field & Ajay Chowdhury (2015).

182 "The Complete James Bond Movie Encyclopedia" by Steven Jay Rubin (2003 edition).
"Some Kind of Hero: The Remarkable Story of the James Bond Films" by Matthew Field & Ajay Chowdhury (2015).

183 "Nobody Does it Better" by Mark A. Altman and Edward Gross (2020).

184 "His Word is Bond: An Interview With 007 Screenwriter Bruce Feirstein" by Kerry Douglas Dye on LeisureSuit.net : http://leisuresuit.net/Webzine/articles/bruce_feirstein.shtml

185 For Bruce Feirstein biography, see for the sources:

"Alums Elected to Board of Overseers" by Jessica Ullian on BU Today: http://www.bu.edu/today/campus-life/2008/05/05/alums-elected-board-overseers
"Real Man' Limns Singles Life" by Barbara Lovenheim in The New York Times (October 5, 1986): https://www.nytimes.com/1986/10/05/nyregion/real-man-limns-singles-life.html
The World Is Not Enough official website: http://www.jamesbond.com/bond19/prod_notes/crew_feirstein.html
Bruce Feirstein's website: http://brucefeirstein.com/bio.html
Bruce Feirstein's Wikipedia page.

186 "Nobody Does it Better" by Mark A. Altman and Edward Gross (2020).
187 "The World Is Not Enough scribe Bruce Feirstein discusses the process for keeping bond, his new nemesis and the girls fresh for the new millennium" by Anthony C. Ferrante on eonmag.com (November 5, 1999): http://www.eonmag.com/archive/9911/features/big_picture/bond_screenwriter_2/features_frameset.htm
188 "Nobody Does it Better" by Mark A. Altman and Edward Gross (2020).
189 "The World Is Not Enough scribe Bruce Feirstein discusses the process for keeping bond, his new nemesis and the girls fresh for the new millennium" by Anthony C. Ferrante on eonmag.com (November 5, 1999): http://www.eonmag.com/archive/9911/features/big_picture/bond_screenwriter_2/features_frameset.htm
190 "Bruce Feirstein Interview" on Everything or Nothing videogame website: http://www.ea.com/official/007/everythingornothing/us/featuredstories.jsp?featuredstoriesID=feature10
191 "Some Kind of Hero: The Remarkable Story of the James Bond Films" by Matthew Field & Ajay Chowdhury (2015).
192 "Nobody Does it Better" by Mark A. Altman and Edward Gross (2020).
193 "Nobody Does it Better" by Mark A. Altman and Edward Gross (2020).
194 "Nobody Does it Better" by Mark A. Altman and Edward Gross (2020).
195 Bruce Feirstein interview by John Cork in Ian Fleming Foundation's Goldeneye magazine (issue #5 - in reality #6 - with black cover, summer 1997).
196 "Nobody Does it Better" by Mark A. Altman and Edward Gross (2020).
197 "The World Is Not Enough scribe Bruce Feirstein discusses the process for keeping bond, his new nemesis and the girls fresh for the new millennium" by Anthony C. Ferrante on eonmag.com (November 5, 1999): http://www.eonmag.com/archive/9911/features/big_picture/bond_screenwriter_2/features_frameset.htm
198 "How to rewrite a James Bond movie" interview in Ian Fleming Foundation's Goldeneye magazine (issue #4, spring 1996).
199 "Nobody Does it Better" by Mark A. Altman and Edward Gross (2020).
200 "Nobody Does it Better" by Mark A. Altman and Edward Gross (2020).
201 "SpyMaster Interview #71 - Jeff Kleeman" on SpyHards podcast: https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=IUvYhZNbjZs
202 "Nobody Does it Better" by Mark A. Altman and Edward Gross (2020).
203 "The Many Lives of James Bond" by Mark Edlitz (2019).
204 "The road to GoldenEye" by John Cork in Ian Fleming Foundation's Goldeneye magazine (issue #4, spring 1996).
205 "The road to GoldenEye" by John Cork in Ian Fleming Foundation's Goldeneye magazine (issue #4, spring 1996).
206 "His Word is Bond: An Interview With 007 Screenwriter Bruce Feirstein" by Kerry Douglas Dye on LeisureSuit.net : http://leisuresuit.net/Webzine/articles/bruce_feirstein.shtml
207 "Hollywood and the CIA Cinema, Defense and Subversion" by Oliver Boyd Barrett, David Herrera and James Baumann (2011); via Wikipedia.
208 "Bruce Feirstein Interview" on Everything or Nothing videogame website: http://www.ea.com/official/007/everythingornothing/us/featuredstories.jsp?featuredstoriesID=feature10
209 "Nobody Does it Better" by Mark A. Altman and Edward Gross (2020).
210 "Nobody Does it Better" by Mark A. Altman and Edward Gross (2020).
211 "The Many Lives of James Bond" by Mark Edlitz (2019).
212 "Nobody Does it Better" by Mark A. Altman and Edward Gross (2020).
213 "Nobody Does it Better" by Mark A. Altman and Edward Gross (2020).
214 Bruce Feirstein interview by John Cork in Ian Fleming Foundation's Goldeneye magazine (issue #5 - in reality #6 - with black cover, summer 1997).
215 "Screenwriting Punishment with Michael France" interview by Reg Seeton and Dayna Van Buskirk for UnderGroundOnline: http://screenwriting.ugo.com/interviews/michaelfrance_interview.php
216 "For Your Eyes Only: Behind the scenes of the James Bond films" by David Giammarco (2002).
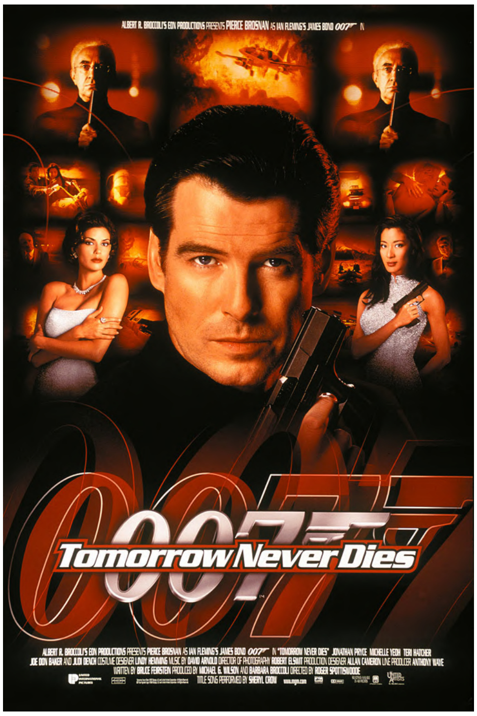
217 "Jeffrey Caine Interview" on MI6-HQ website (October 16, 2007): https://www.mi6-hq.com/sections/articles/interview_jeffrey_caine?id=1692
218 "SpyMaster Interview #71 - Jeff Kleeman" on SpyHards podcast: https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=IUvYhZNbjZs

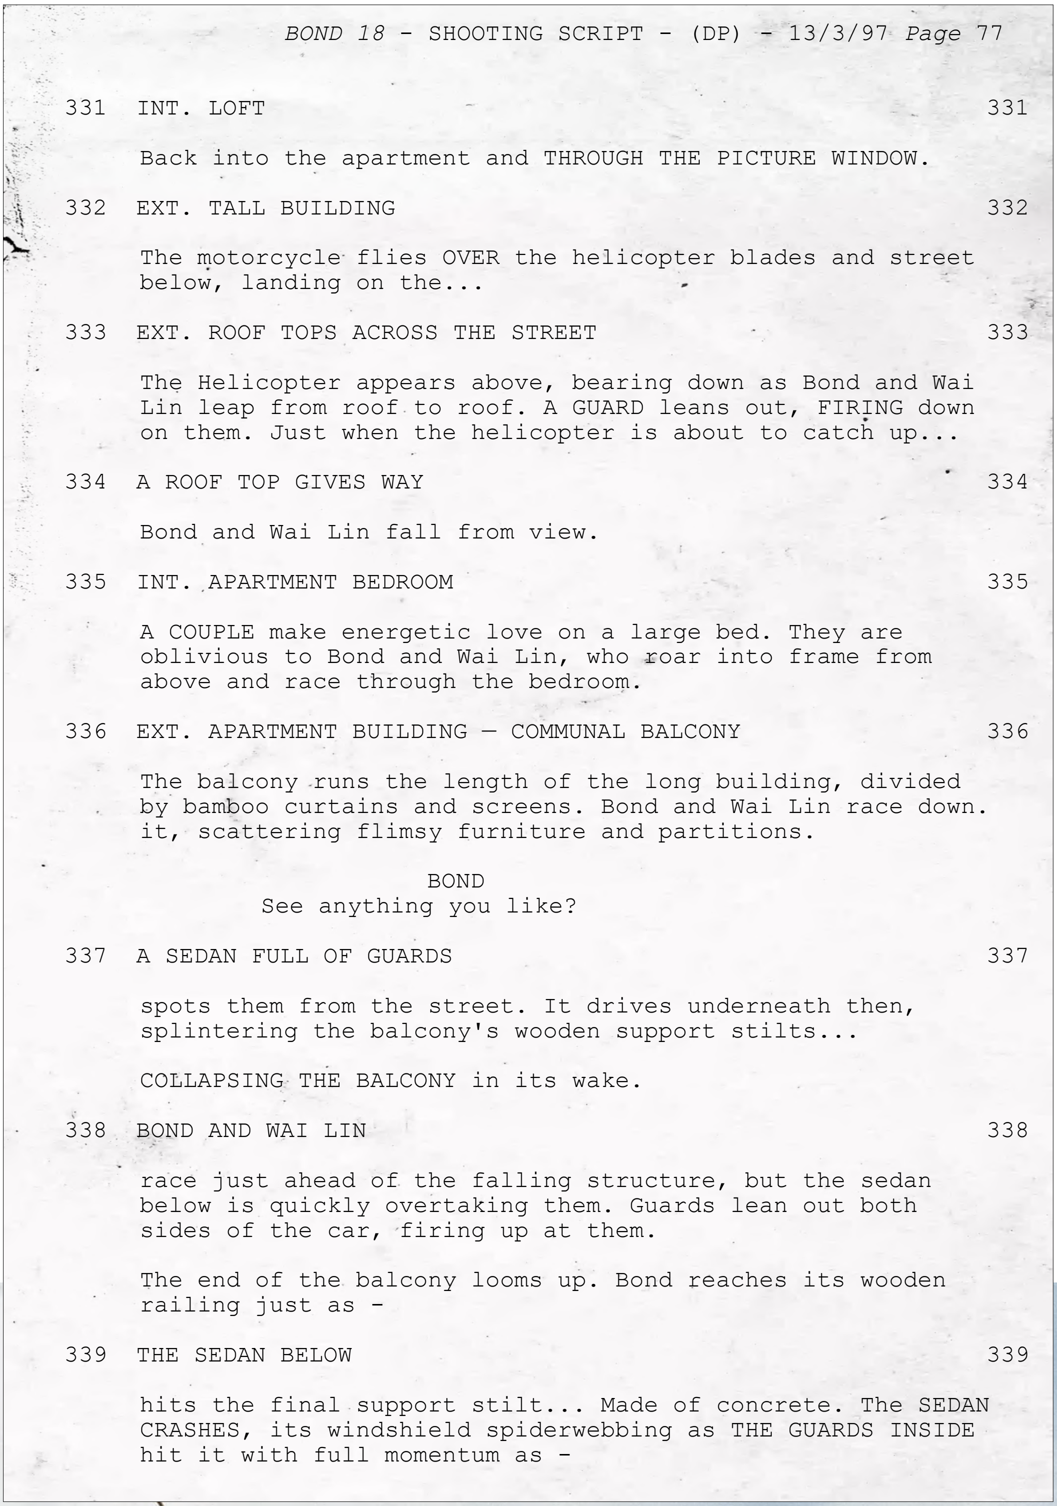
CHAPTER 18



Release date (premiere) :
9 December 1997

Writing credit as per title sequence:
"Written by Bruce Feirstein"

Director :...................Roger Spottiswoode
Producers :...............Michael Wilson and Barbara Broccoli
Director photography :......Robert Elswit
Set Designer :.....................Allan Cameron
Composer :...........................David Arnold
Editors :..............M. Arcand and D. Fortin
Title sequence :.............Daniel Kleinman
Title song vocals :.................Sheryl Crow



BOND 18 - SHOOTING SCRIPT - (DP) - 13/3/97 Page 77

331 INT. LOFT 331

Back into the apartment and THROUGH THE PICTURE WINDOW.

332 EXT. TALL BUILDING 332

The motorcycle flies OVER the helicopter blades and street below, landing on the...

333 EXT. ROOF TOPS ACROSS THE STREET 333

The Helicopter appears above, bearing down as Bond and Wai Lin leap from roof to roof. A GUARD leans out, FIRING down on them. Just when the helicopter is about to catch up...

334 A ROOF TOP GIVES WAY 334

Bond and Wai Lin fall from view.

335 INT. APARTMENT BEDROOM 335

A COUPLE make energetic love on a large bed. They are oblivious to Bond and Wai Lin, who roar into frame from above and race through the bedroom.

336 EXT. APARTMENT BUILDING — COMMUNAL BALCONY 336

The balcony runs the length of the long building, divided by bamboo curtains and screens. Bond and Wai Lin race down. it, scattering flimsy furniture and partitions.

BOND
See anything you like?

337 A SEDAN FULL OF GUARDS 337

spots them from the street. It drives underneath then, splintering the balcony's wooden support stilts...

COLLAPSING THE BALCONY in its wake.

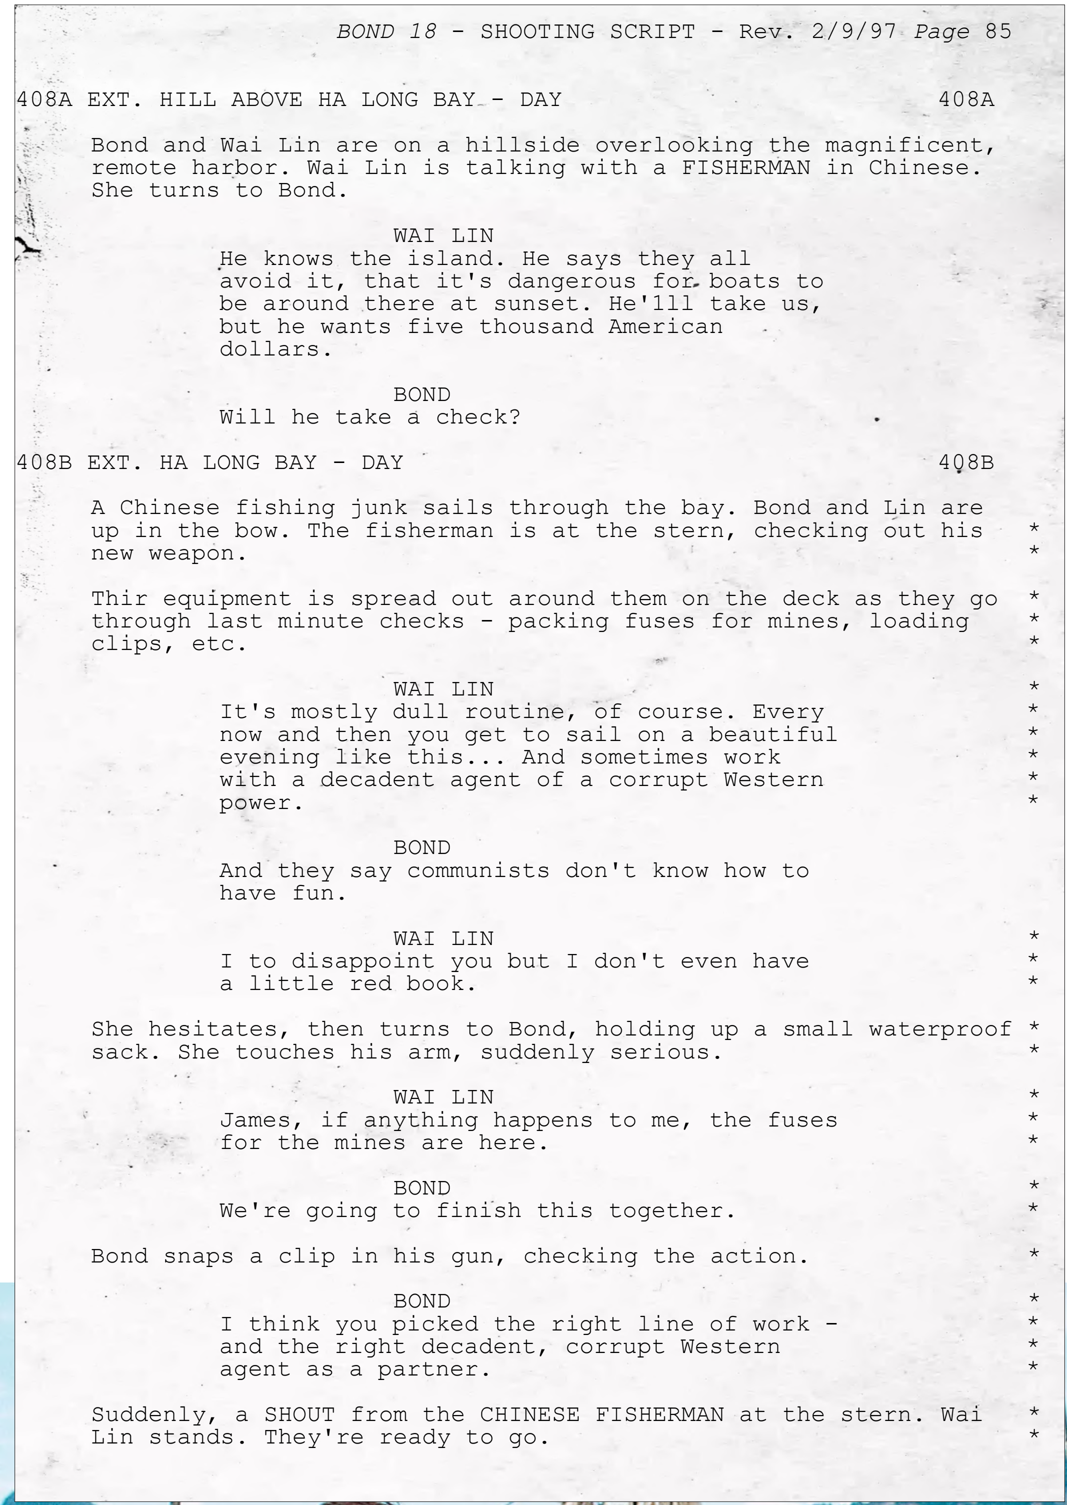
338 BOND AND WAI LIN 338

race just ahead of the falling structure, but the sedan below is quickly overtaking them. Guards lean out both sides of the car, firing up at them.

The end of the balcony looms up. Bond reaches its wooden railing just as -

339 THE SEDAN BELOW 339

hits the final support stilt... Made of concrete. The SEDAN CRASHES, its windshield spiderwebbing as THE GUARDS INSIDE hit it with full momentum as -



BOND 18 - SHOOTING SCRIPT - Rev. 2/9/97 Page 85

408A EXT. HILL ABOVE HA LONG BAY - DAY 408A

Bond and Wai Lin are on a hillside overlooking the magnificent, remote harbor. Wai Lin is talking with a FISHERMAN in Chinese. She turns to Bond.

WAI LIN
He knows the island. He says they all avoid it, that it's dangerous for boats to be around there at sunset. He'lll take us, but he wants five thousand American dollars.

BOND
Will he take a check?

408B EXT. HA LONG BAY - DAY 408B

A Chinese fishing junk sails through the bay. Bond and Lin are up in the bow. The fisherman is at the stern, checking out his new weapon.

Thir equipment is spread out around them on the deck as they go through last minute checks - packing fuses for mines, loading clips, etc.

WAI LIN
It's mostly dull routine, of course. Every now and then you get to sail on a beautiful evening like this... And sometimes work with a decadent agent of a corrupt Western power.

BOND
And they say communists don't know how to have fun.

WAI LIN
I to disappoint you but I don't even have a little red book.

She hesitates, then turns to Bond, holding up a small waterproof sack. She touches his arm, suddenly serious.

WAI LIN
James, if anything happens to me, the fuses for the mines are here.

BOND
We're going to finish this together.

Bond snaps a clip in his gun, checking the action.

BOND
I think you picked the right line of work - and the right decadent, corrupt Western agent as a partner.

Suddenly, a SHOUT from the CHINESE FISHERMAN at the stern. Wai Lin stands. They're ready to go.

Cast:

James Bond :	Pierce Brosnan
Elliot Carver :	Jonathan Pryce
Wai Lin :	Michelle Yeoh
Stamper :	Götz Otto
Paris Carver :	Teri Hatcher
Henry Gupta :	Ricky Jay
Jack Wade :	Joe Don Baker
Dr. Kaufman :	Vincent Schiavelli
M :	Judi Dench
Charles Robinson :	Colin Salmon
Moneypenny :	Samantha Bond
Q :	Desmond Llewelyn

Main filming locations: Thailand, Germany, France, Mexico and UK.

James Bond performs action scenes like an American hero in this film and we can fortunately count on the members of the technical crew to make them all successful and spectacular, as well as David Arnold score who proves to be a worthy successor to Barry. Apart from that, the idea of an evil media mogul is brilliant and seems to be a timeless theme that is still relevant in this internet age of endless clickbait titles. Carver is certainly a bit cliché but that's part of the fun in a film not devoid of fun and humor. The female gender is one of the film's strong points with Wai Lin who finds herself a true female equivalent of Bond, strong, capable and independent. Paris, despite her short role, offers an interesting side by being an ex of our agent and a sacrificial lamb.

TOMORROW NEVER DIES

Table of contents

Tomorrow Never Dies

Reunion with Death with Richard Smith....1256
The contribution of John Cork....1263
Enter Donald Westlake: hacker, bordering on incest and satellite....1267
Meet Gideon Goodbread....1270
September 1995 (?): soliton, Australian desert, children and Hong Kong 97....1273
October 1995: Dracula, Frey, nuclear detonator and barge....1282
Titles considered by Westlake....1286
Fall of Westlake and Fall of the City....1287
Enter Bruce Feirstein....1293
August 23, 1996' script....1296
Revisions: Martian rock and personal demons....1322
Writing summit....1324
Waltz of the screenwriters....1329
March 13' shooting script: forklifts, weird Stamper, fight on the hull....1334
Feirstein against the clock....1346
Final shooting script: Robinson, cards throwing and Saigon....1348
Novelization....1356
Releasing your film and being accused of plagiarism....1358

Reunion with Death with Richard Smith

Remember: while Michael France was announced in 1993 as the screenwriter of Bond 17; Richard Smith and John Cork were announced at the same time as the screenwriters of the next Bond films[1]. So what did they produced? Let's start with Smith first.

Richard Burges Smith[2] was born in 1962 in the United States. He studied at Wesleyan University and then studied film at the University of Southern California.

He later engaged into screenwriting and contributed to Lock Up (1989), featuring Sylvester Stallone.

After giving up screenwriting shortly after his stint in the James Bond saga, he moved to San Francisco. He has many interests including tennis, sailing, surfing, skiing, aviation and music.

He then produces/designs media for trade shows and museum installations, or clients such as Google or Cisco Systems. In 2009 he published a novel: Freezer Burn.

Richard Smith died of non-Hodgkin's lymphoma in 2011. He was 48 years old.

Little is known about the screenwriter's participation, except that on December 14, 1993 he delivered a 37-page treatment entitled Reunion with Death.

The Trump Tower.

This Smith's storyline begins with a pre-title sequence set in a Trump Tower-style skyscraper in Manhattan. A double agent (Jacques Detroit) is inside it, accompanied by his girlfriend. Behind a window, Bond suspended in the air by a wire (a difficult one to see for the audience), appears and shoots through the glass, enters, and kills the double agent. "That's for 006", and since guards approach, 007 has to escape by jumping out a window before deploying a parachute.

He ends up landing at a nearby house where a party with lawyers is taking place, where a young woman (Veronica) is bored. She looks up and sees Bond landing, goes to him and wants to know who he is: "Bond. James Bond", he replies as he removes his parachute.

After a credits sequence, Bond arrives at MI6 HQ (Universal Exports) in rainy weather driving a Land Rover Defender which he skids to park in a very narrow parking space (a bit like Jackie Chan in the 1985 film Police Story 1). He flirts with (Loelia) Ponsonby and since he apparently doesn't want to deal with the paperwork, he goes to the shooting range.

Here, M asks Bond to accompany him to visit one of his friends, Sir Robert Grey, an industrialist: it is a question of national security. It turns out that Grey is the CEO of Carrington-Grey, which produces advanced technology. The company is in difficulty due to an accident at a factory in Malaysia that resulted in thousands of deaths. To avoid the bankruptcy that looming, the company must sell its Research & Development division (which mainly deals with superconductors) to a Japanese company named Asahi International.

When Bond and M meet Grey in a glass and steel complex outside of London, the man begins to expound what is written above. But before he can explain further why this is a matter of national security, an aide comes to say him that he has a phone call.

While Grey goes to answer the phone, Bond and M are walking onto a terrace and 007 notices that the smoke emanating from his boss's pipe reveals the beam of a laser that is aimed at the building. Bond then tries to protect M while a guided missile hits the building: Grey is killed, M is seriously injured and has to be hospitalized.

Back at MI6, 007 learns that an organization called the Malay Liberation Front claims responsibility for the attack on the building (in response to the accident at the factory in Malaysia), but Bond doesn't believe it. He asks M's temporary replacement (a certain Curtis Brown-Knoss) for permission to go to Italy to investigate the missile. Indeed, Bond explains that the orange color of the laser is typical of the Americans (only they use this color) and that 3 missiles were stolen from an American air base located in Rome.

In Italy Bond meets his local MI6 contact, a man named Enzo Martini, who believes that a certain Dante is responsible for the theft of the missile. Bond follows Dante, infiltrates his apartment where he finds photos of Grey's assassination hidden between the pages of a book. As he discovers them, Dante's girlfriend, Grazia Bellochio, enters the apartment with groceries. 007 pretends to be a friend of Dante's and seduces her by telling her that Dante doesn't pay enough attention to her or things like that. Grazia tells him that Dante is attending an opera performance and Bond ends up in bed with her.

A little later when 007 returns to Enzo who asks him what he was doing for the last two hours, Bond replies that he was studying a foreign language.

Bond and Enzo go to the Caracalla thermal baths where the opera is taking place (it's Verdi). It turns out that this is the place where Dante will receive his payment for Grey's assassination, from a muscular Chinese man named Ng. However Ng kills Dante; Bond and Enzo chase Ng through the ruins against the backdrop of opera music, but Ng kills Enzo during the chase. Bond finds his body but loses track of the Chinese man.

Back in London, Bond tries to identify the Chinese in MI6 databases: no result. Brown-Knoss wants to close the investigation because Grey's killer has been identified and is dead.

007 speaks to M (who is in an oxygen tent) and tells him that he will continue the investigation unofficially.

Bond then goes to meet the person who inherited Grey's industrial empire: Byron Banning. 007 finds him nervous, and after shaking him a bit, it turns out that Banning has a note signed "Dragon" that the company received. This note says that whoever will shows up at the annual party of Asahi by wearing a chrysanthemum, will learn who is behind everything. Bond wants to pose as the person who will represent Carrington-Grey during negotiations for the sale of the Research & Development division to Asahi; he threatens Banning to tell Scotland Yard that he hid the note from them if he does not cooperate.

007 goes to Tokyo; a member of airport customs brings him to a room where he is greeted by Ryuichi Tanaka (Tiger Tanaka's son), who is the head of the Japanese secret service. After exchanging secret phrases to identify each other (the same as in From Russia with Love), Ryuichi gives to Bond some information about the CEO of Asahi: Yasuhiro Nakasone (who also happens to be the chief of the Yakuza).

A man send by Nakasone, Ohtsu, comes to pick up Bond in a limousine to take him to the building of Asahi. It's cherry blossom season in Tokyo and Ohtsu explains to Bond on the road that the cherry blossom are an ancient symbol of purity and evanescence that emerged during World War II as a symbol for the kamikazes pilots; Ohtsu begins to recite a haiku from one of these pilots which Bond finishes.

Bond arrives at the Asahi's annual reception described as a combination of modern and traditional Japanese culture including geishas, sumos and guards disguised as samurai. 007 meets with Nakasone's lawyer who is eager to sign the sale right away but Bond refuses unless he meets Nakasone in person.

While waiting for Nakasone to arrive at reception, Bond wanders around the room trying to find out who the mysterious "Dragon" is, and spots a yakuza who has a dragon tattoo; Bond confronts him in an arm wrestling match but loses. Bond then refers to dragons orally but no one seems to know what he is talking about. When asked his name, Bond reply that he is St. George (probably in reference to the legend of Saint George and the Dragon). He didn't make any progress and still ignore who is the mysterious "Dragon".

Finally Yasuhiro Nakasone enters with his wife Michiko. Bond introduces himself to her (which annoys Nakasone) and still refuses to sign the contract. Nakasone doesn't wanting to conduct negotiations during the reception, he invites Bond to join him this weekend at his property located in the Japanese Alps.

Bond leaves the reception and goes to his hotel where an employee tells him that he received a message from his mother and that he can call her at 8:00 (this actually indicates where he will meet Tanaka). 007 enters his room and quickly discovers that he is being monitored by Nakasone via fiber optic cameras. Using the steam that the hot water produce in the bathroom to create a sort of fog, Bond takes out a laptop and types "Tracy" when asked for a password. The password doesn't work and he tries others until he finds the right one ("Please"), which opens a panel at the back of the computer from which he extracts the parts of his Walther PPK before assembling them. Bond leaves through a window, enters the next room, where he knocks out a man assigned to his surveillance before tying him up and gagging him.

Bond then meet in a karaoke bar named Mother's Ryuichi Tanaka and his sister, Keiko, who is an agent. Ryuichi immediately tells Bond to not to flirt with her (which won't stop him from doing so) before telling him about Michiko: she studied at Cambridge, she had a good career before meeting Nakasone, once married she has become more of a submissive woman.

After meeting Ryuichi and Keiko, Bond walks through the city center and notices that he is being followed; he decides to start chasing his tail and a chase begins across the city which ends with Bond killing the tail in a thermal bathing place, suffocating him with a towel.

Bond ends up going to the (medieval style) castle of Yasuhiro Nakasone located in the Japanese Alps to meet the latter and take the opportunity to investigate.

Nakasone is isn't there presently so Bond hangs out near the castle and finds some sort of museum dedicated to samurais with swords and armor. He also stumble on Michiko practicing karate. Bond speaks to her in Japanese (she becomes interested in who he is), they also discuss Cambridge where Bond says he also studied. Nakasone finally arrives by helicopter and Michiko asks Bond to leave because she doesn't want her husband to see them together.

Nakasone enters the room and immediately knows that someone was there (he sniffs the air) and questions Michiko who tells him that there was no one. Nakasone kisses her (Smith writes that she is cold towards him and that Nakasone is impotent with Michiko).

Later they have a dinner with Bond during which Nakasone wants to negotiate the terms of the sale, but he is annoyed to see that Bond continues to talk to his wife. She makes sure that her husband eats first because in Japan men come first (Smith writes that the double meaning is on Nakasone; with regard to his impotence he indeed "comes" first).

While they are eating, Nakasone serves fugu fish (which one can die of poisoning with if not prepared/cooked properly) to see if his guest is brave. Bond eats it and survives; Nakasone and Michiko are impressed. Negotiations may continue with Nakasone seemingly desperate to acquire the Carrington-Grey's division. Finally Bond indicates a large sum which Nakasone agrees to pay.

Later in the evening Bond is in his room when Michiko comes to join him; they end up kissing. Bond doesn't know it (but Michiko knows): they are being watched. She gives 007 a credit card that contains evidence showing Nakasone is responsible for Grey's death; 007 realizes that Michiko is the mysterious "Dragon" and asks her why she is betraying her husband. It turns out that Nakasone killed her father and she wants to destroy him. Nakasone bursts into the room, asks Bond to sign the contract and leave. Bond leaves, gets into a helicopter: when we think him out of danger, the pilot turns around and is revealed to be Ng. Ng presses a button and the gas that diffuses in makes Bond lose consciousness.

When he regains consciousness, Bond is tied to a chair and Nakasone begins to question him about his presence in Rome and the identity of his employer. 007 doesn't give information and Nakasone says Ng is a sadist and also a eunuch; then Ng breaks two of Bond's fingers like Tee-Hee in the novel Live and Let Die.

Michiko knocks out a henchman of her husband, sets off an alarm and helps Bond escape. They apply bandages to his fingers and she gives him access to boats located under the castle. 007 flees alone in a boat; Nakasone orders his men (as well as the police officers in his payroll) to chase him with other boats and a helicopter. During the chase, 007 tries to avoid police road(water)blocks and his vehicle ends up crashing in the Seagaia Ocean Dome where he manages to blend with the crowd and disappear.

A few years later the Seagaia Ocean Dome would be considered for the Graves' lair in Die Another Day. Purvis and Wade, however, remember hearing about it in the newspapers and not in Smith's script.

Back in Tokyo, Bond meets Keiko and Ryuichi Tanaka in a sort of HQ located at the back of a public bathhouse. They look at the contents of the credit card on which there are photographs of the assassination of Sir Robert Grey. Bond also learns that Michiko's father, Ozawa, was the CEO of a chemical company that went bankrupt after a series of accidents (the company was then absorbed by Nakasone) and he committed suicide.

Bond goes to investigate at the building of Asahi and discovers in Nakasone's acquisitions a seafood company that stands out from the rest. 007 manages to leave the building before being caught by security but was recorded (along with Tanaka waiting in the car) on surveillance cameras.

Bond and Tanaka return to the Japanese secret service HQ and find the bodies of Tanaka's men. They then go to a hideout where they find others agents who are still alive, including Keiko.

Bond decides to go to Yasuhiro Nakasone's fish processing factory. He infiltrates there, cracks the code of the vault with his gadgets and finds a laboratory in which there are superconductors of Carrington-Grey. While he is there, Nakasone arrives. Bond is chased into the factory and kills some of Nakasone's men (he notably spears one with a swordfish, gets rid of the yakuza with the dragon tattoo in a fish chopping machine).

Bond ends up being cornered and captured; they bring him to the laboratory where the superconductors are located. Nakasone brings Michiko with him and asks 007 for the identity of the person who helped him to escape from the castle (he suspects Michiko) and who he works for. Nakasone begins to threaten him with a "railgun" with which he do a demonstration (by shooting at a coin located behind a thick steel plate).

Finally Tanaka intervenes with his men and a shootout breaks out including Bond who uses the railgun; Nakasone's men disperse throughout the factory. Bond, Tanaka and Michiko flee by car into an industrial zone; they leave the car and run to a Buddhist temple.

At this point Tanaka is injured and they decide to hide under the floor of the temple, the monks help them to hide. Nakasone's men (including Ng) search the place. Before they are discovered: Bond, Tanaka and Michiko run outside and Ryuichi Tanaka sacrifices himself so that the other two can escape because, in any case, there is little chance that he will escape with his injury. He gets killed.

Bond and Michiko jump into a car driven by what appears to be one of Tanaka's men named Watanabe. Bond is suspicious of Watanabe and tries a secret phrase intended to identify themself (like "do you have a match?"). Watanabe gives him the wrong answer and Bond then knows it's a Nakasone's man; they fight in the car (and also to control the car). The car passes over a residential area hill with rice paper walled houses; the car obviously passes through various dwellings (a reference to Police Story 1?).

Later, Bond propel the car onto a moving freight train that carrying cars; 007 lands perfectly in the single empty space between the other cars in a train car. Ng, who was chasing them in a helicopter, ended up crashing into power lines (but survives as we see the helicopter swinging into the lines in which it is tangled).

007 and Michiko goes take refuge in the British embassy in Tokyo. 007 speaks to Brown-Knoss on the phone and learns that the contract with Asahi is obsolete and that the Japanese police will arrest Nakasone. A little later while on the phone with M, Ng disguised as a geisha woman infiltrates the embassy and kills Michiko. When 007 returns to his room, he finds her dying.

007 returns to London and speaks to M who is obviously in quite good shape since he has returned to his duties. Bond wants to return to Nakasone's castle but M officially refuses. However, since Bond seems to want to go no matter what, M wishes him good luck. Bond returns to Japan, turns to Keiko who helps him infiltrate the castle with a hang glider. 007 knocks out guards and plants C-4 explosives everywhere.

Nakasone hears an alarm announcing an intruder and goes to a room where the surveillance camera monitors are located. It turns out that Bond was sitting in a chair in this room, waiting for him. 007 turns around in the chair and presses the detonator he holds in his hand; on the surveillance screens we see the different sections of the castle explode.

Nakasone tells him that he doesn't care: with all the money he has he will build/buy other castles. Bond tells him yes: provided he survives. Ng arrives and tries to kill 007; Bond shoots him and leaves him for dead (obviously unaware that he is wearing a bulletproof vest) and chases Nakasone into the burning castle. Nakasone is at the kind of museum where he dressed in samurai armor and took a sword (a reference to the novel You Only Live Twice where Bond faces a Blofeld dressed in samurai armor?). Nakasone attacks Bond who then grabs a halberd and a shield; the fight moves to the parapet of the castle. Bond finds a kimono and throws it at Nakasone; the latter finds himself tangled in it as the fire spreads across the kimono. Yasuhiro Nakasone in flames ends up falling from the parapet to his death.

Ng arrives, Bond ans him fight with their bare hands, Ng almost manages to strangle 007. Ng grabs a cannonball to finish Bond, who makes him trip, and Ng drops the cannonball which falls on his own head: this time he is really dead. "That's overcompensating a bit", 007 said before triggering the remaining C-4 and rappelling down the side of the castle to escape.

As an epilogue, Bond and Keiko visit the graves of Michiko and Tanaka in a cemetery. Bond recites a piece of poem by Takijirō Ōnishi (Japanese admiral during the Second World War, notably known as the "father" of kamikazes; you can note that in the novel You Only Live Twice it is said that Tanaka notably served as an aide to Admiral Ōnishi and was trained to be a kamikazes). "Today in flower, tomorrow scattered by the wind". As cherry blossoms fall, Bond and Keiko ride off into the sunset.

Apart from the fact that in a previous version, Grey met Bond and M at his villa on Lake Como (who ended up exploded), what Richard Smith wrote before or possibly after this treatment is unknown to me.

The contribution of John Cork

John Cork[3] was born in Alabama where he grew up. The first movie he remembers seeing was From Russia with Love. Later, at the age of 11, he became a Bond fan thanks to the release of Live and Let Die. He is now reading the novels of Ian Fleming. "Bond made me want to understand the art of writing and the art of filmmaking. It made me want to make movies. After seeing Live and Let Die I knew I wanted to do something creative with film".

He studied a little in England and in the 80s, Cork entered the University of Southern California School of Cinema-Television and has lived in California ever since. During his stay at university, he wrote a script which was made into a film: The Long Walk Home (1990). "That got me an agent and a number of writing assignments".

In July 1992, John Cork formed the Ian Fleming Foundation, dedicated to studying and preserving Fleming's work. One of the foundation's objectives is to acquire, restore, preserve, and archive objects related to James Bond.

"I'm no longer on the board [of the Foundation], but one of the things that we decided we were going to do was create an American-based fan magazine where we could publish articles that could involve a certain level of research. We called it Goldeneye after Fleming's Jamaican residence. This was before the film of the same name", Cork recalls. Seven numbers of Goldeneye will be published from 1992 to 1997.

During pre-production of the film GoldenEye in early 1993, Cork was invited by EON to work on the treatment of a future Bond film, but failed to produce a story that met the satisfaction of the producers.

Shortly after this, Cork met the Bond's fan Lee Pfeiffer who was on a project with MGM, to produce bonus material for the laserdisc editions of Goldfinger and Thunderball. Cork joined Pfeiffer and worked with him on these editions and the one of GoldenEye.

Cork returned to writing non-Bond scripts which would not be produced and was then invited by MGM and EON to design the bonus features/documentaries for the new DVD editions of James Bond. It's a dream position for the fan in him: it grant him access to the archives of EON, Ian Fleming Publication and MGM/UA; it's also an opportunity to "talk to people I had admired all my life".

"I decided that I got a great deal of creative satisfaction in working on documentaries, and really left screenwriting behind". He later founded his own company, Cloverland, through which he will produce DVD/Blu-ray bonus features for non-Bond films as well as documentaries.

Cork also wrote books. In the early 2000s, thinking that documentaries made for the DVD could be somehow adapted into books, he approached EON. If they are not up for this type of book, they still want to commission him to write one which would tell how current events and popular culture influenced Bond and vice versa. So in 2002, Cork published James Bond: The Legacy which he co-wrote with Bruce Scivally. Then will come Bond Girls Are Forever (co-written with Maryam d'Abo) in 2003 and The James Bond Encyclopedia (co-written with Collin Stutz) in 2007.

John Cork also worked on the CD-ROM The Ultimate James Bond: An Interactive Dossier (1996) and the questions of Scene it? 007 Edition.

John Cork, for his part, finds it more difficult to write a treatment.

It all goes back to a screening of the film The Long Walk Home that he had written and which starring Whoopi Goldberg and Sissy Spacek in the title roles. "Goldberg had invited Timothy Dalton, whom she was friends with", Cork recalls[4]. "I walked up to him, introduced myself and expressed my admiration for his work on the Bond films. I told him that [...] Bond films inspired me to get involved with filmmaking. He said: Well, you need to speak to Barbara Broccoli over there. I got to meet Barbara and she couldn't have been nicer. But it didn't lead to anything at that point"[5].

- John Cork[6] : Quite some time later, a year and a half, I think, I called my agent to ask her what was happening with the new Bond film since legal entanglements had been cleared up between MGM and Danjaq/Eon. She called me back and said, "They're actually starting to develop the next film, and they're interviewing writers. I have an appointment for you to go in and pitch".

Surprised and excited, "I went in and pitched to Barbara and Michael. Then I had a second meeting with Cubby Broccoli there, too, and they offered me a deal to work on a treatment for a future Bond film"[7].

"What became clear, I think, to [EON] was that I knew Bond. I knew the cinematic Bond. I knew how the Bond films were made, and I knew the literary Bond, and I knew this at a level that virtually no other writer who would have been pitching to them could have possibly known", recalls Cork[8], who had been a huge James Bond fan since his youth, had followed the agent's adventures, written about it and was one of the co-founders of the Ian Fleming Foundation.

"As a result, [I] was one of three writers hired. Michael France was always the writer working on GoldenEye", adds Cork[9]. "The other writer and I were working separately on treatments for future films"[10] "so that they could re-launch the Bond series and come out with a number of films, one a year like in the early '60s"[11].

Cork had "the idea of manipulating a satellite"[12], "I had a scene where a missile was taken off course to sink a British battleship"[13]. "When I went in for my first meeting, they told me they hired me because they liked my vision for Bond, but that my story idea was too close to the idea that they were developing with France, which also had to do with satellites. Thus began the long journey into pitching Bond stories"[14].

- John Cork[15] : It was a tough job to be in that screenwriter's chair on Bond. EON has [already] heard all the ideas, every variation on what Bond can be doing. It really comes down to whether you can get them excited by your ideas, whether you can bring something to the table that they feel is original and grabs their interest. Quite frankly, I wasn't able to pull that off. [...] I couldn't get them interested in my take on any Bond film plots.

"I must have pitched twenty to thirty [iterations]. Each one required oodles of research and mapping out characters. None of them went anywhere! Most of my meetings were with Michael and Barbara, but often Cubby was there, too. John Claflin, the development person for Danjaq at the time, was a constant presence"[16].

> - John Cork[17] : Michael kept asking "What's the villain's plot? What's he trying to do?". It concerned him a great deal.

> - Guy Hamilton[18] : Bond is as good as his villain. If he's got no opposition then what he does is pretty meaningless. The better the villains are the better Bond is because they make better problems for him.

Wilson confirmed it is hard for writers to come up with fresh concepts: "It's always the same ideas, and after a while you've basically heard them all"[19]. Worst, "with the ideas they pitch, believe me, it would be very easy for [Bond] to go off the rails"[20].

"Most writers seem to be cliché-ridden" continue Wilson, "but they need to realize that you start out with a strong villain and a caper, and everything else follows. See, the problem is everyone remembers the things they liked best about the Bond films, so they bring back Jaws or bring in Goldfinger's daughter and they figure: well, if it worked once, it'll work again. But we try to stay away from that because that's a trap"[21]. Wilson also cite a problematic recurring desire of writers to ridicule Bond and his image, "but there's a difference between being at a disadvantage and being ridiculed"[22].

After failling repeatedly to work out a pitch that could get the attention of the producers, John Cork explain what he did next: "So, we went back to Fleming. We started talking a bit about the novels. Barbara and I would read one Bond novel a week and went through the entire series [she had never read the novels in chronological order]. We would have brief discussions about what was interesting about each book. This got me no closer to getting a story approved, but it was good"[23].

"In the middle of the process I got frustrated trying to develop a Bond story because you put a lot of time and effort into every idea you pitch and sometimes those stories can be shot down when you're five minutes into your presentation. You feel: that was [another] week of my life that I just poured into researching that!", remembers Cork[24].

> - John Cork[25] : Partially out of frustration at not feeling like we were getting anywhere on a story, I wrote up a document entitled "James Bond in the '90s". That, I think, excited everyone. It was somewhat of a character bible that went back to the novels as well as the films and pulled little quotes that helped define Bond's character, that alluded to his past, that gave us a launching point to discuss who this kind of man would be in the 1990s. The document also covered the role of women in the films, the role of the villains in the movies, who M was, who was Q, Moneypenny, Loelia Ponsonby, Bill Tanner, Felix Leiter... All the usual suspects. The document also talked about [...] losing his parents at a young age to the role of the loss of Vesper in his life.

"They [the producers] gave me lots of comments when I was writing it, and, obviously, they had a tremendous amount of influence on the final product. [...] That document was used for a number of years [...]; I think most of the writers who were involved on the Pierce Brosnan movies certainly got a chance to view it and laugh at it or contribute to it or enjoy it"[26].

To return to writing a treatment: "I never wrote a treatment for them"[27], "never had a title. We never even agreed on a storyline! I wouldn't even say I ever had any good or memorable ideas"[28], "but I felt like I got along very well with Barbara Broccoli and Michael Wilson"[29]. Something which would subsequently lead him to other projects with EON such as the design of DVD's bonus features and the writing of books on Bond.

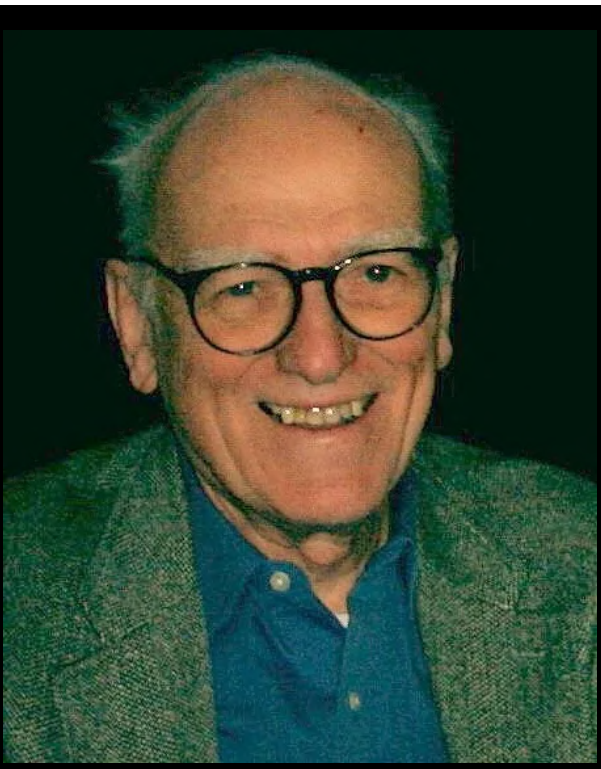
Enter Donald Westlake: hacker, bordering on incest and satellite

> - Bruce Feirstein[30] : We were blessed on both this picture and the last one with a studio executive named Jeff Kleeman. [...] Kleeman is a real student of movies, a huge Bond fan, and incredibly smart. He has a great grasp of who the character is, and what the ingredients are for a James Bond film. Jeff worked very, very closely with us on this, and had terrific suggestions.

In 1995, MGM/UA was in full production of GoldenEye. For Jeff Kleeman of MGM/UA: "Our feeling was that although GoldenEye was not released across the world until November and December of 1995, [...] it was worth spending $200,000 to get a script moving [for the next film]"[31].

Kleeman is aware that in the past the franchise has brought in renowned writers to contribute to scripts such as Roald Dahl and Anthony Burgess[32].

Having been a big fan of author Donald E. Westlake since his youth, Kleeman began to fantasize about what a Westlake-written Bond movie might look like[33].



Donald Edwin Westlake[34] is an American writer and screenwriter. He is particularly known for his humorous detective novels featuring the adventures of John Dortmunder, Parker and Alan Grofield.

Westlake was born in 1933 in New York. He completed his studies at the State University of New York at Binghamton. From 1954 to 1956, he was in the US Air Force.

Returning to civilian life, he worked in several small jobs. In particular, he became an editor in a literature agency. This exposure to the literary world decided him to embrace a career as a writer in 1958. A year later his first four novels appeared, in 1959. The author's notoriety, however, did not take off until 1967, when God Save the Mark wins the Edgar for best detective novel of the year.

A prolific and eclectic writer, Westlake has written more than a hundred novels, dabbling in many of the genres of detective literature, whether humorous thriller (his favorite genre), detective novel, noir novel, thriller, fantasy or even science fiction.

To make his abundant production appear, he uses various pseudonyms: particularly those of Richard Stark, Tucker Coe and Alan Marshall.

A specialist in burglary novels, his two favorite and recurring characters are John Dortmunder, a professional burglar pursued by bad luck, and Parker, the serious equivalent of Dortmunder: a cold, cynical and efficient thief.

He has won the Edgar Allan Poe Prize three times, and in 1993 was awarded the Grand Master Award by the Mystery Writers of America.

French cinema appreciates Donald Westlake, many of his novels have been adapted in France in movies such as Mise à sac (1967), La Divine Poursuite (1997), The Hook (Je suis un assassin, 2004) or The Axe (Le Couperet, 2005). Foreign cinema also loves Westlake: there have been around thirty film adaptations of his novels in total, like Point Blank (1967) or Payback (1999).

The writer himself collaborates on some screenplays or writes some alone: Cops and Robbers (1973) (adaptation of his own novel); The Stepfather (1987) or even The Grifters (1990).

For the anecdote, Westlake appears in the film Live and Let Die: "I am the passenger in the red car in the stunt driving sequence on the FDR Drive in New York. When I saw the movie, back then, I was astonished at how much that black silhouette (moi) inside that car was being thrown around. At the time [when we shot this], it had just seemed like a little sideswipe, not such a much at all".

In 2008, Westlake died of a heart attack.

> - Jeff Kleeman[35] : In March of 1995, with GoldenEye's release still eight months away, I proposed reaching out to Donald Westlake to see if he would be interested in writing the next Bond film, assuming there was going to be a next Bond film. [...] Barbara and Michael were intrigued by the idea.

Westlake was contacted and appeared to be interested in writing the film. On March 29, 1995, in his correspondence with Kleeman, Westlake expressed in a few lines a first idea for the villain and the Bond Girl.

The villain is a prodigious computer hacker, he has infiltrated the computers of every intelligence agencies in the world and also steals money, "just small amounts, a million here, a million there". To catch him, the good guys can't use computers, they have to use methods from before computers era.

The pre-title sequence would be a raid on the hacker lair. This one is located in Transylvania "where ancient tunnels and dungeons and crypts are being used by him, so that sets reminiscent of Frankenstein and Dracula are full of the latest computer equipment and other technology".

The villain manages to escape, but there is a girl at the castle ("I'll call her Honey Beevers for the moment"): it's not clear who she is. Was she a captive or an accomplice of the villain? Bond doesn't have time to find out because she disappears when he turn his back from her.

The villain has gone to Asia, Bond tracks him down and comes across Honey again. He is about to have sex with her when a report comes in about Honey, saying that she is apparently the daughter of Bond's own sister, Winifred! So Honey is Bond's niece and he takes his hands off her, although "it drives him nuts" to do it! (so nuts that 007 even consider calling his sister to verify that it is her biological daughter and not adopted one, because I guess it would have been okay for Bond to resume sex with her in that case!).

In another document, Westlake imagines dialogues like:

> - Bond: What's your mother's first name?
> - Honey: Winifred.
> - Bond: And her maiden name?
> - Honey: Well, she was married so often, she could never seem to stick to...
> - Bond: No, mean the very first one, the name that came before all the others.
> - Honey: Bond!

- Bond: Winifred Bond.
- Honey: My mother.
- Bond: My sister.
- Honey (leaps away, horrified): You're my uncle? [...] What should I call you? Uncle James? Uncle Jimmy?
- Bond: Please don't.

(This same document says that at one point she sacrifices herself for Bond and that "their one real passionate kiss is as she lies dying [on the ground]"!).

Later Bond foils the villain's plan at the last minute, plan which goal was to cause financial chaos to destroy the global economy so that the villain's third world partners, who are outside the traditional financial system, would had been the only ones with economic power. Westlake adds:

- Donald Westlake: Every day now, the newspapers have another story about how vulnerable that vast interconnected web of computer technology is, so if it's that vulnerable, why don't we go get it?

If by reading this Jeff Kleeman seems excited by the idea of Transylvania, he is much less excited by a hacker's villain as he says in a letter to Westlake:

- Jeff Kleeman: The computer hacker villain is, unfortunately, an idea which we are not only utilizing for the current Bond film [GoldenEye] (the current Bond film also has the collapse of the stock market as the ultimate threat), but we also have a film coming out at the end of this summer called Hackers, which is just what its title implies. I'm sure that we can come up [for the villain] with a new scheme or an old one which just hasn't been used for a long time that would be equally fun for you to write.

- Jeff Kleeman[36] : I filled Don in on GoldenEye's plot and three days later I received a fax from him that began, "Okay, Plan B. Round two".

In this "plan B" from April 2, 1995, Westlake presents a new idea for a scenario in a few lines. The villain, whom Westlake thinks may be named Hugo Goodbread, created and launched a satellite by using parts stolen from former USSR countries. He also stole a Japanese weather satellite.

"Goodbread adapting the weather satellite [...] with a beam that destroys grain by sterilizing the seeds. He intends to launch the satellite into a fixed orbit over the Western Hemisphere and destroy all wheat, rice, corn, rye, barley, millet and other grains in North and South America. Without feed, livestock will die. His scheme is to eliminate virtually the entire food supply of the Western Hemisphere, he and his partners now having control of much of Russia's wheat, China's rice and so on".

- Jeff Kleeman[37] : That idea didn't feel quite right for us. But Don's excitement wasn't dampened. He was committed to rising to the challenge of creating a new Bond story.

Meet Gideon Goodbread

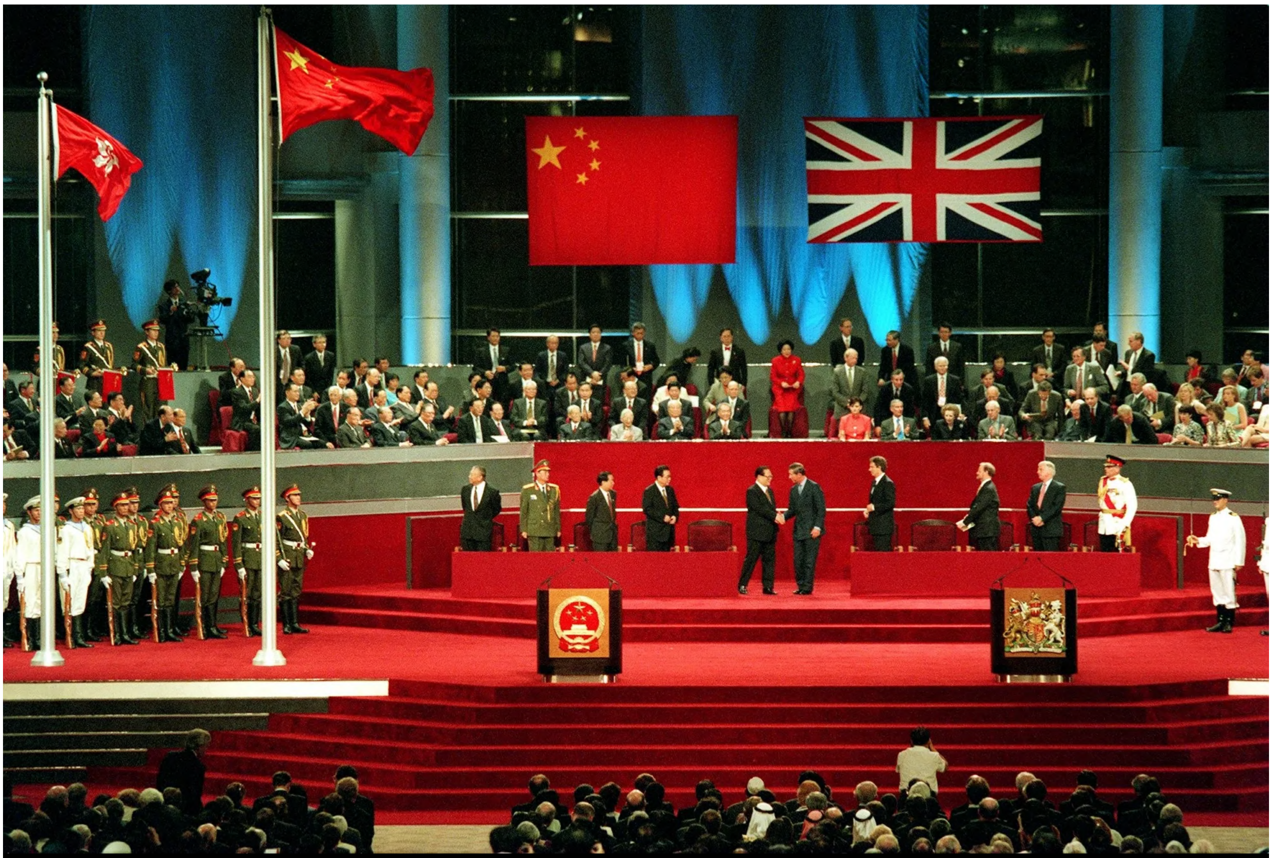
In early May 1995, Westlake flew to London to discuss about the film's story with the producers.

At one point in the writing process, with the film due to be released in 1997, it was thought that it would be a good idea to have Hong Kong be an integral part of the plot.

During the 19th century, Britain became involved in two Opium Wars with China (1839-1842 and 1856-1860). These conflicts were sparked by trade tensions and China's refusal to import British opium. The Treaty of Nanking (1842) ended the First Opium War and imposed unfavorable conditions on China, including the cession "in perpetuity" of the island of Hong Kong to the Great Britain. The end of the Second Opium War had expanded the size of the territory involved.

Later, in 1898, an agreement between England and China further enlarged the territory detained by the Great Britain, but these new lands were only ceded to the Great Britain for a period of 99 years and must be returned to China in 1997.

In the 1980s, as the fateful date approached, it was judged that it would be unviable to return just the new territories to China and in 1984 agreements were reached to return the entirety of Hong Kong (including the lands that the Great Britain had acquired for perpetuity) to China on July 1, 1997. This handover will be based on the principle of "One country, two systems", ensuring that Hong Kong would retain a high degree of autonomy, including its economic and political system, for 50 years after the handover. (Thus, since 1997 Hong Kong has been part of the People's Republic of China, but enjoys a special status as a special administrative region with a legal and economic system distinct from the one of China's mainland).



Jiang Zemin shakes hands with Prince Charles during the transfer of power ceremony in Hong Kong, June 30, 1997 at midnight.

> - Jeff Kleeman[38] : We had an interesting opportunity, which was Hong Kong was being handed over to mainland China in 1997. What if we made a Bond movie that was the first Bond movie that was grounded in a current event? A current international event. [...] We wanted to get Bond back to Asia; it had been a while [since he's been there], and that just seemed like another way to take Bond and make him contemporary, but still allow him to be Bond.

(The filmmakers will not be the only ones to have the idea of involving Bond in a story revolving around the handover of Hong Kong. Indeed, on the literary's Bond side, Raymond Benson will publish in 1997: Zero Minus Ten, a novel in which the villain named Guy Thackeray wishes to destroy Hong Kong with a nuclear bomb right after the handover; partly because he considers that the handover has no reason to exist, that he likes neither the Chinese nor the English, and that he does not want anyone to inherit his company of which he will find himself snatched of following the handover).

> - Michael Wilson[39] : Going to Hong Hong [in Bond 18] is, of course, what we asked Westlake to do.

On July 13, 1995 Kleeman wrote to Westlake "[I'm] glad you are officially on board" and at the end of the month Westlake flew again to London to meet the producers.

On August 10, 1995, Westlake wrote three pages for the two producers about the backstory of the villain: Gideon Goodbread (Westlake had also considered naming him Loris Goodbread at one point).

Goodbread was born in China from missionary parents in 1949. His parents killed (apparently by the communists), young Gideon was repatriated to the United States where he resided alternately between his two sets of grandparents. His maternal grandparents, the Bellows, are missionaries. His paternal grandparents are in wheat farming in four American states, and have diversified into truck and boat transportation. Theses paternal grandparents drives him toward a desire of revenge against China.

In 1968, at the age of 19, Gideon join the United States Army and fought for two years in Vietnam during the Vietnam War. Back at home, he helps his paternal grandfather (Gotfried) to expand the family business to a worldwide size.

Gideon marries for the first time, but the woman and the child he was expecting both die during the childbirth. (Gideon would remarry an Englishwoman named Gloria, a woman who "was meant to be decorative").

In 1981 Gideon learned that he had given birth to a son during the war, Ming, who have currently 12 years old. Religious connections from his maternal grandparents brought hundreds of teenage Vietnamese refugees to the United States, where they struggled to integrate. Gideon, seeing that they could be useful to him, had build an enclave for them in Idaho and adopted about 120 children and brought Ming to the United States.

Goodbread bought land in Vietnam in the early 1990s and settled there with his children. "But it was never [done for] charitable [purposes], he was building an army".

Indeed, Gideon has always beat a grudge against China for the death of his parents and intends to take revenge one day. However, "for what he has in mind, he'll need even more money than he already has". The document doesn't explain what he has in mind, but the first step in his plan is to "loot" Hong Kong before the city is turned over to the Chinese, we are told. Gideon is 58 years old at the moment of the story.

After reading that, Michael Wilson and Barbara Broccoli will find that Gideon's backstory needs more exoticism.

Some other hastily ideas written by Westlake that didn't were retained in the characterization of the villain include: "Is he faux religious? Has all kinds of religious talismans around him, but they're from everywhere, all kinds of religions". Or "Is he part robot? I don't think that's useful. But he shouldn't be Mr. Normal either".

September 1995 (?): soliton, Australian desert, children and Hong Kong 97

According to Jeff Kleeman, Westlake is an author who imagines the story of his books as he writes them. It's not his habit to define in advance what will happen in these, but for this movie the filmmakers want him to first write a treatment before embarking on a script:

> - Jeff Kleeman[40] : Don would start from a premise [...] and just write, without any plan for where he was going, trusting that eventually he'd end up with a story. [...] As far as I know, Bond 18 was the first time Don had ever been required to perform the interim step of fully plotting out an original story in a relatively schematic fashion. Not his natural process, but he gave it his all.

Donald Westlake eventually completed a 35-pages treatment (temporarily) titled "18". The document doesn't give a date, Kleeman estimates it as September 1995[41], which matching with my research (on August 13, 1995 Westlake had already written a 4-pages summary of basically everything that would turn out in this treatment, and the August 28 he had mentioned his idea for the pre-title sequence to Wilson).

The treatment starts with a pre-title sequence that seems to open on a temple in the Far-East. Monks (men and women, all in their twenties) bring one of their female member to an altar where she kneels, before another monk decapitates her with an axe! Her body is placed in a crematorium. The camera zooms out and we discover that we are not in the Far-East, but in a church located in the heart of the United States. "An ordinary white clapboard American church", surrounded by wheat fields. The monks remove their tunics and board a black bus on which we can reads "DRAGONSTHEETH". Titles sequence.

> - Jeff Kleeman[42] : Don had come up with an intriguing new pre-credits sequence, but Bond was absent from it. We needed one with Bond in it.

After the credits, we find Bond under bed-sheets at Oxford University, in the company of a professor. His pager make a sound and he uses the blonde's phone to call back M. "I'm on holiday [...] There's no one else? Very well, M. When duty calls, I rise to the occasion".

- Michael Wilson[43] : This sequence [in Oxford] is lifted from a script written [...] by the two Wills [William Davies and William Osborne], it was based on a suggestion by Dana Broccoli.

007 therefore joins HQ, passes Moneypenny who is studying a computer manual, and finds himself in M's office. She asks Bond if he remembers Daniel "Danny" Stittz, a former RAF pilot whom Bond once flew with during a mission.

The name says something to Bond. M explains that Stittz used to work with 003, should we say, the old 003 who died.

- Bond: An earlier 003. Sometimes I wish we could retire the numbers.
- M: Oh, no. None of you last very long, you know. By now, the numbers would be up so high, you'd all sound like bus routes. We'll just keep recycling the same nine digits.
- Bond: Strange to think, some day, another 007... (More cheerful) Of course, another M, too.

Anyway, Stittz who has now retired to Australia is looking to contact 003: he is ready to give some information in exchange of a protection for his niece, "no idea why". Since 003 is dead, M will send 007 instead since he and Stittz have already met in the past.

Bond takes a plane to Sydney and meets Stittz at the airport. The latter is sorry to learn about 003's death, but 007 suits him very well as a replacement. The man is reassured and tells Bond that he must show him a blueprint. However he doesn't have it with him at the moment and arranges to meet Bond later at a hotel.

Meanwhile Bond goes to the British consulate where he learns (from an MI5 member named Hemstitch) that Stittz's company has gone into bankruptcy because of a wealthy American named Gideon Goodbread. Via video conference, M reminds his agent that Stittz wants his niece protected, not dishonored. "I'll let the situation guide me".

Bond goes to the hotel Stittz mentioned and runs into Gloria, Stittz's niece, a "beautiful but somehow sad Englishwoman". They go to dinner, she is provocative, but doesn't reveal what she wants to be protected from; they end up in bed.

When he wakes up in the night, Bond hears sirens in the street and sees through the window a dead body on the asphalt below: Daniel Stittz. No blueprint found on his body and Gloria is missing.

It seems that the information Stittz had was more valuable than Bond thought since it get him killed. 007 decides to attend Stittz's funeral. There he see Gloria and Bond discovers that she is married to Gideon Goodbread. Bond meets him at the funerals, Gideon introduces himself as a close friend of Stittz and he is described as "an extremely fat man who is constantly eating, and who is attended by young Orientals who keep handing him food". Gideon invites Bond to his property which is located in Simpson Desert where Gloria will be later that day. However, before going there, Gideon wants to take a detour to show Bond one of his "construction projects".

Before leaving, Bond joins Hemstitch to report to him and together they go to a university where players are on a rugby field. Hemstitch introduces Bond to one of the players who turns out to be "Q's new assistant", aka "Q Two". They are joined by Q who arrives in a van which is a sort of portable Q-lab. Q gives 007 some gadgets including "since you're in Australia, I thought you should have a boomerang". By pressing a button it doesn't return to the sender, but explodes upon reaching its target.

Bond joins Gideon and leaves with him by helicopter to a boat anchored in the Great Barrier Reef, near an island used by the Japanese during World War II and since abandoned. We can notice the inscription "Dragonstheeth" on the side of the helicopter. Gideon explains he bought this island and that he intends to build a destination resort there. But to do that, he must first raze all the installations dating from the war: this phase of demolition is what they came to observe today.

The demolition process that Gideon intend to use turns out to be as follows: the tunnels dug by the Japaneses will be flooded with seawater [and sealed], then charges placed in these tunnels will explode. "The explosions will not be large, but will create a soliton, an oscillating wave like a tsunami, that will turn the island's landfill into a thick soup, in which the old buildings will crumble and be buried. Then they'll wait two months for the island to dry, when it will be smooth and barren and ready for construction".

However, before the explosion takes place, a sailboat arrives near the island. The boat is asked to leave, but these are ecologists (inspired by Greenpeace[44]) who don't intend to leave the area because they are worried about the damage that Gideon could cause to the Coral Reef with his demolition process. One female environmentalist dives into the water with scuba gear.

Bond tells Gideon that the explosion must be canceled, but Gideon reply him that it is impossible: the charges are programmed on a timer. Bond tries to dive to save the girl, but he is held back by Gideon's crew: it's too dangerous to be in the water, it's probably too late for her.

So Bond watches helplessly as the explosion takes place; the island's buildings sink into the ground as planned. The shock wave shakes the environmentalists' sailboat and Gideon's boat.

> - Bond: Shaken, not stirred.

Gideon's boat approaches the island and they fish out the body of the environmentalist who turns out to still be alive. It also turns out that Gideon knows her, she is Muffy Bhang (Westlake had previously considered naming her Laura Li): a Chinese-American girl from an environmental group who always interferes in his plans. Muffy joins her companions on the sailboat, Gideon congratulates his engineers and leaves by helicopter with Bond for the Simpson Desert.

They land near a Land Rover, near which a Vietnamese-American wait from them to drive them to Gideon's property in the desert. The place is described as a "cross between a natural mesa and an old Foreign Legion-style desert fort" with a luxurious interior "but in a strange and artificial way. A fountain is not a fountain but a hologram. There are picture windows with views of everything from the Grand Canyon to the New York City skyline (everything American) but they're video projections. Fires roar in fireplaces in every room, but none of them are real. A garden is an interior room, with plastic flowers and a video projected sky on the ceiling. Gideon, with great pride, shows this all off to Bond".

Gideon also introduces Bond to his adopted "children": around twenty Vietnamese born from American fathers: "no one wants them at home, cause they're half the enemy [by their origins]". They are young, around twenty years old. Also among them is Ming Goodbread, Gideon's only biological son.

Once alone in his room, Bond contacts Hemstitch who is in a FedEx van nearby as backup. Bond tells him that everything is fine and, when he cuts off contact, some of Gideon's children attack and capture Hemstitch.

There is a dinner scene where Gloria is present with Bond and Gideon. The latter talks about his fleet of cargo ships, his construction company and his wheat farms around the world which are at the origin of his fortune. Prints on Bond's glass are discreetly collected and Gloria arranges to meet 007 later in the evening.

Gloria tries to kiss Bond, but he turns cold, telling her he have objections because she is a married woman. Gloria reveals to him that her marriage is a disaster, that Gideon keeps gaining weight and becoming more and more crazy/dangerous. His children are like a cult where there is a killing ritual if one of them tries to escape. Moreover, she is sure that it is Gideon who is behind the death of her uncle Daniel Stittz.

- Michael Wilson[45] : The concept of Gloria being the villain's wife, etc. is based upon Richard Smith's treatment.

Further into the property, Gideon interrogates/tortures Hemstitch. The fact that he doesn't speak turns out to be unimportant; analysis of Bond's fingerprints has just identified him as a member of the "MI5" anyway.

There is another dinner with Gideon where he says being born in China in 1949, from missionary parents who were killed by the Chinese army.

- Gideon: You've seen the famous news photo of the baby on the bayonet. That was me. I lived through it, but somehow, I've been hungry ever since.

Gideon says in Vietnamese to one of his children to put drugs in Bond's wine glass. 007 who understands Vietnamese pretends to drink and Gideon reveals to him that the drugs were actually in his glass of water. Bond loses consciousness and wakes up tied up in the desert, not far from the property, Hemstitch's corpse near him. Gideon who is there with his son Ming tells him that he knows about him and Gloria and that he have a plan to takes his revenge against China. 007 asks to die with dignity, but Gideon retorts that he was not a very English gentleman by having an affair with a married woman, so request denied.

Westlake in a memo: "Imagine [for Gideon] a John Goodman [above], with all that warmth and American apple pie and hospitality all over the place, and he's a cold-blooded killer. He has to be weird, I know that, but he also has to be somebody Gloria might have married".

Gideon and Ming leave, leaving Bond trussed up in the desert sun. Bond loses consciousness again and when he regain it, he notices the sun reflecting off Hemstitch's watch. Bond directs his bonds towards the reflection ray in order to make them burn and free himself. He loses consciousness again but when the reflection burns his skin he is among us again. 007 tries to get up, but has difficulty, he crawls towards the property in order to steal the Land Rover.

He loses consciousness for the 4th and 5th time (!) but manages to enter the building by hanging on to the garage door as it opens and remain lying/hiding unconscious on top of it for some time when the horizontal position is reached (Westlake had already written something similar in his novel The Blackbird and according to Michael Wilson, "Westlake was very keen on the garage door gag"[46]).

Bond eventually climb down from the door, arms himself with a hammer and a screwdriver in the garage and fights off some children on the property. He collects his belongings, comes across a fax saying that Gideon has gone to his residence in Vietnam and comes across an umbrella (a thing that Gloria, Daniel and Ming had mentioned earlier) in which he finds the blueprint that Stittz had spoken about. Bond flees the property in the Land Rover, after sending the explosive Q-boomerang at his pursuers.

Back in Sydney, 007 contacts M by visioconference (she is in robe and hair curler) to take stock of the situation. He specifies that normally they would have almost nothing to care about someone trying to harm China, but since this will also affect British interests according to Stittz... In any case he has no idea what the blueprint in front of him represents.

At his hotel Bond runs into the environmentalist Muffy Bhang who somehow figured out that Bond was working for the British government. She brings him to the Great Barrier Reef, to show him the beauty of what she is trying to protect.

They dive together, the atmosphere is quite romantic, but nothing really happens between them.

Later M contact Bond again: she has contacted a colonel named Kal from Vietnamese intelligence and 007 must go to Hanoi to meet him.

Meanwhile Gideon is in his residence in the Vietnam jungle which has just as much of an artificial appearance as the one of the Australian desert (including mechanical birds). Ming informs his father that Bond has escaped and then Gideon goes monkey hunting with his wife. He decides to apologize to her about their marriage which is not so rosy and promises to make up for it. He is interrupted by two helicopters which land and from which Bond, Colonel Kal and Vietnamese soldiers descend.

Bond confronts Gideon and accuses him of the deaths of Stittz and Hemstitch and of the killing attempt on himself. Gideon retorts to Bond that he has no evidence and that he has a long arm; his lawyers will destroy his accusations. Gloria steps forward and says, "I'm your witness, James".

The commando holds Gideon and his children at bay as they return to the helicopters, bringing Gloria with them. The helicopter in which Gloria has boarded is shot down by a Stinger missile fired by Gideon's children (Gloria dies, Westlake specifies it in another document). Bond and Kal decide to not board the remaining helicopter, but to flee on foot through the jungle. In it they come across a Hmong tribe from whom Bond asks (and gets) help to get out of the jungle (since Bond also speaks Hmong apparently!).

After returning to civilization, Bond leaves for Hong Kong because Gloria had told him that Gideon had a big construction project there. 007 meets a man from the embassy who tells him that it's weird that Gideon is building: with the handover due to take place soon, most European and American companies have stopped building in Hong Kong.

They goes to see an engineer to whom they show Stittz's blueprint: it's a plan showing "a service tunnel for the delivery of seawater to be used in a heat exchange system for an office building's air conditioning. This is common in Hong Kong". However, according to the engineer, the blueprint must be in error because a tunnel is missing to bring the water back to the sea, moreover it is strange that the tunnel is completely flooded according to the plan.

- Michael Wilson[47] : The idea that the air conditioning in the buildings used the seawater as a heat exchanger came about as follows: last summer I met a friend of Tom Pevsner who had lived in Hong Kong. We discussed the fact that some of the buildings along the port used the sea water to cool and heat the buildings. I mentioned this to Westlake. He spoke to someone he knew in Hong Kong who confirmed the use of the seawater, but explained that the water was circulated though much smaller pipes than I had thought.

Bond thinks back to the method with which Gideon razed the Japanese island and understands that a similar fate awaits Hong Kong and more precisely its business district. Bond understands that this is how Gideon intends to take revenge on China: by destroying Hong Kong the moment it returns to them.

It is discovered that a Gideon's front company is building a bank (named Cathay Bank). They don't know it, but Muffy Bhang is infiltrating this construction site as they talk.

Bond, the embassy man, a police officer and the engineer go to meet the owner of a bank building. They say that Bond must access the services tunnels via the bank and 007 also understands that Gideon intends to steal the safes of the bank(s) who have had to turn off their alarms and motion detectors for the duration of the construction. 007 leaves to go inspect the tunnels.

- Michael Wilson[48] : Stealing gold is my suggestion. [...] Revenge on China as motivation is my suggestion. [...] The soliton concept is Westlake's.

Muffy is taking photos when she sees a (remote-controlled) submarine placed in a tunnel and Gideon's children loading bank's loot into it. Muffy ends up getting captured. Meanwhile Gideon talks with his son, he explains to him that the submarine is almost full loaded and that they will soon flood the tunnels.

Bond is inspecting the tunnels disguised as a worker and comes across the submarine, he also sees Muffy being captured. She is brought to Gideon who notices that her equipment is Chinese:

> - Gideon: This equipment is Chinese. You're working for the Chinese? But you're an American!
> - Muffy: After the changeover here, to be Chinese in Hong Kong, with an American passport, will be the best. This will be my city far more than San Francisco ever was. I was never an American, not to the Americans.

While it is never confirmed whether Muffy is a Chinese agent or not, Gideon orders to place her alive in the tunnels: if things go badly she can be used as a hostage, otherwise she will drown in the tunnels when they will be water filled.

The police decide to launch an assault on the construction site; the children take up arms to defend the position.

> - Gideon: The police are coming. We can't wait. Flood the tunnels.
> - Ming: But our people are still in there!
> - Gideon: We don't have time for them. Hurry, flood the tunnels!
> - Ming: You can't murder my brothers and sisters!

Gideon and Ming get into a physical fight following their disagreement and Gideon ends up shooting his son and activate the floodgates! The tunnels are filling up and Gideon is activating a torpedo near Muffy, explaining to her: "this beauty will roam the tunnels and drop its little eggs". When all the seven explosive eggs will be in place, Gideon will activate the detonator.

Bond arrives at the tunnel, but he is captured. He watches helplessly as the water rises above Muffy's head (she is tied) and Gideon starts the submarine. Gideon orders his children to tie up Bond. He leaves Bond in order to climb up a crane at the surface whose top is to convert into a hidden helicopter, so he can escape and watch the destruction of Hong Kong from the air. Ming, injured but not dead, decides to pursue his father.

Bond gets rid of the children around him and unties Muffy before she drowns; he gives her mouth-to-mouth resuscitation.

Gideon climbs the crane to reach the hidden helicopter, but his son takes the control of the crane and swings it until the arm (on which Gideon is) crashes into a surrounding building. Gideon dies (or at least it seems, since it's not explicitly written) and Ming also draw his last breath.

Muffy tells Bond about the torpedo which drops explosives; he asks for scuba gear and goes with her into the flooded tunnels (Muffy saw Gideon arming the torpedo, she should know how to disarm it). This is indeed the case, she manages to hold on to the torpedo, "rides it like a horse" and disarms it two seconds before the end of the countdown.

The final scene takes place between Bond and Muffy as they get back on a boat after a diving session. He asks if what he heard from Gideon is true, if she is really a Chinese agent. She gives him an evasive answer (however Westlake confirms that is indeed the case in another document): if she can overcome the fact that he is an MI5 agent, he can probably do the same.

An earlier draft of this treatment had some interesting differences:

- No scene with Moneypenny.
- Gideon's bases didn't look artificial and Gideon's obesity didn't existed yet.
- When escaping from the Australian desert base, this draft contained a humorous/ racist line from Bond just before he attacks a children: "And I suppose you're Dung Goodbread. I'm Bong".
- When Bond (and members of the bank's security) go down to inspect the service tunnels, they come face to face with Gideon's men trying to loot the vault with an electric vehicle/cart. (Security shoots at it, misses but hits a salt water pipe; the water lands on the driver who then crashes with the vehicle).
- The finale is the scene that has the biggest difference, with Gideon not trying to join a helicopter on a crane to escape. Instead Bond is not captured in the tunnels in this version. He puts on scuba gear and heads towards the bound Muffy and the underwater drone/submarine as the tunnel fills up. Bond goes to untie the girl when "Gideon's boot smashes into his face. Bond and Gideon struggle, in and out of the water. Gideon is holding Bond under, ripping his airhose loose, when Ming calls him from above. Gideon looks up, and Ming shoots him. Ming is immediately shot down by a lot of gunfire from police behind him, rushing onto the construction site".
- It is Bond who disarms the torpedo and its eggs (although Muffy comes to save his life afterwards, when he runs out of air).

October 1995: Dracula, Frey, nuclear detonator and barge

A second 9-pages treatment entitled "James Bond 18" was later written by Westlake (probably with the help of Michael Wilson). This one changes lot of things and is not dated (Kleeman estimates it as October 1995[49]).

The pre-title opens in Transylvania with a funeral procession bringing a coffin to a mausoleum near a castle, "in imagery very like a Dracula movie". At nightfall the coffin opens and James Bond dressed in a tuxedo comes out. He goes into the kitchens of the castle, steals a waiter's outfit, mixes with the guests, inspects the place by overpowering a few guards and finally finds what he came for: an object similar to a stick.

007 must now fight opponents to escape the castle, which he ends up doing by flying from one of the towers with an inflatable balloon under a full moon sky. A certain Kurt ("a powerful wrestler-type") in the castle realizes that Bond has stolen the object and exclaims: "Devlin won't like this".

Back in England, Bond receives congratulations from M and other British government officials for recovering the stolen nuclear trigger/detonator. However, they still wonder who was behind its theft. Bond says the owner of the castle has been identified as Devlin Frey, a name which casts a chill over members of the government.

Devlin is a British man from a modest background who married into a wealthy Anglo-Hong Kong family. Devlin has since acquired the family's shipping, dredging and drilling businesses and, with the handover expected to take place within the next month or two, he plans to soon relocate his operations to Scotland. Devlin is therefore the type of guy considered above all suspicion by the government officials, because he is very important to the Scottish economy. It would be inappropriate to investigate on him. After the meeting, M nevertheless asks his agent to investigate him discreetly.

007 therefore goes to a coastal town in Scotland where Devlin is in the process of donating a boat and inaugurating another. In the crowd Bond comes across Gloria, a pretty girl who seems to guess that Bond is looking for information on Frey, and who seems to be ready to give him some.

Bond meets Frey, posing as an arms dealer, and presents him with a part of the nuclear detonator he recovered in the pre-title. Bond offers to sell it to him, but Frey doesn't seem interested.

Bond later goes to his hotel to see Gloria again, she asks him for protection in exchange for her information, but reveals nothing of interest at the moment. The mood turns sexual and then Bond gets knocked out. When he regains consciousness the girl is no longer there. He hears sirens, goes to look out the window and sees bellow the body of a member of "MI5" who had been assigned to him as back-up.

Frey invites Bond to his estate to watch a polo match. Gloria is there and turns out to be Frey's wife. When the game begins "it becomes obvious that Frey and his team are out to do Bond serious injury, with mallets, horses and the ball". 007, however, manages to escape unscathed.

Frey tells Bond that he might eventually be interested in buying the detonator from him; but for now he invites him to go deer hunting with him and his men. However during the hunting trip it turns out that Bond and Gloria are the game. As for Octopussy, this sequence is inspired by the short story The Most Dangerous Game by Richard Connell, according to Wilson[50]. So the dogs are turned loose on them, Gloria is killed, and Bond is about to be killed too when suddenly a Chinese girl parks her car near him. Bond goes inside, she says her name is Jingjing Bhang.

> \- Bond: Lovely. How did you happen to be in the neighborhood?
> \- Jingjing: I came for you.

She presses a button and gas fills the interior of the car: Bond loses consciousness.

007 wakes up in a military base in China where he is being interrogated/tortured by a Chinese intelligence member named Wong who believes his arms dealer cover to be true. Bond tells them the truth, but they don't believe him. Finally the torture stop and a bottle of Bollinger is brought to him: his fingerprints have confirmed his true identity.

A Chinese colonel named Kal comes to tell him that he is willing to free him if Bond does something for him in exchange. It turns out that there is a former inactive/decommissioned Chinese nuclear test site in the Gobi Desert, although some material is still there. Kal thinks that the general who manages the site, Li, is corrupt and that he is putting some of this material (such as detonators) onto the black market.

Li has too much support in Beijing to be investigated in China, but a foreigner like Bond could. Bond will have to pose as a United Nations inspector coming to check whether the disarmament agreements are being respected on the site.

Bond accepts, but asks for M's agreement: she also accepts.

The test site in the desert: general Li welcomes Bond and Jingjing with all smiles, but order his men who escort them to ensure they never return to the surface. Large metal doors try to trap them in a section where an explosion will take place, Bond and Jingjing overpower their escort and manage to get through theses doors at the last moment. The doors are dented by the explosion from the other side, but hold up.

Theses previous scene are of course inspired by the script of GoldenEye written by Michael France and a scene in a similar atmosphere will take place in The World Is Not Enough.

Bond and Jingjing return to the surface and have Li arrested. During his interrogation by Wong, Li reveals that he sent a detonator to Hong Kong. He doesn't know the recipient, but he was promised a payment in gold.

Bond and the Chinese therefore go to Hong Kong where the offices which serve as cover for the Chinese secret services are named, by pure coincidence, Universal Exports!

> \- Bond: How did you happen upon a name like that?
> \- Wong: It just came to us.

The Chinese apologize for the heat in their offices: there is currently dredging work on the air conditioning system. The building is also a sort of bank, 1/8th of the Chinese's gold reserves are brought there in anticipation of the handover.

Looking out the window Bond sees that armed men are near the dredge and sees one of Frey's boats. Becoming suspicious, Bond asks to inspect the bank vault and the air conditioning system tunnels. Everything seems in order.

Bond and Jingjing then decide to infiltrate Devlin's yacht where they end up being captured. They then helplessly witness the theft of the gold, which is carried out with a sort of drill from the dredge, which pierce the dikes until reaching the bank vault where it reduce the ingots to pieces. The seawater mixed with the gold particles is then pumped towards the barge where the particles pile up "like sparkling sand". (Michael Wilson stated that the concept for this boat was his suggestion and based on the Hughes Glomar Explorer, "the Howard Hughes ship that he built for the CIA in the late 70's; its cover was that of a deep sea remote mining ship"[51]).

Bond tells Frey that the authorities will eventually find out that he is responsible for the theft, but Frey retorts that soon there will be no more authorities because he also plans to destroy Hong Kong once the gold extraction completed. Like this he gonna have "his revenge on both Britain and China, for taking away from him the society in which he'd finally made it to the top". Frey and Kurt set the detonator of a nuclear bomb on the yacht, then leave with the barge full of gold.

007 manages to free himself and defuses the bomb, he then chases the barge with Jingjing. Frey is in the process of transferring the gold to another boat and there is a fight there, Jingjing fights against Kurt and Bond against Frey who dies, buried under a mound of gold.

> - Michael Wilson[52] : The theft of a nuclear trigger was my suggestion, as was the idea that the villain was from Hong Kong. The concept that the villain married into a prominent family is appropriated from the Richard Smith treatment (indeed, the entire relationship between Frey and his wife [...] is from the Smith treatment). [...] It was my suggestion that the Frey wanted to destroy Hong Kong and he would use an A-Bomb to do it. I [also] suggested Frey be killed by being drowned in the gold dust.

We can also note that in a previous version of this treatment, Westlake imagined that the top of the coffin would have been transparent, so that we would "believe" that we were witnessing Bond's funeral. He also imagines a version where the coffin (with Bond in it) turns into a drill once buried and digs a tunnel until reaching the castle.

In a version dated October 4, 1995, Westlake wrote Devlin "Fray" (instead of Frey). Bond also meets Gloria in the castle during the pre-title. Jingjing's character was still named Muffy (in the chase scene she came to save Bond by helicopter rather than by car).

Westlake had also imagined a version with New Zealand instead of Scotland. In it there was also references of rival gangs in Hong Kong (including the Triads, on which Wilson had did research), including one gang which wanted to raid the nuclear testing facility in the Gobi Desert.

On another page Westlake started from the principle that "all wars fought over oil" and that therefore "the villains want to do something with oil". Then he imagined a pre-title sequence in which an assassin walks into a casino and yells "Bond!" while looking for him to kill him, but 007 came up behind him and said "James Bond. Were you looking for me?", before killing the assassin. The most surprising thing on this page is that Westlake mentions Scotland and Transylvania, as well as a certain "Connery holding rifle"!

Titles considered by Westlake

For his first treatment Westlake at one point considered (only for a few hours, before changing his mind) the titles "Borrowed Time" or with a "On" in a nod to On Her Majesty's Secret Service: "On Borrowed Time". This in reference to the fact that the writer Han Suyin had once described Hong Kong as "a borrowed place, on borrowed time".

Another imagined title is "Dragonsteeth", in reference to the name of Gideon's family wheat company.

On August 24th, Westlake offered the title "Forever and a Death", noting that Forever seems like a good word for a Bond title. Furthermore, he scribbled on a sheet of paper all the cliché words from Bond titles such as "gold", "kill", "love", "die", etc... Four days later it's "Never look back" which he submits as a title.

At some point in the writing process, he considered "Nobody Dies" in a reference to a passage at the end (of a pre-title) where Bond returned to dig up a girl he had left buried alive in a coffin while he was busy doing other things. She said to him "James, I was so afraid", Bond replied "Of what? Nobody dies". The weirdest thing about this title is that someone (apparently Westlake) wrote what appears to be the lyrics to a title song (!):

> We come, and we go,
> We do what we know;
> It always so.
> Nobody dies.
>
> We always agree,
> Whatever will be,
> We're always still free,
> Nobody dies.
>
> Every time we meet is like the last time.
> Every time we meet is just a pastime.
> Every time we part is like the first time.
> Every time we part is an accursed time.
>
> We speak, and we sigh,
> We never know why,
> We only can try.
> Nobody dies.
> Nobody dies.
> Nobody dies.

Some other titles Westlake was considering were "Bright Eyes"; "Bright Eyes of Death"; "Death's Bright Eyes"; "The Ends of the Earth"; "The Shape of Death to Come" or "Passage to Destiny".

Fall of Westlake and Fall of the City

- Donald Westlake[53] : I proposed to them the idea of a guy who plans to starve the world's population using a satellite, which would destroy all the earth's crops. The producers brought me to London and I met them and Pierce Brosnan. They were all very nice, but they told me that the idea was not good and that it would cost too much. They wanted to release the film in the spring or summer of 97 and asked me to work on a plot around Hong Kong, which was to be returned to China in July 97. So I did research about this city. Much of Hong Kong is built on land reclaimed from the sea. Underground, there are large tunnels that transport salt water used for air conditioning systems. If we dig a small tunnel that allows the bigger to communicate with each other, fill it with water and blow up a small charge of dynamite, it creates a huge wave capable of destroying the entire city. On this idea, the producers gave me their agreement, I worked on the story during the spring of 95 and I saw them again in October 95. They were wondering if the story of the tunnels and the tidal wave was easy to understand. They then asked me to rework on an idea that they absolutely didn't want to hear about at first: an atomic bomb. I said no. We broke up.

- Jeff Kleeman[54] : Don's treatments had all the wonderful ideas he'd pitched in London, but neither was fully convincing as a Bond movie. I know Don would have found the right balance if he could have written the script and discovered the story's details as he wrote, but GoldenEye's enormous success now imposed on us a full-speed-ahead production time-frame.

While GoldenEye was released in November 1995, Donald Westlake left or was relieved of the writing of Bond 18 for the benefit of Bruce Feirstein (as we will have the opportunity to see).

However, Westlake believes that certain ideas he developed in his first treatment of Bond 18 are just too good to be dumped and in the years that followed, he began writing a novel that re-used some of them.

The result of this is a 610 page (!) manuscript entitled Fall of the City.

In August 1998, Knox Burger, literary agent and friend of Westlake, wrote to the latter that the manuscript of Fall of the City leaves him "stumped", "your novel is so different from any of the multifarious kinds of stories we've come to expect from you".

Burger admits to having misgivings about the novel, so does Westlake's wife, as Westlake writes: "Abby, in gentler terms, agrees with you. [...] If I may draw the comments to their essence, the book is dull [...] Abby thinks the cutting of a hundred pages of hemming and hawing would help, but then what? I think it's attic-ready right now, so I'd only do more work if there were another destination".

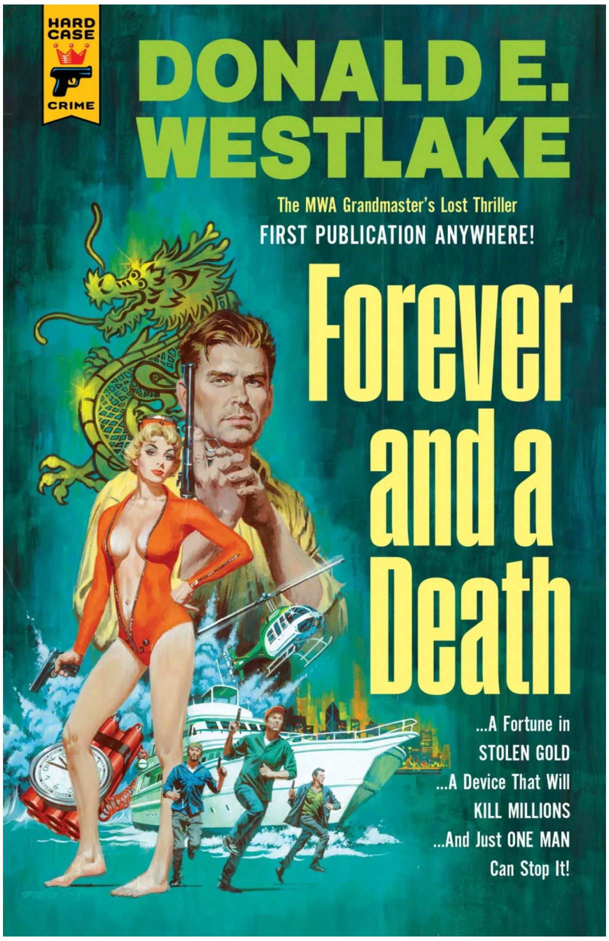
Since people who had read the manuscript didn't seem to find it good enough, it seems that Westlake ultimately lost interest in seeing it published. So Fall of the City remained unpublished (and probably not really completed by its author) until that around twenty years later, the publisher Hard Case Crime decided to publish the novel in June 2017, posthumously (Westlake died in 2008). However, on this occasion the publisher decided to change the title of the novel from Fall of the City to Forever and a Death, which had at one time been considered by Westlake as the title for his Bond 18.

More importantly, the novel underwent cuts intended to improve the story and make it less bulky, transforming the 610-page manuscript into a novel that is (only) 433 pages.

- Charles Ardai (publisher of Forever and a Death)[55] : When I got the manuscript of Forever and a Death, then called Fall of the City, it was 610 pages long, as I recall, and when I read it, it was very clear that it needed a good editing pass to slim it down. There were long stretches in the book where Don put the crime/thriller plot on hold and wrote what amounted to a travelogue, detailing the restaurants and sights of various foreign locales. And while the writing was typically charming, it just stopped the book dead and needed to come out. There were also some other bits and pieces to fix, such as one character [the lawyer Brevizin, who in Fall of the City, went to Singapore and Hong Kong along the others[56]] who was lugged along through the climactic scenes even though he literally never had any role to play. He was always just the last guy mentioned as having gone up or down the stairs or into or out of a room, he never did anything else. So he needed to be left back home after the last scene in which he had a role to play. Those sorts of edits are the sort I've done on countless of our books, so I had no trouble doing them myself. When Don was alive, I worked with him to make smaller edits to a number of his other books, so I had a pretty good sense of what sorts of changes he'd welcome and which ones he might have resisted. [....] There was only one page missing from the manuscript, and I had no choice but to write the missing page myself, but I defy anyone to guess which page it was.

Forever and a Death (and Fall of the City) should not be confused with a novelization, because if they indeed takes up some elements of the 35-page treatment of Bond 18, there are also many differences and additions. Starting with "the hero" who is not (copyright required) named James Bond, but an American named George Manville. He's not a spy, but an engineer. I put quotes, because if the first part of the book actually presents Manville as the hero, with good scenes for him at the beginning, he quickly finds himself drowned in a package of other more interesting characters.

Indeed one of the things that is surprising in the story is that there are a multitude of other characters on whom the author focuses depending on the chapters. The panel is wide, it goes from the girl, to police inspectors, to environmentalists, to a lawyer, etc... Curiously it is often interesting to read their points of view, they are all credible. But suddenly George Manville disappears from the novel in favor of these other characters for very long periods. In the end, the absence of a "main hero" who moves the story forward alone gives a



HARD CASE CRIME
DONALD E. WESTLAKE
The MWA Grandmaster's Lost Thriller
FIRST PUBLICATION ANYWHERE!
Forever and a Death
...A Fortune in STOLEN GOLD
...A Device That Will KILL MILLIONS
...And Just ONE MAN Can Stop It!

non-Bondian atmosphere to the story which is not a spy adventure, but a thriller. The characters who are morally questionable are the most interesting, with their elaborate interior monologues giving us a better understanding of them, and the villain is arguably the best character in the book and he dominates by far the narrative (he is the main character).

The villain is Richard Curtis, a construction magnate. A few years ago he was still based in Hong Kong, but he was forced to leave the city because of the Chinese government following the handover in 1997 (indeed, the events of the novel happens after the handover). Curtis has lost a lot, but still seems to be okay since he moved his business to Singapore. Moreover he recently acquired a small uninhabited island near Australia where he plans to build a leisure complex. Today he is preparing to test on the island a new rapid deconstruction method developed by one of his engineers, George Manville. This method boils down to a sort of artificial tsunami in underground tunnels, the "soliton".

However, the activation of the soliton suffers complications when a group of environmentalists named Planetwatch arrives on the site and when one of their diver, Kimberly "Kim" Baldur, is hit by the soliton wave. The girl is still alive and fished out, but Curtis would prefer her dead in order to be more easily able to bring the environmentalists to the justice. Theses ecologists have been a thorn in Curtis's side for a long time and he doesn't want them near him and interfere when he will start his big secret project: destroy Hong Kong with the soliton to take revenge on the Chinese, while stealing the gold from the banks' underground vaults of the city in the process.

Curtis tasks the captain of his yacht (Zhang Yung-tsien) to finishing off the girl instead of doing it himself: making therefore his first mistake, the one that will lead to others.

Indeed the captain has difficulty bringing himself to kill Kim, and Manville discovers that she is still alive, contrary to what Curtis had announced to his crew and his guests. Curtis then reveals to Manville that he is actually on the verge of bankruptcy but that he has a plan to recover, something illegal that involves the soliton.

However, the murder of the diver is not to the liking of Manville who will try to help her and refuse the 10 millions in gold that Curtis offers him to turn a blind eye. Curtis realizes he has said too much and that his engineer will not change his mind; he then brings on his ship a trio of henchmen led by a certain Morgan Pallifer to eliminate Manville and Kim Baldur.

Manville, however, saw this coming and put to sea a boat from the yacht to make it appear that they had left. However Pallifer is not a fool and knows that they are still on board; he begins a search of the yacht. Manville manages to overpower one of the men and take his pistol. Problem: he has no idea how this gun works: is the safety catch in the on or off position? By studying it Manville deduces the position of the safety catch, thanks to his engineering training, and manages to gain the upper hand over the henchmen. He then flees Curtis' yacht with Kim Baldur.

Manville and the girl then move/hide in a hotel in Brisbane. Manville telephones a friend and learns that Curtis has taken the lead in having him accused of industrial espionage. His friend put him in contact with a lawyer named Andre Brevizin.

While Manville goes to meet the lawyer and explain the situation, Baldur is spotted in a cafe near the hotel by Morgan Pallifer and his men. She manages to escape, but when Manville returns to meet her, he is captured and taken to Curtis' property in Australia described as a "ranch" (an Australian's "station").

There Curtis invites Manville to share a dinner with him and a few other guests. Curtis talks about how he and his late wife took over her family's Hong Kong construction company and grew it into what it has become. He talks about the death of his first wife, then his remarriage and divorce.

Once alone with Manville, Curtis says he acted badly towards him and apologizes. He is ready to drop the accusations of industrial espionage against Manville and leave the girl alone, but in exchange Manville must remain confined at the ranch with Pallifer for about two weeks; while Curtis accomplishes his secret project. After that Manville will be free to leave.

Manville is unsure whether if he should believe Curtis and is inclined to believe not (Curtis keeps him alive in case he has technical questions for him about the soliton). He tells Curtis that he accept his offer and agrees to make a TV appearance with him from the ranch, in order to clear his name of accusations of industrial espionage. Once Curtis leaves the ranch, Manville will start looking for a way to escape.

Meanwhile Kim Baldur joined the leader of her branch of Planetwatch, Jerry Diedrich, and Diedrich's lover: Luther Rickendorf. They are surprised to see her alive because they thought she was dead because of the soliton. Just shortly before, Diedrich and Luther had gone to ask questions to the captain of Curtis' yacht, Zhang, to get answers on some inconsistent points. Zhang had decided to say nothing and committed a suicide after their departure.

Baldur tells Diedrich and Luther what happened and they go to the police. The inspector they speak to, Tony Fairchild, is intrigued: this could explain Zhang's mysterious suicide.

Fairchild then questions Curtis who gives him plausible explanations/lies and manages to make Fairchild believe his version. Curtis also meets the lawyer Brevizin: he also manages to convince him that what Manville told him was false.

Curtis then leaves for Singapore where his company headquarters is located but sees on the plane he takes that Baldur, Diedrich and Luther are also among the passengers. Curtis correctly guess that they are going to Singapore to investigate on him and that Diedrich has a mole in his company, which would explain why Planetwatch is always on his back in all his projects.

Curtis thinks quickly and calls from the plane Colin Bennett, one of his former employees whom he had fired a few years earlier following an incident that the latter had started on a dam construction site in Belize (incident during which a man died, but Curtis is not aware of this detail). Bennett is the kind of man who will do anything to show Curtis his worth and get a second chance (and a job) from him. Curtis hires him to tail the three members of Planetwatch and see who they meet.

Meanwhile George Manville, at the ranch in Australia, is hiding on the property (on top of the open garage door). When Pallifer leaves the ranch in his car, he discovers that Manville is now hidden in the back of it. Manville kills Pallifer before he have time to draw his weapon.

Bennett tails Baldur, Diedrich and Luther but is spotted. After a week of unsuccessful results, Bennett, desperate to show his worth to Curtis, decides to take personal action by kidnapping Diedrich when this one wanders away from the others to go to the bathroom. Bennett takes Diedrich home, interrogates him with physical torment and obtains the name of the mole which he passes on to Curtis. Bennett also gets the reason why Diedrich seems so personally on a crusade against Curtis: because of the death during the construction of the dam in Belize, who was Diedrich's lover (before Luther).

This is a problem for Bennett since he is himself the one responsible for this person's death, and not Curtis who doesn't even know there was a death. Bennett therefore kills Diedrich and, afraid that Baldur and Luther also know about the dead man in Belize, he decides to eliminate them as well. Bennett goes to the latter's hotel and attacks Kim Baldur, but flees when Manville arrives and intervenes.

Manville explains to Baldur that after escaping from the Australian ranch, he joined the lawyer Brevizin and that they spoke together with Inspector Tony Fairchild. The policeman being so upset at having been fooled by Curtis' good words, decided to accompany Manville to Singapore. Baldur and Manville go to join Luther and Fairchild at a police station where the inspector who takes charge of them, Wai Fung, is not very receptive to the idea that Richard Curtis is behind Bennett's actions. Then Manville imagine that Curtis' secret project with the soliton might be located in Hong Kong.

Wai Fung directs them to the inspector Martin Ha of the Hong Kong police. So Manville, Luther, Baldur and Fairchild leave for Hong Kong and tell this inspector that Curtis might want to steal gold from banks and cover his tracks using the soliton. The theory seems to be confirmed when Ha mentions the presence of tunnels under Hong Kong intended for the buildings' air conditioning system.

They therefore go to inspect the tunnels in which Luther comes across Bennett, who then kidnaps him. Curtis decides to move forward with his plans now that Luther's disappearance must have been noticed.

Manville, Baldur, Fairchild and Ha manage to determine from which construction site Curtis is conducting his operations, and go there with around twenty police officers. Curtis' men then opened fire, holding their positions and preventing the police from entering; Ha is killed.

Meanwhile in the tunnels, gold from the vaults of a bank (named Cathay Bank) is loaded into an underwater submarine drone and then the tunnels are flooded. Luther, who managed to free himself, goes move a bulldozer which prevent the police from progressing.

The police now manages to take possession of the premises and even capture Bennett and Curtis' diver. However Curtis is not there (he is sailing away from Hong Kong in a boat, the submarine carrying the gold sailing behind him).

The urgency is to goes into the flooded tunnels and defuse the explosives before they detonate and create a soliton; which should happen in less than thirty minutes.

So Kim dons the diver's equipment and defuse three charges out of six, which is enough to prevent the soliton from being created: Hong Kong is saved.

Curtis, however, menaged to escape with the gold. However while trying to transfer the gold from the submarine to his boat, Curtis is unable to prevent a collision between the ships and the rope that connect them is cut by the propeller of the submarine. Left adrift in the darkening sea on the sinking drone submarine (to which it's now lacks hatches), he appears to die.

This is how Forever and a Death ends, in terms of differences with the Bond 18's treatment we can also add that compared to Gideon Goodbread, Richard Curtis is not fat and always eating, he didn't make his fortune in wheat, his Australian ranch doesn't have an artificial appearance and he has no children. Kim Baldur seems to be simply American (compared to Muffy Bhang who was a Chinese-American).

As for commonalities with Bond 18, we can leave it to Jeff Kleeman:

- Jeff Kleeman[57] : In both, the villain is a wealthy and powerful businessman with a worldwide construction company who had earlier married into a Hong Kong family. He's created a device that can produce a destructive soliton wave, which he first tests on an island in the Coral Sea that had been a Japanese observation post in WWII. The test is in service of being able to rebuild the island as a resort.

There's an environmental watch group boat that tries to stop the test and one of its members [...] dives into the water, is knocked unconscious by the blast, and is brought aboard the villain's boat. [...]

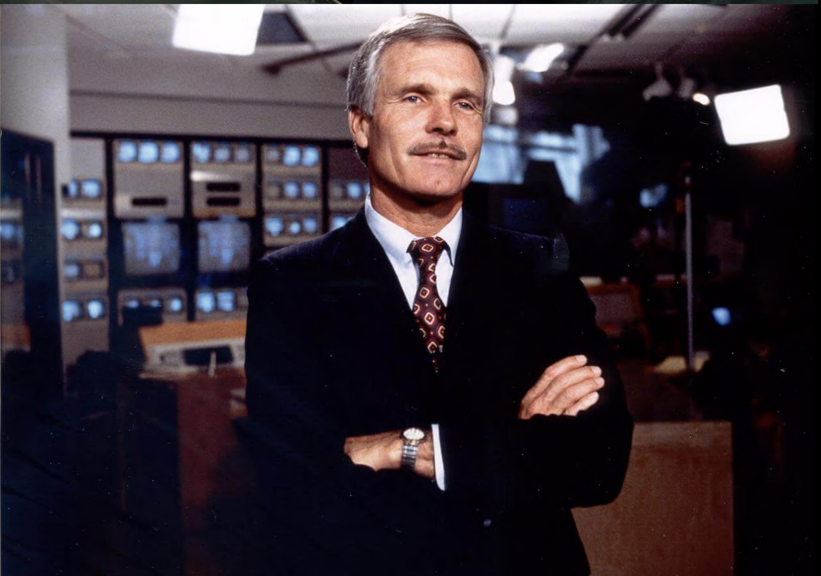
The villain has a compound in a remote part of Australia where Bond and Manville are treated as both guests and prisoners. As part of their escape, both end up hanging on to the metal framework of the garage door (an idea Don lifted from one of his own Richard Stark novels!).

The villain's plot is to rob Hong Kong's banks and then level the city as an act of revenge (in the treatments it's a revenge against China as they are about to receive Hong Kong in the handover, whereas the book takes place after the handover). Figuring out which Hong Kong construction site is being used; the workers barricading it against the police, resulting in a giant firefight; a radio-operated submarine to carry looted gold out through flooded tunnels.

Enter Bruce Feirstein

- Bruce Feirstein[58] : The idea for the media villain came to me while we were still working on GoldenEye. It was the summer, just before the film came out and one Sunday morning, I was watching the satellite news in my hotel room. Flipping back and forth between Sky News, the BBC and CNN, I was amazed, and startled, by how different their coverage was of the mid-east. Each one brought a particular bias to their newscasts, and each one portrayed the same exact event with a different villain, a different explanation, and a different analysis of who gained or lost. As a journalist, this didn't surprise me. Objectivity in news is an ideal. And nobody's perfect. But watching these three different interpretations of the same event was the beginning of Tomorrow Never Dies. Of course, I wasn't exactly starting from scratch here: I'd worked for, or met, various media barons, like Rupert Murdoch and Ted Turner. And at the time, Robert Maxwell had just committed suicide, and Italy's Silvio Berlusconi was on the rise. Carver was a combination of all these guys, with a nod to Orson Welles's Charles Foster Kane, and William Randolph Hearst. Hearst, of course, [...] who supposedly said "You provide the pictures, I'll provide the war".

Rupert Murdoch, born in 1931. He created News Corporation and notably owned the newspapers The Sun; The Times and The New York Post. He also had HarperCollins, one of the largest publishing houses in the world and he also acquired the 20th Century Fox. Murdoch is famous for his media consolidation and political influence through channels such as Fox News which he founded in 1996. Murdoch is recognized for having built an immense fortune by controlling a vast media empire, playing a key role in the contemporary media landscape.



Ted Turner, American born in 1938. He founded Turner Broadcasting System (TBS) in 1970, launching CNN, the first 24-hour news channel. In 1996, he merged TBS with Time Warner. Turner redefined the media landscape by popularizing cable channels and influencing modern journalism.

THE EUROPEAN
One money for Europe
THE EUROPEAN
One money for Europe

Robert Maxwell (1923-1991) was a British media mogul of Czech origin. He built a media empire by acquiring newspapers such as the Daily Mirror and publisher Macmillan. Known for his flamboyant personality, he has been accused of manipulating financial markets to support his businesses. His career ended with a financial scandal and his mysterious death in 1991. His body was discovered floating in the Atlantic Ocean after what appeared to be an accidental fall from his yacht following a heart attack. However, speculations of suicide or an orchestrated accident due to his financial problems arose.

Silvio Berlusconi, born in 1936, was an Italian businessman and politician. He rose to fame as a media mogul by founding Mediaset, a major television group in Italy. He also owned several television stations, newspapers and magazines through his media group. Berlusconi then used his media notoriety to enter politics, becoming Prime Minister of Italy on several occasions, while sparking controversies over conflicts of interest and press freedom.

Charles Foster Kane, fictional character from the movie Citizen Kane (1941), directed by Orson Welles. Welles played himself the part. Based in part on media mogul William Randolph Hearst, Kane is a powerful businessman and owner of a vast media empire, including newspapers and radio stations.

William Randolph Hearst (1863-1951) was an American media mogul. Owner of newspapers such as The New York Journal and The San Francisco Examiner, he used sensationalism to build a media empire in the late 19th century. He sensationalized/exaggerated Spanish atrocities in Cuba, influencing American opinion in favor of war. Historians, however, rejected later claims that he started the Spanish-American War as too extravagant.

"When I was doing the final polish on GoldenEye, just before production, in November 1994, Michael Wilson and I had talked about the possibility of my writing Bond 18", Feirstein recalls[59]. "I said to Michael: I have this idea for the next film, a Hong Kong media baron"[60]. The production, very satisfied with the rewriting work that the screenwriter had carried out on GoldenEye, decides to entrust him with the writing of the new film.

"I started working on Tomorrow Never Dies just after GoldenEye came out. On January 6, 1996, I was in London", says Feirstein[61]. "Before I started writing the script itself, Michael and I sat in the EON offices in London for about three months, through March, kicking around ideas and stories", adds the screenwriter[62]. Barbara Broccoli was also there when she was not busy in Los Angeles[63].

Feirstein originally didn't want Bond to face hordes of henchmen in action scenes. The screenwriter remembers having debates on this subject with Michael Wilson where he said things like "basically believe that in the basement of every building in the world there are eighteen guys in camo-gear waiting to spring"[64]. "I didn't see this as being a [villain] character who was surrounded by eighteen guys in black camo-gear, carrying Uzis or whatever", confides Feirstein, "I saw him as a guy being surrounded by eighteen guys with briefcases. That was lost. At the box office, obviously I was wrong"[65].

> - Bruce Feirstein[66] : There was also a language I wanted to use for him, which is a military language. I wanted him to be very formal and for everyone to refer to him as "Mr". And I wanted almost a one-word exclamation: "Excellent!", "Outstanding!".

"What I really wanted to explore was the idea that somewhere Bond had had someone he was madly in love with", recalls Feirstein[67], explaining that as the origin of the character of Paris.

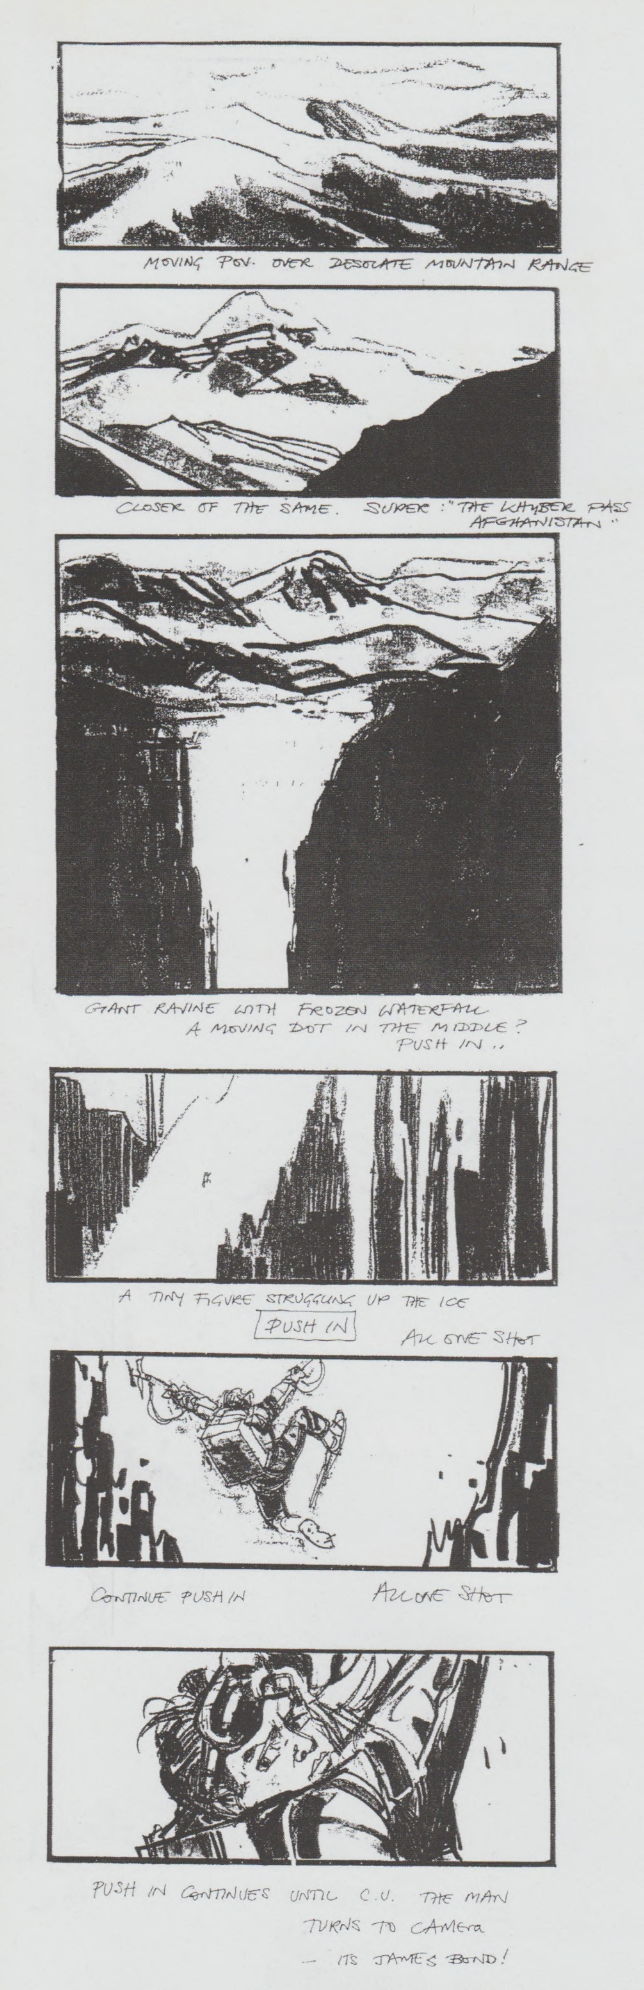
> - Bruce Feirstein[68] : When we started talking about Tomorrow Never Dies, I had three sentences on the blackboard. The first sentence was, "Words are the new weapon, satellites are the new artillery". The second sentence was, "I'm not going to end up with you in some raft again". And the third one was, "Contrary to what you believe, the entire world isn't made up of madmen who can hollow out volcanoes, fill them with long-legged women, and threaten the world with nuclear annihilation".

Like for Westlake's time, the idea is to use Hong Kong handover as a backdrop. "It was in the Zeitgeist. Some people insist that [Westlake's] treatment inspired Tomorrow Never Dies, [...] in fact, it had nothing to do with it. We're all swimming in the same culture; we're all exposed to the same stuff", says Feirstein[69]. Venice was also considered as a location following a suggestion from Michael Wilson to use the Venice Carnival[70].

On May 14, 1996, Feirstein completed a 16-page "Bond 18" treatment[71] that I don't have in my possession.

On June 27, 1996, the production found itself in mourning: Albert "Cubby" Broccoli died of heart failure in his Beverly Hills's home at the age of 87[72]. He, who had practically dedicated his life to the Bond's films and had acquired the love and respect of his collaborators throughout these films, is no longer here.

August 23, 1996' script



MOVING POV. OVER DESOLATE MOUNTAIN RANGE
CLOSER OF THE SAME. SUPER: "THE KHYBER PASS AFGHANISTAN" GIANT RAVINE WITH FROZEN WATERFALL A MOVING DOT IN THE MIDDLE? PUSH IN ..
A TINY FIGURE STRUGGLING UP THE ICE PUSH IN ALL ONE SHOT
CONTINUE PUSH IN ALL ONE SHOT
PUSH IN CONTINUES UNTIL C.U. THE MAN TURNS TO CAMera – ITS JAMES BOND!

- Bruce Feirstein[73] : When I went to work on GoldenEye, before I met Pierce [Brosnan], I wrote the character of James Bond hearing Connery's voice. [...] On this one, I only heard one voice: Pierce. Pierce has become Bond.

On August 23, 1996, Bruce Feirstein delivered his first script for the film. "Bond 18" is then 157 pages long and we already find many points in common with the film.

The script doesn't open with a gunbarrel sequence but on an immense waterfall of frozen water at the Khyber pass (Afghanistan). The camera moves closer to a small black dot: James Bond is climbing the frozen waterfall, an ice ax in each hand and crampons on his feet. As he climbs, a piece of ice breaks away from under one of his shoes and falls into the void: "There has to be an easier way to earn a living", he comments.

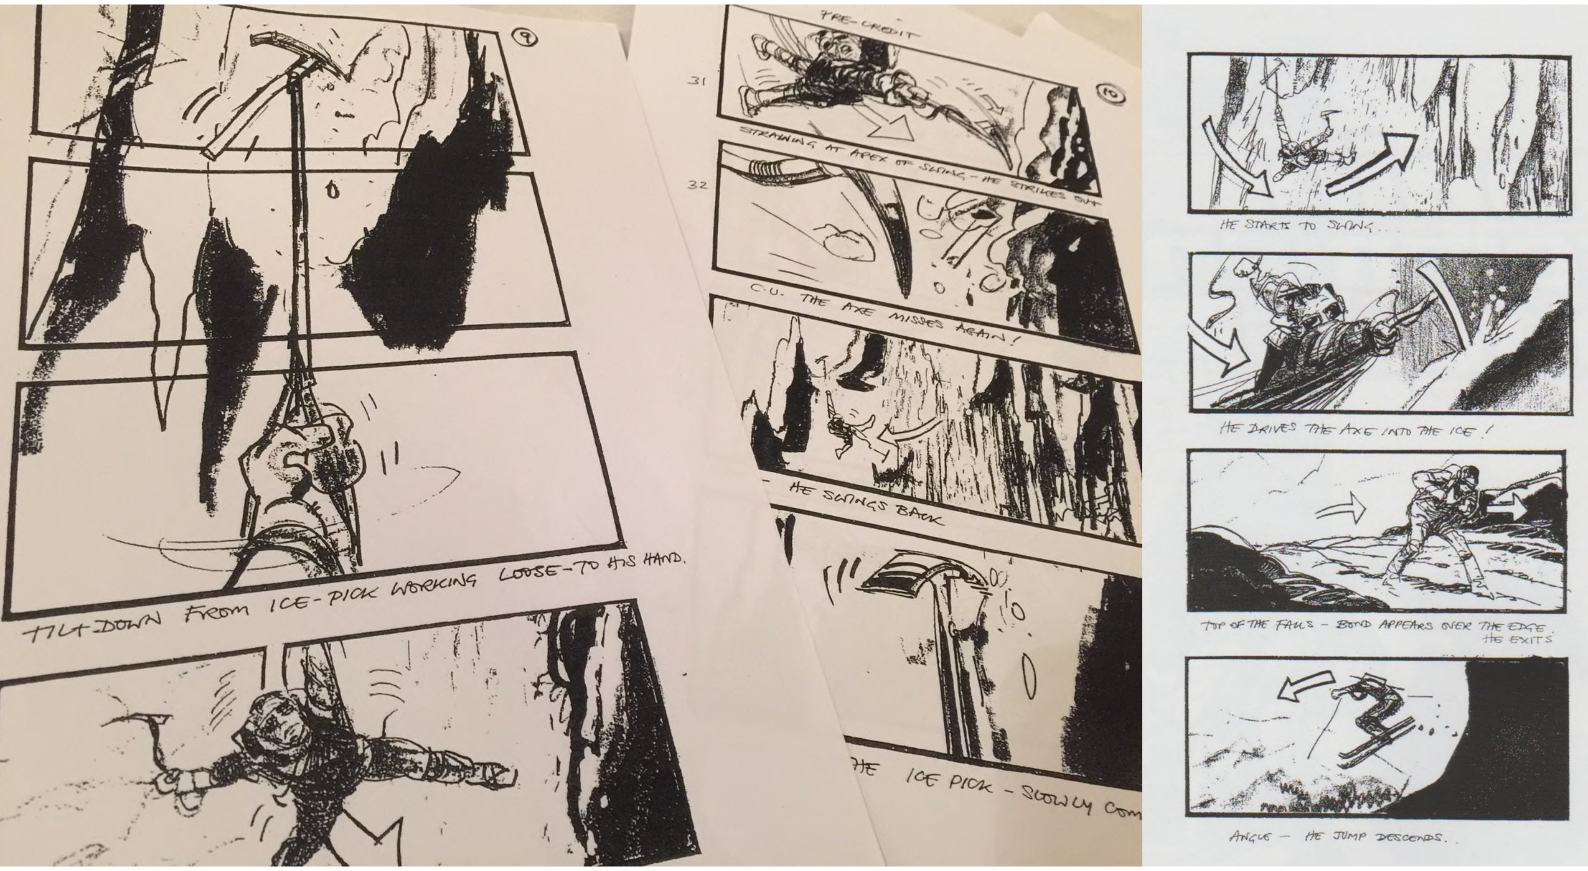
If you played the mission Cliffhanger in Call of Duty: Modern Warfare 2 (2009): you have a pretty much idea of the looks like of this scene.

Arriving near the summit, Bond plants his second ice ax on a wall of ice which breaks. In the surprise he loses his grip on his first ice ax and 007 is now suspended 175 meters above the void, held only by the leather strap (attached to his arm) of the first ice ax which is still embedded in the wall. Bond thinks and starts rocking back and forth, trying to drive his second ice ax into the ice. He almost succeeds several times as the leather strap of his first ice ax begins to fray. Bond finally manages to plant his second ax in the ice, just as the strap gives way.

007 picks up his first ice ax and continues his ascent, but upon reaching the summit he plants one of his axes in the ice which releases a pocket of water from the waterfall.

A torrent of water falls onto 007 who is now crawling on his stomach through the water on 7 meters of inland. Once out of the water, he takes an elongated black box and two cigar cases from his backpack. After pressing buttons, the box transforms into skis and the cases transform into two ski poles.

He then skis towards a snowy forest in "perfect Olympic form", slaloming between the trees, making a 30 meter jump.



9
TILT-DOWN FROM ICE-PICK WORKING LOOSE - TO HIS HAND.
PRE-CREDIT
31
10
STRAINING AT APEX OF SWING - HE STRIKES OUT
32
C.U. THE AXE MISSES AGAIN!
HE SWINGS BACK
HE ICE PICK - SLOWLY COM
HE STARTS TO SWING...
HE DRIVES THE AXE INTO THE ICE!
TOP OF THE FALLS - BOND APPEARS OVER THE EDGE
HE EXITS
ANGLE - HE JUMP DESCENDS.

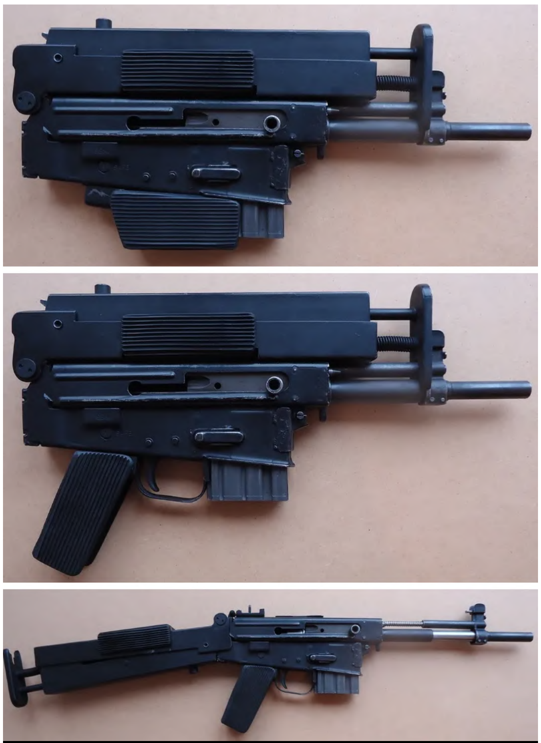
- Bruce Feirstein[74] : There was a terrific pre-credits sequence originally written for this film, one of the first things I wrote, and it involved an ice climb. I loved it; I adored it, but the simple truth is, the stuntman looked at it and said, "This is far too dangerous".

- Director Roger Spottiswoode[75] : We did all the pre-production work on that mountain climbing bit indeed: storyboard, scenery, etc. We had experts etc. But it the end it was simply too dangerous to shoot, so we decided to drop it [this sequence].

(For the record, Chris Corbould said that the special effects department had indeed created this pair of special skis which was ultimately removed from the script[76]).

Arriving near an arms market, 007 unfold a high-tech automatic rifle and observes the place with the scope (the images from the scope are transmitted to MI6) and M then makes the following remark to Admiral Roebuck:

- M: What were you saying, Admiral? Something about this "not being a job for a wine-sniffing, skirt-chasing playboy spy?".



The production also created the folding rifle, although no scene in the film will show us it folded.

- Roebuck: I'll be sure to acknowledge 007's "assistance" in my report to the Prime Minister. But this is, still, a naval operation.
[...]
- M: I'm interested in success, Admiral. Not who gets credit.

From there, everything happens more or less as in the film (arms market, MI6, cruise missile), or rather as in the novelization since there is Bill Tanner (and not Charles Robinson).

The major difference is that it is not a question of Gupta here but of a certain Kim Dae Yung (North Korean who is a specialist in the nuclear field) and of a red box which could contain nuclear weapons (and not a GPS encoder). One of these weapon being spotted under the wing of one of the MiG-29.

Bond puts on a show, he throw a grenade and fire on explosive crates, creating a diversion. He run to the MiGs, shooting some guy and leap on the pilot, "they fall to the tarmac, fighting. Bond shoves a knife in the man's ribs, killing him". Another enemy arrives and 007 yanks the knife from the pilot's body and throw it to him.

007 take one MiG and we see him fly away trough the explosion as in the movie. He is purchased by the other MiG while being strangled, except that in this script Bond's MiG-29 flies in reverse (!) above the enemy aircraft before activating the ejection seat.

- Bruce Feirstein[77] : In the first draft, the [Bond's] plane came in overhead and Bond shot it [the seat] down, but technically we found out it wasn't possible.

Gunbarrel (at last!) + credits sequence.

007 is at Oxford University (in front of which an Aston Marin DB5 is parked) where he is learning the Mandarin Chinese language (not Danish) with a pretty professor named Jenny Wu (around 30). These two are quite close:

His hand goes beneath the sheets.
- Bond: And what do you call these? The Gang of Two?
- Jenny Wu (smacking his hand, laughing): Stop it!
- Bond: I was just getting to the interesting part!
- Jenny Wu: We've already done the interesting part. Do you forget?
- Bond: Remind me.

They are interrupted by a Moneypenny's phone call. Jenny is dressing in a "full Victoria's Secret outfit: Nylons, garter/suspenders, bustier, etc" while Moneypenny says to Bond he is summoned here.

As he leaves college, we can see on a TV that Valentin Zukofsky (strangely spelled like that in this script) has been elected president of Ukraine! (Also we learn that the story is set after the Hong Kong handover).

James Bond arrives in a DB5 at the MI6 conference room, where he meets M and NATO Colonel Dominique Everhart, Belgian, thirty-year-old. She thinks that the red box he saw at the arms market contains uranium 235; she is interested in Yung and a certain Rendera Sikrahm, also known as Richard Stamper, who also appears in the market video:

> - Col. Everhart: Kim Dae Yung. Moscow-trained North Korean nuclear weapons specialist; apparently fell out of favor with the current North Korean regime after a botched attempt to steal fissionable material from a British light-water reactor in South Africa; an accident that left him entirely hairless... [Another face appears on screen] And Rendera Sikrahm, also known as Richard Stamper. Freelance mercenary, Laos and Cambodia. His father was from Nepal, a Ghurka warrior, conscripted by the British government to fight in China during World War II, after which the family settled in Hong Kong, where the young Stamper was undoubtedly treated like a second class citizen by both the Hong Kong Chinese, and local British. We've all read about the signs at the British swimming pools in Hong Kong that said "No Ghurka's allowed". [...] In conclusion: Both these men have a vendetta against the world. They are nuclear armed, and dangerous.

After this presentation by the colonel, M tells Bond to get her number in case he needs more information. So he goes to her and there's a mutual attraction according to the script. She asks Bond for something to write on, and he gives her a pen; she asks what the pen does: he replies that it depends on the number she writes. She smiles, Bond notices the wedding ring. He asks her if she is married and has children: yes, three. So she asks Bond if he is married, he says no. She adds that she suspected it. 007, however, is troubled and a little darker after this line ("Bitterness? Remorse?"). So he takes the card with the number, tells her to take care of herself and leaves.

Then comes some exchanges with Moneypenny (where it is implied that Bond and Dominique already knew each other):

> - Bond: Moneypenny! We've got to stop meeting like this. They may be on to us.
> - Moneypenny: Hello, James. Enjoy your meeting?
> - Bond: In the darkest moments, it's what I live for. Especially since I've heard how much you like to watch... On the hidden camera.
> - Moneypenny: By the way, James: Ordinarily I would never ask, but... Weren't you and that Colonel once stranded on a raft for two weeks in the Sargasso Sea?
> - Bond: Moneypenny! How indiscreet! Have you ever known me to kiss and tell?

- Moneypenny: Actually, I've never known you to do either... But...
- Bond: ...We all want what we can't have?
- Moneypenny: Not all of us, 007.
[The door to Moneypenny's office opens].
- Bond: What, no lust for adventure?
- Moneypenny: No, 007. It's just that I've learned from personal experience that when we get what we want... Somehow the reality is never as... Satisfying as the fantasy. Don't keep M waiting.

Bond joins M in her office where she is waiting for him with Minister Peter Johnstone. They tell him that an anonymous source (who only wants to speak to 007) has indicated that Elliot Harmsway, a media mogul who has previously expressed displeasure with Hong Hong's handover decision, may have connections with Stamper, Yung and uranium. Harmsway also allegedly helped to elect Zukofsky in exchange for uranium. (The villain's name must be taken from the expression harm's way = "in danger" in English).

- M: Tell me 007, what do you know about Elliot Harmsway?
- Bond: Only what I read in the newspapers.
- Johnstone: His newspapers?
- Bond: Occasionally, yes. British media mogul. Born in Hong Kong; controls newspapers, TV, radio, cable, satellites; books, magazines, movies, computer software. Theme parks.
- M: Along with Tomorrow: the first world-wide newspaper. Circulation 27 million. Daily.
- Bond: "Able to topple governments with a single story", as he says in his press.
- Johnstone: Exactly.
- Bond: ...What's Harmsway done?
- M: It seems, 007, we've received a tip...
- Johnstone: A rumor... From an anonymous source...
[...]
- Johnstone: Need I remind the two of you that Elliot Harmsway, Sir Elliot Harmsway, is directly descended from the Earl of Aberdeen? That his Scottish ancestors practically invented Hong Kong, and out of sheer gratitude, Queen Victoria herself named the port "Aberdeen Harbor" in their honor?
- M: ...No more than I need remind you, Minister, that merely being a member of the lucky sperm club, does not preclude one from a life of criminal activity. (To Bond) The reason I invited the Minister here, 007, was to reassure him that this investigation will be handled with the utmost discretion.
[...]
- Bond: ...Didn't we once investigate Harmsway?
- M: Yes. 1988. He was furious at the British plan to return Hong Kong, and supposedly started his own negotiations with the Chinese Government. The inquiry went nowhere; but it did earn MI6 a rather powerful enemy.
- Johnstone: Not to mention the chaos it caused at Whitehall when his newspapers began screaming for the recall of the sitting government.
[...]

- Johnstone: There is one last thing, 007: Elliot Harmsway is vital to the economic interests of this nation. He's also a major contributor to the party. I expect him to be given every consideration.
- Bond: Political considerations?
- Johnstone: To the best of my recollection, Mr. Bond, I suggested no such thing. In fact, I was never here.
[Johnstone leaves].
- Bond: I hate to ask, but... Did you ever think you'd miss Communism?
- M: We serve the interests of the British people, 007. No matter who we may be foolish enough to elect.

M sends his agent to Venice where he will have the task of discreetly investigating Harmsway by meeting the anonymous source at a carnival. Before leaving, Malcolm Saunders, described as Q's successor, appears; this is clearly not the first time he has encountered 007. The man is plastered from head to toe and Bond asks, "What is it this time? Rocket in the leg? Machine pistol in the arm?". Saunders tells him that he just hurt himself cutting the cake at Q's retirement party.

- Bond: Come on. I know better than that. (Bond thwacks the crutch against Saunders' leg and he grimaces in pain) It must do something.
- Saunders: Well... If you insist.
Saunders flexes his broken arm, armored spikes pop out of it.
- Bond: The die is cast.

We learn that Q is enjoying his retirement by going fishing:

- Saunders: Now pay attention, 007. We haven't much time to demonstrate your new Q toys.
- Bond: How is old Q?
- Saunders: Gone fishing.
- Bond: Fishing?
- Saunders: Big game fishing... Sonar torpedoes. Retirement gift from his friends at the CIA.

Saunders gives Bond a sort of flamethrower/explosive lighter, a code-cracking card, explosive shoelaces, and a laser watch that also has a Geiger counter function:

- Saunders: A typical plastic security card. Name here, magnetic information stripe here... And a code breaking microprocessor here. Swipe it through any card reader, anywhere, you're in.
- Bond: Does it work on cash machines?
- Saunders: It was an authorized test. I returned the money.
- Bond: I see...
[...]
- Saunders: Oh. I almost forgot. There is one last thing: Before Q retired, he asked that I give you one other protective device.
- Bond: A wedding band??? What am I supposed to be able to do with this?
- Saunders: I believe Q's exact words were: "Hopefully, nothing".

Arriving by gondola in St. Mark's Square in Venice at night, Bond wears a cape and a carnival mask given by M to meet the anonymous informant: it is a woman who also wears a mask. She meets Bond, but tells him that she thinks she is being followed and gives her another meeting place where Bond pulls her towards an alcove. The woman removes her mask and we discover Paris (an ex of Bond).

We learn that Bond is not really happy to see her again because he thinks her specialty is "goodbyes". So it would be her who dumped him. Paris tells him she's sorry and that she missed him; Bond slaps her. She asks him if he feels better now that he have done it and he replies, "Do you?". 007 is remorseful for having hitting her and slowly returns to her, she tells him that Harmsway is crazy and that he would keep the stolen uranium on his boat where he has to hold a conference the next day.

The scene becomes more romantic, Paris lies in his arms and she asks him to kiss her. Bond first asks her how she knows Harmsway, she doesn't answer. Paris kisses him and suddenly she struggles and screams, telling him to let go; four men dressed in black capes and white masks approach Bond. Paris runs towards them. Bond doesn't understand until he realizes that one of the men is Stamper (Paris makes the latter believe that Bond is just an alcoholic who kissed him).

Stamper asks one of his men to take her back to the boat and approaches Bond with two other henchmen. Bond flees up the steps of the Rialto Bridge and throws his cape up "like Batman", saying "So that's how he does it". He menage to mingle in the carnival crowd but one of the henchmen spots him and the pursuit resumes. Bond sees a group of tourists and takes a camera from them which he uses to "flash" one of his pursuers before sending him a souvenir seller's cart. The man (who is "built like a bank vault") gets back on his feet and sees Bond disappear into a street, he tries to get there but his path is blocked by two bikers who are talking: the henchman lifts one of the motorcycles (with the biker still on it!) and throws it into the canal.

007 arrives at Plaza San Salvatore, his three pursuers separate to find him. Suddenly a hand from one of the men grabs Bond; "in one fast move, Bond side-steps, ducks, and twists out of the cloak, throwing it over the thug's head. And as the thug struggles to get out from under it, Bond slams him head-first into a wall, knocking him out". Bond leaves and the other henchman prepares to shoot the person in 007's cape but realizes it is his colleague. Bond arrives at the Contarini del Bovolo and climbs the spiral stairs; the two henchmen hear his footsteps and chase him.

007 climbs onto the roof of the building and jumps to another building below where he lands on a steep roof; unable to place his foot on a support, he slides on the tiles to the edge. As 007 manages to climb to safety, one of the men jumps onto his roof and fights against him. He sends Bond sliding down, then loses his balance and slides after Bond. At the edge of the roof Bond is about to fall onto the skylight of a building below but manages to grab onto a gutter. The man passes by him and clings to Bond's legs to avoid falling onto the skylight 4.6 meters below. A second later they both fall through the skylight and find themselves in a medieval museum. The man quickly recovers, grabs Bond by the collar and places the barrel of his gun against his chin, saying, "I owe you some pain".

In a split second Bond grabs the villain's arm and pulls his chin away from the gun: a shot is fired into the ceiling. Taking advantage of the fact that the flash of the detonation has temporarily blinded his adversary, Bond grabs a candelabra and hits the man's arm with it; he drops his weapon. 007 takes out his Walther but the bad guy grabs his arm and disarms him, the gun falls to the ground. He sends Bond to a corner of the room and pushes some massive tables and chairs away as he walks towards him. 007 pushes an armor stand on a wheeled tray toward him, but the villain blats it out of his way, like if it was a gnat. Bond grabs a wooden leg from a broken table and uses it as a bat to keep him away. Unimpressed, the villain smashes a window with his fist and grabs a claymore sword. He cuts Bond's table leg in two with the sword and 007 is forced back to a display case where he grabs a halberd.

The villain drops his sword and grabs a poleaxe. The two men briefly fight with their medieval weapons until the villain breaks 007's halberd. Bond is forced to retreat towards an iron maiden (a sarcophagus with lots of spikes inside); the bad guy tries to get him inside but the English agent steps aside at the last minute: the man almost ends up inside.

Bond grabs a morgenstern from a wall and hits the villain's poleaxe with it; they both lose their weapons. The villain then tries to strangle Bond but the latter manages to free himself from his grip and tries to grab a hand axe. The villain recovers the Walther from the ground while Bond is unable to get the ax out of the wall... At the last second 007 manages to dislodge it and cuts with it the leather straps which support the iron maiden. This one, in a camera shot seen from the inside, falls on the bad guy and impales him. 007 gets his weapon:

- Bond: He fought hard... But the case was terminal.

The next day Elliot Harmsway is on his yacht, the Sea Dolphin II, where he gives a press conference on his oceanic research. Bond must go on board to see if the uranium is really there as Paris said and if so, signal to Franco DiGiacomo of the Italian secret services to come on board with his men and arrest Harmsway.

The script tells us that Harmsway has an "evil euphoria, showing off all the charm and charisma that's made him one of the world's most powerful media tycoons". He explains to journalists that underwater drills are going to investigate the long-term effects of pollution in sea-bed (he shows them the machine, they are similar to the one in the film). Other of its possessions such as radars will study the wind. He thanks Zukofsky for his help and explains that he is going to give to the mankind this experimental research yacht while asking for nothing in return, except the TV broadcast rights. Miss Venice comes to inaugurate the yacht by banging a bottle of champagne against the hull then Harmsway answer some of the journalists's questions:

- Reporter #1: Mr. Harmsway: Why did you name this boat the Sea Dolphin II?
- Harmsway: Actually, my first choice was "No Comment". So if someone asked where I was, I could truthfully respond "No Comment". [...]
- Reporter #2: Sir Elliot: Is it true you're in negotiations to move your offices from Hong Kong to Kuala Lumpur?
- Harmsway: No comment.

007 infiltrates aboard and opens the door of a room using his card that allows him to crack codes; room in which he finds the red box of the pre-title which actually contains uranium. His Geiger counter watch confirms that and he takes a little time to search the rest of the room in which he doesn't find much other than saws for the drill, nothing that seems interesting.

Bond goes back up and signals with his laser watch (the beam of which is blue) to DiGiacomo who is in a cafe nearby. While Bond tries to not attract attention, our dear Valentin comes across him and invites him to the bar (the dialogue is rather funny).

- Zukofsky: Mr. James Bond!
- Bond: Valentin. What an unpleasant surprise.
- Zukofsky: What brings you to Venezia, Mr. Bond? Business? Or somebody else's business? [A mistress of Zukofsky, Sofia, comes and he gives her money to go shopping].
- Zukofsky: Come. Let me buy you a drink. It's free. Two vodka martini's. Shaken. Not stirred. And you?
- Bond: One.
- Bond: I must say, Valentin, capitalism seems to be treating you well.
- Zukofsky: I was used to sell weapons; now I buy votes. Off the record.
- Bond: Of course. If you can't beat the government, you might as well own it.

- Zukofsky: Wait, I want you to meet a friend of mine. Elliot! Elliot! Come here.
[...]
- Bond: You might say I've always been one of Mr. Valentin's biggest followers.
- Valentin: "Biggest followers?". He's practically made a career of it!!
- Bond: It's a beautiful boat, Sir Elliot. Practically glows in the dark.
- Harmsway: I can tell you're a man with an eye for exquisite possessions, Mr. Bond. (To Paris off camera) Darling! Come here. (To Bond) I want you to meet my wife. Paris Harmsway, allow me to introduce you to James Bond. But then... I believe you two have already met.

An uncomfortable silence then occurs which is broken by DiGiacomo and his men who board to search the boat and arrest Harmsway. If Valentin gives an excuse to withdraw: "I think I suddenly remembered an urgent meeting in Moscow", Elliot invites the authorities to follow him. Bond remains behind with Paris. She is terrified, he wants to console her, but she pushes him away, telling him that Harmsway will kill her if he continues. Bond therefore sends her to his hotel room to protect her and tells her that he will join her in 20 minutes; she is waiting for an "I love you" from Bond which will not come.

Bond returns to the police and sees Harmsway opening the red box which contains uranium; but it however turns out to be depleted uranium and therefore harmless: "a child could sleep on it", says Harmsway. He claims it is a gift from the Russian government to create tools for his oceanic research (in reality Yung had found a trace of Bond's passage, a loosely closed drawer, and had switched the boxes). Also there is a hint that Harmsway and DiGiacomo are in cahoots.

The authorities apologize and leave, leaving Bond alone with Harmsway. The latter asks Bond if he enjoyed this little game and provokes him by telling him that he shouldn't screw with a man who buys ink by the ton, because "it's deadlier than uranium". To conclude, Elliot asks him if he is not late for his "meeting"...

Bond hurries and arrives at his hotel (the Danielli), he shouts for Paris, but it is already too late. She is dead, floating on the surface of the canal. Bond is "crushed, devastated" and as a misfortune never happens alone, DiGiacomo arrives and places him under arrest...

In the South China Sea, the British frigate HMS Indomitable prepares to go radio silent to be as undetectable as possible by sonar/radar.

Outside a Scottish manor, Harmsway places a final red rose on his wife's coffin before joining other men with Stamper in a room inside. To tell us about the description of the place, the script tells us: "we're in a room that looks as if it could only exist in, well, a James Bond movie: slick, stark, sterile. Steel, glass, chrome". There is a sort of meeting around a table which strongly resembles the scene where Carver speaks with the members of his network in the film:

> - Number 1: Sir Elliot: The entertainment division is releasing three new animated children's movies this year. By the time we're finished promoting them on our TV, radio, cable, newspaper, and magazine outlets. There won't be a parent in the universe who won't feel guilty if they don't take their children to our stores and theme parks to buy the toys, books, videogames and clothing featuring our "lovable little creatures". We anticipate revenues of 3.1 billion dollars.
> [...]
> - Number 2 (a man who looks "remarkably like Bill Gates"): [...] our software division has introduced a new computer operating system, Gates '99. It's deliberately filled with bugs. So people will be forced to buy our upgrades over the next five years.
> [...]
> - Harmsway: By the way, Number 5, who's ahead in the American elections?
> - Number 5: The Democrats, sir, by nine points.
> - Harmsway: Maybe it's time to publish that story about his sex life. [...] A close race is always better for our TV ratings.
> [...]
> - Number 3: I regret to inform you, sir, that Saddam Hussein is still demanding a bonus for his role in the Gulf War.
> - Harmsway: ...Haven't we already paid him for his services?
> [...]

At the end of the meeting, a 3D map of Malaysia appears and Harmsway says that "in exactly 36 hours, we are going to initiate phase one of the word's most perfect crime: The biggest theft in the history of mankind".

As in a SPECTRE meetings, Elliot gets rid of one of his collaborators. This man whom the script calls "Number 3" (Mr. Azziz) is suspected of embezzling 10% of the money that Harmsway pays to Saddam Hussein. Stamper is then be assigned for accompanying Number 3 to his jet. They get into a car and suddenly Stamper turns around putting his hand in his jacket: false fear, Stamper just offers chewing gum to Number 3. Arrived at the airport, Stamper gives Number 3 a newspaper so that the latter will have "something to read" during the flight. Once inside the plane, Number 3 discovers a photo of himself on the front page of the newspaper with the headline "Israeli agent revealed", then two Arab men come and sit next to him on the plane. Number 3 lets out a scream...

It is night and according to its navigation instruments, the HMS Indomitable is currently in the Strait of Malacca. Some of the crew members, however, wonder if they are in the right place and in space we see a satellite of HNN (Harmsway News Network). Suddenly the sea drill (named "the worm") previously seen on the Sea Dophin II in Venice, hits the ship and sinks it (unlike in the film, the Chinese don't appear). The drill then takes care of the survivors' inflatable boat. On the Sea Dolphin II, Elliot watches this while whistling Wouldn't It Be Loverly, and sent his divers aboard the wreck...

Bond is in delightful company at the Bibendum restaurant in London when he receives a phone call from Miss Moneypenny. We find him again in his DB5 in which he goes to the conference room of the Bank of London. He enters, in his Royal Navy's uniform (while Roebuck was protesting that this matter should be strictly handled by the Royal Navy), and finds M, Tanner, Minister Johnstone, Admiral Roebuck and a treasury official.

The minister reveals that HMS Indomitable has just issued an abandon ship signal and gave its last known position (south of Kuala Lumpur, Malaysia). Meanwhile, the drill (which has uranium teeth) and Harmsway's divers invest the wreck to recover what they came for: gold bars. The drill tackles the first pile "like butter" and pumped to the Sea Dolphin II, forming a "cascade of gold nuggets" (like in Westlake-Wilson's second treatment)...

Bond learns at the meeting that the frigate was carrying a third of Britain's gold reserves, being repatriated from Hong Kong to England following the handover. Minister Johnstone wants Bond to be present as an observer during the recovery mission by the Navy. Privately, Bond tells M that it seems strange to him that there is no trace of the ship's wreck on the infrared satellite images of its presumed position; she asks her agent to go to Kuala Lumpur in order to investigate the disappearance of the gold. When 007 asks her if Harmsway hasn't set up his new headquarters in this city, she replies:

> - M: Contrary to what you may believe, 007, the world is not filled with madmen who can hollow out volcanoes, stock them with big-breasted women, and threaten the world with nuclear annihilation.

She adds that the Harmsway affair is closed, the Italian authorities have concluded that Paris committed suicide. They had enough trouble preventing Bond's name from appearing in the media and M say that his mission is not to settle a personal matter with Harmsway.

Elliot Harmsway arrives by helicopter at his Hong Kong offices (located at HSBC Main Building) where he meets General Li (of China) to sell him the building. One of the Harmsway lawyers explains to him that he could get a better price if he wait longer, but Elliot says that would be against the old principles of the feng shui and signs the document. He explains it is also in the name of feng shui that the building has a "fifth, non-functioning ventilation shaft on its roof".

With the sale concluded, Harmsway joins his helicopter with Stamper on the roof. The aircraft takes off and we see that a cable now connects the skids of the aircraft to the ventilation system that Harmsway was just talking about. Elliot opens a bottle of champagne as he glances down to watch the vent attached to the helicopter "topple onto the General and his aides, scattering them like rats". The pilot cuts the cable and Harmsway raises his glass and says, "Confusion to the enemy. In 48 hours, that building and all of Hong Kong around it, will cease to exist".

Bond is on a Sea King helicopter which flies over the presumed last position of HMS Indomitable; there is no trace of the frigate.

HNN's new headquarters is located in the Petronas Towers in Kuala Lumpur, the tallest building in the world (at that time). A secretary of Harmsway informs him in particular that the Canadian Prime Minister wants to have lunch with him ("pencil it in for the next trip"), that the candidate for the American presidency has complained about the sex story ("Send him a $10,000 campaign contribution, and explain I have no control over what my journalists write"), that the Queen invites him to dinner ("Yes"). Harmsway arrives in a room where he learns about world news:

> - Harmsway: Morning, all my golden retrievers. What kind of havoc shall we create in the world today?
> - News editor 1: A ferry sank and burned in Pakistan; 457 dead.
> - Harmsway: Good.
> - News editor 2: American jetliner down in Omaha.
> - Harmsway: Better.
> - News editor 3: Economic summit ends in Tokyo...
> - Harmsway: Boring.
> [...]
> - News editor 4: There's something up with the British Navy in the Strait. Rescue planes, helicopters [...]. They just chased away one of our news boats.
> - Harmsway: Is that so?
> [...]
> - Harmsway: I'm shocked!! Issue the usual vehement protest: Freedom of the press, people's right to know... Lather it up with a lot of righteous indignation. Next?

Meanwhile, 007 is informed that the body of a crew member has been recovered and the Sea King return to the coast. As he exits the helicopter, Bond runs into Jack Wade of the CIA. He asks him what he is doing there and Wade makes him understand that officially, he is not there and that the CIA doesn't know about the missing gold, at least officially ("the world is my office", he adds). They examine the body of the crew member: a "shark attack?" asks Wade, seeing the wounds made by the drill, but for Bond this can't be the case: "The veins are cauterized, as if they were sealed by heat...".

Bond and Wade go to Port Klang by cigarette boat because Bond wants to ask the port harbormaster for reports on tides, currents and maps in order to determine where the body has drifted from and thus find the location of the frigate. Towards the end of the journey they almost hit another boat driven by a woman of around 32 years old (Sidney):

> - Wade: I think I've just seen my next future ex-wife
> - Bond: Not if you kill us first; unless that's how you plan to leave Muffy.
> - Wade: By the way, Jimbo, whatever happened to that girl, in Cuba?
> - Bond: Natalya?
> - Wade: Yeah. Russian Minister of Transportation.
> - Bond: She married a hockey player.
> - Wade: ...I envy your "undercover" assignments.
> - Bond: We work in the dark. We do what we can.

(This is a reference to the fact that Izabella Scorupco, the actress who played Natalya in GoldenEye, was going to get married in december 1996 to Polish hockey player Mariusz Czerkawski).

They meet the harbormaster who makes them understand that a certain Sidney Winch has already stopped by to ask similar things. When Bond asks the harbormaster if anything unusual happened the night HMS Indomitable disappeared, the man tells him that a certain Captain Cheong was late with his ferry.

We find Bond in a white tuxedo in a "yacht club", sitting at a table where he, Cheong and Wade are playing a kind of poker. The captain (who wears an eyepatch) tells him that his boat's satellite autopilot put them on a bad course; another boat captain had the same problem. Cheong advises him to speak to Sidney Winch, owner of a maritime salvage company because no one knows more about the strait than she. She can be find at the establishment's bar. The description read that she is "tough, smart, and (here's a surprise), beautiful". Bond approaches her but can't get anything useful:

- Sidney: Bourbon. Neat.
- Bond: I wonder if you handle your liquor more carefully than you handle your boat.
- Sidney: Sometimes, you just have to plunge into things. Be reckless.
- Bond: And I bet you always leave turmoil in your wake.
- Sidney: Have we met?
- Bond: This afternoon. Our boats practically kissed in the harbor. James Bond.
- Sidney: Sidney Winch.
- Bond (to bartender): Vodka martini, shaken not stirred. And another for you?
- Sidney: No. But you can buy a drink for my friend, Taro.

[She steps back, revealing a huge man in a dark suit: Taro].

- Bond: Boyfriend?
- Sidney: Chaperone. I'm waiting for my dinner date.
- Bond: Pity. (To the bartender) Bring him whatever he wants.
- Sidney: So what brings you to Kuala Lumpur, Mr. Bond? Wait, don't tell me: unhappy marriage? [...].
- Bond: Actually, I'm here on business. You might say it was a... Golden opportunity.
- Sidney: And exactly what business are you in, Mr. Bond?
- Bond: Insurance. Lloyds of London.
- Sidney: The Strait can be a very dangerous place, Mr. Bond. A few words scribbled on a piece of paper in London doesn't carry a lot of value out here. Including life insurance.
- Bond: I'll keep that in mind.
- Sidney: I see my date is here. (To Taro) And I think Mr. Bond is ready to leave.
- Bond: Nice to run into you again.
- Sidney: Let's not make it a habit.

She leaves and it turns out the person she was waiting for is none other than Harmsway, and Sidney exclaims "Uncle Elliot!!". Taro catches Bond and ask him to leave; 007 ties Taro to the bar by the tie with an ice pick (the same way he will do with a security guard at Zukovsky's casino in The World Is Not Enough).

The next morning, in a deserted marina, 007 comes across three young women in g-string bikinis then... Q. The Quartermaster tells Bond that he hopes this will be the last time he comes to his help and provides him with gadgets: a communication device (fax, telephone, pager), and a new car (brand and model unspecified) with the classic refinements: smoke screen, missiles, machine guns, armor, remote control, infrared thermal imaging radar, instruments navigation and... 17 cup holders!

> \- Bond: Q! How are you?
> \- Q: Retired. I'm not getting paid to help you save the world anymore.
> [...]
> \- Q: Your new personal communicator. [...].
> \- Bond: Do I have to dial "9" to get out?
> \- Q: I don't care who you dial, so long as it's not me.
> [...]
> \- Q: Your new car. (Insert name).
> \- Bond: Four wheel drive?
> \- Q: Yes. And do try to keep all four of them on the road.
> [...]
> \- Bond: 17 beverage cup holders?
> \- Q: Standard equipment. The world's automobile manufacturers seem to be in some kind of mad war to see who can provide the most beverage cup holders.

Q also created a "map" to locate the frigate's position using the recovered body and weather data that Bond had retrieved from the port officer. Looking at the girls, 007 tells Q that retirement seems to suit him well, to which Q reply to not to even think about it: they are his granddaughters...

Bond and Wade travel by sport fishing boat to the real location where HMS Indomitable sank. Bond dives and joins the wreck where he comes across a moray eel, then an obligatory dead body and finds a piece/bit of gold and a uranium tooth that broke off from the drill. As goes to surfaces, a boat anchor heading toward the bottom of the ocean nearly crushes him and three divers enter the water, including one who appears to have a harpoon gun. Bond realizes his best chance is to take one of the men hostage and he swim towards one of the divers before putting a knife under his throat. The diver who has what looks like a harpoon gun fires, but instead of a harpoon, it's a net that comes out and captures Bond and his hostage (the script specifies that this device really exists). They are raise onto the deck of a salvage barge where there are men (tattooed with scars) holding automatic weapons, including Taro (Sidney's chaperone). Taro points out to Bond that "Uzi beats knife" and Bond releases his hostage.

They push Wade (who has also been captured) and Bond to the captain of the boat: Sidney Winch. She asks Bond to give her a good reason not to "kill both of you, burn your boat, and use your bodies for shark bait". Wade seems surprised that Bond and Sidney know each other and 007 tells her that she is not going to kill them because firstly it is not in her nature and secondly there is no gold in the wreck.

Sidney doesn't believe a word of it, telling Bond that she's not one of his "little London girls" who falls for the lies. She intends to recover a third of the gold and 007 tells her that "even a little London girl knows that one third of nothing is still nothing".

She searches his trunks and Bond tells her he hopes she'll be gentle; "think about mom", she says, the "usual technique", he replies. She finds the piece of gold and the uranium tooth that Bond brought back.

- Sidney: And what do you call this?
- Bond: ...The family jewels?

A British Navy ship approaches the barge, the captain of it (a certain Morton) prepares to board them. The crew of the British ship fires a warning shot and the occupants of the barge dive to the ground, "except for Bond and Wade, who might as well be having tea. Bond looks down at Taro" and says to him: "Gatling gun beats Uzi".

Captain Morton gets on the barge and asks Sidney to clear the area and orders his men to arrest Bond and Wade. Sidney tells Captain Morton that she has no plans to leave because "I know my rights. These are international waters. The British Navy abandoned that boat, and I'm claiming it. Under international law, I have the right to salvage what's on that wreck".

Morton tells her that she should consider hiring an attorney and she replies him that she used to be an attorney. Seeing that Sidney doesn't intend to cooperate, he orders his men to cut the barge's anchor. Sidney shout and they leave.

Once on board of the British ship, Wade thanks the captain and tells him that the arrest trick was very convincing. It turns out that it is an ally that Wade had called before being captured. Morton says, however, that part of him wants to throw them in the brig, Bond was supposed to act as an observer and not a lone wolf. "The famous James Bond. I've heard all about you, sir". Once off the boat, Wade asks Bond what they are going to do now; 007 says there is someone he wants to ask for answers in Kuala Lumpur.

Bond is in his car heading towards Kuala Lumpur when he receives a call from Harmsway; he knows Bond is in the area and asks him to come and talk. How did he get Bond's number? He owns his telephone operator's company. "Let's find out what exactly he knows", Harmsway told Stamper after hanging up. 007 parks his car in the underground parking lot of the HNN offices and goes to see Elliot without a weapon (there is a metal detector).

- Harmsway: Mr. Bond! Nice to see you.
- Bond: Sir Elliot.
- Harmsway: Come. Let's get out of the noise. I'll give you a tour of the building, then we'll talk... It's funny, Mr. Bond. Of all the things I own, nothing gives me as much enjoyment as my newspapers. (Washing his hands) Ironic, isn't it? In the age of TV, I still can't get the ink out of my veins.
- Bond: Yes... A man with ink in his veins, and blood on his hands.

Harmsway smiles to himself, acknowledging the jibe, but decides to ignore it. He turns off the faucet, dries his hands.

- Harmsway: We print 31 newspapers here; another two-hundred-and-seventy at satellite plants around the world.

He pulls on his £2000 Saville Row suit-jacket.

- Bond: ...And how many of those newspapers carried Paris Harmsway's obituary?

[Harmsway presses an elevator button].

- Harmsway (With a smile): All of them, Mister Bond... [...] Before I became involved with Paris, she was always involved with the most "inappropriate" men... Playboys. Thrill seekers. Middle aged Peter Pans who only brought out the worst in her.
- Bond: I see.
- Harmsway: I tried to save her. But she remained a manic depressive: Fits, inappropriate behavior... Delusions of grandeur.
- Bond: I wonder if it runs in the family.
- Harmsway: The only difference between a psychopath and a genius, Mr. Bond, is the degree of success. Still, I do miss her. I only wish she could have lived to see all this.
- Bond: I can feel your pain.
- Harmsway: By the way, what brings you to Kuala Lumpur, Mr. Bond?
- Bond: Sightseeing.

[They pass into a room where portraits of Harmsway's ancestors hang].

- Harmsway: I call this the Rogue's gallery.
- Bond: Yes. I can see: you've hung the rest of your relatives.
- Harmsway: My third great Uncle, the Earl of Aberdeen, negotiated the purchase of Hong Kong from the Chinese. His son-in-law, George Harmsway, made the first family fortune, running opium into Shanghai... His son, Thomas, who lost it, smoking the opium... And my grandfather Henry, who opened the first telegraph station, and published the colony's first English newspaper. It was a city of unlimited possibility.
- Bond: So why did you leave?
- Harmsway: Because it's a dying city. Since the Chinese take-over, who knows what can happen tomorrow? In any case, this is my father, Charles: a royal bastard who started the first radio and television stations. Said I'd never amount to anything, but... I turned it into this.

[They enter a new room, the HNN News Center].

- Harmsway: Welcome to the new world order, Mr. Bond. Churchill had his armies; Caesar had his legions; I have my divisions: News, sports, business, entertainment. And these are my foot soldiers: 2000 people working on 14 floors to feed 300 newspapers, 4 cable news networks, 87 magazines, and 29 different cable TV channels; in 35 languages.
- Bond: And still not a thing to watch... Although it must be fun to have all those satellites.
- Harmsway: They're merely tools to disseminate information.
- Bond: Or disinformation... If you wanted to, say, beam down a signal to send a ship off course? Maybe one degree a minute?
- Harmsway: Fantastic idea Mr. Bond! Perhaps I should buy it for a book! It's totally preposterous, but... You amuse me. And now perhaps I can amuse you. Let's see... First we have this James Bond... I believe he's a field adjuster for Lloyd's of London. Then we have this James Bond... (KGB File) Licensed to Kill. Not a bad title for that book... Or perhaps you'd prefer this James Bond (Chinese file) who I believe they call "007". You see, Mr. Bond, you and I are both men of action. But your era is passing. Words are the new weapons; satellites the new artillery. And make no mistake about it: In the right hands, they can be as deadly as your Walther PPK.
- Bond: Words to live by?
- Harmsway: Your choice. Look at the time! Come. There's someone I want you meet, about a story I'm thinking of publishing.

> [They head to Harmsway's office, Bond is frustrated by Elliot's "I don't care what you think you know, I can crush you" attitude. Harmsway now thinks about using Bond in his plan. Sidney is in the office].
> [...]
> - Sidney: What is he doing here?
> - Harmsway: I see you two have met.
> - Bond: Briefly.
> - Harmsway: Don't pout, Sidney. I invited him here hoping he might shed some light on your story. He's from Lloyd's of London... Aren't you, Mr. Bond?
> - Sidney: He's not going to tell the truth! He was diving for the gold!
> - Harmsway: It seems, Mr. Bond, that Miss Winch has told me the most incredible story: a sunken British warship filled with gold; a British cutter firing on her; billions of dollars in bullion lying on the bottom of the Strait. Obviously, the British government denies all of this...
> [...]
> - Harmsway: ...But as I've explained to Sidney, without proof, there's just no story. Don't you agree Mr. Bond?
> - Sidney: But I have proof! You ran out of here so fast, I didn't get to show you.
> [Bond and Harmsway react: Harmsway didn't expect her to have a proof and Bond knows that if she shows it, Elliot will probably kill them both to eliminate any witnesses].
> - Harmsway (forcing a smile): ...And what's that, my dear?
> - Bond: Sidney, perhaps we should leave this to...
> [She takes out the piece of gold and the uranium tooth, Elliot says he will investigate thoroughly and dismiss them].
> [...]
> - Harmsway: One of my people will definitely be in touch, sooner than later.
> - Bond: I'm sure they will.

Sidney and Bond are escorted to the elevators. Once inside Bond tries to convince her that Elliot is going to kill them but she doesn't believe a word of it:

> [...]
> - Bond: Listen to me! I'm a British secret service agent. And we have about two minutes before Harmsway kills both of us.
> - Sidney: Has anyone ever suggested that you're a paranoid psychotic?
> - Bond: [...] We're the only ones who can tie him to the crime [of the HMS Indomitable].
> - Sidney: Elliot Harmsway is my uncle!
> - Bond: Blood or Dutch?
> - Sidney: He was my father's best friend!
> - Bond: He's killed closer.
> - Sidney: You are seriously deranged.
> - Bond: Maybe. But why are we going up instead of down?

Meanwhile Bond climbs into the emergency hatch of the elevator and asks Sidney to join him, she refuses. The elevator stops at 70th floor (still under construction), Sidney comes out and rushes towards Stamper and an armed guard, saying, "Thank God! He's crazy!". Stamper asks her if Bond is armed and she tells him no. Suddenly Stamper takes Sidney as a human shield to the latter's surprise, and asks his men to position themselves near the elevator doors which have since closed. In his radio he asks for the doors to be opened remotely and once opened his men machine-gun the inside before realizing that Bond is not there. Stamper approaches the elevator with Sidney, whom he still holds hostage, when Bond falls on him from the emergency hatch. He brings Sidney up with him, "need a lift?"; Stamper and his men machine-gun the ceiling.

They manage to get out of the elevator shaft and Sidney tells Bond that there must be a mistake, to which he replies that the only mistake is that they failed to kill them in the elevator.

007 sneaks behind a guard but is seen by a surveillance camera, Harmsway informs the guard by radio, saying that Bond is behind him but too late: Bond knocks him out and retrieve his submachine gun. Two more men arrive with MAC-10s and 007 fires a burst to force them to take cover. He leads Sidney through a door that leads to a kitchen. Then Bond has an idea and hands his gun to Sidney: "Come here. You shoot. I'll cook". "He offers a simple piece of advice: shoot back!". While she prevent the men and Stamper from entering, Bond pours the contents of a printer's ink cartridge into a coffee can, grabs a box of sugar and puts the lighter Saunders provided into the mixture..

> - Bond: How did you get into marine salvage?
> - Sidney: My father left me the business. I used to be a divorce lawyer in New York City.

Bond throws his homemade bomb at the guards and it explodes. He then throws a can of cleaner at Stamper, who takes cover thinking it is another bomb, which saves Bond and Sidney a few precious seconds.

Bond grabs a MAC-10 and heads to the stairwell with Sidney; pursued by guards, they enter a door on the 72nd floor. There Bond grabs a nail gun from a pile of construction equipment and attaches three nails to the door they just entered through to slow Stamper's progress. There is nowhere to go and they decide to go down a few floors using a windows cleaner's platform that is there. "Sometimes, you just have to take the plunge", Bond says, echoing an earlier dialogue with Sidney. Stamper is breaking down the door with a fire axe.

> - Sidney: All I know is one thing: If we get out of here alive, that gold is mine. I've earned it.

While they are still on the windows cleaning platform, Stamper enters the room and peeks over the ledge, Bond shoot towards him. Stamper moves away from the edge and, enraged, he swings an ax at the machinery of the platform which then stops about 6 meters from the bridge connecting the two Petronas towers.

> - Sidney: What now? And don't give me some movie cliché like "Trust me".
> - Bond: Trust me.

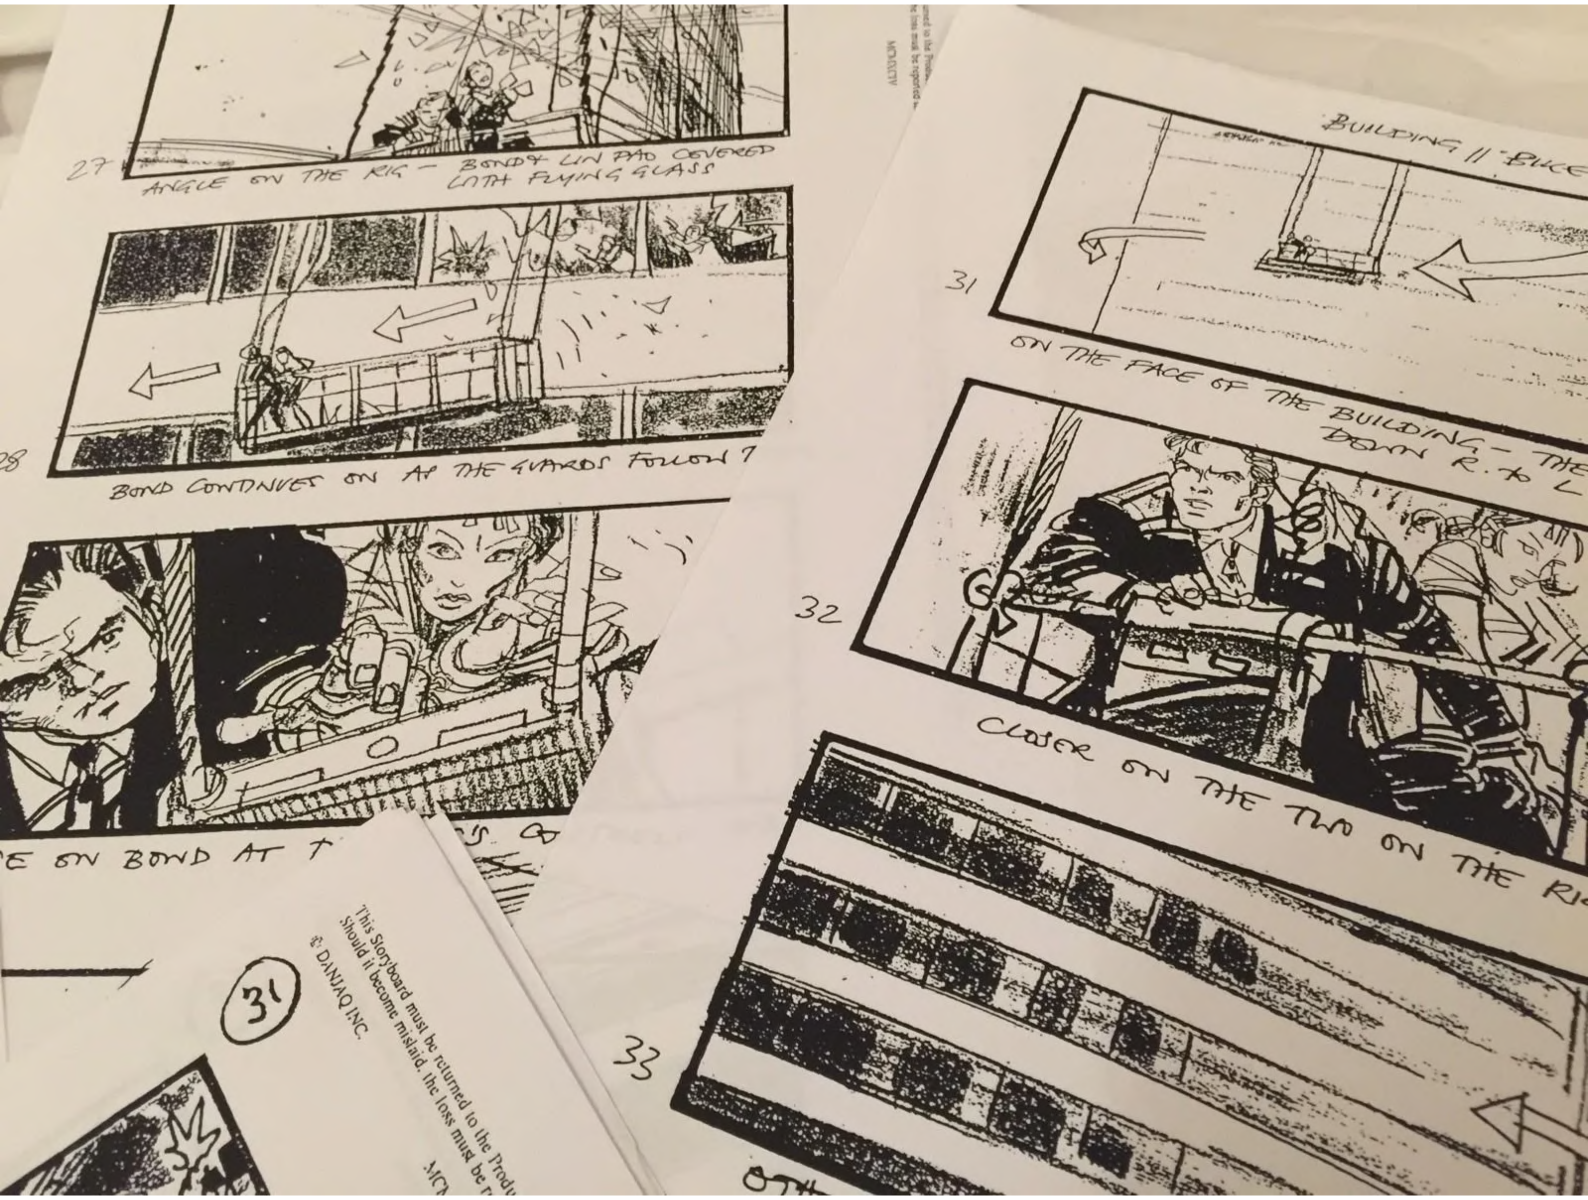
Bond shoots out a window adjacent to the platform and is about to climb through it when the platform drops 3 meters below. The platform's cable support is giving way due to Stamper's ax blows. Eventually the support gives way and the platform falls towards the bridge, during the fall Bond machine-gun the glass roof of the bridge and they land into the bridge. Bond pulls Sidney into the side of the building as the plateform's mechanism connected to the cables (like pulleys) falls towards them from Stamper's floor.



27
ANGLE ON THE RIG – BOND & LIN PAO COVERED WITH FLYING GLASS
28
BOND CONTINUES ON AS THE GUARDS FOLLOW
E ON BOND AT T
31
This Storyboard must be returned to the Produ
Should it become mislaid, the loss must be r © DANJAQ INC.
BUILDING // "BLUE
31
ON THE FACE OF THE BUILDING – THE DOWN R. to L
32
CLOSER ON THE TWO ON THE RI
33

- Stamper: They're on the bridge. Seal off the 50th floor!
- Harmsway: I should have hired this man. Get somebody up there!

Bond grabs the cable and ties it to a railing on the bridge. As armed guards come out of an elevator on their floor, he returns fire and jumps into the void with Sidney and the cable.

- Bond: Sometimes you just have to...
- Sidney: Don't say it.

Stamper is on a second windows cleaning platform, also going down. Bond and Sidney fall a long distance with the cable and come dangerously close to a balcony, fortunately their fall stops 1.5 meters from this balcony: the cable was just long enough.

- Sidney: Is this like a normal day for you?
- Bond: It's a lousy job, but the only reason I stay is for the health benefits.

Bond takes off his harness and goes down to the balcony with Sidney: they are now in a room where there are newspaper presses. Bond sees three armed men and shoots the hook of a crane to which a large roll of paper is attached: it falls and mows down the guards as it rolls. Bond and Sidney run but come across a henchman who has the build of a gorilla and an oversized crowbar. Bond and the man confront each other, he tries to hit him with his crowbar but 007 blocks with his weapon: the crowbar snaps it in half. A short but intense fight ensues on the press side. Bond finally gains the upper hand for a second and pushes the man backwards, towards a pile of ink barrels. Bond forces the momentarily stunned man's head into one of the barrels. As he emerges, covered in ink and gasping for air, Sidney hits his head with the crowbar; the man is K.O.

As they head towards the garage, one of the men, who had fallen due to the roll, trips 007; the English agent defends himself and sends the man against a machine whose purpose is to wrap the piles of newspapers with a strip of plastic or iron. Bond rushes towards him and activates the machine, the man is tied up. But as he turns towards Sidney, 007 sees that another man strangling her while pointing a gun at him. Suddenly Sidney bites the guard's arm, Bond takes the opportunity to dodge the shot before rushing towards the man. Bond sends him to a press where the man gets caught in the press rollers, then the pages of the printed newspapers suddenly turn red.

> \- Bond: He was bad news.

More men arrive and Bond rushes with Sidney into an aluminum slide that is used to transport the newspapers to the garage. Arriving there, they are greeted by ten armed men and Elliot Harmsway who claps his hands to applaud them:

> \- Harmsway: Very, very, good Mr. Bond. Outstanding performance. I'm the certain the British taxpayers would be impressed by your efforts. Don't you agree?
> \- Bond: I think they'd rather know who stole their gold.
> \- Harmsway: Why, I did, of course. It's on the Sea Dolphin II, twenty miles outside of Hong Kong... Not that it will do either of you any good to know. Now both of you: stand up. And toss the gun out, Mr. Bond.
> \- Sidney: Uncle Elliot: How could you do this to me?
> \- Harmsway: Oh, please, Sidney. There's a hundred billion dollars at stake. Besides, I never really liked your father that much. He cheated at cards.
> \- Bond: Are your guards really going to kill a helpless girl?
> \- Harmsway: My guards are from South Africa, Mr. Bond. This is their chance to get even with the formerly "Great" Britain. Now both of you. Put your hands on your heads, and step forward.
> \- Bond: What did you do, Harmsway? Make some deal with the Chinese government for the gold?... Was the radioactive uranium I found in Venice part of it?
> \- Harmsway: Questions, questions, Mr. Bond... Which I'm afraid I've neither the time, nor the inclination to answer. (To the guards) Take them out to the jungle and...

Suddenly Bond's car starts and the guards turn towards it. 007 takes a gun and pulls Sidney behind a newspaper cart: "I forgot to mention: the job comes with a car". The guards shoot at the car which Bond controls remotely, Bond having difficulty driving and shooting at the same time, he passes his gun to Sidney. Despite the heavy shooting, there are no visible scratches on the car except at the headlights. 007 stops the car near them, the doors open automatically and they climb inside (Bond at the wheel).

Guards climb into Humvees to give chase and a short chase begins in the parking lot: Bond presses a button and a machine gun comes out of the taillights lights and begins firing. Looking in the rearview mirror, Bond sees Humvees and presses another button: a missile comes out of its exhaust pipe and decimates one of the Humvees.

Harmsway asks that the power be cut off since Bond no longer has headlights and Bond lowers a viewfinder which gives him a thermal vision, "like the jet fighter videos from the Gulf War". As in the film, there is a garage door that is closing: 007 tells Sidney that it is radio-controlled and that he is going to try to break the code. A display then shows numbers changing as Bond searches for the code but it's too slow, Bond then presses a button which fires two missiles: this has no effect on the door and the car ultimately crashes in it. Elliot and Stamper approach of the remains of the car, Sidney and Bond are still inside, unconscious. "Built to withstand a nuclear blast", Harmsway comments about the door. Stamper then asks if he should kill them and Elliot replies no, instead he should take them to Hong Kong: 007 may have improved his original plan...

Near the port of Aberdeen, an HNN journalist interviews David Chin: a member of the staff of a nuclear power plant. Chin tells the journalist that the place is completely impregnable to a terrorist attack. The reporter asks the man to come closer to the microphone to say it again and Chin does so when suddenly white smoke comes out of the microphone; Chin falls. It turns out that this reporter is Yung and suddenly one of his cameramen points their camera (which are actually a rocket launcher) at surveillance cameras and the front door to destroy them. Harmsway approaches them and orders some of his men to put the drill in the water. Yung and his men invade the plant, posing as a journalist; he asks staff members:

- Yung: Why don't you line up against the wall? Let's make it a group shot.

The staff is massacred and Stamper brings Sidney and Bond, who are handcuffed, into the power plant where Harmsway is located: "I see you're in your natural element, Harmsway: A room filled with lethal power... With a toxic core at its center". Elliot replies that they arrived "just in time for a nuclear meltdown". There the media mogul explains his plan to them: in a few minutes the drill will arrive at the reactor core and when its radioactive teeth will cross the plutonium, it will trigger an instantaneous meltdown... He adds that Chernobyl will resemble a campfire in comparison.

Harmsway also explains his reasons: his ancestors contributed greatly to the development of Hong Kong until it became one of the best cities in the world. He wants revenge on England for its decision to hand over Hong Kong to the Chinese and wants to return the colony to the latter in the same state it was in before his ancestors developed it: "a barren, lifeless rock".

Before leaving, he presents 007 with a future article from his journal Tomorrow. "As the advertising [The paper that never lies] says: Tomorrow never lies", pronounces Elliot. On the newspaper it is written: "Hong Kong destroyed by nuclear meltdown... British agent found in reactor suspected of sabotage; Harmsway calls for British government to resign". Elliot admits to Bond that the new government, his government, will declare that the gold was irradiated in Hong Kong, but by a "coincidence", new gold mines will open their doors in Vietnam...

> - Bond: You'll never get away with it, Harmsway. Too many people know.
> - Harmsway: Who, Mr. Bond? The kooks, the crazies, the conspiracy theorists? The Oliver Stones of the world? I'll publish their books, I'll make their movies, I'll put them on my TV shows! They're my bellboys. They carry my luggage.

Harmsway leaves with the girl he intends to drown at sea and leaves Yung and a henchman behind, as well as Bond who is locked in an airlock near the reactor. (Bond had told him that it wouldn't be too credible if his body was found near Sidney's).

In the airlock, Bond removes his shoes: he unties his explosive shoelaces and opens a secret compartment in the heel which contains a detonator and earplugs. In the collar of his shirt are wires for the detonator. Bond manages to get rid of his handcuffs and a guard approaches because of the sound of the explosion. When the guard is close enough, Bond blows the door open. As Bond exits the airlock and retrieves the guard's gun, Yung presses a button that puts the drill into "autopilot" mode and he jumps on 007; the weapon slides to the ground. A hand-to-hand fight begins between the two men near the weapon, interspersed with camera shots in which we see the drill progressing towards the reactor core.

Yung manages to send Bond towards a wall on which there is a CO^2 fire extinguisher. As Yung manages to grab the gun, 007 sprays him with the fire extinguisher and Yung drops the gun. The villain then charges, sending him against the window of the reactor room. Bond dodges one of his blows and manages to throw Yung over his head, causing him to fall into the reactor room and more precisely into a cooling pool.

The drill is near the core though, it passes through Yung's body, and Bond runs to hit the reactor's emergency shutdown button. He activates a fire alarm, disconnects the drill and triggers the emergency decontamination system. He leaves the plant with the body of the guard and approaches an HNN Bell Jet Ranger helicopter on the ground. He places the body in the passenger seat and takes off.

Elliot is on the Sea Dolphin II (in which the gold is) where he is preparing to uncork the champagne: an HNN helicopter is approaching and he thinks it is Yung and the other henchman who are returning after completed their mission. Stamper takes binoculars and notices that there are two people inside: everything is normal. Bond takes the dead guard's submachine gun, opens his window and speeds off, "ready for war". Through his binoculars Stamper finally realizes that the helicopter is in fact piloted by Bond and warns the crew.

007 shoots from the window and uses the rotor blades to threaten the men on the deck: half of them jump into the water. Bond manages to hit the captain who then collapses on the helm, the yacht lurches. Two men respond with M-16s and 007 simultaneously grabs them by the shirt with the skids of his helicopter; they fall into the sea. The helicopter being in bad shape after a rocket launcher hit from Stamper, Bond prefers to abandon it by jumping on the yacht. The helicopter crashes and explodes on the gold hold, Harmsway recovers the captain's weapon and regains control of the Sea Dolphin II.

A violent hand-to-hand fight between Bond and Stamper begins on the yacht. As Bond suddenly recovers, Stamper presses a red button which turns on another drill that is on the boat. He pins Bond to a wall with one of his hands while he moves the drill closer and closer to 007's head with the other: "I'm going to do this slowly". Bond kicks Stamper who releases him and rolls away from the drill. Stamper charges at Bond by pushing the drill but misses him several times. Stamper is about to attack him a fourth time when Bond kicks him in the groin: he drops the drill which falls into the water and it is now digging its way through the hull of the yacht. 007 grabs a cable connected to the drill and manages to tie it around Stamper's neck: the latter, being hanged, die.

The yacht is now starting to sink, there are torrents of water and the drill is heading towards a fuel tank. Bond appears in a doorway in front of Harmsway and asks him where the girl is, banging him into the walls to make him talk while there are explosions around them.

Harmsway grabs 007's throat and they fight underwater; Harmsway drowns and Bond manages to return to the surface. Bond dives again to find an exit but there doesn't seem to be one... While he's running out of oxygen, Sidney appears and puts a re-breather in his mouth (she was held prisoner, locked in a room where there were oxygen tanks stocked. Camera shots of her trapped in this room were supposed to be shown during previous scenes, as the drill doing a hole in the room, given her a way out). On the surface, the two get into a dinghy:

> [...]
> - Sidney: Before we go any further here, Mr. Bond, from Lloyds of London, I just want to get two things straight.
> - Bond: ...Yes?
> - Sidney: First, that boat is in international waters. I'm claiming it for salvage. One-third of that gold is mine.
> - Bond: And number two?
> - Sidney: If you think we're going to have some kind of "life affirming" romance here just because we cheated death, let me be clear: we're going to have it where I want, and when I want.
> - Bond: And when might that be?
> - Sidney: Now.

They are kissing. In the distance, Wade and Q (called Major Boothroyd for the occasion) observe the scene with binoculars and say to themselves that life is unfair. Wade asks Q if he do gardening and the latter replies that the only thing he has ever "planted" are bugs.

M dictates a press release to Moneypenny, saying that the body of Elliot Harmsway has been found at sea and that it is presumed he have committed suicide.

> - Bruce Feirstein[78] : Most people wrongly assume the villain was based on Rupert Murdoch. In truth, the role model was the British press magnate Robert Maxwell, which is hinted at near the end of film, when [...] M, instructs Moneypenny to issue a press release stating that the villain died "falling overboard on his yacht", echoing Maxwell's demise.

James Bond pulls a tarpaulin over him and the girl while the dinghy is surrounded by the Royal Navy...

Credits + James Bond will return.

Revisions: Martian rock and personal demons

A revised first draft was then written at an unknown date. My 144 page copy display on the cover page "working title: Tomorrow Never Lies".

This script is almost the same one as the previous, some scenes were shortened here and here (for example in the pre-title sequence now omit the part with the water at the top of the frozen waterfall, as well as a jump in ski. As another example: later in Venice the scene where a henchman thrown in a the canal a motorcycle, with it's owner on it, disappeared too).

Some scenes and dialogue were also sightly altered here and here, for example we learn that the minor character Sitoshi Isagura is "currently working for the rebel forces in Zaire" or the script describe Stamper as a "short man".

Among the notable addition we note a "Good old James Bond. His first love was always the Queen" from Paris.

But one of the most interesting change occur during the meeting with Harmsway at Scotland:

[The part about the animated children's movies].
- Number 2: Sir. As you may recall, last year the American Aerospace Industry paid us 25 million dollars to help reestablish the US Space Program.
[A "Tomorrow" headline appears on a screen: "Martian rocks discovered. Life on Mars?"].
- Number 2: Having succeeded in this goal...
[Another headline appears on screen: "US president: We're going to Mars!"].
- Number 2: They're now paying us an additional 25 million, plus exclusive rights to broadcast the first Martian landing, live from Mars.
- Harmsway: Excellent, Number Two. Outstanding job. What about the other issue?
- Number 2: Well, sir, last year we ran this story...
[Headline on screen: "British beef: Mad cows?"].
- Number 1: After Sir Angus Black, the British Beef Baron, lost $10,000 to you in a poker game, and refused to pay.
[New headline: "Angus Black: Udderly bankrupt"].
- Number 2: In any case, although Sir Angus is now willing to settle his debt, I've just entered into an agreement with the French Beef Growers association to continue the story for one year... At a price of 50 million dollars.
[Headline: "Holy cow! French beef still safe!"].
- Harmsway: [...] Well Done!!! By the way, where did we find those Martian rocks?
- Number 2: The excavation for the pool at your house in Geneva.
[...]
- Number 5: But he [Hussein] feels that so long as you started the war as a way of introducing our news channel, it's only fair that his people should share in our success... Say, 500 million dollars.

We also note that this script doesn't include an unpleasant faith for one of theses Numbers (no Israelian agent accusation here).

In the previous script, Bond is having a diner at the Bibendum restaurant with a girl, "obviously a dreadful fix-up first date", while Harmsway is sinking the frigate. In this script, Bond appear however more affected by Paris's death. Indeed there isn't a restaurant scene in this new draft, but two scenes.

The first one show a James Bond who have drunk too much, playing (and loosing) at the Clermont Club casino of London. He ask for another martini, but the security of the casino tell him "Mr. Bond, I think you've had enough" and ask him to leave the casino!

Later we see in another scene Bond sleeping in his bed, drunk. "There's a banging at the door. He ignores it. After much banging Moneypenny enters, with two MI6 agents":

> \- Moneypenny: James?
> \- Bond (half-asleep): Paris?
> \- Moneypenny (shaking him): James! Wake up! M wants you.
> \- Bond: Go away.
> \- Moneypenny (to the agents): Get his clothes off, and get him in the shower.

"The two agents roust him from the bed. Bond stands, naked, under the steaming water, trying to pull himself together"!

007 end up to join the meeting at the Bank of England, here some dialogues have also been altered, like:

> \- Admiral Roebuck: With all respect, Minister, I resent your tone. The Her Majesty's Royal Navy has not lost the gold.
> \- Minister Johnstone (incredulous): You haven't lost the gold?
> \- Admiral Roebuck: No. It's just... Temporarily unavailable.
> \- Minister Johnstone: ...Temporarily unavailable?
> \- Admiral Roebuck: Currently inaccessible.
> \- Minister Johnstone: "Currently inaccessible"?
> \- Admiral Roebuck: Yes. Although not physically in our possession at the moment [...] it's still in our possession: A recoverable asset we fully intend to recover at the earliest moment of recoverability.
> \- Admiral Roebuck: Do you or do you not ACTUALLY HAVE THE DAMN GOLD?????
> [...]
> \- Minister Johnstone: Can anyone please explain [...] why that gold wasn't moved out of Hong Kong before the hand-over to China?
> - Bond: ...I believe I can, sir. [...] The Indomitable was delayed when the Prime Minister used the ship for a good-will trip Los Angeles.
> - Minister Johnstone: A good-will trip? To Los Angeles?
> - Bond: With his wife.
> - Minister Johnstone: Why didn't they take a plane!?!
> - Bond: His wife doesn't fly.

There is also a part of the scene between M and Bond, which in this script is set outside the building:

> \- M: Your job is to stop feeling sorry for yourself, and find the gold. Not settle some personal score with Elliot Harmsway. Understood?

"M gets in the car. It drives away, leaving Bond standing on a rainy London night, wrestling with his personal demons".

Writing summit

Director Roger Spottiswoode joined the production in September 1996[79].

- Roger Spottiswoode[80] : We met a couple of times, and they had a script they wanted to change a lot, but they first wanted a director involved. They offered it to me, and I thought it would be challenging and an enormous amount of fun to do.

Roger Spottiswoode.

The idea of making a film involving the handover of Hong Kong, which initially seemed good, turned into a problem. Kissinger Associates who is consulted to, according to MGM's Jeff Kleeman, "ensure the production are aware of any cultural or political issues, so you don't have a situation like we had on GoldenEye where we are a few days into shooting in Russia [...] we have to go back to London"[81], advises against[82].

- Bruce Feirstein[83] : The picture is greenlit and Spottiswoode comes on board. And one question that comes up is, can we actually do Hong Kong in '97? The handover of Hong Kong from Britain to China was supposed to be in May [July] of '97. The picture would have been coming out at Thanksgiving [late November] of '97. Henry Kissinger was on the board of directors of MGM and he advised against it, because [...] what happens if things go wrong [during the handover] and then you're stuck with a picture that's in an alternate universe? Everyone thought about this, and it made sense.

- Jeff Kleeman[84] : Nobody knew what would happen when Hong Kong changed hands and some people were predicting violent, bloody outcomes. What if we made the most expensive movie in the history of MGM/UA, the movie that the studio was relying on to keep it in business, and it took a lighthearted approach to something that emerged as the biggest global horror-show of 1997?

And even though the handover happened without incident, "It was August, 1996, and the script was one the studio didn't want to make. The story was centered around the Hong Kong changeover from British to Chinese rule. However, the film would have had to have opened in May this year to have any immediacy value and there was no way we could have made the picture in such a short space of time. The whole concept had to be radically altered", remembers Spottiswoode[85]. "I agree [with Cubby Broccoli to say] that Bond films take place five minutes in the future, not six months in the past", admits Feirstein[86].

- Jeff Kleeman[87] : China also turned out not to be a fan of GoldenEye. The Chinese blocked the film's release due to the opening credit sequence, which the Chinese deemed anti-communist. China was an emerging film market and if things didn't go well with the transfer of Hong Kong, MGM/UA didn't want to be unable to release yet another Bond film there.

Major rewrites will therefore be necessary to remove the context of the handover from the script and this is a real problem because time is running out and this film must be in theaters by December 1997 for MGM. Indeed, the lion company will be on sale again and "it was important to show the buyers that Bond was a franchise that could be put into theatres with some degree of regularity", notes Kleeman[88].

- Michael Wilson[89] : I feel trepidation. Getting it all planned out and the script right has been a major problem. Usually, if the script is not right, you just postpone the picture. But we can't do that. There is a release date and everyone has agreed to it. MGM said: "It is very important to us. Please do it". So we have a deadline, which is the tightest ever, to be on screen in December. To be frank, we have never been under so much pressure.

To move things along quickly on the script, the filmmakers were like: if two brains are better than one, then six brains are better than two or just one!

- Michael Wilson[90] : Roger [Spottiswoode] brought six writers to London for a one-week brainstorming session.

"The clock was ticking. [...] In our case, we wanted to be able to hire a department head, start location scouting, start working on stunts, start working on casting long before we'd lost three months", recalls Kleeman[91]. "Because at this point, we were under two years out from having to have this thing in theaters. The idea was to create a brainstorming session that would hopefully crack enough of the plotting of the script and the sequences so that Bruce could go off and write, having maybe saved what could have been five or six weeks of solo work"[92].

Plane tickets to London are payed six or seven writers, as well to rooms at the Dorchester[93] or the Athenaeum[94]. They are Nicholas Meyer[95], David Campbell Wilson[96], Tom Ropelewski[97], Robert Collector[98], Kurt Wimmer[99] and Leslie Dixon[100] (and maybe Dennis Feldman?[101]).

Nicholas Meyer, born in 1945 in New York, is a novelist, screenwriter, director, producer and actor.

After graduating from the University of Iowa with a degree in film in 1968, he worked as a press agent for Paramount Pictures until 1970. That year he published an essay, The Love Story Story, which studies the film Love Story from the same year. Meyer then turned into the detective novel with Target Practice (1974), a story inspired by a true event where a private detective from Los Angeles investigates the alleged suicide of a former sergeant of the the American army accused of having betrayed its country during the Vietnam War.

His first film writing credit was Invasion of the Bee Girls (1973).

Success came to Nicholas Meyer, thanks to his novels starring the hero Sherlock Holmes, the famous character created by Arthur Conan Doyle. The first, The Seven-Per-Cent Solution (1974), was adapted for the cinema under the same title in 1976. Meyer himself wrote the screenplay.

In 1976 he also wrote his second Holmes novel: The West End Horror. (Much later he would return to Sherlock Holmes with The Canary Trainer (1993), The Adventure of the Peculiar Protocols (2019), and The Return of the Pharaoh (2021)).

After 1976 Nicholas Meyer pursued his careers as a novelist and screenwriter in parallel, also moving behind the camera to become a director from 1979 with Time After Time, which tells the story of how the novelist H. G. Wells pursued Jack the Ripper through the ages using a time machine.

Between directing and co-writing the films Star Trek 2: The Wrath of Khan (1982), and Star Trek 6: The Undiscovered Country (1991), he wrote Star Trek 4: The Voyage Home (1986). Meyer will reconnect with the Star Trek universe by serving as a consulting producer and participating in the writing of an episode of the 2017' TV series Star Trek: Discovery.

Meyer has written other films and series such as The Day After (1983), Company Business (1991), The Informant (1997) or Medici: Masters of Florence (2016).

David Campbell Wilson is an American screenwriter who participated in the writing of The Perfect Weapon (1991), Supernova (2000) and The Man from UNCLE, (2015). He was also credited with the screenplay for Terminator Salvation (2009) in early promotional materials, but not in the final cut of the film.

Tom Ropelewski is an American screenwriter, director and producer. He notably wrote The Kiss (1988), The Next Best Thing (2000) and wrote-directed Madhouse (1990) and Look Who's Talking Now (1993). Ropelewski is the husband of Leslie Dixon.

As a screenwriter, Robert Collector's credits include Jungle Warriors (Euer Weg führt durch die Hölle, 1984) and Memoirs of an Invisible Man (1992). As a screenwriter and director he made Red Heat (1985) and Believe in Me (2006).

Kurt Wimmer is an American screenwriter, director and producer. We find him at the writing of Double Trouble (1992), The Neighbor (1993), The Thomas Crown Affair (1999), Equilibrium (2002), The Recruit (2003), Street Kings (2008), Law Abiding Citizen (2009), Salt (2010), Total Recall (2012), the remake of Point Break (2015), The Misfits (2021), The Expendables 4 (2023) or The Beekeeper (2024).

Leslie Dixon is an American screenwriter and producer. We owe her in particular the screenplays of Overboard (1987), Hairspray (2007) and Limitless (2011). She is also a screenwriter on two Pierce Brosnan films: Mrs. Doubtfire (1993) and The Thomas Crown Affair (1999). Dixon is the wife of the screenwriter Tom Ropelewski.

Bruce Feirstein was also present[102]. "So we gathered a bunch of writers, and they were great writers. Intentionally eclectic writers", explains Kleeman[103].

Screenwriter Nicholas Meyer admits: "I was never a fan of the James Bond franchise. I prefer my spy fiction less cartoonish, favoring Hitchcock and le Carré over Ian Fleming, therefore I cannot claim any sort of passion for the material"[104]. However, he had at least three reasons for being present and being called:

> - Nicolas Meyer[105] : Roger Spottiswoode, the director, is my brother-in-law once removed [Roger's brother is married to my sister], and Jeff Kleeman, the studio executive [at MGM/UA] whose job it was to make these movies is one of my closest friends since 1985. Another reason I was brought on is that I had directed Pierce Brosnan in The Deceivers (1988) and Pierce and I remained good friends.

Even though Hong Kong is now out of the film, EON and MGM want to keep the idea of the evil media mogul and shoot this film in Asia[106]. Meyer remembers that the main purpose of this large summit was to determine the motivations of the villain, and the motto given was to "keep it simple"[107]. Spottiswoode recalls that one of the writers' tasks was to come up with action sequences[108].

> - Nicolas Meyer[109] : In a somewhat jet-lagged state, I went back to the hotel. [...] I went into the writer's room the next day and I said, "Oh, I solved your problem", and about thirty people were sitting in this room, all sort of very eager. I don't remember how many of us writers had been imported. There were six, maybe seven and there was Barbara Broccoli, Michael Wilson, and Roger Spottiswoode. Anyway, there were a lot of people who were all ears. I said: "[...] Bond actually meets [the villain] in his lair. [The villain] says, "no Mister Bond it's not about the money [...]". So now imagine [...] that [the villain] in his lair says, "all the obstacle courses that you have negotiated were actually tests to see if you really were the man that I need you to be. Because I think when you get to know me really well, Mister Bond, you'll find that fundamentally I am a people person. But there's too many of them". Then he flips a switch and all these monitors come on with every image of overpopulation that you can possibly imagine. Starving people in Ethiopia or wherever we're shooting. There's plenty of them, traffic jams where cars are immobile under these smog-laden skies in Los Angeles, and so on and so on and so on. He says, "Mister Bond, even lemmings, even lemmings know what to do when they grow too numerous. I am willing to bite the bullet on the life and death issue for this planet that no politician will confront or face or mention. There are too many people and the only way we can survive is to cull the herd. 007, that's some kind of license [to kill] isn't it? Tell me 007, how much game are you allowed to bag with that license? I'm imploring your help, sir, will you help me save planet earth?". And at this point, they're all sitting there with their jaws hanging open and I continue. Bond says, "You're right. I will help you". [...] So basically what [the villain] wants is to start a war between India and China, the two most populous nations on the face of the earth, and Bond says he'll help him. I said "don't worry, he's not actually going to do it". [...] The best villains are the ones who are right, that you have to agree with. [...] My recollection is that they were like, stunned. But it fit the criteria because it hadn't been done before and it was simple. I came back the next day and the idea was off the table and I couldn't believe it. I asked why? They said that it was too serious.

David Wilson (no relation with Michael Wilson) remembers that the bible written by John Cork was given to the screenwriters[110]. He says that a short film featuring stuntmen performing parkour on motorcycles became the genesis of the motorcycle chase across the rooftops of a Vietnamese slum[111].

> - Roger Spottiswoode[112] : We had to try and come up with something better than the tank chase was in GoldenEye. I didn't know how to put Bond in a bigger vehicle, so I thought I'd better do the opposite and put him in the most vulnerable, fragile position: on a motorcycle.

Tom Ropelewski recalls that the motorcycle chase was also considered on the Great Wall of China, that a suggested title for the film was Razor Kiss and that a scene with Bond disguised as a woman was rejected by everyone[113].

"It was a phenomenal week", Kleeman recalls[114]. "It wasn't easy. It was a lot of grueling work, a lot of arguing, a lot of really smart passionate people valiantly defending each of their ideas wonderfully articulately, but not always right or at least what we wanted. It was pretty much 24 hours a day, because even when we were not in the Eon offices working, we took all of our meals together. [...] [The writers] were kind of thrilled to have an all-expense-paid trip to London and be in the Bond offices and just imagine what Bond might do in his next movie. And a lot of things sprung from the writers' room"[115].

"Until the writers' room, the female lead was an American woman", adds Kleeman[116]. "It was during the writers' room that we changed her to Asian and created that role, which ultimately Michelle Yeoh was going to inhabit. We talked about Michelle for that role in the room. I already knew Michelle [...] and mentioned her"[117].

Feirstein said: "Roger was fascinated with Michelle Yeoh, so I came up with the idea of a Chinese spy that Bond is going to deal with"[118]. Feirstein will also say that it was his idea for the villain to start a war in order to increase ratings[119].

> - Jonathan Pryce[120] : It's common knowledge that CNN as a news network was virtually bankrupt before the Gulf War and they happened to have this guy Wolf Blitzer in place [...] to get those reports on the spot. That turned round CNN's fortunes and this is what Carver is trying to do.

> - Michael Wilson[121] : Certainly, this idea of a renegade media baron is quite an intriguing one, and has some historical parallels; some people believe that the Spanish-American War was started by William Randolph Hearst and his newspapers. I think people are a little bit suspicious about the vertical integration of these huge media companies today, where they have huge film studios, TV networks, satellites and newspapers.

Screenwriters David Wilson and Nicholas Meyer visibly distinguished themselves during this week of meetings as we will see.

Waltz of the screenwriters

The following chronology of events may not be accurate.

> - Bruce Feirstein[122] : At the end of the weekend, I remember sitting there with what was essentially my script; the media mogul, the stealth boat, the self-driving car, the original opening sequence; and being given thirty days to fix it, including changing things we had discussed before the meeting, like changing the Bond girl to a Chinese female agent and moving the action from Hong Kong to Ho Chi Minh City. This became my "second draft" that no one has ever seen, but pretty much outlines a lot, but not everything, that you see in the final film.

James Bond Archive notes that after a conference on October 1, 1996, a new script containing a stealth boat for Harmsway as well as a Chinese agent named Lin Tse Pao was delivered on November 11, 1996[123]. Feirstein describes it as his "second official draft"[124] and says that "It has the helicopter/motorcycle chase, the stealth boat [...] it's basically the blueprint for the movie that followed."[125]. This script is named Tomorrow Never Lies[126].

> - Bruce Feirstein[127] : I could not come up with a name [for the film]. And I was in the car, and I knew that the name of the guy's paper was Today or something like that [Tomorrow]. [...] And I was driving down Wilshire Boulevard, and I heard The Beatles singing Tomorrow Never Knows [on the radio]. And I thought, "oh, that's it".

"We needed things moving quickly", says Kleeman. "So for a while we decided to keep David Wilson on and have him and Bruce divide up sections of the script. They would write simultaneously [...] and Bruce could always finesse David's dialogue to match his [own] dialogue [...]. So there were a number of sections that David wrote [...] Bruce was writing other sections, which let the script move forward much more quickly"[128].

> - Bruce Feirstein[129] : There was a writer named David Wilson [...] who was brought in to do some action scenes, and that apparently didn't go anywhere.

At one point, Feirstein was relieved of the film. "They felt they wanted a fresh voice", he comments[130].

> - Bruce Feirstein[131] : The thing most people don't understand is that in large movies like these, other writers are almost always brought in. It's the rule, rather than the exception. [...] None of this was unusual for Hollywood. But the press tries to blow it up out of proportion.

> - Bruce Feirstein[132] : Barbara Broccoli has often said that one person can't write a James Bond film. Bond is not easy to write. [...] Bond is a very difficult character to get, even though we think we know him.

> - Michael Wilson[133] : David Campbell Wilson did a radical rewrite of Feirstein's script. Eventually, director-screenwriter Nicholas Meyer was hired to do yet another rewrite.

Kleeman explains that one of Meyer's qualities is that he writes quickly[134]. However, he would come back with "sections of the script that were so wholly different from anything we had been talking about or imagined, regardless of whether they were good or bad, that it pretty much caused everybody's head to explode"[135].

> - Jeff Kleeman[136] : Barbara and Michael said, "Nick, this is not what we asked you to do. This is not what the scene was. This does not feel like who Bond should be in this movie. We don't understand why you're giving us these pages". Nick said, "You've hired me because I have skill and I have a proven track record as a writer. [...] So my job is not to be a stenographer and just give you back what you already want, because you don't need me to do that. My job is to give you what is best for you, whether you know it or not. [...] That's why you pay me so much money in the first place". I believe it was Barbara who essentially said to Nick something along the lines of, "Don't confuse being smart and talented with being a silkworm, in which everything that comes out of your ass is gold". That really was the end of Nick's involvement with Tomorrow Never Dies.

> - Nicolas Meyer[137] : In my recollection, I made several other attempts to supply dialogue or scenes while I was in London, but all these were rejected and shortly thereafter I flew back to Los Angeles with my tail more or less between my legs.

> - Bruce Feirstein[138] : Nick Meyer threw out the script and did a whole entirely different treatment about population control. I never saw it. I just know he turned it in, had a huge fight with Barbara Broccoli, and was gone.

For the actress auditions for the role of Chinese agent Lin Tse Pao, a script for the screentest bearing the date December 19, 1996 was written. It begins this way:

> INT. TRAIN DINING CAR - NIGHT
>
> Old French World War II vintage dining car.
>
> - Bond: I am not your enemy, can't we come to some sort of truce?
>
> Long hesitation, then, finally:
>
> - Lin: I don't know where Chang is, and if I did, he would just laugh at my accusations and deny them. The only people who would believe me are gone...
> - Bond: I'm truly sorry about what happened back there. But...
> - Lin (turns): But what?
> - Bond: They must have known the risks. You know that...

> - Lin Pao: Yes. I know that.
> - Bond: They would want you to go on. They would EXPECT you to go on.
> - Lin: Have you ever lost anyone?
>
> She's read hid file; she knows the answer. Pause.
>
> - Bond: No. Well.. Yes.
>
> But he looks out the window now, too, as she studies him.
>
> - Lin: Do you know what I wish? (He turns, waits) I wish it was yesterday...
>
> They look at one another. Long pause.
>
> - Bond: Tell me: how on the earth did you escape your handcuffs?
> - Lin: The stud I wear in my ear is a lockpick.
> - Bond: Really...
> - Lin: We have, we had, a man who manufactured such devices. He is, was, rather impossible, but also something of a genius. (Bond chuckles) Why do you laugh?
> - Bond: I know him.
> - Lin: That's not possible.
> - Bond: Let's say I know someone like him.
>
> Pause. Then:
>
> - Lin: You can't know him because he's dead on the floor of a bicycle shop in Saigon.
> - Bond: Ah. I should miss that man.

When Michelle Yeoh is cast for the role, she will have the character renamed from Lin Tse Pao to Wai Lin. She will say that "Pao" was a bit ridiculous as it means "Dumpling" in Cantonese[139]. "So I came up with Wai Lin [name] with a couple of girlfriends one night in Hong Kong", remembers the actress[140]. Bruce Feirstein also at one point considered naming the character Mi Lei Hue[141], sounding like the words "me lay you".

(Feirstein also explains that once Yeoh was on board, there were rewrites to include her martial arts skills in the film[142]. "She wanted very much to make sure that her character was a modern woman, not Suzy Wong, and also to have a character who was every bit Bond's equal", he adds[143]).

"After Nick flamed out, Roger [...] asked Daniel Petrie Jr. to come in and do some rewrites on the script", Kleeman recalls[144]. Petrie had previously worked as a screenwriter on two films directed by Spottiswoode. "Dan in some ways is the opposite of Nick"[145], says Kleeman, he "was president of the Writers Guild of America at the time"[146].

Daniel Mannix Petrie Jr.[147] was born in Canada in 1951 to a director father and a producer mother. He attended Northfield Mount Hermon School and the University of Redlands, where he earned degrees in psychology and creative writing.

Initially a literary agent, he followed in his father's footsteps and joined the film industry as a screenwriter. His first script, Beverly Hills Cop (1984), developed at one time with Danilo Bach, is the result of many radically different rewrites and iterations over the course of a decade. Petrie's contributions on this acclaimed film earned him accolades in the form of Academy Award and Edgar Award nominations.

Petrie wrote a number of films throughout the 1980s and 1990s, including the offbeat crime thriller The Big Easy (1987). He wrote two films for director Roger Spottiswoode: the thriller Shoot to Kill (1988) and the comedy Turner & Hooch (1989). He will also produce a Spottiswoode film in 2000: The 6th Day.

Petrie made his directorial debut with Toy Soldiers, a 1991 action film. Then In the Army Now (1994).

He was the creator and executive producer of the television series Combat Hospital (2011), for which he also wrote episodes.

Since 2010, Daniel Petrie Jr. has focused on producing films/series rather than writing/directing them.

On January 6, 1997, a team left to scout Hanoi, Da Nang, Kuala Lumpur and Jakarta[148]. On January 20, pre-title filming begins in the French Pyrenees[149].

"I was invited to join the writer's conference but I couldn't [attend]", recalls Petrie, "I came in [later] around February 15th"[150]. "I worked mainly at the Athenaeum Hotel as it was close to Piccadilly offices of EON"[151].

"One of the great pleasures of working on a Bond film is that I could sit down and reread all the novels and re-watch all the films... And I did", says the screenwriter[152].

Petrie submits revisions on January 28, 1997; he renamed the villain from Harmsway to Shroudway[153]. His wife was then named Heidi Shroudway[154].

On March 4, it was decided to relocate to Thailand the filming of the sequences which were initially intended to be filmed in Vietnam, following a last minute cancellation of the authorizations by the Vietnamese government[155]. "Vietnam, I must confess was my suggestion, a bad one", Spottiswoode recalled[156].

Petrie recalls what was expected of him for the film: "at the time they wanted certain things [of the script to be] simplified, some plot changes made for purposes of location. [...] Some certain action sequences redone to reflect the reality of the locations or what they were able to do. There were certain difficulties in getting some actual locations"[157]. This didn't only concern the cancellation of filming in Vietnam according to the screenwriter, but also the villain's HQ and his presses[158].

- Jeff Kleeman[159] : [Petrie] provided one thing. I would say 90 percent of the [final] script is Bruce Feirstein [...] but Dan Petrie did provide one thing [...] it's one of the things that I think make Tomorrow Never Dies a special movie. That's the assassin played by Vincent Schiavelli [Dr Kaufman]. Yeah. That character, that whole scene, that is all Dan.

March 13' shooting script: forklifts, weird Stamper, fight on the hull

On March 13, 1997, Petrie submitted a 113-page shooting script. Garth Pearce in his book The Making of Tomorrow Never Dies mention a note attached to it which states, without humor: "Please note this is the final shooting script. That does not mean there will be no further changes. Au contraire. It means that this will be the last draft printed on white paper. Hereafter, changes will be issued on colour paper".

The script is now named Tomorrow Never Dies, a change of a single letter which completely changes the meaning and which happened by accident:

> - Roger Spottiswoode[160] : The script revolves around a media mogul. The Tomorrow paper is really [Robert Maxwell's] The European. And Carver is Rupert Murdoch. So, we had a list of 5 to 10 potential titles, amongst them "Tomorrow Never Lies". It fit perfectly. A newspaper cannot tell lies… So we went for it and faxed MGM in Burbank, and on went with other things. But at the other end, the guy who received the script must have misread it because the next day we had a phone call from MGM, telling us "We love your title Tomorrow Never Dies! That's going to be it". Nobody dared to tell them the truth!

My copy of it doesn't contain the note mentioned by Garth Pearce. The title page states "Shooting script by Daniel Petrie, Jr", "based upon the screenplays and revisions by Bruce Feirstein and Nicholas Meyer and David Campbell Wilson".

This March 13th shooting script opens on the gunbarrel sequence and, like the movie, there is no climbing/skiing sequence. Theses sequences were dropped. Instead we are directly at the arms market described as having Scud missiles, mortars, MiGs, "and other unidentifiable but menacing paraphernalia of death and destruction".

A camera have been set up there and Tanner introduces the men present. We notice that Sitoshi Isagura has been renamed Satoshi (with an A) and:

> - Bill Tanner: Henry Gupta. He practically invented techno-terrorism. He's been on the FBI most-wanted list since he nearly wiped out the whole of Berkeley, California in 1967. Used to be a radical, then became an anarchist; now he works for cash.

(Bruce Feirstein explained that "on our way out to the Tomorrow Never Dies studio, we'd pass a Gupta Bakery, which became the name of Ricky Jay's character"[161]).

In addition to Isagura and Gupta, a third terrorist is identified: Gustav Meinholtz (former member of the Stasi now working freelance out of Teheran, Tanner tells us).

Comes Bond's appearance, where we read: "a gold lighter (from Dunhill, of course) appears". He punch the terrorist who was about to have a cigarette and everything happens as in the film (there is no mention of Bond's unfolding a rifle in this script).

After the credits, the Devonshire sinking scene plays in a similar way of the movie, although we notice that Stamper (described as a "tall young German") brings down the two Chinese MiGs with missiles (while only one MiG is destroyed in the film).

The following scenes with Elliot Carver is however some kind of different, with no headline, no reunion with the department heads of his media empire, no mention to the right type of munition, and some weird lines:

> - Stamper (talking to Carver about the video footage): Look at that one, trying to get away! Got him!
> - Gupta: So hey! What did I tell you? Huh? Am I a genius?
> - Carver: Put that [red box] in a safe place. And clean up that console. I don't want any sign anyone's been in here. [...] Stamper! Play the tape again. [He turns back to Gupta, who have been "offended" by Carver's lines] You are a genius.

The dialogue continue to differs at Oxford university and in the crisis room with the Admiralty. There is a surprising:

> - Admiral Roebuck: They sink one of our ships and you want to have a "joint investigation"? Of all the cowardly...
> - M: Disagree with me if you like, but say the word "cowardly" again and I'll invite you outside.
> [The Minister of Defense comes in].
> - Minister of Defense: What's this? M, it almost sounded like you were challenging Admiral Roebuck to a... To a fist fight.
> - M: Yes, Minister, I certainly was.

M indeed want indeed lead a joint investigation with the Chinese, as she and Tanner try to explain to the top brass. They think the Chinese have right to says the Devonshire was in their territory and that the GPS position may have been hacked. Tanner explain there are only 22 ACSES (Atomic Clock Signal Encoding System) in the word used for GPS encoding, "one of the most carefully guarded U.S. secrets". However, adds Tanner, "there was a 23rd ACSES device, believed lost in the explosion of a U.S. Air Force transport".

Seeing that Tanner and M lost their audience while top brass is reading an article of Tomorrow stating the sailors were killed by MiG's bullets, Bond display on the screen the photo of Gupta with the ACSES red box. But of course top brass dismay Tanner about a strange signal emitted by a Carver's satellite.

> - Minister of Defense: The papers are howling for blood! If we did that [joint investigation], the media would have our heads.
> - M: I was just accused of cowardice. But I'd be happy to stand before the media and tell them to all go to hell before I'd put the country in danger.
> [...]
> - Tanner: She's right, but she's gone too far this time. They might make her resign.
> - Bond: I'll bet you they can't.

M, Tanner, Bond and Moneypenny leave the room and go in Rolls Royce where 007 is briefed to his mission:

- M: Moneypenny, leak a story to the Express. Say the government would like to sack me, but they are afraid of all my files. That should buy us a couple of days. [...] I believe you know the wife of Elliot Carver.
- Bond: Yes. I used to know her very well, when she was Paris McKenna. But very few people know that.
[...]
- Tanner: Elliot Carver, born Hong Kong, officially an orphan, unofficially the illegitimate son of Lord Weymouth, the Hong Kong and London press lord, and a German woman, who died in childbirth. A poor Chinese family agreed to take the boy for a one-time fee of fifty pounds. Thirty years later, Carver was able to buy the Weymouth newspapers, which he folded into "Tomorrow", and his unofficial father committed suicide.
- Bond: And who says that family values are declining today.
[...]

The Rolls drop Bond at Heathrow airport where he takes a plane to Hamburg. Here he meets Q. The scene where Bond receives his BMW included a very unique gag. In fact, Q picked the wrong crate and opened one in which there was... A jaguar animal! Bond's quip is obvious: "[A] Jaguar? ". Then during the BMW presentation:

Cut as well during the editing.

- Q: Give me your gun.
- Bond: You can't shoot me yet, I haven't broken anything.
Q shows Bond a new gun.
- Q: We're giving you this instead.
- Bond: What does it do?
- Q: You pull this, it's called the "trigger", and things called "bullets" fly out the hole in the end.
- Bond: How do you come up with these things?
- Q: It's the latest from Walther. It replaces the old PPK model.

With his brand new car (and gun, even if strangely his gun is still described as a PPK in a later scene) Bond arrive at the Carver's reception where is is lead by a PR man to a "petite, stunningly beautiful Chinese woman", his competitor (in their banker covers). She introduce herself as Wai Lin and the PR man leads them to Carver where they are joined by Paris:

- Carver: Ah, darling. Come and meet our new friends. This is Wai Lin of the First Hong Kong Bank...
Paris Carver and Wai Lin shake hands.
- Carver: And this...
Paris slaps Bond in the face. The crowd is silenced for a moment, then goes back to buzzing.
- Carver: You've met my wife before, Mr. Bond?

> - Paris: Don't worry, darling. James and I were ancient history when I met you. (To Wai Lin) Sorry I slapped him without asking you first, but if you've known James for more than ten minutes you understand.
> [...] [The two girls leaves together].
> - Carver: My wife has quite a temper.
> - Bond: And quite a right hand.
> [...]
> - Bond: Well, there's a silly story, that the reason you spent billions moving from London to Hamburg and from Hong Kong to Kowloon was not for efficiency, but because you hate the Chinese for taking Hong Kong back and the British for letting them. [...] The real reason you moved out of London is that you wanted to be made a Baron, but that they wouldn't even make you "Sir Elliot".
> - Carver: I see you're one of them.
> - Bond: Them?
> - Carver: One of those English public school salary men who think their pathetic little country will still matter as long as they look down their noses at people not as well born as they. [....] Remember what Mark Twain said, Mr. Bond: "Never pick a fight with a man who buys ink by the barrel".

As his PR man remembering him, Carver has a speech to do. So Bond goes to speak to Wai Lin, "they size each other up. Each knows that the other must be an agent of some kind. But to acknowledge that would be to acknowledge that both cover stories are equally phony".

Paris heard henchmen talking about Bond and goes warn him, but 007 is in the mood of "If he has me beaten up, well, it proves the suspicion is true". So a henchman goes to say to Bond their is phone call for him and he gets beaten up by four henchmen... But 007 end up to beat them all in the end.

Bond goes out of the room and find Wai Lin, who was trying to tamper with the swipe card lock.

> - Bond: So how's your end of the banking business?
> [Wai Lin see the bodies in the room].
> - Wai Lin: Less interesting than yours.

Bond grab a cigar in the room and light it near a smoke detector.

Carver is about to inaugurate his new HQ with a gorgeous girl at his side, Tamara Steel, "whose qualifications as a television anchor were created by a plastic surgeon in Beverly Hills". Suddenly clouds of white powder are sprayed down from the ceiling as the anti-fire system activate and ruin the party. "Across the room, Paris tries to suppress a smile" and ask to her husband:

> - Paris: What happened to you? How can you surround yourself with people like Stamper and all these thugs?
> - Carver: Because they're very, very loyal. And I prize loyalty above everything. You'd better remember that.

Bond is now at his suite at the Atlantic hotel when he gets the visit of Paris. This is the opportunity to learn why she slapped him earlier:

> - Paris: I owed you that slap, from the days when I indulged your every sexual whim.
> - Bond: You had quite a few whims of your own.
> - Paris: Did I? Now that I'm married it's hard to remember. You know, I did love him. He used to be tough and ambitious in a good way. But over the years he's become a monster. [...] I left him. He's been violent before, but to strangers. I could make myself believe they deserved it. But he went too far tonight. [...] I took only the clothes I'm wearing and my old passport. My sister in New York is leaving a pre-paid ticket at the airport.

Meanwhile Stamper say to Carver that he had conducted his own little investigation: Bond is a British spy, and Paris is gone. "Get our people out, have them bribe every skycap and hotel clerk in this city", order Elliot.

After making love to Paris, Bond get dressed a tell her that he is gonna to infiltrate Carver's complex. She give him a tip about the building.

While he does that, Carver and Stamper pay a visit to Paris a the hotel:

> Paris tries with all her strength to shut it in Carver's face. It slams on Stamper's fingers instead. Paris dives for the phone but Stamp grabs her before she gets there. Carver comes in and shuts the door. Stamper holds her easily with one hand, while looking curiously at his injured fingers. There are beads of blood on his knuckles, and he licks them off like a kid licking wayward drops of chocolate sauce.
> - Carver: Loyalty, darling. Loyalty.

During his infiltration, "Bond surprises us by pulling on a pair of headphones, attached to a yellow sports Walkman clipped to his belt". He press them across a partition and is able to hear the room behind it. The script also tells us that footsteps amplified through the headphones "sound like the T-Rex in Jurassic Park". When pressing a button on the Walkman, the headphones transform into a glass cutter.

Bond search Gupta's office where the Walkman reveal another functions: lock pick and safes cracker. 007 find the red box and stumble on Wai Lin who triggers an alarm while opening a door. Like in the movie they goes separate ways, there is a fight over the press machine, a "They'll print anyone these days", and later 007 arrive in a room so big that "you could repair a 747 [...] but instead it's used to store rolls of newsprint in vertical stacks of five like jumbo packages of generic toilet paper".

This room become the theater of a forklifts action scene, with Bond and henchman driving theses (Hyster) vehicles that employees deserted at the first gunshot, with sentences like:

> Bond spins his forklift 180 degrees [...]. He rams the paper roll his forklift is holding into a massive tower of paper rolls, which topple like dominoes. [...] Huge stacks topples towards the guard on foot and in forklifts. [...] The one-ton rolls bounce and start rolling wildly in all directions. A guard is crushed by a paper roll like a rolling pin would crush a beetle. A roll hits a forklift. [...] Bond looks back to find the huge stack of paper rolls toppling toward him. He guns the forklift but fast as it is, [...] just before the rolls overtake Bond's forklift Bond jumps of the cab and catches onto a steel pillar, [...] clings to it like a palm > tree in a hurricane while the rolls of newsprint overtake his forklift and knock it over.

Back at his hotel, Bond discovers the body of Paris, and Dr. Kaufman is here in a scene very similar to the movie, except a "I can shoot [you] from back here" (instead of "from Stuttgart").

The BMW chase in the parking lot contains some differences. First at the start of the chase Bond goes from the back seat to the front seat. Car's rockets fire from the front of the vehicle (not the roof). Also the enemy rocket doesn't pass through Bond's car (Bond avoids it by turning right).

There isn't the part with the stretched cable and the saw gadget, instead there is a scene where Bond gets rid of pursuing cars, thanks to "magnetic flash grenades" which eject from the back of his BMW.

After that the BMW fly away from the parking lot and crashes into an AVIS rental agency, a scene is supposed to show Bond pushing his way through the onlookers in front of the destroyed window. He talk to one of the saleswomen, saying that he "left the keys in the car" while giving her the rental document. The scene will be filmed but cut during the editing.

Jack Wade return from GoldenEye in the next scenes:

> - Jack Wade: Now Jim, I don't mean to be disrespectful of our gallant British allies, but WHAT THE HELL ARE YOUR PEOPLE SMOKING? Don't they realize that China has you outnumbered? By about a BILLION? And your Navy, do they think this is 1863?

Bond does the HALO jump. Inside the submerged wreck of the Devonshire, when he is surprised by Wai Lin, 007 takes a flare gun located in a box on a wall and shoots towards her, blinding the latter, then removes her mask before realizing who she is.

Likewise, when they had to extricate themselves from the wreckage, it was Bond who had to go ahead in the narrow pipe (pushing his oxygen tank in front of him). Wai Lin tries to do the same in another pipe but her bottle hit something and broke ("compressed air explodes into bubbles"). She then turns around to take the same pipe as Bond. 007 is unaware that she is behind him and that she no longer has any bottles, until he notice her. They surface, sharing the same bottle.

They are captured and brought by helicopter to a Carver's building which is set in... Kowloon (an area of Hong Kong). While escorted through the building they briefly encounter a Chinese man and "a Chinese Michael Jackson look-alike and his entourage of bisexual Eurasians".

When they arrive in front of Carver, he isn't working of Bond's obituary headline. The scene doesn't look like the movie but include weird dialogues and concept:

> [...]
> - Bond: Of course we know each other. We've been working together. We know your entire plan, we've reported to our chiefs. You won't be writing tomorrow's headlines. You'll be in them.
> - Carver: Oh my God! They know all! We're doomed! We have to surrender!
> Carver mockingly raises his hands. Stamper doesn't get it and raises his hands, too. Gupta snorts.
> - Gupta: Don't be a moron. The boss is kidding.
> Stamper, embarrassed, glares at Gupta.
> - Carver: Now, now, Stamper is quite brilliant in his own way. You might find this interesting.
> He picks up a sharp letter opener and hands it to Stamper.
> - Carver: Stab yourself in the leg.
> Stamper shoves the letter opener deep into the meat of his thigh without effort or hesitation.
> - Stamper: Like this?
> - Carver: You see? Stamper is very unusual; his pain and pleasure centers are reversed. That's helped to make him a perfect killing machine. (To Stamper) Would you rather take that out, or leave it in your leg?
> - Stamper: Could I leave it in? For a while?
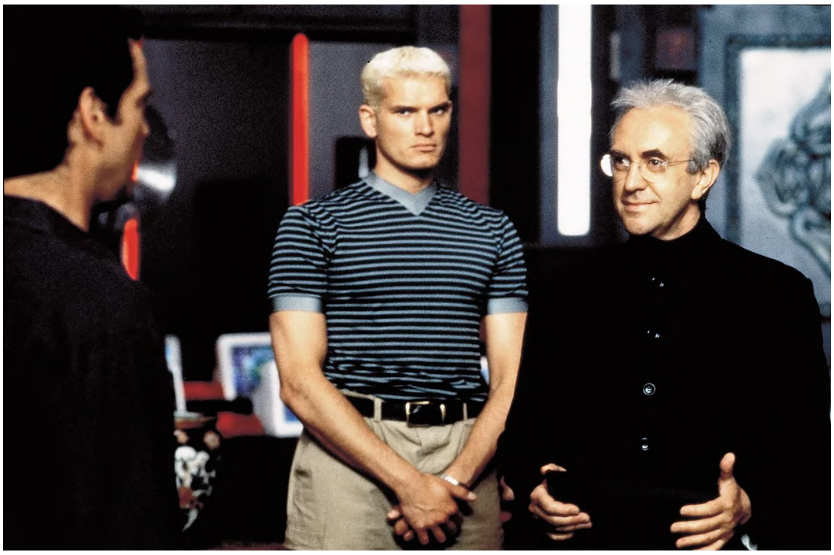
> - Carver: This is a special treat for Stamper, we couldn't have him stabbing himself seven times a day. [...] Not so funny for Miss Lin. He doesn't often have sexual desires but when he does... Well, I have some of the most incredible videotapes. [...] Normally the next step would be to have Stamper torture you both for information. But I honestly don't care what you know. So he's going to torture you both for fun. [...] Because as much as he loves pain for himself, he loves it ten times more on other people.



(We note that this script doesn't have the chakra torture instruments). Bond and Wai Lin explains to Carver they know more than he thinks, building on each other's information:

> - Wai Lin: And you'll have the traitor, General Chang, install that Swiss playboy who calls himself Crown Prince Hung, the heir of the Ming Dynasty, as the new Emperor of China.

But Elliot is confident his plan will work, and even add:

> - Carver: I plan to have a war every two years!
> He pushes other buttons, and the monitors show other news footage and headlines, some of which Carver reads.

- Carver: "War in the Amazon", we'll call it "Rumble in the Jungle" in the tabloids. "Revolution in South Africa", "Russia Invades Ukraine". And for our ten year anniversary, "U.S. Civil War - Part II"!
- Bond: I suppose that would make you the most powerful man in the world.
- Wai Lin: Most powerful madman.
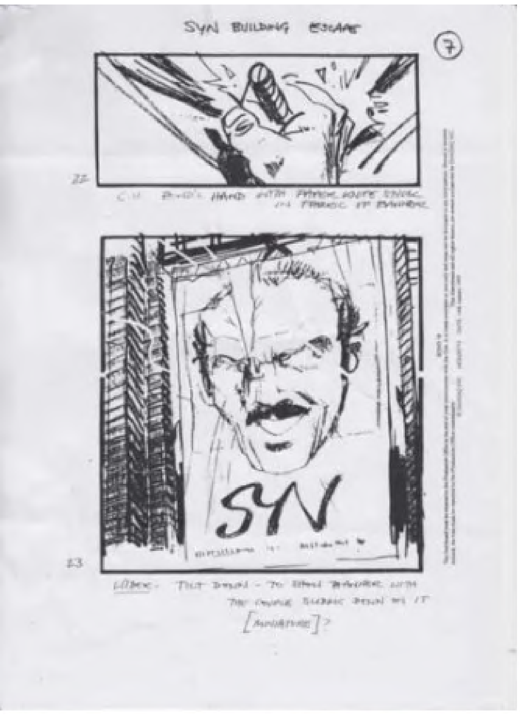
[...]
- Carver: Mr. Bond, mad or not, I'm already the most powerful man in the world.
- Bond: Perhaps. But you're still the son of a whore, a bastard, raised in the gutter. And we all sneer at you. [...] You'll still be a worthless guttersnipe, no better than this muscle-bound, retarded, psychotic freak, this mutant, this...

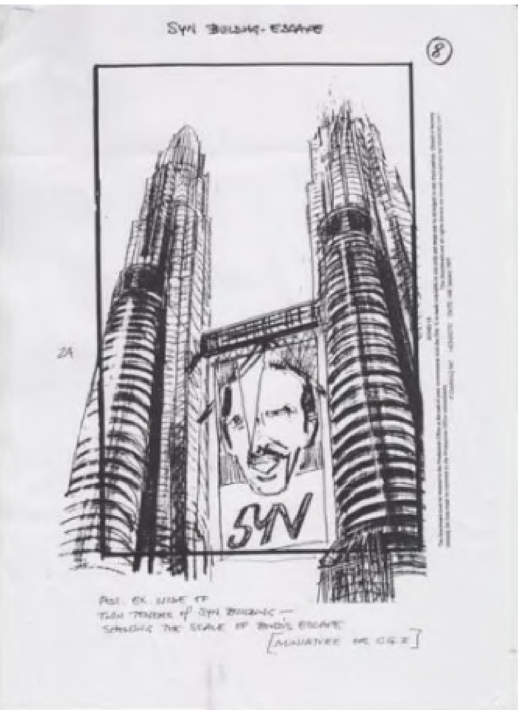
Stamper can't take it. He lurches forward and Bond and the girl spring into action as she grab the letter opener from Stamper's thight and put it under Gupta's throat. Carver order to his men to not fire at Gupta and Bond and Wai Lin jump through a windows. "It seems to be a straight drop of fifty stories to an inevitable WHAP! [But] Bond and Lin hit the green construction net, so fine that we couldn't see it a second ago".

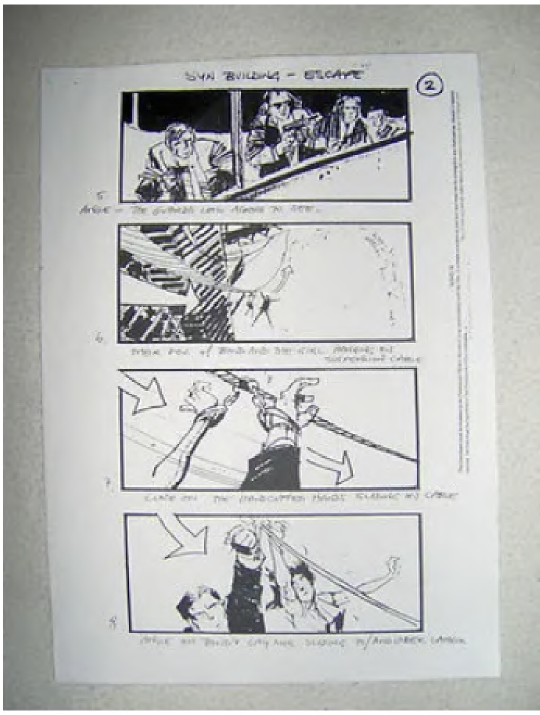
Like a the film, there is a big banner of Carver's face. 007 plant the letter opener in it and ride it down through the banner, Lin with him.

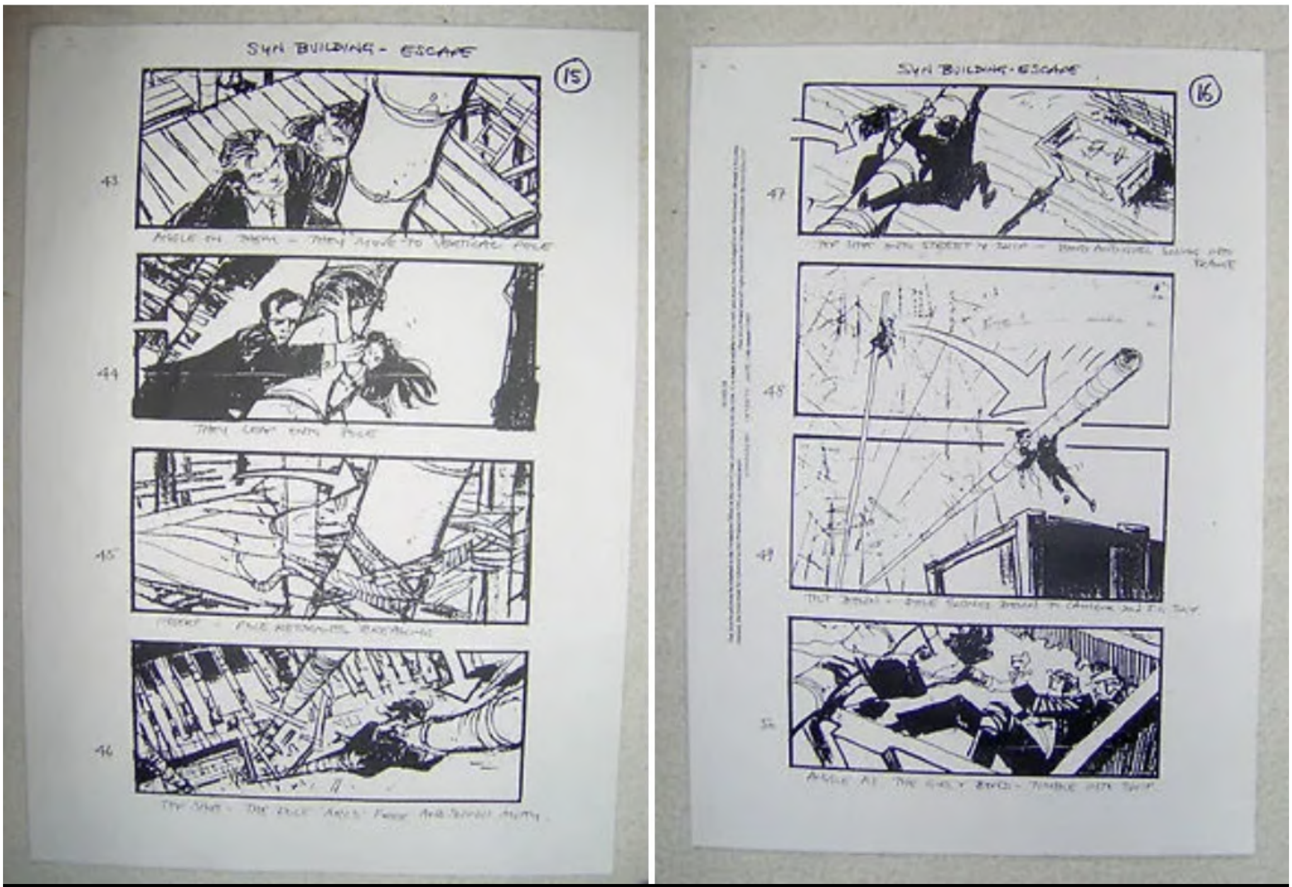
- Vic Armstrong (stunt coordinator)[162] : In Hong Kong, I had seen these big banners hanging from the sides of buildings. I thought of the 1935 Errol Flynn film Captain Blood, where Flynn came down with a knife in the sail. I though a modern version of that would be brilliant.

At the bottom of the banner, they land on a bamboo scaffolding. Guard climbs toward them: "Bond looks around [...] eyes a tall bamboo vertical support pole. Bond looks to Wai Lin, who looks back at him doubtfully. [...] They leap from the platform, grabbing onto the vertical support pole. It arcs free, vaulting Bond and Wai Lin over the street. They land [...] as the scaffolding across the street collapses like a pile of toothpicks".









Various methods considered for escape from the building. Note the "SYN" (was Carver named such in versions of the script?) and the Petronas Towers in Kuala Lumpur.

A motorcyclist has fallen because of the bamboo in the street; Bond and Wai Lin take his bike. Carver seeing this from his office:

- Carver: They're getting away! Send a car! Use the god-damned helicopter!

The first part of the chase (before the rooftops) is quite different: no hook from Wai Lin or explosions of fireworks. Instead we have Bond who arrives at a dead end; he then prepares to rush into a closed door of a building but as he arrives at it, a waiter opens it from behind. Bond rushes, breaking china in the building, then arrives at the rooftop level (where there is the helicopter jump stunt).

007 and Wai Lin leap from roof to roof with the motorbike and land in a room where "a couple make energetic love on a large bed" according to the script.

After that there is the part of the collapsing balconies and the market, then there is a scene where the motorcycle "jumping from boat to boat" on a river full of boats (absent from the film) before the final scene in the dead-end where they get rid of the helicopter.

Further on, we notice that the fight in the bike shop is not really detailed in the script. The writers focus on Bond: "Bond steps over a groaning attacker just inside the door.

He picks him up and tosses him out. Then he has to dodge as another attacker flies by. Stepping further into the bicycle shop, Bond can see Wai Lin fighting with 3 assailants. They are all martial arts masters, but Lin is incredible".

007 knocks out one of the attackers who has retrieved a weapon and re-handcuffed Wai Lin to him. 007 explain they are after a stealth boat because no MiG could had done the type of damage they saw in the Devonshire, and the Frigate had fired none of its sea-air missiles too.

> - Wai Lin: Russia has been developing low-emission radars so stealth planes can use radar without giving themselves away. We happened to get one of these. But it was stolen, from one of General Chang's bases. I traced it to Hamburg. That's how we met.

When they choose equipment:

> - Wai Lin: Don't open that box!
> Bond was about to examine a small music box. He freezes.
> - Bond: What does it do?
> - Wai Lin: It plays Memories from Cats. It sticks in my head. Sorry.
> Bond puts the box down carefully.

The Sea Shadow, which will inspire the villain's boat in the film.

Later on a Chinese junk, there is this terrible line:

> - Wai Lin: Well, I wanted to find a job where there was a chance of meeting people who don't find strong or sexually aggressive women to be threatening.
> - Bond: Well, I think you picked the right line of work.

According to a booklet from one of the issues of The James Bond Car Collection: "It was director Roger Spottiswoode who suggested to [...] Bruce Feirstein that the showdown between Elliot Carver and James Bond should occur on a stealth ship. Feirstein instantly thought the ship was a perfect fit for a Bond film and worked it into the script"[163].

The design of the ship in the film is based on the experimental stealth boat Sea Shadow (IX-529)[164], secretly developed by the US military and Lockheed in the 1980s. Inspired by the F-117 stealth aircraft, the Sea Shadow prototype was completed in 1984 but never went further than the testing phases. It was finally revealed to the public in 1993[165].

> - Bruce Feirstein[166] : As Michelle was supposed to ask in a line that will not be appearing in the movie: "A stealth boat? How the hell did Carver > get a stealth boat?". To which Bond was supposed to reply: "The U.S. Navy's got a top-secret program, but you can buy a scale model at any toy store in America. You pick 'em at the local Maniacs "R" Us". [...] It's true, The U.S. government is building stealth boats, and you can buy the Revelle model at Toys "R" Us. [...] I have a model sitting on my desk.

(To build the miniature of the exterior of Carver's stealth boat, John Richardson will also draw inspiration from SeaCat ferries[167]).

On the stealth ship, Bond ans the girl plants mine but are spotted by a camera. Wai Lin is captured while 007 is believed dead by Stamper.

> Stamper approaches Carver like a teenage boy asking to borrow Dad's new Corvette.
> - Stamper: I know you said to kill her, but before, you said I could keep her. I promise, she won't be any trouble...
> [...]
> She pounds her heels into Stamper's groin. Carver and Gupta wince. Stamper doesn't.
> - Stamper: Sir? Please? I'll videotape everything, of course.
> - Carver: Very well. You can keep her.
> [...]
> - Gupta: How come you're always giving presents to Psycho-kraut?
> - Carver: That one would give you a heart attack.
> - Gupta: I can handle her!

Stamper goes disable the mines. Meanwhile Bond goes to a strategic position and take some some shoot. Carver is alerted, Gupta says him that "We can't launch unless someone goes down there and unlatches the launching mechanism" which is in the line of fire of Bond. So Carver order to bring the girl.

When she is brought she says to Bond: "Shoot! They'll kill me anyway". (Note there is no dialogue with Carver here). Bond give Wai Lin a reply in Danish which she is able to understand (don't ask, its never explained why!). So she is ready when Bond shoot an explosive device he crafted earlier.

007 jump into the water bellow, Wai Lin try to do the same but Stamper grab her ankle.

Bond emerges from the water and climbs the hull of the ship to reach the hole he created in it with the explosive, in order to be able to go back inside the ship. When he finally arrives at the hole, he comes face to Stamper. 007 doubles back and Stamper following him, they are are now on the top of the stealth boat, at the exterior.

> - Stamper: We are going to have such fun.
> - Bond: The pleasure will be all yours.

So they have a hand-to-hand combat on the hull, while shell fired by the Royal Navy ends up in the water near them. Carver didn't lied: each time Bond hit him, Stamper laughs/grins: he seems takes some pleasure rather than suffering.

Meanwhile Wai Lin evades guards and have some action scenes in the turbine room against henchmen.

Stamper send Bond over the side, but our hero menage to cling on something. Suddenly a part of the hull open near Bond: the missiles launch doors. 007 goes inside the boat through them, but Stamper who still chasing him, knock him. 007 falls but menage to grab onto the missile launch tube, which, now point downward toward water due to the weight of Bond on it.

Stamper jumps onto launch tube: its start to rotating on left-right and up-down axis widely. Bond jump from the launch tube to a catwalk.

Meanwhile Win Lin deals with Gupta, "she topples him over the side. Gupta hits the water like a cannon ball"... (And we will never heard of him anymore in the rest of the script).

> Carver now sees on his monitors: Stamper [...] stretched between these two points: he looks like he's imitating Superman pushing a missile. And while Stamper is in this position, his body lines the missile up with the launch doors. Carver gets on the loud speaker.
>
> - Carver: Stamper! Stay right there! This will be the best feeling you ever had!
>
> And Carver presses the firing button.
>
> Stamper is incinerated, literally to a crisp, his entire remains look like an overcooked French fry as the missiles erupt out of the launch tube.

Bond dives for press the button who close the launch doors but the missile is fast. The entire body almost pass trough the doors, however the doors catch the fins of the missiles. "The missile streaks upwards. But without fins it starts to tumble, then explodes in a huge fireball".

007 reunite with Wai Lin while shells from the Royal Navy hits the stealth ship.

On a TV on the boat, Carver see a news bulletin diffused on one of his own channel, saying he is "missing" and a "British government announcement of [...] 89 count fraud indictment" against him. "Then Carver sees, on other monitors, his own back. He turns and, through the plate-glass window of his office, sees Bond and Wai Lin behind" the sea-drill which is pointed right toward him.

> Carver's [...] mouth opening to scream as [he] is sucked into the Sea-Vac [drill] like a carrot in a Cuisinart.

Bond and Wai Lin both jump into water and their backpack transform into inflatable raft. They go close together while the Navy land the fatal shell to the stealth ship and then search for Bond, who is too busy with Wai Lin...

"THE END but James Bond will be back, in the very aptly titled Bond 19".

Feirstein against the clock

- Pierce Brosnan[168] : When I first read the shooting script in March, I thought: "is that it?". Fortunately, we got some good very results from the changes [that occurred subsequently].

"It was not articulate or cohesive enough", the actor recalls[169]. "I spoke to Barbara and Michael and said that it was inappropriate that at this stage of filming we should be in such a fragile state. It was just a joke"[170].

Brosnan isn't the only one who feels this way; the shooting script rendered by Petrie is still considered unsatisfactory. Feirstein was then asked to come back and rewrite it:

- Bruce Feirstein[171] : At the time, I thought this was crazy, where I did the drafts, then they had this meeting. Then I got fired. Then they had other writers and they threw out their stuff. And then they came back to me, and at the time I thought that this was just insane.

On March 21, 1997 Feirstein was once again on board[172]. "[They] says: we would like you to come back", Feirstein recalls, "But I am sitting here now, thinking: Will I ever catch up? Will I ever be able to fix it [the script, one day]?"[173].

Since principal photography will begin in just a few days, on April 1[174], this means that Feirstein will have to rewrite as the filming progresses and that the film will be filmed without a well-defined script. The screenwriter illustrates this:

- Bruce Feirstein[175] : I was writing in a tent outside the Bond stage, sending in pages as we were shooting, where Pierce was standing on the deck of the stealth boat, asking "Which way do I go? Do I turn left or do I turn right?". The answer was, "Wait. We'll have the pages in a minute".

The screenwriter will notably go to Bangkok with the film crew[176].

- Bruce Feirstein[177] : Basically we went page by page, sequence by sequence as we were shooting. I would be writing about three to four days ahead.

Not having a script firmly in place causes tension:

Bruce Feirstein on the set of the film.

- Pierce Brosnan[178] : It is inappropriate that at this stage of filming we should be feeling in a rather fragile state about a script which is not locked down. [...] There have been so many writers and a lot of stuff has been thrown out. But it is my job, well, all our jobs, to make it work.

- Judi Dench[179] : You know, it was very off-putting indeed to have learnt the script, and at a quarter to ten the night before to get a loud knocking on the door by the courier with a new script. That's not fair.

Jonathan Pryce, who plays Elliot Carver, said: "I will make sure in future that it is written in the contract that the script I agree to will be the script we use"[180].

- Michael Wilson[181] : After the last film opened, we were given a release date and "gotta have it on this date" means the studio depends on you to do it. The trouble with that is that you don't have any latitude. Everything goes towards that date. If you find yourself falling behind in script development, or you're not happy with something it puts a lot of pressure on everyone. In this particular case, we didn't have a script that was ready to shoot on the first day of filming, which is a no-no for big budget films. It's just a terrible position to be in. These things don't write themselves. They do take development and work. They take a lot of going down blind allies and working through an idea and finding they don't work. [...] We did have an on-going development of the script. You always have arguments about the script. But they usually don't happen while you're shooting the picture. Which multiplies all the problems.

Michelle Yeoh seems to take it more lightly:

- Michelle Yeoh[182] : Hong Kong films are known for being very haphazard. The scripts are never ready. New lines get handed to you on set. They are always changing things. It's chaos. So I have felt right at home from the moment I started on Tomorrow Never Dies.

- Pierce Brosnan[183] : The script went through a few changes. The studio wanted [the film] as soon as they could [...], so we went out the door with a script which, under normal circumstances, should not have taken off. But having said that, [...] scenes that may have been three pages long and full of extraneous dialogue became one and a half pages of very lean dialogue that had much more bite to them. And I was involved with more of it this time than I was on GoldenEye. I worked with the writer, the writer would visit, we would talk about what needed to be done. Roger was very open [...]. A lot of people weren't quite sure what was going on, if the style or look of the film was going to work.

Final shooting script: Robinson, cards throwing and Saigon

The subject of this subchapter is a "final shooting script" of approximately 127 pages (+ 6 in appendix) of "Tomorrow Never Dies". The cover page date it from August 18, 1997, but it is actually made up of a hodgepodge of pages with different dates, to the point that the second page of the script is a sort of legend listing the revisions made during the writing/filming of the film. Another page lists scenes added and removed during filming.

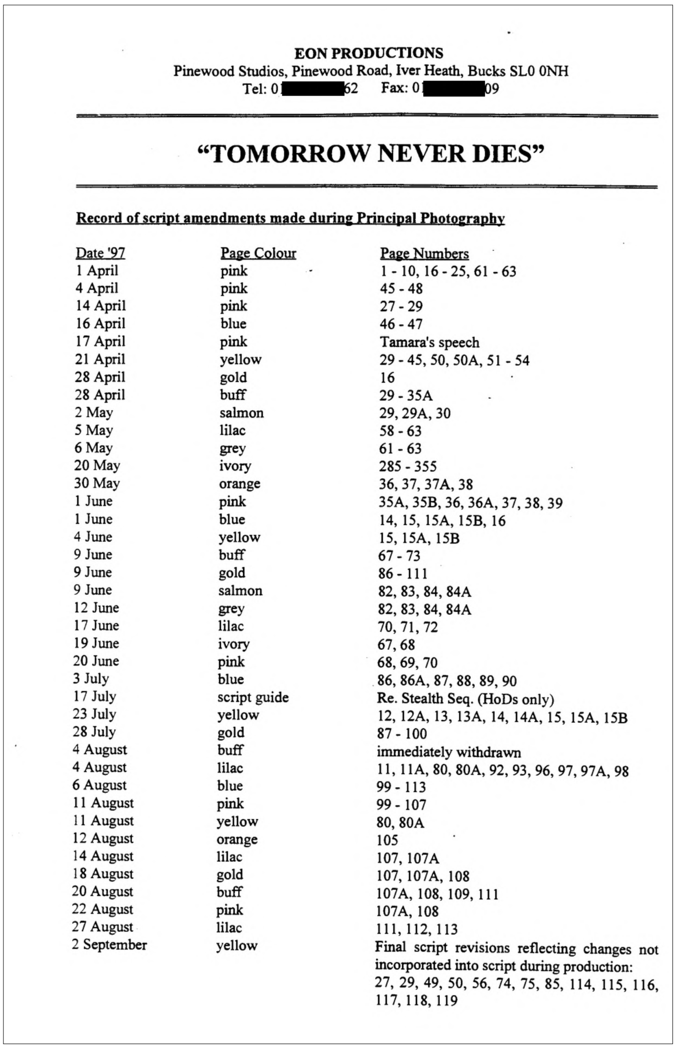
The header page says written "by Bruce Feirstein, based on screenplays ans revisions by Bruce Feirstein, David Campbell Wilson, Nicholas Meyer and Daniel Petrie, Jr". It is specified that it is a provisional credit.

As you would expect from a "final shooting script", the whole thing is very similar to the film but contains a few differences (and obviously the deleted scenes).

> - The James Bond Archives[184] : The final shooting script of Tomorrow Never Dies [...] was dated August 18, 1997, some three and a half months into principal photography, and just three weeks prior to its end. There were 39 revisions, with 127 scenes added and 149 scenes deleted. Since pages of different colors were issued with each revision, it was nicknamed "the rainbow script". Only three white pages of unaltered script remained.

The script begins like the movie, and contrary to the previous March 13 Petrie's shooting script, a character named Charles Robinson replace Tanner. Robinson was apparently invented because the actor Michael Kitchen, who played Bill Tanner in GoldenEye, was not available for this new film[185]. The helicopter that Robinson identifies is a "French A-17 attack helicopter" (not a "Panther AS-565").

When Bond appear and says his first sentence after having punched a terrorist who had a cigarette: "Filthy habit (Deadly habit)". Still no mention

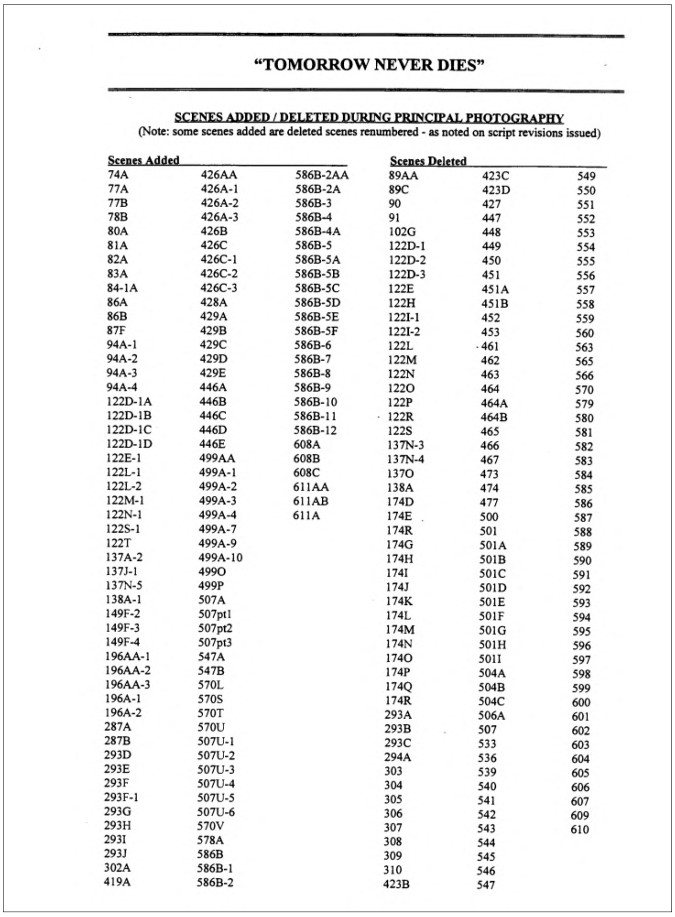


EON PRODUCTIONS
Pinewood Studios, Pinewood Road, Iver Heath, Bucks SL0 0NH
Tel: 01[redacted]62 Fax: 01[redacted]09

"TOMORROW NEVER DIES"

Record of script amendments made during Principal Photography

Date '97	Page Colour	Page Numbers
1 April	pink	1 - 10, 16 - 25, 61 - 63
4 April	pink	45 - 48
14 April	pink	27 - 29
16 April	blue	46 - 47
17 April	pink	Tamara's speech
21 April	yellow	29 - 45, 50, 50A, 51 - 54
28 April	gold	16
28 April	buff	29 - 35A
2 May	salmon	29, 29A, 30
5 May	lilac	58 - 63
6 May	grey	61 - 63
20 May	ivory	285 - 355
30 May	orange	36, 37, 37A, 38
1 June	pink	35A, 35B, 36, 36A, 37, 38, 39
1 June	blue	14, 15, 15A, 15B, 16
4 June	yellow	15, 15A, 15B
9 June	buff	67 - 73
9 June	gold	86 - 111
9 June	salmon	82, 83, 84, 84A
12 June	grey	82, 83, 84, 84A
17 June	lilac	70, 71, 72
19 June	ivory	67, 68
20 June	pink	68, 69, 70
3 July	blue	86, 86A, 87, 88, 89, 90
17 July	script guide	Re. Stealth Seq. (HoDs only)
23 July	yellow	12, 12A, 13, 13A, 14, 14A, 15, 15A, 15B
28 July	gold	87 - 100
4 August	buff	immediately withdrawn
4 August	lilac	11, 11A, 80, 80A, 92, 93, 96, 97, 97A, 98
6 August	blue	99 - 113
11 August	pink	99 - 107
11 August	yellow	80, 80A
12 August	orange	105
14 August	lilac	107, 107A
18 August	gold	107, 107A, 108
20 August	buff	107A, 108, 109, 111
22 August	pink	107A, 108
27 August	lilac	111, 112, 113
2 September	yellow	Final script revisions reflecting changes not incorporated into script during production: 27, 29, 49, 50, 56, 74, 75, 85, 114, 115, 116, 117, 118, 119



"TOMORROW NEVER DIES"

SCENES ADDED / DELETED DURING PRINCIPAL PHOTOGRAPHY
(Note: some scenes added are deleted scenes renumbered - as noted on script revisions issued)

Scenes Added

74A
77A
77B
78B
80A
81A
82A
83A
84-1A
86A
86B
87F
94A-1
94A-2
94A-3
94A-4
122D-1A
122D-1B
122D-1C
122D-1D
122E-1
122L-1
122L-2
122M-1
122N-1
122S-1
122T
137A-2
137J-1
137N-5
138A-1
149F-2
149F-3
149F-4
196AA-1
196AA-2
196AA-3
196A-1
196A-2
287A
287B
293D
293E
293F
293F-1
293G
293H
293I
293J
302A
419A
426AA
426A-1
426A-2
426A-3
426B
426C
426C-1
426C-2
426C-3
428A
429A
429B
429C
429D
429E
446A
446B
446C
446D
446E
499AA
499A-1
499A-2
499A-3
499A-4
499A-7
499A-9
499A-10
499O
499P
507A
507pt1
507pt2
507pt3
547A
547B
570L
570S
570T
570U
507U-1
507U-2
507U-3
507U-4
507U-5
507U-6
570V
578A
586B
586B-1
586B-2
586B-2AA
586B-2A
586B-3
586B-4
586B-4A
586B-5
586B-5A
586B-5B
586B-5C
586B-5D
586B-5E
586B-5F
586B-6
586B-7
586B-8
586B-9
586B-10
586B-11
586B-12
608A
608B
608C
611AA
611AB
611A

Scenes Deleted

89AA
89C
90
91
102G
122D-1
122D-2
122D-3
122E
122H
122I-1
122I-2
122L
122M
122N
122O
122P
122R
122S
137N-3
137N-4
137O
138A
174D
174E
174R
174G
174H
174I
174J
174K
174L
174M
174N
174O
174P
174Q
174R
293A
293B
293C
294A
303
304
305
306
307
308
309
310
423B
423C
423D
427
447
448
449
450
451
451A
451B
452
453
461
462
463
464
464A
464B
465
466
467
473
474
477
500
501
501A
501B
501C
501D
501E
501F
501G
501H
501I
504A
504B
504C
506A
507
533
536
539
540
541
542
543
544
545
546
547
549
550
551
552
553
554
555
556
557
558
559
560
563
565
566
570
579
580
581
582
583
584
585
586
587
588
589
590
591
592
593
594
595
596
597
598
599
600
601
602
603
604
605
606
607
609
610

of a takeoff scene facing another MiG (the second MiG however appears in the sequence, emerging by surprise from the fireball).

After the credits, and after launching the "Sea-Vac" drilling torpedo towards Devonshire, Stamper reacts to a screen showing the torpedo or its progress:

> - Stamper: Microsoft won't have a game like this out for years.

There is no "delicious" on Carver's part, nor a line about the fact that he is having fun with its headlines.

Carver's meeting with the department heads is here and is a little longer than the film, we learn in particular that:

> - Carver: Entertainment: are we promoting our new children's animated film in all of our media?
> - Mary Golson from "Carver Films": By next week, there won't be a parent on earth who won't feel guilty if they don't visit our toy stores and theme parks.
> [...]
> - Carver: Books: Have any celebrities murdered anyone overnight that I should be aware of?

Regarding the passage with Mr. Wallace:

> - Carver: ...So what you're telling me, Mr. Hill, is that our American ratings are down, because people are on their telephone lines to the internet.
> - Jay Hill: Yes, sir.
> - Carver: I see. Mr. Wallace? I want you to call the President. Tell him that if he doesn't sign the bill doubling telephone rates, we're going to release that tape of him with the cheerleader in the hotel room in Chicago.

(In the film, the blackmail is to lower the price of cable). Carver adds "and make sure we get a good picture of the girl for the cover of her book" when he tells Wallace to post the video anyway.

When he speaks with Stamper, Carver asks him to make sure to bring back the tape [of the massacre] "tonight", Stamper replies that he will guard it with his life.

We also note in parentheses "[Gupta] looks up (from throwing cards into a wall?)". As some of you may have recognized him, the character of Gupta is played in the film by the famous American magician Ricky Jay who made card throwing his great specialty. So much so that he managed to stick playing cards into different objects just by throwing them (and even wrote a self-defense book related to this practice). Scenes of him throwing cards were filmed for Tomorrow Never Dies, but cut during editing (as you can see in this picture). Theses cards weren't in the March 13th script.

Scene with Admiralty is now closer to the film, even if during the car briefing with M, the dialogue is a little longer and tell us more about Carver's past:

> - Robinson: Elliot Carver, born Hong Kong, officially an orphan, unofficially the illegitimate son of a German woman, who died in childbirth, and Lord Roverman, the Hong Kong and London press tycoon. A Chinese family took the boy for a one-time fee of fifty pounds. Thirty years later, Carver built a chain of rival newspapers, that drove Lord Roverman into bankruptcy and suicide.

That Robinson's line was also filmed but cut during editing.

The jaguar gag is still there, and when Q later present the functions of the BMW including missiles, machine guns and other weapons, 007 cut Q off to tell him that it is perfect to "fight traffic".

A little further on, a line designated as "alternative" ("I think we understand each other [the car and I]") was kept in the film instead of the recommended line: "With practice, I might get the hang of it". Q doesn't give him a new weapon in that script.

007 goes to Elliot Carver's party who is telling a story to some of his guests. He says he never published the mad cow rumors because beef baron Angus Black allegedly refused to pay him after losing at poker. He also claims that French breeders didn't pay him to spread the rumor for another year. However, compared to the film, this anecdote is a little longer, with Carver adding:

> - Carver: Of course, I won't deny that I now have 26 new French television stations, and a check from Sir Angus Black for ten thousand pounds... (After a beat) Although he might deny having received a small note from me that says "Never screw with a man who buys ink by the barrel!".

This line was actually filmed but cut during editing.

When Bond sees Paris again, a line of dialogue that we don't hear in the film can be read in the script:

> - Paris: Tell me, James. Do you still sleep with a gun under your pillow?
> - Bond: There is a one small benefit.
> - Paris: Really.
> - Bond: Yes. I can attach a silencer to the gun.

When Carver's henchmen approach Bond at the party, Wai Lin says to him, "Looks like you might be doing some business" (referring to the line "hostile takeovers" line from Bond).

Carver makes his speech and the script (like the film) includes this line "for tonight, I offer you my declaration of principles": a reference to Citizen Kane on Feirstein's part[186].

The fight scene in the recording studio is a little more detailed than in the film with Bond smashing a guitar over a guard's head. The scene ends with 007 embedding a villain's head on the keyboard of a synthesizer (which then produces "a high-pitched unpleasant sound") while commenting out loud "And on that note...". (In the film he breaks a glass ashtray over his head instead).

- Bruce Feirstein[187] : A year ago, I wrote that Carver would have a large circular media center, and I walk in and can't believe it's there, or in that level of detail. When we shot in the recording studio, there was a phone book down there, and it was a Hamburg phone book. Somebody actually went and got a Hamburg phone book! That's a weird thing, when you walk around [in the set] and see that kind of detail.

- Bruce Feirstein[188] : When I first went back to London, we had a meeting, and Jonathan [Pryce] expressed certain concerns about the role; we had a very long and productive conversation about what this villain needed to be. [...] It's not often that a screenwriter gets to collaborate with the actors. [...] We talked about specific scenes, and Jonathan added a lot of great ideas. One example is that after Bond ruins Carver's world-wide broadcast by turning off the power, I was going to have Jonathan sitting at his desk, brooding, with Teri Hatcher consoling him. [...] Jonathan liked the scene, but suggested that it would play better if Carver was watching a news report where his competition was needling him about the failed broadcast. I rewrote the scene to incorporate this.

We notice that Carver adds to Paris when he confronts her: "Then maybe you should get to know him [Bond] better". Which brings us to the scene where Paris goes to join Bond at hotel. The absence of this line (filmed but cut) in the film means that we are not sure whether or not she came to see Bond at her husband's request.

We notice that Paris had to say to Bond "You bastard" before "That's it? Go home?" and that it isn't requested in the script that 007 undresses her... After that there are a few scenes in reverse order compared to the film (Carver thinking alone + Bond and Paris getting out of bed + Carver with Gupta).

Further, into the printing building, the GPS encoder appears to be only thing present in Gupta's safe (no mention of money, magazines, or drugs).

During the scene with Dr. Kaufman, we read that the television news reporter's name is Tamara Kelly (not Steel). One of her lines that is misheard in the film is when she says that Mr. Carver was contacted on his private jet for a comment on the death of his wife; he reportedly said that she was "a woman whose loyalty was incredible".

When Kaufman tells Bond that he felt like an idiot because they couldn't open his car, Bond replies:

- Bond: I had a lot of problems with people trying to steal the radio...

007 kills the Doctor, the script tells us: "Fortunately we are on Bond's grim expression and we don't see the impact". Shortly after, the police enter the room but Bond is no longer there. There is also a request for "a short jump" for Bond from the hotel building to the parking lot.

The car chase in the parking didn't changed since the March 13th script. Two pages annexed to the script however imagine dialogues for the car such as "Weather alert: hail storm" when it is shot at, "Attention: You did not signal your turn". When the enemy rocket passes through the car "Climate alert: adjusting temperature"; "Attention: all four tires have left pavement" at the end of the chase, or even certain lines found in the film.

During the C-130 scene there were some alterations. First Wade holds a golf club inside the plane:

> - Wade: The pilot's an old friend. We used to play poker. Seven card Cambodian stud; everything's wild!

The Air Force sergeant also explains that the plane is flying along a commercial route to avoid suspicion. At the end of his explanations:

> - Bond: ...It's a big ocean. I can't miss [it].

Despite his frivolous remark, Bond seems a little anxious because a few lines earlier he asks the sergeant if he has any other advice for him.

> - Sergeant: When that door opens, you're out.
> - Wade: Definitely sounds like my first marriage. Ready?
> - Bond: The only reason I stay in this job is for the health insurance.

The scene in the sunken Devonshire is the same as in March.

During the scene in the "cargo" helicopter that transports Bond and Wai Lin handcuffed, we note that the line "If I didn't know better, I'd say the man has an edifice complex" was qualified as an alternative (the main line being: "Looks like Carver is throwing another party. This time, I think it's for us"). There is also a short part after this where Stamper turns to them and tells them not to talk anymore, pointing a gun at them.

Carver's building is set in "Saigon" (Ho Chi Minh City) in this script, not Kowloon.

In front of Carver, a few additional lines compared to the film:

> - Carver: Exactly. Cesar had his legions, Napoleon had his armies, and I have my divisions: News. TV. Magazines. Eight-thousand journalists, in a hundred and thirty-two countries around the globe.
> - Bond: And still not a thing to watch.

- Carver: In the next century, Mr. Bond, the great battles won't be fought over land or politics... But people's minds. How they think, what they eat, what they wear, what they buy. Information is power. And by midnight tonight, with the help of General Chang, I'm going to reach, and influence, more people than any one in the history of this planet, save God himself.

- Jeff Kleeman[189] : I had just worked on a movie with [writer, screenwriter and producer] Clive [Barker] called Lord of Illusions [which is the reason we cast Famke Janssen on GoldenEye]. [...] When we get to the moment when Pierce and Michelle are in the high-rise with Jonathan Pryce: we knew we had to have a bit where Jonathan threatened them with something; but we didn't know what. And so I turned to Clive and I said "give me something, it's not something we're ever going to play out but something that we can at least get some kind of visual with, and do do something that feels a little exotic or interesting and not just just, you know, the same old stuff". And Clive said "chakra torture", and you [have] these strange shaped instruments [in the film].

The concept of Stamper feeling pleasure instead of pain was also entirely removed, it is not present anymore in that script.

The escape is similar to the film, even if as in a film's deleted scene, Gupta throws playing cards towards Bond and Wai Lin as they escape. However, it's a guard that he hits in the arm.

After the banner scene, comes the motorcycle chase, which didn't evolved since the 13 March script. We just note that they don't steal the motorcycle from a passerby who has fallen of it, but from one of Carver guard who Bond knocks out and off the motorcycle.

(It should be noted that pages appended to the script gives now dialogues and passages where Bond and Wai Lin fight and change positions on the motorcycle).

The bike shop haven't evolved too but the dialogue afterward now unfold similar to the film. When Bond looks at Wai Lin after finding Walther's new model: "Bond is struck by the vision of this highly professional woman sitting at her computer: it's the first time he's noticed how beautiful she is".

During the epilogue on the stealth ship, we notice Admiral Kelly of HMS Bedford firing a missile at the Chinese fleet when he thinks that they have sent him a missile:

- Gupta: The British have responded to our missile with typical British restraint, firing one missile at the Chinese fleet...
- Carver: Only one? Admirable. No pun intended.
- Gupta: And the Chinese have upped the ante by scrambling a squadron of Chinese MiGs.
- Carver: How thoughtful. A certain lack of finesse, but...

As in a deleted scene from the film, Stamper strangle the guard who was supposed to be monitoring the surveillance cameras and who had missed seeing Bond and Wai Lin.

The script ask for camera shoot showing Stamper and his men searching for the mines placed by Bond and Wai Lin, and throw them into the water. (Bond had stashed two mined in the same place, hoping that no one would look for two so close, but Stamper was smarter):

- Carver: Excellent. Mr. Stamper: did you remove all the mines?
- Stamper: All sixteen of them. Including the one Bond hid. It's an old trick. I would have expected better of him.
- Carver: I'll provide the editorial comments, thank you.

On the other hand, there is no scene where Wai Lin tries to defend herself in front of Carver or him who then makes fun of her by imitating martial arts.

- Jeff Kleeman[190] : [The film] spend far too much time on that stealth boat at the end, [...] we have built the stealth boat sets and we didn't have a script. We were getting closer and closer to the end of production, so we just put a lot more script on the stealth boat, because we had those sets built and accessible to us. If we didn't have a hard release date, we wouldn't have had to do that.

Overall, the stealth-ship scene in that script are different from the one of the March 13th script: they are now similar to the movie.

The homemade bomb that Bond makes in the script is made from flares, two oxygen tubes and a detonator from his watch (not a grenade).

Interestingly, there is a reference to Gupta's cards when Bond kidnaps the latter:

Gupta is doing a one-handed card shuffle in front of his computer. He sets the cards down on the desk.
- Gupta (to Carver): ...Ready to rock and ruin.
Gupta notices something odd: the cards are missing. He turns around: Bond has the deck in one hand and a gun in the other.
- Bond: I think you've played your last card.

(Note that the order of many of the scenes on the stealth ship is different in the script than in the film). In the script Carver says he's going to have exclusive broadcast rights in China for "fifty years" and "So much for German efficiency" is well present in the script.

Two references to Christianity, however, were cut short in Carver's speech to Bond when he held Gupta hostage:

- Carver: For great men - presidents, popes, publishers and more than a few crown princes - great men have always manipulated the media to change the world... From the opening words of the Bible, to the closing story on last night's ten o'clock news. As William Randolph Hearst [...]

- Roger Spottiswoode[191] : He wants a Gulf War-like situation between England and China, or something like the Spanish-American War. [...] Ted Turner didn't start the Gulf War, but the Gulf War sure helped CNN. It had been there for five > years, but nobody was watching. But it was made by the Gulf War. Our character is a man who is in need of a bit of a boost.

After Wai Lin got rid of a guard with a shuriken (weapon also known as throwing star) there is a part when 007 says to her "nice work": she then replies "I was a star pupil". (Note that Bond doesn't save the day in this scene: there is no third guard).

During the action scene shortly after, it is written that Bond places detonators on the rocket launcher after he finishes using it (he blows it up). Wai Lin uses her last two bullets on valves, which "setting off a chain reaction [...] the room is engulfed in a blast of super-heated steam. As the steam clears the eight guards are revealed, cooked as thoroughly as chickens in a Tandoori oven".

After Carver's death by the drill:

> - Bond: That's something to chew over.

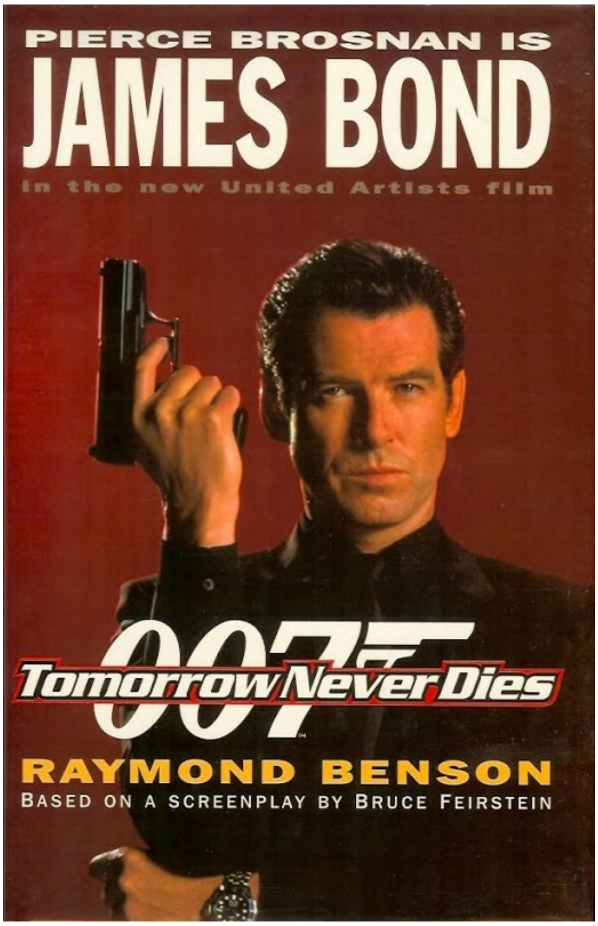
The rest is similar to the film.

> - Jeff Kleeman[192] : After the release of Tomorrow Never Dies, at UA we became very interested in making two spin-off movies. One would be a kind of prequel centered on Dr. Kaufman. Think of it as our Better Call Saul. It would have been a one-off movie. Something fun, unexpected, and a bit eccentric. The other idea was to attempt to launch an ongoing franchise based on Michelle Yeoh's character, Wai Lin. After a number of conversations, Barbara and Michael understandably felt they didn't have the bandwidth to produce either given the intense development and production schedule we were asking them to follow in order to deliver a Bond film every other year.

Novelization



PIERCE BROSNAN IS
JAMES BOND
in the new United Artists film
007
Tomorrow Never Dies
RAYMOND BENSON
BASED ON A SCREENPLAY BY BRUCE FEIRSTEIN

Raymond Benson succeeds John Gardner at the head of Bond literature and writes his first novelization. This one was published in 1997 in the United Kingdom.

Bond's novelizations weren't written from the finished films, they were written during their conception. And for this case, it is very obvious that Benson used in majority the March 13th shooting script for writing his book. So we find in the novelization significant scenes and dialogue from it which were later altered during the film conception. That's a part of charm of this book.

In consequence, you won't see Gupta using his playing cards in the novelization, since this character's characteristic was included in a latter stage. The character of Charles Robinson also doesn't appear in the novelization, we have Bill Tanner instead. It is specified that the "pre-title" scene is located in the Khyber pass, Bond smokes and he obtains his Walther P99 from Q at the same time as the BMW.

Felix Leiter is very briefly mentioned and there is also a short scene where Carver and Stamper pay a visit to Paris who is in Bond's hotel room.

Before joining the Sea Doplhin II, Carver's stealth boat in the novelization, Bond and Wai Lin make love on the junk. Bond doesn't take Gupta hostage, Carver opens fire on the Royal Navy once his boat is spotted, and Bond and Stamper fight on the roof of the ship. The scene where Stamper drops the chained Wai Lin into the water doesn't exist in the novelization. Carver fires the missile while Stamper is hanging on the back of it (disoriented, the missile will fall into the water and Stamper therefore dies before Carver).

It is not said at any point in the novelization that Carver's goal is to have exclusivity on the Chinese airwaves, his motivations are not clearly explained, the character however criticizes England for having returned Hong Kong and thinks that the fact of having been abandoned by his father must have triggered in him his thirst for power.

A chapter is devoted to Wai Lin's investigation: we learn that she is part of the People's External Security Force and that she is investigating the theft of a low-frequency radar by General Chang. After infiltrating a warehouse and approaching a man posing as a prostitute, Lin discovers that Chang, before disappearing, had shipped a supposed shipment of tea to CMGN HQ in Hamburg.

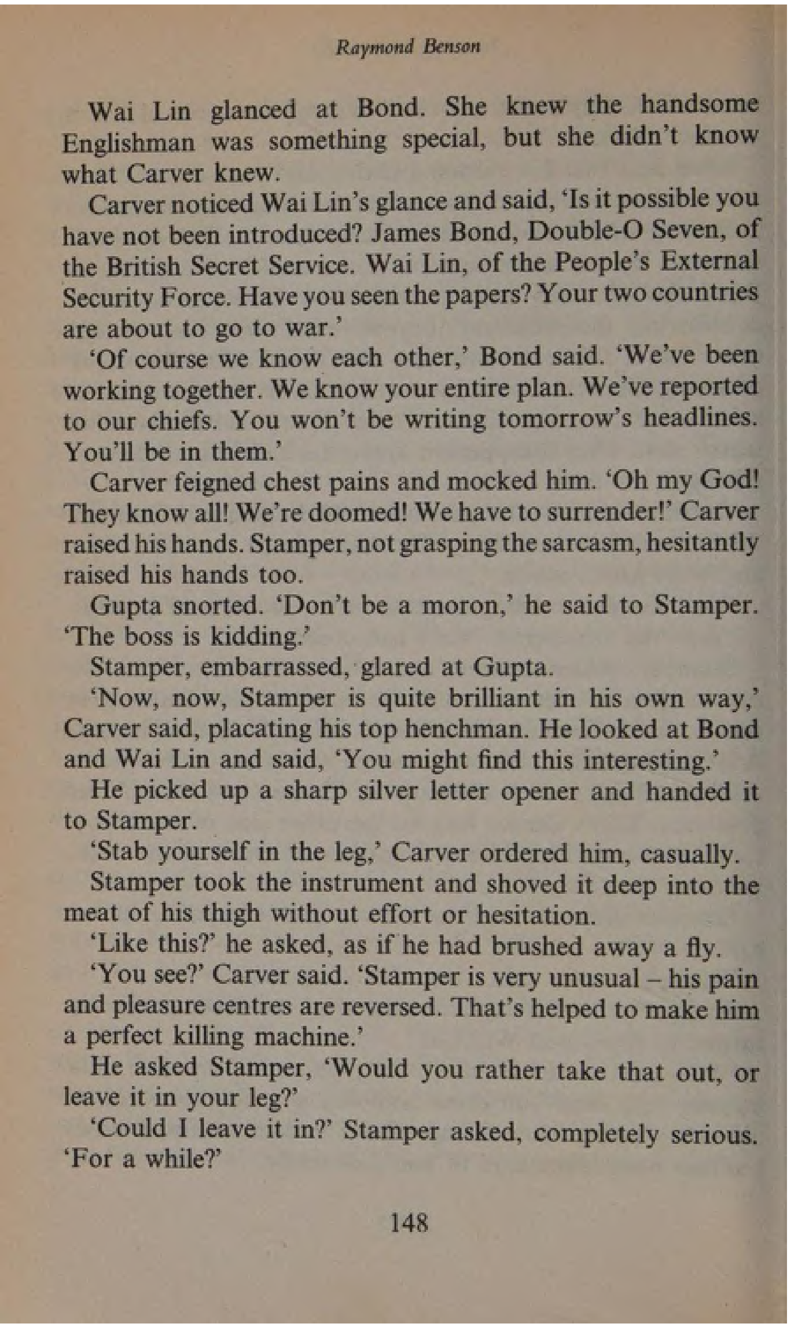
A chapter is also devoted to Elliot Carver: illegitimate son of Lord Roverman and a German prostitute, he grew up in Hong Kong in a modest family. After a disturbing revelation about his origins, he fell into depression until he was 21. Having become a weather presenter in Hong Kong, he gets tired of his career and decides to find his father. With the help of Stamper and a certain Schnizler, he blackmails his father and forces him to commit suicide to inherit his media empire.

The scene of the inauguration of Carver's new European HQ in Hamburg is one of those which differs most from the film: Wai Lin is introduced to Carver as Bond's competitor for the banker position, Paris slaps Bond in front of her husband, the dialogues between Paris and Bond are moved to the hotel scene. Wai Lin joins 007 in the room where he is beaten up, Paris ends her relationship with Elliot, Bond sabotages Carver's evening by activating the fire-fighting device...

The scene at Saigon HQ also contains quite a few differences from the film: Carver asks Stamper to stick a letter opener in his own leg, Stamper does so and takes great pleasure by doing so. Carver also reveals that he intends to start a war every two years. The instruments of torture are not shown to Wai Lin and Bond, Lin uses Gupta as a human shield, the building is under construction and Bond and Lin jump over a street with a vertical bamboo support pole...

Paris and Bond's relationship is also briefly explained: they met at a cocktail party, Paris McKenna was in fashion shows and their relationship lasted two months. It had been seven years since they had seen each other again.

We also find the forklifts chase in the book.



Raymond Benson

Wai Lin glanced at Bond. She knew the handsome Englishman was something special, but she didn't know what Carver knew.

Carver noticed Wai Lin's glance and said, 'Is it possible you have not been introduced? James Bond, Double-O Seven, of the British Secret Service. Wai Lin, of the People's External Security Force. Have you seen the papers? Your two countries are about to go to war.'

'Of course we know each other,' Bond said. 'We've been working together. We know your entire plan. We've reported to our chiefs. You won't be writing tomorrow's headlines. You'll be in them.'

Carver feigned chest pains and mocked him. 'Oh my God! They know all! We're doomed! We have to surrender!' Carver raised his hands. Stamper, not grasping the sarcasm, hesitantly raised his hands too.

Gupta snorted. 'Don't be a moron,' he said to Stamper. 'The boss is kidding.'

Stamper, embarrassed, glared at Gupta.

'Now, now, Stamper is quite brilliant in his own way,' Carver said, placating his top henchman. He looked at Bond and Wai Lin and said, 'You might find this interesting.'

He picked up a sharp silver letter opener and handed it to Stamper.

'Stab yourself in the leg,' Carver ordered him, casually.

Stamper took the instrument and shoved it deep into the meat of his thigh without effort or hesitation.

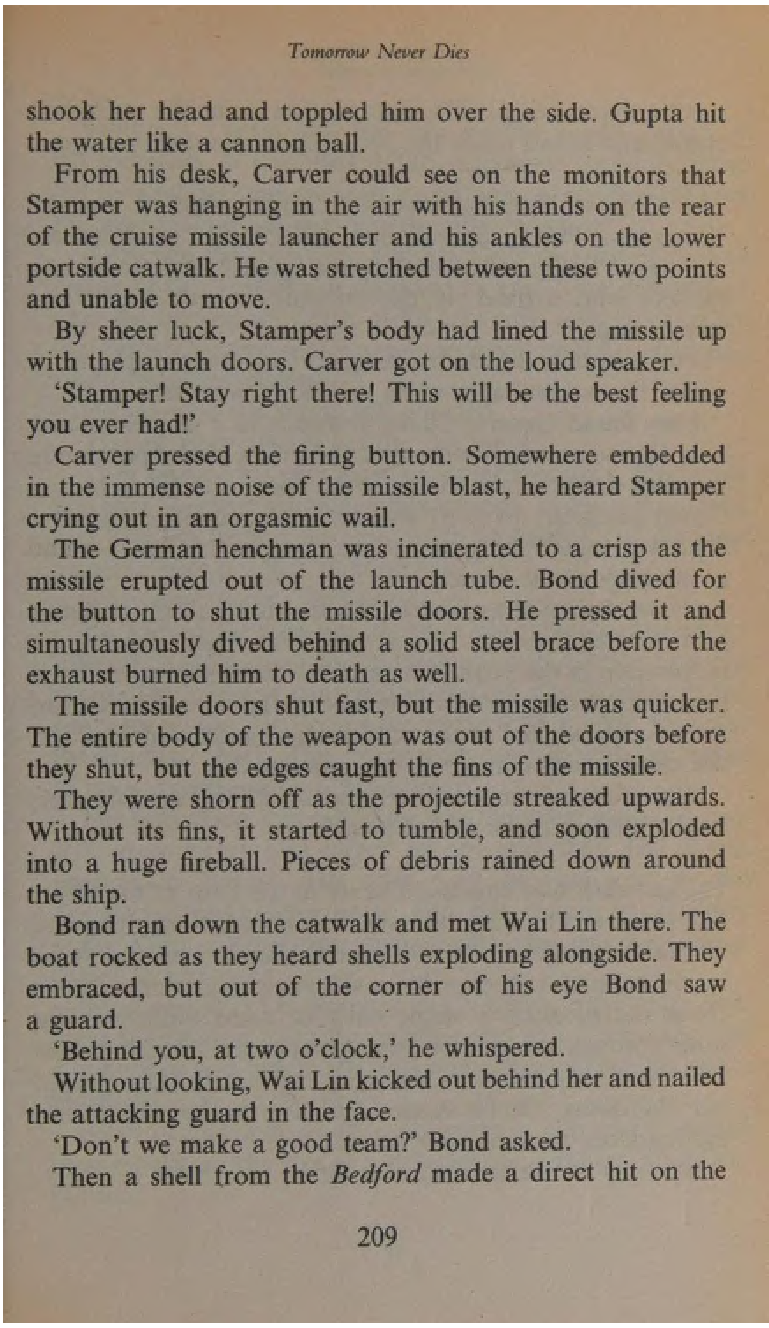
'Like this?' he asked, as if he had brushed away a fly.

'You see?' Carver said. 'Stamper is very unusual – his pain and pleasure centres are reversed. That's helped to make him a perfect killing machine.'

He asked Stamper, 'Would you rather take that out, or leave it in your leg?'

'Could I leave it in?' Stamper asked, completely serious. 'For a while?'

148



Tomorrow Never Dies

shook her head and toppled him over the side. Gupta hit the water like a cannon ball.

From his desk, Carver could see on the monitors that Stamper was hanging in the air with his hands on the rear of the cruise missile launcher and his ankles on the lower portside catwalk. He was stretched between these two points and unable to move.

By sheer luck, Stamper's body had lined the missile up with the launch doors. Carver got on the loud speaker.

'Stamper! Stay right there! This will be the best feeling you ever had!'

Carver pressed the firing button. Somewhere embedded in the immense noise of the missile blast, he heard Stamper crying out in an orgasmic wail.

The German henchman was incinerated to a crisp as the missile erupted out of the launch tube. Bond dived for the button to shut the missile doors. He pressed it and simultaneously dived behind a solid steel brace before the exhaust burned him to death as well.

The missile doors shut fast, but the missile was quicker. The entire body of the weapon was out of the doors before they shut, but the edges caught the fins of the missile.

They were shorn off as the projectile streaked upwards. Without its fins, it started to tumble, and soon exploded into a huge fireball. Pieces of debris rained down around the ship.

Bond ran down the catwalk and met Wai Lin there. The boat rocked as they heard shells exploding alongside. They embraced, but out of the corner of his eye Bond saw a guard.

'Behind you, at two o'clock,' he whispered.

Without looking, Wai Lin kicked out behind her and nailed the attacking guard in the face.

'Don't we make a good team?' Bond asked.

Then a shell from the Bedford made a direct hit on the 209

Releasing your film and being accused of plagiarism

Tomorrow Never Dies has its premiere on December 9, 1997. Ten days later, on December 19, a lawsuit is filled in a Los Angeles court[193].

At the origin of this one, three screenwriters are accusing the movie and its novelization of plagiarism[194]. Jeffrey Howard, Chris Beutler and Jay Schlossberg-Cohen in a complaint believe that a (non-Bond) spec script they wrote in 1994 called Currency of Fear, was used for the movie[195].

According to them, in March 1996, they submitted their script to several figures in the film industry. Among those was Madeline Warren, the wife of Bruce Feirstein, production executive at New Regency Prods[196]. Her husband Bruce precise that she must read the 30 to 60 scripts that cross her desk every month[197].

The three plaintiffs filed lawsuits against Madeline Warren, Bruce Feirstein, MGM, United Artists and Penguin Putnam (the publisher of the novelization), and was seeking $5 million in damages[198].

The accusation says that Tomorrow Never Dies is similar in 11 ways to Currency of Fear[199]. Among them a computer nerd character named Henry in both script: Henry Gupta and Henry Jones.

> - Bruce Feirstein[200] : Do they think my wife called me up and said "I have just the solution for your script: Call him Henry"? Why didn't they just accuse me of also using black type on white paper?

In Currency of Fear, the villain was apparently Nigel Bohr, a Briton in his 50s who owns a multi-media conglomerate and uses it to create tension between Britain and China over Hong Kong to boost his TV ratings as well as the value of his stock portfolio, the lawsuit sates[201].

> - Bruce Feirstein[202] : It's the Zeitgeist. These ideas are just out there in the air. A media mogul having something to do with Hong Kong in 1996, just before the turnover, is something 300 people could have come up with.

> - Bruce Feirstein[203] : The lawsuit is absurd. I was already working in London on the script after the story had been approved when they submitted their script to New Regency.

The press didn't reported how the lawsuit ended.

Sources/references from chapter 18: Tomorrow Never Dies

1 "Danjaq on bond wagon with two script deals" by Suzan Ayscough in Variety (May 26, 1993): https://variety.com/1993/film/news/danjaq-on-bond-wagon-with-two-script-deals-107186/

2 For Richard Smith biography, see for the sources:
"Richard Burges Smith dies" in Variety (July 7, 2011): https://variety.com/2011/digital/news/richard-burges-smith-dies-1118039555/
Richard Smith's page on Legacy.com : https://www.legacy.com/us/obituaries/hartfordcourant/name/richard-smith-obituary?id=20323473
"Richard Burges Smith, 48, author and screenwriter" by Carl Nolte in SFgate (July 7, 2011): https://www.sfgate.com/bayarea/article/richard-burges-smith-48-author-and-screenwriter-2355665.php
"Richard Smith's Bond outing" by Philip Poggiali in MI6 Confidential magazine (issue #43, volume 11, december 2017).

3 For John Cork biography, see for the sources:
"John Cork talks to Paul Rowlands" interview on Money Into Light: http://www.money-into-light.com/2012/12/john-cork-talks-to-paul-rowlands-part-1.html and http://www.money-into-light.com/2012/12/john-cork-talks-to-paul-rowlands-part-2_5.html
"The John Cork CBn Interview" by Athena Stamos on CBn (November 14, 2005): http://commanderbond.net/article/2992
"John Cork Dishes on James Bond Blu-ray Collection!" by Brian Gallagher on Movieweb (October 21, 2008): https://movieweb.com/exclusive-john-cork-dishes-on-james-bond-blu-ray-collection/
Made in Cloverland: http://www.madeincloverland.com/about_us.htm
The Ian Fleming Foundation website: http://www.ianflemingfoundation.org/about-new.html
John Cork's Wikipedia page.

4 "John Cork talks to Paul Rowlands" interview on Money Into Light: http://www.money-into-light.com/2012/12/john-cork-talks-to-paul-rowlands-part-1.html

5 "John Cork talks to Paul Rowlands" interview on Money Into Light: http://www.money-into-light.com/2012/12/john-cork-talks-to-paul-rowlands-part-1.html

6 "The John Cork CBn Interview" by Athena Stamos on CBn (November 14, 2005): http://commanderbond.net/article/2992
"John Cork talks to Paul Rowlands" interview on Money Into Light: http://www.money-into-light.com/2012/12/john-cork-talks-to-paul-rowlands-part-1.html

7 "John Cork talks to Paul Rowlands" interview on Money Into Light: http://www.money-into-light.com/2012/12/john-cork-talks-to-paul-rowlands-part-1.html

8 "Some Kind of Hero: The Remarkable Story of the James Bond Films" by Matthew Field & Ajay Chowdhury (2015).

9 "The John Cork CBn Interview" by Athena Stamos on CBn (November 14, 2005): http://commanderbond.net/article/2992

10 "The John Cork CBn Interview" by Athena Stamos on CBn (November 14, 2005): http://commanderbond.net/article/2992

11 "John Cork talks to Paul Rowlands" interview on Money Into Light: http://www.money-into-light.com/2012/12/john-cork-talks-to-paul-rowlands-part-1.html

12 "John Cork talks to Paul Rowlands" interview on Money Into Light: http://www.money-into-light.com/2012/12/john-cork-talks-to-paul-rowlands-part-1.html

13 "John Cork talks to Paul Rowlands" interview on Money Into Light: http://www.money-into-light.com/2012/12/john-cork-talks-to-paul-rowlands-part-1.html

14 "Some Kind of Hero: The Remarkable Story of the James Bond Films" by Matthew Field & Ajay Chowdhury (2015).

15 "John Cork talks to Paul Rowlands" interview on Money Into Light: http://www.money-into-light.com/2012/12/john-cork-talks-to-paul-rowlands-part-1.html

16 "Some Kind of Hero: The Remarkable Story of the James Bond Films" by Matthew Field & Ajay Chowdhury (2015).

17 "John Cork talks to Paul Rowlands" interview on Money Into Light: http://www.money-into-light.com/2012/12/john-cork-talks-to-paul-rowlands-part-1.html

18 Guy Hamilton interviewed by Mary Parkinson on Afternoon Plus, Thames TV, (January 13, 1975); via "Some Kind of Hero: The Remarkable Story of the James Bond Films" by Matthew Field & Ajay Chowdhury (2015).

19 "For Your Eyes Only: Behind the scenes of the James Bond films" by David Giammarco (2002).

20 "For Your Eyes Only: Behind the scenes of the James Bond films" by David Giammarco (2002).

21 "For Your Eyes Only: Behind the scenes of the James Bond films" by David Giammarco (2002).

22 "For Your Eyes Only: Behind the scenes of the James Bond films" by David Giammarco (2002).

23 "John Cork talks to Paul Rowlands" interview on Money Into Light: http://www.money-into-light.com/2012/12/john-cork-talks-to-paul-rowlands-part-1.html
"We've been expecting you: John Cork" episode of The James Bond A-Z Podcast (2021): https://soundcloud.com/jamesbondatoz/john-cork-interview

24 "John Cork talks to Paul Rowlands" interview on Money Into Light: http://www.money-into-light.com/2012/12/john-cork-talks-to-paul-rowlands-part-1.html
25 "Some Kind of Hero: The Remarkable Story of the James Bond Films" by Matthew Field & Ajay Chowdhury (2015).
26 "John Cork talks to Paul Rowlands" interview on Money Into Light: http://www.money-into-light.com/2012/12/john-cork-talks-to-paul-rowlands-part-1.html
27 "We've been expecting you: John Cork" episode of The James Bond A-Z Podcast (2021): https://soundcloud.com/jamesbondatoz/john-cork-interview
28 "The John Cork CBn Interview" by Athena Stamos on CBn (November 14, 2005): http://commanderbond.net/article/2992
29 "The John Cork CBn Interview" by Athena Stamos on CBn (November 14, 2005): http://commanderbond.net/article/2992
30 Bruce Feirstein interview by John Cork in Ian Fleming Foundation's Goldeneye magazine (issue #5 - in reality #6 - with black cover, summer 1997).
31 "The Making of Tomorrow Never Dies" by Garth Pearce (1997).
32 Kleeman's afterword of the novel Forever and a Death by Donald Westlake (2017).
33 Kleeman's afterword of the novel Forever and a Death by Donald Westlake (2017).
34 For Donald Westlake biography, see for the sources:
"Donald E. Westlake, Mystery Writer, Is Dead at 75" by Jennifer Lee in The New York Times (January 1, 2009): https://www.nytimes.com/2009/01/02/books/02westlake.html
Westlake's autobiography: https://www.donaldwestlake.com/autobiography
"Donald Westlake" obituary by Nick Kimberley in The Guardian (January 1, 2009): https://www.theguardian.com/books/2009/jan/09/obituary-donald-westlake
"Mystery author Donald E. Westlake dies at 75" in The Los Angeles Times (January 2, 2009): https://www.latimes.com/local/obituaries/la-me-westlake2-2009jan02-story.html
"Donald E Westlake" obituary in The Telegraph (January 4, 2009): https://www.telegraph.co.uk/news/obituaries/4109370/Donald-E-Westlake.html
Westlake's letter to Jeff Kleeman (March 30, 1995).
Donald Westlake's Wikipedia page.
35 Kleeman's afterword of the novel Forever and a Death by Donald Westlake (2017).
36 Kleeman's afterword of the novel Forever and a Death by Donald Westlake (2017).
37 Kleeman's afterword of the novel Forever and a Death by Donald Westlake (2017).
38 "Nobody Does it Better" by Mark A. Altman and Edward Gross (2020).
39 An EON internal memo (January 8, 1996).
40 Kleeman's afterword of the novel Forever and a Death by Donald Westlake (2017).
41 Kleeman's afterword of the novel Forever and a Death by Donald Westlake (2017).
42 Kleeman's afterword of the novel Forever and a Death by Donald Westlake (2017).
43 An EON internal memo (January 8, 1996).
44 An EON internal memo (January 8, 1996).
45 An EON internal memo (January 8, 1996).
46 An EON internal memo (January 8, 1996).
47 An EON internal memo (January 8, 1996).
48 An EON internal memo (January 8, 1996).
49 Kleeman's afterword of the novel Forever and a Death by Donald Westlake (2017).
50 An EON internal memo (January 8, 1996).
51 An EON internal memo (January 8, 1996).
52 An EON internal memo (January 8, 1996).
53 French magazine Premiere (issue #238, January 1997); via DevilDead: http://www.devildead.com/histoiresdetournages/index.php?idart=43
54 Kleeman's afterword of the novel Forever and a Death by Donald Westlake (2017).
55 "The Spy Who Wasn't There" by Paul W. on Donaldwestlake.com (October 18, 2018): https://www.donaldwestlake.com/10623
56 "Review: Fall of the City" by Greg Tulonen (July 31, 2016): https://gregtulonen.com/westlake/
57 Kleeman's afterword of the novel Forever and a Death by Donald Westlake (2017).
58 "Bruce Feirstein Interview" on Everything or Nothing videogame website: http://www.ea.com/official/007/everythingornothing/us/featuredstories.jsp?featuredstoriesID=feature10
59 Bruce Feirstein interview by John Cork in Ian Fleming Foundation's Goldeneye magazine (issue #5 - in reality #6 - with black cover, summer 1997).
60 "The James Bond Archives" by Danny Graydon and Paul Duncan (2012).
61 "Nobody Does it Better" by Mark A. Altman and Edward Gross (2020).
62 Bruce Feirstein interview by John Cork in Ian Fleming Foundation's Goldeneye magazine (issue #5 - in reality #6 - with black cover, summer 1997).

63 Bruce Feirstein interview by John Cork in Ian Fleming Foundation's Goldeneye magazine (issue #5 - in reality #6 - with black cover, summer 1997).

64 "Brosnan-era Screenwriters - Feirstein, France, Wilson..." on 007 Forever: http://www.007forever.com/actors/screenwritersinterview.html

65 "Brosnan-era Screenwriters - Feirstein, France, Wilson..." on 007 Forever: http://www.007forever.com/actors/screenwritersinterview.html

66 "Writing 007" by Joe Nazzaro in Starlog special "Tomorrow Never Dies 007: Technical Journal" (1997).

67 "Nobody Does it Better" by Mark A. Altman and Edward Gross (2020).

68 "Nobody Does it Better" by Mark A. Altman and Edward Gross (2020).

69 "Some Kind of Hero: The Remarkable Story of the James Bond Films" by Matthew Field & Ajay Chowdhury (2015).

70 "Some Kind of Hero: The Remarkable Story of the James Bond Films" by Matthew Field & Ajay Chowdhury (2015).

71 "The James Bond Archives" by Danny Graydon and Paul Duncan (2012).

72 "Albert Broccoli, Film Producer, Dies at 87" by Dinitia Smith in The New York Times (June 29, 1996): https://www.nytimes.com/1996/06/29/arts/albert-broccoli-film-producer-dies-at-87.html

73 Bruce Feirstein interview by John Cork in Ian Fleming Foundation's Goldeneye magazine (issue #5 - in reality #6 - with black cover, summer 1997).

74 "Writing 007" by Joe Nazzaro in Starlog special "Tomorrow Never Dies 007: Technical Journal" (1997).

75 "Yesterday's 'Tomorrow': Spottiswoode Interview" by Kevin Collette on Mr. Kiss Kiss Bang Bang website (April 10, 2004): http://www.ianfleming.org/mt_content/000180.html

76 (Sorry, I don't remember where I found this; neither the eventual exact quote).

77 "Writing 007" by Joe Nazzaro in Starlog special "Tomorrow Never Dies 007: Technical Journal" (1997).

78 "Bruce Feirstein: The Tao of Bond-Film Naming" by Bruce Feirstein in Vanity Fair (January 29, 2008).

79 "The James Bond Archives" by Danny Graydon and Paul Duncan (2012).

80 "Directing 007" by Joe Nazzaro in Starlog special "Tomorrow Never Dies 007: Technical Journal" (1997).

81 "Some Kind of Hero: The Remarkable Story of the James Bond Films" by Matthew Field & Ajay Chowdhury (2015).

82 "Some Kind of Hero: The Remarkable Story of the James Bond Films" by Matthew Field & Ajay Chowdhury (2015).

83 "Nobody Does it Better" by Mark A. Altman and Edward Gross (2020).

84 Kleeman's afterword of the novel Forever and a Death by Donald Westlake (2017).

85 "Roger Spottiswoode, nobody directs it better" by Alan Jones in Cinefantastique magazine (volume 29, number 9, January 1988).

86 Bruce Feirstein interview by John Cork in Ian Fleming Foundation's Goldeneye magazine (issue #5 - in reality #6 - with black cover, summer 1997).

87 Kleeman's afterword of the novel Forever and a Death by Donald Westlake (2017).

88 "Some Kind of Hero: The Remarkable Story of the James Bond Films" by Matthew Field & Ajay Chowdhury (2015).

89 "The Making of Tomorrow Never Dies" by Garth Pearce (1997).

90 "The James Bond Archives" by Danny Graydon and Paul Duncan (2012).

91 "Nobody Does it Better" by Mark A. Altman and Edward Gross (2020).

92 "Nobody Does it Better" by Mark A. Altman and Edward Gross (2020).

93 "Nobody Does it Better" by Mark A. Altman and Edward Gross (2020).

94 "MGM's completion Bond" by Rex Weiner and Adam Dawtrey in Variety (December 30, 1996): https://variety.com/1996/scene/vpage/mgm-s-completion-bond-1117436166/

95 "Nobody Does it Better" by Mark A. Altman and Edward Gross (2020).
For Nicholas Meyer biography, see for the sources:
Nicholas Meyer's old website: http://nmeyer.pxl.net/biography.html
Nicholas Meyer's new website: https://www.nicholas-meyer.com/about Nicholas Meyer's Wikipedia page.

96 "Nobody Does it Better" by Mark A. Altman and Edward Gross (2020).
For David Wilson biography, see for the sources:
David Wilson's IMDb page.
David Wilson's Wikipedia page.

97 "Some Kind of Hero: The Remarkable Story of the James Bond Films" by Matthew Field & Ajay Chowdhury (2015).
For Tom Ropelewski biography, see for the sources:
Tom Ropelewski's IMDb page.
Tom Ropelewski's Wikipedia page.

98 "MGM's completion Bond" by Rex Weiner and Adam Dawtrey in Variety (December 30, 1996): https://variety.com/1996/scene/vpage/mgm-s-completion-bond-1117436166/

For Robert Collector biography, see for the sources:

Robert Collector's IMDb page.

99 "Nobody Does it Better" by Mark A. Altman and Edward Gross (2020).

For Kurt Wimmer biography, see for the sources:

Kurt Wimmer's IMDb page.

Kurt Wimmer's Wikipedia page.

100 "Nobody Does it Better" by Mark A. Altman and Edward Gross (2020).

For Leslie Dixon biography, see for the sources:

Leslie Dixon's IMDb page.

Leslie Dixon's Wikipedia page.

101 "SpyMaster Interview #71 - Jeff Kleeman" on SpyHards podcast: https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=IUvYhZNbjZs

102 "SpyMaster Interview #71 - Jeff Kleeman" on SpyHards podcast: https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=IUvYhZNbjZs

103 "Nobody Does it Better" by Mark A. Altman and Edward Gross (2020).

104 "Nobody Does it Better" by Mark A. Altman and Edward Gross (2020).

105 "The Lost Adventures of James Bond" by Mark Edlitz (2020).

106 "The Making of Tomorrow Never Dies" by Garth Pearce (1997).

107 "Nobody Does it Better" by Mark A. Altman and Edward Gross (2020).

108 "Some Kind of Hero: The Remarkable Story of the James Bond Films" by Matthew Field & Ajay Chowdhury (2015).

109 "The Lost Adventures of James Bond" by Mark Edlitz (2020).

110 "Some Kind of Hero: The Remarkable Story of the James Bond Films" by Matthew Field & Ajay Chowdhury (2015).

111 "Some Kind of Hero: The Remarkable Story of the James Bond Films" by Matthew Field & Ajay Chowdhury (2015).

112 "For Your Eyes Only: Behind the scenes of the James Bond films" by David Giammarco (2002).

113 "Some Kind of Hero: The Remarkable Story of the James Bond Films" by Matthew Field & Ajay Chowdhury (2015).

114 "Nobody Does it Better" by Mark A. Altman and Edward Gross (2020).

115 "Nobody Does it Better" by Mark A. Altman and Edward Gross (2020).

116 "Nobody Does it Better" by Mark A. Altman and Edward Gross (2020).

117 "Nobody Does it Better" by Mark A. Altman and Edward Gross (2020).

118 "Nobody Does it Better" by Mark A. Altman and Edward Gross (2020).

119 "Nobody Does it Better" by Mark A. Altman and Edward Gross (2020).

120 "Charming or Ruthless" by Richard Vine in Tomorrow Never Dies: The official souvenir magazine (1997); via "Some Kind of Hero: The Remarkable Story of the James Bond Films" by Matthew Field & Ajay Chowdhury (2015).

121 "Producing 007" by Joe Nazzaro in Starlog special "Tomorrow Never Dies 007: Technical Journal" (1997).

122 "Some Kind of Hero: The Remarkable Story of the James Bond Films" by Matthew Field & Ajay Chowdhury (2015).

123 "The James Bond Archives" by Danny Graydon and Paul Duncan (2012).

124 "A conversation with one of the other writers - Dan Petrie Jr." by Richard Ashton in Ian Fleming Foundation's Goldeneye magazine (issue #5 - in reality #6 - with black cover, summer 1997).

125 "A conversation with one of the other writers - Dan Petrie Jr." by Richard Ashton in Ian Fleming Foundation's Goldeneye magazine (issue #5 - in reality #6 - with black cover, summer 1997).

126 "The James Bond Archives" by Danny Graydon and Paul Duncan (2012).

127 "Hot Tub Journalism with James Bond Writer Bruce Feirstein" on TheLipTV YouTube channel: https://youtube.com/watch?v=UovuP_CMo24

128 "Nobody Does it Better" by Mark A. Altman and Edward Gross (2020).

129 "Nobody Does it Better" by Mark A. Altman and Edward Gross (2020).

130 "Nobody Does it Better" by Mark A. Altman and Edward Gross (2020).

131 Bruce Feirstein interview by John Cork in Ian Fleming Foundation's Goldeneye magazine (issue #5 - in reality #6 - with black cover, summer 1997).

132 Bruce Feirstein interview by John Cork in Ian Fleming Foundation's Goldeneye magazine (issue #5 - in reality #6 - with black cover, summer 1997).

133 "The James Bond Archives" by Danny Graydon and Paul Duncan (2012).

134 "Nobody Does it Better" by Mark A. Altman and Edward Gross (2020).

135 "Nobody Does it Better" by Mark A. Altman and Edward Gross (2020).

136 "Nobody Does it Better" by Mark A. Altman and Edward Gross (2020).

137 "Nobody Does it Better" by Mark A. Altman and Edward Gross (2020).

138 "Nobody Does it Better" by Mark A. Altman and Edward Gross (2020).

139 "A common Bond" by Patrick Pacheco in InStyle magazine (September 2012 issue, US).
140 "Tomorrow's Femme Michelle Yeoh" by Alan Jones in Femme Fatales (February 1998); via "Some Kind of Hero: The Remarkable Story of the James Bond Films" by Matthew Field & Ajay Chowdhury (2015).
141 "His Word is Bond: An Interview With 007 Screenwriter Bruce Feirstein" by Kerry Douglas Dye on LeisureSuit.net : http://leisuresuit.net/Webzine/articles/bruce_feirstein.shtml
142 "Some Kind of Hero: The Remarkable Story of the James Bond Films" by Matthew Field & Ajay Chowdhury (2015).
143 Bruce Feirstein interview by John Cork in Ian Fleming Foundation's Goldeneye magazine (issue #5 - in reality #6 - with black cover, summer 1997).
144 "Nobody Does it Better" by Mark A. Altman and Edward Gross (2020).
145 "Nobody Does it Better" by Mark A. Altman and Edward Gross (2020).
146 "Nobody Does it Better" by Mark A. Altman and Edward Gross (2020).
147 For Daniel Petrie Jr. biography, see for the sources:
Daniel Petrie Jr.'s Wikipedia page.
148 "The James Bond Archives" by Danny Graydon and Paul Duncan (2012).
149 "The James Bond Archives" by Danny Graydon and Paul Duncan (2012).
150 "A conversation with one of the other writers - Dan Petrie Jr." by Richard Ashton in Ian Fleming Foundation's Goldeneye magazine (issue #5 - in reality #6 - with black cover, summer 1997).
151 "A conversation with one of the other writers - Dan Petrie Jr." by Richard Ashton in Ian Fleming Foundation's Goldeneye magazine (issue #5 - in reality #6 - with black cover, summer 1997).
152 "A conversation with one of the other writers - Dan Petrie Jr." by Richard Ashton in Ian Fleming Foundation's Goldeneye magazine (issue #5 - in reality #6 - with black cover, summer 1997).
153 "The James Bond Archives" by Danny Graydon and Paul Duncan (2012).
154 "Tomorrow Never Dies, 1997", auction 9287, lot 314, on Christie's: https://www.christies.com/en/lot/lot-3839581
155 "The James Bond Archives" by Danny Graydon and Paul Duncan (2012).
156 "Some Kind of Hero: The Remarkable Story of the James Bond Films" by Matthew Field & Ajay Chowdhury (2015).
157 "A conversation with one of the other writers - Dan Petrie Jr." by Richard Ashton in Ian Fleming Foundation's Goldeneye magazine (issue #5 - in reality #6 - with black cover, summer 1997).
158 "A conversation with one of the other writers - Dan Petrie Jr." by Richard Ashton in Ian Fleming Foundation's Goldeneye magazine (issue #5 - in reality #6 - with black cover, summer 1997).
159 "Nobody Does it Better" by Mark A. Altman and Edward Gross (2020).
160 "Yesterday's 'Tomorrow': Spottiswoode Interview" by Kevin Collette on Mr. Kiss Kiss Bang Bang website (April 10, 2004): http://www.ianfleming.org/mt_content/000180.html
161 "His Word is Bond: An Interview With 007 Screenwriter Bruce Feirstein" by Kerry Douglas Dye on LeisureSuit.net : http://leisuresuit.net/Webzine/articles/bruce_feirstein.shtml
162 "The James Bond Archives" by Danny Graydon and Paul Duncan (2012).
163 "Now you see it..." in The James Bond Car Collection booklet (issue #62; Mercedes S-Class).
164 "Now you see it..." in The James Bond Car Collection booklet (issue #62; Mercedes S-Class).
165 "Sea Shadow" on the DARPA website: https://www.darpa.mil/about-us/timeline/sea-shadow
166 Bruce Feirstein interview by John Cork in Ian Fleming Foundation's Goldeneye magazine (issue #5 - in reality #6 - with black cover, summer 1997).
167 "Now you see it..." in The James Bond Car Collection booklet (issue #62; Mercedes S-Class).
168 "The James Bond Archives" by Danny Graydon and Paul Duncan (2012).
169 "First of the International Playboys" by Rupert Howe in Neon (January 1998); via "Some Kind of Hero: The Remarkable Story of the James Bond Films" by Matthew Field & Ajay Chowdhury (2015).
170 "First of the International Playboys" by Rupert Howe in Neon (January 1998); via "Some Kind of Hero: The Remarkable Story of the James Bond Films" by Matthew Field & Ajay Chowdhury (2015).
171 "Nobody Does it Better" by Mark A. Altman and Edward Gross (2020).
172 "The James Bond Archives" by Danny Graydon and Paul Duncan (2012).
173 "The Making of Tomorrow Never Dies" by Garth Pearce (1997).
174 "The James Bond Archives" by Danny Graydon and Paul Duncan (2012).
175 "Some Kind of Hero: The Remarkable Story of the James Bond Films" by Matthew Field & Ajay Chowdhury (2015).
176 Bruce Feirstein interview by John Cork in Ian Fleming Foundation's Goldeneye magazine (issue #5 - in reality #6 - with black cover, summer 1997).
177 Bruce Feirstein interview by John Cork in Ian Fleming Foundation's Goldeneye magazine (issue #5 - in reality #6 - with black cover, summer 1997).
178 "The Making of Tomorrow Never Dies" by Garth Pearce (1997).
179 "And Furthermore" by Judi Dench and John Miller (2010); via "Some Kind of Hero: The Remarkable Story of the James Bond Films" by Matthew Field & Ajay Chowdhury (2015).

180 "Shaken not deterred" by Garth Pearce in The Sunday Times (November 30, 1997); via "Some Kind of Hero: The Remarkable Story of the James Bond Films" by Matthew Field & Ajay Chowdhury (2015).

181 Interview by Richard Ashton on Her Majesty's Secret Servant: http://www.hmss.com/films/mgw/mgw97.html

182 "First of the International Playboys" by Rupert Howe in Neon (January 1998); via "Some Kind of Hero: The Remarkable Story of the James Bond Films" by Matthew Field & Ajay Chowdhury (2015).

183 "Nobody Does it Better" by Mark A. Altman and Edward Gross (2020).

184 "The James Bond Archives" by Danny Graydon and Paul Duncan (2012).

185 Bruce Feirstein interview by John Cork in Ian Fleming Foundation's Goldeneye magazine (issue #5 - in reality #6 - with black cover, summer 1997).

186 "Writing 007" by Joe Nazzaro in Starlog special "Tomorrow Never Dies 007: Technical Journal" (1997).

187 "Writing 007" by Joe Nazzaro in Starlog special "Tomorrow Never Dies 007: Technical Journal" (1997).

188 Bruce Feirstein interview by John Cork in Ian Fleming Foundation's Goldeneye magazine (issue #5 - in reality #6 - with black cover, summer 1997).

189 "SpyMaster Interview #71 - Jeff Kleeman" on SpyHards podcast: https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=IUvYhZNbjZs

190 "Nobody Does it Better" by Mark A. Altman and Edward Gross (2020).

191 "Nobody Does it Better" by Mark A. Altman and Edward Gross (2020).

192 "The Lost Adventures of James Bond" by Mark Edlitz (2020).

193 "‘Tomorrow' focus of suit" by Paul Karon, Rex Weiner in Variety (December 20, 1997): https://variety.com/1997/film/news/tomorrow-focus-of-suit-111799733/
"Les auteurs du dernier bond poursuivis en justice L'agent 007 accusé de Plagiat" in L'Orient-Le Jour (December 24, 1997):
https://www.lorientlejour.com/article/247726/Les_auteurs_du_dernier_bond_poursuivis_en_justice_Lagent_007_accuse_de_Plagiat.html

194 "‘Tomorrow' focus of suit" by Paul Karon, Rex Weiner in Variety (December 20, 1997): https://variety.com/1997/film/news/tomorrow-focus-of-suit-111799733/
"Les auteurs du dernier bond poursuivis en justice L'agent 007 accusé de Plagiat" in L'Orient-Le Jour (December 24, 1997):
https://www.lorientlejour.com/article/247726/Les_auteurs_du_dernier_bond_poursuivis_en_justice_Lagent_007_accuse_de_Plagiat.html

195 "‘Tomorrow' focus of suit" by Paul Karon, Rex Weiner in Variety (December 20, 1997): https://variety.com/1997/film/news/tomorrow-focus-of-suit-111799733/

196 "‘Tomorrow' focus of suit" by Paul Karon, Rex Weiner in Variety (December 20, 1997): https://variety.com/1997/film/news/tomorrow-focus-of-suit-111799733/
"Les auteurs du dernier bond poursuivis en justice L'agent 007 accusé de Plagiat" in L'Orient-Le Jour (December 24, 1997):
https://www.lorientlejour.com/article/247726/Les_auteurs_du_dernier_bond_poursuivis_en_justice_Lagent_007_accuse_de_Plagiat.html
"Three Sue MGM, Local Screenwriter" by Julia C. Mead in The East Hampton Star (January 8, 1998): https://www.easthamptonstar.com/archive/three-sue-mgm-local-screenwriter

197 "Three Sue MGM, Local Screenwriter" by Julia C. Mead in The East Hampton Star (January 8, 1998): https://www.easthamptonstar.com/archive/three-sue-mgm-local-screenwriter

198 "Les auteurs du dernier bond poursuivis en justice L'agent 007 accusé de Plagiat" in L'Orient-Le Jour (December 24, 1997):
https://www.lorientlejour.com/article/247726/Les_auteurs_du_dernier_bond_poursuivis_en_justice_Lagent_007_accuse_de_Plagiat.html
"Screenwriters Sue Makers Of News James Bond Film" by Michael Miller in Daily News (24 December, 1997), from Reuters.

199 "Three Sue MGM, Local Screenwriter" by Julia C. Mead in The East Hampton Star (January 8, 1998): https://www.easthamptonstar.com/archive/three-sue-mgm-local-screenwriter

200 "Three Sue MGM, Local Screenwriter" by Julia C. Mead in The East Hampton Star (January 8, 1998): https://www.easthamptonstar.com/archive/three-sue-mgm-local-screenwriter

201 "Screenwriters Sue Makers Of News James Bond Film" by Michael Miller in Daily News (24 December, 1997), from Reuters.

202 "Three Sue MGM, Local Screenwriter" by Julia C. Mead in The East Hampton Star (January 8, 1998): https://www.easthamptonstar.com/archive/three-sue-mgm-local-screenwriter

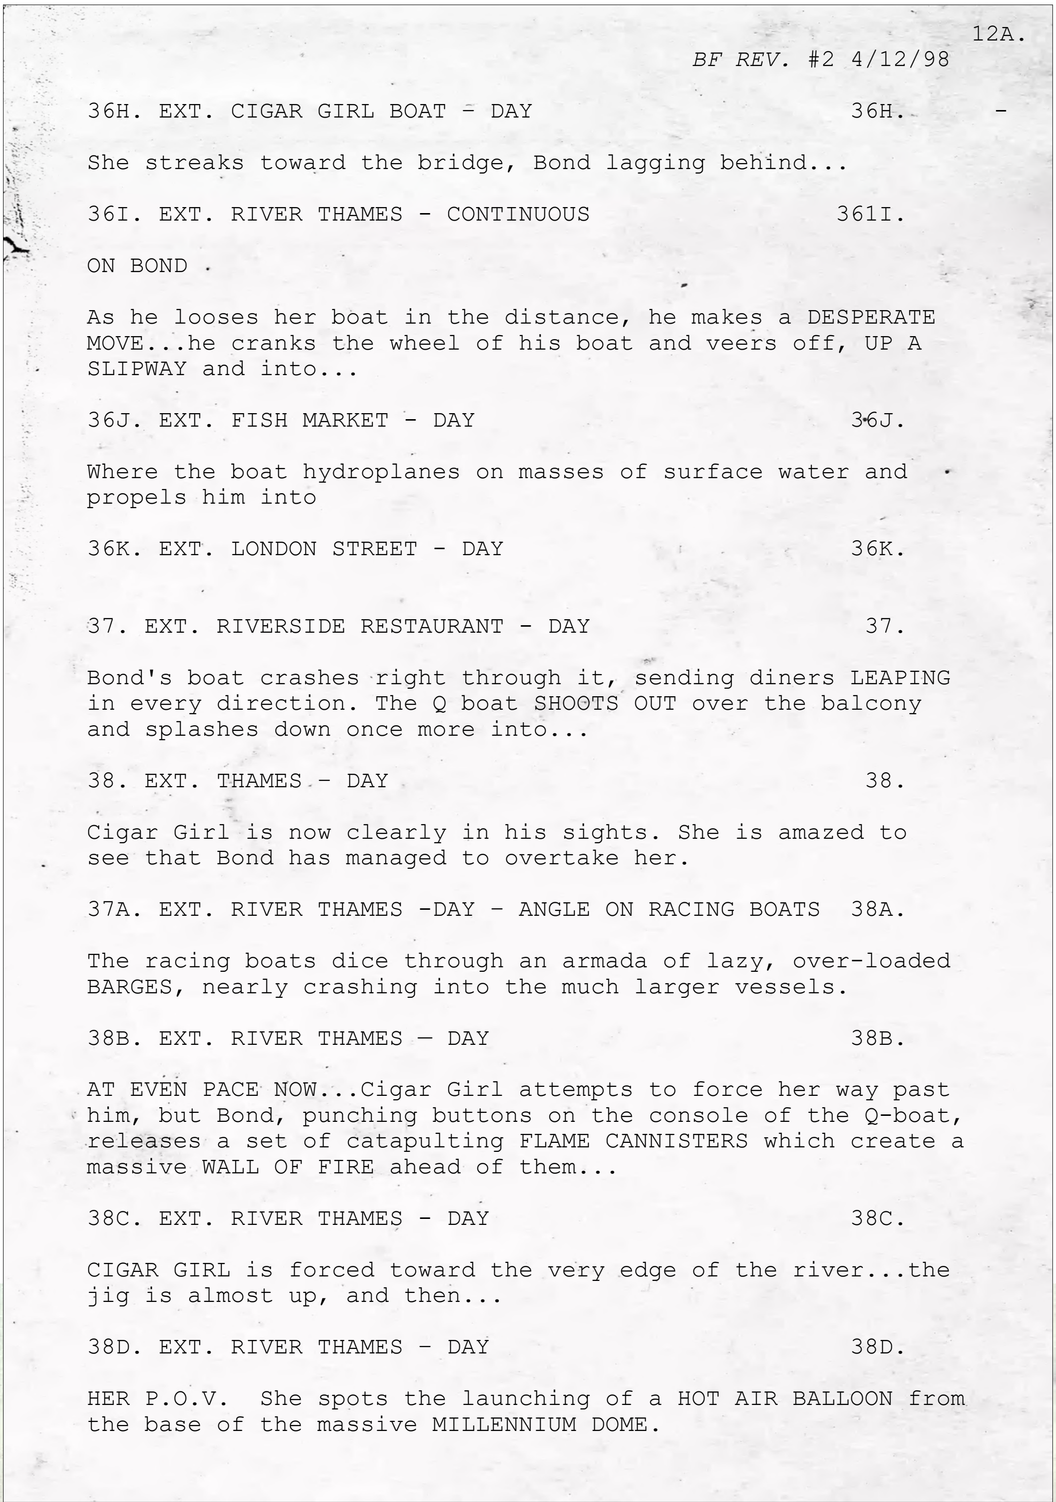
203 "‘Tomorrow' focus of suit" by Paul Karon, Rex Weiner in Variety (December 20, 1997): https://variety.com/1997/film/news/tomorrow-focus-of-suit-111799733/

The World Is Not Enough
007

Release date (premiere) :
8 November 1999

Writing credit as per title sequence:
"Screenplay by Neal Purvis & Robert Wade and Bruce Feirstein ; story by Neal Purvis & Robert Wade"

Director :............................Michael Apted
Producers :...............Michael Wilson and Barbara Broccoli
Director photography :.....Adrian Biddle
Set Designer :........................Peter Lamont
Composer :...........................David Arnold
Editor :..Jim Clark
Title sequence :.............Daniel Kleinman
Title song vocals :........................Garbage



12A.
BF REV. #2 4/12/98

36H. EXT. CIGAR GIRL BOAT - DAY 36H.

She streaks toward the bridge, Bond lagging behind...

36I. EXT. RIVER THAMES - CONTINUOUS 361I.

ON BOND .

As he looses her boat in the distance, he makes a DESPERATE MOVE...he cranks the wheel of his boat and veers off, UP A SLIPWAY and into...

36J. EXT. FISH MARKET - DAY 36J.

Where the boat hydroplanes on masses of surface water and propels him into

36K. EXT. LONDON STREET - DAY 36K.

37. EXT. RIVERSIDE RESTAURANT - DAY 37.

Bond's boat crashes right through it, sending diners LEAPING in every direction. The Q boat SHOOTS OUT over the balcony and splashes down once more into...

38. EXT. THAMES - DAY 38.

Cigar Girl is now clearly in his sights. She is amazed to see that Bond has managed to overtake her.

37A. EXT. RIVER THAMES -DAY - ANGLE ON RACING BOATS 38A.

The racing boats dice through an armada of lazy, over-loaded BARGES, nearly crashing into the much larger vessels.

38B. EXT. RIVER THAMES — DAY 38B.

AT EVEN PACE NOW...Cigar Girl attempts to force her way past him, but Bond, punching buttons on the console of the Q-boat, releases a set of catapulting FLAME CANNISTERS which create a massive WALL OF FIRE ahead of them...

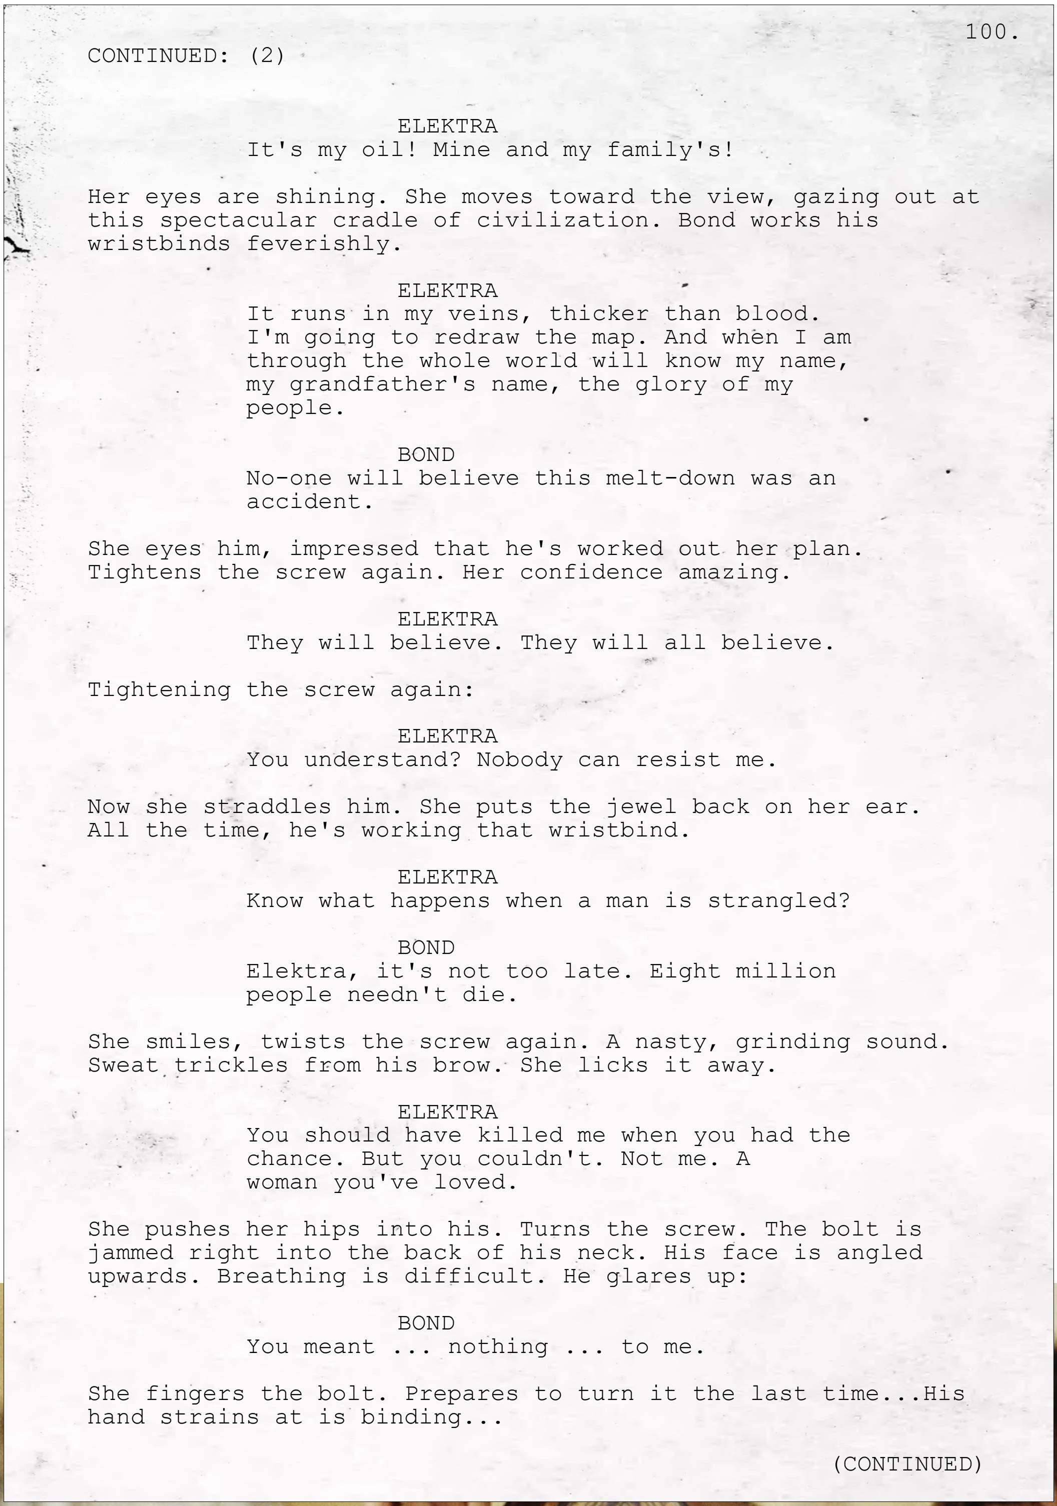
38C. EXT. RIVER THAMES - DAY 38C.

CIGAR GIRL is forced toward the very edge of the river...the jig is almost up, and then...

38D. EXT. RIVER THAMES - DAY 38D.

HER P.O.V. She spots the launching of a HOT AIR BALLOON from the base of the massive MILLENNIUM DOME.

CHAPTER 19



100.

CONTINUED: (2)

ELEKTRA
It's my oil! Mine and my family's!

Her eyes are shining. She moves toward the view, gazing out at this spectacular cradle of civilization. Bond works his wristbinds feverishly.

ELEKTRA
It runs in my veins, thicker than blood. I'm going to redraw the map. And when I am through the whole world will know my name, my grandfather's name, the glory of my people.

BOND
No-one will believe this melt-down was an accident.

She eyes him, impressed that he's worked out her plan. Tightens the screw again. Her confidence amazing.

ELEKTRA
They will believe. They will all believe.

Tightening the screw again:

ELEKTRA
You understand? Nobody can resist me.

Now she straddles him. She puts the jewel back on her ear. All the time, he's working that wristbind.

ELEKTRA
Know what happens when a man is strangled?

BOND
Elektra, it's not too late. Eight million people needn't die.

She smiles, twists the screw again. A nasty, grinding sound. Sweat trickles from his brow. She licks it away.

ELEKTRA
You should have killed me when you had the chance. But you couldn't. Not me. A woman you've loved.

She pushes her hips into his. Turns the screw. The bolt is jammed right into the back of his neck. His face is angled upwards. Breathing is difficult. He glares up:

BOND
You meant ... nothing ... to me.

She fingers the bolt. Prepares to turn it the last time...His hand strains at is binding...

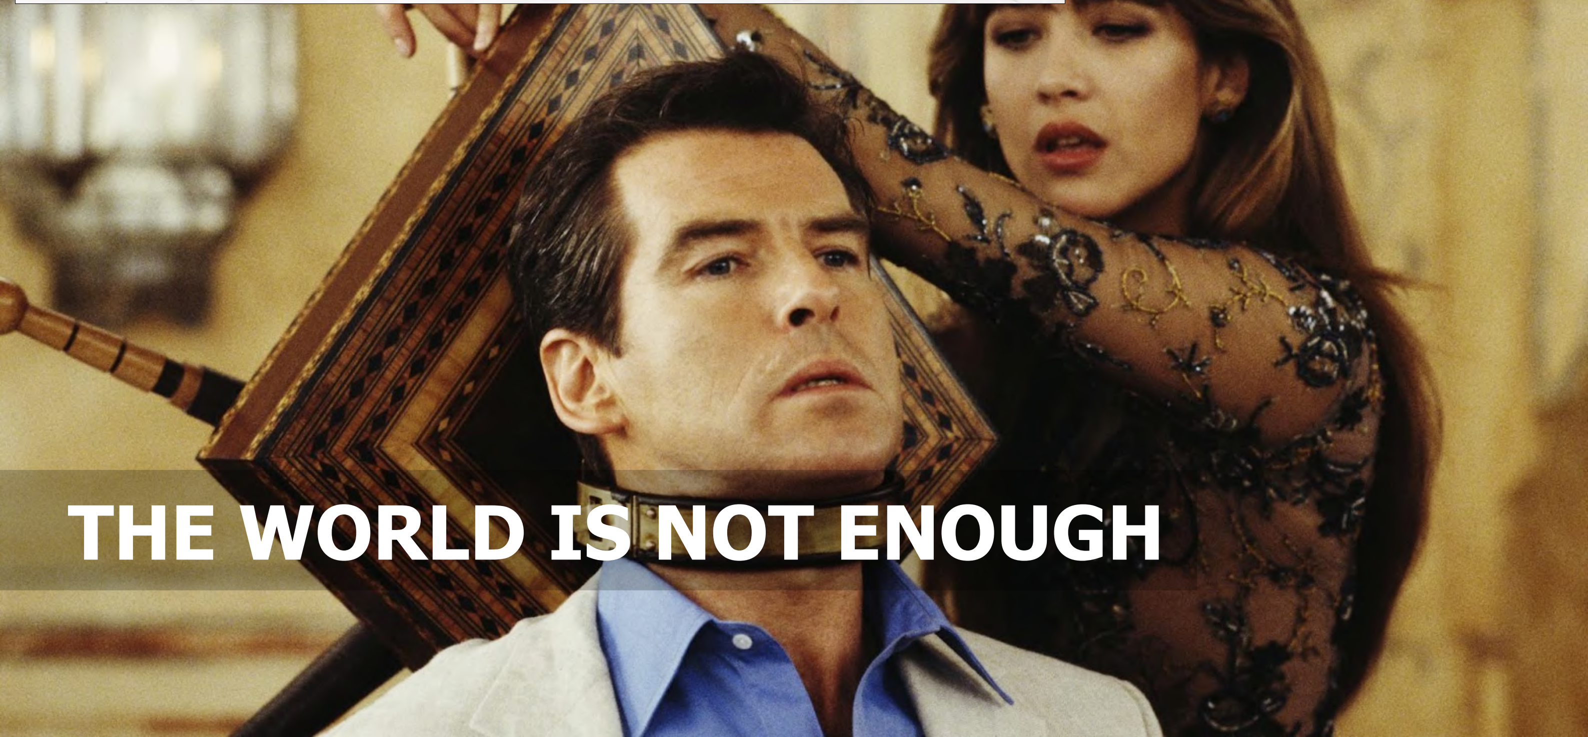
(CONTINUED)

Cast:

James Bond :......................Pierce Brosnan
Elektra King :...................Sophie Marceau
Christmas Jones :............Denise Richards
Renard :..............................Robert Carlyle
Valentin Zukovsky :........Robbie Coltrane
Davidov :.........................Ulrich Thomsen
Gabor :.......................................John Seru
Mr. Bull :..Goldie
M :..Judi Dench
Bill Tanner :....................Michael Kitchen
Charles Robinson :...............Colin Salmon
Moneypenny :..................Samantha Bond
Q :..............................Desmond Llewelyn
R :...John Cleese

Main filming locations: Spain, Azerbaijan, France, Turkey and UK.

The World Is Not Enough shines by the alchemy between Pierce Brosnan and Sophie Marceau who here plays an interesting character with various facets. Alongside that, Denise Richard was judged by many not credible as a nuclear scientist (a sentiment I don't really share). Some successful action scenes like the long boats' chase or facing helicopters carrying saws, but also others with a more messy aspect like on skis or this hand-to-hand finale, which seems to forget to try to do something interesting with the fact that Renard doesn't feel pain. The idea that the latter is motivated by love was rather interesting as was the return of Zukovsky who is injecting welcomed humor.



THE WORLD IS NOT ENOUGH

Table of contents

The World Is Not Enough

Purvis and Wade come into play....1368
June 15, 1998' script: jetpack, hydrocopters and crane....1377
Enter the Apted-Stevens couple....1396
November 27, 1998' (?) script....1399
Bruce Feirstein returns....1408
January 4, 1999' script....1409
Novelization....1416

Purvis and Wade come into play

DOHA TALKS DTF
الدوحة
DFI
TRIBECA FILM FESTIVAL

Neal Purvis (1961-/) and Robert Wade (1962-/) form a duo of British screenwriters.

They met while attending the University of Kent, when they were assigned as roommates in a bunk bed[1]. They began playing together in a music group, which would last for years[2]. Purvis left the University during the year and completed studies in cinematographic and photographic arts at the Polytechnic of Central London (University of Westminster)[3]. Wade remained to study pre-1906 cinema at the University of Kent, where he graduated, then moved to London and began writing a script while his friend finished his studies[4]. Purvis then joined Wade in London and began rewriting the script with him; we are in 1984[5].

Wade remembers that at first "we didn't even know what a script looked like"[6]; "even though you'd make your graduation film, there were no real scriptwriting lessons or lectures", Purvis adds[7].

Unable to get this script produced into a film, they then spent the next six years writing scripts together which were also never produced (although some were optioned, which brought them some money), as well as making music and playing golf[8].

"A guy called Rob Warr was in the music business but wanted to move into the movie business", Wade explains[9]. "Warr had been at the same school as Derek Bentley"[10], a mentally disabled man who was convicted of murdering a police officer and hanged in 1953 in controversial circumstances[11]. "[Warr] said: this would make a big movie, why don't you look into this [man's] story?"[12]. After doing some research, the writing duo were interested in writing a script about the Derek Bentley's case, "we really thought that if that [one] didn't get made, we might give up on screenwriting", remembers Purvis[13].

The script was produced into a film titled Let Him Have It (1991).

After that Purvis and Wade got an agent in Hollywood where they stayed for a while. They do uncredited rewrites (like on The Puppet Masters and An American Werewolf in Paris) and write scripts that will ultimately not be produced[14].

Their second produced script came only eight years after the first. It is Plunkett & Macleane (1999), a film on which they are neither the first nor the last screenwriters to have a go[15]. Plunkett & Macleane tells the story of two criminals from different walks of life who lead a life of thieving in 18th century England. Macleane gleans information from high society parties, which he and Plunkett use to rob the wealthy. The characters are loosely based on two real highwaymen, William Plunkett and James MacLaine (known as "The Gentleman Highwayman").

Barbara Broccoli and Michael Wilson read and liked a version of the script they wrote for Plunkett & Macleane[16] and Purvis and Wade eventually got the role of screenwriters on The World Is Not Enough. It was the beginning of a 20-years long association with the James Bond franchise that lasts to this day. They are on all the following films of saga, often accompanied by other screenwriters passing before or after their contributions. They have a writing credits on a total of 007 films in the franchise.

Purvis and Wade also reluctantly wrote a version of a screenplay for the remake of The Italian Job, which was rejected by Paramount[17]. In particular, they wanted to set the action in Italy as in the original film[18].

Around 2003 they were writing Johnny English. "When we were introduced to Rowan Atkinson, we said: there are two things we don't do, Bond spoofs and advert spin-offs", Wade recalls[19]. "Then someone in the room put on a tape of the Barclaycard ads, which are Bond spoofs. So we said: We'll think about it. We were still adamant that it shouldn't be a Bond spoof"[20]. The screenwriting duo envisions the hero like a "hapless foreign agent" à la Graham Greene or Inspector Clouseau[21].

Having to leave the project to take care of the writing of Die Another Day[22], other screenwriters including William Davies will come to do rewrites and Johnny English will become more of a James Bond' parody than Purvis and Wade originally envisioned[23].

The duo writes and produces Return to Sender (2004), the story of a man fighting to prevent a miscarriage of justice. They had originally started to write the script while doing research for the film Let Him Have It 14 years earlier[24].

In 2005, they also participated in the writing of the biopic Stoned about the final days of the life of Rolling Stones co-founder Brian Jones.

Purvis and Wade's writing credits after Stoned and the return of James Bond after four years of absence with Casino Royale in 2006, are only Bond films. Exception made in 2017, when they embarked themselves on the television series adaptation of the novel SS-GB by Len Deighton. "We've been approached by TV a lot, but we've always said no", explains Purvis[25], "the thing that attracted us [in this one] is that we are both Len Deighton fans"[26].

Regarding their writing methods, they explain that they do not like writing treatments[27]. "Our treatments start out as beat sheets, with a line for each scene, then we flesh them out and they end up as treatments", says Wade[28]. Once that's done, they split up the treatment for each other and start to write a script[29].

Purvis and Wade each work separately in the morning on their respective parts and "e-mail what we've done to each other, and I rewrite what Neal does and Neal rewrites what I do", Wade explains[30]. "We don't need to speak to each other in the mornings because we have our work to do", Purvis continues[31]. "Then we meet up early afternoon to discuss things, and that may go on into the early evening", Purvis says[32].

With Bond, you have to stay attentive to current events as Purvis says: "We come in with ideas, things we've found in science magazines, on the internet, interesting weapons and what's happening in technology. Then we try to find a journey for Bond to go through"[33].

Purvis adds that they don't have conflicts with each other as "Generally, we're fairly specific about what we're going to achieve. You know where it's going. We're not the sort of people who write and work it out as they are going. We know pretty much what's going to happen"[34].

One of the advantages of being a duo, they say, is that the other needs you to progress and therefore there is less temptation to put off until tomorrow what can be done today in their respective parts[35].

Wade adds: "It helped having a writing partner. I think it's very difficult without someone whom you can blame for your continued lack of success. [...] As part of a pair you are less personally invested in it because from the start it's collaborative. [...] When there are two of you, you are able to be less personally horrified [when a director that reading your script doesn't understand it and cuts it to pieces]"[36].

"On this film we begun in September [1997] to look at writers", says co-producer Michael Wilson[37].

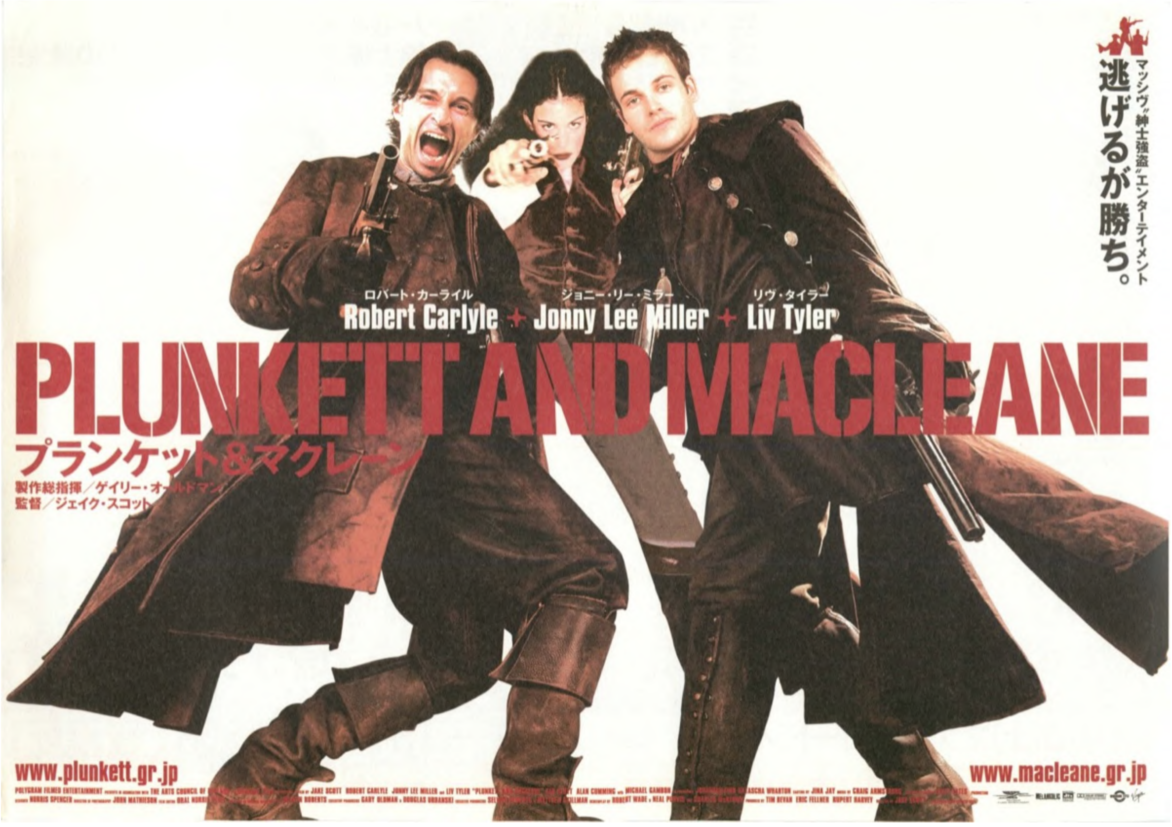
"Just before Tomorrow Never Dies was released, Barbara Broccoli and Michael Wilson happened to read and like a screenplay we had written [for a film named] Plunkett & Macleane", explains screenwriting duo Neal Purvis and Robert Wade[38]. "It ended up on their desk [...], perhaps because it was British, humorous, character-based but possessed of some quite imaginative action moments"[39]. The film Plunkett & Macleane will, however, be a "frustration and disappointment" for the screenwriters when the director didn't share their vision and commissioned another screenwriter to do rewrites[40].

And after reading an April 25, 1996 script they wrote for Plunkett & Macleane, I can understand their deception. The movie starring Robert Carlyle and Jonny Lee Miller is to my opinion very average, with a mostly inappropriate soundtrack, even if I acknowledge some good scenes. The story isn't very different of the one Purvis and Wade wrote on paper, but overall I found their version more easy to follow, with better action scenes. I can see how the funny descriptions they wrote, which makes me smile, can have appealed to Bond's producers, as well as the humorous dialogues and the character-driven side (which is, as we will see, one aspect the producers were looking for their next film).

For those who are interested, here are the main differences between the film Plunkett & Macleane and Purvis and Wade's script:

- Macleane isn't in prison as the script start, but is as a simple passer-by, drunk and penniless, having apparently lost his money at cards.
- Before their first diligence heist, there is an action scene in a church where our heroes have to face a sort of debt collector that Macleane had after him.
- John Chance is clearly a corrupt man in the script, who has no interest to see the creation of a police force; the Prime Minister is on his side (because creating the police would cost too much).
- Macleane already has the pox before the evening where he meet Lady Estelle and fornicate with her.
- During the robbery at Estelle's wedding, Plunkett and Macleane are here to steal the valuable cutlery and ignite a big fire to escape. (In the movie, the fire became fireworks).
- During the gentlemen duel between Plunkett and Chance, the latter wears an iron plate (in the movie, it is a Bible that stop the bullet). Also, when it is Chance turn to fire, Macleane coughs, distracting him.
- In the movie, Plunkett and Macleane attack a French coach and end up taking refuge in it before escaping through the sewers below, while Chance's men riddle the coach with bullets. As in the film, our heroes rob the coach, but in the script they flee on foot when the authorities arrive, pursued on the snowy banks of the Thames. They climb a wall and reach a boat they had previously left there to escape, but discover that the boat is stuck in ice: the river is frozen. So they run on the frozen Thames, their pursuers doing the same. Once they cross to the other bank, Plunkett and Macleane knock over an old chimney from a building: it falls on the ice, breaks it, making their pursuers falling into the water. A dog has however manages to get through and Macleane must reluctantly kill it, to save Plunkett. Similar to the movie, Macleane is also injured by a bullet before they can escape the scene.
- In the movie, Plunkett mentions his ex-girlfriend who died, Mary, as he treats Macleane for his injury. However in the script she is alive and it is to her place that Plunkett takes Macleane to be treated.
- There is a masquerade ball scene during which Macleane approaches Rebecca to ask her for a dance (their relationship isn't yet very well developed at this point, unlike in the film). When Chance later comes to also ask Rebecca for a dance, he becomes suspicious of Macleane upon noticing his injury; so does Rebecca who then suspects he is The Gentleman Highwayman. Macleane declares himself to her but she says she is not interested. Rebecca tells Macleane that she and her uncle are leaving the country with all their belongings, and adds that she hopes the Highwaymen will not be killed if they try to attack them. In the movie these scenes are different.
- In the script the ambush takes the form of Chance's men dressed as women, pulling weapons from their robes. Plunkett and Macleane flee through swamps before taking a sewer in which they meet a young guttersnipe who offers to guide them to the exit for a few coins. Pursued, they accept. Unlike in the film, Chance doesn't kill Lord Gibson (Rebecca's uncle) during this ambush scene.

- Throughout the script there is a character absent from the film: a one-eyed man called Ping who is a friend of Plunkett, and a sort of fence who deal with the loot from our heroes thefts. He gets tortured and killed by Chance at one point, but doesn't reveal anything about Plunkett and Macleane.
- In the script Rochester (the character played by Alan Cumming) doesn't participate in the finale, however the sewer's guttersnipe makes its return. The scene of the sewers continues with another one in a cart in town. Plunkett, already seriously injured, drops from it and confronts Chance who was chasing them. While Macleane and Rebecca escape, Plunkett manages to kill Chance, but is then instantly killed by Chance's men who riddle him with bullets. Plunkett therefore dies at the end of the script, while he survives in the film.



マッシヴ"紳士強盗"エンターテイメント
逃げるが勝ち。
ロバート・カーライル
Robert Carlyle
ジョニー・リー・ミラー
Jonny Lee Miller
リヴ・タイラー
Liv Tyler
PLUNKETT AND MACLEANE
プランケット&マクレーン
製作総指揮／ゲイリー・オールドマン
監督／ジェイク・スコット
www.plunkett.gr.jp
www.macleane.gr.jp

"The film that was made from it [this script] was very different from the one we wrote", say Purvis & Wade, "but Barbara & Michael got hold of the [our] script and called us in"[41].

Barbara Broccoli confirms: "We had hired them based on a script that they had written for a film called Plunkett & Macleane, which is a terrific sort of adventure film. It was dark, witty, sexy and inventive. Michael and I thought they were extremely inventive writers. [...] We liked their work. They came in. We sat down with them. Before they were hired, we spent weeks and weeks having discussions with them to see if they had the right attitude. They were big Bond fans and pitched great ideas"[42].

Purvis and Wade indeed liked James Bond. According to them, one of their first unproduced scripts a few years earlier (Solid Gold Easy Action) was a comedy about two working-class guys, both obsessed with James Bond, who came across an old Aston Martin in a field, restored it, and took it for a ride to the south[43]. One of them called himself Roger and the other called himself Sean[44].

> - Robert Wade[45] : I even said to Neal a couple of times: "We should write a Bond film on spec", and thank God we didn't, because the producers won't read such things for legal reasons. [They return scripts they didn't sought to the sender without reading them].

Some of their first ideas for this Bond 19 are a villain who wants to blow up the moon or a genetically generated virus that would kill one in ten people[46].

Purvis and Wade state that the producers "were looking to inject a little more drama into Bond after Tomorrow Never Dies, which had drifted into more total action territory"[47].

After a few meetings and discussions between them and the producers, Neal Purvis and Robert Wade were finally retained for the film:

> - Robert Wade[48] : This was late November, our agent rang us and said, "They want you to fly to America in January". One question which came up in the meetings was, "Would you be happy writing this in America for the next six months?", and I said, "No problem", and Neal said, "No problem". And I was surprised at him saying that because he had two young kids, and he was surprised at me saying that because I was getting married bang in the middle of those six months.

"Because of the way we work, a lot of writers don't want to work with us", Wilson comments[49]. "A typical writing process is six months, which includes meeting two or three times a week for hours and hours. After we assign the director, the final three months are spent refining the script and meeting daily. You have to really get along with people. It is that kind of intense brainstorming session that gets the job done"[50]. "We supervised the writers on a daily basis and didn't let them go away until we were all satisfied. Every line of dialogue, every direction and every set described was endlessly thought about, discussed and commented on. [...] That's the kind of producers we are, very thorough"[51]. "When we're working on the script and production, my wife will say: Do you realize you've been working seven days a week?", finishes Wilson[52].

"So we turned up [in the United States] in January, with the release already announced for November the following year, with no story [yet]", comments Wade[53]. "The only concept we had was let's make the villain a woman", Wilson recalls[54].

Wade will say that Patty Hearst will serve as inspiration for the character of Elektra[55], as will Tracy di Vicenzo (a daughter of a rich man who tries to achieve on her own and who is less vulnerable than it seems)[56].

> - Robert Wade[57] : Just as we started work on Bond 19, there was a series of articles in the Los Angeles Times [...] focusing on the Caspian oil in Azerbaijan, and the deal to let the pipeline go through Georgia. Eduard Shevardnadze, the president of Georgia, actually survived a Bond-style assassination attempt when a dozen guys on motorcycles attacked his armoured Mercedes with sub-machine guns. Oddly enough, his number-plate was "007".

However, the thing that will make Azerbaijani oil and its pipelines appear in the film is the episode of November 13, 1997 (The Great Game: Jockeying for the World's Last Oil Bonanza) from the American show Nightline. This episode turns out to be rebroadcast on a plane that Barbara Broccoli takes to go to Miami[58].

The documentary is quite short: twenty minutes (which didn't prevent the American television from finding a way to squeeze three commercials break in!). It begins with presenter Ted Koppel explaining that the United States alone consumes just under 30% of the world's daily oil production, and is forced to import two-thirds of it from abroad. Narrator Richard Gizbert later relates that the Capsian Sea is very rich in oil and that its reserves are estimated to be "bigger perhaps than the reserves of Iran and Iraq combined". "Every oil company in the world is here, [...] if you're not here: you're behind", comments a worker.

Then comes a section on the History of Azerbaijan, the fact that the country was invaded by Soviet forces in the 1920s and that two decades later, the Caspian Sea supplied oil to 80% of the Soviet army during World War II. Hitler was unable to seize it despite an attempt. ("It's a question of the possession of Baku, Field Marshal. Unless we get the Baku oil, the war is lost", said Hitler in 1942[59], who understood the strategic importance of this region). The documentary shows the open-air oil fields created by the Soviets (the bottom middle picture): an ecological disaster; as well as Neft Daşları, this sort of floating city with a bunch of pontoons connecting various places where oil is drilled (the bottom right picture). Baku's economic boom is also evoked by showing images of Mercedes and casinos.

THE GREAT GAME

The second major part of the documentary is devoted to pipelines. "The big problem, however, is not getting the oil out of the ground. The problem is getting it out of the region to seaports and onto world markets", explains a narrator. In fact, the Caspian "Sea" is landlocked, like a giant lake, and the oil must first pass through several countries by land, such as via pipelines, before arriving to a "real" sea. The pipeline routes are far away of beings optimal. The problem, explains the documentary, is that these countries are very unstable and that each existing or planned pipeline route passes through regions plagued by conflicts and civil war such as Chechnya or Georgia. "To invest in a fixed project, like a multi-billion dollar pipeline, the risks are just enormous", explains one commentator.

The documentary goes on to say that the Americans are pampering the president of Azerbaijan (including trying to lift Azerbaijan's economic sanctions) and want at all costs to avoid a pipeline project to the south, through Iran. (Newspaper articles from the time say that the Americans support a pipeline's route to the West (Georgia and Turkey) to emancipate themselves from Russia; Russia which on other hand prefer a route to home via the north and Chechnya[60]).

> - Robert Wade[61] : I'd bought this magazine and it had a picture of some oil pipelines in the Caspian Sea and then oddly enough Barbara Broccoli [...] had seen a documentary about it.

Michael Wilson speaks: "The story always needed a main plot point. Then Barbara saw this documentary on Baku, in Azerbaijan, where new oil finds are being made and starting off a new oil rush. That inspired them [Purvis and Wade] to come up with the central device we needed"[62].

Wilson will scout locations in Baku and Istanbul and send photos of interesting locations to the writers via the internet[63].

- Jeff Kleeman[64] : There is a scene in the second Austin Powers movie that haunted me, because it was so true to what happens behind the scenes when you are developing a new Bond movie, where Dr. Evil and his minions are hanging around, and they're trying to figure out what he should do. They start throwing out all these ideas: blackmail ideas, kidnapping ideas, extortion ideas, and each one gets shot down for one reason or another. And at the end of the scene, Dr. Evil says something to the effect of, "Oh, hell, let's just do what we always do. Steal a nuclear bomb and threaten the world with annihilation". And I remember seeing that and thinking, "Oh my God, that's every Bond story conference I've ever been in".

- Michael Wilson[65] : The Dr. Jones character came out of a friend of mine who collects rugs from Afghanistan. When you collect something that obscure, you have to go where they are; to find other collectors is quite a job. In New York city he heard of a Russian woman who was a collector of these rugs, and it turned out that she was an atomic scientist who, as soon as she graduated, went into the special services. The Russians, when a plan crashes with atomic weapons on board, no matter where it is in the world, they spend a special unit that surreptitiously drops in, and they take the bombs and disarm them. This is what her job was during her twenties, and she was an athletic, attractive, wild kind of girl who was an atomic physicist. Having that was a pretty good model for Denise [Richard].

- Robert Wade[66] : [Christmas Jones] was originally a Polynesian girl who worked for Lloyds of London South Seas Bureau. Actually it probably doesn't exist but we thought it sounded good. We took the name Christmas from Christmas Humphreys, who was the prosecutor in the Craig and Bentley case [which inspired our film Let Him Have It] and was the first person who popularized Buddhism in England. Christmas was a paperwork girl, not an action girl, but she was on the same trail as Bond. But the first treatment came back from the studio, UA, who asked us to make her something other than an insurance investigator as they'd just okayed Pierce to make The Thomas Crown Affair and the lead woman in that is an insurance investigator. So Christmas briefly became a bounty hunter and ended up as a nuclear expert.

Travers Christmas Humphreys sees his first name borrowed for one of the Bond Girls in this opus.

- Robert Wade[67] : At a certain point, though, we had to decide, "Does this film hinge on a nuclear weapon?". The nuclear option is, of course, the last resort, because you want to come up with something new, but we were running out of time because the film had to start shooting. I think the way it was used in the film was quite original, but nevertheless the villains were still stealing a nuclear weapon [in the end].

- Michael Wilson[68] : I remember an early conversation I had about The World Is Not Enough with one of the L.A. script people at the studio. They said, "Nothing's at stake in this film". And I said, "Well, there's eight and a half million people living in Istanbul". But that's the kind of thinking: unless it's Los Angeles or New York City, nothing is really at stake in the world.

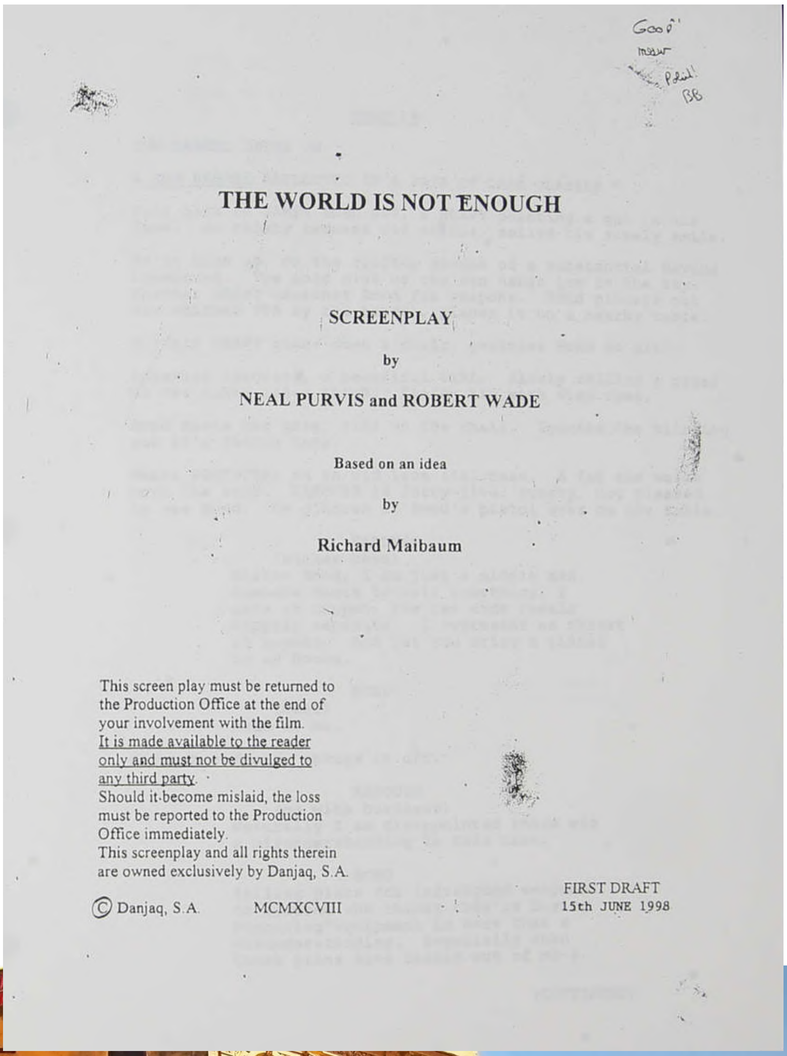
Purvis and Wade's first treatment, dated February 4, 1998, is titled "Elektra"[69].

June 15, 1998' script: jetpack, hydrocopters and crane

Purvis and Wade eventually delivered a 109-pages "first draft" script for "The World Is Not Enough" on June 15, 1998.

Strangely, a copy of this script sold at auction includes on the cover the words "based on an idea by Richard Maibaum"[70]! What an idea? Is this really the case? If so, why was this indication was not added to the covers of the subsequent scripts and other material? This remains a mystery, in any case this mention is absent from my copy which is dated June 18 on its cover (although all the pages inside are dated June 15).

If in the film Bond goes to Bilbao (Spain) to collect money from Sir Robert King, the action was originally supposed to take place in Havana (Cuba); which gave full meaning to the presence of the "cigar girl". In one of the DVD commentaries, Peter Lamont explains that the choice of Havana posed "many problems".



Good
[illegible]
Paul!
BB

THE WORLD IS NOT ENOUGH

SCREENPLAY

by

NEAL PURVIS and ROBERT WADE

Based on an idea

by

Richard Maibaum

This screen play must be returned to the Production Office at the end of your involvement with the film.
It is made available to the reader only and must not be divulged to any third party.
Should it become mislaid, the loss must be reported to the Production
Office immediately.
This screenplay and all rights therein are owned exclusively by Danjaq, S.A.

© Danjaq, S.A. MCMXCVIII

FIRST DRAFT
15th JUNE 1998

The first script therefore opens with the gunbarrel sequence which itself opens onto the gunbarrel of a gun pointed at Bond's head and seen in the reflection of his glasses. 007 is then on the garden roof of a "Havana townhouse" and is searched by henchmen; he takes his Walther PPK (not P99) by the barrel and places it on the table. Further in the distance, a girl is rolling cigars on her own thigh. Bond sits down in a chair and a certain Karoush (described as 45 years old, fat) arrives.

> - Karoush: Mister Bond, I am just a middle man. Someone wants to sell something, I make it happen, the two ends remain happily separate. I represent no threat to anyone. And yet you bring a pistol to my house.

Bond is there because in wanting to buy excavation equipment from Karoush, Sir Robert King ended up with plans for a weapon, leaked from MI6, instead (or so it seems because it's not very clear). Karoush will give 007 King's money to reimburse him but Bond also wants to know from Karoush who provided him with the plans.

Karoush is not ready to reveal the name of his source and loses patience with Bond's insistence. He takes the weapon of one of his men:

> - Karoush: You know, I take it [the money] all back. Who are MI6 to me? I have contacts. I'll keep the money and you can feed the worms. [The cigar girl asks him to calm down] No, no my dear. The arrogant British send this man to insult me!

Bond touches his glasses: his PPK on the table explodes like a blinding grenade. 007 removes earplugs and knocks down the guards that are still standing up.

> - Karoush: You've blinded me!
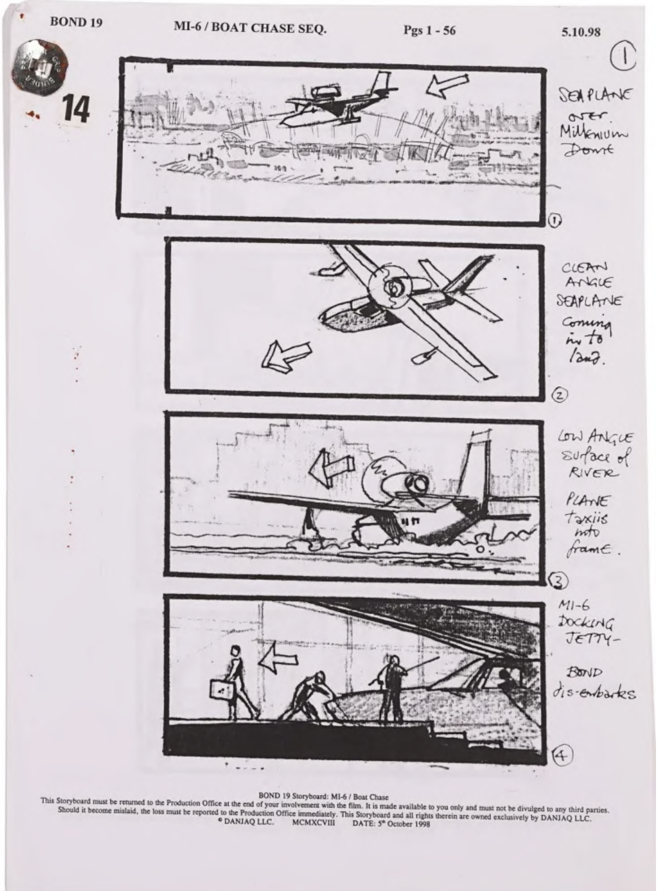
> - Bond: I can give you a new eye to look through. The name?

Karoush is killed by the girl before revealing more. She flees as the police arrive in the elevator. Bond notices that as the elevator rises, its counterweight descends. He strides nonchalantly onto the counterweight, arrives at the bottom and exits the building, adjusting his tie.

James Bond finally returns to London by seaplane (which passes near the Millennium Dome) and disembark at the MI6 building. He "enters this secret, hi-tech world", hands King's money to the staff, "don't spend it all at once". Then he presents a cigar case to Moneypenny (described as a "large phallic tube"). Unlike in the film, she doesn't throw it in the trash but simply says that she "gave up a long time ago".

007 enters M's office, discusses with King who is here, "construction's not exactly my line", before we had King leaving the office. 007 is now going to the "computer room" with M where they look at the database of Hispanic criminals to identify the



BOND 19
MI-6 / BOAT CHASE SEQ.
Pgs 1 - 56
5.10.98
14
①
SEAPLANE over Millenium Dome
①
CLEAN ANGLE SEAPLANE Coming in to land.
②
LOW ANGLE Surface of RIVER
PLANE taxiis into frame.
③
MI-6 DOCKING JETTY-
BOND dis-embarks
④
BOND 19 Storyboard: MI-6 / Boat Chase
This Storyboard must be returned to the Production Office at the end of your involvement with the film. It is made available to you only and must not be divulged to any third parties. Should it become mislaid, the loss must be reported to the Production Office immediately. This Storyboard and all rights therein are owned exclusively by DANJAQ LLC.
© DANJAQ LLC. MCMXCVIII DATE: 5th October 1998

cigar girl. Purvis and Wade compare the view of the sun on the Thames through the window to a J. M. W. Turner painting.

> - M: You're uncomfortable about us getting involved with the private sector. But it's a fact of the age, Bond. It's not about nations anymore. The real superpowers are corporations. A present from Sir Robert. [She brings out Haig Dimple whiskey and two glasses]. I told him you're a bourbon man but he insisted you have "the best". I must confess, I'd rather lose you to enemy action than to the private sector.
> - Bond: Thanks. He may have got his money back, but the mission was a failure. We still don't know who leaked the designs.
> - M: It was Catesby of Mexico Station. Killed in a car crash yesterday. A copy of the plans in his bag.
> - Bond: Convenient.
> - M: Our only lead now is your cigar girl. Any luck?
> - Bond: Not yet, but she was a professional, she'll have history...

Bond notices the strange texture on his fingers after coming into contact with the scotch. He runs to stop King, passing in front of Q who is working on a "smaller, more powerful version of the old jetpack".

> - King (to an MI6 employee): Thanks, but I'll count it myself. Lifetime habit: I'm Scottish.

The money and King explode like in the film and the "cigar girl" shoots Bond from her boat. She move away from the MI6 building and suddenly the "007 Theme" is heard while we are treated with the "amazing sight" of 007 coming out of the hole caused by the explosion with the jetpack on his back! He therefore sets off in pursuit of the girl who is not in an ordinary boat according to the script, but in a "hi-tech boat".

The chase is not very long (it lasts only one page): the girl goes under a bridge, Bond goes over it, she shoots at 007 but misses, she passes very close to another boat and Bond decides to cut her off by passing over the town.

The girl has lost sight of Bond and is wondering where he has gone when she suddenly sees him in front of her, face to face. 007 opens fire and she responds. Bond manages to hit her but the boat still heads straight towards him and crashes into another ship which was near 007. BOOM! The flames "enveloping James Bond and burning us into our titles".

After the credits sequence, we attend a funeral at a chapel in Loch Lomond. A dialogue between M and Bill Tanner establish to the audience this is not the funeral of James Bond, but the ones of Robert King. M also specifies: "It's a miracle the Home Secretary declined my resignation". The conversation also tells us that a girl who is wearing a veil is Elektra, Sir Robert's daughter. Bond looks at her, feeling guilty for his death.

The story moves to the Scottish MI6 residence, "Castle Thane", where Moneypenny observes an Aston Martin DB5 arriving. Bond parks and Moneypenny escorts him inside:

> - Moneypenny: Welcome to Remote Operations.
> - Bond: Good to see some things don't change.
> - Moneypenny: I thought you were being put out to pasture for a while. Until you were 100%.
> - Bond: Never felt better. Besides, I get bored if I spend too long on my back.

- Moneypenny: Don't we all, James?
- Bond: Don't get my temperature up, Moneypenny, I'm here to see the doctor.
- Moneypenny: I thought there must be a reason...

Bond goes to see the doctor, who is here a woman named Greatrex. They end up kissing, she presses on his ribs (not the shoulder) to cause a little pain.

Bond then goes to a debrief where Q discusses the method used to kill Sir Robert King (a task left to Tanner and Robinson in the film; incidentally there is no Robinson, no R, no "retirement" for Q in this script).

Q tries to reassure 007 by telling him that he too wouldn't have noticed the ploy which led to the death of Sir Robert. The conversation move to Renard (french word for "Fox") by revealing to us the identity of the girl with the cigar:

- M: The girl had good reason to try to stop her identification. Her name was Sashenka Firo. Six Algerian-sponsored assassinations, all working with Claude Serrault.
- Agent #1: "Renard, the Fox"? Ex-Foreign Legion, murdered six commanding officers. Mostly high profile mercenary work and prestige assassinations until he took a bullet in the head...
- M: The story goes that the doctor who saved him couldn't get the bullet out [...] The bullet in his brain is on the move, effectively he's a dead man.
- Agent #2: Except for the matter of timing...
- Tanner: Quite. Our medical people tell us the bullet's moving through the medulla, killing off his sense of pain [...].
- M: He resurfaced a year later, alive and killing, with the Xenos shipjacking, Firo as his lieutenant. So we're pretty certain he's behind this.
- Bond: Renard is a man for hire. He couldn't afford to destroy four million dollars.
- M: What do you know of the Caspian Sea?
- Bond: Caviar capital of the world. The Beluga is best from the north. The planet's largest landlocked body of water. Oil-rich.
- M: Far richer than first thought.
- Tanner: Estimates running at six trillion dollars. [...] The problem is getting that oil out of the area.

[...]

- Tanner: It seems the Russo-Chinese combines behind the other pipelines [than King's] would like to keep the oil for themselves.
- M: If one of them bankrolled Renard, we need proof of it. 009: Havana, look into Karoush. 003: I want a full traceback on the Firo girl. When is the satellite linkup to 004?
- Tanner: One hour.
- Bond: We're missing a trick here. Whoever switched the "Eye of The Glens" [King's pins] had to get close to do it, someone inside the company itself.

There is fear that Elektra will be a target as she pursue her late father's work. Bond then tries to convince M to let him return to service, but she is not too keen because she has heard that the ministry is going to open an investigation.

- Bond: Nothing to do with your own personal feelings, perhaps?
- M: You're referring to my friendship with King?
- Bond: I'm referring to the kidnapping of his daughter, your advising him not to pay the ransom.
- M: That was four years ago. The girl came through it fine.
- Bond: She might be dead if she hadn't managed to kill her captors. I can't quite believe you don't regret that it came to that.
- M: ...I stand by the advice I gave Sir Robert. Just as I have no doubt you want this mission because you feel guilt about King's death and have something primitive to prove to yourself.

Finally she scrutinizes him "like he's never been scrutinised" and agrees to assign him the mission:

- M: This pipeline is vital to the West. Any cock-ups, any sign your judgment is impaired, we'll both be out of a job. Find Renard, extract the truth, and extract his life. [...] 007, take this advice. Don't get involved with King's daughter. Shadows stay behind or in front. Never on top.

Bond is now in a room watching videos of Elektra's kidnapping when he is interrupted by Q: "007, there you are. I want you to familiarize yourself with a few items I've been working on...".

They go to Q's Lab where there are some gadgets (infrared lenses and a ring allowing blood to be taken for DNA analysis).

A similar idea was filmed but cut during editing.

There are two lab workers who have microchips in their shoes. Q explains that when they come into contact discreetly, the electronic data from the shoes' chips is transferred from one to the other. Lab workers come into contact and their hair stands up from the static electricity.

- Bond: Bit obvious, isn't it, Q?
- Q: It's not perfected yet.

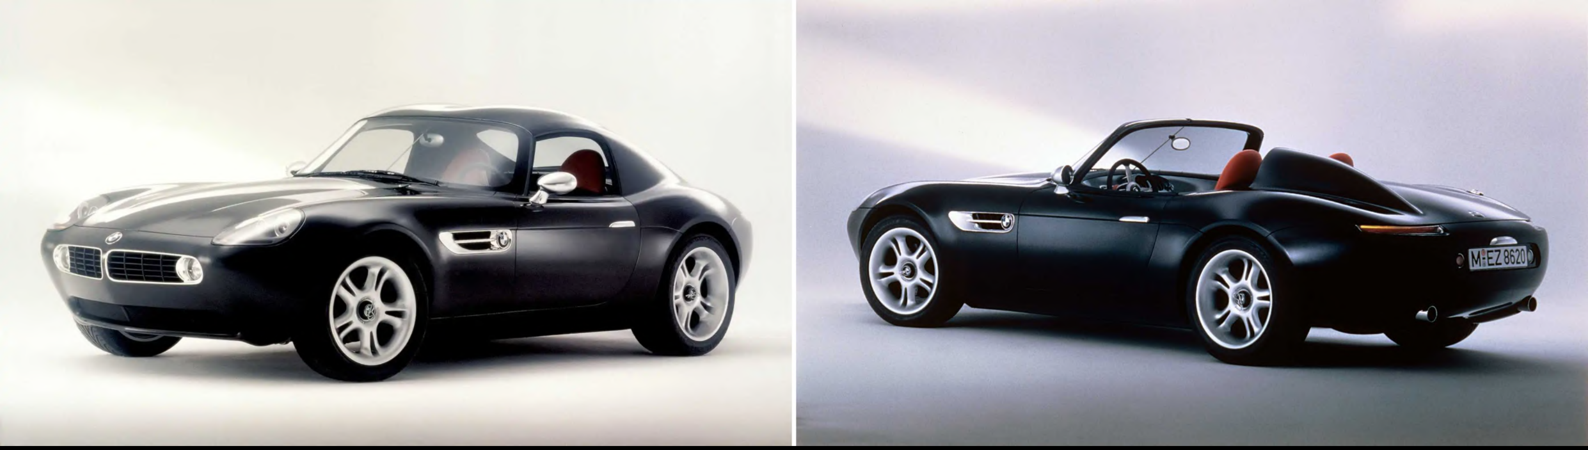
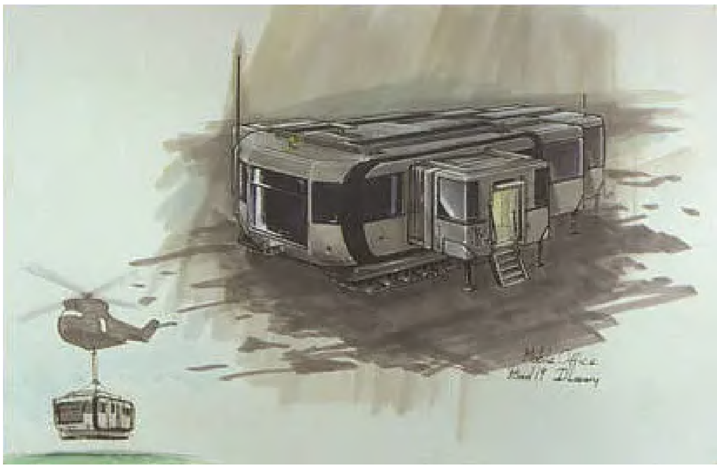
Q provides 007 with a watch that contains stunning gas, and a slightly improved Walther PPK because it contains a sort of bayonet that retracts when a button is pressed.

The scene ends with 007 asking "what about transportation?". Q replies: "Have I ever let you down, 007?".



Visitors of the Tokyo Motor Show in October 1997 could admire the "Z07" concept car on the BMW stand. The "07" is not a tribute to 007 but to the BMW 507 while the Z means Zukunft, or "future" in english. The concept having been very successful when it was revealed, BMW decided to produce a production model called the Z8 (and which would turn out to be Bond's car in the film)[71].



We find Bond in the Caucasus behind the wheel of a black BMW "Z7". He sees "ultra-modern robotic construction machines" and helicopters equipped with saws that deforest (as in versions of GoldenEye by Michael France). A landing strip is created before his eyes and a private jet lands. Elektra King gets off of it, then a helicopter drops off a portable office.

007 joins her directly in her office and discovers Elektra upset by the fact that the construction of the pipeline was delayed because the men didn't work on the day of Sir Robert's funeral: "of course my father would be touched... And bloody irritated".

> - Elektra: You're the spy from the consortium, mister...?
> - Bond: Somerset. David Somerset. They hired me, yes. Don't know about the spy part... [M told him to pretend to be a PR consultant].
> - Elektra: There's no point in playing games, we both know why you're here.

In the rest of the conversation, Bond learns in particular that in the evening Elektra is going to speak to the Oil Producers' Association and that it was her maternal grandfather who discovered the oil: "Some say oil is in my family's blood. I say our blood is in the oil". "More than ever, with your father's death", comments Bond.

They are interrupted by a foreman who comes to tell Elektra that there is a problem at Camp Ruan. She asks for a jeep.

Her bodyguard Gabor is about to leave with her in the jeep when she tells him: "No Gabor. Mister Somerset wants to see how we do things". So we find Bond and Elektra traveling in a jeep:

> - Elektra: I've had Gabor since I was kidnapped. I'm sure you know the story. About me escaping and so forth. He's very protective, but he does have his uses. Helps me choose what to wear. He's very good on colour for a bodyguard.
> - Bond: How novel.
> [They arrive at a place where there are flames on the ground].
> - Elektra: Natural gas. It's been burning since before mankind. They call it the Devil's Breath... This is where my heart is. Heart of the planet, too. When the other oil fields have all dried up, she'll still be pumping her lifeblood to the world. And this will be one of the main arteries...

On the last page: Yanar Dagh, a natural gas' fire that burning continuously on a hillside on the Absheron Peninsula near Baku. The documentary of Nightline (picture at right) showed the location, with journalist Richard Gizbert discussing what Renard alludes to in the film: "Long before Christ, fire worshipers believed this was a mystical land. Imagine, they would come on pilgrimages from as far away as India, to worship the flames that burned, magically, in these hills. The ancient Greeks had a name for this place: the land of fire".

Richard GIZBERT
ABC NEWS Azerbaijan
abc

The jeep takes them directly to the snowy mountain (no helicopter) where Elektra talks with members of a tribe. The tone is aggressive but she manages to calm things down by saying something in their language.

A camera shot now shows Elektra and Bond through the scope of someone's gun. The shooter no longer has a line of fire when Bond and Elektra move a little further away.

Then Elektra leans very dangerously over a chasm, "she leans into the wind [apparently coming from the front], it's all that stops her from falling". When Bond asks her what was the point of putting herself in danger like this, she replies that: "my father taught me one good lesson: everything or nothing".

She then heads to a hut where she takes skis (despite the fact that an employee tells her that there is a risk of avalanches). Bond decides to put on skis too and follow her. The script tells us that she skis without fear and that Bond likes the challenge; suddenly there are attacked by four "hydrocopters" who begin to open fire.

007 dives to knock Elektra to the ground and pulls her back to her feet after a few bullets land in the snow near them. They try to escape but arrive at a cliff and stop. Having no other choice, they skis down the "almost suicidal incline[d]" granite cliff. The hydrocopters pilots also decide to go down the cliff, one of them however crash into a rock and Bond pushes Elektra into a hollow in the cliff so the wreckage rolls down near them and explodes further down...

From a rock, Bond jumps onto one of the machines and fights with the pilot and another man. He manages to shoot the other man but not the pilot. The craft speeds down a rocky slope as they continue to fight, "their heads so close to being smashed on the rocks". The two men are finally ejected from the vehicle which turns over, they fall in the snow: the bad guy takes out a whip hanging from his belt.

007 is stuck in the snow, only his head and torso protruding. The pilot approaches and lashes around him when suddenly Bam! Bam! Bond shot him with his arm that is still under the snow. The sound of gunfire causes the snow/ice bridge that Bond was on to collapse and the precipice underneath is enormous. 007 grabs the whip and manages during his fall to hang it onto one of the propeller blades of the hydrocopter which had turned over. With the propeller still spinning, the whip wraps around it, bringing Bond up.

Holding the whip in one hand, Bond draws his gun with the other hand and fires at men heading towards Elektra. Now firmly on dry land, 007 drops the whip and goes to join Elektra. The pilot of the last hydrocopter, a blue-eyed Algerian, decides to flee.

Bond decides to inspect the weapon of one of the dead men:

> - Bond: Russian. They must have been working for the man who killed your father. Better get back to safety.
> - Elektra: You're British Intelligence, sent by my father's friend, M?
> - Bond: We thought you might be next.
> [He places his hand on her shoulders, they look at each other and hug].
> - Elektra: David?
> - Bond: The name's Bond, James Bond.

The time would be ideal for a kiss and more according to the script, with all the sexual tension due to the adrenaline, but it doesn't happen.

We find Renard "somewhere" on a green hill. A hawk lands on his hand and the animal's claws digs into his flesh but Renard is incapable of feeling the pain. The script tells us that he has skin-colored plastic covering a metal plate at his forehead. The man the script calls "Blue Eyes" is there too, Renard asks him "Well?". The man shakes his head in response. Renard whispers in the ear of his hawk who then flies away to attack "Blue Eyes". The man's scream cuts to the next scene which is...

A meeting scene where Elektra addresses the members of the Caspian Oil Producers Association at the Valentin Zukovsky's casino "Noir d'or" in Baku (Bond doesn't know it's his casino). She says she will not abandon the construction of her pipeline. Bond sees that Zukovsky is one of the people present and their eyes meet. Zukovsky welcomes him:

> - Zukovsky: Well, well, well. If it isn't BondJamesBond.
> - Bond: Valentin Zukovsky. Don't they have a door policy here?

Valentin indicates that he is the owner and 007 retorts that he should have guessed it given the decor (namely a handful of women dressed as prostitutes). Moreover, Zukovsky presents a prostitute to Bond: "This is Martini, how would you like her?". He laughs at his own joke while Bond feigns a smile.

They chat a little, Bond notably indicates that he recognizes plenty of foreign spies in the piece; "The place is reminiscent of a modern day Casablanca" write Purvis and Wade in the descriptions. Elektra heads towards the exit and Zukovsky calls her, saying "Not leaving, Miss King?" and that her father had 1.5 million credits at his casino.

Elektra and Bond therefore go to a gambling room where she wants to play blackjack for money. The game extends over several rounds in this script, the sexual tension is there with some puns on the subject. The script tells us in its descriptions: "She smiles. They're going to fuck. That's decided"! At one point she loses and decides to leave the casino with Bond. Outside there is a yacht not far away, the "Elektra", and she invites Bond to come on board.

The scene cuts to Bond and Elektra falling onto a bed, 007 slips his pistol under a pillow but notices that Elektra already had a weapon there:

> - Bond: Mine's fully loaded.
> - Elektra: On safety I hope. Wouldn't want it to go off suddenly... [She smiles, takes her gun and places it in a drawer] Won't be needing it... Now I have you...

They make love and after sex they talk in bed:

> - Elektra: I wonder if there's oil on other planets?
> - Bond: Orbis non sufficit. For some of us the world is not enough. [Touching scars] These are from when you were kidnapped? You did well to escape...
> - Elektra: I was on my own. I always seem to be.
> - Bond: Not now.
> - Elektra: We made love. That's all.
> - Bond: Extreme danger like that, it's something we've both experienced...
> - Elektra: You've read my file.
> - Bond: Doesn't mean a thing. It's not you. [She is reluctant] So... You were a rich unhappy brat.
> - Elektra: Perhaps you think I haven't changed much.
> - Bond: Get close enough to death, it changes you all right...
> - Elektra: wasn't afraid, I was angry, at not being in control. I found out if you don't fear death, you can do anything.
> - Bond: I did notice.
> - Elektra: I used my body on the guards. I got to a gun and I took my chance. Somehow my father refusing to pay made my will stronger. Perhaps that was his idea... He wanted to control me too. Gave me a small division of the company to run; tolerating his changed wayward daughter. He was shocked at how I've thrived... If only I could have forgiven him while he was alive... You've got scars of your own.
> - Bond: Elektra... The money that killed your father... It's the same amount as the ransom he didn't pay. Four point two million dollars, two and a half million sterling at the exchange rate of the time.
> - Elektra: What are you saying? I don't understand.
> - Bond: I think the man who killed your father is the same man who kidnapped you. Using cash, the exact amount, it's some kind of twisted poetic revenge.
> - Elektra: Is that what MI6 think? You've been keeping this from me? My God...
> - Bond: It just came to me.
> - Elektra: I don't know what it all means. If you're trying to scare me, to control me...
> - Bond: You have to trust me.

> - Elektra: It seems I don't have a lot of choice... I don't know... Tell me if you think this is connected... [She takes a document from a safe] When I went over my father's papers, I found this... I don't know how the company got involved, but suddenly we're providing equipment to move nuclear warheads for the Chechnyans. Maybe it's something to do with my father being killed? It's happening tomorrow. I didn't know who to turn to... We should go there. I can get us passes to observe.
> - Bond: One pass.
> - Elektra: I think we should do this together. It's not far, a two hour drive...
> - Bond: Too dangerous. You're too important. And not just to the world... You're in my hands now.

Bond makes love to her again, telling her that "for the moment... This is all we should do together".

Bond goes to the test site in Chechnya at the wheel of his BMW Z7 (he passes through cotton fields) and arrives on site. The place is quite hidden, the script tells us, 007 goes under camouflage nets and discovers King Industries trucks, soldiers, a sort of hi-tech wagon train and scientists. Bond shows his security pass and is greeted by Colonel Akakievich as they watch a robot move a warhead (there are plenty of robots there):

> - Akakievich: No closer. Until the devices are loaded, they are the responsibility of the Chechnyan army.
> - Bond: So all the personnel inside are yours?
> - Akakievich: Apart from your scientists. And the French expert.

This is when we see Christmas Jones coming out of her suit. The script describes her as a beautiful thirty-year-old from French Polynesia, with short hair, deep tan and "hot right now". The outfit she wears under her protective suit is similar to the one in the film; she drinks a bottle of water.

Bond asks Akakievich "The French expert?" and he tells him that she is not interested in men. Bond goes to meet her anyway: he tells her that his name is Bond and that he is from King Industries; she replies that the equipment they provided is impressive. Christmas adds that she has already dismantled three similar sites in the last ten months and that there is nothing unusual there. We learn that there is still a bomb underground; it has been there since the Soviets signed a no-test treaty ten years ago.

007 leaves her and goes underground alone via an elevator (weapon in hand). He notices that the warhead is being secretly moved but doesn't stumble on Renard as in the film: it is Renard who stumble on him from behind, hits him in the ribs and has him watched by his men. "Blue Eyes", who now has an eye-patch, is present.

Neal Purvis on Christmas: "We'd originally thought of her as [actress] Thandie Newton".

> - Renard: Just the man I wanted to see. (To Blue Eyes) Keep an eye on that. [Speaking of 007's gun] This really is a gun, no stun grenade lurking?

- Bond: So you're the great fox. Hardly worth the hunt.
- [...] [Renard punches him in the ribs again].
- Renard: Ribs a little... Tender?
- Bond: What are you up to? That bullet in your brain must have done more damage than we thought.
- Renard: I am the heartless killer, I am the widowmaker? I am a visionary. When I die I shall leave a great big hole in the world, and the West will topple in. I'm putting the world to rights, is that such a great crime?
- Bond: Your great crime is living.
- Renard: You did well protecting the girl. The joke is, my incompetents were actually after you... Your flesh will burn away, your bones will char. When your molars identify you, MI6 will be blamed for this fiasco.

Bond manipulates his watch and the gas knocks out the two guards near him while he holds his breath. He uses one of them as a human shield and a shootout between Bond and Renard's men breaks out underground (Christmas and Colonel Akakievich are not present; they are on the surface). Bond hides in a niche and shoots blindly at the men advancing towards him. When the last man still standing arrives at the niche: he doesn't see Bond. 007 had climbed the wall and is now falling on him.

Renard deliberately shoots near fuel barrel, starting a fire which occupies Bond and allows him to escape (there is no confrontation in front of armored glass compared to the film). 007 disposes of a man with his PPK's bayonet out of ammo and rides on a robot to reach the blast doors that are closing. Finally Bond manages to sneak into an elevator shaft just before everything explodes from the fire. The blast from the explosion propels the elevator towards the surface like a rocket.

In the next scene Bond is with Christmas and Akakievich who are assessing the damage using a robot spider which is capable of accessing certain areas inaccessible to humans. At first the colonel thinks that Renard is dead but they discover that he fled with the warhead. Suddenly the sound of a jet landing is heard: M and Elektra come out. A little later theses people with Tanner can be found around a table:

- M: Fill us in, Colonel. What have we lost, what are our measures to get it back?
- Akakievich: The missing device is an SP25 warhead, rated at 36 kilotons. Three times the yield of Nagasaki.
- M: Our agent identified the thief as Claude Serrault, AKA Renard. After recent events we have to view this as part of the same campaign against King Industries and the Turkish pipeline in particular. Not to say it wasn't also a > plan to make British Intelligence look bad, since we were the ones who brokered the deal to move the warheads to France. [Bond doesn't understand] Information on a need-to-know basis, 007.

> - Bond (irritated): Ma'am.
> [...]

In the rest of the dialogue, Bond says that the presence of a mole in King Industries is confirmed, there is talk of establishing roadblocks and Bond tells M that he may have a lead that he would like to explore. 007 is heading to his BMW to leave when Christmas comes to meet him. She asks him where he's going but he tells her not to worry. Of course she worries! The disarmament program will not be finished until this warhead is found. Bond still leaves without telling her anything but she calls a friend (Paul) who uses a surveillance satellite to follow 007's movements...

Bond is at the Zukovsky's caviar factory where he forces a man to call his boss to come to take a look, claiming there is a problem with chemicals. He knocks the man out. Zukovsky arrives there, Christmas notices him (she observes from afar). When Zukovsky enters, Bond greets him by pointing a gun at him:

> - Zukovsky: Who was in charge of the machine...?
> - Bond: Glad you could make it.
> - Zukovsky: Tricking me like this is not a good way to start our partnership. [Earlier at the casino Valentin had asked Bond to become his partner].
> - Bond: I'm more interested in you and someone else being partners... Elektra King.
> - Zukovsky: What are you talking about?
> - Bond: Last time I was here I watched her drop a million and half dollars to the house, you. She was paying you off. What for?
> - Zukovsky: She lost, Bond. She got burnt. You try and see things when there is nothing there. You are the desperate spy.
> - Bond: Where is Renard?
> - Zukovsky: Who?
> - Bond: Wait for me to say something funny, Zukovsky.

Suddenly Bond throws his arm through a wooden wall, attracts an intruder by making him pass through the wall and he lands near a valve which opens and now spills caviar onto the ground ("That is 5,000 dollars worth of finest Beluga caviar ruined!" exclaims Valentin). Bond realizes that the intruder was Christmas but he has no time to waste with her, so he aims his gun back at Zukovsky as two helicopters (with saws) can suddenly be heard...

Bond, Valentin and Christmas come out of the building which is being cut up, they are pursued by the helicopters. Christmas jumps into a pond of sturgeons and 007 goes to pull her out. A saw cuts a barrel of fuel and the explosion separates Bond from his two companions. Zukovsky and Christmas get into the latter's jeep while Bond gets behind the wheel of his BMW. The two cars are pursued on the wooden walkways by the helicopters. Bond overtakes the jeep and presses a button which causes missiles to come out of the headlights and explode a parked truck blocking the path.

Both cars pass through the remains of the truck. A helicopter cut the catwalk in front of them; they accelerate and do a jump over the hole. On a climb, Bond disintegrates one of the helicopters with its missiles then another helicopter chases him, directing him towards a dead end.

Bond uses a gadget from the car: a parachute which allows him to slow down very quickly, he stops a few centimeters from the end of the walkway and thus avoids falling into the water. Bond gets out of the car as it is cut in two by a saw.

007 jumps and grabs onto one of the saws (or rather the dial/rig that holds them)! He then takes out an explosive charge from his pocket, attaches it to the dial, jumps, and the saws explode, which destabilizes the helicopter that will crash... Zukovsky takes refuge in an oil basin to escape the saws after the explosion (similar to the film) while the saws, free of contraption, crash into a wooden hut around Christmas "like a giant version of a circus knife-throwing act".

Robert Wade said that this passage was inspired by a scene in a Laurel and Hardy comedy in which their car was cut in two by a saw.

Note that the place which partly inspired these scenes, Neft Daşları, is however not accessible by car in reality, as Peter Lamont will discover:

> - Peter Lamont[72] : I had heard of Azerbaijan, but I never knew about these funny walkways [referred to] in the script that actually existed there, so I did a little research before Michael Apted came over, and we went on the first reconnaissance to Baku. We always assumed that you could get onto the walkways from the land. Well, with a little bit of reading, we discovered that they were 50 miles offshore, so we got permission to fly out in a helicopter. The sight is spectacular, but unfortunately, it's in disarray, because it has been ill-maintained for some years and is falling into the sea.

Bond (with a harpoon gun) stands near Zukovsky who is about to drown, to extract information from him, pointing out that he is up to his neck in it. So 007 learns that Elektra has ordered a plasma machine tool from Zukovsky and that she has expressly requested delivery by submarine. Bond helps Valentin to get out of the oil and hears the phone in his BMW (or what's left of it) ringing and takes the call. When he returns to Christmas, he tells her: "He's struck again. They think they know where the device is. They're sending a helicopter".

In the aircraft:

- Bond: Just had to follow me?
- Christmas: An old boyfriend works at a French satellite station... Like I say. I cannot let the program collapse. Or all that will be left is the men with guns. Killers... Like you.. What made you suspect Elektra King?
- Bond: Back at the test site. They were expecting me [he touches his ribs].

In the film 007 goes to the caviar factory only after the bomb explodes in the pipeline, but in this script: it's the opposite.

Bond and Christmas meet Bill Tanner in the control center of a pipeline which has apparently recently been attacked by Renard (there is neither Elektra nor M present). As in the film, Bond and Christmas go into the pipeline to defuse the bomb on board an observation/repair craft:

- Bond: forgot to ask, you do know how to defuse one of these?
- Christmas (joking): Don't you?
- Bond: Cut the red or the blue, isn't it?
- Christmas: Where is it? We have only minutes...
- Bond: When this is over we'll celebrate. A champagne dinner.
- Christmas: That's a little presumptuous of you, Mister Bond. We're in a tunnel with an atomic bomb heading for us.

[...]

- Christmas: [As she defuses, she exclaims in French] Merde [Shit]!
- Bond: What's wrong?
- Christmas: I forgot my cigarettes.

During the sequence, 007 uses his laser watch to cut some cables in order to stop the observation machine and given the new information (that half of the uranium is missing), he decides to let the bomb explode. After that M phones Elektra to tell her that Bond is dead. But Elektra is not alone, she is with Renard; they are kissing...

Meanwhile in London, M tells Tanner that she hopes Bond knows what he's doing and that he'll have to be on his own because the Ministry doesn't want to oppose Elektra...

His agent is currently in a hotel room in Istanbul, in the same bed as Christmas.

- Christmas (exhausted): That's something I won't forget. Shooting along a pipe with a huge explosion at the end...
- Bond: I'm sure there'll be more bangs to come.

Later Christmas goes to a ministry in Istanbul where she tries (unsuccessfully) to find out about King Industries' projects in Istanbul (after she leaves, someone picks up a phone). She meets Bond at a cafe in the Grand Bazaar and they are joined by Zukovsky:

- Zukovsky: This Renard... Yet he is still alive. This man that even James Bond cannot kill, it worries me... Drink. We both need clear heads right now, Bond. I want your help. You might want mine.

[...]

- Zukovsky: The bitch tried to kill me, she destroyed my fishery, and, what's more, she ruined a perfectly good suit. The Captain of the submarine is my nephew. If Elektra is mixed up with Renard and atomics, I've gotten him into something I have to get him out of.

- Bond: A little late for you to be thinking of his morals.
- Zukovsky: You know what the pay is in the Russian Navy? I was helping Yevgeny get a house. This does not make him public enemy number one...

Yevgeny's submarine is just docking, Renard and Elektra are getting on board. Renard kills Yevgeny with a headbutt and takes the crew prisoner by locking them up somewhere. He says goodbye to Elektra as he prepares to embark on his suicide mission:

- Renard: I won't be seeing you again.
- Elektra: The world will never be the same.
- Renard: Have fun.

Blue Eye approaches Elektra, telling her that he has some interesting news...

Bond, Zukovsky and Christmas are at a dye factory in Istanbul. They discuss where Elektra might be and think she is in a place named The Immortal Temple of Galata:

- Zukovsky: If something has happened to Yevgeny... You must let me kill Elektra.
- Bond: I don't think I can guarantee that.

Suddenly a grenade explodes! Bond comes to his senses and flees with Christmas; they find themselves in the crowd of the Grand Bazaar and see Gabor. 007 steals two or three things from stalls and throws spices in Gabor's eyes before knocking him out with a bronze tray.

Bond and Christmas run to a square where six men chase them. They enter through a door and come to a building. Another door and they are now in a Turkish bath full of naked girls. They run through the bowels of the building and arrive on the roof (where there are two colored glass domes).

007 draws his gun and Christmas hides behind a dome. A henchman stumble on her but 007 hits him with the butt of his gun and the henchman falls backwards on the dome while drawing his weapon. 007 kicks somewhere and the glass the man was standing on shatters: he falls 15 meters below.

Another man climbs the stairs and Bond and Christmas escape by making a big jump to another roof where there are stairs leading back to the street. 007 takes the opportunity to turn around to shoot one of the henchmen. He tells Christmas to continue without him (which she does) and spots a construction site in which there is a huge (mobile) crane... A car chases Christmas (who is on foot) but the hook of the crane, piloted by Bond, grabs the rear bumper of the car and lifts it. One of the passengers opens the door and falls into the void, 007 drops the car into the Bosphorus.

007 picks up Christmas in his crane and they find themselves pursued by another car which comes on their side. Bond presses a button which release out the hydraulic jacks on the side (which are used to stabilize the crane) and theses ram the car which ends up in a wall.

Bond stops the crane and puts it on its hydraulic jacks. Other cars arrive: he then uses the arm of the machine to hit one or two of them (destroying the wall of a building in the process and "causing massive destruction"). Armed men move toward the cabin... But find no one.

Bond helps Christmas climb down onto the roof of a tram. He thinks it's finally over but Gabor also jumps onto the roof of the moving tram from a bridge. A fight ensues between the two men who try to avoid ending up embedded in a bridge or in the tram's electrical cables. The pursuit ends when the tram suddenly stops, its track being blocked by a car from which armed thugs emerge. Bond and Christmas surrender.

In the DVD commentaries, Peter Lamont and second unit director Vic Armstrong remember this crane as well as a duty-free:

- Armstrong: We were going to have a big chase sequence through Istanbul.
- Lamont: Do you remember the big duty-free?
- Armstrong: The duty-free. A fight right the way through the duty-free, smashing everything. We had a huge car chase right the way through the old town of Istanbul.
- Lamont: And the crane, if you remember?
- Armstrong: That's right, the crane. The square; that was the sort of pivotal part of the movie at one time, wasn't it?

Our two partner are brought to the Temple of Galata which is a palace that sits near the banks of the Bosphorus. They are greeted by Elektra who asks her men to bring the girl to Renard. As in the film, 007 is installed on the garrote chair:

- Elektra: Now, you know what you have to do.
- Bond: Kill you?
- Elektra: Cure me. Tell me why I should relent. Talk me out of it. Tell me the cavalry's on its way. All I see is one spy and a foolish girl, floundering in a city they don't understand. You don't know what I'm up to, and neither does M..
- Bond: Then why did she tell you I was dead?

[...]

- Bond: One thing M knows is what your father told her about you.
- Elektra: Interesting... Five more turns and your neck will break. You've tried a lot of things in your life. Now you can try death. And what did my father tell M?
- Bond (lying): That his little girl was insane.
- Elektra: Go on.
- Bond: The poor thing, always in his shadow, desperate to prove her worth [...] inadequacy.

> - Elektra: Ha! He was the inadequate one. He would let the opportunity of all time slip by...

The rest of the dialogue is quite similar to the film, with Bond understanding that after the nuclear explosion triggered by Renard, the only still viable pipeline will be the one of Elektra.

> - Elektra: [...] East and West will beg. And the prices will be high. [...] My ancestors, my... People, avenged.

Zukovsky arrives, kills Gabor, "I'm looking for a submarine. It's big and black, and the guy who drives it is a friend of mine". Zukovsky is shot by Elektra, but manages to free Bond's wrist before being "dead". 007 chases her and corner her:

> - Elektra: No, James, please. You can't kill me. This wasn't me. He changed me, I've been his ever since the kidnapping. You don't understand, I have to do what he tells me.
> - Bond: The little girl lost?
> - Elektra: [I tried to break away from him. When you came along, for the first time I thought I might escape him.
> - Bond: Helsinki Syndrome? Kidnappee falls for captor.
> - Elektra: I didn't know what...
> - Bond: He fell for you, Elektra. You twisted your own kidnapper round. You know all about control. You switched the pin, murdered your own father. Because he didn't pay the ransom. Because he stood in your way.
> - Elektra: I think you made the wrong choice, James. You came after me when you should have gone for the submarine. You let this get personal and the world suffers for it.
> - Bond: You like to live dangerously, Elektra. Well, this is as dangerous as it gets. [BANG!].

007 kills Elektra with a bullet to the heart. "His eyes are as cold as hers. Mixed emotions". Then Bond dives into the Bosphorus where he manages to enter the submarine. He approaches a guard, pointing his gun at him:

> - Bond: How do you want to die? That [his own cigarette]? Or this [the gun]?

Bond hits the guard's head against a door as he frees Christmas. Bond knocks out another guard who is in command of the submarine. Here there is no shootout and the dialogues between Bond and Renard (about committing suicide and that Elektra is dead) are spoken via an intercom (well before the hand-to-hand confrontation).

007 takes control of the submarine, telling Christmas that it's like riding a bike. He presses a few buttons and the submarine begins to sink at a 90° angle, nose up.

> - Christmas: What kind of bikes did you ride?

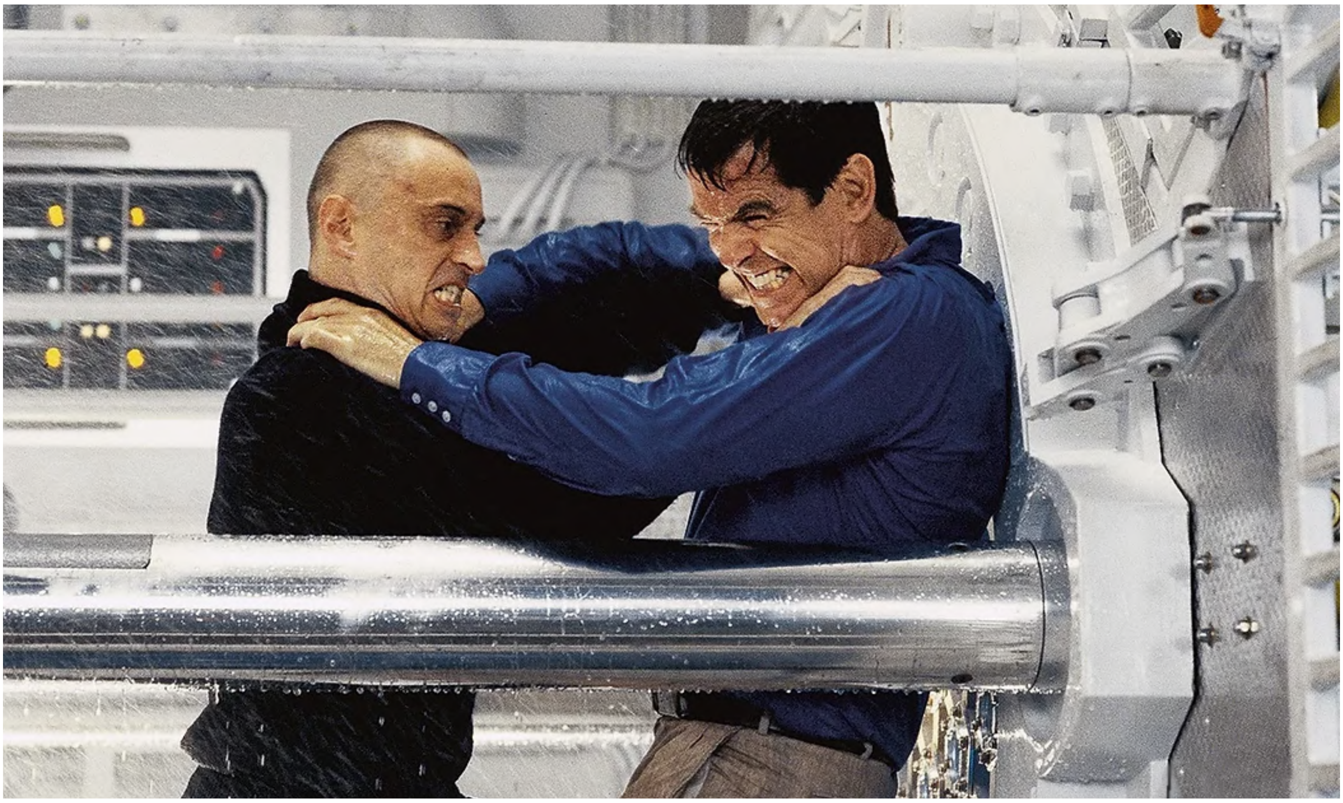
We are told that he presses another button and clothes placed in a torpedo tube are sent to the surface of the Bosphorus with bubbles. "All part of the plan", say the stage directions. The goal is to be spotted on the surface.

007 uses the plasma machine tool (which the submarine was supposed to deliver) to get rid of a door and reach the room where Renard is located.

Here Renard has already inserted the bar into the reactor and the stake is to remove it before the temperature become too high. But Renard comes across Bond while there is a deafening sound in the submarine (which can be heard even in the city). There is hand-to-hand combat which have nothing original.



At one point Bond appears to have the upper hand when Renard falls unconscious after being continually hits with a metal door. However Renard regains consciousness behind Bond and grabs a flare gun. Before he can shoot, Bond catches his reflection on a gauge and blasts the bar into his heart with compressed air.

- Bond: The heartless killer.

Bond goes to take control of the submarine again and brings it to the surface but once there, the submarine begins to sink again. We see Bond blow a hole in the hull with the plasma machine tool and emerge with Christmas; they are welcomed by the military/police navy (who had spotted the submarine).

In London, M and Tanner look at the satellite image of the location and wonder if Bond succeeded. They have their answer when the boat carrying Bond starts writing "007" in the water!

The film ends with the Bond and Christmas getting ready to do things on the boat while we see in the background boats converging towards the submarine that sank and the minaret where Elektra died...

- Christmas: You know James, in our hotel room...
- Bond: Yes, dear?
- Christmas: Christmas came early.

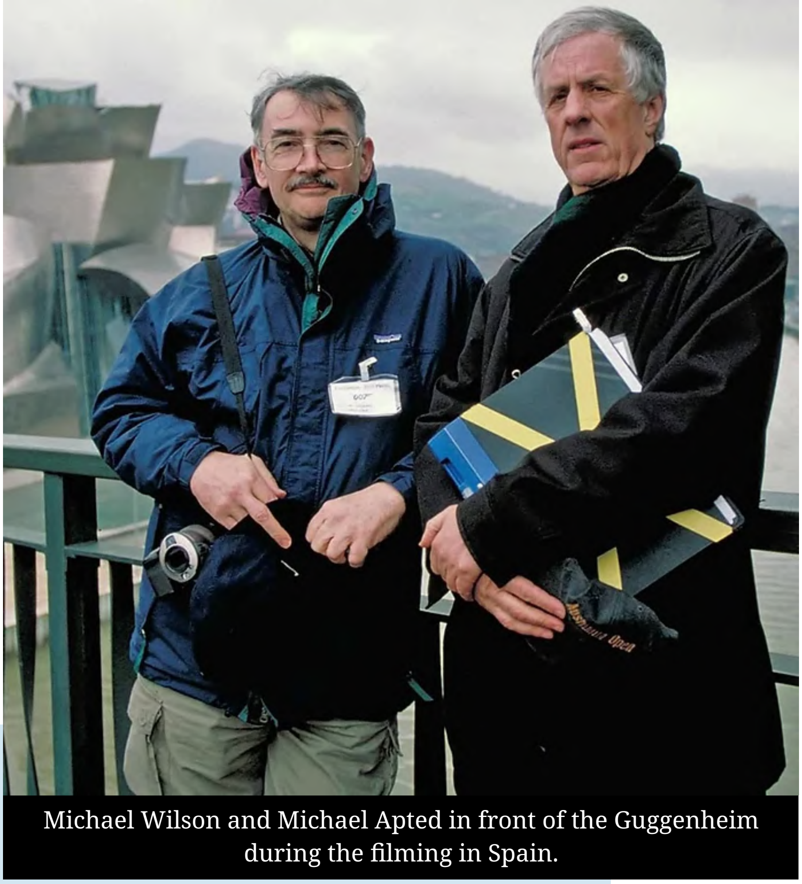
Enter the Apted-Stevens couple

> - Neal Purvis[73] : The June 15' version that we produced was pretty much the movie that was made. Barbara called us at the hotel and told us the studio liked it, which meant we hadn't screwed it up. The only real change from that point was M getting kidnapped by the bad guys.

Shortly after writing this script, the film found its director in the person of Michael Apted, around August 1998[74]. The reasons which pushed the production to choose him are probably the same as for the hiring of Purvis and Wade:

> - Michael Wilson[75] : The only way the Bond series can survive is to have interesting stories, characters and situations. That's the focus of what we have to do creatively. We have a great team and special effects crew who put their head together to come up with sensational action and mind-boggling gadgets which all bring to bear on the story. But for the character and drama, which those aspect need to be wrapped around to shine, you need a good director. Michael Apted is one of the best performance directors around, he's renowned for it. His films are always strong on character development and that's what we needed here.



Michael Wilson and Michael Apted in front of the Guggenheim during the filming in Spain.

> - Pierce Brosnan[76] : [Apted is here] because I protested loudly enough to say I wanted more character. I wanted more of the relationship between Bond and whoever he's with, whether it be with M or the leading lady. I was anxious to have more acting grist to the mill, so to speak. Tomorrow Never Dies was wall-to-wall action. Fair enough. But here we have a story you can sustain throughout the action sequences, you have a goal, you have an emotional subtext to it within the Bond universe. The World is Not Enough is an effort to get back to the old Bond movies that weren't so completely over shadowed by pyrotechnics.

In a memo dated August 14, 1998, the director noted in particular that Renard should appears earlier in the story in order to deflect spectators' suspicion off Elektra. Bond should spend more time with her, and Elektra should have stronger motivations than thirst for money (among the ideas given by Apted: finding an alternative fuel source, reducing pollution in the world or even destroying the oil economy). Apted also wants M to appear more "compromise[d]", to make it more likely that she is the one who fathered the monster that Elektra has become and that she is hiding information from her agent.

According to Apted, MGM/UA "didn't very much like the initial script. They sort of approved of the story but I think we realized quite early on that this was not going to be the end of the story"[77].

Purvis and Wade completed revisions on September 16, 1998[78]. Another set of revision was delivered on October 7, 1998[79]. An amended "interim script" is made on the 12th[80] and a "revised second draft" from Purvis and Wade is also delivered on October 29[81].

I don't have these scripts but in the October 12 version there is a character named Vanbrugh (who seems to had become Davidov?). In one scene he has trouble starting his car, Bond then offers him a ride in his BMW[82]. After a remark from Bond, Vanbrugh hit him with the briefcase he was carrying with him; in particular, a bullet was fired inside the car and it ricocheted off the armored windows before ending up in the headrest of Bond's seat[83].

The film is going to feature a lot of female characters and according to Apted: "one of our issues was how can we make the film more interesting about women and more interesting to women, so that women aren't just seen as sexual decoration"[84].

Apted was at this time married to Dana Stevens, who was a screenwriter. The filmmakers starts to think that having a female screenwriter could make the female roles better.

Dana Stevens[85] was born in 1963 in the United States. She studied theater arts at the University of California where she produced two plays.

Determined to become a screenwriter, she wrote the script which became the film Blink (1993). The director is none other than Michael Apted whom she then meets. Over time Stevens and Apted end up getting married and having a son (they remained married for ten years before divorcing).

In 1998 she participated in the writing of City of Angels and in 1999: For Love of the Game. Her participation in The World Is Not Enough will be uncredited.

Her other film script credits include Life or Something Like It (2002), Safe Haven (2013), Fatherhood (2021) and The Woman King (2022).

For television she created and wrote episodes of What About Brian and R*eckless.*

> - Michael Apted[86] : With [the character of] Sophie, we really had more difficulty define/understand her. And after the two guys, the lead writers, had written the story and written the first eleven drafts, we brought in a woman [Dana Stevens], just really to rewrite Elektra, Christmas and M.

Purvis and Wade console themselves for the film that is escaping them by being promised by the producers that they will write the next one[87].

"It was very surgical, I didn't do any changes to the plot, I really worked on the female characters and dialogue", explains Dana Stevens[88]. "My recollection is that there was some argument about whether to put Judi [Dench] so firmly into the story, having [Bond's] superior be in danger"[89].

She adds that Michael Wilson found some of the things she wanted to do with the character of Elektra silly or ridiculous while Barbara Broccoli defended her by saying "no, they are not"[90].

Stevens only stayed on the film for three weeks[91], producing two draft of revisions[92], one dated November 6, 1998[93] and another dated November 27, 1998[94].

November 27, 1998' (?) script

Let's now analyze a 131-page script described as a "2nd draft by Dana Stevens" based on Neal Purvis & Robert Wade work. The cover doesn't give a date.

This script doesn't open in Cuba but in a private bank in Geneva (Switzerland) and we can see that the character of Karoush is now named Lachaise. Bond can't help but be a little witty:

> - Lachaise: Not the usual Swiss procedure, Mr. Bond, but you understand, a man in my position...
> - Bond: Which is neutral, no doubt.

Switzerland gives full meaning to the film's line:

> - Lachaise: [...] I am doing the honourable thing and returning the money to its rightful owner...
> - Bond: And we know how difficult that can be for the Swiss.

"Perhaps later", Bond replies to the cigar girl when she asks him "Would you like to check my figures?".

Things are close to the film, with a sniper saving Bond's life by shooting a Lachaise's henchman. However, 007 still leaves the building on the counterweight of the elevator.

After that there is now a scene where the cigar girl joins Renard in a hotel room located opposite the bank's building. Renard, standing near the sniper rifle with which he saved Bond, is described as follows:

> The man turns. Powerful, deadly, with a military haircut. There is a raised, red scar of an entry wound at his temple. It throbs and shifts with the slightest facial expression, like an insect living just beneath his skin. One eye seems slightly drooping, deadened. The other eye is sharp and black as anthracite.

Renard asks who was the MI6 man and she says it was James Bond and that he could identify her. "If it concerns you... Kill him", Renard replies.

007 returns to London by seaplane and there is the death of Robert King at MI6 HQ. Here no jetpack for 007 but a gadgetized Q's boat. The chase is similar to the film, although 007 fire catapulted incendiary bombs (instead of torpedoes) to create a wall of fire in front of them. The girl stops at the Millennium Dome where a crowd is gathered around a "Richard Branson-like figure" who is about to board his hot air balloon.

She hijack the balloon and we notice that she didn't commit suicide compared to the film: it is Bond who shot into the gas tanks when falling from the hot air balloon (because she cut the rope on which he was holding on).

After the credits, we see that 007 have his arm in a sling during King's funeral and that Renard is watching the funeral from afar. Bond sees this mysterious man and decides to approach him, but he disappears and Bond is distracted by Elektra who comes to approach him:

Richard Branson is a very rich entrepreneur who founded the Virgin group. Passionate about hot air balloons, which he describes as his favorite means of transport, he undertook several exploits, such as crossing the Atlantic (1987) or the Pacific (1991). In 1998 he undertook a trip around the world in a hot air balloon, however as he explains in his own words: "our hopes of a world record were swept away by bad weather and we crash landed in Hawaii on Christmas Day 1998". (Branson will make a cameo in Casino Royale, during the airport scene).

> - Elektra: Beautiful, isn't it? [The green hills].
> - Bond: Yes.
> - Elektra: Today, of all days, the sun decides to shine.
> - Bond: Perhaps Sir Robert had a word with the Man Upstairs.
> - Elektra: A word? I'm sure by now he's engineered a hostile takeover.
> - Bond: You knew him well?
> - Elektra: He was my father.
> - Bond: I'm sorry.
> - Elektra: He died before he could complete his lifelong dream. I intend to finish it for him.

An old man calls Elektra and she leaves Bond. We find him in a limousine with M and Tanner where reference is made to the controversies of the time surrounding the construction of the Millennium Dome:

> - M: Elektra? Running King Industries? I've known that girl all her life. I'm not sure she knows what she's walking into.
> - Bond: She's not a [little] girl anymore.
> - M: I've scheduled a medical for you.
> - Bond: It's barely a scratch. The Dome broke my fall.
> - M: Well, at least it turned out to have some purpose. No-one goes into the field on this unless they're 100%. Dr. Greatrex is waiting.

The doctor is given the first name Molly and the dialogue is a little different from before and ends with Bond saying "perhaps after this... Test... I could come for a second opinion?".

Robinson is in this script and does a briefing with Tanner, Bond inquires about the kidnapping of Elektra. Then there is another briefing (this time with the skull of Claude Serrault / Renard in 3D; but where is the cigar girl is no longer named):

> - M: Sir Robert tried to deal with the kidnapping with his own...resources, at first. When Elektra's ear was delivered to him in the post, he came to me. I advised against paying the ransom. I knew it was Renard. I played it out as long as possible to get a fix on him.
> - Bond: Sacrifice the girl to take out the terrorist?
> - M: How many deaths is he responsible for? How many innocent people? You may only get one shot at a man like Renard. Same circumstances, I'd do the same again.

Bond comments "that which does not kill me makes me stronger" when the bullet in Renard's head is discussed along with his insensitivity to pain.

> - Bond: He's working for someone. Someone who wants to stop the pipeline. And they hired the perfect killer. One with a vendetta against King... And you.
> [...]
> - M: The pipeline is still going forward, and we have Elektra to thank for that.
> - Bond: The worm on the hook again.
> They exchange a look. A look between two professionals who know the terrible price to pay for what they do.

Bond goes to meet Q, there is the bagpipe and Q gives a watch, specifying that it is the twenty-ninth and that there is a grappling hook and laser option (but no more incapacitating gas) in it. Bond also receives the X-ray glasses and Q has an assistant whom the stage directions, like Bond, call "R".

"During the writing of Tomorrow Never Dies, I had lunch with Desmond [Llewellyn] in London, and he made a point of asking me to write an exit for him; a graceful way out, so that if – God forbid – something happened [to him], there wouldn't need to be some clumsy explanation", says Bruce Feirstein[95]. "I wrote my own Q-exit scenario into the first draft of Tomorrow Never Dies: Q retires, or fakes a death, but comes back etc. But the producer's felt it wasn't time"[96].

"Desmond knew [in The World Is Not Enough] he wanted to be written out. He and I talked about it. Barbara talked about it. Michael had talked about it. We all talked about it. Barbara always said to him: I refuse to deal with this. We're not going to talk about writing him out of the series. It's not going to happen. But we all knew that sooner or later it was", Feirstein continues[97].

"[Desmond]'s the one who suggested we bring someone else in, a younger man, so we brought someone in just slightly younger", recalls Michael Wilson[98].

Feirstein adds: "Suddenly, the time was right, where it hadn't been, two years before. And again, the trick here was to leave it open ended: Desmond has a role in the Bond films as long as he likes, Michael and Barbara have said"[99].

The idea is to have Q and his assistant both appear in subsequent films, until Llewelyn retires for good and the assistant then absorbs Q's role in the films.

(Desmond Llewellyn will have shortly after filming The World Is Not Enough a fatal road accident. He died in December 1999 at the age of 85).

Bond receives his BMW "Z7" (the number of cup holders is not specified by the script).

Further Davidov, the head of security of Elektra, is present in this script. Gabor is still there and Elektra points out that "he makes an excellent omelette" instead of complimenting his fashion taste. 007 leaves with Elektra in a jeep to go to a village cut into the rock, whose imagined filming location is Zelve in Cappadocia. She meets a priest in a chapel cut into the rock and decides to have the pipeline rerouted.

They then go to the mountains by helicopter and jump out of it on skis. There they are not attacked by hydrocopters but by four parahawks (the script calls them "paraskis") which parachute from a plane.

(Stunt coordinator Simon Crane apparently came up with the idea, having seen one during his recent vacation[100]. The Parahawks in the film were designed to parachute from a C-130 Hercules, but the plane didn't receive flight permissions. An emergency plan with miniatures was considered but in the end we never see the plane from which the parahawks are supposed to parachute[101]).

The scene is very faithful to the film except that Bond doesn't say "see you back at the lodge" but "[you] should have stuck to snowboarding".

The following is similar to the film; there are no more hawks or Blue Eyes. Elektra's motto is present: "there's no point in living if you can't... Feel alive".

We then find 007 wandering with his X-ray glasses inside Zukovsky's casino. He sees him and has a polite conversation with him. Zukovsky introduces him to one of his former KGB colleagues, Dmitri Palov, known as Boa or more precisely "the Boa" (a sort of equivalent of Mr. Bullion from the film, except that he is not a comic character).

- Boa: The great 007. For years I have dreamed of closing my hands around your neck.
- Bond: Boa. Have you had any therapy since Perestroika?
- Zukovsky: Why am I suddenly worried I'm not carrying enough insurance?

Boa leaves and Bond asks Zukovsky why Renard has Russian weapons by showing him a piece of parachute from a parahawk on which is written the name of a Russian airborne division. Valentin explains that the Russians are able of spending millions on parahawks but cannot afford to pay well the soldiers who operate them; they are therefore inclined to act as mercenaries. 007 retorts that the Russian government would still have an interest in stopping the construction of the King's pipeline.

Elektra suddenly enters the casino and Bond goes to join her: "they are like two cats, moving through this neon jungle, their energy dangerous and sexy, all eyes on them". She sits at a gaming table and orders a vodka martini (without 007 having already mentioned her this drink). 007 comes in and says "Two. Shaken not stirred", to the waiter. She starts playing cards.

Bond notices that Davidov is accompanying Elektra and sees him slip away into a private room with a prostitute. Davidov then begins to get comfortable when suddenly he realizes that they are not alone in the room: Renard and one of his henchmen are there.

> [In front of the prostitute who is donning khaki clothes and straps a gun onto her shoulder].
> - Renard: Is this how you spend the money I pay you? And with the rest you hire fools who shoot like blind men?
> - Davidov: Bond...
> - Renard: Should be dead as well. Your failure today is astonishing. It is a disgrace.

Renard takes a light from the room from which flames come out to illuminate. He places a little of the boiling oil from the lamp on his own hand and feels nothing.

> - Davidov: The plane... It's all been arranged...
> - Renard: Then you are completely unnecessary...
> [Renard is about to pour the oil on Davidov's head].
> - Davidov: I have the documents, the landing authorizations, the security passes...

Renard changes his mind and tells him that the date of the operation has been brought forward, but still pours a little bit of the oil on Davidov's head, who falls to the ground and clutches his head.

Elektra loses and they leave the casino; Davidov joins them and 007 notices his burn.

> - Davidov: A little accident.
> - Bond: A night of burning passion?

On the roof of the casino Renard observes; he seems hypnotized by seeing Bond's hand on Elektra's back when she gets into his BMW. His henchman asks him what to do with Bond, Renard replies: "I will take care of Mister Bond".

Bond and Elektra return to the latter's villa where they make love. Compared to the film, there is a little extra when Bond touches Elektra's earring:

> - Bond: You never take this off?
> - Elektra: Why do men always want to undress the one part of a woman's body she doesn't want to reveal?

She takes off her diamond-encrusted earring:

> The lower half of her ear is gone, reduced to a misshapen clump of scar tissue. It is the only mark on her perfect body. A physical reminder of her ordeal. It breaks his heart.

"How did you survive", etc... She ends up asking him "Do you ever think about... Another kind of life?". After a silence he replies that he can't afford it.

- Bruce Feirstein[102] : One of the conversations I've had with Barbara Broccoli and Michael Wilson is whether or not this Bond, Pierce's Bond, was married. We've never come up with a definitive answer. Obviously, the George Lazenby Bond, and the original Fleming Bond, he was married, and the wife died. So far, that part of his backstory hasn't been utilized in the Pierce years.

As in the film Bond leaves Elektra's bed to look for clues. He observes Davidov from his BMW, thanks to two gadgets in the car: infrared vision and a sort of laser microphone. He then breaks into the trunk of Davidov's vehicle with his laser watch and comes across the corpse of an inspector (of nuclear disarmament, I suppose), Leonid Tasha.

The following scenes are similar to the film. However, we can note that the uniforms worn by Renard's men are orange (and not blue).

At this point French actress Sophie Marceau had already been cast for the role of Elektra and it was chosen to change the nationality of Christmas character in order to not to have two French girls in the film. Since Marceau could satisfy the film's European audience, it was decided by the studio that Christmas would be a character for American audience[103].

We therefore have in this script a Christmas Jones from American nationality, instead of French Polynesian. Her hairs are still described as short and strangely she is supposed to carry a hunting knife strapped around her hips. Bond introduces himself to her as "Viktor Davidov".

007 descends into the depths, "dead silence in the shadows. Bond's in his element". He see "like a deadly spider at the centre of a web, a nuclear bomb suspended over a pit". "Bond is alone with the bomb. An eerie moment". 007 sees a man who turns towards him: Renard. Bond draws his gun: "He and Bond face off, the malevolent bomb between them".

Bond has his confrontation with Renard, the dialogues are similar to the film although we can note this tirade from Renard: "You should have seen [Elektra] before. Flawless, and still so innocent, not such a whore in bed...".

As in the movie, 007 is interrupted by Akakievich and Christmas. Then a shooting breaks out; Christmas says that if Renard manages to close the radiation doors, "they won't be opened again for forty-eight years". The action scene that takes place is similar to the film, except for a section where Bond shoots lights to darken the part of the tunnel he is in.

After Kazakhstan parts, Bond goes to confront Elektra and then there are the scenes of the bomb in the pipeline. M is present, accompanied by Tanner (and not Robinson). She gets kidnapped. This script clearly specifies that Elektra's base is Maiden's Tower (instead of a fictional Temple of Galata). Between M, Elektra and Renard:

[...]
- Elektra: [My father] didn't think my life was worth the chump change he spent on a day at the stock market.

> [...]
> - M: So she used all that brilliance to get revenge on her father, on me.
> - Renard: No. I wanted you. I wanted you for myself. Since you sent your man to kill me. [...]

The scene with the saw helicopters in this script is almost the same as in the film except that there is no Bullion character, nor the line "Q's not gonna like this" when the car is cut in two.

In this script, Bond chases the Boa after the bomb explosions in the building where he is with Zukovsky in Istanbul.

> - Bond (for Christmas): If I don't get to the Boa before he gets to Maiden's Tower, M is dead.

Boa climbs a ladder that leads to the roof of a building and 007 follows him; three thugs join them. Bond manages to throw one into the Bazaar. Christmas runs to the body, thinking it's Bond. The thug gets up and smiles at her with his bloody teeth before chasing her...

Bond chases Boa and the other two men who jump from roof to roof until finally jumping onto a moving bus/tram. Bond jumps onto a tilting flag pole and lands on the bus. He sends one of the henchmen out of the bus, but the man manages to hang on and get back up behind Bond who is busy with the other henchman.

The man behind 007 draws his gun but is electrocuted when the weapon comes into contact with an electrical cable of the tram during a turn. Bond throws the other man out of the bus, where he ends up in the windshield of a van (then burst out through the back doors of the said van and tumbles out onto the street where it is hit by a car).

Boa jumps onto a moving truck and Bond onto the roof of a taxi which then hit its breaks; Bond rolls across the bonnet and onto the street. Traffic stops in front and Boa jump off the truck; the chase continues on foot through an alley. The two men enter a cafe where they fight hand-to-hand. Boa is strangling from behind; 007 tries to reach for his gun on the ground but Boa kicks it.

> - Boa: For years I was told I could never take the great James Bond and his Walther PPK. What good is your gun now, Bond?

Bond is about to die but manages to grab a hot object with which he hits Boa who then release him. The chase resumes, heading towards a ferry terminal where Bond sees Boa boarding a steamboat. 007 grabs onto a net of goods that is being loaded onto the boat while Boa goes up the gangway.

A breathless Boa finds himself facing 007 and a final hand-to-hand fight begins between the two men. Bond ends up killing Boa by throwing him overboard where he falls onto the dock, his "body at a horrible angle, his neck broken".

However the victory is short-lived because Gabor shows up with Christmas, whom his men have captured.

Taken prisoner, Bond is bring with the girl to Maiden's Tower where Elektra tortures him in the chair (note that the sentence "The world is not enough" is never uttered in this script).

> - Elektra: I could have given you the world.
> - Bond: Not interested.

When 007 manages to kill her, the script tells us that Elektra is "shocked at her own mortality".

The submarine scenes are a mix between the script from June 15, 1998 and what we see in the film (with Bond gets out in freediving to reach the room where Renard is, the submarine exploding underwater, and no armada of boats on the surface waiting for Bond and Christmas).

The final scenes take place at MI6's London HQ which is under repair, where as in the film, MI6 observes the thermal satellite image of the "Aston Martin" as well as 007 and Christmas having sex.

The most surprising part of this script is still yet to come:

> - Christmas: You know James... I think Christmas is coming early this year.
>
> THE END
>
> But James Bond will return in:
>
> "HOW I LEFT MY SHATTERHANDED DR. BLOFELD FOR SPECTRE'S RETURN IN CASINO ROYALE DURING THE AIRWOLF MISSIONS".

!!!!

Bruce Feirstein returns

"Pierce didn't really like Dana's writing very much because he thought he was being short-changed by it", says Apted[104].

> - Michael Aped[105] : [After Dana] we then realized we had to go further [in revisions]: suddenly Bond was second banana here and Elektra and M were taking over the film. So Bruce Feirstein came back and brought something quite different to it. He rewrote the Bond scenes basically and put Bond in his proper place. In the last Bond they had had a lot of trouble with the script, largely because, there had been so much conflict. They had people coming in doing the same things and competing with each other on the same stuff. We were very lucky [on this one]: the boys did the story, Dana did the women and Bruce did the Bond.

"I was asked to come in and work on the movie just before Thanksgiving of 1998", Feirstein recalls[106]. " It was four weeks before production"[107]. "I went to work with Michael Apted, who was great and wonderful, and spent three or four months working on it"[108]. Apted recalls that the script was tweaked throughout production[109].

Feirstein continues: "I remember my brief was: Bond needs to drive the story more. I was given Dana's draft and told to fix Bond's role, clarify the story and flesh out some of the characters"[110].

"Neal and Rob, and then Dana, all did really great work. Barbara Broccoli and Michael Wilson sort of wanted me to give it a final polish; which meant re-working scenes, character stuff and ironing out some of the action. I also tried to do the one thing the last writer does on any film: tried to make sure the story made sense"[111].

"I hope one thing we will see in this movie is less running and shooting than in the last one. Personally, I'm in agreement with everyone who wants to see more character", says Feirstein[112].

At this stage it has became clear that the film cannot really be shot in Turkey, too dangerous to go there: the production is afraid of being the target of a terrorist attack in view of recent threats launched by the Kurdistan Workers' Party[113]. Only a small group responsible for discreetly filming general shots of landscapes will go to Turkey; the actors will not set a foot in the country[114]. " So the script had to be restructured" accordingly, Feirstein explained[115].

January 4, 1999' script

Thus the production found itself at one point with a script dated January 4, 1999 written by Purvis and Wade and revised by Dana Stevens and Bruce Feirstein. The version I have contains within it, pages dated December 4, 17, 18, 1998, January 7, 13, 15, 20, 26, 29, 30 and February 4, 9, 1999; bringing the whole thing to 128 pages. This script is very close to the film.

So the bank is here located in Bilbao in Spain. We can notice that Lachaise adds:

> - Bond: The report Sir Robert bought was stolen from an MI6 agent. Who was killed for it. I want to know who killed him.
> - Lachaise: Quite so. Terrible tragedy. But, not to put too fine a point on it, your MI6 agent had stolen the document himself, two weeks earlier, from a Russian operative.

After the death of the banker, Bond now escapes through the window like in the film. Then the girl with the cigars goes to find Renard and his sniper rifle in the apartment in the opposite the street:

> - Renard: What's his name? Our friend from MI6?
> - Cigar Girl: James Bond.
> - Renard: One of M's most resourceful tin soldiers.
> - Cigar girl: He could identify me.
>
> [Renard touches her cheeks].
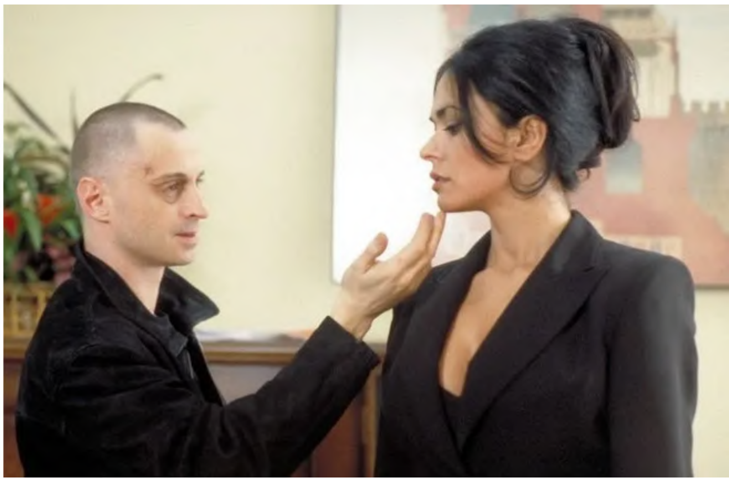
>
> - Renard: Then I suppose a death is in order (A chilling pause) His. When my time is right, I trust you won't fail. (He pours two glasses of wine) Until then, let's us toast this James Bond. We're in his hands now.

This scene will be filmed but cut during editing.



007 still returns to London in a seaplane, Moneypenny throws the cigar in the trash, and Bruce Feirstein tries to rework a line that failed to make it into the previous film:

> - Bond: [King], who buys stolen reports for three million pounds.
> - M: Contrary to what you may believe 007, the world is not populated by madmen who can hollow out volcanoes, fill them big-breasted women, and threaten the world with nuclear annihilation.
> - Bond: It only takes one.

This too will be filmed but cut in the editing room, as will a line specifying that the stolen report concerns the threat of the millennium bug on the nuclear arsenal of the former Soviet republics. (As the new millennium approached there were concerns of massive computer problems, with the dates of computer systems at the time being programmed to only begin with "19xx". However, since the world anticipated this by investing considerable sums to replace/update the systems before the fateful date, there were no major problems when the year 2000 arrived).

At the end of the boat chase, the cigar girl commits suicide instead of Bond killing her.

> - Bruce Feirstein[116] : [For the boat chase] I see one small problem with it, which is: What is Bond doing? Why is he chasing her? So I write in this thing where Bond says, "I can help you; I can save you". And I write in that helicopters are coming in to kill her. In other words, what was missing was what Bond was trying to accomplish. [...] Later, Michael says to me, "You've got to see the opening sequence". [...] [I looked at it] all of a sudden I see something that is not in the script, which is that Bond is chasing her down the Thames and suddenly is firing torpedoes at her. I look at Michael and say, "This doesn't make any sense. Where did this come from? He's trying to save her. Why is he firing torpedoes at her?". Michael gives me a look and Michael says, "They're non-lethal torpedoes". We look at each other and we just start to laugh.

The DB5 at the funeral ended up on the cutting floor. In the deleted scene from the film, when the car arrive, Bond was in the passenger seat with his arm hanging out, while Moneypenny was behind the wheel.

Just after the credits we see Bond arriving at King's funeral by driving his Aston Martin DB5. Robinson's first name in this script is "Geoff"...

Elektra is described as moving "through the crowd like a young Jacqueline Kennedy". Just like in the film, Bond doesn't speak to her during the funeral.

The MI6 doctor is called Molly Warmflash in this script and the dialogues are a little longer.

> - Bruce Feirstein[117] : The story behind this name is that the character was supposed to be called Greatrex. But the night before shooting, the lawyers called, and insisted we change it. (Turned out there was a female physician with this name in London). There was a store we'd pass on the way to the studio, Warmflash Pharmacy or something, I honestly forget. And it stayed with me, as I'd gone to high school with a kid named Warmflash.

Another victim of the editing.

When he is done with her and leaves the room, Bond removes the sling from his arm and places it on a knight's armor in the castle, uttering a phrase already attempted in several previous films:

- Bond: The things we do for England... Carry on.

Renard is no longer the alias of Claude Serrault here but the one of "Victor Zokas". Further on, Bond receives his BMW "Z7" and the scene ends with:

- R: Shall we have it air-lifted to Turkey, or would you prefer to destroy it here?
- Bond: He's not bad, Q. A few more years and I'm sure you'll have this cloning thing perfected.
- R and Q (in unison): Oh, grow up, 007.

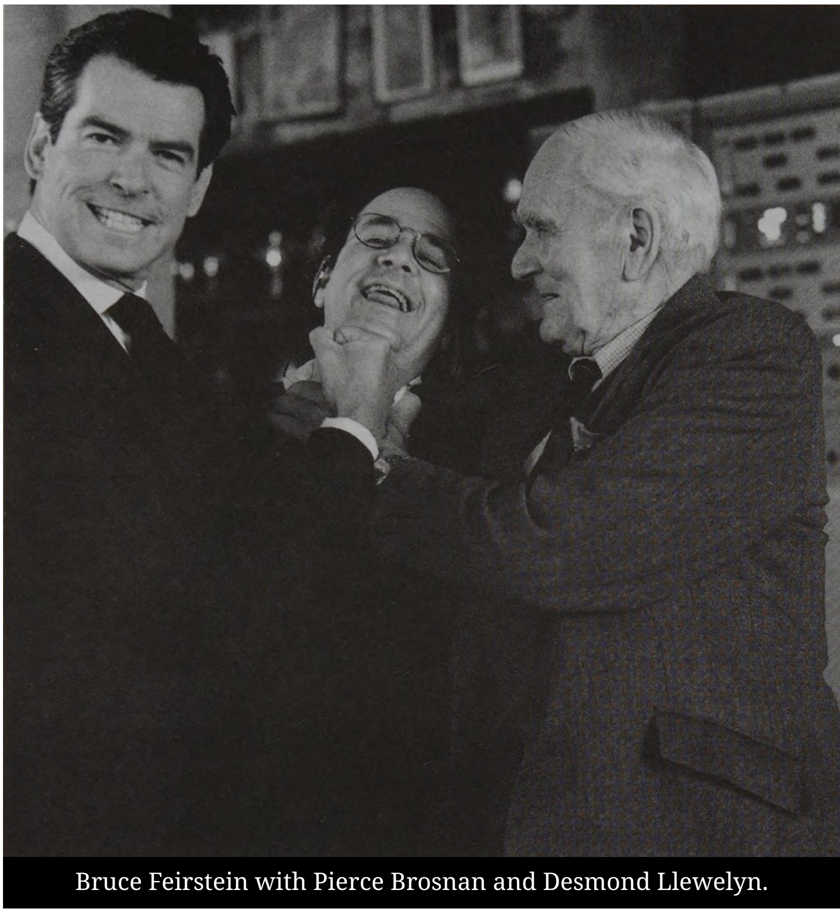
007 goes to Turkey and meets Sasha Davidov:

- Davidov: So, how are things at MI6, Mister Bond?
- Bond: ...Perhaps first you'd like to tell me how things are at Mossad, Mister Davidov.
- Davidov: I left Mossad 10 years ago, Mr. Bond. But we do keep in touch.

[...]

- Bond (without turning around): And now you can call off the thugs standing behind me with the guns.



Bruce Feirstein with Pierce Brosnan and Desmond Llewelyn.

In Elektra's portable office, Bond mentions to her that there may be a traitor within King Industries and shows her the remains of her father's pin. One line tells us more about Gabor when he joins them to say the jeep is ready:

- Elektra: Someone close to me? Do you want to interrogate him?
- Bond: His name is Gabor. He's from Fiji. A warrior from Beqa island. He's been protecting you since the kidnapping.
- Elektra: Mr. Bond, thank you for coming. But I already have a bodyguard...

Bond gets behind the wheel of the jeep to go to Ruan where there are problems with the construction of the pipeline; they pass landscapes of oil wells in a sequence (cut during the editing) very inspired by the Nightline's documentary:

- Bond: I see we've taken the scenic route.
- Elektra (feeling slightly insulted): Do you have any idea what you're looking at? There was a time when this was the most coveted spot in the world.
- Bond: Yes. I know. The oil fields here were discovered at the end of the last century and seized by the Soviets in 1919. Hitler wanted them, Stalin and Khrushchev used them to fuel the Cold War.
- Elektra: It was my mother's people who discovered this oil. The Bolsheviks slaughtered them for it. And when the Soviet Union fell, this is what it left us.
- Bond: The Chernobyl of the oil world.
- Elektra: Some say the oil is in my family's blood. I say our blood is in oil.

LAND ROVER
11·BA·512

Arriving in Ruan, Elektra goes to speak to the priest and diverts her pipeline. There is a camera shot of her and Bond through binoculars. They are observed: by Renard?

Further on, after the skiing scenes, Bond goes to the Zukovsky casino. Here things happen as in the film with the script specifying that the thug that Bond pins to the bar by the tie is named Zed. "The Bull" is there and is described as Valentin's "chauffeur" with gold teeth. In front of Zukovsky the dialogues are a little different and this is an opportunity to learn more about the Bull:

[...]
- Zukovsky: Chill out. Try your luck in my new casino.
- Bond: Only if you're willing to take a bet on your knee; the one I didn't shoot out.

[...]
The Bull is ready to draw. So is Bond. Zukovsky calculates the probable outcome... And surrenders.
[...]
- Zukovsky: You have to excuse the Bull, he's my chauffeur and...
- Bond: Yes. Maurice Wamaso. AKA "The Bull", aka "Mr. Bullion". Wanted for genocide in Rwanda... Not to be confused with the rest of the upstanding > citizens floating through your casino: Chinese gangster, Russian mafia, Turkish war lords...

> - Zukovsky: And diplomats, bankers, oil executives, and everyone else who wants to do business in Baku [...].

Unlike in the film, Elektra plays multiple hands at cards. In this script the scene between Renard and Davidov takes place at "Devil's Breath": it's very similar to the film.

With Bond's help, Elektra doubles her winnings at the casino but decides to bet everything on one hand and loses.

> - Bond: Not your lucky night.
> - Elektra: Who said it was over?

They leave the casino, observed by Renard:

> - Renard (to his henchman): As usual, Mr. Bond's attention will be focused on the wrong thing. He'll get his, and I'll get him, in due time.

007 bring back the girl to her home. "His eyes follow Elektra up the stairs, locked on her body. Then she pauses. She looks back, down at him, once... And he joins her, for a passionate kiss on the stairs" in a scene deleted from the film.

A little further on when they are in bed, there is an interesting stage direction:

> - Elektra: ...But what about you? What do you do to survive?
> Bond wants to tell the truth: "I never look back", but hesitates, not wanting to reveal that much of himself.
> - Bond: I take pleasure... In great beauty.

Further on, Bond boards a plane with Renard's men heading to Kazakhstan. One of Renard's men (the first to speak to Bond) has a name: Trukhin. Regarding Christmas Jones, Bond was to notice "an incongruous Peace tattoo just above her hip".

> - Bruce Feirstein[118] : The Christmas Jones character clearly, as people have written about it, is problematic. The casting came from MGM and I had tried to address the obvious red flag, which was a nuclear scientist walking around in short shorts with a tank top. It was a decision made above my head, above my pay grade. At > one point I actually talked about maybe Pierce should actually say to her, "You don't look like a nuclear scientist", and she could, in turn, point out that he was too handsome to be who he claimed to be in the film while undercover; but it went nowhere.

Later after the Kazakstan scenes and confronting Elektra, Bond and M separately go to the pipeline control center which seems to have been attacked by Renard. There was supposed to be a short scene (also cut during editing) where Bond greeted M as she got off the helicopter and passed the bodies of the victims of the attack before entering the building:

155 POLIS İMDAT
155 POLIS İMDAT

- M: Nice of you to join us, double-oh-seven.
- Bond: They hit about 90 minutes ago. There's a scientist from the International Decommissioning Agency over there, Dr. Jones. She's checking to see if she can find anything.

Further on, after the pipeline bomb and the saw-helicopters attack:

- Zukovsky (in the caviar): I'm drowning! Please!
- Bond: What's the atomic weight of caviar?
- Christmas: Probably close to cesium... He seems to have negative buoyancy.
- Bond: So he will drown.
- Christmas: Sooner, rather than later.
- Zukovsky: Stop it! Get me out of here!
- Bond: Too bad we don't have any champagne.

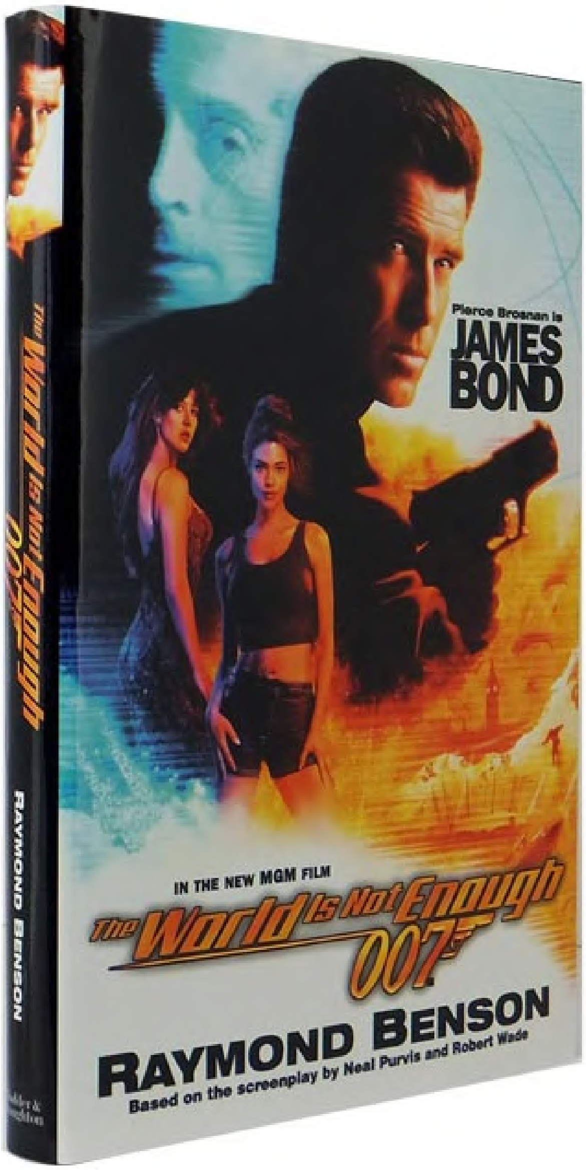
Zukovsky's nephew is named "Nikoli" in this script and after the Bull's bomb explodes, there is no elaborate action scene: it's like in the movie, Bond and Christmas are captured directly.

The rest of the script is similar to the one studied before, including "Christmas is coming early this year", but there is no longer the inside joke about the title of the next film. We also notice that it is R who is behind the thermal image screen and this sentence about him: "R (who will, as wad explained, eventually be known as Q)".

- Bruce Feirstein[119] : In an earlier draft of the script, he was called R to distinguish him from Q. Then it became part of the dialogue. Then everyone was confused. So In fact, he is not named "R". In the final draft he's referred to as "Q's Assistant". The reference to "R" is a quip Bond makes to him in the film. I think the producer's feeling here is that the initial denotes the job, not the individual: Were Q to retire, his replacement then becomes Q. It's the same as when Judi Dench replaced the previous M, she became M. [...] Having said that, I understand in the final credits [actor] Cleese is identified as R. The reason for this I assume is so the audience will know who it refers to.

Novelization



Second novelization for Raymond Benson with a first chapter including a briefing scene in M's office which precedes the mission in Spain.

The author gives Giulietta da Vinci as the name the cigar girl, and two other minor scenes have been added in which Renard discreetly observes Bond and Elektra from afar:

In the first, he is in a tree, in camouflage fatigues, and contacts his men by walkie-talkie when he realizes that Bond and Elektra are leaving for the snowy mountains by helicopter.

In the second scene, Renard is on a roof in front of Zukovsky's casino. Although he is then accompanied by a man who has a sniper rifle, he decides to do nothing. In fact, his love for Elektra is so strong that he wants to offer her a night of pleasure, even if it has to be in the company of Bond.

During the boat chase (which was shortened) Bond doesn't use torpedoes but incendiary bombs. Elektra doesn't bet everything right away at the casino; she first plays blackjack with Bond. Q also disappears in a smoke screen and not by sinking into the ground.

Bull is named Maurice Womasa and he is a killer from Somalia who is notably wanted for genocides.

Elektra doesn't die immediately after Bond shoots her, it takes about thirty seconds before the life leaves her body. When Bond arrives in the reactor room, Renard is unconscious (he gets up shortly after). It appears that he lost consciousness due to the bullet in his head.

Colonel Akakievich, who is in the base that is being dismantled in Kazakhstan, is clearly an accomplice of Renard: he says in particular that he doesn't want the bomb to be moved before he is paid.

The major addition that the novelization brings is a biography of Renard (including the period of Elektra's kidnapping) which only appears, strangely, towards the end of the novel. During the events at the novel, he has only about two days to live before dying of the bullet in his head and he knows it. All his actions are done out of love for Elektra, and he takes comfort in knowing that she will remember him fondly once Istanbul will be destroyed.

For her part, Elektra has contradictory feelings for him, sometimes she only considers him as someone "insignificant in the grand scheme of things", sometimes she wants to be in his arms.

Sources/references from chapter 19: The World Is Not Enough

1 "Screenwriters' Masterclass: Screenwriters Talk About Their Greatest Movies" by Kevin Conroy Scott (2006).
"Story and Character: Interviews with British Screenwriters" by Alistair Owen (2004).
Purvis and Wade interview at the The Orange Word event (2004) transcription on MI6-HQ website: https://www.mi6-hq.com/sections/articles/interview_purvis_and_wade1

2 "Screenwriters' Masterclass: Screenwriters Talk About Their Greatest Movies" by Kevin Conroy Scott (2006).
Purvis and Wade interview at the The Orange Word event (2004) transcription on MI6-HQ website: https://www.mi6-hq.com/sections/articles/interview_purvis_and_wade1

3 "Screenwriters' Masterclass: Screenwriters Talk About Their Greatest Movies" by Kevin Conroy Scott (2006).
"Story and Character: Interviews with British Screenwriters" by Alistair Owen (2004).
Purvis and Wade interview at the The Orange Word event (2004) transcription on MI6-HQ website: https://www.mi6-hq.com/sections/articles/interview_purvis_and_wade1

4 "Screenwriters' Masterclass: Screenwriters Talk About Their Greatest Movies" by Kevin Conroy Scott (2006).
"Story and Character: Interviews with British Screenwriters" by Alistair Owen (2004).
Purvis and Wade interview at the The Orange Word event (2004) transcription on MI6-HQ website: https://www.mi6-hq.com/sections/articles/interview_purvis_and_wade1

5 "Screenwriters' Masterclass: Screenwriters Talk About Their Greatest Movies" by Kevin Conroy Scott (2006).

6 "Screenwriters' Masterclass: Screenwriters Talk About Their Greatest Movies" by Kevin Conroy Scott (2006).

7 "Screenwriters' Masterclass: Screenwriters Talk About Their Greatest Movies" by Kevin Conroy Scott (2006).

8 "Screenwriters' Masterclass: Screenwriters Talk About Their Greatest Movies" by Kevin Conroy Scott (2006).

9 "Screenwriters' Masterclass: Screenwriters Talk About Their Greatest Movies" by Kevin Conroy Scott (2006).

10 "Screenwriters' Masterclass: Screenwriters Talk About Their Greatest Movies" by Kevin Conroy Scott (2006).

11 Derek Bentley's Wikipedia page.

12 "Screenwriters' Masterclass: Screenwriters Talk About Their Greatest Movies" by Kevin Conroy Scott (2006).

13 "Screenwriters' Masterclass: Screenwriters Talk About Their Greatest Movies" by Kevin Conroy Scott (2006).

14 "Story and Character: Interviews with British Screenwriters" by Alistair Owen (2004).
"Screenwriters' Masterclass: Screenwriters Talk About Their Greatest Movies" by Kevin Conroy Scott (2006).
Purvis and Wade's CV on Casarotto Ramsay & Associates: https://cdn.casarotto.co.uk/uploads/files/cvs/Neal-Purvis-Robert-Wade.pdf

15 "Story and Character: Interviews with British Screenwriters" by Alistair Owen (2004).
Purvis and Wade interview at the The Orange Word event (2004) transcription on MI6-HQ website: https://www.mi6-hq.com/sections/articles/interview_purvis_and_wade2

16 "Movie Moguls Speak: Interviews with Top Film Producers" by Steven Priggé (2004).

17 "Story and Character: Interviews with British Screenwriters" by Alistair Owen (2004).

18 "Story and Character: Interviews with British Screenwriters" by Alistair Owen (2004).

19 "Story and Character: Interviews with British Screenwriters" by Alistair Owen (2004).

20 "Story and Character: Interviews with British Screenwriters" by Alistair Owen (2004).

21 "Story and Character: Interviews with British Screenwriters" by Alistair Owen (2004).
Purvis and Wade interview at the The Orange Word event (2004) transcription on MI6-HQ website: https://www.mi6-hq.com/sections/articles/interview_purvis_and_wade4

22 "Story and Character: Interviews with British Screenwriters" by Alistair Owen (2004).

23 Purvis and Wade interview at the The Orange Word event (2004) transcription on MI6-HQ website: https://www.mi6-hq.com/sections/articles/interview_purvis_and_wade4

24 Purvis and Wade interview at the The Orange Word event (2004) transcription on MI6-HQ website: https://www.mi6-hq.com/sections/articles/interview_purvis_and_wade4
"Story and Character: Interviews with British Screenwriters" by Alistair Owen (2004).

25 "Interview: Neal Purvis & Robert Wade discuss adapting Len Deighton's SS-GB" in Seenit (February 13, 2017): https://www.seenit.co.uk/neal-purvis-and-robert-wade-talks-about-adapting-len-deightons-ss-gb/

26 "SS-GB: An interview with the script writers" by Jochebel Khong in Nookmag (March 27, 2017): https://www.nookmag.com/ss-gb-an-interview-with-the-script-writers/

27 "Story and Character: Interviews with British Screenwriters" by Alistair Owen (2004).

28 "Story and Character: Interviews with British Screenwriters" by Alistair Owen (2004).

29 "Story and Character: Interviews with British Screenwriters" by Alistair Owen (2004).
"Screenwriters' Masterclass: Screenwriters Talk About Their Greatest Movies" by Kevin Conroy Scott (2006).

30 "Story and Character: Interviews with British Screenwriters" by Alistair Owen (2004).

31 "Story and Character: Interviews with British Screenwriters" by Alistair Owen (2004).

32 "Screenwriters' Masterclass: Screenwriters Talk About Their Greatest Movies" by Kevin Conroy Scott (2006).

33 "A Sit Down with the Writers" by Yarborough on Die Another Day official website: http://www.jamesbond.com/bond20/newsflash/newsflash_12.php

34 "Screenwriters' Masterclass: Screenwriters Talk About Their Greatest Movies" by Kevin Conroy Scott (2006).

35 "Screenwriters' Masterclass: Screenwriters Talk About Their Greatest Movies" by Kevin Conroy Scott (2006).

36 "One2One writers: Neal Purvis and Robert Wade with Peter Harness" by Patricia Dobson in ScreenDaily (July 11, 2007): https://www.screendaily.com/one2one-writers-neal-purvis-and-robert-wade-with-peter-harness/

4033536.article

37 Interview by Richard Ashton on Her Majesty's Secret Servant: http://www.hmss.com/films/mgw/mgw99.html

38 Purvis and Wade's interview on Her Majesty's Secret Servant for Die Another Day: http://www.hmss.com/films/dad/p&w/

39 Purvis and Wade's interview on Her Majesty's Secret Servant for Die Another Day: http://www.hmss.com/films/dad/p&w/

40 "Story and Character: Interviews with British Screenwriters" by Alistair Owen (2004).

41 "Interview with screenwriters Neal Purvis & Robert Wade" by Anders Frejdh on From Sweden with Love (2012): https://jamesbond007.se/eng/intervjuer/neal_purvis_o_robert_wade_skyfall_intervju

42 "Movie Moguls Speak: Interviews with Top Film Producers" by Steven Priggé (2004).

43 "Story and Character: Interviews with British Screenwriters" by Alistair Owen (2004).

44 "Story and Character: Interviews with British Screenwriters" by Alistair Owen (2004).

45 "Story and Character: Interviews with British Screenwriters" by Alistair Owen (2004).

46 "Some Kind of Hero: The Remarkable Story of the James Bond Films" by Matthew Field & Ajay Chowdhury (2015).

47 Purvis and Wade interview at the The Orange Word event (2004) transcription on MI6-HQ website: https://www.mi6-hq.com/sections/articles/interview_purvis_and_wade3

48 "Story and Character: Interviews with British Screenwriters" by Alistair Owen (2004).

49 "Movie Moguls Speak: Interviews with Top Film Producers" by Steven Priggé (2004).

50 "Movie Moguls Speak: Interviews with Top Film Producers" by Steven Priggé (2004).

51 "Michael G. Wilson" by Alan Jones in Cinefantastique magazine (volume 31, number 9, December 1999).

52 "Michael Wilson - Interview One" on 007 Forever: http://www.007forever.com/actors/wilsoninterview001.html

53 "Story and Character: Interviews with British Screenwriters" by Alistair Owen (2004).

54 Interview by Richard Ashton on Her Majesty's Secret Servant: http://www.hmss.com/films/mgw/mgw99.html

55 "Some Kind of Hero: The Remarkable Story of the James Bond Films" by Matthew Field & Ajay Chowdhury (2015).

56 "The World Is Not Enough: A Companion" by Iain Johnstone (1999).

57 "Story and Character: Interviews with British Screenwriters" by Alistair Owen (2004).

58 "The World Is Not Enough: A Companion" by Iain Johnstone (1999).

59 "Operation Winter Storm: Manstein's Attempted Relief of Stalingrad" by R. Jeff Chrisman in Warfare History Network (2015): https://warfarehistorynetwork.com/article/stunning-victories-ultimate-defeat/

60 "Great Game is afoot again as rivals carve up oil bonanza" by Phil Reeves in The Independent (May 20, 1997): https://www.independent.co.uk/news/world/great-game-is-afoot-again-as-rivals-carve-up-oil-bonanza-1262653.html
"Pipeline poker" in The Economist (February 5, 1998): https://www.economist.com/special-report/1998/02/05/pipeline-poker

61 Purvis and Wade interview at the The Orange Word event (2004) transcription on MI6-HQ website: https://www.mi6-hq.com/sections/articles/interview_purvis_and_wade3

62 "Michael G. Wilson" by Alan Jones in Cinefantastique magazine (volume 31, number 9, December 1999).

63 "The World Is Not Enough: A Companion" by Iain Johnstone (1999).

64 "Nobody Does it Better" by Mark A. Altman and Edward Gross (2020).

65 "Michael Wilson - Interview One" on 007 Forever: http://www.007forever.com/actors/wilsoninterview001.html

66 "The World Is Not Enough: A Companion" by Iain Johnstone (1999).

67 "Story and Character: Interviews with British Screenwriters" by Alistair Owen (2004).

68 "For Your Eyes Only: Behind the scenes of the James Bond films" by David Giammarco (2002).

69 "The James Bond Archives" by Howard Hughes and Paul Duncan (2012).

70 "James Bond The World Is Not Enough - First and Second Draft script, later printed (2)" on Ewbank's: https://www.ewbankauctions.co.uk/index.php?option=com_bidders&view=lot_detail&auction_id=907&lot_id=311073

71 "Focus sur : La BMW Z8, l'élégance ne lui suffit pas" in Absolutely Cars: https://absolutelycars.fr/culture-automobile/focus-sur-la-bmw-z8-lelegance-ne-lui-suffit-pas-james-bond-car/
"La BMW Z8 -- Dossier de Presse" on BMW Group: https://www.press.bmwgroup.com/canada/article/detail/T0023660FR/la-bmw-z8-dossier-de-presse?language=fr 72 The World is Not Enough: The Official Movie Magazine, by Starlog (1999).

73 (Sorry, I don't remember where I found this; neither the eventual exact quote).

74 "The James Bond Archives" by Howard Hughes and Paul Duncan (2012).

75 "Michael G. Wilson" by Alan Jones in Cinefantastique magazine (volume 31, number 9, December 1999).

76 "Pierce Brosnan" by Alan Jones in Cinefantastique magazine (volume 31, number 9, December 1999).

77 "The World Is Not Enough: A Companion" by Iain Johnstone (1999).

78 "The James Bond Archives" by Howard Hughes and Paul Duncan (2012).

79 "Lot # 1067 : James Bond: The World Is Not Enough (1999) - Philip Kohler Collection: Scripts, Blueprints and Production Paperwork" on Propstore Auction:

https://propstoreauction.com/lot-details/index/catalog/318/lot/95920?url=/auctions/catalog/id/318?page=11&items=100

80 "Lot # 1067 : James Bond: The World Is Not Enough (1999) - Philip Kohler Collection: Scripts, Blueprints and Production Paperwork" on Propstore Auction: https://propstoreauction.com/lot-details/index/catalog/318/lot/95920?url=/auctions/catalog/id/318?page=11&items=100

81 "Lot # 1067 : James Bond: The World Is Not Enough (1999) - Philip Kohler Collection: Scripts, Blueprints and Production Paperwork" on Propstore Auction: https://propstoreauction.com/lot-details/index/catalog/318/lot/95920?url=/auctions/catalog/id/318?page=11&items=100

82 "James Bond: The World is Not Enough - Production used script" on The Prop Gallery: https://www.thepropgallery.com/the-world-is-not-enough-production-used-script

83 "James Bond: The World is Not Enough - Production used script" on The Prop Gallery: https://www.thepropgallery.com/the-world-is-not-enough-production-used-script

84 "Nobody Does it Better" by Mark A. Altman and Edward Gross (2020).

85 For Dana Stevens biography, see for the sources:
"Filmmaker Dana Stevens Balances Motherhood, Movie-Making & Her New CBS Show Reckless" by Watkinst on Tinseltown Mom (June 22, 2014): https://tinseltownmom.com/filmmaker-dana-stevens-balances-motherhood-movie-making-and-her-new-cbs-show-reckless/Dana Stevens's IMDb page.
Dana Stevens's Wikipedia page.

86 (Sorry, I don't remember where I found this; neither the eventual exact quote).

87 "Some Kind of Hero: The Remarkable Story of the James Bond Films" by Matthew Field & Ajay Chowdhury (2015).
"The World Is Not Enough: A Companion" by Iain Johnstone (1999).

88 "Some Kind of Hero: The Remarkable Story of the James Bond Films" by Matthew Field & Ajay Chowdhury (2015).

89 "Some Kind of Hero: The Remarkable Story of the James Bond Films" by Matthew Field & Ajay Chowdhury (2015).

90 "Some Kind of Hero: The Remarkable Story of the James Bond Films" by Matthew Field & Ajay Chowdhury (2015).

91 "The World Is Not Enough: A Companion" by Iain Johnstone (1999).

92 "The World Is Not Enough: A Companion" by Iain Johnstone (1999).

93 "James Bond: A Revised Draft "Bond 19" Script For 'The World Is Not Enough" on Bonhams: https://www.bonhams.com/auction/27389/lot/59/james-bond-a-revised-draft-bond-19-script-for-the-world-is-not-enough-eon-productions-mgm-1999/

94 "The James Bond Archives" by Howard Hughes and Paul Duncan (2012).

95 "The World Is Not Enough scribe Bruce Feirstein discusses the process for keeping bond, his new nemesis and the girls fresh for the new millennium" by Anthony C. Ferrante on eonmag.com (October 29, 1999): http://www.eonmag.com/archive/9910/features/big_picture/bond_screenwriter_1/features_frameset.htm

96 "The World Is Not Enough scribe Bruce Feirstein discusses the process for keeping bond, his new nemesis and the girls fresh for the new millennium" by Anthony C. Ferrante on eonmag.com (October 29, 1999): http://www.eonmag.com/archive/9910/features/big_picture/bond_screenwriter_1/features_frameset.htm

97 "The Many Lives of James Bond" by Mark Edlitz (2019).

98 "Michael Wilson - Interview One" on 007 Forever: http://www.007forever.com/actors/wilsoninterview001.html

99 "The World Is Not Enough scribe Bruce Feirstein discusses the process for keeping bond, his new nemesis and the girls fresh for the new millennium" by Anthony C. Ferrante on eonmag.com (October 29, 1999): http://www.eonmag.com/archive/9910/features/big_picture/bond_screenwriter_1/features_frameset.htm

100 "The World Is Not Enough: A Companion" by Iain Johnstone (1999).

101 "James Bond - The World Is Not Enough" on Skydive Safety: https://www.skydive-safety.com/TV-and-Film-The-World-is-Not-Enough.htm

102 "The World Is Not Enough scribe Bruce Feirstein discusses the process for keeping bond, his new nemesis and the girls fresh for the new millennium" by Anthony C. Ferrante on eonmag.com (October 29, 1999): http://www.eonmag.com/archive/9910/features/big_picture/bond_screenwriter_1/features_frameset.htm

103 "Some Kind of Hero: The Remarkable Story of the James Bond Films" by Matthew Field & Ajay Chowdhury (2015).

104 "The World Is Not Enough: A Companion" by Iain Johnstone (1999).

105 "The World Is Not Enough: A Companion" by Iain Johnstone (1999).

106 "The World Is Not Enough scribe Bruce Feirstein discusses the process for keeping bond, his new nemesis and the girls fresh for the new millennium" part 2, by Anthony C. Ferrante on eonmag.com (November 5, 1999): http://www.eonmag.com/archive/9911/features/big_picture/bond_screenwriter_2/features_frameset.htm

107 "The World Is Not Enough scribe Bruce Feirstein discusses the process for keeping bond, his new nemesis and the girls fresh for the new millennium" part 2, by Anthony C. Ferrante on eonmag.com (November 5, 1999): http://www.eonmag.com/archive/9911/features/big_picture/bond_screenwriter_2/features_frameset.htm

108 "Nobody Does it Better" by Mark A. Altman and Edward Gross (2020).

109 "The World Is Not Enough: A Companion" by Iain Johnstone (1999).

110 "Some Kind of Hero: The Remarkable Story of the James Bond Films" by Matthew Field & Ajay Chowdhury (2015).

111 "The World Is Not Enough scribe Bruce Feirstein discusses the process for keeping bond, his new nemesis and the girls fresh for the new millennium" part 2, by Anthony C. Ferrante on eonmag.com (November 5, 1999): http://www.eonmag.com/archive/9911/features/big_picture/bond_screenwriter_2/features_frameset.htm

112 "The World Is Not Enough scribe Bruce Feirstein discusses the process for keeping bond, his new nemesis and the girls fresh for the new millennium" by Anthony C. Ferrante on eonmag.com (October 29, 1999): http://www.eonmag.com/archive/9910/features/big_picture/bond_screenwriter_1/features_frameset.htm

113 "The World Is Not Enough: A Companion" by Iain Johnstone (1999).

114 "The World Is Not Enough: A Companion" by Iain Johnstone (1999).

115 "The World Is Not Enough scribe Bruce Feirstein discusses the process for keeping bond, his new nemesis and the girls fresh for the new millennium" part 2, by Anthony C. Ferrante on eonmag.com (November 5, 1999): http://www.eonmag.com/archive/9911/features/big_picture/bond_screenwriter_2/features_frameset.htm

116 "Nobody Does it Better" by Mark A. Altman and Edward Gross (2020).

117 "His Word is Bond: An Interview With 007 Screenwriter Bruce Feirstein" by Kerry Douglas Dye on LeisureSuit.net : http://leisuresuit.net/Webzine/articles/bruce_feirstein.shtml
"The World Is Not Enough scribe Bruce Feirstein discusses the process for keeping bond, his new nemesis and the girls fresh for the new millennium" part 2, by Anthony C. Ferrante on eonmag.com (November 5, 1999): http://www.eonmag.com/archive/9911/features/big_picture/bond_screenwriter_2/features_frameset.htm

118 "Nobody Does it Better" by Mark A. Altman and Edward Gross (2020).

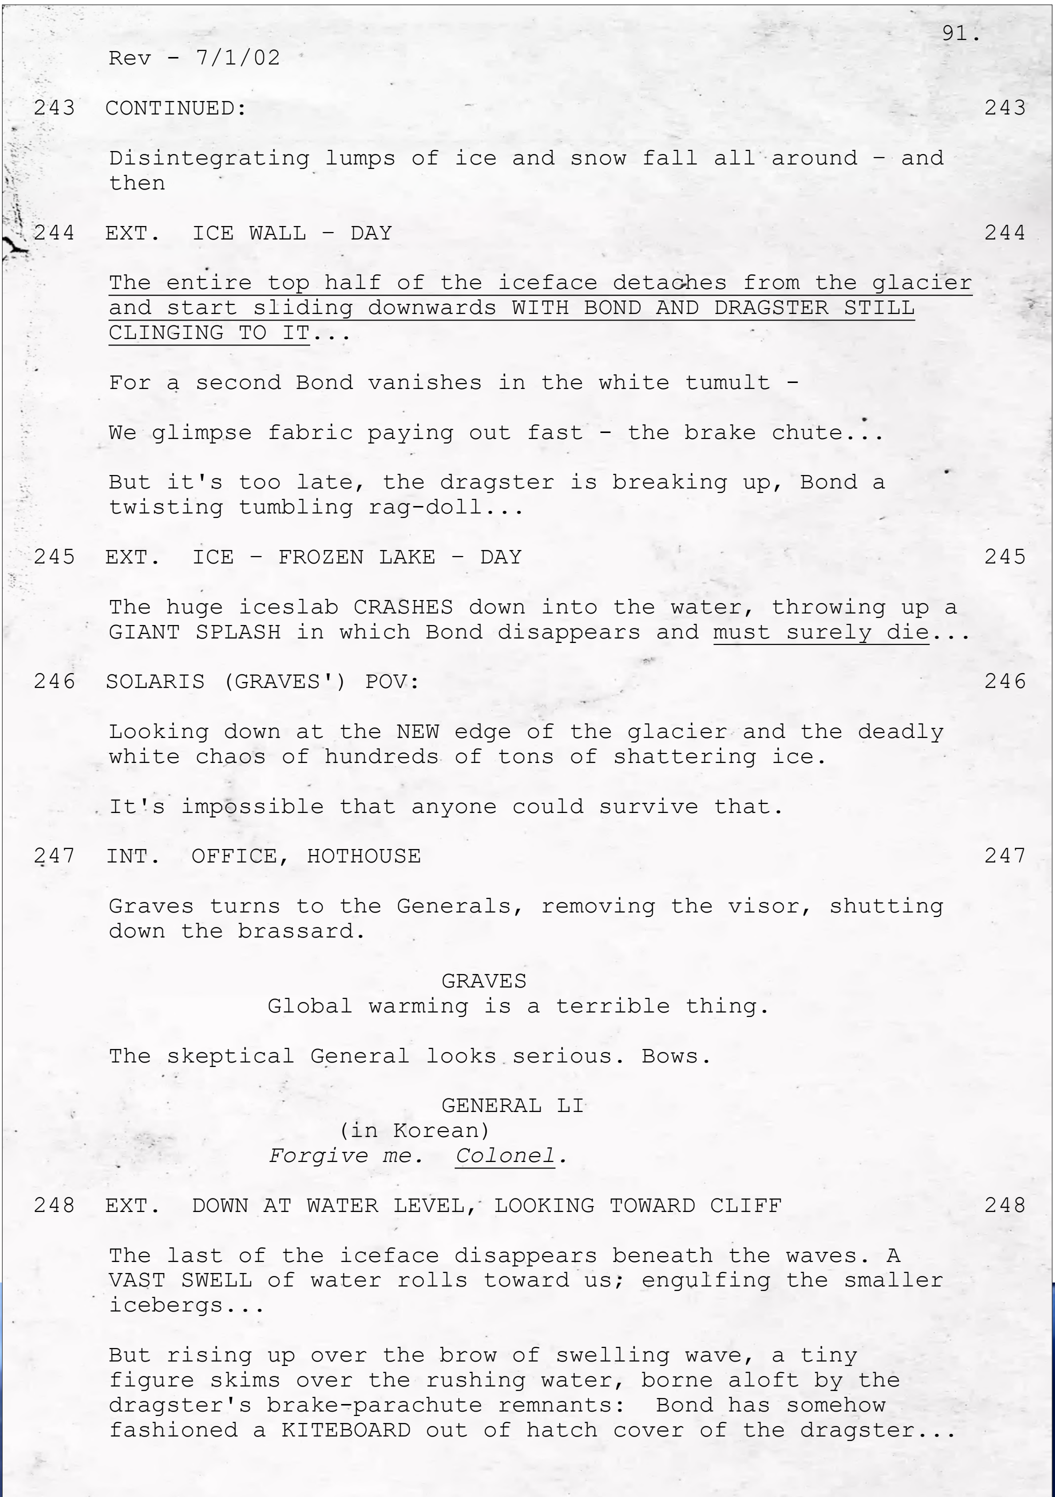
119 "The World Is Not Enough scribe Bruce Feirstein discusses the process for keeping bond, his new nemesis and the girls fresh for the new millennium" by Anthony C. Ferrante on eonmag.com (October 29, 1999): http://www.eonmag.com/archive/9910/features/big_picture/bond_screenwriter_1/features_frameset.htm

PIERCE BROSNAN
DIE ANOTHER DAY
007

Release date (premiere) :
18 November 2002

Writing credit as per title sequence:
"Written by Neal Purvis & Robert Wade"

Director :.............................Lee Tamahori
Producers :...............Michael Wilson and Barbara Broccoli
Director photography :.David Tattersall
Set Designer :........................Peter Lamont
Composer :...........................David Arnold
Editors :.......A. MacRitchie and C. Wagner
Title sequence :.............Daniel Kleinman
Title song vocals :.......................Madonna



91.

Rev - 7/1/02

243 CONTINUED: 243

Disintegrating lumps of ice and snow fall all around - and then

244 EXT. ICE WALL - DAY 244

The entire top half of the iceface detaches from the glacier and start sliding downwards WITH BOND AND DRAGSTER STILL CLINGING TO IT...

For a second Bond vanishes in the white tumult -

We glimpse fabric paying out fast - the brake chute...

But it's too late, the dragster is breaking up, Bond a twisting tumbling rag-doll...

245 EXT. ICE - FROZEN LAKE - DAY 245

The huge iceslab CRASHES down into the water, throwing up a GIANT SPLASH in which Bond disappears and must surely die...

246 SOLARIS (GRAVES') POV: 246

Looking down at the NEW edge of the glacier and the deadly white chaos of hundreds of tons of shattering ice.

It's impossible that anyone could survive that.

247 INT. OFFICE, HOTHOUSE 247

Graves turns to the Generals, removing the visor, shutting down the brassard.

GRAVES
Global warming is a terrible thing.

The skeptical General looks serious. Bows.

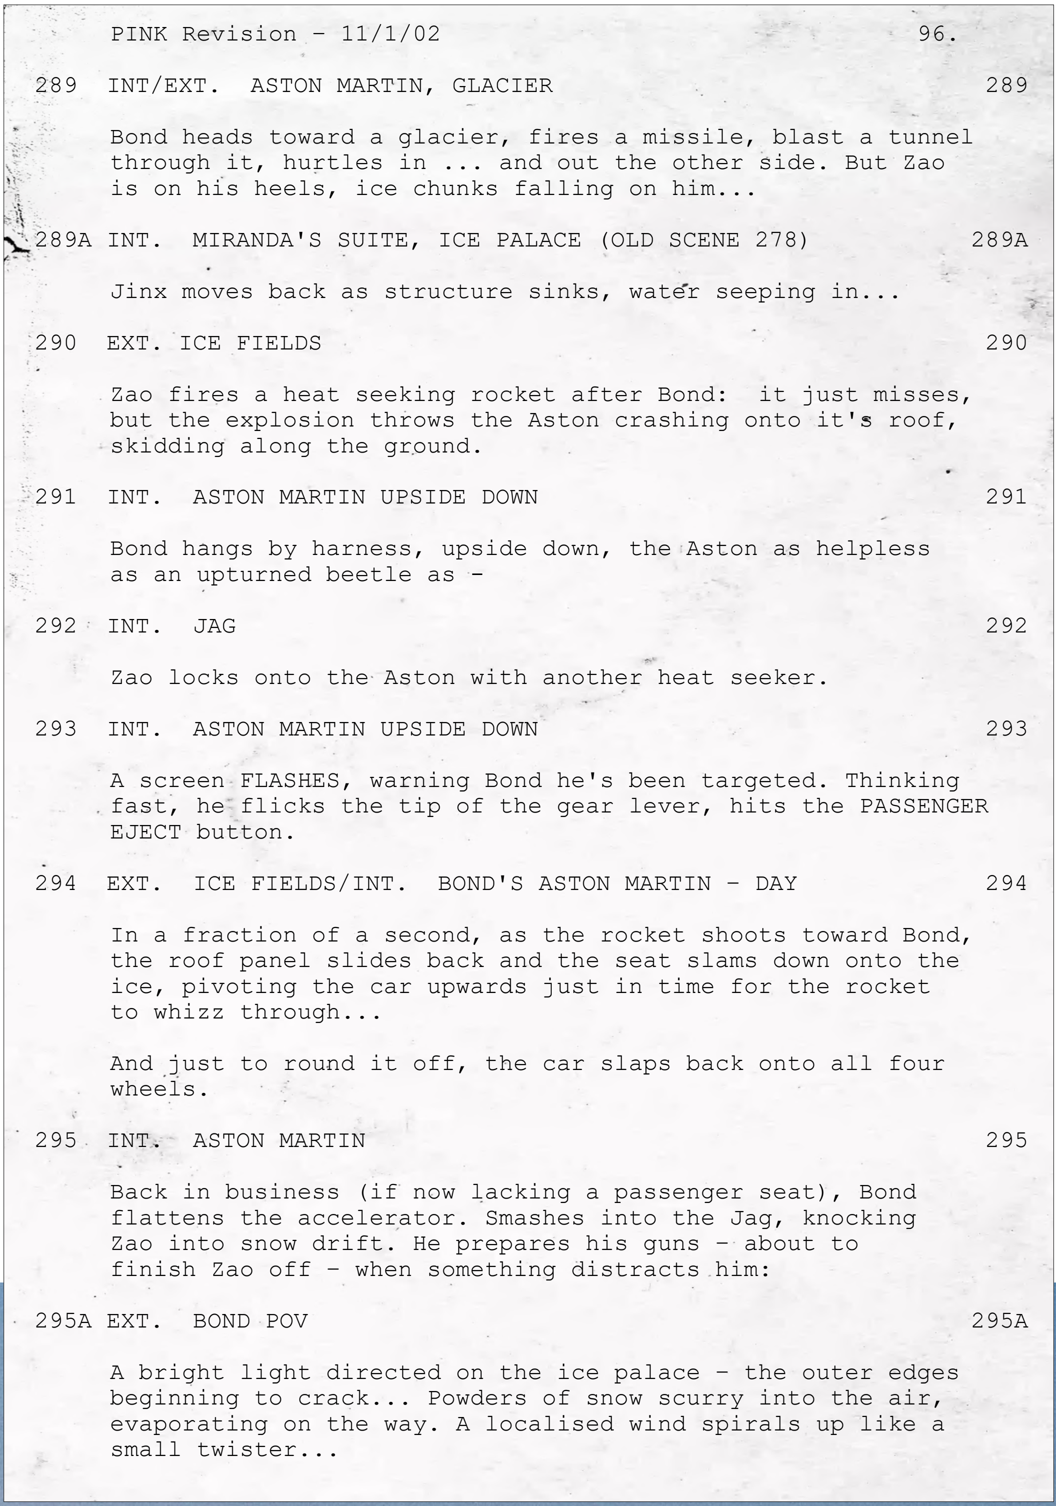
GENERAL LI
(in Korean)
Forgive me. Colonel.

248 EXT. DOWN AT WATER LEVEL, LOOKING TOWARD CLIFF 248

The last of the iceface disappears beneath the waves. A VAST SWELL of water rolls toward us; engulfing the smaller icebergs...

But rising up over the brow of swelling wave, a tiny figure skims over the rushing water, borne aloft by the dragster's brake-parachute remnants: Bond has somehow fashioned a KITEBOARD out of hatch cover of the dragster...

CHAPTER 20



PINK Revision - 11/1/02 96.

289 INT/EXT. ASTON MARTIN, GLACIER 289

Bond heads toward a glacier, fires a missile, blast a tunnel through it, hurtles in ... and out the other side. But Zao is on his heels, ice chunks falling on him...

289A INT. MIRANDA'S SUITE, ICE PALACE (OLD SCENE 278) 289A

Jinx moves back as structure sinks, water seeping in...

290 EXT. ICE FIELDS 290

Zao fires a heat seeking rocket after Bond: it just misses, but the explosion throws the Aston crashing onto it's roof, skidding along the ground.

291 INT. ASTON MARTIN UPSIDE DOWN 291

Bond hangs by harness, upside down, the Aston as helpless as an upturned beetle as -

292 INT. JAG 292

Zao locks onto the Aston with another heat seeker.

293 INT. ASTON MARTIN UPSIDE DOWN 293

A screen FLASHES, warning Bond he's been targeted. Thinking fast, he flicks the tip of the gear lever, hits the PASSENGER EJECT button.

294 EXT. ICE FIELDS/INT. BOND'S ASTON MARTIN - DAY 294

In a fraction of a second, as the rocket shoots toward Bond, the roof panel slides back and the seat slams down onto the ice, pivoting the car upwards just in time for the rocket to whizz through...

And just to round it off, the car slaps back onto all four wheels.

295 INT. ASTON MARTIN 295

Back in business (if now lacking a passenger seat), Bond flattens the accelerator. Smashes into the Jag, knocking Zao into snow drift. He prepares his guns - about to finish Zao off - when something distracts him:

295A EXT. BOND POV 295A

A bright light directed on the ice palace - the outer edges beginning to crack... Powders of snow scurry into the air, evaporating on the way. A localised wind spirals up like a small twister...

Cast:

James Bond :......................Pierce Brosnan
Gustav Graves :..............Toby Stephens and Will Yun Lee
Jinx :.......................................Halle Berry
Miranda Frost :................Rosamund Pike
Zao :..Rick Yune
General Moon :..................Kenneth Tsang
Mr. Kil :.........................Lawrence Makoare
Vlad :...............................Mikhaïl Gorevoy
Damian Falco :................Michael Madsen
M :..Judi Dench
Charles Robinson :...............Colin Salmon
Moneypenny :..................Samantha Bond
Q :...John Cleese

Main filming locations: Spain, Iceland, Norway, Hawaii and UK.

The film had good intentions and is full of good ideas such as North Korea, Bond imprisoned then disavowed by MI6, bringing back Aston Martin and putting it against an enemy gadgetised car. However, the film gets lost in larger than life ideas, some on the edge of the science fiction, when we suddenly find ourselves faced with an invisible car, a death ray, the ice palace, genetic therapy, electrical armor and self-references to previous Bond's films. Even in its execution the film suffers from horrible digital special effects such as in the famous kite-surf on wave sequence, Madonna's song, an overacting Gustav Graves, as well as short hairs for the Bond Girl...

DIE ANOTHER DAY

Table of contents

Die Another Day

Purvis and Wade are back....1424
January 7, 2002' revised script: Sun Yu, steam bath and airborne Falco....1430
Few more revisions: Verity's sexuality and Miranda's last breath....1450
Novelization....1452

Purvis and Wade are back

A little like Live and Let Die had only one writer: Tom Mankiewicz; Die Another Day only had Neal Purvis and Robert Wade. This is the only film in the saga where the duo will not pass before or after anyone else.

According to the book The James Bond Archives, the first treatments of the film are dated August and September 2000.

> - Barbara Broccoli[1] : We always start off with the topical aspect. What is the world worried about now or in the next couple of years? And what is James Bond's position in that arena? With Die Another Day, we talked about the places in the world that still had an aura of mystery and intrigue. And North Korea is one of those places. Then we discussed how a villain could be introduced into this scenario and what journey could we take Bond on that he hasn't been on before. What challenges could we greet him with? It was quite a long process.

The idea is to take Bond prisoner in North Korea: "We saw the 38th Parallel as a fantastic image and the fact that it's full of mines", explains Wade[2], who also wanted to introduce hovercrafts in this film[3]. "Bill Clinton, who was president at the time we started writing, said [in 1993] it was the scariest place on earth, and we did think it was a flashpoint. And we were also trying to think: what's the worst situation that Bond can get into? And it's to be held prisoner in North Korea. You couldn't get much worse than that"[4].

Wade continues: "We didn't encounter any resistance to the idea of his being incarcerated. Getting caught makes him human, not a superhero. The aim is to give him a chance to shine, because we're all here to watch James Bond. So the harder you make it for him, the better the picture, the greater the enjoyment"[5].

July 1993, Bill Clinton visited the demilitarized zone (DMZ) which separates the two Koreas with barbed wire fences, mines and watchtowers. Technically the two Koreas are still at war since 1950, as no formal peace agreement has ever been signed, although fighting stopped in 1953.

> - Michael Wilson[6] : We decided that [...] would be captured and thrown into military prison. Pierce really responded to that. He was always looking for some new aspect of the character to explore.

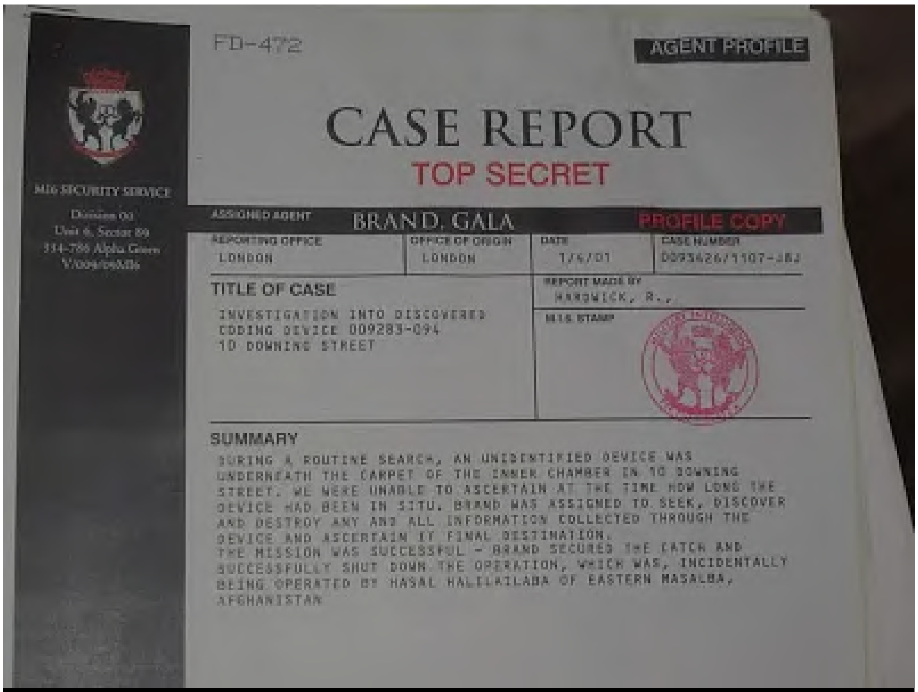
> - Pierce Brosnan[7] : It is a good idea to take the Bond character in a new and fresh direction, and this script certainly gave audiences some unexpected surprises. The idea that Bond falls victim to torture and then, instead of being hailed as a hero, is basically fired from his job, gives him both internal and > external problems to overcome and therefore makes him a much more complex hero than we've ever seen before.

"He is vulnerable without being weak. [...] You want to push him [to his limits], put him through a journey", says Purvis[8]. The director of this opus, Lee Tamahori, adds: "We were pushing Bond into a range he's never been in before. Half the script is Bond outside MI6, operating on his own"[9].

One of the inspirations for screenwriters is the novel Moonraker from Ian Fleming:

Pierce Brosnan with director Lee Tamahori.

> - Purvis and Wade[10] : It's a book that we all love, and wasn't exploited in the film of that name. Just as Drax and Graves are the enemy hiding in plain sight, our story is almost Moonraker hiding in plain sight. It just goes a bit further afield than Kent. It wasn't planned as such, but occasional similarities did emerge: Blades, for example, but with fencing rather than bridge. We originally had Graves cheating, but that was over-egging it. You could also say the Virtual Reality shooting range is a nod to the "cutting edge" shooting test at the start of the novel. Gala [Brand] was a very interesting character [...]. But what defines Gala is that she ultimately rejects Bond [at the end of the novel]. Although we played with this in early drafts, we found the character evolving in a different way, and so decided it was inappropriate to use that name.



FD-472

AGENT PROFILE

MI6 SECURITY SERVICE

CASE REPORT

TOP SECRET

ASSIGNED AGENT BRAND, GALA PROFILE COPY

REPORTING OFFICE	OFFICE OF ORIGIN	DATE	CASE NUMBER
LONDON	LONDON	1/6/01	[illegible]

TITLE OF CASE

INVESTIGATION INTO DISCOVERED
CODING DEVICE 009283-094
10 DOWNING STREET

REPORT MADE BY HARDWICK, R.,

M.I.6 STAMP

SUMMARY

DURING A ROUTINE SEARCH, AN UNIDENTIFIED DEVICE WAS UNDERNEATH THE CARPET OF THE INNER CHAMBER IN 10 DOWNING STREET. WE WERE UNABLE TO ASCERTAIN AT THE TIME HOW LONG THE DEVICE HAD BEEN IN SITU. BRAND WAS ASSIGNED TO SEEK, DISCOVER AND DESTROY ANY AND ALL INFORMATION COLLECTED THROUGH THE DEVICE AND ASCERTAIN IT FINAL DESTINATION.
THE MISSION WAS SUCCESSFUL - BRAND SECURED THE CATCH AND SUCCESSFULLY SHUT DOWN THE OPERATION, WHICH WAS, INCIDENTALLY BEING OPERATED BY HASAL HALILAILABA OF EASTERN MASALBA, AFGHANISTAN

Document that M is holding on screen... Under the name of Gala Brand.

Indeed, actress Rosamund Pike was originally officially announced as Gala Brand[11], before her character was renamed to Miranda Frost.

According to Purvis, another literary inspiration is "at the beginning of The Man With the Golden Gun, the novel, [Bond]'s been brainwashed and comes back and tries to kill M, and a security divider comes down and separates them. So we were referring to that a little bit having the glass separating M and Bond on the ship"[12].

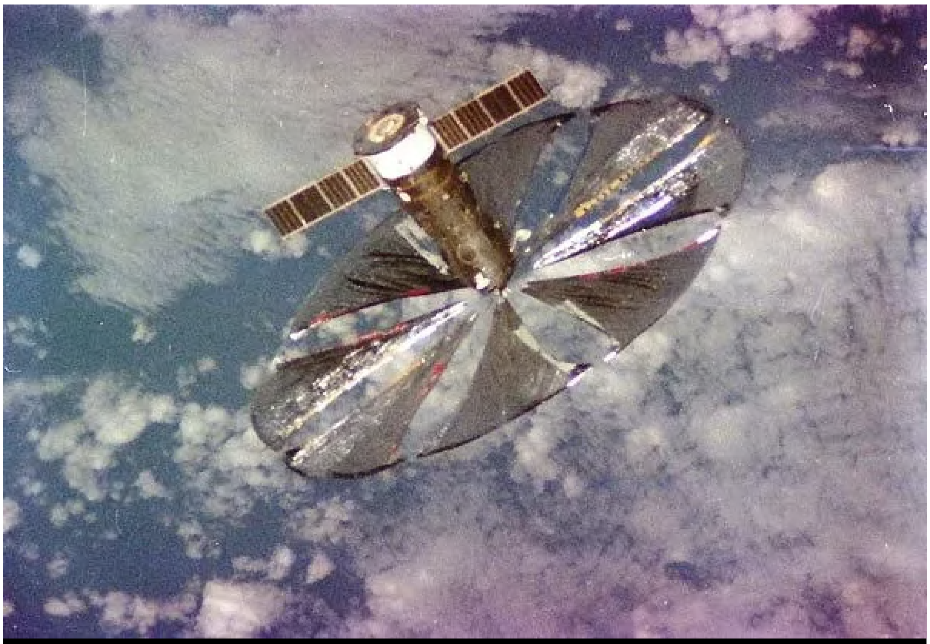
Falco was originally envisioned as a more ambiguous character than in the film, colluding with Graves, at one point believing that the space weapon would be sold by Graves to the Americans[13]. Jinx was apparently sent to the Cuba clinic by Falco to cover Graves' tracks[14]. Likewise at one point Bond was being pursued on an American base in Korea for the murder of Jack Wade (!), apparently carried out by Falco[15].

The name Falco comes from the character Sidney Falco from Sweet Smell of Success (1957), one of Purvis and Wade's favorite films[16].

Die Another Day features technology that made many fans cringe when the film was released but which was basically inspired by real things. For example the case of the villain's satellite, which apart from the fact that it takes up the Blofeld's idea from Diamonds Are Forever, is inspired by Znamia.

Znamia was a series of Russian experiments developed in the 1990s and intended to study the possibility of reflecting the sun's radiation to illuminate cities in the Russian Arctic which are plunged into darkness for a large part of the year[17].

A first reflector of 20 meters's diameter, Znamia-2, was successfully deployed briefly in 1993. The reflector illuminated the ground in a wide radius of 5 kilometers and crossed southern Europe to western Russia at a speed of 8 kilometers per second as the rhythm of the satellite movement. The mirror was de-orbited after several hours and burned up during atmospheric reentry over Canada. A second attempt in 1999, Znamia-2.5, with a 25 meter reflector failed and the project was stopped.



Znamya-2.

> - Robert Wade[18] : We had had this idea of the mirror in space, which the Russians really had and put one in space but it broke. It's natural and harmless in nature. So the sun and the light and the heat [aspects from the film] came from that. And the cold, [...] Barbara Broccoli had suggested using an ice hotel as a setting. So Iceland came out of that. And the idea was using a very cool blonde, the Miranda character in contrast to the hot Jinx.

The film's ice palace was inspired by the real Ice Hotel from Jukkasjärvi, Sweden, a photo of it was seen by Barbara Broccoli in a magazine while she was traveling by plane[19]. Set designer Peter Lamont was sent to the location and returned with plenty of photos and information to develop the idea into the script[20].

Adaptive camouflage technologies for tanks developed by the army also became the invisible car.

Wade admits that the concept of the invisible car was his idea "though it wasn't meant to be invisible. There was a tank that had been developed with screens on its sides which showed the landscape behind it, and it worked as camouflage in the desert and snow. I based it on that"[21]. "The idea is that in Iceland or in the desert when there's not much contrast in the background it's invisible, but in an urban environment you'd be able to see it."[22].

"We were very pleased that the director liked it because we suggested it originally, but we weren't sure anyone would go for it", Wade continues[23]. "But the director turned it up to 11"[24]. Purvis admits that "it [thus] became a full-on science fiction concept"[25] and "a bit of a surprise to us that it had become [really] invisible"[26].

Wade adds humorously: "we actually featured that car in every one of Daniel [Craig]'s Bonds. You just never saw it"[27].

Director Lee Tamahori said for his part: "The invisible car was my idea, so I take full responsibility for it"[28].

> - Lee Tamahori[29] : Michael G Wilson, who is a science buff, will not let an idea get into a James Bond film that does not have a sound scientific basis in fact. He knew about adaptive plate camouflage. They wanted the Aston Martin to return. I agreed to including it and we talked about making it invisible. Audiences said it was ridiculous, but adaptive camouflage was real. Military technology had developed the idea of reflective surfaces, of covering a tank with reflective surfaces, that reflected the trees and the surroundings, buildings. [...] And so we just took that, and developed it to its ultimate conclusion: this so-called invisible car. Of course I'm aware of all the controversy that came out afterwards, people saying it was a ridiculous idea that made a mockery of this and that.

"We have had more time to write this one", says Robert Wade, "the script didn't change[d] that much [when Michael Aped arrived on The World Is Not Enough], but Lee Tamahori came on board [of] this one with lots of ideas about increasing the level of action, and it was a challenge to contain them within the structure. The more ambitious the action, the less room there is for the characters"[30].

> - Lee Tamahori[31] : Every time you take on a project, you need to adapt the screenplay to the film you want to make. It's rare to find a script that is just shootable. I've only done that once without doing any work on the script, that was The Edge [...]. So I changed the screenplay quite a bit. The original story had the villain, Gustav Graves, who changed his face from Korean to British, but what I saw in there was the opportunity to do some vast and different things with it.

"Lee wanted to do a more comic book type movie", Purvis says[32]. MGM also, as one of its executives, Chris McGurk, explains: "collectively, we thought [The World Is Not Enough] was a little more plot driven and a little darker than some of the other Bond movies. We wanted to open it up a little bigger on spectacle and action sequences. We were trying to position the Bond movies in the new age of Hollywood"[33].

One of the things the director brings is having the cars inside the ice palace during the planned chase between Bond and Zao:

> - Lee Tamahori[34] : I suddenly had this thought: what if we finished the car chase inside the ice palace? I didn't go to the producers. It had already been budgeted and everything. The budget was approved for the movie at a certain > level, it was in excess of $100 million. I went to the production designer [Peter Lamont]. [...] I asked: "what would it take to make this structure be able to race cars in, inside the 007 Stage?". He just looked at me and said, "Well...". I said "Can you get me some figures by tomorrow morning, we'll take it to Michael and Barbara and see what they say?". Lamont calculated it would cost in excess of £1 million to make the structure strong enough to drive the cars in, and the producers signed it off there [...]. That's the great thing about working on something like a James Bond film. The franchise is so popular, it's never lost money on any of the films they've made. MGM saw no problem in just changing the budget and fronting up an extra million pounds because it was a good idea. They could see it was going to be a good idea.

One of the other changes made by Tamahori is the fact that Graves' HQ at the end of the film is in a huge plane[35]:

> - Lee Tamahori[36] : We still hadn't figured out the end of the movie, where the final confrontation would take place. We had a boilerplate underground bunker villain's lair, that I felt that we had seen this too many times in James Bond movies.

Before make it fly, Purvis and Wade originally envisioned the Seagaia Ocean Dome in Miyazaki, Japan, for Graves' HQ[37].

Gregg Wilson, Michael Wilson's son, was also present during the film's development: "At that stage I was just taking notes at the story meetings between [Purvis and Wade], Dad and Barbara. Eventually I built a bit of confidence to interject an idea here and there"[38].

Following the attacks of September 11, 2001, it was also decided to change the target of Graves' solar weapon, which was originally a city in South Korea[39] or Manhattan[40] (instead of the much less populated DMZ). The weapon also changed its name: from Solaris to Icarus, because of the eponymous film Solaris which would be released in 2002[41].

The screenwriting duo declared: "Die Another Day was the only Bond we were involved in during filming, mainly because there was a major change in the third act very late, which led to huge rewrites as we went into production"[42].

During filming they will go with the production to Cádiz in Spain (which doubles Cuba in the film)[43].

Being there during production allows for some adjustments as Purvis says: "There was a scene when Michael Madsen was addressing the camera, talking to M, but we wrote it before he was cast. Having seen him do his thing over the previous couple of days, the scene suddenly seemed very un-Michael Madsen, so we quickly ran up a few line changes and took them over there"[44].

"Pierce Brosnan was concerned about carrying the expository dialogue in a couple of places, and he let us know that and we took that on and tried to address it. Now some directors would have a problem with the actor talking to the writer, but Lee saw it as one less worry for him to deal with", says Wade[45].

With the death of Desmond Llewelyn, John Cleese became the new Q. Purvis said "we were quite conscious about trying to take it back to the former Q. Even Desmond Llewelyn [Q's] changed over the years. We tried to get it back to the original bad relationship they had in the early sixties movies"[46].

The writers having heard of an old London underground station where Churchill had secret meetings, they decided to locate Q's laboratory there[47].

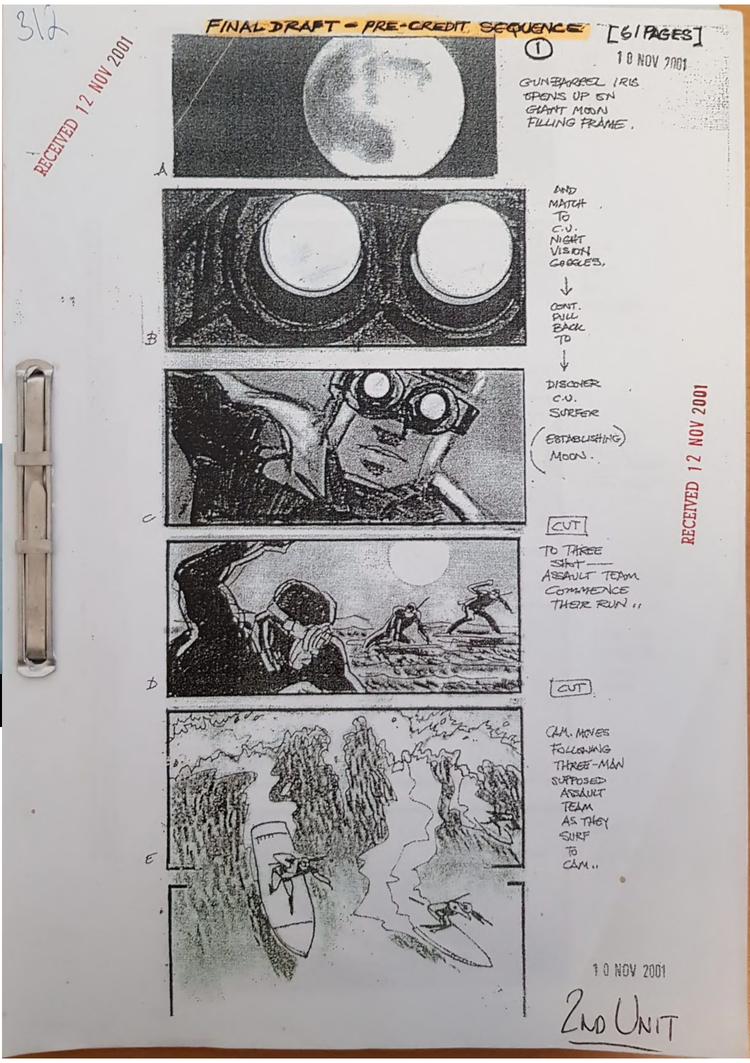
And of course we are in a film which also aims to celebrate the 40th anniversary of the cinematographic saga and its 20th opus; the director and the screenwriters then placed in Die Another Day a bunch of references to previous 007 films that are more or less subtle/ appreciable.

WAY OUT
KE02 EWW

January 7, 2002' revised script: Sun Yu, steam bath and airborne Falco

The earlier script I have of this film is titled "Bond XX", 119 pages long and was written by Neal Purvis & Robert Wade. The cover page indicates that it is a "Final draft" dated January 7, 2002 (however it contains revisions dated throughout January: 11, 15, 16, 18, 21, 23, 25, 28, 29 and 30 January).

The whole thing starts with a gunbarrel (no indication that a CGI bullet will be there though) and it was intended that this gunbarrel would fade on a shoot showing what seems to be the moon. Suddenly we see a second moon, then discover that we actually see a surfer's night vision goggles. A large wave carries away two of the three surfers but the last one "who keeps keeps his balance has the ride of a lifetime" before reaching the beach.



312
FINAL DRAFT - PRE-CREDIT SEQUENCE
[6/PAGES]
①
10 NOV 2001
RECEIVED 12 NOV 2001
GUNBARREL IRIS OPENS UP ON GIANT MOON FILLING FRAME.
A AND MATCH TO C.U. NIGHT VISION GOGGLES.
B
CONT. PULL BACK TO DISCOVER C.U. SURFER (ESTABLISHING MOON.
C
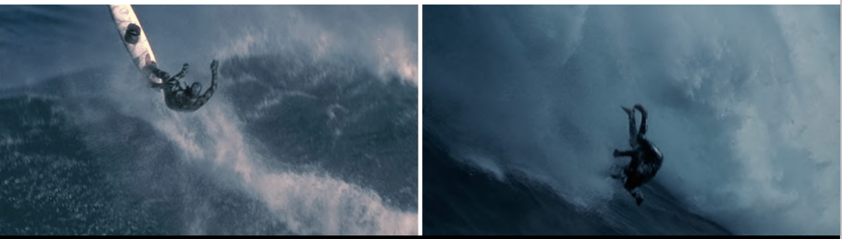
CUT TO THREE SHOT — ASSAULT TEAM COMMENCE THEIR RUN ..
D
CUT
CAM. MOVES FOLLOWING THREE-MAN SUPPOSED ASSAULT TEAM AS THEY SURF TO CAM..
E
RECEIVED 12 NOV 2001
10 NOV 2001
2ND UNIT



The falls of the other surfers were cut during editing.

A North Korean sentry is surprised to see a surfboard washed up by the sea arriving on the sand, but has time to do nothing: someone hits him from behind. This person removes his night vision goggles and we discover that it is Bond. His two (South Korean) partners join him. Things then happen as in the film (however, it is one of the Koreans who plants Bond's parable knife in the sand).

Further is requested a shot of the helicopter taking off, with the original pilot and Mr. Van Bierk tied up in the forest in the background. A little later, Bond meets Zao (he replies that he is late because he "had to tie up a few loose ends").

007 meets Colonel "Tan-Gun Moon" and there are some interesting details like the fact that Bond seemed unaware that the weapons were hovercrafts or that he was hoping Moon would take the suitcase of diamonds/explosives with him. Also when Moon explodes the helicopter, one of the South Koreans survive the explosion and Moon kills him with the machine gun function of the anti-tank weapon.

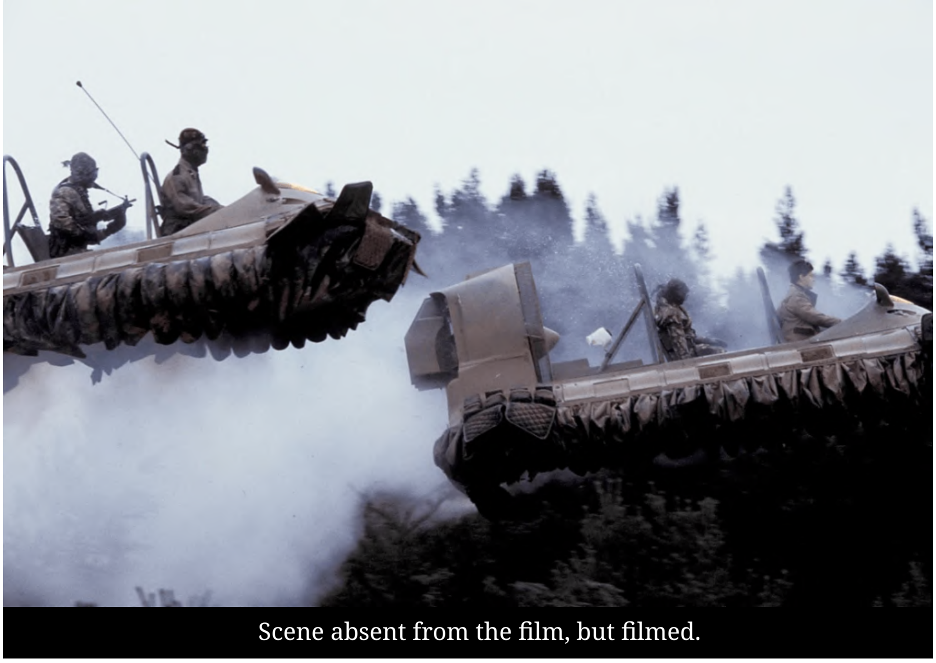
> - Moon (to Bond): You're as redundant as those mines out there will soon become.

Rather than a firing squad, it is Zao himself who is about to shoot Bond when he explodes the C-4. But Zao, injured and encrusted with diamonds, gets up and runs towards a Jaguar, presses a button and a machine gun comes out of the back. Zao retrieve the gun, shoot towards Bond but only manages to hit Moon's luxury cars which then explode in chain as Zao hits their tanks.

007 manages to escape in a hovercraft from Moon's base in the same way as in the film and throws away the driver's body (which lands on a mine!). In the action scene that follows, the escort hovercrafts have rear-mounted machine guns and Bond does a bit of a "bumper cars" with them (the comparison comes from the script) and ejects one like in the movie. Also at one point the other escorter attempts a face to face with Bond (but deviates from its trajectory at the last moment).

After the flamethrower scene, Moon tells his driver to speed up. The man is a little slow to react so Moon does a karate chop on him, takes him out of the cabin, and takes control of the "mothership" (as it is called) hovercraft himself. He presses a button which releases a smoke screen which Bond and the other escorter behind enter; the smoke prevents them from seeing a small 4.5 meter precipice towards which they are heading and from which they jump.



Scene absent from the film, but filmed.

By shooting at jumping mines, 007 manages to get rid of the shooter of the escorter who is chasing him but unlike in the film, the driver of this one doesn't crash in a tree: he is still chasing Bond. Suddenly the mothership piloted by Moon appears behind them both and directs/pushes them towards a massive pair of doors further ahead. Bond decides to leave his vehicle: he jumps on the escorter hovercraft which is behind him then on the mothership.

The two small hovercrafts are propelled/disintegrated into the doors by the big one. On the other side of the gates is an ancient temple that the mothership passes through before coming to a stop, swinging half in the air over a large precipice. There is a hand-to-hand fight in this precarious situation with the bulletproof vest scene and Moon pinned to the ventilator when 007 pushes the throttle:

> - Bond: You've met your biggest fan, Colonel.

007 jumps off the hovercraft before it falls into the void with Moon. After the arrival of his enemy's father, there is the credits sequence described as a "weird delirium". The sequence is detailed with what we will find in the film (icy water, naked girls, scorpions, fire), we will note one sentence however: "we go inside Bond. Heart thumping as his body suffers".

After the credits we are not told how many time Bond spent in prison and we can hear his heart beating slower (as he seems to controlling it). "It's not exactly five star", Bond says to General Moon (the phrase will be replaced by "Tell it to the concierge" in the film). During the prisoner exchange with Zao we notice other differences in the dialogues such as:

> - General Moon: We reach the end, Mr. Bond. Of my patience... And of your life.
> [...]
> - General Moon: You choose the hard way.
> - Bond: What's hard about dying, general?

The script also note that the North Korean flagpole here is "the largest in the world" (indeed, the flagpole obtained the Guinness World Records in January 2001, with its 160 meters height[48]. In the end, the flag in the movie doesn't look like the real one).

At the end of the bridge there are Robinson and "Steeve Falco". During the scene where the doctors examine Bond with a robot, the voice of one of them:

> - Doctor: My God. If it wasn't Bond, this would be an autopsy.

The dialogues between Bond and M are also a little longer (she calls him "James" at one point and Bond tells her "Watching for biological agents or double-agents?" about his detention condition). Further on at the "Peninsula" hotel (will be the fictional "Rubyeon Royale" in the movie, in reference to the Ruby anniversary of EON?), the masseuse here is named Sun Yu and her role is extended. In fact, 007 doesn't break a mirror behind which Mr. Chang (who, in this script, is just a member of the hotel staff and not a Chinese agent) would be found. Instead he takes Sun Yu's gun and points it at her, telling her that it is the standard weapon of Chinese spies.

She then have with him the dialogues which will be in the film spoken with/by Chang:

> - Sun Yu: Hong Kong is our turf now, Bond.

In the film the masseuse has the pseudonym of "Peaceful Fountains of Desire", this is not the case in this script.

- Bond: Don't worry, I haven't come to take it back.

She tells him that it doesn't look like he just came out of North Korea's jails and via an earpiece orders two Chinese agents to enter the room. 007 says he have a proposition: if they get him into North Korea, he'll take care of Zao. She points out that Zao is not the only person wanted: Bond is wanted too, by the British.

While waiting to have the approval of her superiors regarding Bond's proposal, Sun Yu suggests to go to her HQ, it will be safer: after all if the Chinese found Bond, his enemies could too.

While Sun Yu's men pack up Bond's stuff, Bond and Sun Yu head towards an elevator (made of glass, and which is on the side of the building). They both get in. At a first stop a man gets on, and at a second stop four other men join them in the elevator. We're starting to feel cramped. Bond tries to extend his hand towards the doors so they don't close and get out, but one of the men grabs his hand while another draws a gun.

There is then a hand-to-hand fight where Bond and Sun Yu team up against the other men (except the one who entered first: he is a simple passerby) in the cramped space of the elevator going down. All with of course an imperturbable elevator music in the background.

In the chaos, 007 presses the stop button on the elevator and deflects the weapon of an attacker who was aiming at Sun Yu. The latter then shoots into the glass surrounding them. Buttons are pressed at regular intervals that move the elevator up or down until our duo manages to eject three of the villains from the elevator and team up to lift the last one into the ceiling of the elevator.

Arriving at the bottom, the doors open and Bond and Sun Yu leave the elevator as if nothing had happened. Up ahead a couple watches the carnage inside the elevator they were waiting for.

- Sun Yu: We work well together.
- Bond: I'm sure we're compatible in lots of ways. Punch any familiar faces?
- Sun Yu: North Korean freelancers.

In her headset Sun Yu receives news from her superiors. She tells Bond that it's okay, his proposition was accepted by her superiors, and a Chinese agent comes to meet them with an envelope. She explains to Bond that this person will take him to the airport: Zao is in Los Organos, Cuba.

- Sun Yu: When you see him, say "hi" from us.

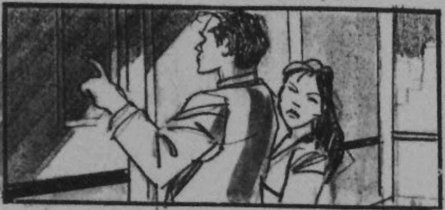
It should be noted that during the writing of the film, Sun Yu part was at one point considered as a cameo for a Bond Girl who appeared in a previous Bond film.

In this version, after escaping from the frigate, Bond finds himself at the Hong Kong hotel in the company of Wai Lin from Tomorrow Never Dies[49]!

They leave the room and there is the fight in the elevator which was the subject of a whole sequence in storyboards as you will see below.

ELEVATOR SEQUENCE

① [18 PAGES]



A

TWO-SHOT
EXT.
ELEVATOR –

BOND &
WAI-LIN.

THEIR POV.
DOORS
OPEN REVEAL
TWO HEAVIES WITHIN ELEVATOR.

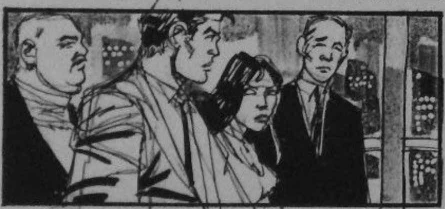
THRU'
F.G.
HEAVIES
BOND &
WAI-LIN
ENTER.



INT.
ELEVATOR STARTS DESCENT —

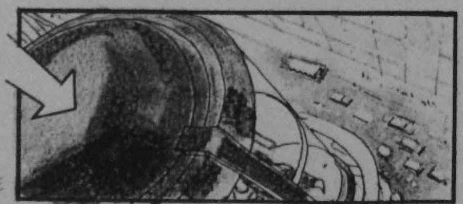
BOND &
WAI-LIN
UNEASY..



EXT
HOTEL &
ELEVATOR STRUCTURE —

ELEVATOR ENTERS
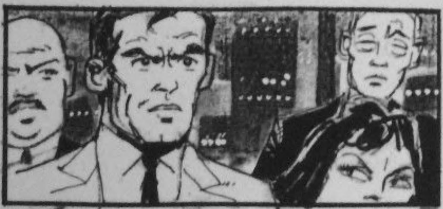
SHOT
DESCENDING.

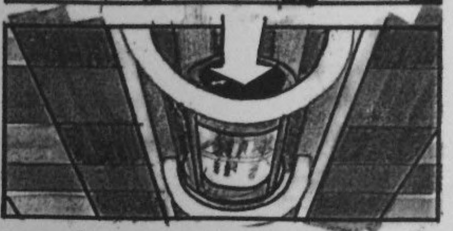
---

②



ANGLE –
ON BOND
& WAI-LIN

HEAVIES
IN B.G.



EXT.
LIFT STOPS

INT.
ELEVATOR DOORS OPEN –

TWO MORE
HEAVIES GET IN..

TOP SHOT

INT.
ELEVATOR

BOND &
WAI-LIN NEARLY SURROUNDED

EXT,
ELEVATOR
TOP SHOT —

DESCENDS
INTO FRAME –

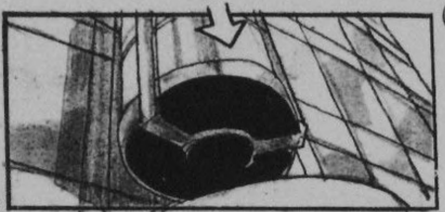
---

③



EXT.
ELEVATOR STOPS

INT.
FROM
WAI-LIN
& BOND
THE DOORS
START TO OPEN..

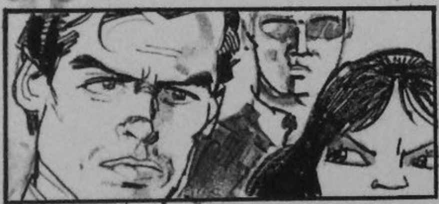
..REVEALING
A FURTHER
TWO HEAVIES!



C.U.
BOND &
WAI-LIN
UNSPOKEN REACTION

THEY EXPLODE TO CAM.

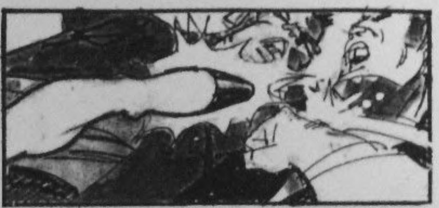
---

④



INSERT
HER FOOT
HIS FIST CONNECT!

INT. HOTEL
EXT.
ELEVATOR
THE LATEST
HEAVIES
CRASH
TO THE FLOOR
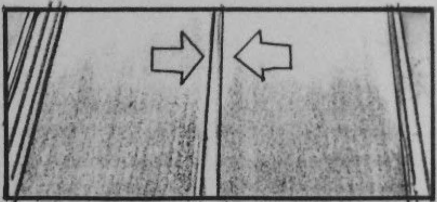
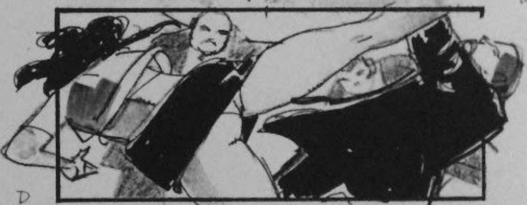
AND..



..INSERT
THE DOORS
CLOSE.

INT. ELEVATOR



IMMEDIATELY
ALL HELL BREAKS LOOSE

FIGHT FIGHT.

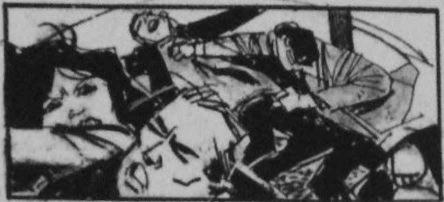
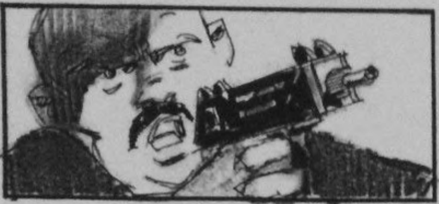
(5)



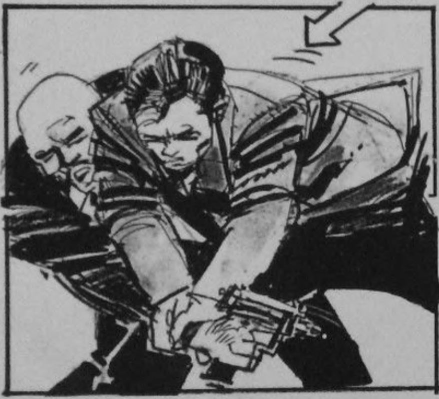
A

FIGHT IN THE CONFINED SPACE OF THE ELEVATOR



B

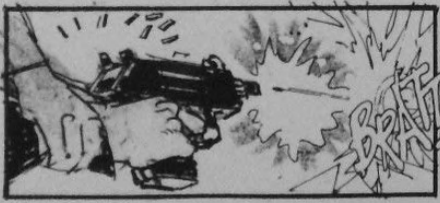
C.U. HEAVY PRODUCING MACHINE PISTOL.



C

D

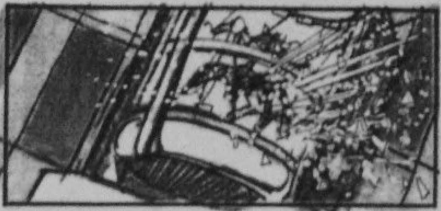
TILT DOWN AS BOND LEAPS UPON HEAVY GRABBING THE WEAPON..



E

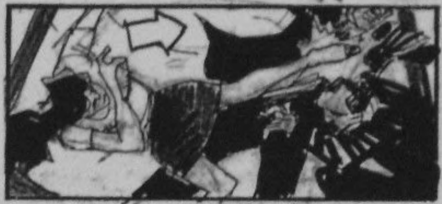
INSERT THE GUN FIRING – GLASS SHATTERING.

(6)



A

EXT. ELEVATOR – ALL THE GLASS BLOWING OUT

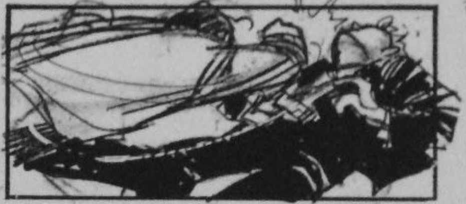


B

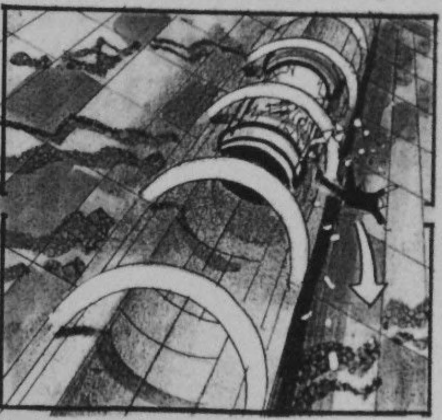
INSIDE THE FIGHT CONTINUES –

WAI-LIN KARATE STYLE

BOND TRADITIONAL PUNCHING.



C



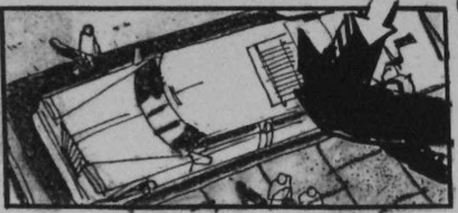
D

E

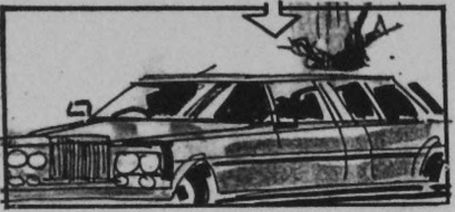
EXT. BUILDING – LOW ANGLE ELEVATOR SHAFT.

HEAVY FALLS FROM THE LIFT PLATFORM.

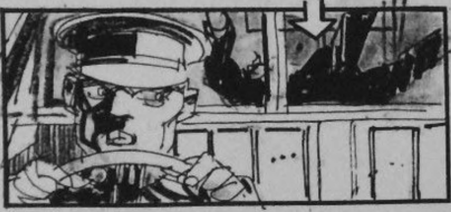
(7)



TOP SHOT STRETCH-LIMO — HEAVY FALLS INTO SHOT IN F.G.

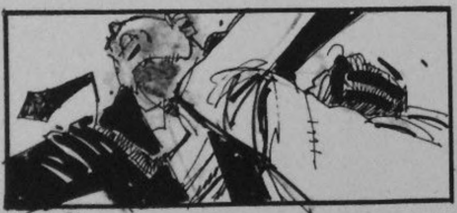


ANGLE STRETCH LIMO – HEAVY FALLS THRU' SUN-ROOF..



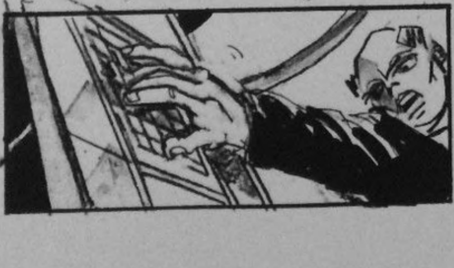
.. AND LANDS IN THE REAR SEAT.

CUT



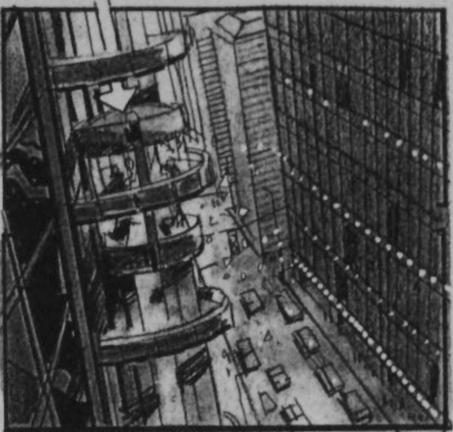
BACK TO THE FIGHT IN THE ELEVATOR..

CUTAWAY



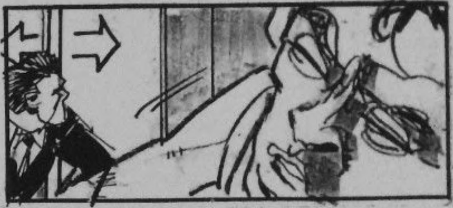
TO BAD GU HITTING THE CONT BUTTONS

(8)



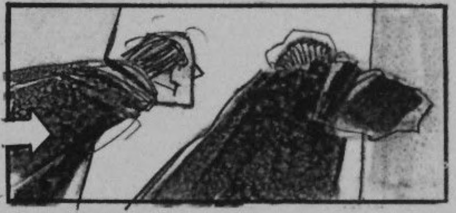
A

EXT. BUILDING TILT AS ELEVATOR JERKS TO A HALT.



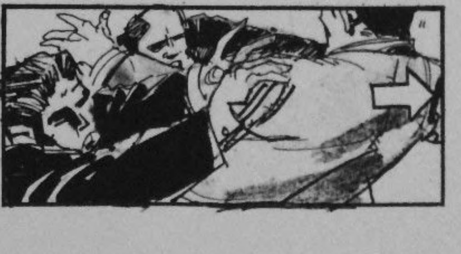
B

EX C.U. BOND DOORS OPEN IN B.G.



C

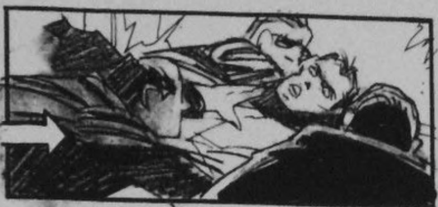
THE HEAVIES #5 + #6 SWARM IN...



D

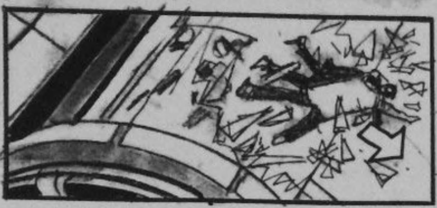
THEY LEAP ONTO BOND..

⑨



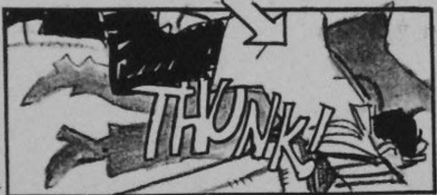
A

INT. ELEVATOR THREE HEAVIES GRAB BOND — PROPEL HIM OUT OF THE ELEVATOR



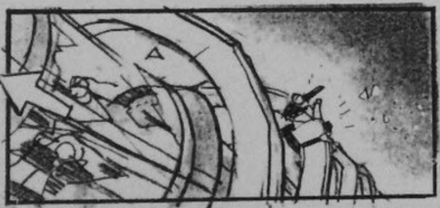
B

EXT. BUILDING BOND HOLDING ONTO ONE OF THEM FALLS FROM THE PLATFORM..



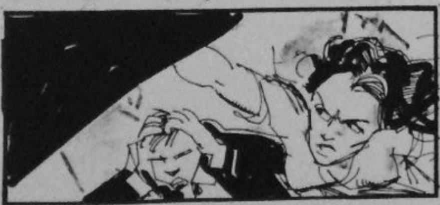
C

EXT. BUILDING INSERT THEY HIT ONE OF THE ILLUMINATED HOOPS OF OF THE ELEVATOR SUPERSTRUCTURE,



D

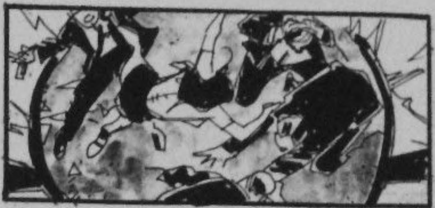
EXT. BUILDING ANGLE — NOW THE ELEVATOR MOVES UPWARD OUT OF FRAME LEAVING BOND STRANDED ON LIGHT BAND.



E

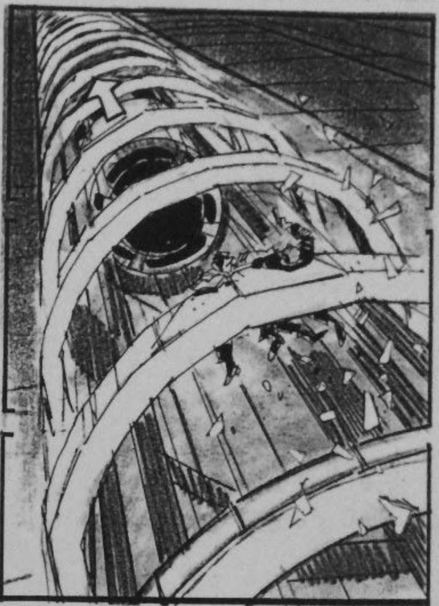
BACK TO INT. ELEVATOR WAI-LIN FIGHTING LIKE A MAD THING.

⑩



A

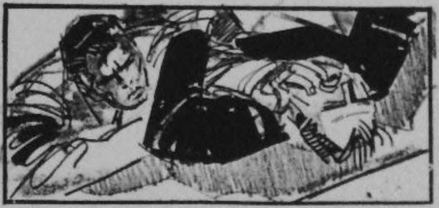
TOP SHOT INT ELEVATOR THE FIGHT CONTINUES..



B

C

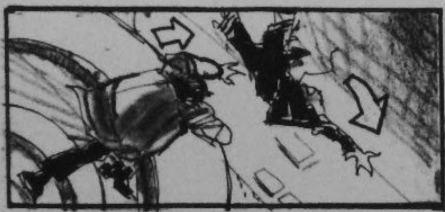
TILT UP FROM BOND FIGHTING HEAVY STUCK ON THE ILLUMINATED BAND
↓
TO THE ELEVATOR RIDING UP AND AWAY..



D

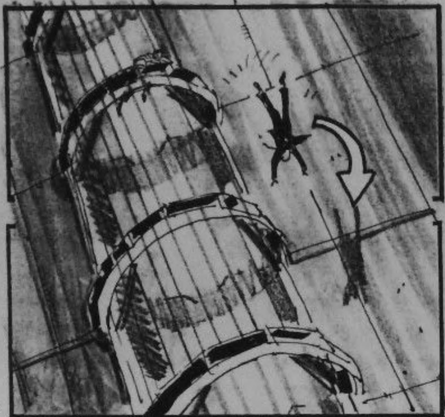
CLOSE ON BOND + HEAVY..

⑪



A

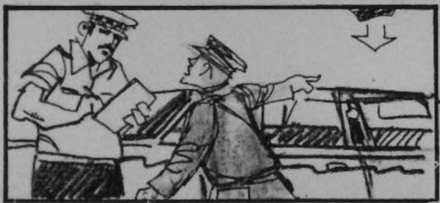
ANGLE — BAD GUY LOSES GRIP AND FALLS



B

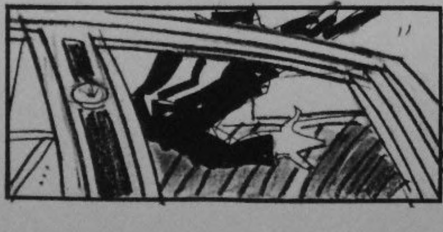
C

TILT DOWN FOLLOWING THE FALLING BODY..



D

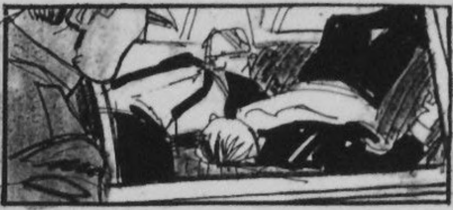
BACK TO STRETCH LIMO — DRIVER TELLING POLICEMAN OF THE BODY IN THE BACK, WHEN...



E

.. BODY #2 FALLS THRU THE SUN-ROOF

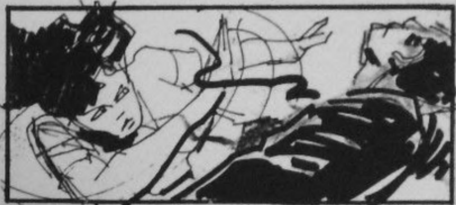
⑫



A

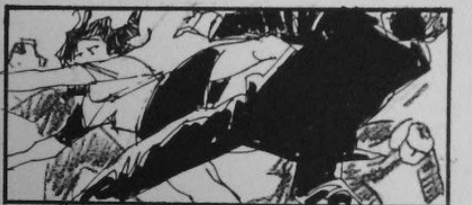
OPTIONAL — DRIVER LOOKING THRU' WINDOW AT TWO BODIES IN THE BACK.

CUT



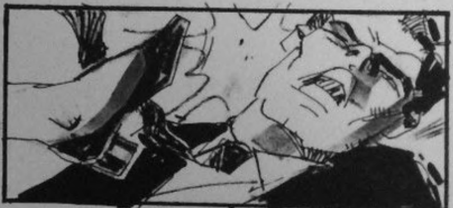
B

.. BACK TO WAI-LIN FIGHTING THE GANG IN THE ELEVATOR..



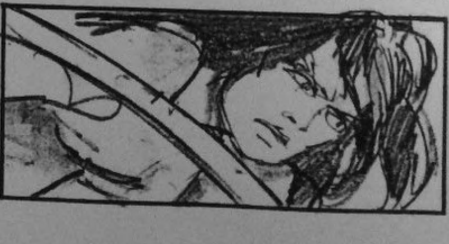
C

FIGHT FIGHT..



D

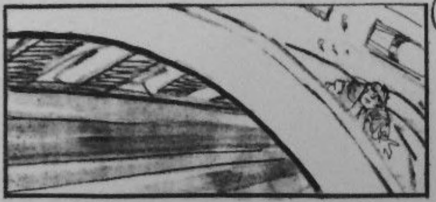
INSERT HER FOOT INTO BAD GUY'S FACE



E

C.U. WAI-LIN QUICK GLANCE DOWN.

13



A

WAI-LIN
POV

BOND TRAPPED BELOW

B

QUICK
INSERT HER HAND ON CONTROL BUTTON

C

WIDER FIGHT CONTINUES.

D

M.C.U.
SHE IS GRABBED FROM BEHIND –

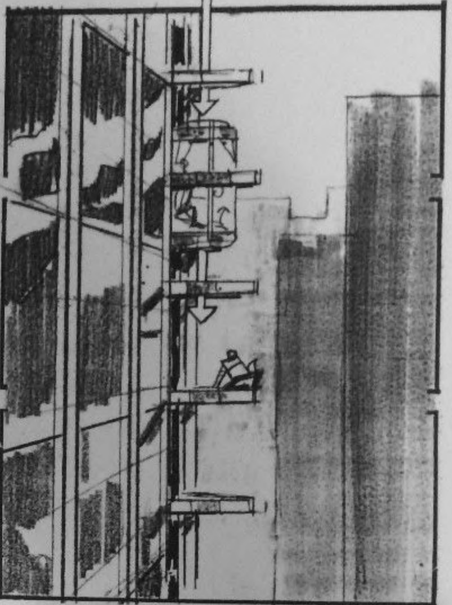
14



A

EXT BUILDING

CAM TILTS DOWN WITH ELEVATOR
AS IT
DESCENDS TOWARD
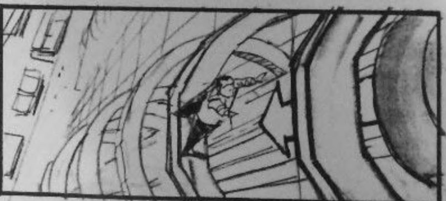
BOND.



B

TOP SHOT –
ANGLE
ON BOND
STANDING PRECARIOUSLY ON THE ILLUMINATED BAND..

C

CLOSER —
ELEVATOR LOOMS
INTO FRAME LARGE
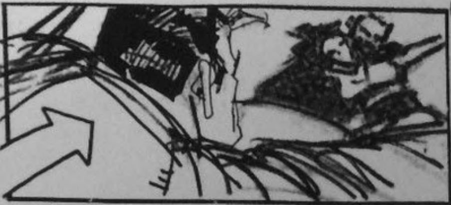
INTO F.G

15



A

MOVING BEHIND
BOND
IN C.U.
UP TO
ELEVATOR PLATFORM.

B

C

POSSIBLE – WIDE
SEEING
BOND LEAPING BACK ONTO ELEVATOR – AND TILTING TO FIND
THE STRUGGLING
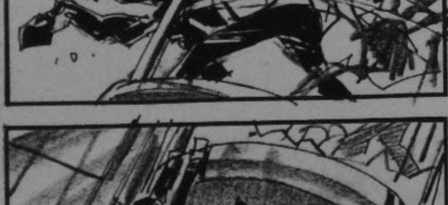
WAI-LIN.



D

ANGLE
BOND THROWS, WAI-LIN'S ASSAILANT OFF
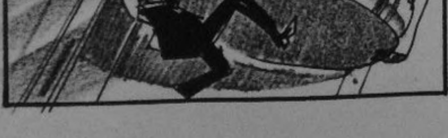
PLATFORM.



E

THE GUY
JUST MANAGES TO HANG ONTO LIP OF ELEVATOR BASE.

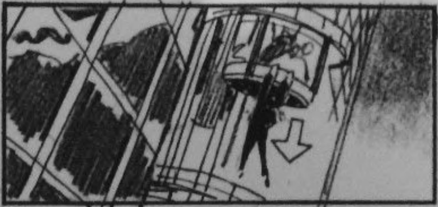
16



A

EXT
BUILDING
ELEVATOR DROPS INTO SHOT –
HEAVY
STILL HANGING TO THE UNDERSIDE.

B

INT
THE FIGHT STILL CONTINUES

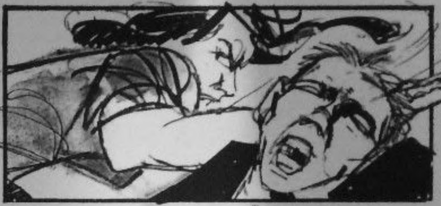
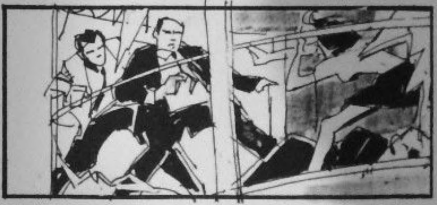
BIFF!



C

BAFF!



D

WIDER ONLY ONE LEFT STANDING — BOND AND
WAI-LIN CLOSE IN..

17
CLOSE BOND - BADDIE - WAI-LIN IN HARD FG
A THUD!
THEY BOTH TAKE HIM OUT
B
SHOT CONTINUES BOND STRAIGHTENS HIS TIE etc
C
HOTEL LOBBY — ANGLE ON PEOPLE WAITING FOR LIFT.
DOORS OPEN REVEALING BOND AND WAI-LIN..
D

They walk out like a normal couple and Bond straightens his tie as they pass a couple looking inside the elevator. Wai Lin and 007 leave the hotel and head into the street[50].

She invites Bond into a car and passes through a car wash. However, it is a secret entrance to a Chinese secret service building. An identical car exits the car wash while Bond and Wai Lin's car descends underground via an elevator[51].

They go to an operations room where all the analysts look up at Bond: they recognize the man who was exchanged for Zao in North Korea[52].

- Wai Lin: As far as they're [analysts] are concerned, our secret services are in conflict.
- Bond: And I thought you and I had done so much to improve relations.

Tensions rise when one of the analysts gives a report to Wai Lin which indicates that 007 is on the loose and that orders are to send him back to MI6 if he is found. Guards station themselves at the exits and Bond searches for an escape after suggesting to Lin that she might get into trouble if she came to his aid. She has been promoted to station chief since their last adventure and then offers to "lose" the order for a dozen hours in order to give Bond a chance to leave Hong Kong before the security forces capture him and deliver him to MI6[53].

- Wai Lin: You know... You have nothing to prove, James?

With Chinese intelligence unable to mount an operation in Cuba for political reasons, Wai Lin gives Bond Zao's location, a fake British passport and a Beretta pistol[54].

- Wai Lin: If you see him, say "hi" from us

- Lee Tamahori[55] : Michelle Yeoh was supposed to come back into the picture, and in a not substantial part, but for the Hong Kong sequence. And we went out to see her, we went out to have a meeting with her in Hong Kong, and she turned it down. She didn't wanna play a small part… After Crouching Tiger [, Hidden Dragon] and all that, she had moved on in stature.

"I was asked, one time, to come back to do a cameo. Unfortunately, I was producing my own movie. Sometimes life throws tough choices at you", adds Yeoh[56].

Ultimately it was decided to remove these fight scenes in the elevator as they didn't move forward the story[57].

Back to this script: after the Hong Kong scenes with Sun Yu, we then find Bond (alone) in Havana asking for "Delectados", while in the cigar factory workers are doing karaoke to "(Three Blind Mice [from Dr. No]?)", specifies a note!

007 meets Raoul. In the script, the dialogue is shorter than in the film (there is no discussion on the "Delectados", the screenwriters also specify that the writing of this scene is not finished). However, there are some passages missing from the film such as this reply from Bond:

- Raoul: You'd be surprised how many government officials come to me for little reminders of the decadent times.
- Bond: Nothing wrong with a little decadence.

(There is the reference to the book Field Guide to the Birds of the West Indies). Raoul's "fast car" here is an old Buick from the '50s (this will be replaced by a Ford in the film). Likewise, Bond's hotel is the "Sierra de Los Organos" (which became "El Gran Palacio" in the film).

While going to collect his room keys from reception, Bond sees a man named Mr. Krug (also often refered as "the creep") expressing his displeasure to the receptionist by grabbing him by the tie when he is told that his room is not ready yet (a slightly different scene but of the same type will be in the film). Also a little further on Krug, who pushes/bump Bond when he walks, leaves his cigar in an ashtray; Bond retrieves it and discreetly places the still lit cigar in Krug's pocket.

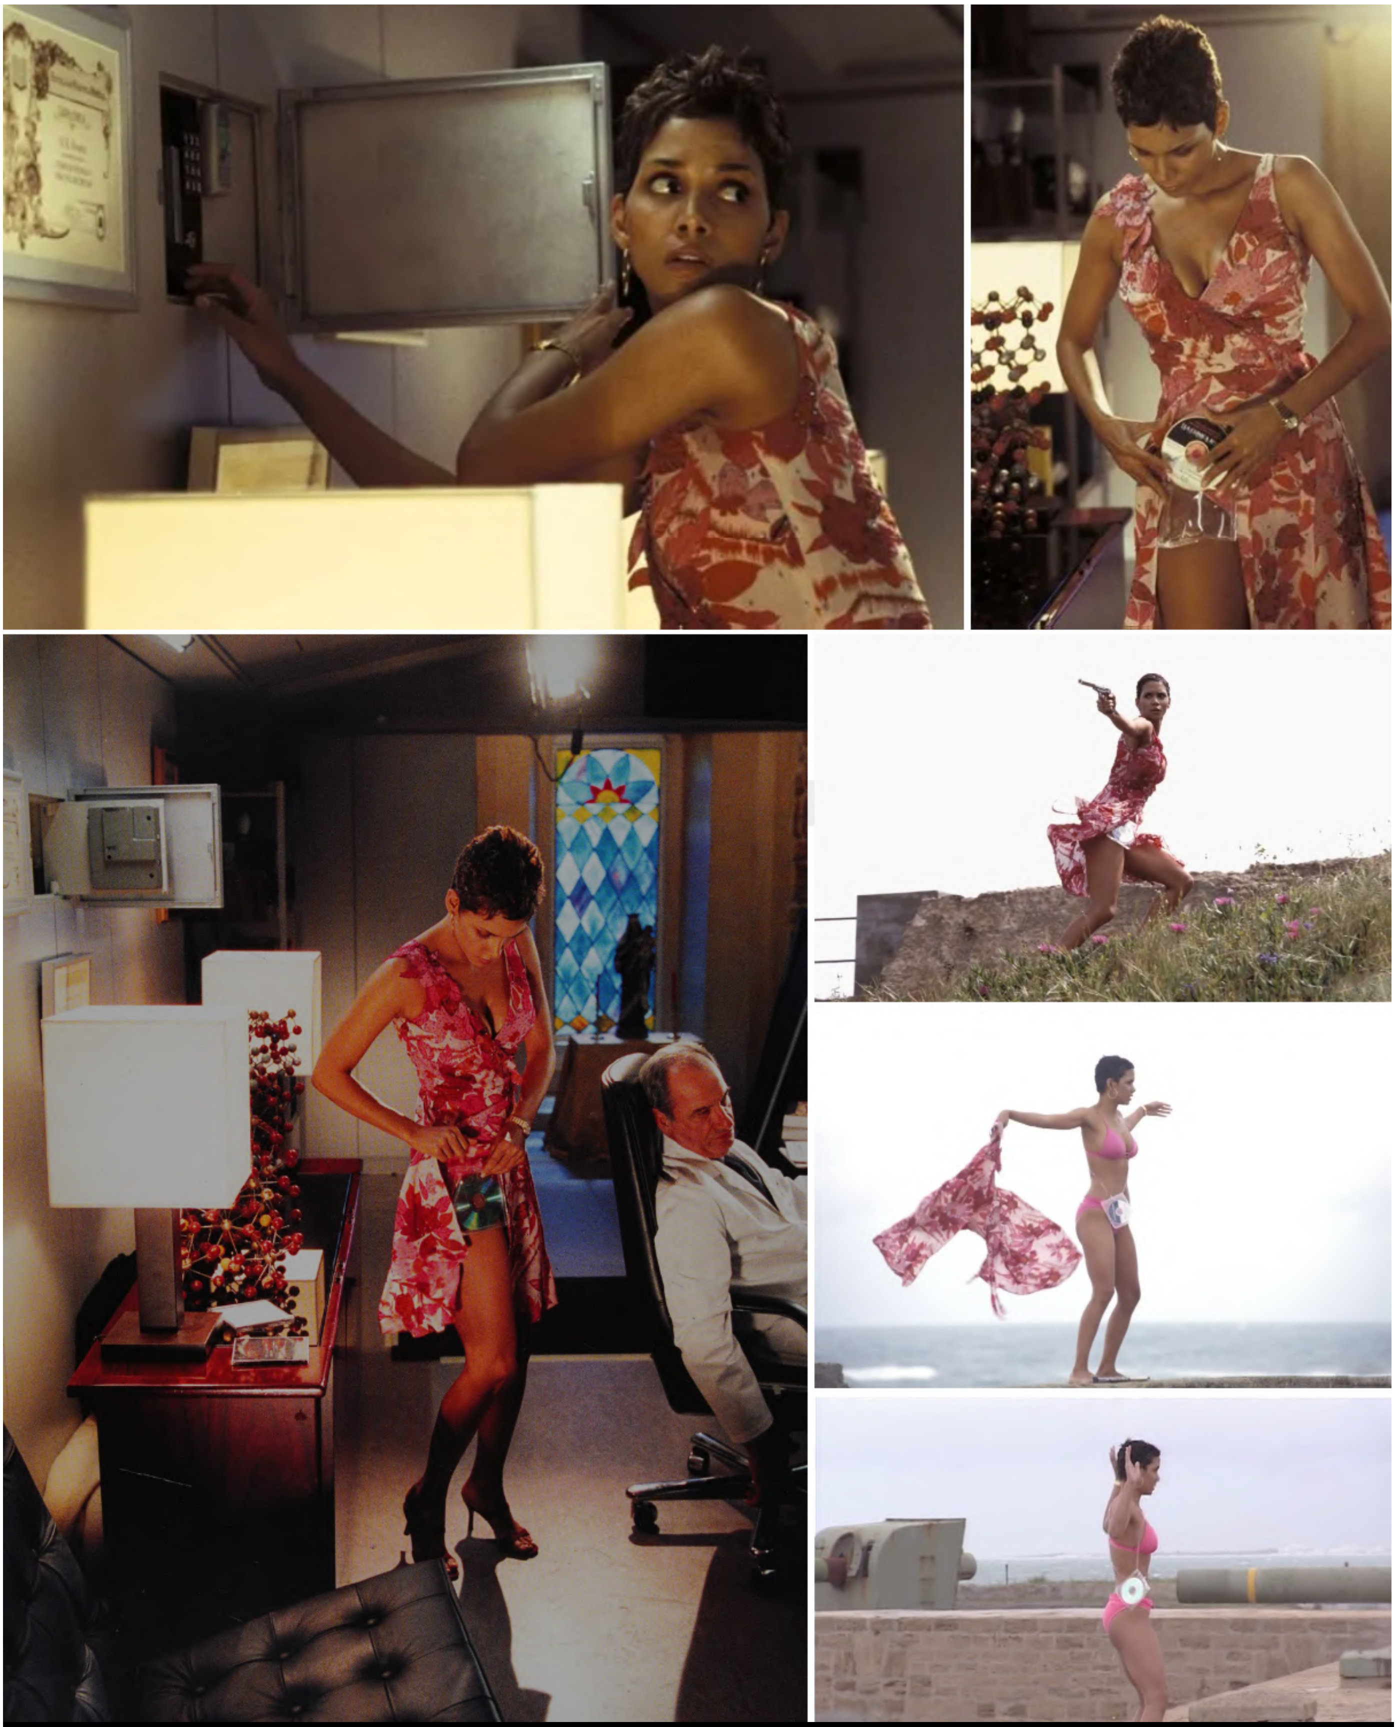
007 meets Jinx (or "Giacinta Jordan" for the less intimate) very similar to the film, while in the back of the scene Krug's jacket catches fire. If Bond offers her a Mojito in the film, here it is another Cuban cocktail that is in the spotlight: the Canchánchara.

And when they got to bed...:

- Jinx: You make love like... Like you just got out of jail.

(It's the only line of dialogue in this scene, there's no fig either).

Using a wheelchair and Krug knocked out in it, 007 goes to the clinic and for a while things happen very similar to the movie; except that Jinx retrieves a CD from Doctor Alvarez's safe and that the Bond-Zao fight is longer (we can note that Zao plant a scalpel in Bond's shoulder, plasma/blood which escapes from a tube during the fight, or even Bond who uses a mattress to protect himself from syringes thrown at him by Zao). We also notice that when James discovers the body of Doctor Alvarez, he takes his coat which he puts on.



The CD? It was cut during the editing.

During the conversation with Raoul which takes place later, Raoul specifies that this conflict diamond is illegal and therefore worthless, before changing his mind when Bond shows him the initials of Gustav Graves:

> - Raoul: Ah yes, my mistake, it is legal.

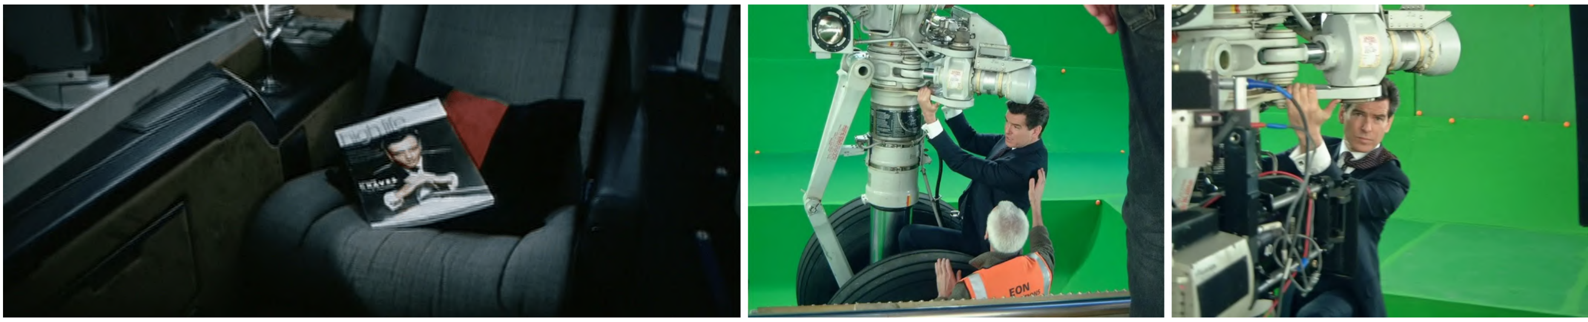
During Bond's return to London there is the deleted scene where, as landing approaches, the flight attendant notices that Bond's seat is now only occupied by a magazine about Graves and:

> The city of London, the Thames snaking through it. A massive nose wheel comes down into shot. Holding on to the strut, James Bond. The wind buffets him, but he's enjoying the view: Big Ben on one side of the river, MI6 on the other.



The jet lands at Heathrow and Bond walks away from it nonchalantly. As the baggage handler comes to unload the luggage, he is already gone.

Gustav Graves makes his parachute entrance (he must see the Prime Minister in this script, the scene takes place in front of Parliament Square and not Buckingham Palace); the first sentence he says in front of journalists:

> - Graves: London traffic can be a bitch.

Icarus was still named Solaris when this script was written:

> - Reporter: What is it we've been hearing about rockets being launched, this Solaris Space program?

At the "Blades" club, Bond meets Verity (no indication of which actress will play her in the script). It's Bond who asks her to introduce him to Graves:

> - Verity: Without a lesson from me? Are you sure you're ready for him?

During the first part of the sword fights with Graves, Bond not cease to provoke him:

- Graves: Two-nil. I win. Perhaps you're not at ease with the electronic scoring, Mister Bond. Too... Civilized for you?
[...]
- Graves: How much can you afford?
- Bond: How much can you?
[...]
- Bond: Pure luck. Like your diamond find.

The real fight that follows is shorter in the script than it is in the film. Graves offers Bond to pay him by check, which Bond accepts, saying "it won't bounce, will it?". After Graves and Miranda part ways with Bond, Verity goes to join him and gives him an envelope that someone left for him. Opening it, Bond finds an old key and says he have to go. Verity asks him for help to tie her outfit's laces again but Bond replies: "I really have to go".

There are the scenes in the old subway station with M, Q's virtual training (Bond manages to save Moneypenny, she doesn't "die" in it). We also notice that it was a helmet (and not glasses) that 007 wore for this training.

For the Q-lab the writers provide interesting notes, saying it is not the normal Q-lab but one where the old stuff is stored and in which the most ultra-secret projects, not very officially approved, are developed. They even suggest saying that this was the domain of the new Q, where he worked all these years, while Desmond Llewelyn's Q worked in the main Q-lab.

Bond's reaction when the carriage which appears empty (but contains an invisible Vanquish) arrives:

- Bond: I'd heard about the budget cuts...

Further in M's office, a line is notably not in the film:

- Miranda: With respect, a man like him [Bond] could blow my cover.
- M: Only if he finds out who you are.

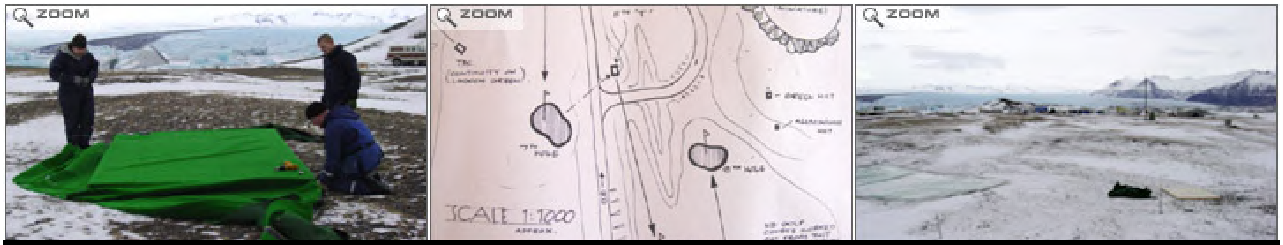
007 arrives at the Ice Palace while Graves is driving an "icejet" (and guests are playing ice golf).



Construction of the iced golf course, which didn't end up in the film.

A few pages later, once Miranda has shown Bond his room, we notice that in it there is a TV on which there is Graves in his biodome, explaining for those who are watching:

> - Graves: This is where my diamonds are mined. Deep below, my drills are carving away, stealing jewels. So above, here, I convert the waste into fertilizer, to grow new life that she will one day process into diamonds and coal.

At the bar Bond meets Jinx again (still a Canchánchara cocktail and not a Morito); the dialogue is shorter than in the film. Jinx introduces herself to Miranda as Miss Michel from Space and Technology (not Miss Swift).

007 and Jinx attend the Solaris demonstration. 007 doesn't use his invisible Aston Martin to follow Mr. "Kil" and "Vladimir Popov" (he does so on foot).

After Bond is spotted, the version of the scene with Miranda is different from the movie (where they kiss between cars parked near the guards who are looking for the intruder). Instead we have:

Bond hurries away from the chaos. [...] Through the mist, he comes face to face with Miranda Frost, legs apart, two hands on the gun pointing at Bond.

- Miranda: Take your clothes off.
Bond's eyes narrow. [Mr. Kil and guards accompanied by dogs follow tracks in the snow. They arrive at an open-air spa surrounded by steam and see Bond and Miranda in the water, naked, very close together, talking quietly between kisses].
- Miranda: M warned me this would happen.
- Bond: You're not as good at faking it as you think.
- Miranda: Was I that obvious?
- Bond: Tried a little too hard not to be interested in me.

- Miranda: God you're worse than your file says. I should have let them catch you. Now I'm exposed.
She catches sight of Mr. Kil through the steam [and kisses Bond again].
- Bond: You're not fooling anyone. Put your back into it.
The alarm sound stops. Just of sound of distant barking dogs.
- Miranda: I know all about you, 007. Sex for dinner; death for breakfast. Well it won't work with me.
- Bond: That's better.
Between kisses, whispering, "sweet nothings":
- Miranda: I so admire your restraint, you were here a full two hours before anything blew up. What were you doing at the mine?
Bond: Just letting off a little steam. You were right about his security.
The two of them are getting more passionate...
- Miranda: Should have listened to me, you could have got yourself killed...
- Bond: You're getting good at this...
- Miranda: Hmm... So are you... Are we still being watched?
- Bond: Oh we fooled him. He left a while ago.
- Miranda: And he couldn't even see what your hands were doing.
- Bond: It's all about attention to detail.
Suddenly Bond's eyes are on the figure of Graves looming through the steam.
- Graves: Excitement seems to follow you around.

> Miranda lowers a little in the water, to conceal her breasts.
> - Graves: Miranda, you give new meaning to "public relations". Don't let your devotion to work make you late tomorrow.
> [She smiles thinly at her boss who turns on his heel and walks away towards Vlad's workshop].

After that there is the scene where Vlad presents Graves with the modifications of the glove, then the one where Miranda and Bond are in the latter's room.

> - Miranda: You're different to what I expected. More... Alive.
> - Bond: So are you.

Then comes the scene where Zao and Graves find themselves around the dream machine (which in the film occurs earlier and ends differently):

> [...]
> - Zao: General Moon still mourns your death. How strong you have been, to hide in the shell of the thing you hate.

Graves looks in a mirror and hates what he sees: he punches the mirror like a madman several times, shattering it into a thousand pieces, "trying to destroy his own reflection". As he calms down, a silent alarm sounds is heard near them as Jinx infiltrates the biodome. She walks towards the dream machine and shoots the person inside but her bullets hit a bullet-proof window she hadn't seen and Graves electrocutes her with his glove.

During Jinx's interrogation, she doesn't talk Zao about his mother. Likewise, Bond doesn't have a breathing gadget when he swims underwater and we're told that we can hear his heartbeat "as he slows it, the only way to survive the freezing cold".

During the fight in the interrogation room between Bond and Kil, there appears to be only one laser. At the end of it, Bond manages to throw a piece of wood which hits the laser and turns it to the desired angle: the back of Kil's head (in the film it's different: Jinx grabs the controls of the lasers).

> - Jinx: You killed Kil.
> - Bond: And I never really got to know him properly. Just like you.
> - Jinx: If you're wanting the full biography, now is maybe not the time.

When she cut with lasers Kil's hand to open the door:

> - Jinx: Shame he's dead.

The line that gives the film its title ("So you lived to die another day, Colonel") is not present, instead we have Bond who says (in Korean): "You must miss the surf, Colonel", (maybe a reference to an old script? In one of them the pre-title opened with a surfing sequence, but with Moon on the board[58]). During the confrontation, we can note this line absent from the film:

- Bond: Not sleep has made you crazier than ever.

Also it is Graves (and not Miranda) that 007 tries to shoot with his empty gun when he discovers who betrayed him.

- Neal Purvis[59] : After the previous three films, Pierce had a great understanding of the character. He changed things on occasion because he didn't think Bond would react the way it was written. There was one instance where he pointed a gun at the bad guy when a girl had a gun pointed at him. His instinct was to turn around and shoot the girl rather than the bad guy, and it was the right thing to do. That wasn't how it was written, but that's what Bond would have done in this situation.

The dialogue is shorter (there is notably no subplot about Miranda's Olympic medal in the script) and the fate that Graves says he reserves for Bond is to lock him with Jinx in the ice palace (and probably melt it afterwards; in the film Graves simply asks Miranda to shoot him).

Before that happen, 007 escape like in the movie and flee with the icejet. Graves sees this as an opportunity to do a demonstration to the Korean generals:

- General Li: General Han here may have faith in you, but I have seen nothing to make me believe you are who you say... All you seem is... Unwell.
- Graves (in Korean): I have created this facade for you! And now you doubt me! How dare you?!

Things happen like in the film, with Bond kitesurfing on the wave... An idea that Lee Tamahori claimed the paternity[60].

Miranda and Zao go to see Jinx: "That black outfit, very appropriate. You are in mourning" (in the film Jinx's outfit is purple and the comment is about the leather shrinking in water).

007 recovers a snowmobile (by jumping on the driver). Once near the ice palace, Bond goes to his car, activates the snow tires and the Aston Martin's invisibility (studs come out of the tires, a plate comes down to hide the wheels). While he is controlling it remotely, a guard turns around and sees that the car has disappeared: he follows its tracks in the snow. Suddenly a window opens in the middle of nowhere and Bond's arm comes out and grabs the guard to knock him against the car. A snowmobile ends up crashing into the invisible car, in front of Zao's eyes. Bond activates the gadget to locate Jinx and a communication function:

- Bond: Moneypenny?
- Moneypenny: James, where are you?
- Bond: Skating on thin ice. Get M on the line. We've got an agent in trouble.
- Moneypenny: Miss Frost?!
- Bond: Someone else. But Miss Frost is in very big trouble.

Zao gets into a green Jaguar (similar to the one in the pre-title) and then start a chase between two gadgetised cars. Zao begins by activating his thermal imaging and sends a rocket, but Bond avoids it by throwing the car in reverse. Zao activates machine guns (which come out of the sides of the Jaguar) and 007 responds by activating an armored plate at the rear (like on the DB5) and rear machine guns.

Bond fires a missile into a glacier to pass through the explosion hole like in a tunnel. Zao launches a heat-guided missile, Bond's car flip over, "helpless as an upturned beetle". 007 returns to his 4 wheels (and at the same time avoids another missile), thanks to the ejection seat.

A little further, the pursuit moves into the melting ice palace. A snowmobile henchman aims a rocket launcher at the Aston Martin but 007 hits a pillar causing a balcony to fall on the man; Bond then runs him over with his car. Zao meets his end in the same manner as the film (except 007 doesn't reactivate invisibility when Zao charges him). Finally when Bond saves Jinx, instead of breaking the car window with the ring, in the script he presses a "windshield release" button on the car.

In a comic dialogue similar to what we will have in Casino Royale (2006), Jinx was originally going to ask Bond, "Are you alright?" after regaining consciousness in the latter's arms, following her almost drowning in the ice palace. (In the film this line will be replaced by "What took you so long?").

In the bunker in South Korea:

> - M: Well it might have crossed your mind to share the information that Moon and Miss Frost were on the same fencing team at Harvard. It's the scraps of information that aren't pooled that lead to international disasters. Like this.
> - Falco: Let's just put that down to a clerical error.
> - M: A clerical error? World War Three?
> [...]
> - Jinx: Steeve Falco, this is James Bond.
> - Falco: The great Double-0-0.
> - Jinx: Very funny, Falco. He saved my life.

There is a "switchblades" parachuting drop into North Korea. The switchblades were based on a real device called PHASST (Programmable High Altitude Single Soldier Transport) developed by Kinetic Aerospace[61].

Bond and Jinx must now board Graves' plane, which is an "Ilyutian 76" (Ilyushin Il-76? In the film it will be an Antonov). There is a reference to the scene where Bond arrived in London, when he was hanging onto the landing gear:

> \- Bond: I've done it before. Easier than it looks.

007 helps her up, "saving her from being crushed by the wheels". A little further on there is this scene:

> [On the plane, Bond and Jinx hear a noise and hide in the shadows as a soldier unlocks a door].
> \- Soldier: General Moon, come with me.
> \- Bond (quiet): Watch the corridor.
> \- Moon (in Korean): Tell General Han I refuse. His coup will fail.
> WHACK! The soldier falls, struck from behind by Bond, who enters, closing the door behind him. They eye each other.
> \- Bond: Han is just a puppet. Your son is pulling the strings.
> Bond gauges the confusion on the General's face.
> \- Moon: My son is dead, thanks to you.
> [Bond takes the gun from the stunned guard and hides the body].
> \- Bond: No. He survived. He's changed his identity, even his face. But he survived.
> \- Moon: You're crazy.
> \- Bond: You'll see who's the deranged one.
> \- Moon: I have grieved all this time. My son would not let me suffer like that.
> \- Bond: I think he's been planning this reunion for some time. As well as the reunification of Korea, through force. There are four of your divisions massed on the border.
> \- Moon: ...The troops are still loyal to me. I will put an end to this.
> Bond considers the situation. Then hands the General the soldier's gun. The two men eye lock eyes.
> \- Bond: You better take this.
> The General takes the gun, still a little puzzled by what he's heard. Heads out the door. As the door closes, Bond exhales.

When the Solaris is activated, the Americans try to send a missile against Graves' plane (Robinson points out that Bond and Jinx are on board, but M says they knew the risks). The Solaris pulverizes the missile in mid-flight (in the film it is the satellite, not the plane, that the missile attempts to destroy).

> \- Falco: Well if we're going to lose, I want to get in his face when it happens. (To a soldier) Get me airborne.

After the plane is depressurized, Bond and Jinx communicate via audio headsets:

> \- Jinx: James, I'm at the controls. Should I take it down? Crash it?
> \- Bond: Take it into the light. He'll have to turn it off.
> \- Jinx: You're flying Jinx airways, heading for the sun.

When Miranda arrives in the cockpit, Jinx sees her arriving in the reflection of a screen and avoids her sword swing. The battle between the two women takes place exclusively in the cockpit and Jinx kills Miranda by stabbing her with the throttle lever which came loose when the plane entered the Solaris's ray.

Graves' dialogues are different, like "my light is inextinguishable" (instead of "Look, parachutes for the both of us") or "So goodbye. It is your turn to die this time. Life is full of death, James" (instead of "You can't kill my dreams, but my dreams can kill you").

Graves is parachuted too early by Bond and end up in a maelstrom of fire emanating from the DMZ caused by the Solaris (rather than in the plane's reactor).

007 and Jinx are still on plane on perdition, hugging each other:

- Jinx: I said I was a Jinx.

When suddenly a helicopter piloted by Falco approaches of what remains of the plane; he sends them a cable. As he pulls them towards the helicopter, clinging together, the plane finally gives up the ghost.

- Bond: Thank you for saving us.
- Falco: You took the words right out of my mouth, Bond.

After Moneypenny's VR session and a little scene where she tells M that after all that Bond really deserves a bonus:

- M: Knowing Double-O-Seven, he's probably already enjoying one right now.

Bond and Jinx are having a picnic/kissing in the English countryside. Falco's voice is heard through a speaker in 007's Aston Martin, they get in the car and Bond turns off Falco's voice.

- Bond: Time to... Disappear.

He activates the car's invisibility as he prepares to kiss Jinx, leaving us with the image of this magnificent countryside landscape against which a final line is pronounced:

- Bond: You know Jinx? You're a good girl to have in the field.

Few more revisions: Verity's sexuality and Miranda's last breath

Another revised script of 135 pages titled Die Another Day with pages dated from January 7 to April 18, 2002 is a mix between the film and the previous script.

I'm not gonna spread on it more than necessary, there is just few things to note like Verity, who seems to be lesbian (or bi):

> - Verity: Miranda Frost, his publicist. A difficult girl to lick. Believe me, I've tried. She took the gold in Sydney.
> [There is the sword fight scenes].
> - Miranda (icy): I'm afraid you'll never have that pleasure, Mister Bond.
> [She leave].
> - Verity: Immune to your charms as well?

At the end in the Antonov plane: "Jinx takes the chance to throw one of her blades. Miranda blocks it with what's left of her sword; then the second knife is thrown, she catches it by the blade with her other hand, millimeters from her chest. She glances up at Jinx, smiles, but wasn't expecting Jinx' karate kick that follows, slamming the knife into her. She drops to the floor, dying..."

But Miranda is not dead, as we can see later when Bond and Jinx go to the helicopter located in the plane's cargo bay:

> As Bond's about to follow, a face looms out at him. Miranda, clutching her chest.
> - Miranda: Take me with you.
> - Bond (shakes head): This is the life you've chosen.
> [...] Even though she expects no mercy, Miranda wants to keep Bond there long enough to make it too late for everyone. The flames are eating through the rug on the stairs...
> - Miranda: Don't you want to know why I did it?
> He considers her. Realizes he feels no curiosity:
> - Bond: ...No.
> And he disappears down into the hold, a second before the rug bursts into flames. Miranda slumps back, waiting for the inevitable.

Also, soon after:

> Finally, just a hundred feet from impact, the engine [of the helicopter] kicks in, enough to come right down to the ground, and hovers just off the ground, marginally missing a hard impact. The Ferrari and Lamborghini embedded in the ground nearby like two bizarre tombstones. Bond and Jinx turn to each other.
> - Bond: Guess we'll just have to die another day.

The ending is also different:

> - Falco: I hear your man isn't too hot at returning government property.
> - M: You're worried about your Switchblades?
> - Falco: Not really. I'm worried about my agent.

And we find Bond and the girl laying on a beach, the helicopter near by. "Shouldn't we put up a flare or something?", asks Jinx.

> - Bond: Something... yes. But are you sure we want to let them know our position?
> - Jinx (with feeling): Oh James.

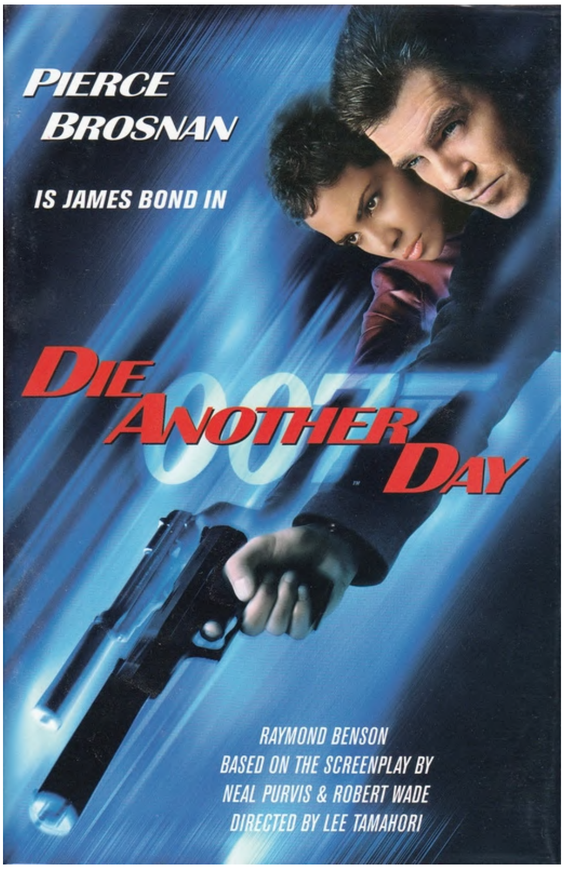
The end.

Novelization



Die Another Day was the last film in the saga to be adapted in novelization. Raymond Benson faithfully reproduces the script of the film, while including most of the deleted scenes.

The novelization explains the stakes of the pre-title: two South Korean agents have discovered information on a certain North Korean colonel Tan-Gun Moon who have a private army. Radically hostile towards the West and its southern neighbors, he finances his operations with conflict diamonds. Considered dangerous and capable of starting a war, South Korea and MI6 decided to launch an operation to eliminate him; a delicate task given that his father is a "moderate".

We will note that the "pre-title" scene is somewhat different from the film from in the hovercraft chases; notably the end of it where Bond and Moon fight over the biggest one which immobilized on the edge of a cliff and ready to fall. Furthermore, Zao also takes out a weapon from a Jaguar XKR during this pre-title.

When 007 is exchanged, he finds himself in a British military base located outside Seoul (and not on a ship sailing near Hong Kong). This change have a big impact for the following because a whole chapter has been added where Bond is in the streets of Seoul after escaping:

Knowing a little about the city, he joins a bar where he steals money from the pocket of a pimp and, while M allows herself a smile when she is told of his agent's escape, Bond pays himself a good meals and good clothes.

In another bar in the city, 007 overhears a conversation from a military sailor who says he is going to Hong Kong. An armed guy, to whom the sailor owes money, shows up in the bar and threatens the latter. James Bond intervenes and overpowers the guy before asking the sailor for help to sneak onto the ship heading to Hong Kong. After two days on the boat, Bond jumps into the water and reaches the shore of the Chinese city.

The novelization also adds a scene at the Hong Kong hotel in which Mr. Chang gives a file on Zao to Bond:

Tang Lin Zao is the son of a Chinese mother and a North Korean father who had six children. He distinguished himself during his military service and excelled as a member of the special forces. At the age of 21, he became a spy for North Korea and at least 14 "terrorist" incidents in South Korea were attributed to him during this period. Zao then became a mercenary at after his 28th birthday, although the Chinese suspect that he is still a spy.

Mr. Chang also give to Bond a P99 and other file on Tan-Gun Moon in which we learn that he was fired from Oxford (because he was considered as an agitator) before joining Harvard. After his studies, Moon returned to North Korea where he quickly rose through the military ranks, thanks to his father. Chinese intelligence feared he that might develop a nuclear or biological weapon.

The Cuban part of the novelization is rather stingy with information, we only learn that the man that 007 puts in a wheelchair is called Mr. Krug and that the fire at the clinic caused several civilian victims.

Before Bond joins Verity (who is a brunette and seems lesbian), it is clarified that 007 was a former member of the fencing club. When Jinx comes across Zao in Iceland (he is in the dream machine), she shoots him thinking it is Graves but her bullets are stopped by armored glass. Just like the film, the novelization adds references to the old James Bond films (a newspaper named Tomorrow, the parrot of For Your Eyes Only, etc…).

As with the hovercraft scene, the chase between Bond's Aston Martin and Graves's Jaguar (driven by Zao) has changed a lot. The two men use fewer gadgets than in the film (Bond's Aston is, however, equipped with rear machine guns and an armored plate similar to the one of the DB5).

A whole chapter was added where Graves, in the dream machine, remembers how he survived the fall of the hovercraft, his transformation from Colonel Moon into Gustav Graves, including how he obtained the diamonds (including a partner called Jan Ericsson whom he killed). A Miranda's parricide is also present.

The finale also includes some small changes: Graves does not end up in one of the Antonov reactors but in Icarus's ray. Also included Miranda who is still alive after the fight with Jinx and begs to come with them (hoping to buy time so no one escapes).

Sources/references from chapter 20: Die Another Day

1 "Nobody Does it Better" by Mark A. Altman and Edward Gross (2020).

2 "Screenwriters' Masterclass: Screenwriters Talk About Their Greatest Movies" by Kevin Conroy Scott (2006).

3 Neal Purvis and Robert Wade interview by Nev Pierce on the BBC (November 20, 2002): https://www.bbc.co.uk/films/2002/11/20/neal_wade_and_robert_wade_die_another_day_interview.shtml

4 "Screenwriters' Masterclass: Screenwriters Talk About Their Greatest Movies" by Kevin Conroy Scott (2006).

5 "Screenwriters' Masterclass: Screenwriters Talk About Their Greatest Movies" by Kevin Conroy Scott (2006).

6 "Nobody Does it Better" by Mark A. Altman and Edward Gross (2020).

7 "The James Bond Archives" by Jamie Russell and Paul Duncan (2012).

8 Sunday Express, S:2 magazine (July 7, 2002); via "Writers Discuss DAD" by Steven Woodbridge on Mr. Kiss Kiss Bang Bang website (July 9, 2002): http://www.ianfleming.org/007news/articles3/bond20purviswade.shtml

9 "Nobody Does it Better" by Mark A. Altman and Edward Gross (2020).

10 Purvis and Wade's interview on Her Majesty's Secret Servant for Die Another Day: http://www.hmss.com/films/dad/p&w/

11 "Return to Pinewood" by Yarborough on Die Another Day official website: http://www.jamesbond.com/bond20/newsflash/newsflash_01.php

12 Neal Purvis and Robert Wade interview by Nev Pierce on the BBC (November 20, 2002): https://www.bbc.co.uk/films/2002/11/20/neal_wade_and_robert_wade_die_another_day_interview.shtml

13 "The James Bond Archives" by Jamie Russell and Paul Duncan (2012).

14 "The James Bond Archives" by Jamie Russell and Paul Duncan (2012).

15 "James Bond - Die Another Day: second draft script" on *Julien*s* auction: https://bid.juliensauctions.com/lot-details/index/catalog/450/lot/197520/james-bond-die-another-day-second-draft-script

16 "Some Kind of Hero: The Remarkable Story of the James Bond Films" by Matthew Field & Ajay Chowdhury (2015).

17 For Znamia sources, see:
"Sci/Tech: Turning night into day" on the BBC (February 4, 1999):
http://news.bbc.co.uk/2/hi/science/nature/271224.stm
Znamia's Wikipedia page.

18 "Screenwriters' Masterclass: Screenwriters Talk About Their Greatest Movies" by Kevin Conroy Scott (2006).

19 (Sorry, I don't remember where I found this; neither the eventual exact quote).

20 "What I Really Want to Do Is Produce" by Helen de Winter (2008); via "Some Kind of Hero: The Remarkable Story of the James Bond Films" by Matthew Field & Ajay Chowdhury (2015).

21 "Britain ruled by Nazis - what would Bond do? 007 writers Purvis and Wade take on Len Deighton in SS-GB" by Robbie Collin in The Telegraph (February 19, 2017): https://www.telegraph.co.uk/tv/0/britain-ruled-nazis-would-bond-do-007-writers-purvis-wade/

22 "Screenwriters' Masterclass: Screenwriters Talk About Their Greatest Movies" by Kevin Conroy Scott (2006).

23 "Screenwriters' Masterclass: Screenwriters Talk About Their Greatest Movies" by Kevin Conroy Scott (2006).

24 "Britain ruled by Nazis - what would Bond do? 007 writers Purvis and Wade take on Len Deighton in SS-GB" by Robbie Collin in The Telegraph (February 19, 2017): https://www.telegraph.co.uk/tv/0/britain-ruled-nazis-would-bond-do-007-writers-purvis-wade/

25 "Britain ruled by Nazis - what would Bond do? 007 writers Purvis and Wade take on Len Deighton in SS-GB" by Robbie Collin in The Telegraph (February 19, 2017): https://www.telegraph.co.uk/tv/0/britain-ruled-nazis-would-bond-do-007-writers-purvis-wade

26 "Some Kind of Hero: The Remarkable Story of the James Bond Films" by Matthew Field & Ajay Chowdhury (2015).

27 "Goldfingers: meet the writers of every James Bond film this century" by Ryan Gilbey in The Guardian (November 12, 2021): https://www.theguardian.com/film/2021/nov/12/goldfingers-meet-the-writers-of-every-james-bond-film-this-century

28 "Die Another Day: Lee Tamahori looks back at his 'controversial' James Bond film (exclusive)" by Tom Butler o Yahoo (November 18, 2022): https://uk.movies.yahoo.com/movies/die-another-day-lee-tamohori-controversial-james-bond-movie-061555530.html

29 "Die Another Day: Lee Tamahori looks back at his 'controversial' James Bond film (exclusive)" by Tom Butler o Yahoo (November 18, 2022): https://uk.movies.yahoo.com/movies/die-another-day-lee-tamohori-controversial-james-bond-movie-061555530.html

30 "Story and Character: Interviews with British Screenwriters" by Alistair Owen (2004).

31 "Die Another Day: Lee Tamahori looks back at his 'controversial' James Bond film (exclusive)" by Tom Butler o Yahoo (November 18, 2022): https://uk.movies.yahoo.com/movies/die-another-day-lee-tamohori-controversial-james-bond-movie-061555530.html

32 "Some Kind of Hero: The Remarkable Story of the James Bond Films" by Matthew Field & Ajay Chowdhury (2015).

33 "Some Kind of Hero: The Remarkable Story of the James Bond Films" by Matthew Field & Ajay Chowdhury (2015).

34 "Die Another Day: Lee Tamahori looks back at his 'controversial' James Bond film (exclusive)" by Tom Butler o Yahoo (November 18, 2022): https://uk.movies.yahoo.com/movies/die-another-day-lee-tamohori-controversial-james-bond-movie-061555530.html

35 Die Another Day DVD's bonus audio commentary track.

36 "Die Another Day: Lee Tamahori looks back at his 'controversial' James Bond film (exclusive)" by Tom Butler o Yahoo (November 18, 2022): https://uk.movies.yahoo.com/movies/die-another-day-lee-tamohori-controversial-james-bond-movie-061555530.html

37 "Some Kind of Hero: The Remarkable Story of the James Bond Films" by Matthew Field & Ajay Chowdhury (2015).

38 MI6 Confidential magazine (issue 19, volume 7, january 2013); via "Some Kind of Hero: The Remarkable Story of the James Bond Films" by Matthew Field & Ajay Chowdhury (2015).

39 "Die Another Day: Lee Tamahori looks back at his 'controversial' James Bond film (exclusive)" by Tom Butler o Yahoo (November 18, 2022): https://uk.movies.yahoo.com/movies/die-another-day-lee-tamohori-controversial-james-bond-movie-061555530.html

40 "Some Kind of Hero: The Remarkable Story of the James Bond Films" by Matthew Field & Ajay Chowdhury (2015).

41 (Sorry, I don't remember where I found this; neither the eventual exact quote).

42 (Sorry, I don't remember where I found this; neither the eventual exact quote).

43 "Screenwriters' Masterclass: Screenwriters Talk About Their Greatest Movies" by Kevin Conroy Scott (2006).

44 "Story and Character: Interviews with British Screenwriters" by Alistair Owen (2004).

45 "Screenwriters' Masterclass: Screenwriters Talk About Their Greatest Movies" by Kevin Conroy Scott (2006).

46 "Screenwriters' Masterclass: Screenwriters Talk About Their Greatest Movies" by Kevin Conroy Scott (2006)

47 "Some Kind of Hero: The Remarkable Story of the James Bond Films" by Matthew Field & Ajay Chowdhury (2015).

48 "Tallest supported flagpole" on Guinness World Records website: https://www.guinnessworldrecords.com/world-records/69043-tallest-flagpole

49 "From script to script" Die Another Day DVD's bonus.

50 "From script to script" Die Another Day DVD's bonus.
"Wai Lin's Cut Role From Die Another Day" on MI6-HQ (May 1, 2003):
https://www.mi6-hq.com/sections/articles/bond_20_wai_lin.php

51 "From script to script" Die Another Day DVD's bonus.
"Wai Lin's Cut Role From Die Another Day" on MI6-HQ (May 1, 2003):
https://www.mi6-hq.com/sections/articles/bond_20_wai_lin.php

52 "From script to script" Die Another Day DVD's bonus.
"Wai Lin's Cut Role From Die Another Day" on MI6-HQ (May 1, 2003):
https://www.mi6-hq.com/sections/articles/bond_20_wai_lin.php

53 "From script to script" Die Another Day DVD's bonus.
"Wai Lin's Cut Role From Die Another Day" on MI6-HQ (May 1, 2003):
https://www.mi6-hq.com/sections/articles/bond_20_wai_lin.php

54 "From script to script" Die Another Day DVD's bonus.
"Wai Lin's Cut Role From Die Another Day" on MI6-HQ (May 1, 2003):
https://www.mi6-hq.com/sections/articles/bond_20_wai_lin.php

55 "James Bond Director Lee Tamahori Confirms A Die Another Day Cameo That Never Happened, And Explains What Led To The Script Change" by Mike Reyes on Cinema Blend (July 26, 2024):
https://www.cinemablend.com/interviews/james-bond-director-lee-tamahori-die-another-day-cameo-never-happened-script-change-michelle-yeoh

56 "Michelle Yeoh is in her villain era: 'There's a dark side in us all'" by Louise Griffin on RadioTimes (January 22, 2025): https://www.radiotimes.com/movies/scifi/michelle-yeoh-star-trek-section-31-big-rt-interview/

57 (Sorry, I don't remember where I found this; neither the eventual exact quote).

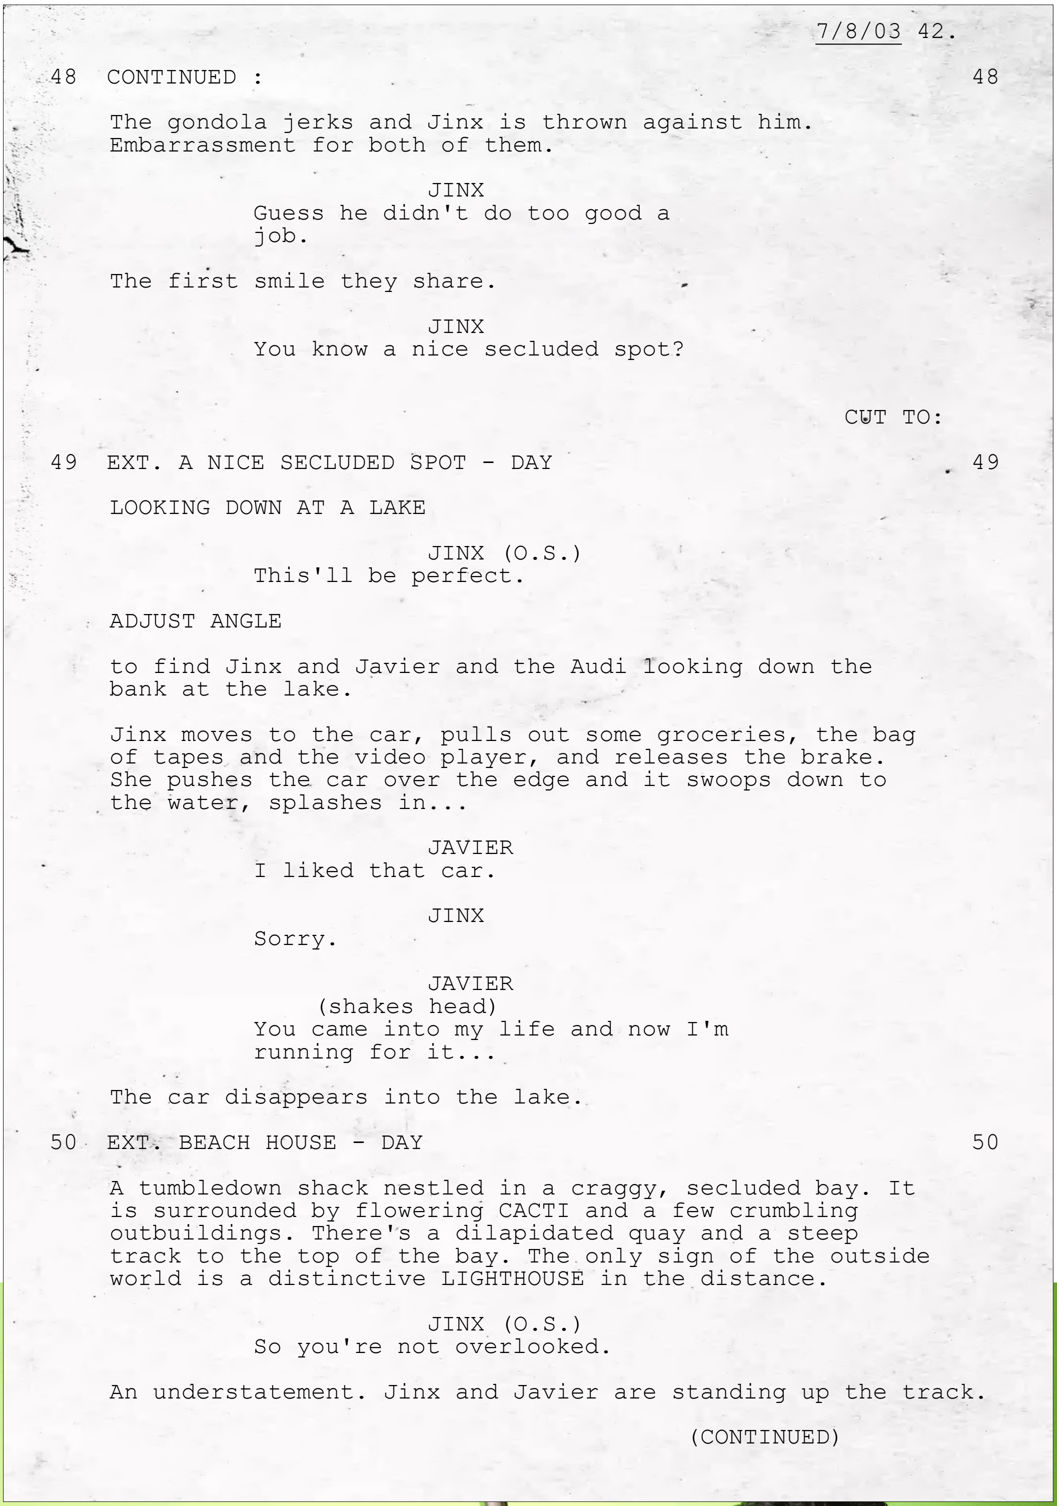
58 "James Bond - Die Another Day: second draft script" on *Julien*s* auction: https://bid.juliensauctions.com/lot-details/index/catalog/450/lot/197520/james-bond-die-another-day-second-draft-script

59 (Sorry, I don't remember where I found this; neither the eventual exact quote).

60 "Some Kind of Hero: The Remarkable Story of the James Bond Films" by Matthew Field & Ajay Chowdhury (2015).

61 Kinetic Aerospace Inc. website: https://www.kineticaerospace.com/

CHAPTER 20.5



7/8/03 42.

48 CONTINUED : 48

The gondola jerks and Jinx is thrown against him. Embarrassment for both of them.

JINX
Guess he didn't do too good a job.

The first smile they share.

JINX
You know a nice secluded spot?

CUT TO:

49 EXT. A NICE SECLUDED SPOT - DAY 49

LOOKING DOWN AT A LAKE

JINX (O.S.)
This'll be perfect.

ADJUST ANGLE

to find Jinx and Javier and the Audi looking down the bank at the lake.

Jinx moves to the car, pulls out some groceries, the bag of tapes and the video player, and releases the brake. She pushes the car over the edge and it swoops down to the water, splashes in...

JAVIER
I liked that car.

JINX
Sorry.

JAVIER
(shakes head)
You came into my life and now I'm running for it...

The car disappears into the lake.

50 EXT. BEACH HOUSE - DAY 50

A tumbledown shack nestled in a craggy, secluded bay. It is surrounded by flowering CACTI and a few crumbling outbuildings. There's a dilapidated quay and a steep track to the top of the bay. The only sign of the outside world is a distinctive LIGHTHOUSE in the distance.

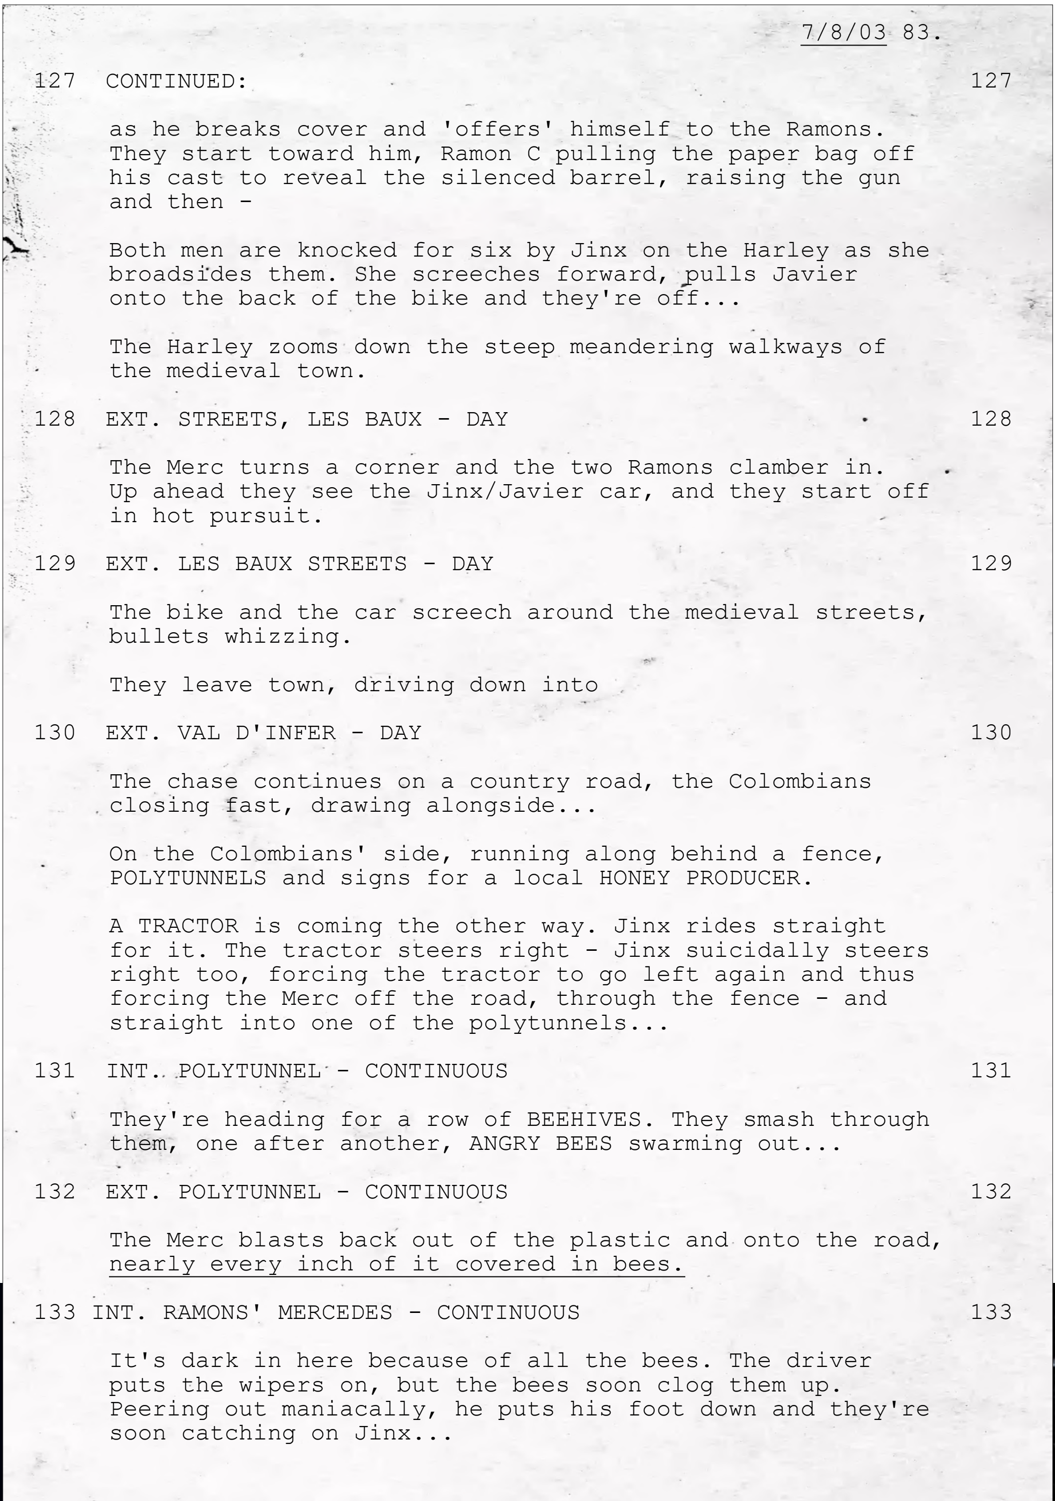
JINX (O.S.)
So you're not overlooked.

An understatement. Jinx and Javier are standing up the track.

(CONTINUED)

Move along, there's nothing to see: at least certainly not a film. In fact, the project having been abandoned along the way, before the cameras started rolling, no film was released.

However at least one script was well developed before the cancellation. So make your predictions about what it does and doesn't contain because the answers to what you missed in this spin-off will be given to you.



7/8/03 83.

127 CONTINUED: 127

as he breaks cover and 'offers' himself to the Ramons. They start toward him, Ramon C pulling the paper bag off his cast to reveal the silenced barrel, raising the gun and then -

Both men are knocked for six by Jinx on the Harley as she broadsides them. She screeches forward, pulls Javier onto the back of the bike and they're off...

The Harley zooms down the steep meandering walkways of the medieval town.

128 EXT. STREETS, LES BAUX - DAY 128

The Merc turns a corner and the two Ramons clamber in. Up ahead they see the Jinx/Javier car, and they start off in hot pursuit.

129 EXT. LES BAUX STREETS - DAY 129

The bike and the car screech around the medieval streets, bullets whizzing.

They leave town, driving down into

130 EXT. VAL D'INFER - DAY 130

The chase continues on a country road, the Colombians closing fast, drawing alongside...

On the Colombians' side, running along behind a fence, POLYTUNNELS and signs for a local HONEY PRODUCER.

A TRACTOR is coming the other way. Jinx rides straight for it. The tractor steers right - Jinx suicidally steers right too, forcing the tractor to go left again and thus forcing the Merc off the road, through the fence - and straight into one of the polytunnels...

131 INT. POLYTUNNEL - CONTINUOUS 131

They're heading for a row of BEEHIVES. They smash through them, one after another, ANGRY BEES swarming out...

132 EXT. POLYTUNNEL - CONTINUOUS 132

The Merc blasts back out of the plastic and onto the road, nearly every inch of it covered in bees.

133 INT. RAMONS' MERCEDES - CONTINUOUS 133

It's dark in here because of all the bees. The driver puts the wipers on, but the bees soon clog them up. Peering out maniacally, he puts his foot down and they're soon catching on Jinx...

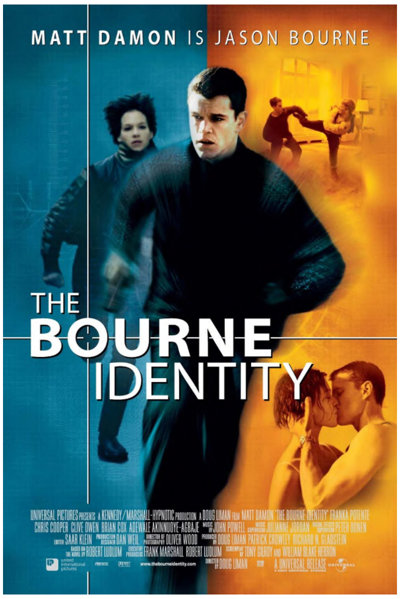
(In the absence of images from this non-existent film, these two images of Halle Barry come from Die Another Day).

Table of contents

Jinx

Change of direction....1460
July 8, 2003' script....1463

Change of direction



MATT DAMON IS JASON BOURNE
THE BOURNE IDENTITY

- Lee Tamahori[1] : Michael and Barbara and I went to see The Bourne Identity [2002] while we were in pre-production [of Die Another Day]. And I remember saying to Michael: "I think the spy genre has changed forever, and I'm not sure we can... This era is over". I'm not sure whether they agreed or not.

Through its innovative direction with the hand-held camera style, its breathtaking action scenes due to their violence, its tormented hero in search of identity, its realistic approach to the world of espionage (which particularly break away from the extravagant gadgets), The Bourne Identity is a critically acclaimed film whose impact will influence action and spy cinema (including the James Bond franchise).

A film that was less critically acclaimed in 2002 is, on the other hand, Die Another Day. Despite recognizing good intentions in its first part, the viewers are particularly disconcerted by the extravagance of certain elements of the film which they assimilates to science fiction (such as the invisible car) and certain of its awful digital special effects (like in the kite-surfing sequence). The feeling is that the franchise has gone too far in its excesses and, as was the case with Moonraker, it will be judged that a change/correction of direction for the saga is necessary rather than pushing more towards ridiculousness. (Or at least for the cinematographic saga, because on video games side 2004' Everything or Nothing still featured a Porsche Cayenne invisible and even an invisible suit).

During the production/promotion of Casino Royale, the filmmakers discussed the situation Bond found himself in after Die Another Day. For Barbara Broccoli: "Michael and I felt at the end of Die Another Day that we had sort of taken Bond along a sort of fantastical journey and that we had kind of reached the point of no return in terms of a little bit too much CGI, the invisible car and things like that"[2].

Wilson says pretty much the same thing: "Because we've just gotten too fanciful, the invisible cars and all that stuff. We've got to bring it back down to earth. [...] And to their credit, the studios all went along with us, both Sony and MGM. We said: if we keep going this way, it's going to kill off the franchise"[3].

Robert Wade agrees: "What the Bond films normally do is go one bigger than the last, [there] it just seemed ridiculous to contemplate"[4].

- Barbara Broccoli[5] : There was this horrific event of 9/11 that occurred, and we felt that we had gone too far in terms of fantasy... In terms of Die another Day we'd become too fantastical. [...] We had to go back to reality, because we're living now in a post-9/11 world. Frivolity didn't seem appropriate.

But if Die Another Day is not the expected critical success, financially the film is however a hit at the box office. One of the highest-grossing Bond's film (and the film can probably thank his predecessors). So the production is more comfortable with the idea which emerged during Die Another Day about making a spin-off film about the character of Jinx whose actress, Halle Berry, received an Oscar (for Monster's Ball) during the filming of Die Another Day. It's an opportunity to make money but also to offer something new for the saga while the character of Bond seems to be stuck in a dead end.

On November 10, 2002, about one week before the premiere of Die Another Day, Zap2It reported the following words of producers Broccoli and Wilson: "There are talks about it [a Jinx film], we are considering it", adding that it's about time for a strong female action star[6]. "[Halle] is fantastic in the role, we loved working with her, we'd love to do it more"[7].

Halle Berry added: "If they ask me and play Jinx and continue on with this character [...] I would do it in a heartbeat. [...] It would be a huge deal [to start a franchise with Jinx]. To be part of the evolution of a female action hero that would never have happened 10 years ago would be very exciting"[8].

Meanwhile, MGM have registered the web domain www.jinxmovie.com[9] and Pierce Brosnan had been quoted saying "Yeah, I hope I get to appear in her movies"[10].

In may 2003 E! Entertainment reported that a script for the film written by Purvis and Wade was completed[11]. Then DarkHorizons reported in July theses words pronounced by Berry at the 2003 annual San Diego Comic-Con convention: "we just got the script last night, the first script and I hear its really really good. I've been talking to the writers about it and they had a great idea about who she is, and where she comes from. I think it won't be like Bond, its not supposed to be a female Bond, but it is very edgy and I think we'll have some elements of humour [...] but it won't be like Bond"[12].

Robert Wade described the film project Jinx as "a very atmospheric Euro thriller, a [Jason] Bourne-type movie"[13]. Purvis adds: "in Die Another Day, our sort of concept for her character was [...] this woman had stepped out of her own movie series into James Bond's world. It was ironic then that the studio asked us to try and create a movie series for that character"[14].

Lee Tamahori wanted to direct Jinx ("I could write and make the movie tomorrow for her"[15]) and said the script was pretty good and Modesty Blaise like[16] (Tamahori stated at various occasions he modeled Jinx on Modesty Blaise in Die Another Day[17]. He also said that in Die Another Day "we built her character up to strength and literally made her a female James Bond, there was no intention of franchise at that time"[18]).

Stephen Frears was also interested in directing the spin-off (and was ultimately retained to helm the movie[19]). It was later said that certain elements were re-used in Casino Royale[20] (we will see that there is however nothing of the sort in the script that we are going to analyze).

Stephen Frears was the director in place according to the writers.

July 8, 2003' script

When it comes to Bond scripts, one of the Holy Grails for me has always been ones of this aborted film project and I was lucky enough to be able to acquire one 116 pages "first draft" script of Jinx dated July 8, 2003, written by Neal Purvis and Robert Wade. Now it's time to unravel one of the greatest mysteries of our beloved saga.

The first question we might ask is: how does the film is supposed to open? At that time, all EON James Bond films opened with the famous gunbarrel sequence with the James Bond Theme in background. Although Jinx wouldn't strictly speaking be a James Bond movie, it would still have been a film from the Bond universe. So were they also going to open this spin-off with a gunbarrel, with Jinx in it instead of Bond? And with the "Bond" theme?

The answer is no: no gunbarrel for Jinx, the script opens directly in the past, 1992, with Giacinta "Jinx" Johnson who is still a 16-year-old girl. She lives in San Salvador (El Salvador) with her parents in a house in a gated community, reserved for American embassy staff. "We could be anywhere in Spielbergia", write the screenwriters.

Her father tells her that she is going to be late for the school bus and, after a brief exchange with him, Giacinta rushes down the stairs and devours the breakfast prepared by her mother in a few seconds before going out.

Jinx manages to get in the bus in time and opens a copy of L'Étranger by Albert Camus. On board of the bus she sees a van park near her house, and its driver getting out then walk away from the vehicle. And suddenly... Boom! Jinx, getting off the bus, walks towards the debris of what was still her house a few seconds before.

Later, apparently after her parents' funeral, Jinx returns home. She wants to access a secret room in the remains of the house. In it, Jinx discovers "Damien" Falco, a "hardbitten career spy". Falco is there to extract sensitive documents from the secret room, in order to erase any trace showing that her father was an American spy.

> \- Jinx: Who are you?
> \- Falco: The government.
> \- Jinx (showing the documents): Is that why they were killed?
> \- Falco: They were killed because they were Americans... One day you'll understand.
> \- Jinx: I understand right now. Dad was a spy; so now I'm alone.

Falco tells Jinx that he will find the person responsible for her parents' deaths. Jinx wants to help him, but Falco tells him no... That is, until Jinx gives him a (very) detailed description of the man she saw getting out of the van and the license plate of the van. Falco is impressed by Jinx; he thinks he could maybe get her into a special school.

It is a tradition in Bond films to have a title sequence, with female silhouettes, so what about this film about Jinx? Well... There is a credit sequence planned, which has the particularity of being superimposed on the scenes of the following paragraph:

(At least) ten years later. In San Francisco, a guide takes children on a tour of the headquarters of the Rand Corporation, a think-tank that "evaluate and underwrite the political risks" among other things; the guide assures the children that Rand is not part of the military or the government. In one of the offices (which is messy) are "photos of Jinx over the last ten years. Serving in Somalia, her degree from Harvard, post-grad degree from the Sorbonne". A delivery man has brought a package and a Rand staff member is looking for Jinx to deliver it to her.

End of credits. It turns out that Jinx, who currently works for the Rand Corporation, is in the building's gymnasium where she studies data about Somalia while doing her sport. "This is how Jinx thinks", the writers say to us. She is given the package which contains more data, "tons of indecipherable technical information. But to Jinx it's no problem. Page after page, scanned and digested in seconds". She looks at her watch: damn, she's late.

Members of the Rand Corporation are in a meeting room with a Somalian businessman named Banaadir, who is seeking a grant to expand his milk powder factory in Somalia. Jinx, suspicious about the man, arrives and announces that Banaadir's other companies have access to all the materials needed to concoct a massive amount of VX nerve gas:

> - Jinx: Your company also runs a water purification plant in Betuo. And a household detergent factory, about five miles away? Right on the route your milk tankers take?
> [...]
> - Banaadir: But what has this to do with my milk?
> - Jinx: The expansion of your factory would mean it could produce hundreds of tons of the substance.
> - Banaadir: Outrageous!
> - Jinx: It could convert over to VX production overnight.

Jinx's boss Chris Hobart, however, is skeptical about her concerns and decides to allocate the grant to Banaadir.

Jinx then goes to meet Falco, who is celebrating a birthday with his daughter Carrie (and about fifteen other children) at a bowling alley. Falco tells Jinx that he investigated (as a favor) on her "milkman" but nothing came of it. She wants his to help to investigate further on Banaadir, but Falco won't help unless she does a job for him.

> - Jinx: What dirty work do you want doing this time?
> - Falco: Now why does securing the future of the Western world have to be dirty work?
> - Jinx: I don't know but with you it usually is.
> [...]
> - Jinx: Falco, I don't work for you.

Michael Madsen played "Damian" (with an A, or rather two) Falco in Die Another Day, where he was the head of the NSA and Jinx's boss.

> - Falco: Beats me how you can stick that day job. You really think spreading economic aid around the world is going to rid it of terrorists?

Falco wants Jinx to fly to Barcelona (Spain). An MI6 agent has a lead: a journalist intends to buy video tapes from a member of the ETA terrorist organization (Euskadi ta Askatasuna, Basque nationalists). These tapes contain information that could help to bring down an international terrorist network. MI6 will intercept the journalist and have her replaced by Jinx:

> - Falco: The guy is meeting some journalist to hand over a bunch of videotapes. They need someone to step into the journalist's shoes, keep the terrorist busy while they swoop. If the MI6 guy is right then it helps us all.
> - Jinx: MI6? Who is he?
> - Falco: No one you'd know. If it was, you'd already be on the plane, right?
> Jinx gives him a dirty look.
> - Falco: No, this guy's more your eccentric Brit. Tea, not martini. And a real old hand from what I hear.

Jinx's plane lands in Barcelona and in the airport she spots four men from MI6 (she is unhappy that one of them have a sign with her name written on it, it's like warning every potential present enemy of her presence in the country). She contacts their boss, a certain Charles Lambert, who tells her that they are there for the journalist: "picking you up was a simple courtesy". Lambert puts Jinx in a black London-style taxi:

> - Jinx: Great. All this to avoid being spotted and then you have the most conspicuous car in the whole of Spain.

Lambert replies that everyone knows that he usually uses a more discreet car when he wants to travel anonymously: so no one will suspect anything. From the taxi Jinx observes Lambert informs the driver who is waiting for the journalist (a certain Quinlan) that she will not need him after all, and Carlos (a man from Lambert) takes the cardboard that the driver throwed away. Carlos puts Quinlan in a car by pretending being her driver and drives away with her.

Jinx goes to Quinlan's hotel pretending to be Quinlan. During a conversation about Falco with Lambert, Jinx realizes that Falco lied to her:

> - Jinx: What? Banaadir?
> - Lambert: That's him. Falco was very excited, he's got a file ten feet thick on the fellow. Sent in two helicopter gunships. Your Banaadir chap seems to have gotten away, but they took out his factory and killed most of his henchmen. [...]
> - Jinx: [Talking about Flaco] Son of a bitch.

After showering, Jinx browses the journalist's computer: images of terrorist atrocities, emails, etc... Lambert comes back to see her and Jinx asks him what exactly will be contained in the tapes they are trying to recover. Lambert says he is not sure: the ETA's man who is gonna to hand them over was in charge of the terrorist organization's propaganda to raise funds, so perhaps videos of their training?

It just so happens that the terrorist calls Jinx, thinking she is Quinlan, and says "[Basilica] Sagrada Família, fifteen minutes [...]". Lambert tells Jinx that the place is too crowded to nail him: Jinx will have to play the game, "get the tapes, show him the money".

Jinx goes to Sagrada Família where she meets our terrorist who is named Javier Vasco. They talk a little, Javier says he is not like them (the other terrorists) and that he is happy to be able to turn this page of his life. They proceed to exchange, the tapes against the money, when suddenly two of Lambert's men (Remi and Serge, two Moroccans) intervene, weapons in hand. "But they're not going for Javier [...] Now their guns are on Jinx". Javier flees, Lambert's men recover the money's briefcase brought by Jinx and leave.

The two men who stole the money having left, a foot chase begins with Jinx trying to catch up with Javier in the streets of Barcelona. Remi and Serge climb into a car, then die in an explosion (in a flower market) when they open the briefcase. The briefcase was booby-trapped. A milk delivery man in a small truck narrowly avoids Javier during the chase (milk spills in the street); Jinx sees Javier entering a building.

Jinx then makes a detour to a store where she buys pepper, lemonade and ammonia. She then takes the emergency staircase of the building where Javier entered and comes across the latter's apartment. When Javier opens the door to go home, Jinx overpowers him with her makeshift pepper spray and ties him up with rope from the curtains.

Meanwhile, Lambert receives a phone call from one of his men who tells him that things have gone badly.

Jinx begins to ask Javier some questions, he points out that "listen, whoever told you about me didn't care whether you died too. That bomb was meant for us both". If the briefcase hadn't been stolen and had been opened at the basilica as planned: they would have died. She decides to call Falco to get a clearer picture.

- Falco: I spoke to Lambert. He said do not, repeat not, come in. ETA have infiltrated his team. He gave me a special number for you to call him on...

- Jinx: You've got to be kidding.
- Falco: You're sounding a tad paranoid.
- Jinx: It wasn't you that nearly ended up splattered on a church ceiling. You lied to me Falco.

She decides to hang up before being located. Meanwhile, a Spanish inspector named Pez (one of his peculiarities is that he limps) analyzes the explosion scene and the nearby surveillance cameras.

- Neal Purvis[21] : When we wrote Jinx, [...] we called the main [male] character "Javier" in the hope that we could pitch [the role] to the actor [Javier Bardem].

Javier tells Jinx that he was never a terrorist. He was making video documentaries: he approached an ETA cell, gaining their trust, when suddenly all its members died. "I couldn't watch the film I took. [...] I stopped making films. Tried to disappear. Then this Quinlan woman tracked me down, talked me into giving her the tapes for her book".

Of course Javier Bardem would end up playing the villainous Raoul Silva in Skyfall (in which the same ploy was used to attract the actor, Silva having originally been named Javier in some early Skyfall drafts). Robert Wade said that Bardem was also at one time considered for the role of Renard in The World Is Not Enough.

Looking out the window, Jinx sees police entering the building. She unties Javier, takes the tapes and they go out onto the roof. Jinx pushes potted cacti to slow down the police officers behind them and a chase begins from roof to roof with jumps over the void. Arriving at a place that is a little too wide, she retrieves a metal plank to make a bridge with it, which she removes afterwards so that the police officers can't follow them. Javier has a little trouble following her but manages to do so. Police officers opened fire and she respond by shooting at a water tank which then fell on the police. Jinx and Javier eventually arrive at street level and get into Javier's car (an Audi) and drive away from the scene.

Lambert receives another phone call informing him of the latest developments. At this point, the script continues to be unclear with him: is he a bad guy or not? His interlocutor told him that he had hired the Moroccans (who turned out to be unreliable) because Lambert didn't want to spend a lot. Lambert says that he will no longer skimp on expenses and calls a certain "Ramons" from his contact list.

We find Jinx and Javier on the Vizcaya Bridge. Javier explains that his grandfather blew up the crossing during the Spanish Civil War:

> - Javier: It took years to fix.
> - Jinx: So your granddaddy wasn't too popular for a while?
> - Javier: He didn't mind. His company won the contract to rebuild it.

Jinx dumps the Audi into a lake and they go to Javier's second home (a tumbledown shack) located on a beach. "This place does have electricity?" asks Jinx. Javier try power up a malfunctioning generator while Jinx eats chorizo and cheese and changes into a Che Guevara T-shirt she finds. After a while, they watch the tapes.

These are videos showing the members of the terrorist cell (four men and a woman named Sara) eating in a cafe, making graffiti on a bridge, dismantling their weapons in a house, etc... Finally something interesting: gunshots during an arms/money exchange with some Algerians, then the cell members' boat which explodes. Javier (who was not there when it happened) explains:

> - Javier: They'd arranged a rendezvous at sea to buy guns and explosives from Algeria. [...] They were double-crossed, murdered... [...]

Meanwhile, Inspector Pez goes to meet Lambert who is attending a concert (by a violinist named Eugienio Negresco); the two men clearly known each other since a long time. Pez tells Lambert that his phone number was found on the body of one of the car bombing victims. Lambert replies that he has been receiving death threats since he helped a journalist investigating ETA and that he thinks there is a mole at MI6. Pez and Lambert go to the safe house where Quinlan is detained but only finds the corpse of the journalist plus the one of a Lambert's man.

Jinx watches other tapes which show that Javier and Sara were lovers. They are about to talk about it when a certain Pedro, a member of Javier's family, arrives at the shack (she lets them talk together).

Later we find Jinx in an internet cafe investigating about the cell exchange which gone wrong, while Pez & Lambert investigate Javier's apartment and see a photo of the tumble-down shack.

Jinx continues to watch the tapes when a detail catches her eye: a man getting out of a "familiar taxi" (the MI6's one) and heading in Sara's direction. Javier tells her that it is Roberto Manfredi, Sara's art teacher. Jinx then tells Javier of one of her discoveries: the place where the wreck of the cell's boat was found and the place where the exchange took place don't match: the current wouldn't have moved the wreck of the boat this way. In addition, only three bodies were discovered.

At Barcelona airport, Colombian triplets (the "Ramons") arrive in town with a Mercedes car (a convertible from the sixties) and collect a whole arsenal (assault rifle, snipers, semtex, etc.) from the trunk of a 4WD.

Javier, who now thinks that Manfredi may have something to do with Sara's death, decides to go after him. He points a gun at Jinx and drives away, "I'm going alone". Jinx steals a Harley-Davidson Electra-glide 1200cc from a motorcyclist at a gas station and begins to tail him. Arriving near the Vizcaya Bridge, Jinx sees the Ramons brothers approaching Javier to kill him. She gets into a Jeep, hits the Mercedes and sends two Ramons into the water.

She gets back on her motorbike and accelerates when the third Ramon shoot on a crane's hook which then heads towards Jinx and which she narrowly manages to avoid. The Ramon tries to climb the bridge to reach the gondola below when Jinx retrieves a sniper from the Mercedes, assemble it and wounds him in the hand.

Javier managed to cross the bridge (unaware of the action scene that took place). A little later we find two Ramons at a garage having their Mercedes repaired while the other is at the hospital across the street, having his hand treated (while asking the doctor to include his gun in his cast, which he will keep throughout the rest of the script).

Jinx is now in Park Güell at a chess table in the company of Alexei Popov (a Russian who spied on Lambert earlier in the script, in the Quinlan's hotel lobby).

> - Popov: I assumed you were a hooker. At that time of day I'd expect him [Lambert] to be at Senora Morales' bordello.
> - Jinx: Oh he screwed me alright, but not that way.

She tells Popov that she needs his help to locate a phone (the one she left in the car Javier left with) and that in exchange she is ready to give him a tip on the French Minister of Trade which should earn him a promotion in Moscow. Popov accepts but asks her why she doesn't ask her own agency to do it; she gives him a vague answer, saying she doesn't want to use the taxpayer's money. Popov also informs her that the Ramons brothers are very expensive assassins who had a 100% success rate so far.

> - Popov: I fear your death warrant has been signed.
> - Jinx: In triplicate.

At the Picasso museum, Javier remembers Sara by quote-unquote "seeing" a younger version of him with her. Meanwhile the opponent Popov was playing chess against before Jinx arrival, is on the phone with Lambert.

Giacinta goes to a building designed by Gaudi where Lambert's apartment is located. She unlocks the door using the plastic from an Evian bottle and begins to search inside. However, the building housekeeper, which is a former Soviet medalist female wrestler, shows up and a fight begins. She sends Jinx flying, our heroine then looks for a knife in the kitchen but doesn't find one. Jinx opens a drawer to avoid one of her opponent's blows: the drawer breaks against the wrestler's strength. The fight continues, Jinx injures the giantess with a plastic film cutter, tries to strangle her with a string of garlic. They crash into a piano, then Jinx ends up kicking the piano's leg which then collapse on her opponent.

Just when Jinx thinks she has gotten rid of her opponent, "like something from a horror movie" the piano rises. Jinx delivers a kick that causes the housekeeper to crash into a bookcase, revealing a secret room. The woman is definitely out of service.

Inside the library room, Jinx finds programs from Eugienio Negresco's concerts, an auction catalog with a violin, and comes across a briefcase similar to the one that exploded earlier in the script, full of money. "Definite proof of [Lambert] involvement".

She receives a phone call from Popov who tells her that the phone she asked him to locate is heading to France when suddenly... The Ramons triplets capture Popov before he can give more details.

We find Lambert having a massage at Senora Morales' brothel when he receives a phone call from Jinx. He tries to trick her by telling her that there seems to be a mole among his men. One of his men responsible for tracing the call tells him that Jinx is calling from his own apartment (where we see her in Lambert's bath). Lambert orders the Ramons to be sent there.

Jinx is now in the street, watching the triplets get out of their Mercedes and run towards the apartment. She takes the opportunity to hide a phone in their car. Once they leave the apartment, she follow them on the Harley-Davidson with music Get It On of T. Rex and Highway Star of Deep Purple played in background from the Ramons' car.

Meanwhile Javier arrives in Les Baux-de-Provence (in France) where Manfredi has a villa. Lambert calls the Ramons and tells them that he located Javier's phone there, Jinx hears this through the phone she placed in the Mercedes.

As Jinx and the Ramons arrive in the medieval town, Javier confronts Manfredi, but discovers that the latter turns out to be in a wheelchair. "So you've come to finish the job?", asks Manfredi.

There is then a flashback to 1996: the night the ETA cell's boat exploded. Manfredi tells what happened: he spoke to Lambert about the arms sale. "The bastard got onto me through Sara, wouldn't let go. He [...] offered immunity. He was only supposed to arrest them", "they weren't supposed to die. [He] lied to me". Indeed, when the cell went for the arms exchange, Lambert and other men with silenced assault rifles hidden in an inflatable boat killed everyone and took the money. "And now we see four wires of red light stretching out of the sea mist [...] the laser sights find their targets".

> - Javier: And how much did you get for selling them out?
> - Manfredi: An ETA bullet in each knee. Would have been in the brain if I'd told them about Lambert.

Not everyone is dead, however, as Javier notices when he sees Sara in the villa:

> - Javier: I never thought I'd be unhappy to see you alive.

Sara told him she had always loved him, that's why she made sure he wasn't there that evening. But she have a new life now... Jinx, who listened to part of the conversation, shows up and asks:

> - Jinx: So how much money was on board the boat?
> - Manfredi: Everything ETA had, millions. We'd robbed five banks that year.
> - Jinx: No wonder Lambert wants to keep a lid on this.

She informs them that the Ramons are very close: they must leave quickly.

Jinx and Javier on the Harley are chased by the Ramon brothers in their Mercedes. Bullets are flying. They drive away from the village and are now on a country road, Jinx deliberately drives towards an oncoming tractor which then swerves towards the Mercedes. The Ramons go off the road and break down a barrier and some beehives to avoid the tractor. There are lots of bees now clinging to the car windshield and Jinx shoots it. Bees infiltrate the Mercedes through the hole in the windshield and the car crashes into a ditch. The Ramon with the hand/gun in the cast gets out of the car and shoots; he manages to hit the motorcycle which also crashes.

Jinx and Javier run to a nearby train station and board a train; the Ramons also manage to get on board. Tired of being chased, Jinx decides to go hunt them down. So there is a hand-to-hand fight in a train carriage with our five characters; Javier manages to throw a Ramon out of the moving train. The Ramon with the cast is about to shoot Javier but Jinx deflects his arm to make him kill one of his brothers instead. In return he almost manages to eject Jinx from the train but she is able to grab onto the underside of a train car. The Ramon tries to track her down by unwinding a chain under the train which bounces ever closer to Jinx and injures her. She manages to grab the chain and throw it into the axle of the train: the Ramon is drawn under a wheel of the train and dies.

Later on the train at night, Jinx and Javier kiss and make love. Meanwhile, Inspector Pez is investigating Lambert's apartment where he discovers a suitcase similar to the one found in the exploded car.

Jinx and Javier go by car to Ronda (Spain). Jinx goes (alone) to an arena where there is a bullfight, hoping to make contact with Ander Calixto, one of the members of the ETA cell who is now a politician. She pretends to be a journalist (Quinlan) in order to approach him.

- Calixto: Do you share the passion of your countryman Hemingway?
- Jinx: I'm not sure I like seeing dumb animals killed. Though the brute that took my pen [at the entrance] wouldn't be missed.

Calixto tells her that he doesn't define himself as a terrorist but as a soldier who defends his way of life, "like in your streets of Los Angeles, the gangs". Afterwards she asks him where she could find Lambert because she says she wants to "ask him about the money that went missing when that boatload of your people got murdered in 'ninety-six". He replies that he didn't know Lambert was involved in this and she leaves (while giving a sexy smile to a matador who, distracted, gets impaled by a bull).

Jinx and Javier leave town:

- Javier: You think he believed you?
- Jinx: Well I wouldn't want to be Charles Lambert any time soon.

Pez is on stakeout in front of Lambert's apartment and sees him loading luggage in his London taxi. Suddenly two scooters with men armed with Uzi come to attack Lambert. There is a short shootout between the three parties and Lambert manages to escape.

Back in Barcelona, Jinx and Javier learn from the press that ETA's assassination attempt against Lambert has failed. Jinx decides to go see an antique dealer to explore a lead: Lambert is a music fan and she wants to follow his trail via a violin that he bought at auction. She tie up the seller:

- Javier: What is it with you and tying guys up?
- Jinx: What's with you guys enjoying it?

The antique dealer is reluctant to help them so Jinx breaks valuables items from his store every time he hesitates to talk to them. In the end the seller tells them that Lambert recently called to find a buyer for his Stradivarius: the transaction will take place tomorrow at Eugienio Negresco's property in Tangier.

Jinx and Javier leave the store and go to a bar. Jinx sees Falco get out of a 4WD and join her.

> - Jinx: Wondered when you'd show that lying face in this town.
> [...]
> - Falco: Something inside me tells me you're not going to like it. [...] This is about Lambert's... future.
> - Jinx: I'm afraid that's been canceled.
> - Falco: Well it's back on. I cut him a deal.
> - Jinx: You know you can be so generous sometimes.

Falco explains that Lambert agreed to reveal everything to the NSA (bank account number, where the bodies are buried) in exchange for immunity. Falco wants Jinx to go to the Tangier's transaction, to protect Lambert in case ETA decide to attacks him again.

Later in their hotel:

> - Javier: How can you go to protect the man who tried to kill you?!
> - Jinx: Because what he's willing to tell makes him worth keeping alive.

They have an argument about it, he tells her that it is not the right thing to do, she retorts that in her world good things doesn't exist, only least worst, etc... Javier ends up to leave the room and join Calixto on his yacht to tell him where Lambert will be in exchange for his word that he will not kill the girl who protects Lambert.

Jinx therefore goes to Morocco and meets Lambert at the safe house of the NSA. He tells her that she lives up to her name (jinx = bad luck). Through satellite imagery, Jinx observes members of ETA stationed near Negresco's villa: Jinx tells Lambert that they will stay at the safe house, they will watch the deal by satellite. Things happen as she said and men in a van come to bring the money from the transaction to the safe house. There is the equivalent of 7 million of dollars.

> - Jinx: You said the deal was for four [million]?
> - Lambert: Oh didn't I tell you? I decided to sell something else: you.

Suddenly the men who came to bring the money point their weapons at Jinx. Then Banaadir, accompanied by the only Ramon still alive, enters the room.

> - Lambert: You ruined my escape by telling ETA all about me. But they're practical people. They were happy to have the proceeds from the violin in exchange for my life. [...] Then I remembered how much trouble you'd caused Mister Banaadir here.

Meanwhile Javier learns everything from Calixto, then an idea comes to him: "you have to stick to your word [to not to kill him], but I don't". Calixto agrees: he gives Javier a gun and Lambert's location.

Jinx, tied up, is pushed into a butchery:

> - Banaadir: It cost me a lot to have the privilege of taking care of you.
> - Jinx: I should imagine you'll want to take things slowly, to get best value.
> [...]

- Banaadir: You know my favorite meat is "tongue"; we'll start there. That should end your comments.
- Lambert: You'll have to excuse me for not watching but I only recently ate.

Lambert explains that Al-Qaeda offered him a consultant employment: "I have to give up on western decadence, but...". Javier arrives on the scene and there is a shootout, Jinx takes the opportunity to do a pirouette and cut her bonds with a cleaver, then dispose of goons with butcher knives. She flees to a dye store, inside where there is then a shootout. At one point she hides and shoot from a pool of red dye and then emerges "glistening red like some ancient warrior". She makes a phone call to Falco who then tells her the location of her enemies while he looks at a satellite imagery of the place.

Jinx kills all the henchmen while protecting Javier, there are liquid/powder dyes flying everywhere. A "perfect memory allowing her to aim at the targets Falco had detailed" to her.

Banaadir now tries to escape by running down a descending slope, Javier opens the door of a car and releases the handbrake: it goes down and crushes Banaadir who dies. Lambert is nowhere to be found (the script doesn't give the fate of the last Ramon: whether he dies during the shooting or not, as if the writers had forgotten to give this character an outcome).

At sea, Inspector Pez and the Coast Guard raid Calixto's yacht and place him under arrest.

Jinx and Javier are now at a hotel, showering to clean off the dyes. The next day when Javier wakes up, Jinx is no longer there: she has left him a note saying she will meet him at his tumbledown shack on the beach.

Meanwhile Lambert is on another beach, in Qatar, when suddenly he sees Jinx come out of the water in a bikini, a harpoon gun in her hand with which she kills him. "The clear blue waters ripple gently. The Jinx has gone. Fade to black. THE END".

So, this was it Jinx. And for all those who are still wondering as we all had: no, there is no appearance of James Bond in it, whether in a cameo or as a secondary character. In fact: his name isn't even mentioned in the entire script!

We will note a certain desire to not want to emulate the Bond's films with Jinx who isn't even/more a spy strictly speaking here (she is not from the NSA, what a strange choice!) and the absence of gadgets while Die Another Day was dapper in that regard.

No threat to the world stakes given that in fact our villain is just a crook from MI6 who stole money from a terrorist cell and who wants to cover his tracks when about ten years later a journalist investigating the subject makes contact with one of the surviving members of this cell. This is basically the plot, which the narration however tends to make so complicated to follow. In the end, we are more on something like The Rhythm Section before the hour or any film of the genre rather than in a classic James Bond film... A sort of brutal break with a return to earth after the eccentricities of Die Another Day. The Ramons brought a little more memorable side for the villains.

The beginning with the death of the parents is cliché and the action scenes are lacking of spectacular ambitions. The filming locations (almost all located in a Mediterranean climate) are visually interesting. We also feel that September 11, 2001 is still fresh in people's minds with this theme of terrorism in a film which nevertheless tends to be of the romance genre with the story of Jinx and Javier. Finally, we will note a certain desire of the screenwriters to characterize Jinx in the script as someone who is very smart (especially in linking things together, analyzing), resourceful, and with a good memory.

Once again, this is a first script, who knows how the story would have evolved in the following ones if the film hadn't been canceled?

- Robert Wade[22] : We ended up spending two months working with Stephen Frears on which was highly enjoyable and he's a really, really good director [...]. Halle Berry was very happy with the film, the producer seemed to be happy and Stephen Frears was happy and we were happy, but the studio just didn't want to make it at the very last minute. I think it was going to cost about $80m or $90m and Charlie's Angels hadn't done very well, and Tomb Raider hadn't done very well, so maybe it was they didn't want the female led action movie. But it was extremely disappointing for us because we'd put so much into that film.

- MGM's Chris McGurk[23] : At that point we weren't sure Stephen Frears was the right guy to direct Jinx. It was like a $80-90 million budget. [...] The studio ended up killing the movie because we were just too nervous that a) it wasn't going to work and b) it would have a very negative impact on the franchise if it didn't work. [...] Barbara was really outraged that I had led her down the primrose path and wasted a lot of effort.

Sources/references from chapter 20.5: Jinx

1 "Die Another Day: Lee Tamahori looks back at his 'controversial' James Bond film" by Tom Butler on Yahoo website (2002): https://uk.movies.yahoo.com/movies/die-another-day-lee-tamohori-controversial-james-bond-movie-061555530.html

2 An interview in IF Magazine, via "Producer Barbara Broccoli talks indepth about Casino Royale and the shift in direction" on MI6-HQ website (2006): https://www.mi6-hq.com/news/index.php?itemid=4460

3 "Spectre' Producer Expects Daniel Craig to Return for Another Bond Movie" by Stephen Galloway in The Hollywood Reporter website (2015): https://www.hollywoodreporter.com/news/general-news/spectre-producer-expects-daniel-craig-837655/

4 "The James Bond Archives" by Jamie Russell and Paul Duncan (2012).

5 "The Infamous Billy The Kidd Talks With James Bond Producer Barbara Broccoli About The Past, Present And Future Of 007" by The Kidd on Ain't It Cool website (2012): http://legacy.aintitcool.com/node/58882

6 "Halle Berry Confirms She'd Make Bond Girl Jinx a Female Spy Franchise"by Mike Szymanski on Zap2It website (November 10, 2002): https://www.zap2it.com/movies/news/story/0,1259,---14326,00.html

7 "Halle Berry Confirms She'd Make Bond Girl Jinx a Female Spy Franchise"by Mike Szymanski on Zap2It website (November 10, 2002): https://www.zap2it.com/movies/news/story/0,1259,---14326,00.html

8 "Halle Berry Confirms She'd Make Bond Girl Jinx a Female Spy Franchise"by Mike Szymanski on Zap2It website (November 10, 2002): https://www.zap2it.com/movies/news/story/0,1259,---14326,00.html

9 "MGM Register Jinx Domain" on Commanderbond.net (November 15, 2002): http://commanderbond.net/1732/mgm-register-jinx-domain.html

10 "Brosnan Wants Role in Jinx Movie" on Commanderbond.net (November 13, 2002): http://commanderbond.net/1724/brosnan-wants-role-in-jinx-movie.html

11 "Latest On Bond 21 Start Date & Jinx Movie Status" on MI6-HQ website (May 7, 2003): https://www.mi6-hq.com/sections/articles/bond_21_mayrumours?id=157
"Jinx Another Day?"on MI6-HQ website (June 4, 2003): https://www.mi6-hq.com/sections/articles/bond_20_jinx_spinoff

12 "Halle Berry Receives Jinx Script" by Tim Roth on Commanderbond.net (July 21, 2003): https://commanderbond.net/2088/halle-berry-receives-jinx-script.html
"Halle Berry talks about 007 spin-off" by Liane Bonin on Entertainment Weekly website (July 21, 2003): https://ew.com/article/2003/07/21/halle-berry-talks-about-007-spin/

13 "Some Kind of Hero: The Remarkable Story of the James Bond Films" by Matthew Field & Ajay Chowdhury (2015).

14 Purvis and Wade interview at the The Orange Word event (2004) transcription on MI6-HQ website: https://www.mi6-hq.com/sections/articles/interview_purvis_and_wade5

15 "Halle Berry Confirms She'd Make Bond Girl Jinx a Female Spy Franchise"by Mike Szymanski on Zap2It website (November 10, 2002): https://www.zap2it.com/movies/news/story/0,1259,---14326,00.html

16 SpyMaster podcast #66 with Lee Tamahori (2023): https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=vMg10UZN0Qo

17 "Die Another Day - Q&A with Lee Tamahori" on Phase9 Entertainment website: http://www.phase9.tv/moviefeatures/dieanotherdayq&a-leetamahori1.shtml
"Saving the world with Bond may be just the start for Berry" by Bill Desowitz in The Los Angeles Times (November 25, 2002):
"Halle Berry plans the first Bond girl spin-off ever" by Liane Bonin on Entertainment Weekly website (November 11, 2002): https://ew.com/article/2002/11/11/halle-berry-plans-first-bond-girl-spin-ever/
"Some Kind of Hero: The Remarkable Story of the James Bond Films" by Matthew Field & Ajay Chowdhury (2015).

18 "Halle Berry Confirms She'd Make Bond Girl Jinx a Female Spy Franchise"by Mike Szymanski on Zap2It website (November 10, 2002): https://www.zap2it.com/movies/news/story/0,1259,---14326,00.html

19 Purvis and Wade interview at the The Orange Word event (2004) transcription on MI6-HQ website: https://www.mi6-hq.com/sections/articles/interview_purvis_and_wade5

20 (Sorry, I don't remember where I found this; neither the eventual exact quote).

21 "Skyfall Writers on How They Came Up With the Movie's Last-Minute Title and the Explosive Finale" by Phil Pirrello on The Hollywood Reporter website (2022): https://www.hollywoodreporter.com/movies/movie-features/skyfall-writers-on-daniel-craig-james-bond-1235257806/
For the Javier name in Skyfall drafts, see also "Skyfall Writers on How They Came Up With the Movie's Last-Minute Title and the Explosive Finale" by Phil Pirrello on The Hollywood Reporter website (2022): https://www.hollywoodreporter.com/movies/movie-features/skyfall-writers-on-daniel-craig-james-bond-1235257806/ and "Some Kind of Hero: The Remarkable Story of the James Bond Films" by Matthew Field & Ajay Chowdhury (2015).
For Wade quote about Bardem considered for Renard: "Some Kind of Hero: The Remarkable Story of the James Bond Films" by Matthew Field & Ajay Chowdhury (2015).

22 Purvis and Wade interview at the The Orange Word event (2004) transcription on MI6-HQ website: https://www.mi6-hq.com/sections/articles/interview_purvis_and_wade5

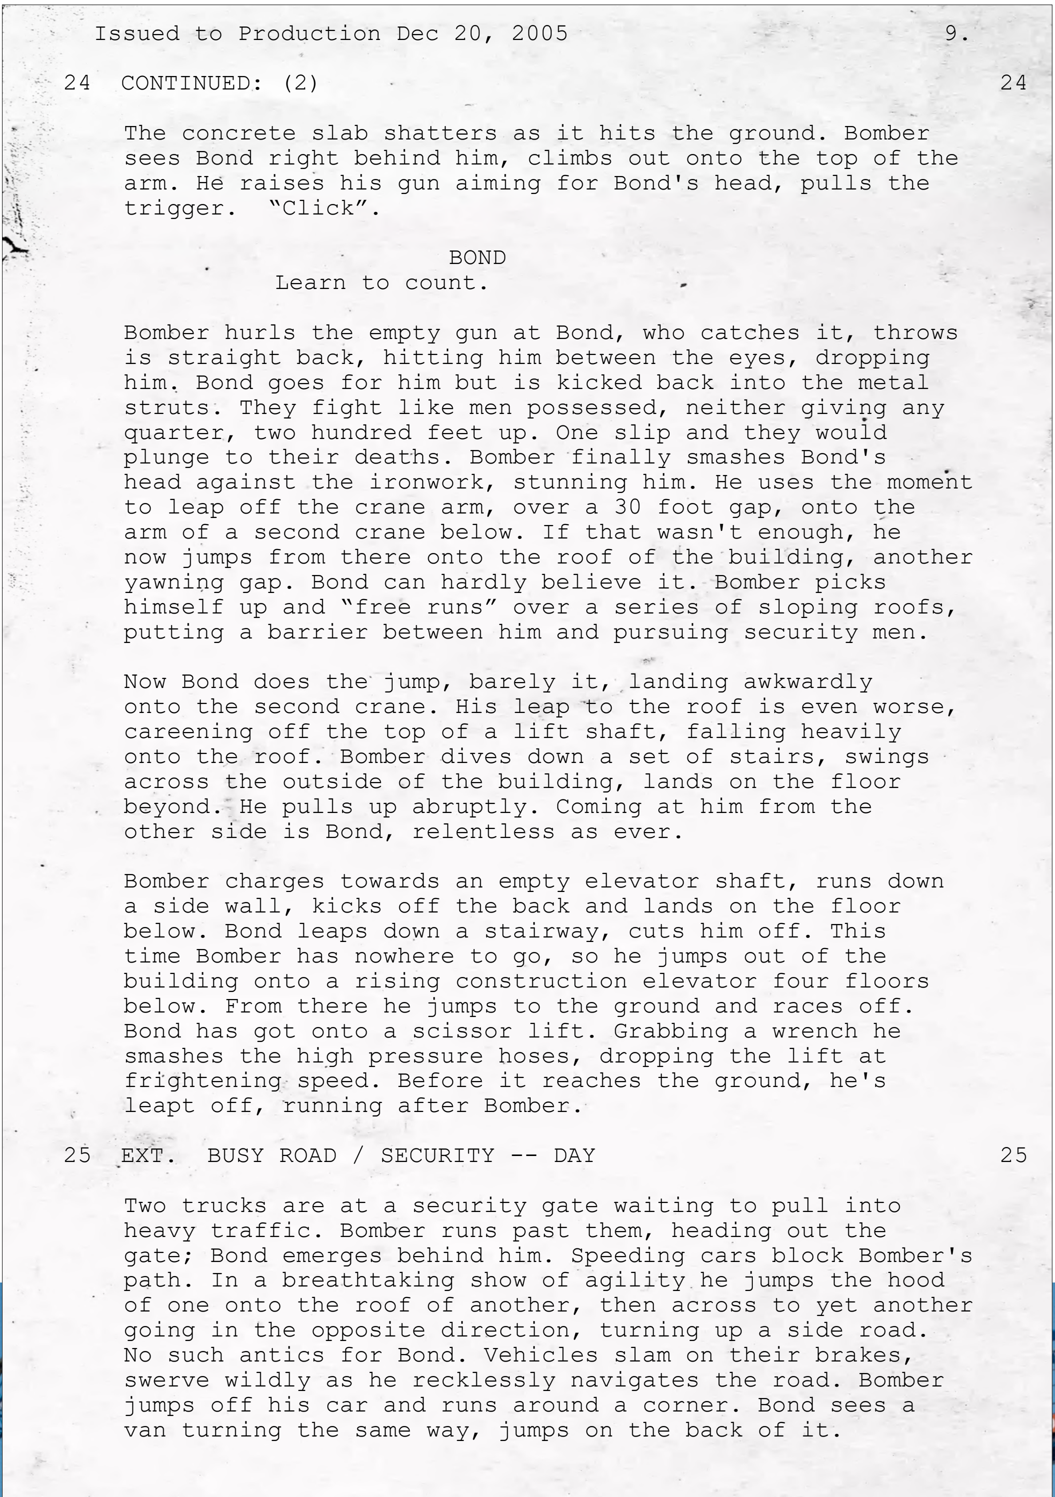
23 "Some Kind of Hero: The Remarkable Story of the James Bond Films" by Matthew Field & Ajay Chowdhury (2015).

CASINO ROYALE
007
Casino Royale

Release date (premiere) :
14 November 2006

Writing credit as per title sequence:
"Screenplay by Neal Purvis & Robert Wade and Paul Haggis"

Director :........................Martin Campbell
Producers :...............Michael Wilson and Barbara Broccoli
Director photography :.......Phil Meheux
Set Designer :.......................Peter Lamont
Composer :...........................David Arnold
Editor :..................................Stuart Baird
Title sequence :.............Daniel Kleinman
Title song vocals :................Chris Cornell



Issued to Production Dec 20, 2005 9.

24 CONTINUED: (2) 24

The concrete slab shatters as it hits the ground. Bomber sees Bond right behind him, climbs out onto the top of the arm. He raises his gun aiming for Bond's head, pulls the trigger. "Click".

BOND
Learn to count.

Bomber hurls the empty gun at Bond, who catches it, throws is straight back, hitting him between the eyes, dropping him. Bond goes for him but is kicked back into the metal struts. They fight like men possessed, neither giving any quarter, two hundred feet up. One slip and they would plunge to their deaths. Bomber finally smashes Bond's head against the ironwork, stunning him. He uses the moment to leap off the crane arm, over a 30 foot gap, onto the arm of a second crane below. If that wasn't enough, he now jumps from there onto the roof of the building, another yawning gap. Bond can hardly believe it. Bomber picks himself up and "free runs" over a series of sloping roofs, putting a barrier between him and pursuing security men.

Now Bond does the jump, barely it, landing awkwardly onto the second crane. His leap to the roof is even worse, careening off the top of a lift shaft, falling heavily onto the roof. Bomber dives down a set of stairs, swings across the outside of the building, lands on the floor beyond. He pulls up abruptly. Coming at him from the other side is Bond, relentless as ever.

Bomber charges towards an empty elevator shaft, runs down a side wall, kicks off the back and lands on the floor below. Bond leaps down a stairway, cuts him off. This time Bomber has nowhere to go, so he jumps out of the building onto a rising construction elevator four floors below. From there he jumps to the ground and races off. Bond has got onto a scissor lift. Grabbing a wrench he smashes the high pressure hoses, dropping the lift at frightening speed. Before it reaches the ground, he's leapt off, running after Bomber.

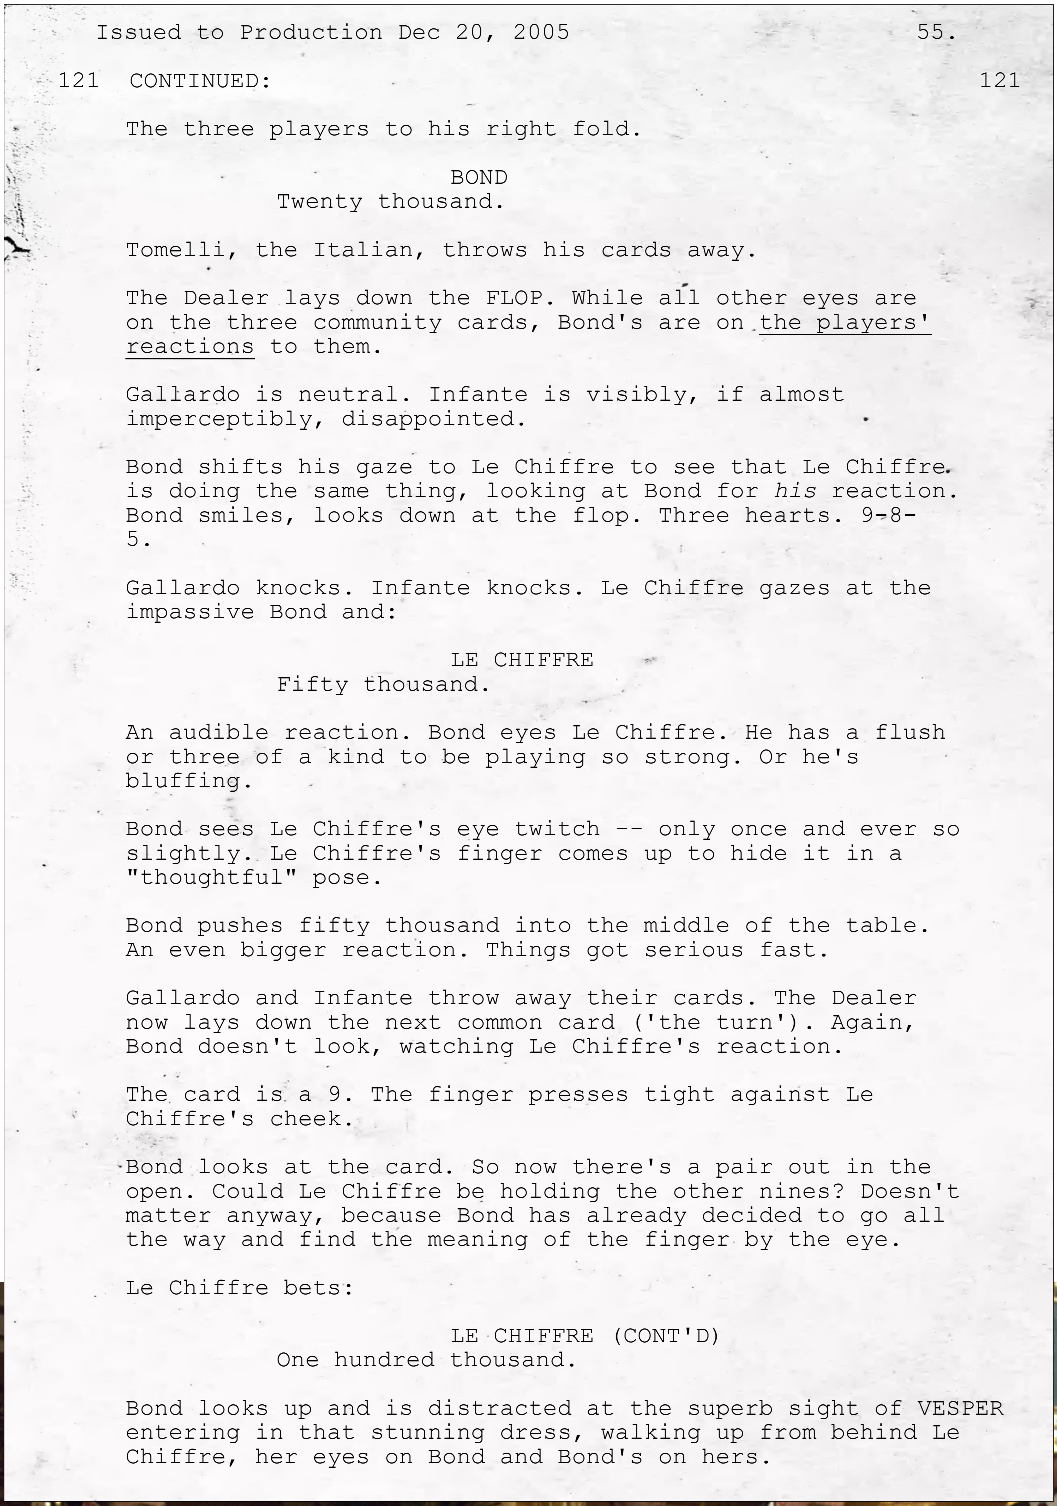
25 EXT. BUSY ROAD / SECURITY -- DAY 25

Two trucks are at a security gate waiting to pull into heavy traffic. Bomber runs past them, heading out the gate; Bond emerges behind him. Speeding cars block Bomber's path. In a breathtaking show of agility he jumps the hood of one onto the roof of another, then across to yet another going in the opposite direction, turning up a side road. No such antics for Bond. Vehicles slam on their brakes, swerve wildly as he recklessly navigates the road. Bomber jumps off his car and runs around a corner. Bond sees a van turning the same way, jumps on the back of it.

DANGER
VERIFICATION DES CABLES

CHAPTER 21

CASINO ROYALE



Issued to Production Dec 20, 2005 55.

121 CONTINUED: 121

The three players to his right fold.

BOND
Twenty thousand.

Tomelli, the Italian, throws his cards away.

The Dealer lays down the FLOP. While all other eyes are on the three community cards, Bond's are on the players' reactions to them.

Gallardo is neutral. Infante is visibly, if almost imperceptibly, disappointed.

Bond shifts his gaze to Le Chiffre to see that Le Chiffre is doing the same thing, looking at Bond for his reaction. Bond smiles, looks down at the flop. Three hearts. 9-8-5.

Gallardo knocks. Infante knocks. Le Chiffre gazes at the impassive Bond and:

LE CHIFFRE
Fifty thousand.

An audible reaction. Bond eyes Le Chiffre. He has a flush or three of a kind to be playing so strong. Or he's bluffing.

Bond sees Le Chiffre's eye twitch -- only once and ever so slightly. Le Chiffre's finger comes up to hide it in a "thoughtful" pose.

Bond pushes fifty thousand into the middle of the table. An even bigger reaction. Things got serious fast.

Gallardo and Infante throw away their cards. The Dealer now lays down the next common card ('the turn'). Again, Bond doesn't look, watching Le Chiffre's reaction.

The card is a 9. The finger presses tight against Le Chiffre's cheek.

Bond looks at the card. So now there's a pair out in the open. Could Le Chiffre be holding the other nines? Doesn't matter anyway, because Bond has already decided to go all the way and find the meaning of the finger by the eye.

Le Chiffre bets:

LE CHIFFRE (CONT'D)
One hundred thousand.

Bond looks up and is distracted at the superb sight of VESPER entering in that stunning dress, walking up from behind Le Chiffre, her eyes on Bond and Bond's on hers.

Cast:

James Bond :	Daniel Craig
Le Chiffre :	Mads Mikkelsen
Vesper Lynd :	Eva Green
René Mathis :	Giancarlo Giannini
Alex Dimitrios :	Simon Abkarian
Solange :	Caterina Murino
Steven Obanno :	Isaach de Bankolé
Valenka :	Ivana Miličević
Mr. White :	Jesper Christensen
Adolph Gettler :	Richard Sammel
Mollaka :	Sébastien Foucan
Felix Leiter :	Jeffrey Wright
M :	Judi Dench
Villiers :	Tobias Menzies

Main filming locations: Czech Republic, Bahamas and Italy.

My favorite James Bond film. I just can't find any default in it. Between the storyline, the characters (including one of the best Bond Girls ever), the actors, the stunts, the special effects, the direction, the sets, the title sequence and the music: everything works to the perfection. The course has definitely been rectified since Die Another Day, with a desire to make James Bond more anchored in reality and to use digital special effects more wisely. Like many, I wasn't convinced by Daniel Craig when he was announced, but the actor show he was the perfect choice from the pre-title, instantly going from "blond" to "Bond" and presenting a definitely more human, arrogant, and bleeding 007; externally as well as internally.

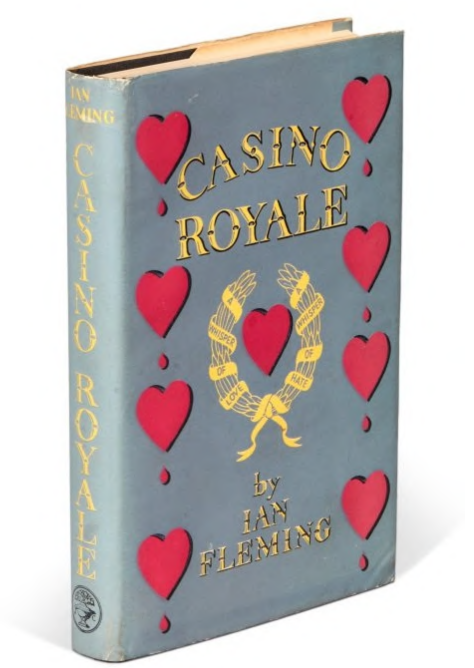
Table of contents

Casino Royale

The novel....................1482
Reboot....................1484
December 13, 2005' script....................1492

The novel

> - Neal Purvis and Robert Wade[1] : We were in LA working on the Jinx script when there was a bit of a lull as we waited for Halle Berry to be able to read it, and Barbara and Michael simply smiled and said "It's time to re-read Casino Royale". I remember very clearly sitting on a hotel balcony looking at the ocean, reading the book, and thinking "this calls for a cigar". At that stage there was no discussion of the approach, but we had all really enjoyed crafting a fairly down-to-earth espionage picture in the Jinx project and this was obviously going to be in the same vein.



Casino Royale by Ian Fleming, published in 1953, is the first James Bond novel and, de facto, the first place in which the character even appears.

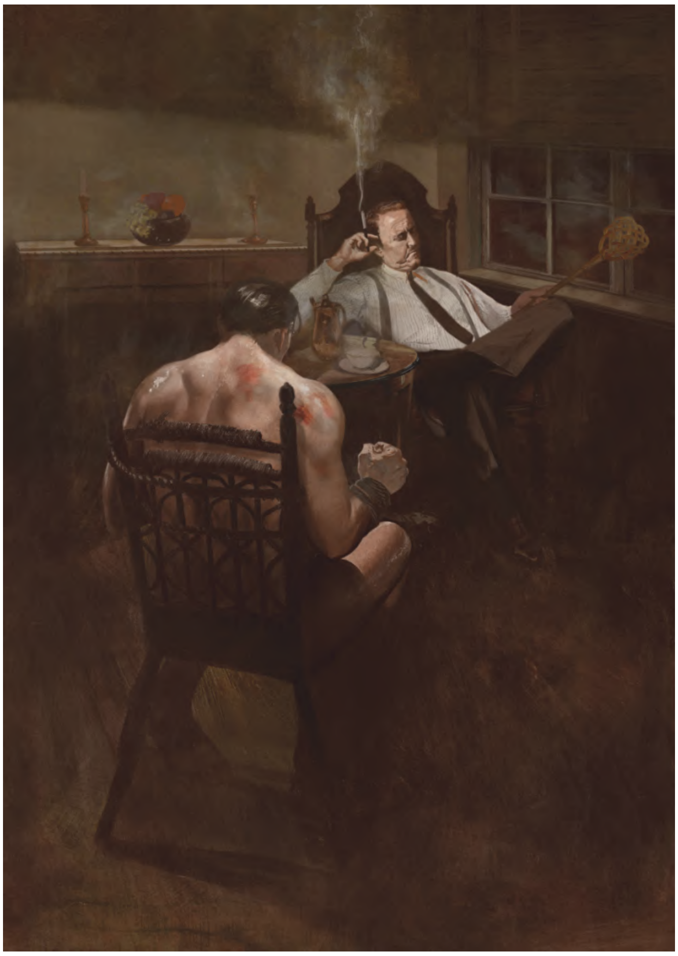
M gives 007 the mission to go to a casino in Royale-les-Eaux (in France) to beat Le Chiffre, a treasurer who is an agent in the pay of the USSR, at baccarat. Following the Marthe Richard law who saw the closing of brothels establishments, Le Chiffre lost the money that his employers had entrusted to him and that he had visibly invested secretly in a chain of French brothels. He tries to cope with bankruptcy by regaining the money at the casino to avoid death by SMERSH.

Bond poses as a rich Jamaican but his cover is blown before he even arrives and he narrowly escapes a bomb assassination attempt. James Bond can fortunately count on the support of French agent René Mathis of the Deuxième Bureau (french intelligence) and CIA agent Felix Leiter. But also the intriguing Vesper Lynd: the personal assistant to the head of the Soviet section of the British Secret Service, who has been assigned to his mission.

The baccarat game begins with ten players around the table. In just a few hours Bond loses the 23 million francs entrusted to him by the Secret Service. As he contemplates his failure, Felix Leiter gives him an envelope containing 32 million francs in the name of the Marshall Plan. The game then turns into a duel between Le Chiffre and Bond, and a henchman of Le Chiffre tries to make Bond abandon with a weapon hidden in his cane. 007, however, manages to disarm him.

Bond beats Le Chiffre at baccarat and wins the pot of more than 70 million francs. After retrieving and hiding the money, he finds Vesper to celebrate the success of their mission.

This is without counting on Le Chiffre who, in desperation, kidnaps Vesper. Bond chases him at the wheel of his Bentley 4½ Litre but crashes off the road when Le Chiffre put spikes on the it. Bond is also captured.



Le Chiffre tortures 007 with a carpet beater with which he stroke Bond's testicles. Finally a SMERSH agent intervenes, kills Le Chiffre and decides to spare Bond's life by revealing to him that he have no orders to kill him. The SMERSH agent nevertheless takes care to mark Bond with a blade with the letter "Ш" (for Spy) on the back of one of his hands, so that he can be recognized anywhere in the world as a spy.

Bond is hospitalized several days to recover. Vesper's daily visits make him realize that he is in love with her. He expresses his desire to resign from the Secret Service and goes to convalesce with Vesper Lynd (he even plans to propose to her) in a French guest house. Bond, however, becomes suspicious of Vesper due to her mood swings and her terror at the sight of a man with a patch over one eye, Gettler, who also came to frequent the guest house.

One day, Bond discovers that Vesper has committed suicide by overdosing on sleeping pills. In her farewell letter she explains that she worked as a double agent for the MVD/MWD because her lover had been kidnapped by the Russians. When she saw Gettler again, she realized that she could never get a fresh start with Bond because of the Russians and that she was putting him in danger; she thus decided to end her life.

Bond is content to report laconically to his superiors that "the bitch is dead" (although he will retain feelings for Vesper to the extent that we can note in the following novels that he makes pilgrimage to Vesper's grave at Royale-les-Eaux every year).

Reboot

EON/MGM/Danjaq only acquired the rights to adapt the novel Casino Royale recently, when they acquired them from Sony in 1999 following the legal battle against the latter who was trying to set up a rival franchise with Kevin McClory.

As Cubby Broccoli said (according to his daughter Barbara): "Whenever you're stuck, go back to Ian Fleming"[2].

Robert Wade explains: "You can't go bigger than [Die Another Day], you have to reconceive the thing. It has coincided with Casino Royale now being owned by Danjaq, so the timing was perfect"[3].

> - Neal Purvis and Robert Wade[4] : We had said to Pierce the first time we met him how great it would be to do Casino Royale, but in those days the rights weren't owned by Michael and Barbara. So we had always wanted to do it, amazingly, even before Tarantino [who declared at the time in the press that he wanted to do Casino Royale with Brosnan].

Purvis and Wade begin writing Casino Royale in the mind of making it the fifth Brosnan film, "We have started writing the new [film] but we've only been writing it for about two weeks [...] as far as we understand it Pierce Brosnan is Bond" declared Wade in an interview in 2004[5]. According to The James Bond Archives, the writers began working on the script in January 2004[6].

> - Neal Purvis and Robert Wade[7] : Our original concept was that it did not need to be a reboot, and that it could work in the context of the series like this: the Bond we meet at the start of Casino Royale is the same guy that we've always known, a womanizer who never lets women get close, and the reason for this emotional isolation is that he is an orphan who has always fended for himself and not relied on others.
>
> But in the course of his relationship with Vesper (who we made into an orphan herself) he suddenly gets an insight into normal life; ie, the possibilities of being part of a family, the thing he has never really known…
>
> In On Her Majesty's Secret Service he married Tracy but he wasn't quitting the job; ie, he didn't give up everything for her… But with Vesper, he knows that to have a chance of a normal life he must give up the career which has always provided his identity and "family"; and he is prepared to do this for her and the chance of happiness (which he had never expected to happen to him).
>
> However, when her past betrayal is revealed, along with the manipulative evil which forced her into it, he realizes that here is a cause to fight, worth donating your life to. In those moments of happiness with Vesper he tasted real life, so he now values the world that he is protecting. [...] So Bond emerges from Casino Royale fully-formed, a man who understands the value of the world that he is out to protect, and the possibility of happiness he is permanently renouncing for himself!
>
> However, it was hard to make this very clear in the script, and we all liked the reference in the novel to the two kills that earned him the "00", so it was decided to go all the way, show the kills and start him off again.

"We also were having problems with [Brosnan's] agent, you know. He had recently changed agents", Wilson says[8]. Eventually it will be decided that Casino Royale will be a reboot of the saga without Brosnan. The producers are determined to have the torture scene, Vesper's death and the line "the bitch is dead", no matter what MGM (bought by Sony) thinks about it[9].

"We thought there is no point in doing the book unless you do do it as closely as possible", Purvis adds[10]. "Generally, Bond films, his character remains the same from beginning to the end. And this was an opportunity to show how he develops, and changes"[11].

With Brosnan out of the picture, Purvis and Wade say they were "writing (as best we could) for the man James Bond, as he was described in the novel. We wanted to start the picture with the free-running because it immediately said [to the audience]: this guy is young and explosive and very physical"[12] and "gadget free"[13]. "We were also aware there had never been a foot chase in a Bond movie before", Purvis says[14].

The idea for the parkour sequence came to the writers while watching a 2003 documentary on the BBC: Jump London, featuring Sébastien Foucan[15].

> - Martin Campbell[16] : In the case of Casino, there were two sequences from Purvis and Wade: the chase at the front was a five or six-line paragraph that basically said, "Now we're going to have the best parkour sequence ever filmed". Which I understand. No point in writing six pages of a particular parkour sequence. You might as well just put that in there, because between the director and the stunt arranger, and your second-unit guy, you're going to make a sequence. So that was their idea, the parkour. And the sinking house at the end.

Purvis and Wade revealed to the authors of the book Some Kind of Hero that among their first ideas for the film were to feature the Burj Al Arab in Dubai and Cape Town in South Africa, where Bond was to prevent the hijacking of a cruise ship[17]. This will be replaced by the destruction of an aircraft like the Skyfleet. "We'd read a book on the financial underpinnings of 9/11, and there was a big sell-off of airline stocks the day before [the attack]", Wade recalls[18].

In Madagascar, Wade says, Bond was "playing chess with an old drunkard guy called Two Fingers who may or may not be Lord Lucan"[19] (a real Briton convicted of murder and who disappeared without a trace on November 8, 1974).

The film also replaces Royale-Les-Eaux in France with a town in Montenegro because, as Wilson notes, "we needed somewhere that seemed to be out of the reach of the international banking authorities in order for Le Chiffre to feel safe enough to come out of hiding"[20]. "They used to have a globe in the office upstairs at EON", says Purvis, "and notionally we said Montenegro for the casino, because it sounded mysterious. Then we looked at where you could go from there, and Venice seemed like a very good place"[21]. A chase on horseback at Venice was at one point considered[22].

The writers also draw inspiration from the short story The Hildebrand Rarity by Fleming: "We had envisaged Dimitrios being Milton Krest and the wife being Liz Krest. Bond helps her and stuffs a fish down his throat", says Purvis[23]. The character of Fidele Barbey was to appear (and be killed)[24].

Another short story by Ian Fleming which at one time served as inspiration is 007 in New York. In it Bond is sent to New York to warn a former English female spy that her roommate is an enemy. 007 must make contact with the girl outside the Central Park Zoo's reptile greenhouse.

007 in New York is, however, more of an internal monologue with Bond than an adventure full of twists and turns: a critique of the city through his eyes as he is led to think about hotels, restaurants, bars and the life and mentality of the New Yorker. This is an opportunity to find out more about the character, such as his recipe for making scrambled eggs, the fact that he once had a small apartment in New York or even the name of one of his lovers in town: Solange.

Solange will be a first name used for Dimitrios' wife while the writers will at one point consider the New York Zoo for the location of the first assassination carried out by James Bond[25].

As the storyline developed, regular poker evenings were held with Michael Wilson and "the final hand [of the film] was a game that we played with Michael", reveals Wade[26].

Purvis and Wade say they were behind the idea of the black-and-white pre-title: "Just thought it was an interesting way of starting afresh; we hoped it would have a strange cold war, yet modern, resonance"[27].

For Casino Royale, Martin Campbell returns to the director's chair after successfully relaunching the saga with GoldenEye a decade earlier. He also claims to be at the origin of black and white in the pre-title[28].

Campbell wasn't a fan of what Purvis and Wade wrote for the film:

- Martin Campbell[29] : I want to put this delicately, but I personally don't think Purvis and Wade do much service to Bond. What happens with them, I guess, is they lay the basics and always another writer, inevitably a Paul Haggis or a Jez Butterworth, or whoever, comes in and completely redoes the script. That seems to be the pattern now, where the director comes in and sort of then wants his own writer. Barbara and Michael, to their credit, always do it. They don't disagree.

"I suggested Paul Haggis should write it", Campbell explains, "to make it much more gritty, more realistic and make Bond basically a more interesting character"[30]. "Because, frankly, I think the script with the two boys deviated so much from the book [...]. Massive action sequences, and I remember there was a huge action sequence on a dam, of all things. [...] I suggested Paul Haggis and Paul went right back to the book. That's what he based it on and completely rewrote it from start to finish"[31].

Paul Edward Haggis[32] was born in 1953 in Canada. During his youth he went to Catholic school and frequented the theater's world (his parents owned one).

He then attended Ridley College in Ontario but due to behavioral problems, he was transferred after a year to a school in Muskoka Lakes. After being inspired by Alfred Hitchcock and Jean-Luc Godard, Haggis studied art at H. B. Beal Secondary School.

He opened a cinema in Toronto where he showed films banned by the Ontario Censorship Board, such as Last Tango in Paris. After watching the film Blow-Up by Michelangelo Antonioni in 1974, he went to England with the intention of becoming a fashion photographer.

Bankrupt, Haggis returned to Canada to pursue film studies at Fanshawe College. It was around this time that he converted to the Church of Scientology and attempted to write some plays. His musical Oh! Canada proved popular enough, that one thought he should aim for Hollywood.

In 1975, with the encouragement and financial support of his father, Haggis moved to Los Angeles to begin a writing career in the entertainment industry. Times were tough however, and he did odd jobs as a furniture mover and in-store photographer, while perfecting his craft at night. He was eventually hired by Jack Humphrey to write the pilot for a sitcom called Hangin' In. Then, while taking a writing class, Haggis met a writer from Diff'rent Strokes who had just broken up with his writing partner. With a script for the show expected the next day, Haggis offered his services for free and had thus just launched his career.

Paul Haggis has written for a variety of television programs, including cartoons and sitcoms, including Heathcliff, Scooby-Doo and Scrappy-Doo, The Love Boat, L.A. Law or The Facts of Life. With The Facts of Life, Haggis gets his first credit as a producer.

Paul Haggis notably contributed to the creation of the television series Walker Texas Ranger (his participation was however very brief), Due South, Family Law and You Take the Kids (on which he tries his hand at directing).

Between several television series, Haggis wrote (and directed) his first film: Red Hot. However, it was a decade later that he managed to break into the cinema industry, by writing his second film, Million Dollar Baby (2004), on which he is also one of the co-producers. In 2004 Haggis also wrote the film Crash, which he produced and directed himself, allowing him to maintain great control over the script.

His work on Million Dollar Baby and Crash earned him a bunch of nominations and awards.

Haggis then wrote the film The Last Kiss (2006) and then adapted a novel by James Bradley about the Second World War, Flags of Our Fathers directed by Clint Eastwood, before signing rewrites for EON's 21st James Bond, Casino Royale.

In 2007 Haggis wrote/directed/produced the film In the Valley of Elah and also create the television series The Black Donnellys where he participates in the writing/directing/production of episodes.

Next comes the 22nd James Bond, Quantum of Solace (2008), where he was again tasked with rewriting after Purvis and Wade.

After remaining an active member of the Church of Scientology for 35 years, Haggis left the organization in 2009, disagreeing with its support about a proposed law to ban gay marriage in California. He will be interviewed as part of a group of former Scientologists for the film Going Clear: Scientology and the Prison of Belief (2015) adapted from the book of the same name by Lawrence Wright (in which Haggis also testified).

In 2010, Haggis wrote and directed The Next Three Days (The Next Three Days), remake of the French film Pour elle. Then in 2011 he participated in the writing of a video game: Modern Warfare 3 from the saga Call of Duty.

In 2013 he wrote/directed Third Person then participates in the creation of the series Show Me a Hero in 2015.

For Robert Wade, Campbell viewed them unfavorably because "we kind of represented Barbara and Michael's camp, he was always going to make sure we got fired"[33].

"Paul [Haggis] didn't reinvent anything in Casino Royale", defends Wade, "the film is essentially faithful to the script that we wrote. He just refined it and did a very good job at it"[34]. Purvis adds: "The only major change was his decision to place the character of Vesper in the sinking Venetian palace"[35]. The idea for the sinking palace supported by air balloons came to the screenwriters after seeing a documentary about the Tower of Pisa[36].

"We had the scene of the sunken house, but Vesper would die right before that", Purvis revealed[37]. "Originally she committed suicide like in the novel because we wanted to stay very close to Fleming", continues Wade[38].

Paul Haggis was on vacation in Italy where he had promised to himself not to write, when he was contacted[39]:

> - Paul Haggis[40] : I received a call from my agents at the time, who said: "The Bond producers want you to write the next Bond movie". I said, "Have they seen my movies? [...] Do they understand that if I do Bond, I will ruin ir for everyone forever?". They laughed and said, "I think they know who they're talking to". So, I said, "Okay, fine, I'd love to speak to them".

They come to visit him there:

> - Paul Haggis[41] : Before they arrived, they sent me the script to read. Purvis and Wade are good writers; I was a big fan of Let Him Have It, but I felt that they hadn't really redefined this character. My understanding is that they wanted us to redefine Bond, and the script had problems. Anyway, Barbara, Michael, and Martin came to the town of Balsina, a little town, and we talked. I seem to remember saying something like, "The script has many sins, only one of them is unforgivable. You don't have an act three. Would you like one?". That was a big, complete asshole move. And they said, "Yeah, of course". But at this point they have already built this giant set [...], including one for the sinking house at the end. In this version, if I recall, once they get to Venice, Bond goes out shopping or something, then he comes back to the hotel room and finds Vesper dead on the bed, having slit her wrists. There's a note that says, "Watch the TV". So Bond sits down and puts a video cassette in the television, and for a couple of pages sits there and watches Vesper's taped confession, telling him the entire plot, that she had betrayed him, blah, blah, blah. It ends with a man we've never met, who's across St. Mark's Square picking up money at the bank and ends up at the sinking house with these other guys. Bond kills them and gets away, and that's the end.

"And I don't know why but I thought that Vesper had to be in the sinking house and Bond has to want to kill her and then try and save her", Haggis says[42]. "He's going be unable to do that, and he's going to be haunted by that forever. After that, he becomes James Bond"[43]. Haggis presented his idea and the production decided to entrust him with the rewrites of the third act.

> - Paul Haggis[44] : So I wrote act three and sent it to them. [...] And they liked it. But then they said, "Quick, what's next?". So I ended up writing act two and sent it to them. Then they said, "Paul, Paul, Paul, we need an act one, we're going to go shoot".

"They wanted someone to tweak the character a bit", says Haggis, "we're trying to do for Bond what Batman Begins did for Batman"[45].

> - Paul Haggis[46] : It was great fun doing it, though I didn't expect it to be me, because although I've always loved Bond, that's not the kind of writer I am. But I did love just disappearing into that character and reinventing the dialogue and treating him like a human being rather than the Bond we've come to know who was larger than life. What I needed to do was create the characters and really dig in under the skin of Bond and Vesper. I was really curious as to how Bond became Bond. What was his relationship to women?

> - Paul Haggis[47] : They trusted me. And then I had a director in Martin Campbell who wouldn't change a word of my script. And it was just the best experience of my life. I just had so much fun playing with those conventions, taking Bond and asking real questions about him: what's it like to be an assassin? [...] You know, you get in close with a knife [...] and you kill somebody, you get blood all over you, and no matter how much you've wrapped your soul in Teflon, somehow that will affect you forever and it scars you.

> - Purvis and Wade[48] : Paul made the dialogue... Fizz. Due to circumstances beyond our control we were never able to do a polish; a shame after two year's work on the project. He did the polish, and did a good job. He's also a nice guy. So we can't complain.

"Barbara and Michael read the draft of the script I'd written; they liked it, they sent it to Daniel Craig", says Haggis[49]. "Barbara had asked me my opinion of him, and, having seen Layer Cake, I said: Oh, he's the guy to go for"[50].

> - Barbara Broccoli[51] : [Craig] just seemed like he was a man who is a 21st-century Bond. This script was very complex and we needed an actor who could handle all of these things. He has to be agile physically, tough and you've got to believe that he can kill people. But in this script you also get to see inside of him. He has to be vulnerable, but remain tough, and I think that he's done a hell of a job. I think that he's fantastic.

The film's script played a big role in Daniel Craig's decision to accept the role of James Bond for this film:

> - Daniel Craig[52] : It's a simple reason why I wanted to do it. There's no kind of bullshit attached to it: The script was great. I got it, I read it, and I said, "I'd be a fool not to have a go at this". I really had that in the back of my mind; hindsight is a very easy thing to say this with, but I was going, "If you don't do this, you're going to regret not having a go at it". He's one of the biggest and most iconic figures in movie history, and I'm an actor. This is what I do for a living, and if I don't take on challenges like this, then what's the point?

" The script was very exciting to read", continues the actor, "I saw potential that I hadn't thought of before, and I saw other things that could be put into the film, which I thought other people hadn't seen before"[53]. One line in particular makes him think that this Bond will not be the same as the previous ones:

> - Daniel Craig[54]: One of the biggest reasons I did Casino Royale is the line, "A vodka martini, please", "Shaken or stirred?". My reply was written in the script as, "Do I look like I give a fuck?". And that's it. That's the reason I did it. Because what I could not do, and what I refused to do, was repeat what had gone before [in the saga]. What was the fucking point?

Eva Green also explained that "it was one of the best scripts I'd read in a long time"[55]. Solicited several times for the role of Vesper, it was finally when she finally read the script that she was really interested in accepting the project:

> - Eva Green[56] : They kept asking me to come in and audition, but I had this other project. Two weeks before it collapsed, they gave me the script and I read it. I was, like, "Oh my God!", I really liked it. It's so different from the other roles that we've seen in the past, and the character of Bond is much more human and realistic and trashy, and more emotional. So I thought, "Why not?". I went to Prague, I met Barbara Broccoli and Michael Wilson and Daniel, of course.

- CASINO ROYALE -

FADE IN:

NO GUNBARREL - NO BOND - NO BLOOD - NO BOND THEME

We INTERCUT two scenes in BLACK & WHITE: one is outwardly civilized and controlled, the other silent, impressionistic.

1 INT. OFFICE, CAIRO, EGYPT - DAY 1

An office. Lavishly decked with Middle-Eastern relics. It overlooks the sweltering kasbah.

A man stands silhouetted against the light, we can't see his face too clearly.

Behind a big desk is DRYDEN, Head of Station 'C'. He peers at the shadowy man.

INTERCUT:

2 EXT. PARK, DRESDEN, GERMANY - DAY 2

A cold day. Skaters on a frozen lake in a park. A Japanese man is taking his lunch on a bench.

A shadowy figure watches him from among the trees.

BACK TO:

3 INT. OFFICE, CAIRO, EGYPT - DAY 3

DRYDEN
(spiky)
I don't know why they've sent you here, Bond. I don't need an extra pair of hands.

The shadowy man steps into the light. We see the cold handsome face for the first time. James Bond.

BOND
No, you've been doing just fine as it is.

DRYDEN
What's that supposed to mean?

BOND
She knows what you've been up to, Dryden. Selling secrets.

Dryden turns to stone - for a second.

Daniel Craig

In a "second draft" dated September 19, 2005 on which Paul Haggis worked on, the pre-title sequence was to take place in Egypt and Germany.

December 13, 2005' script

Unfortunately the only script I have for this film dates from December 13, 2005 (112 pages). The cover page lists the names Purvis and Wade and states that it is the "second set of revisions" by Paul Haggis. Everything is similar to what we would seen on screen but there are deleted scenes and others not filmed.

The script begins with Dryden entering a building in Prague and the first thing to notice is that the script doesn't specify the pre-title will be in black and white.

As Dryden progresses through a building, we cut to a camera shot of a cricket match in Lahore, Pakistan (the pre-title will now cut between these two locations/events). A well-built man, "call him Fisher", notices that he is being observed by another man: Bond, whose face is not visible yet because it is hidden in the shadows. Fisher begins to walk away from Bond, pushing people in the cricket match' audience.

Dryden enters his office where he finds Bond sitting in the shadows. Bond tell him that M knows he sells secrets.

The cricket match again: Fisher pushes more people as Bond continues walking towards him.

Dryden opens his drawer and tells Bond that M would have sent a 00 agent if she was sure he was corrupt. But to be 00 you have to have killed...

- Bond: Two.
- Dryden: You aren't a Cricket fan by any chance, are you?

Fisher runs up the stairs, arrives in a WC, turns around, points his gun at the door: ready to shoot for when Bond arrives.

Dryden takes his gun and unsuccessfully tries to shoot Bond who tells him that he knew where he hid his gun. Dryden asks him how his contact died.

A door suddenly opens behind Fisher and Bond arrives and attacks him. There's the WC fight at the end of which Bond thinks he had drowned Fisher in the sink. Bond looks at the body, "hating him for making this feel so much like... Killing".

Bond kills Dryden, then Fisher who gets back up in the gunbarrel sequence.

We then see that Daniel Kleinman's stylish title sequence should not have revolved around the theme of cards. It was originally planned in the script that we would see photos of Bond's CV (which included his SAS assignments) interspersed with a large high-tech press. The title sequence ended with crime scene photos of Dryden and Fisher. After each death, Bond's badge was supplemented with a 0 until it formed 007. One hand placed the badge and photos in a file and the office worker took it into the "bowels" of MI6.

LAHORE, PAKISTAN

Elements including the cricket match were cut during editing.

End of the title sequence. We then meet Steven Obanno, the leader of the "Lord's Resistance Army" from Uganda, who is in the company of Mr. White; they wait for Le Chiffre to arrive. As a young boy brings him a Coca Cola, Obanno looks out the window at a Twin Star (AS355) helicopter.

- Obanno: I think the Lord wants me to have a Twin Star.
- Mr. White: Take it. It's unguarded.
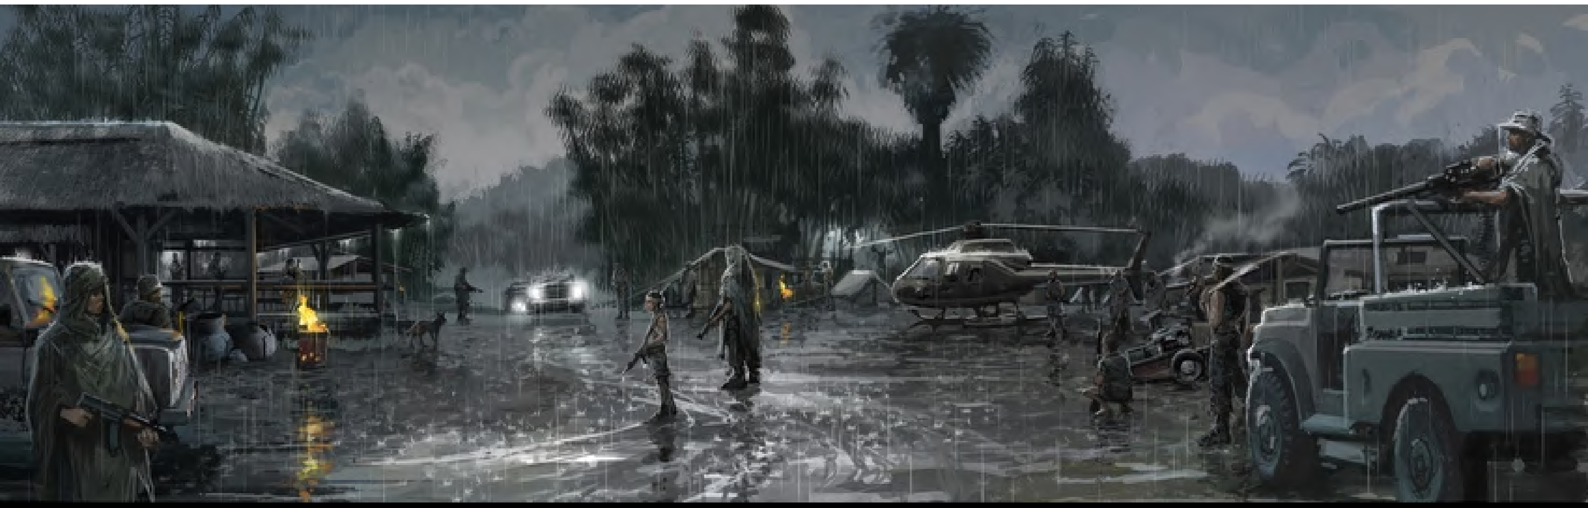
- Obanno (laughing): With only an army to protect me? I value my life, thank you. Last week I told this boy the Lord was displeased with his parents. He slit their throats. Now I know I can trust what he gives me to drink. How do I trust this man that I've never met with our money?



Note that an attentive eye can see this helicopter during this scene of the film...

It is reasonable to assume that Mr. White arrived at the camp with the helicopter. Obanno's response suggests that the organization behind White is powerful, at least more than his army. The rest of the scene is intended to be similar to the film, although we can note that Valenka accompanies Le Chiffre here; she is described as his "beautiful Russian bodyguard".

A stage direction when Le Chiffre says he doesn't believe in God but in a reasonable rate of return: "Le Chiffre knows this was the wrong answer and clearly doesn't give a damn".

The parkour scenes in Madagascar arrive, described in detail and similar to the film. 007 has a line of dialogue when on the crane the bomber tries to shoot him with his empty gun:

- Bond: Learn to count.

Before Bond arrives in the ambassador's office, the military attaché says to Mollaka: "You don't work for us anymore! G et out!", to which the terrorist replies: "Just hide me!".

When too many guards catch up with Bond and force him to release Mollaka, the script called for a dialogue:

> - Mollaka (after spitting on Bond): What's your name? Huh? I'm never there when they die. I don't get to know the names. I want to know who died here today.
> - Bond: The name's Bond. What's yours?
> - Mollaka: Mollaka:
> - Bond: See? You already had your answer.

And bang... Bond shoots Mollaka, then a gas bottle. A dialogue that they probably did well to remove. For a terrorist to reveal his name and say he's killing people in front of the military isn't exactly smart, and the same for Bond. Additionally, the line "The name's Bond" is much better only at the end of the film.

We also note that Bond doesn't find a bomb in Mollaka's bagpack in the script (however a torn playing card is present in addition to the telephone).

A few scenes later, when M remonstrates his agent in her apartment, two lines disappeared in the film:

> - M: At least there won't be any question who to bury. You're a secret agent, for God's sake! Can you at least try not to tell every single person you meet your real name?! Do you have any idea how hard it was to keep it out of the international press?
> - Bond: Understood. I should have stuck to my cover, Mr. Sandy Bizet, Fashion Buyer. (Regarding newspaper) "Fashion Buyer kills terrorist". That may just have fooled them.

The script doesn't specify that Bond drives a Ford in the Bahamas and it is written that the German (who mistakes Bond for a valet) drives a Jaguar. This was changed in the film to a Range Rover.

Barbara Broccoli and Martin Campbell said they didn't know the scene where Bond emerges from the water in swimming shorts would be iconic until they filmed it[57]. And this is the impression given by the script, in which the description of this sequence of the film is a very simple "Bond steps out of the water" and looks at Solange.

Bond's trail leads to Dimitrios and 007 consults the MI6 database via computer to learn more about him. The script tells us that Dimitrios is listed as a government contractor in countries such as Iraq, Afghanistan or Chechnya. An arms trafficker linked to right-wing paramilitary groups. Bond then consults the profiles of his known associates and comes across Le Chiffre, who according to the MI6 database, died in Iraq in 1998.

Bond plays against Dimitrios, wins his Aston Martin, and brings Solange to his hotel.

Meanwhile, Dimitrios arrives by taxi at Le Chiffre's yacht, walks past Valenka, and have his conversation with Le Chiffre. The scene is longer than in the film:

> - Le Chiffre: ...A man who was under surveillance by the British Secret Service. Which makes me wonder if I should trust you at all.
> - Dimitrios: Do me a favor, stop playing tough guy. If you were going to kill me, you wouldn't be talking so much... I have someone else willing to do the job. He just needs the particulars. And payment.
> Le Chiffre stares at him, making his decision. He takes a card from a deck on the table, a five of spades, rips it in two and hands one half of the card to Dimitrios.
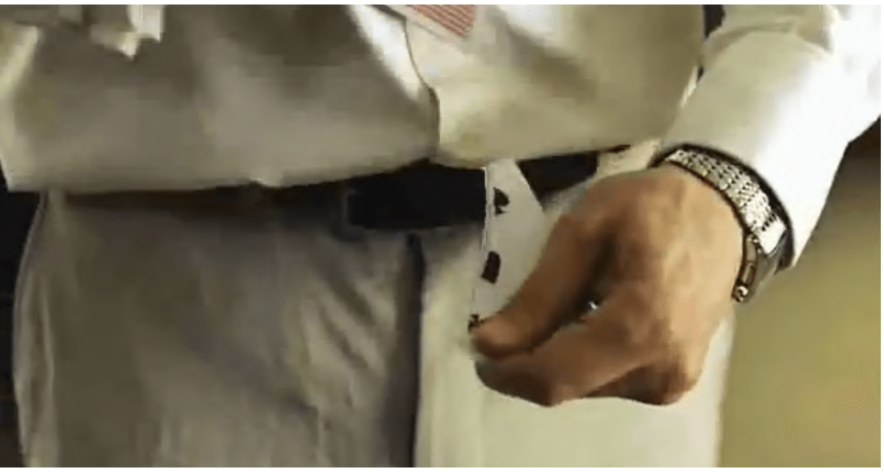
> - Le Chiffre: The money is waiting in the same place.



This half-card (deleted during editing) will be important later. But for now we find Solange and Bond on the bedroom floor. She still wears a bra and heels; he have an unbuttoned shirt. The scene was supposed to start like this:

> - Bond: Lovely.
> - Solange: Yeah. Just think what it would be like if we undressed. Why do I think that you've been in this position before? You like married women, don't you, James?
> - Bond: It keeps things simple.

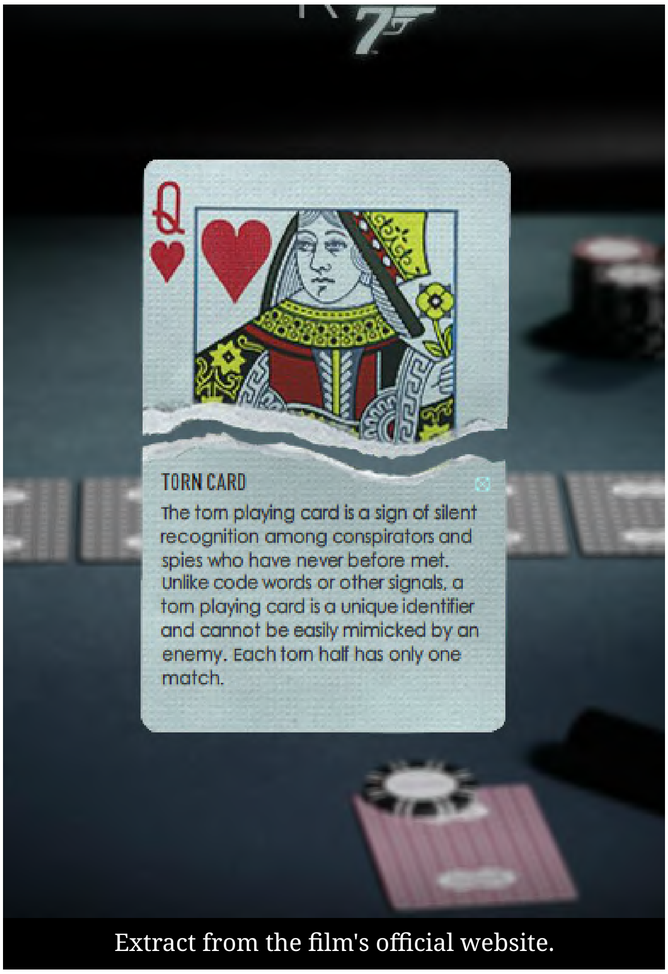
A little further on, when Bond asks what "Ellipsis" means to her, she replies: "Three dots. A pause. You aren't trying to tell me you're tired, are you?".

In Miami 007 is following Carlos to the airport. Carlos go see a cashier and gave him the half of the torn card that Le Chiffre had given to Dimitrios. The cashier bring the two parts together and then hand him a bag of money. The terrorist entrust the bag to a mysterious blonde before setting out on his mission.



TORN CARD

The torn playing card is a sign of silent recognition among conspirators and spies who have never before met. Unlike code words or other signals, a torn playing card is a unique identifier and cannot be easily mimicked by an enemy. Each torn half has only one match.

Extract from the film's official website.

Bond searches for Carlos whom he lost sight of in the airport terminal. He has already opened the door (coded with Ellipsis) when he contacts MI6:

> - Bond: It's Bond for her. NOW!
> - Villiers: He's at Miami airport.
> - M: Do you have any idea...?! (Silence) Bond?! BOND! BOND. PUT THE BLOODY PHONE TO YOUR EAR AND TELL ME WHAT THE HELL IS GOING ON!
> - Bond: Fire alarm have been triggered, sprinklers are on. Something's wrong. There's no target here.
> - M: What do you mean there's no target? It's an airport, that is a target!
> - Bond: There's no sign of a fire. This is a diversion. Something else is happening here M.
> - Villiers: The Boeing 777 prototype.

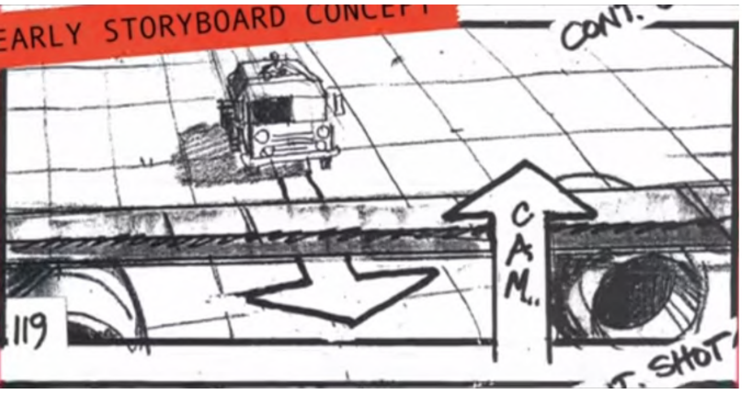
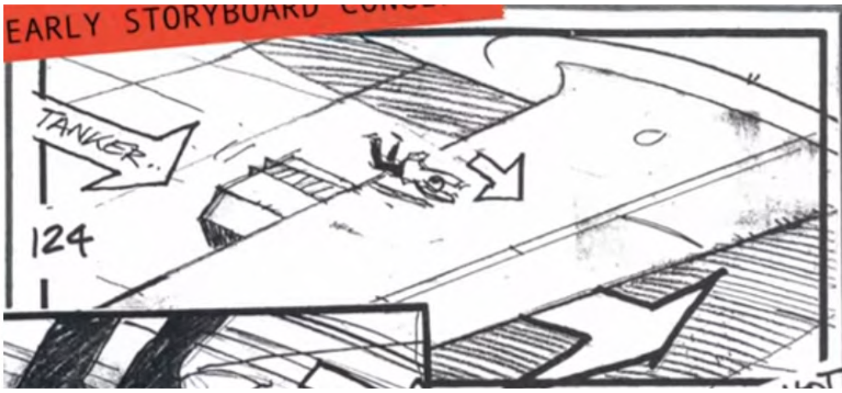
In the film it will be changed to a fictional plane named Skyfleet S570.

Afterwards, Carlos places the bomb inside the fuel truck's tank and gets behind the wheel. The chase then has some differences compared to the film. For example, after James managed to climb onto the roof of the truck using the moving stairs, Carlos had to try to eject him by going under the wing of a plane. 007 had to jump onto the wing to avoid it, run over it and jump onto the truck again.

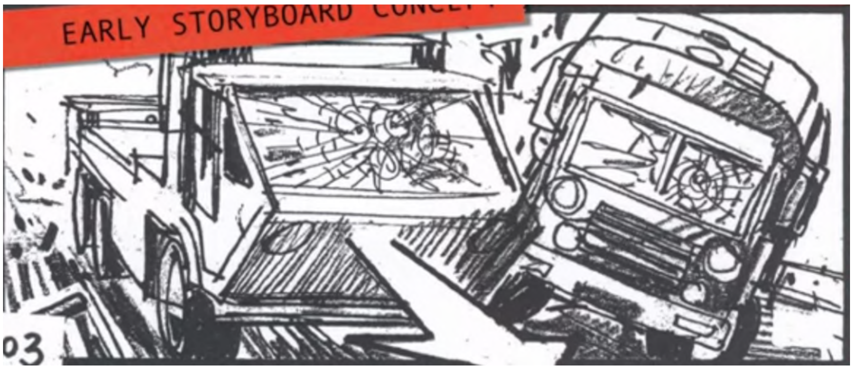




Bond is clinging to the side of the truck and Carlos tries to get rid of him by brushing against an airport vehicle. Bond let go and rolls. In the film 007 will then run and hang onto the ladder of the tanker truck, but not in this script, where instead he runs towards the airport vehicle, ejects the driver and chases the truck with it.

The two vehicles ram into each other on the airport runways, colliding at regular intervals. Carlos crashes into a luggage cart and Bond, shifting to avoid doing the same, ends up crashing through a bus.

007 ends up getting out of his vehicle and joins Carlos in the cab of the tanker truck where a violent hand-to-hand fight takes place. A landing plane take off again to avoid hitting the truck.



Carlos throws Bond through the windshield but Bond manages to hold on to the windshield with one of his hands. Carlos kicks it and Bond falls off the hood and almost goes under the truck, managing to hang on to the bumper. In his other hand 007 have the gun he took from Carlos.

Apparently still clinging to the front of the truck, Bond sticks his head under the bumper and begins shooting each of the truck's tires with the gun while Carlos tries to get his phone back. With each tire loss, Carlos is forced to try to control the truck rather than deal with the phone. Finally he loses control of the truck which stops near the Boeing.

Carlos gets out of the truck, ready to activate the bomb with his phone when suddenly Bond appears behind him and kills him with the gun.

Later, Villiers comes in person to the airport to free Bond, who is then in a prison cell.

Bond goes to meet M who briefs him on Le Chiffre and his mission and we can read:

> - M: He invests their money and gave them access to it wherever they needed it. Saddam took a disliking to him after [operation] Desert Storm and cut off his head.

A helicopter drops Bond off at a train station in the Alps. Inside the train is a certain John Bliss, the man Bond must replace at the poker tournament. He is studying a poker game on his portable DVD player, while eating an apple. 007 enters his compartment:

> - Bond: Mister Bliss?
> - Bliss: That door was locked.
> Bliss grabs his cell phone and presses an autodial button.
> - Bond: An eye for detail, I'm sure you're an excellent poker player. (Re: DVD player) Though a little homework never hurts.
> - Bliss: I've just called my security.
> Three dark-suited serious types turn the sharp corner in the corridor and stride toward the door. Upon seeing them:
> - Bond (impressed) : My. That was quick.
> Without a pause the lead man chloroforms Bliss. They lift him and whisk him out the door.
> - Bond (cheerily enough): Thank you.

007 closes the door behind them, bites into the apple and follows the poker game on the DVD player. At the Trieste station, he sees a woman getting on the train: Vesper. She joins him in the restaurant car and they have the same dialogue as in the film.

After the train arrives at a station in Montenegro, on the platform Bond and his luggage carrier catch up with Vesper who is rolling her suitcase herself. She can't help but notice a patrol of heavily armed police officers.

> - Bond: Did you have a good sleep?
> - Vesper: Yes, only occasionally disturbed by nightmares of political and financial ruin.
> - Bond: It's so reassuring, as a citizen, to know that you are concerned about my taxes.

- Vesper: Do secret agents pay taxes?
- Bond: As unfair as that seem.
Vesper smiles to herself.
- Bond: What's that in response to?
- Vesper: Picturing you filling out your tax form. Can one deduct for bullets and poison darts?
- Bond: Under standard business expenses.

This dialogue is the subject of a deleted scene.

The script then follow with the taxi's dialogue as they get into it.

After the hotel scenes, they take the Aston Martin to join Mathis and we notice here a certain number of dialogues that didn't ended up in the film:

- Mathis: Over here. "Renee" Mathis. I know who you two are. Are you thirsty?
- Bond (taking a glass of champagne): Unquenchably so. You, dear (looking at Vesper)?
- Mathis: You know, I used to hate husband and wife covers. Before she stuck me out here, M would consistently pair me with a defected Latvian wrestler or the Scottish shot-putting champion.
- Vesper: Mr. Bond believes that covers are archaic.
- Mathis: Huh. Well, there's something to be said for that; it usually doesn't take long for either side to find out all the players on the field, does it?
- Bond: Does he know we've been watching him?
[...]
- Mathis: I think your odds are improving, Mister Bond.
- Vesper: You'll excuse me.
[She walks away from the two men].
- Mathis: For someone who works at the Treasury, the girl has nerves; didn't flinch at my little show.
- Bond: Yes, I wondered where you were going with that.
- Mathis: Best to know who you can trust under pressure. Beauty, brains and courage, almost an irresistible combination.
- Bond: You're quite the romantic, Mathis.
- Mathis (amused): And you're immune?
- Bond: No. But I've found that the only person you want really close to you is someone you can use as a shield. I'm afraid she's so tiny the bullets would pass right through her. Last thing one needs is a woman hanging on your gun arm.
Mathis laughs and drinks with Bond.

After putting on Vesper's tuxedo, Bond goes to the casino and the script describes the other players: an Argentine billionaire named Gallardo, a Japanese software king named Fukutu, a certain Infante described as a deposed African dictator, a Russian named Kaminofsky, a media mogul referred to as Tomelli, a German countess Grafin Manstein and another Chinese woman named Madame Wu.

The strangest thing is that Felix Leiter's name doesn't appear at any point in this script. For obscure reasons the American player (who will turn out to be a CIA agent) is called Gray Wolpert here!

The end of the fight on the stairs is different from the film: Obanno manages to recover the Walther and shoots in the direction of Bond and Vesper. He misses and 007 forces the weapon in Obanno's hands to turn towards the latter's neck. The bullet is fired and blood splatters Bond's shirt and Vesper's face. (In the film Obanno dies following strangulation).

In the shower scene that happens shortly after, Vesper must have been in a bra and panties (instead of her dress). Then Bond joins Mathis, the script tells us that Le Chiffre's henchman that the police arrest after finding the bodies of the Ugandans in the trunk of the car is named Leo. Mathis has one more line: "His actual phone [Obanno's] will be a gold mine, I'm sure".

James Bond loses at the gaming table and asks Vesper for funds which she is not ready to grant him:

- Vesper: ...I'm sorry.
- Bond: "Sorry"? Use that in a sentence. "Sorry Le Chiffre is going to win and go on funding terror and killing people in subways and supermarkets?". "Sorry children are going to die as they walk past stray shopping bags or parked cars?". That kind of "sorry"?
- Vesper: You winning is not going to stop terrorist bombings. If you think it is, then you are arrogant.
- Bond: Not all, just a few is good enough for me. And if you or your friends were in the building when it disintegrated, it may be good enough for you, too.

[...]

- Bond: I can beat him! Look in my eyes. You know that.
- Vesper: My father was a gambler. Had that game winning look in his eye. Right up to the day he shot my mother and put a gun in his own mouth. Get your hand off my arm.

A little further on, Bond pockets a knife and heads towards Le Chiffre and his bodyguards, "it's suicide and he's okay with that", then he is interrupted by Wolpert who gives him funds.

After recovering from poisoning:

> - Bond: Sorry. That last hand almost killed me. (To waiter) I think I'll change my drinks. Water, if you would.

Further on Bond in his Aston Martin sees Vesper in the middle of the road, veers and "hits the ditch and flips, smashing upside down into a tree". In this script Mathis' guilt seems to be established: when Le Chiffre captures Bond, he says on the phone in front of him: "Mathis? We've got him".

The torture scene was a bit more faithful to the novel compared to the film, with Bond being taken to an abandoned country house (rather than a barge) and Le Chiffre having a carpet beater (rather than a rope). It was also planned to briefly see Valenka walking towards Vesper, who was also seated and naked (with her back to us).

> - Valenka: I can't find the pliers.

Le Chiffre spot them and Valenka closes the door to the room where she is with Vesper. Bond in his chair:

> - Bond: If you're going to bring a table as well, I'll have a coffee. Wouldn't want to fall asleep on you.
> [...]
> - Bond: I knew you'd be a sore loser.

After that the dialogue are the one that can be found in the film until the arrival of Mr. White. In the script, before being killed, Le Chiffre says to Mr. White, "Tell him I will get the money" instead of the "tell them" of the film. This connotes some sort of Blofeld or someone else who is hidden behind the villains.

007 loses consciousness and when he opens his eyes again, he sees silhouettes of hospital staff walking past him (while he is in a hospital corridor). In a hallucination he sees another patient lying on a stretcher: Solange, dead, "her look asking [him] why he did this to her". Bond loses consciousness again.

Bond regains consciousness in an operating room where a mask is put over his nose and the nurse asks him to count down from 100 for anesthesia. 007 loses consciousness again.

We then find the scene from the film where Bond on his hospital bed "days later", comes out of the coma by opening his eyes, seeing blurred Vesper and Mathis. Bond murmurs "not him" when he sees Mathis:

> - Vesper: ...Drug induced the coma... Time to heal. I'll get the doctor.

Bond then finds himself alone in the room with Mathis as in the film, but the scene doesn't end there. In fact, Bond's vision begins to become less blurry and we see that he is connected to lots of drips.

> - Mathis: James, listen to me. You're in good hands. There's no way to know what kind of damage has been caused, but the wounds didn't become infected, so there's a good chance...
> - Bond: Water?
> - Mathis: Ice chips are about all you get.

As Mathis turns his back to prepare an ice chips, Bond sees a pair of scissors lying on a table. Bond rushes towards the instrument to grab it, apparently to use it against Mathis. But he only manages to fall to the ground and faint again...

We then find Bond a few days later in a wheelchair on the porch of the clinic. As in the film he is with Mathis but the dialogue and the description seem to incriminate Mathis:

Another victim of editing...

> [...]
> - Bond: Help us or help you?
> Mathis suddenly understands.
> - Mathis: What did he say?
> - Bond: Just a little too much.

Two MI6' men stick a syringe into Mathis's neck and take him away.

Another day Vesper joins Bond and the script tells us that she is wearing bandages on her fingers; trace of the torture she was inflicted by Valenka. "Nothing that can't heal", she comments. Then just before the banker Mendel arrives, Bond seems to mention the state of his testicles:

> - Vesper: ...How does it feel?
> - Bond: Mostly numb, fortunately. (Seeing someone approaching) Speaking of numb.

We can also note that Bond describes himself as "dark hair" while at the time the press and fans criticized Daniel Craig (who had been announced a few months earlier in October 2005) as too blond to be Bond.

After the clinic scenes, we see a yacht anchored in a deserted bay. Bond is on it, carrying Vesper, "both are naked, and damn if James' arms aren't just in the wrong places, so all we get is teased":

> - Vesper: No. No, that's not going to happen. James, I'm serious. This is my serious face. Do you see it? You're good at reading people, what does this face say?
> - Bond: It says, "I know I'm saying don't drop me in the water but don't believe me for a second".
> [Vesper screams as Bond throws her into the water and dives after her. Vesper surfaces, pushing her hair back as he comes under and behind her before wrapping his arms around her waist. The two lovers tumble and bob in the water while they talk in the water].
> - Vesper: So, tell me Mi6 is going to give you a well deserved vacation, and we can float around the world.
> - Bond: I like this yacht thing.
> - Vesper: Yes, it's you.
> - Bond: You think?
> - Vesper: Secluded bay, clear water, naked woman, very much you.
> - Bond: Huh.
> [They swim to the bay and lie down on the sand].
> - Bond: Well, I suppose M won't miss me for at least a day or two.

Another missing scene from the film...

They go to Venice and the description when Vesper sees Gettler is pretty explicit: she doesn't know who he is but she just finds him intriguing/mysterious.

Vesper emerges from under the sheets of the Venice hotel bed, Bond is at her side:

- Vesper: No, enough. Stop. I can barely walk as it is. If you hadn't noticed, it has been quite a while for me.
- Bond: For me, as well.
Vesper looks at him and then bursts out laughing. James takes just a little offense to this. Slightly defensive:
- Bond: What are you laughing at?

- Vesper: Where's the camera? I need a picture of that face.
- Bond (defensive): I meant since it meant something.
- Vesper (laughing): Oh, that's so much better.
[She snaps a photo of him].
- Bond: You know I do have a license to kill.
- Vesper: Had. You gave it up for me, remember?
[Bond tries to grabs her].
- Vesper: Ah! No, no, I have to get to the bank. What time is it?

Bond and Vesper end up going down to the hotel lobby in the elevator. As they head towards the exit, something catches Vesper's eye. Bond follows her gaze and notices the man in the Panama hat with a single tinted spectacle lens talking to the concierge at the front desk.

The editing requires another sacrifice.

- Bond: Someone you know?
- Vesper: No, I just saw him on the canal.
- Bond: It's a small town. Meet you back here in half an hour?
They kiss ans she takes off toward San Marco Square. Only when she's gone does Bond betray his suspicions. He steps back into the hotel. Bond approach the concierge and slips him a bill.
- Bond: The man in there. Reminds me of a friend I know who lost his eye.
- Concierge: Mister Gettler.
- Bond: That's him. What does he do now?
- Concierge: Mr. Gettler repairs watches. He is here for the conference.
- Bond: There's a conference for watch repairmen?
- Concierge: There's a conference for everything, sir.

Bond approaches the bar where Gettler is chatting animatedly with a man who showing him a pocket watch. Bond reassures himself and takes the elevator again.

The finale with Gettler has changed a little. Gettler is only accompanied by one man. Bond shots the latter by surprise and Gettler puts a knife to Vesper's throat, threatening to kill her. However 007 raises his gun to kill Gettler (or Vesper, or both) but the henchman gets up (he had a bulletproof vest). Bond kills him for good but loses his gun when it falls into the canal.

He sets out in pursuit of Gettler and Vesper who have entered a damaged building. Bond moves forward cautiously and sees Vesper lying on the floor of the elevator, blood at her mouth:

- Vesper: James...
- Bond: Don't go anywhere, dear. You're the big picture. Now, where is your...?

007 sees Vesper's eyes widen and turns around just in time to avoid a stab from Gettler. The two men fall and land onto the large balloons that support the building; the knife pierce one of them. The two men then fight in the water while the building (and the elevator) collapses. Gettler stab Bond with a piece of wood, injuring him. Bond responds by shoving something he catches down Gettler's throat: Gettler is dead.

Vesper locks herself in the elevator shaft and hands her necklace to 007:

- Vesper: If you see him... Tell him I'm sorry. But I fell in love.
- Bond: ...Who??

The elevator plunges into the water, Bond tries to save Vesper but without success: she dies.

M is on the phone with Bond, including lines from the film about Mathis's potential innocence. At the end of his conversation with M, Bond throws his laptop (which had a photo of him and Vesper on it) into the water. "M replaces the phone, knowing she's just sacrificed a man to create a spy, [...] not necessarily happy with herself".

Then of course Bond goes to find Mr. White:

- Bond: The name is Bond. James, Bond. And yours?

"We hear, for the first time, the guitar strains of the famous Bond Theme. Cut to black. Credits roll. The end".

The script of Casino Royale received two award nominations: the British Academy Film Awards and the Saturn Awards, but lost both face to The Last King of Scotland and Superman Returns.

Sources/references from chapter 21: Casino Royale

1 Purvis and Wade's interview on Her Majesty's Secret Servant for Casino Royale: http://www.hmss.com/films/casinoroyale/interview

2 "The Dawn Of A New Bond: The Making Of Casino Royale" by James Mottram, Philip Berk & Erin Free on FilmInk: https://www.filmink.com.au/dawn-new-bond-making-casino-royale/

3 Screen International via "Purvis & Wade Talk Casino Royale" on MI6-HQ (March 14, 2005): https://www.mi6-hq.com/sections/articles/bond_21_purviswade_march05

4 Purvis and Wade's interview on Her Majesty's Secret Servant for Casino Royale: http://www.hmss.com/films/casinoroyale/interview

5 Purvis and Wade interview at the The Orange Word event (2004) transcription on MI6-HQ website: https://www.mi6-hq.com/sections/articles/interview_purvis_and_wade5

6 "The James Bond Archives" by Jamie Russell and Paul Duncan (2012).

7 Purvis and Wade's interview on Her Majesty's Secret Servant for Casino Royale: http://www.hmss.com/films/casinoroyale/interview

8 "‘Spectre' Producer Expects Daniel Craig to Return for Another Bond Movie" by Stephen Galloway in The Hollywood Reporter (November 6, 2015): https://www.hollywoodreporter.com/news/general-news/spectre-producer-expects-daniel-craig-837655/

9 (Sorry, I don't remember where I found this; neither the eventual exact quote).

10 "Becoming Bond" documentary/making-of of Casino Royale (2006): https://www.dailymotion.com/video/x3pm1wa

11 "Becoming Bond" documentary/making-of of Casino Royale (2006): https://www.dailymotion.com/video/x3pm1wa

12 Purvis and Wade's interview on Her Majesty's Secret Servant for Casino Royale: http://www.hmss.com/films/casinoroyale/interview

13 "Focus Of The Week: Casino Royale Foot Chase" on 007.com (November 13, 2017): https://www.007.com/focus-week-casino-royale-foot-chase/

14 "The James Bond Archives" by Jamie Russell and Paul Duncan (2012).

15 "Focus Of The Week: Casino Royale Foot Chase" on 007.com (November 13, 2017): https://www.007.com/focus-week-casino-royale-foot-chase/

16 "Nobody Does it Better" by Mark A. Altman and Edward Gross (2020).

17 "Some Kind of Hero: The Remarkable Story of the James Bond Films" by Matthew Field & Ajay Chowdhury (2015).

18 "Being Bond: A Daniel Craig Retrospective" by Mark Salisbury (2022).

19 "Some Kind of Hero: The Remarkable Story of the James Bond Films" by Matthew Field & Ajay Chowdhury (2015).

20 Casino Royale Production Notes / Press Kit.

21 "Being Bond: A Daniel Craig Retrospective" by Mark Salisbury (2022).

22 "Some Kind of Hero: The Remarkable Story of the James Bond Films" by Matthew Field & Ajay Chowdhury (2015).

23 "Some Kind of Hero: The Remarkable Story of the James Bond Films" by Matthew Field & Ajay Chowdhury (2015).

24 Purvis and Wade's interview on Her Majesty's Secret Servant for Casino Royale: http://www.hmss.com/films/casinoroyale/interview

25 "Some Kind of Hero: The Remarkable Story of the James Bond Films" by Matthew Field & Ajay Chowdhury (2015).

26 "Some Kind of Hero: The Remarkable Story of the James Bond Films" by Matthew Field & Ajay Chowdhury (2015).

27 Purvis and Wade's interview on Her Majesty's Secret Servant for Casino Royale: http://www.hmss.com/films/casinoroyale/interview

28 "Nobody Does it Better" by Mark A. Altman and Edward Gross (2020).

29 "Nobody Does it Better" by Mark A. Altman and Edward Gross (2020).

30 "Some Kind of Hero: The Remarkable Story of the James Bond Films" by Matthew Field & Ajay Chowdhury (2015).

31 "Nobody Does it Better" by Mark A. Altman and Edward Gross (2020).

32 For Paul Haggis biography, see for the sources:
"Paul Haggis—First Person, Casino Royale—6/11/2014" by Groucho on Groucho Reviews: https://www.grouchoreviews.com/interviews/6334f8485fe75d1811c627e6
Going Clear: Scientology, Hollywood, and the Prison of Belief by Lawrence Wright (2013).
"Paul Haggis" by Scott Foundas on Film Comment (2010): https://www.filmcomment.com/article/tipping-points/
"‘Show Me a Hero' director Paul Haggis on Oscars, TV, and his love of ‘The Wire'" by Alan Sepinwall on Uproxx (August 11, 2015): https://uproxx.com/sepinwall/show-me-a-hero-director-paul-haggis-on-oscars-tv-and-his-love-of-the-wire/
"Some Kind of Hero: The Remarkable Story of the James Bond Films" by Matthew Field & Ajay Chowdhury (2015).

"Biography for Paul Haggis" on Turner Classic Movies: http://www.tcmdb.com/participant.jsp?participantId=1004241
Paul Haggis's Wikipedia page.

33 "Some Kind of Hero: The Remarkable Story of the James Bond Films" by Matthew Field & Ajay Chowdhury (2015).
34 "Au service secret de Bond" interview with David Fakrikian in Premiere french magazine (Hors-série Spectre, 2015). Translated from french.
35 "Au service secret de Bond" interview with David Fakrikian in Premiere french magazine (Hors-série Spectre, 2015). Translated from french
36 "The James Bond Archives" by Jamie Russell and Paul Duncan (2012).
37 "Au service secret de Bond" interview with David Fakrikian in Premiere french magazine (Hors-série Spectre, 2015). Translated from french.
38 "Au service secret de Bond" interview with David Fakrikian in Premiere french magazine (Hors-série Spectre, 2015). Translated from french.
39 "Being Bond: A Daniel Craig Retrospective" by Mark Salisbury (2022).
40 "Being Bond: A Daniel Craig Retrospective" by Mark Salisbury (2022).
41 "Nobody Does it Better" by Mark A. Altman and Edward Gross (2020).
42 "Paul Haggis" by Mark Lawson on The Guardian (December 4, 2007): https://www.theguardian.com/film/2007/dec/04/guardianinterviewsatbfisouthbank
43 "Nobody Does it Better" by Mark A. Altman and Edward Gross (2020).
44 "Nobody Does it Better" by Mark A. Altman and Edward Gross (2020).
45 "Cdn screenwriter Paul Haggis tweaks character of James Bond for 007 film" by The Canadian Press (October 12, 2005): http://www3.cjad.com/content/cp_article.asp?id=/global_feeds/CanadianPress/EntertainmentNews/e101235A.htm
46 "Nobody Does it Better" by Mark A. Altman and Edward Gross (2020).
47 "Paul Haggis—First Person, Casino Royale—6/11/2014" by Groucho on Groucho Reviews: https://www.grouchoreviews.com/interviews/6334f8485fe75d1811c627e6
48 Purvis and Wade's interview on Her Majesty's Secret Servant for Casino Royale: http://www.hmss.com/films/casinoroyale/interview
49 "Nobody Does it Better" by Mark A. Altman and Edward Gross (2020).
50 "Nobody Does it Better" by Mark A. Altman and Edward Gross (2020).
51 IF Magazine; via "Producer Barbara Broccoli talks indepth about Casino Royale and the shift in direction" on MI6-HQ (November 26, 2006): https://www.mi6-hq.com/news/index.php?itemid=4460
52 "Nobody Does it Better" by Mark A. Altman and Edward Gross (2020).
53 "Becoming Bond" documentary/making-of of Casino Royale (2006): https://www.dailymotion.com/video/x3pm1wa
54 "Goodbye, James." in Empire magazine (January 2020 issue).
55 "Nobody Does it Better" by Mark A. Altman and Edward Gross (2020).
56 "Nobody Does it Better" by Mark A. Altman and Edward Gross (2020).
57 (Sorry, I don't remember where I found this; neither the eventual exact quote).

QUANTUM OF SOLACE
007
NOVEMBER 14

Release date (premiere) :
29 October 2008

Writing credit as per title sequence:
"Written by Paul Haggis and Neal Purvis & Robert Wade"

Director :...............................Marc Forster
Producers :...............Michael Wilson and Barbara Broccoli
Director photogra. :.....Roberto Schaefer
Set Designer :....................Dennis Gassner
Composer :............................David Arnold
Editors :..Matt Chesse & Richard Pearson
Title sequence :.................................MK12
Title song vocals :...Jack White and Alicia Keys

`Sorry, I don't have any illustration.`

CHAPTER 22

Sorry, I don't have any illustration.

Cast:

James Bond :...........................Daniel Craig
Dominic Greene :...........Mathieu Amalric
Camille :..............................Olga Kurylenko
Medrano :..............................Joaquín Cosío
Strawberry Fields :........Gemma Arterton
Felix Leiter :.........................Jeffrey Wright
Gregory Beam :..................David Harbour
René Mathis :..............Giancarlo Giannini
Elvis :..............................Anatole Taubman
Mr. White :....................Jesper Christensen
M :...Judi Dench
Bill Tanner :.........................Rory Kinnear

Main filming locations: Panama, Chile, Italy, Austria, Mexico and UK.

Quantum is a film that had many flaws. The elephant in the room is the (too) frenetic and bad editing (even when you watch it frame by frame, the end of the boat chase makes absolutely no sense). There is also some big CGI problems in the skydiving scene that looks like shit compared to 30 years older Moonraker (although fire pyrotechnics in the climax must be praised). The film works. Yes, the script written in a short period and in the middle of a WGA's strike, lacks ambitions and revelations, but the result is not bad. Could have been better as a "stalling" movie if Bond 23 had brought a conclusion to it, rather than going in a independent story-line... In all, I like Quantum of Solace more than I dislike it: the story is coherent, the action scenes had intensity, Camille is great, and besides: David Arnold never disappoints.

QUANTUM OF SOLACE

Table of contents

Quantum of Solace

Quantum of a short-story....................1510
Writing Quantum of Solace....................1512

Quantum of a short-story

- Michael Wilson[1] : [The title Quantum of Solace comes] from an Ian Fleming short story from the For Your Eyes Only compendium. It's uncharacteristic of most of Fleming's work. Someone at a dinner party narrates a story to Bond about a character, and he makes comments throughout. It's not typical of Fleming. It's a character study that doesn't involve any plots or anything with spies, but we thought it was an intriguing title and referenced what's happened to Bond in this film.

COSMOPOLITAN
MAY, 1959 • 35¢
Special California Issue
How to Make a West Coast Million • The Heady Wines of California
Mr. Paladin from San Francisco • Palm Springs – Paradise in the Desert
Fun Fashions from the West Coast • Cults and Crackpots Follow the Sun
The Special Beauty of Californians
The Watcher: Complete Murder Mystery Novel

Originally published in Cosmopolitan magazine in May 1959, as Wilson says: this short-story is not strictly speaking a 007 adventure, but more a philosophical reflection.

After a rather boring dinner, James Bond talks with the Governor of the Bahamas. This one tells him a rather unusual love story between two people he decided to call Philip Masters and Rhoda Llewellyn.

Philip, explains the Governor, was a hearty man who never has a relationship with women when he had met Rhoda in a plane, on which she was working as an air hostess. He immediately fell in love and married her soon after.

When the couple moved to Bermuda for Philip's job, Rhoda began to get bored and found a lover with whom she cheated on Philip, in full view of everyone. Poor Philip became somewhat the laughingstock of the colony, but was willing to bear the cheating of his wife whom he loved.

One day, Philip went alone to Washington for several months for his job. Rhoda, who had been dumped by her lover, was ready to come back to Philip upon his return from Washington.

But the man who came back was no longer the same, and one of the first things he did upon his return was to reject Rhoda and announce his intention to divorce; he divided their home into two half-sections. While waiting for the divorce, the couple remained months without speaking to each other in private, although they continued to appear as a couple in public.

Philip eventually left the country alone, leaving her almost penniless and with debts. A cruel act which he would have been incapable of carrying out just a few months earlier. The Governor share his theory about Philip's change to Bond:

> The Governor paused and looked reflectively over at Bond. He said: "You're not married, but I think it's the same with all relationships between a man and a woman. They can survive anything so long as some kind of basic humanity exists between the two people. When all kindness has gone, when one person obviously and sincerely doesn't care if the other is alive or dead, then it's just no good. [...] I've noticed this in hundreds of marriages. I've seen flagrant infidelities patched up, [...] all these can be overcome. But never the death of common humanity in one of the partners. I've thought about this and I've > invented a rather high-sounding title for this basic factor in human relations. I have called it the Law of the Quantum of Solace".

> Bond said: "That's a splendid name for it. It's certainly impressive enough. And of course I see what you mean. I should say you're absolutely right. Quantum of Solace - the amount of comfort. Yes, I suppose you could say that all love and friendship is based in the end on that. Human beings are very insecure. When the other person not only makes you feel insecure but actually seems to want to destroy you, it's obviously the end. The Quantum of Solace stands at zero. You've got to get away to save yourself".

"Whatever her sins, if she had given him that Quantum of Solace he could never have behaved to her as he did", adds the Governor.

Despite the success of Philip' plan to take revenge on his unfaithful wife, he never recovered emotionally. After a time, Rhoda remarried to a rich Canadian. The Governor then reveals to Bond that the dinner companions whom he found dull were in fact Rhoda and her Canadian husband.

The short-story Quantum of Solace was based on a story told to Fleming by his neighbor and lover Blanche Blackwell about a real-life police inspector called Clive Smith who had been cheated on by his wife[2]. As a thanks for the inspiration, Fleming bought Blackwell a Cartier watch[3].

Writing Quantum of Solace

Casino Royale's ending was strongly asking for a sequel in order to conclude Bond's unfinished business with the villains. For producer Michael Wilson, doing one "seemed like the natural thing to do because there are so many unanswered questions at the end of Casino Royale and we think our audiences will be interested in the answers"[4].

> - Barbara Broccoli[5] : There's unfinished business in terms of an evil force but there's also unfinished business internally that [Bond] has to resolve. We're planning to go forward and resolve some of this. Quite how we do it, I don't know at the moment. It's a great starting point for the future journey.

The producers knew for long they would have to do a sequel and even started to hire screenwriters Neal Purvis and Robert Wade to work on Bond 22 even before the cameras started to rolling on Casino Royale:

> - Robert Wade[6] : When Neal Purvis and I started writing Casino Royale, we realized everything Bond was dealing with emotionally would need two films to fully resolve. We discussed this with Michael G. Wilson and Barbara Broccoli and were hired to write two movies.

In fact, Wilson announced their participation to Bond 22 during the same conference where Daniel Craig was revealed as the new James Bond, on October 14, 2005[7].

During the production of Casino Royale, with Martin Campbell having ruling himself out for the sequel[8], the producers turned to Roger Michell, known for Notting Hill and who directed Craig in two movies (The Mother and Enduring Love), to direct Bond 22 for a 2007 release[9].

Robert Wade remembers having completed a treatment in March 2006 and a first script in July[10]. The screenwriters wanted Vesper Lynd appearing in it as Bond's visions and flashbacks[11].

In these early stage, (or was it a little later?), the duo already envision to start the movie with Mr White in Bond's car boot[12]. 007 delivers him to the CIA for interrogation[13].

> - Robert Wade[14] : We had it that Bond was not happy about the way Mr. White was treated. Bond thinks he's not being pushed hard enough. So, without Mr. White knowing, Bond helps him escape, then follow him.

Roger Michell.

For having been exposed, White know his organization will try to kill him, so he head to Siena's Palio to spend his last moment, since the horses race holds a special place in his heart[15].

So Bond witnesses White's assassination and pursues the killer, before eliminating him in a rope fight, leaving him with no leads[16].

The plot thickens with the emergence of Quantum, a shadowy organization connected to the OPEC[17]. A key antagonist, Dante (or Gropius[18]), collaborates with Yusef Kabira, Vesper Lynd's duplicitous lover who never been kidnapped by Quantum, but was one of its member all along[19].

Bond infiltrates Quantum as hitman and receive as a target a woman involved in stolen antiquities traffic between Lybia and Iraq[20].

Bond ends up to captures Kabira and tortures him for days, driven by both a quest for information and vengeance[21].

> - Robert Wade[22] : We were taking cues from Lee Marvin in Point Blank and Nicolas Roeg's movies.

This brutal journey sees Bond going rogue, severing ties with both MI6 and the CIA as he pursues justice on his own terms[23].

The end of the story saw Bond attending a Quantum meeting at Bregenz opera[24]. Bond catch up with Dante, only to discover that Quantum has already eliminated him[25]. Bond leaves the premise, with the big eyes of Tosca performance as a backdrop, as the end calls up for another sequel[26].

Not entirely convinced by the story of Purvis and Wade, Michell wanted an American screenwriter to develop a story[27] and turned to screenwriter Ted Griffin[28].

A 10 pages outline was then presented to the producers[29]:

"It was a multi-city quest: Bombay, Berlin, Istanbul; with a great bad guy who had figured out a way to bring the internet down", remembers Michell[30]. "It started off with Bond drunk, driving through Rome with somebody in his boot. I typed this up and presented it to the Brocs. I could see it wasn't overwhelming them"[31].

Finally Michell, aware of the problems that would arise during the development of a Bond's movie in such a short time-frame with no script firmly in place, and of is inexperience at helming action scenes, decides to backtrack and leaves the director seat vacant in July 2006[32].

- Roger Michell[33] : I got into a bit of a panic at the prospect. At that time, the film was due to start shooting in January, and I just felt this terrible pressure of scrambling to get a script together with the clock ticking. To go into a film like James Bond when you don't really know what's happening would be a recipe for hell.

"We couldn't find a way of making us all happy with the script. It's been through various drafts, but I just decided to say no before I got too far into it", he adds[34].

The release date will later be postponed to 2008 while Purvis & Wade continued to work on the script and locations scouting was going ahead[35]. The duo would complete one draft in April 2007, containing no less than eight locations, including Algeria, France and Equatorial Guinea, but no South America countries[36].

One of the idea they developed for Bond 22 was:

Ted Griffin was born in 1970 and grew up in Pasadena. He is known for his screenwriter work on notable films like Ravenous (1999), Ocean's Eleven (2001) and Matchstick Men (2003).
In addition to screenwriting for movies such as Tower Heist (2011), he ventured into television, writing some episodes for The Shield or 9-1-1. He also created the FX series Terriers (2010), of which he directed two episodes. He later directed episodes of other TV show like Mad Dogs and Patriot.
Additionally of his screenwriting and directing work, Griffin also acted on the production side of TV shows and movies and have a role in The Wolf of Wall Street (2013, which he co-produced), as agent Hughes.

- Neal Purvis[37] : [Killing M] was a given back when we started Quantum of Solace. And I wouldn't say it was a throwaway scene or anything because it was still emotional, but it was a very sudden thing that happened roughly in the middle or two-thirds of the way into an early draft of that story.

Ultimately it was decided that if the movie was going to do something as massive as that, it needed to be done "with the right amount of emotional depth that that movie just didn't seem to have the time or room for", says Purvis[38]. The idea was then abandoned and re-used later for Skyfall.

Robert Wade also remember that Moneypenny was present in some iterations of Quantum of Solace[39].

One of the names the producers imagined to replace Michell was the one of Marc Forster, the director of Finding Neverland.

- Barbara Broccoli[40] : It's hard to find a director who's right for these movies. We usually start by asking ourselves, "Who's a good storyteller?" and Marc > certainly wins hands-down there. His films are diverse, and he's always up for a challenge. When you look at the last couple of movies he has done, they're very different.

At first Forster was reluctant at the idea of doing a Bond film[41], but his usual collaborators and a quote from Orson Welles (expressing regret on never having done a commercial movie) convinced him otherwise[42]. That, as well as the fact he liked Casino Royale's reinvention of the character and where it left him at the end. So Forster accepted but didn't really liked Purvis & Wade's script[43].

Forster wanted screenwriter Paul Haggis from Casino Royale to come back to work with him on this script[44]: "I knew Paul, they'd just worked with him", says Forster[45].

Director Marc Forster.

> - Marc Forster[46] : Once I signed on to do it we pretty much developed the script from scratch because I felt that it wasn't the movie I wanted to make and we started with Paul Haggis from scratch. And I said to him these are the topics I am interested in this is what I would like to say, what's important to me. And we developed it from there together. Then Barbara and Michael said they liked where we were going and they liked the script.

"There [Haggis] really changed everything, [...] our script was really very different even if some traces of it remained", says Robert Wade[47]. "He can keep the credit for that one, no problem", adds Purvis with a chuckle[48].

Haggis described Forster choice as "a very brave move on Michael and Barbara's part" and someone who put his "his own stamp on it, brought ideas he wanted to see, like the environmental theme"[49].

Forster was indeed "interested in the concept of water and natural resources"[50] and the action was relocated to South America because Forster saw "a documentary about water shortage in Bolivia"[51].

Haggis apparently took inspiration from the Cochabamba/Bolivian Water War[52].

In 1999, Cochabamba, the four largest city in Bolivia, privatized its water supply, as a condition of receiving a loan continuation from the World Bank. The government, under President Hugo Banzer, sold the water rights to Aguas del Tunari: a consortium led by the American company Bechtel. This privatization led to dramatic increases in water rates, in part to cover the costs of a modernization of the existing poor infrastructure, making it unaffordable for many residents with water becoming one fifth of the average person's salary. A new law also granted exclusive control over water resources to Aguas del Tunari, so people became worried of having to obtain licenses to collect rainwater from their own roofs.

In response, local communities, supported by labor unions and indigenous groups, organized large-scale protests and strikes. The government responded with violence, deploying military and police forces to suppress the demonstrations and even declared the state of siege. By April 2000, amid escalating tensions and international outcry, the Bolivian government was forced to cancel the privatization contract, and control of the water system was returned to the public sector.

Even if water price returned to their pre-2000 levels, as late as 2005, half of the inhabitant people of Cochabamba remained without water and those with it only received intermittent service due to the obsolete infrastructure and lack of money to modernize it.

After 2001, Bechtel sought a compensation against Bolivia for breach of contract, but made the headline in 2006 when they decided to abandon theirs legal claims[53].

> - Michael Wilson[54] : We're always trying to think in contemporary terms. What are the real issues that are coming up? I guess what we see in the future is a fight over natural resources, and the people that can control them will be bigger than governments or states. Our particular man here is someone who is controlling the water in various countries and if you remember in Chinatown, if you control the water you control the whole development of the country. I think it's true. Right now it appears to be oil, but there's a lot of other resources that we don't think about too much but are all essential and they're very limited and every country needs it. Because every country knows that raising the standard of living, and populations are getting bigger, is the way we're all going. So that's the way we look at it.

> - Marc Forster[55] : I said to Paul Haggis that I wanted [the villain] to be an environmentalist and have this environmentalist way of trying to protect the world. To be green is so fashionable now. Even Chevron and Shell and all these big companies and corporations suddenly use it for their advantage and say, "Look how green we are". But ultimately they use it to enrich themselves.

Forster wanted to create a villain "who was more like a normal guy, because the villains today are not as clear-cut as they used to be"[56]. This included no physical peculiarities for the villain[57].

The director also wanted to shoot a maximum at real locations rather than in studio (and eventually did so)[58].

> - Marc Forster[59] : [Production Designer] Dennis Gassner and I flew around the world scouting even before the script was fully worked out. I chose locations purely on aesthetics; then we wound up writing bits around these locales tying them into the action.

Forster also "had this idea I wanted to do four action sequences and four elements: water, fire, air, earth"[60]. The film ended with more action sequences than that, but the four elements are in the film: boat chase (water), eco-hotel (fire), aerial chase (air) and car chase earth (earth).

Haggis also notably wanted Vesper to have had a child with her previous lover and at the end of the film, Bond was supposed to discovers that the child was in a religious orphanage in Albania[61].

> - Paul Haggis[62] : What I had done is that this was a personal journey for Bond, and we don't know why he's going through everything he is. Eventually he confronts Greene and demands, "Where?". Next thing you know, [...] he shows up at an orphanage and a nun lets him in, saying, "We were expecting someone else". He goes "I know": I can't remember the exact dialogue, but he walks > upstairs and looks into a room with a lot of toddlers. She points out a child and he says, "That's her?". She goes, "Yes", and he says, "She wants you to have this", and he hands her cash and the lease on the building. The nun says, "Do you want to meet the child?" and he goes, "No, that's okay". And he walks out. My idea was that Vesper had a child with this other guy, and that's why she betrayed Bond. It wasn't just blackmail; it was bigger than that. The villain had put this child in the orphanage, and Vesper just didn't know. Bond, being an orphan himself, hunted down the child's location, feeling he owed it to Vesper, and wanted to be sure the child was taken care of, although he never wanted to have anything to do with it. And with that he walked away and I thought, "Oh, that's cool".

"We expect Bond to come and keep the child but he doesn't. Bond realises he's just trying to give this child the best life he possibly can and walks away", adds Haggis[63].

Forster, however, though the audience would never forgive Bond for abandoning the child[64].

> - Marc Forster[65] : Haggis had an idea they [the producers] weren't fond of, and I didn't know if it would work or not. The idea was that Vesper in the last movie, maybe she had a kid, and there would be an orphan out there. [...] They felt it wasn't particularly Bond, him looking for the kid. I think Paul thought he just leaves the kid, he doesn't deal with it. But [the producers] thought that would be really nasty, too, because Bond was an orphan himself. If he would find a kid, would he just leave it? They were so vehemently against it. That was the only time I saw, really, "No, we can't do that". They said, "Once he finds the kid, Bond can't just leave the kid. It's not right".

Talking about the producers, Forster says "the only rule was that Bond doesn't kill innocent people. They pretty much gave me freedom, but they said that Bond can't kill the innocent"[66].

> - Paul Haggis[67] : During production I got a call from Marc Forster, who said, "It's going really, really well, but we cut the ending". I said, "What do you mean you cut the ending?". "We didn't need it". "Well, how does it resolve?". And he said, "No, no, it's gonna be great". "How's it gonna be great if you cut the ending?".

On August 2007, a small unit went to Sienna to film shoots of the real Palio race[68].

Despite saying on August 25, 2007 to the press that he is only at "page 22" of the script[69], Haggis delivered few days later (on the 28th) his first script, which was then titled Sleep of the Dead[70].

He delivered a new script at the end of October, which intro introduced a new Bond's Girl, Camille, and her revenge against Medrano[71].

> - Marc Forster[72] : I thought there's this incredible opportunity here because we ended Casino Royale with Bond being at a very vulnerable state and he was sort of at a place where I felt one could really take advantage of and really pick up and sort of go a little further, a little deeper into the emotional ground of Bond. And I thought in the same time that it's fascinating because you know… I created the character of Camille as sort of a mirror image to Bond and a reflection of him. Basically, what I think is interesting about Bond, and I think also was a part of the sort of the success of Bond, is that Bond always kept mystery around him, and this mystery keeps you interested in the character. In a sense I don't think one ever wants Bond to talk openly about his emotional feelings. I think it wouldn't be right because there's still this hard shell of this tough man, but inside there's a certain vulnerability. So I created Camille's character sort of more to be a mirror image of Bond than to have a relationship or anything. So there's definitely a sexual tension, but above it all it's more like that she is very similar to Bond and speaks the words Bond sometimes would like to speak and through that we can feel sort of what Bond thinks, and I thought it would be a nice way to express that.

- Paul Haggis[73] : Their relationship was my choice, and it's something I really wanted. I also wanted a heroine who you couldn't save. Who every time you tried, she kicked your ass by rejecting your help. I thought that was a fun character. The approach with Bond is he always saves the girl, right? Well, he can save her, but she's going to save him, too. But overall, she just doesn't want his help.

Only few day after the script delivery, the Writers Guild of America went on strike.

The Writers Guild of America strike of 2007-2008 began on November 5, 2007, and lasted until February 12, 2008, spanning 100 days[74]. (To add to the bad atmosphere in entertainment industry, threats of strikes by the Directors Guild of America (DGA) and the Screen Actors Guild (SAG) were also in the air[75]).

The writer strike was targeted against the Alliance of Motion Picture and Television Producers (AMPTP), a trade association representing the interests of 397 American film and television producers/studios, including MGM, Sony Pictures, Warner Bros. or CBS[76].

Every three years, the Guild negotiates a new basic contract with this Alliance[77] and in the year 2007 the negotiations reached an impasse[78].

The central issue was compensations for writers in the rapidly growing digital market. Writers demanded a share of revenue from the new media platforms, including internet streaming, downloads, and other digital distribution methods, which were not adequately covered by the existing contracts[79].

They also sought fairer residual payments for DVD sales (the Guild wanted to double the residual amount)[80]. (Also, the WGA wanted to expand its jurisdiction on animation and reality programs[81]).

SOLIDARITY WITH WRITERS
"We Are All on the Same Page"
WRITERS GUILD OF AMERICA
ON STRIKE
TEAMSTERS 399
ACTING TOGETHER FOR A BETTER FUTURE
WWW.WGA.ORG
WWW.UNITEDHOLLYWOOD.COM

As usual, and like the last strike in 1988 which affected Licence to Kill, Writers Guild of America members were prohibited from performing any writing services, in accordance with the Guild rules. Even writers who disagreed with the strike were obligated to participate to it or risk sanctions, including fines or expulsion from the Guild.

For their part, Quantum of Solace's screenwriters Neal Purvis, Robert Wade and Paul Haggis were among the 667 writers who signed a Writers Guild of America West's tribune called "Not a Word" which stated: "We won't weaken our own position, or let down our supporters, by doing any writing during a strike. [...] So, just to be absolutely clear: we, the following screenwriters, will do no writing; until all writers get a fair and reasonable deal"[82].

(Among other signatories of this tribune, former Bond's films writers names of Bruce Feirstein and Michael France can also be read[83]).

ON STRIKE
WRITERS GUILD OF AMERICA
ON STRIKE
THE WRITERS GUILD Strike!

Paul Haggis on the picket line during the strike (2007).

Paul Haggis was on notably on the picket line outside Sony during the strike, describing the dispute with the AMPTP as "another example of corporate greed". He said he was prepared to walk the picket line for as long as it takes and that being a WGA member since 1975, "it's my job as a member of the Guild to be here"[84].

On strikers's blog United Hollywood, Haggis even wrote few posts about the strike[85].

The 2007-2008 strike had widespread effects on the entertainment industry, halting production of numerous television shows and films. Popular series such as The Office, 24, Grey's Anatomy, and Lost experienced shortened or delayed seasons[86]. A spin-off of Prison Break, in a women prison, was canceled[87]. Late-night talk shows, including The Tonight Show with Jay Leno, went off the air temporarily before returning with limited formats[88]. Movies were of course affected too, with for example The Da Vinci Code's sequel Angels & Demons being delayed of few months, or an Oliver Stone's Vietnam war movie to be called Pinkville, delayed three weeks away from principal photography (and eventually never filmed)[89].

Knowing the strike was coming, Haggis described his work before it as a "race" against the time[90].

> - Paul Haggis[91] : [I] did two drafts and a couple of polishes and then it was right down to the deadline. It was a week before and the writers [strike].

During the strike, Haggis however said he didn't finish the polish[92], which was "mostly to adapt it to locations"[93].

> - Marc Forster[94] : Paul gave us a draft and a polish of the script, but as he was heavily involved promoting his own movie [In The Valley Of Elah], I realised early on that it would be impossible for him to hand in a completed draft before the beginning of the writers' strike. For that reason, Daniel [Craig] and I started early on to work on the character's journey ourselves.

> - Marc Forster[95] : We were headed in an interesting direction but, unfortunately, because of the writers' strike, Paul and I were never able to actually complete it. That then led us into shooting only a partially completed script, one that would have needed more time and development.

Meanwhile, Daniel Craig has an opposite speech when he declared to the press in November 2007 that the screenplay was "finished" and "great"[96]. Forster also said during the promotion of the film that "the good thing is that Paul and I and Daniel all worked on the script before the strike happened and got it where we were pretty happy with"[97], before having a different speech, maybe more honest, years later...

> - Marc Forster[98] : I felt like, "Okay worst case scenario the strike goes on, I'll just make it sort of like a 70s revenge movie; very action driven, lots of cuts to hide that there's a lot of action and a little less story. To disguise it.

Principal photography started during the strike, on January 3, 2008[99], with a script that wasn't satisfied anybody, confessed Forster[100]. A press conference was held few week later at Pinewood, the 24th, for announcing to the public details about the film and its title: Quantum of Solace[101].

"I have no idea [of the meaning of the title]", said Paul Haggis soon after, "It's not my title"[102].

> - Marc Forster[103] : While you're shooting you're also editing, and you're trying to figure out if the story works… That was, to be honest, the least of my concerns because we were editing as we were going and the key for me was to make sure the visual effects are looking good, and to make sure the story would work. My nightmare was if the strike keeps going, we don't have a completed story, plus we have a release date, plus we have five weeks to cut it, plus if all of this doesn't work the film still comes out and you're the person responsible for it. So I thought, "Okay, am I going to work after this?".

- Marc Forster[104] : Ultimately at that time I wanted to pull out. Ron Howard pulled out of Angels & Demons which Sony was about to do and they sort of shut down, and at the time I thought, "Okay maybe I should pull out" because we didn't have a finished script. But everybody said: "No we need to make a movie, the strike will be over shortly so you can start shooting what we have and then we'll finish everything else". I said "Yeah but the time crunch"...

Years later, Craig described the problems with the script as a "fucking nightmare. Paul Haggis did a pass on the script, then he went off and joined a picket line, and we didn't have writers, so we didn't have a script. We probably should never have gone and started production, but we did. [...] The storytelling wasn't there [in that film]. And that's the abject lesson: going to start a movie without a script, it's just... Not a good idea"[105]. "Especially on a movie of that size"[106].

- Daniel Craig[107] : On Quantum, we were fucked. We had the bare bones of a script and then there was a writers' strike and there was nothing we could do. We couldn't employ a writer to finish it. I say to myself, "Never again", but who knows? There was me trying to rewrite scenes, and a writer I am not. Me and the director were the ones allowed to do it. The rules were that you couldn't employ anyone as a writer, but the actor and director could work on scenes together. We were stuffed.

"I ended up writing a lot of that film, I probably shouldn't really say, and I do not want a credit, it's fine, but we were in that state because that's what we're allowed to do", add Craig[108].

Forster confirm: "We were constantly changing the dialogue. Daniel would come in and say: I thought of something last night, I wrote this. What do you think?"[109].

- Marc Forster[110] : We [Daniel and I] went through ideas, looked at old pages. We spent a lot of time discussing sequences, set pieces, scenes. I told him what I had in mind and then he said, "Bond could say this or that", then I walked out and said, "This is what we're going to shoot". He knew very clearly the Bond he wanted to portray, and he was very clear what he would say and what he would not.

"There wasn't really ever a final script. It was just evolving, a constant evolving and changing especially with all the action", adds the director[111].

> - Paul Haggis[112] : I actually didn't want to do the second [Bond] film because I didn't think I could do as good a job [as on Casino Royale]. I think I wrote a pretty darn good script for that. I think that my draft was actually probably better than Casino Royale. But for whatever reason, they decided, you know, the writer's strike hit, and the director decided to rewrite it.

After extensive negotiations with the Alliance of Motion Picture and Television Producers, the Writers Guild of America dropped out their demands on DVD's residuals and animation & reality programs[113], but managed to make significant steps toward adapting to the new and evolving digital landscape. Theses notably included compensations for online rentals (writers will receive 1.2% of distributor's gross receipts) and streaming/download purchases (0.65%-0.7% of receipt)[114]. On ad-supported streaming, calculation is present too, but a little different[115]. Besides, writers hired to write some original content for the web would be covered under a WGA contract[116].

So with this settlement, the strike ended in February 2008, around one month and one week after the starting of the shooting of Quantum. "I knew that by April, we would run out of story", said Forster[117], so as soon the strike was over, he decided to bring in February screenwriter Joshua Zetumer to polish the script[118].

Joshua Zetumer[119] is an American writer of films and television. Growing up in San Diego in a family of therapists, with both parents working as psychiatrists, he was initially drawn to the world of music, aspiring to become a jazz drummer. But once he enrolled at USC and began studying American noir films from the early '70s, he switched his focus to screenwriting.

Affected by an Attention Deficit Hyperactivity Disorder, he says: "Writing for me always seemed like it was going to be just too difficult because of just the sheer level of focus that you have to have. But one of the things about ADHD is that you get hyper-focused. You can really just laser in and totally lose yourself".

Zetumer's earliest spec efforts was Villain, a psychological thriller about two brothers at odds in the Alaskan wilderness. The script never get produced, but it scored Zetumer an agent.

Another unproduced script he wrote was The Infiltrator, which he described as a "kind of an anti-James Bond film. It's inspired mainly by John le Carré, but with a good dose of The Bourne Identity thrown in".

After his participation in Quantum of Solace at around 27 year-old, he worked on the scripts of RoboCop (2014), Patriots Day (2016) and The Infamous (2016). In creating the series Say Nothing (2024), on which he act as executive producer and writer, Zetumer spent years researching The Troubles in Northern Ireland and Patrick Radden Keefe's book Say Nothing: A True Story of Murder and Memory in Northern Ireland.

> - Marc Forster[120] : [Zetumer] is a very young writer and he only wrote two or three scripts. And I read a script of his that I was very fond of and Barbara and Michael liked it. There were a couple of polishes and changes that I wanted to do and I felt that he was very well suited and I thought that he would be good for it and that's why I hired him.

During the promotion of the movie, the director stated: "we started shooting and the only problems I had with the script we were shooting in April, May and June so as soon as the strike was over we did another polish with someone and it worked out with all this stuff coming up. So I was pretty happy with all the work we'd done in January and February so [there won't be any need for reshoots]"[121].

- Marc Forster[122] : Josh had never rewritten or worked on a movie of that size before. He was in a hotel, writing a couple of pages a day, then would show them to Daniel and to me.

Principal photography ended on June 19, 2008[123].

The movie "picks up the storyline just one hour after the end of Casino Royale"[124]. Dan Bradley, who worked on the Jason Bourne franchise, was the second unit director of the film and shoot most of the pre-title scenes:

- Dan Bradley[125] : One of the things that a lot of people don't know is that I write most of the action that I shoot. So the first thing I asked Marc is if he minded me taking a pass at the action in this script. Fortunately he really liked what I dreamt up. Through this process we quickly found we were on the same page concerning the action for this film.

The third Alfa Romeo is visible on this photo.

Like the film, a script of it doesn't open on a gunbarrel sequence but on a car chase in Italy. Contrary to the movie, James Bond's Aston Martin DBS is not chased by two Alfa Romeo containing baddies, but three.

Similar to the film, there is the part in the tunnel where Bond loose his driver's door following a collision with a civilian truck ; and at the tunnel exit, one of the Alfa is eliminated when it crash into another civilian truck.

Police officers who were nearby notice the ongoing chase and decide to join it. There is the scenes in the marble quarry where the police vehicle is put out of action, then Bond and an Alfa arrive near a loader, overtake it from a different side. 007 grab a handheld machine-gun and then fire it on the nearest Alfa. The car riddled of bullet crash into a barrier on the side of the road and fall into a precipice.

A little after in this script, Bond's Aston Martin is flipped onto its side as it rub a quarry vehicle's wheels. The car slides while being hit on the undercarriage by gunfire from the remaining Alfa Romeo. Once Bond turns as hard as he can, the Aston Martin finally returns on all wheels.

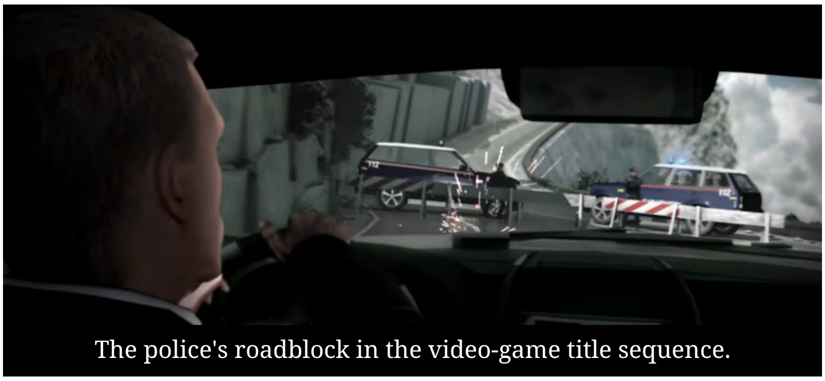
Immediately after Bond opens fire with his machine-gun on the Romeo sedan. The Alfa speed out of control down an embankment and into roadblocks set up by the Italian police. Given it is out of control, the Alfa end up taking more fire from policemen stationed around the barrier.

Now free of pursuers, Bond arrive to Sienna where, as in the film, he free Mr. White from the boot of his damaged Aston Martin.

Eventually, Marc Forster found the pre-title sequence too long[126] and the third Alfa Romeo was removed from it during the edit:

> - Kevin Haug (visual effects designer)[127] : We did also have a third Alfa Romeo at one point that had to be removed. The sequence was running a bit long. The editor had a bright idea of getting rid of the third Alfa which required taking out a section of it. There's three places where we had to remove an Alfa or pretend that the Alfa that you are looking at is a different one by dusting it up in a particular way so it looked like there was a continuity issue.

With that said, it is interesting to note that Bond get rid of his final pursuer via a police roadblock in the home video-game adaptation of the film. And yes, Bond initiate the demise of two cars by shooting at them, which is a thing also interesting to note since typically you want to have variety in your car chases, and not do the same thing twice...



The police's roadblock in the video-game title sequence.

After the title sequence, the film continues with the scenes in Sienna, with the Palio race in the background. Executive Producer Anthony Waye recalls: "In the original [screenplay] Bond got in the race [on a horse] but [the authorities] wouldn't allow that"[128]

Talking about permissions:

> - Callum McDougall[129] : Our initial thought was to shoot some of the rope sequence in the Siena Cathedral. However, the authorities wouldn't give us permission to film.

The scene was filming in Pinewood's studios.

> - Marc Forster[130] : A lot of the action sequences I developed when I went to locations and that's sort of how it came together. My first idea of intercutting the sequences, especially the sequence in Siena and the opera and the final sequence, came from Siena. They showed me the cisterns which the Roman's built under the city, the water channels, and I thought it would be interesting to put the safe house underground. Before, it was up on a roof in a building and then there was a rooftop chase. I thought it would be interesting to put it underground and then start the chase exactly when the horse race starts and have them intercut those two chases and then he pops up in the middle of the Palio and then we have him sort of on ground level and then he goes up to the roof and then crashes through the dome from the top. Originally, in the script, it was to enter the dome from the ground and fight up some scaffolding. I thought it was more interesting and more spectacular to crash in from the top and have the intercutting between the race and them.

After a brief time in London, Bond goes to Port-au-Prince where he have a hand-to-hand combat with a guy named Slate.

> - Michael Wilson[131] : When you have someone like Daniel [Craig], you can take things in a slightly different direction and make it more realistic. You're seeing a guy who gets banged up, hurt, cut and bruised, but he keeps on coming. It's more emotionally engaging than stunt-driven. We do have spectacular action, but it's more in the reality zone. The fights are tough and hard and take their toll on the characters.

007 ends up to meet Camille, and having a glimpse of Dominic Greene and Medrano before a boats chase in the port.

In a script, Bond dispatches the final boat (or RIB - Rigid Inflatable Boat) by tying the rusted grappling hook to an anchor line (action not shown in the film). Just before the gunmen on the boat prepare to shoot at Bond again, he kicks the anchor with the tied hook over the side (also not shown in the film). The anchor sinks and with the hook tethered, jams into the RIB's collar. Flipping the RIB both off Bond's boat and flinging the gunmen from the vessel. Then it hits a yacht in the harbor in this script.

The edit of the film made the end of scene unreadable.

Following Greene, lead Bond to Austria.

> - Marc Forster[132] : And then with the opera sequence: that sequence was set in the script in a U.N. type of setting with people overhearing these conversations through different languages and stuff and I thought it was interesting, but visually I just couldn't get it in my head and I felt it looked a little familiar. And then I saw the opera set and the eye reminded me of Bond and it was blue and I always loved the influence of Hitchcock on the early Bond films and The Man Who Knew Too Much certainly popped into my head.

Leaving the country, without anymore support from his superiors, Bond turn to Mathis in his villa in Italy. Here, Mathis have a dialog line that Bond himself deliver to Mathis in the novel Casino Royale:

> - Casino Royale*, chapter 20: "You see", he [Bond] said, still looking down at his bandages, "When one's young, it seems very easy to distinguish between right and wrong, but as one gets older it becomes more difficult. [...] The villains and heroes get all mixed up".

More events leads Bond (and Camille) to an hotel in a desert. According to Forster, " locations are characters themselves"[133]:

> - Marc Forster[134] : I wanted to put him [Bond] in the desert, because I'd never seen it in a Bond film. I felt like the desert is this mirror image of his state of mind. He is isolated, desolate, lonely. He's on his own, and I found that interesting.

According to a script details, Bond intending on killing Camille while they were huddled together, flames around them, before ultimately seeing an escape in the form of an inflammable tank to blown. His main motive for doing this was the fact that Camille had nightmares of dying in a blaze (perhaps due to the trauma of Medrano setting fire to her house when she was younger). Bond was hoping to save her from that terror and pain. However, that script doesn't specify what Bond plan to do next after killing Camille.

The movie ends up with Bond throwing the Vesper's necklace in the snow at Kazan, but it is well known that a scene of about a minute, which was to follow that scene, was cut during the editing[135]. In this deleted end, Bond confronts Mr. White who is with Guy Haines in order to eliminates him (because the MI6 know Haines is part of the Quantum organisation)[136].

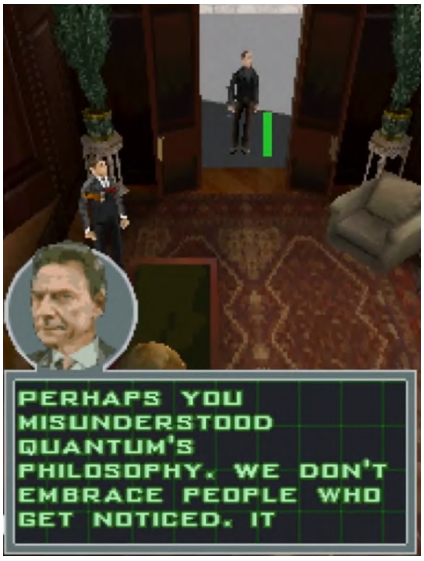
The scene also included the iconic "Bond, James Bond" line, absent from the film, as an answers to a "Who the hell are you?" question by Haines[137]. In an alternate take, Bond apparently didn't pronounce this obvious answer, Forster thinking that it would be more interesting to conclude with Bond looking at the villain silently[138].

Forster gave two reasons for the absence of the scene from the movie: first he felt cutting on the necklace "with Bond finding his quantum of solace" was a better ending, and second cause cutting the scene gave more freedom for the producers for their next film[139].

> - Marc Forster[140] : Ultimately, it wasn't necessary to the story. I didn't feel it served the story to bookend it with Mr. White in the car trunk and then again being assassinated. Also keeping Mr. White alive, not having Bond shoot him, keeps the mystery of the organisation alive and I felt that was more interesting than tying up every loose end.

The scene is present in the video-game adaptions of the film. The Nintendo DS version even place the player in Guy Haines' estate as the final level (playable, not a simple cutscene compared to other versions). The story of the film has however been changed in this DS version of the game (in particular: Greene is present in this level).

The PS2 version is the most interesting version, since it is possible to find in the game code of the disc a cinematic specially created for this version (but unused in the game) in which we see Bond killing White before could assassinate Haines and uttering the "Bond. James Bond" line[141].



PERHAPS YOU MISUNDERSTOOD QUANTUM'S PHILOSOPHY. WE DON'T EMBRACE PEOPLE WHO GET NOTICED. IT

Years later after the release of the movie, the filmmakers reflected about it:

> - Marc Forster[142] : Quantum of Solace was a bit of a different circumstance than a lot of my other films because you're stepping into a franchise, and also in that particular film, we're dealing with a script from the writer's strike, which was difficult to handle because there was never time to really develop a finished script. Most of the time was about scouting locations more than what was on the page. I'm very pleased with how the film turned out. I do think in the third act, some of it I wish we could have had more time to develop the script in a more profound and in-depth way… It's just that it was a very intensified and rushed experience. People are always looking for what they love most in that particular franchise, and ultimately you can't please everyone. I was very aware going into it that my objective in that particular film was to make it more like a '70s, very straightforward revenge movie, and that sort of pace was my point of view.

"I wish, in retrospect, we'd had a better script on Quantum", he adds[143].

> - Paul Haggis[144] : I think Marc Forster did a fine job shooting the action and stuff, and there's a lot of my stuff still in there. There's a great deal I liked about it, but I thought it could be better.

For Daniel Craig, the film "wasn't as satisfying experience as I'd have liked it to have been"[145].

> - Marc Forster[146] : You had Casino Royale, which came from the best book by Ian Fleming, and three or four years to develop the script. You have Skyfall, another three years to develop a script. We were in the middle: "Here, three months, make a movie". And as a director you can only do as much as you have on the page.

Sources/references from chapter 22: Quantum of Solace

1 Quantum of Solace Press conference (January 24, 2008); via "Quantum of Solace - Press Conference Transcript" on MI6-HQ (January 25, 2008): https://www.mi6-hq.com/sections/articles/bond_22_jan_press_conference2

2 "The week in books: The male desire for explanation; the real Quantum of Solace; and merchandising fiction" by Andrew Lycett in The Guardian (November 1, 2008): https://www.theguardian.com/books/2008/nov/01/greer-bond-steel

3 "The week in books: The male desire for explanation; the real Quantum of Solace; and merchandising fiction" by Andrew Lycett in The Guardian (November 1, 2008): https://www.theguardian.com/books/2008/nov/01/greer-bond-steel

4 Quantum of Solace, official "Production Notes" (August 25, 2008).

5 "What's Bond to happen next" by Devin Faraci on CHUD (November 8, 2006): https://chud.com/7979/whats-bond-to-happen-next/

6 "The James Bond Archives" by Ellen Cheshire and Paul Duncan (2012).

7 "Some Kind of Hero: The Remarkable Story of the James Bond Films" by Matthew Field & Ajay Chowdhury (2015).

8 "Being Bond: A Daniel Craig Retrospective" by Mark Salisbury (2022).

9 "The James Bond Archives" by Ellen Cheshire and Paul Duncan (2012).

10 "The James Bond Archives" by Ellen Cheshire and Paul Duncan (2012).

11 "Some Kind of Hero: The Remarkable Story of the James Bond Films" by Matthew Field & Ajay Chowdhury (2015).

"The James Bond Archives" by Ellen Cheshire and Paul Duncan (2012).

12 "Some Kind of Hero: The Remarkable Story of the James Bond Films" by Matthew Field & Ajay Chowdhury (2015).

13 "Some Kind of Hero: The Remarkable Story of the James Bond Films" by Matthew Field & Ajay Chowdhury (2015).

14 "Being Bond: A Daniel Craig Retrospective" by Mark Salisbury (2022).

15 "Some Kind of Hero: The Remarkable Story of the James Bond Films" by Matthew Field & Ajay Chowdhury (2015).

16 "Some Kind of Hero: The Remarkable Story of the James Bond Films" by Matthew Field & Ajay Chowdhury (2015).

17 "Some Kind of Hero: The Remarkable Story of the James Bond Films" by Matthew Field & Ajay Chowdhury (2015).

18 "Being Bond: A Daniel Craig Retrospective" by Mark Salisbury (2022).

19 "Some Kind of Hero: The Remarkable Story of the James Bond Films" by Matthew Field & Ajay Chowdhury (2015).

20 "Some Kind of Hero: The Remarkable Story of the James Bond Films" by Matthew Field & Ajay Chowdhury (2015).

21 "Some Kind of Hero: The Remarkable Story of the James Bond Films" by Matthew Field & Ajay Chowdhury (2015).

"Being Bond: A Daniel Craig Retrospective" by Mark Salisbury (2022).

22 "Being Bond: A Daniel Craig Retrospective" by Mark Salisbury (2022).

23 "Some Kind of Hero: The Remarkable Story of the James Bond Films" by Matthew Field & Ajay Chowdhury (2015).

24 "Some Kind of Hero: The Remarkable Story of the James Bond Films" by Matthew Field & Ajay Chowdhury (2015).

25 "Some Kind of Hero: The Remarkable Story of the James Bond Films" by Matthew Field & Ajay Chowdhury (2015).

26 "Some Kind of Hero: The Remarkable Story of the James Bond Films" by Matthew Field & Ajay Chowdhury (2015).

"Being Bond: A Daniel Craig Retrospective" by Mark Salisbury (2022).

27 "Some Kind of Hero: The Remarkable Story of the James Bond Films" by Matthew Field & Ajay Chowdhury (2015).

28 "Being Bond: A Daniel Craig Retrospective" by Mark Salisbury (2022).

"Haggis has Bond's number -- again" by Jay A. Fernandez in The Los Angeles Times (May 23, 2007): https://www.latimes.com/archives/la-xpm-2007-may-23-et-scriptland23-story.html

29 "Being Bond: A Daniel Craig Retrospective" by Mark Salisbury (2022).

"Some Kind of Hero: The Remarkable Story of the James Bond Films" by Matthew Field & Ajay Chowdhury (2015).

30 "Some Kind of Hero: The Remarkable Story of the James Bond Films" by Matthew Field & Ajay Chowdhury (2015).

31 "Some Kind of Hero: The Remarkable Story of the James Bond Films" by Matthew Field & Ajay Chowdhury (2015).

32 "Some Kind of Hero: The Remarkable Story of the James Bond Films" by Matthew Field & Ajay Chowdhury (2015).
"The James Bond Archives" by Ellen Cheshire and Paul Duncan (2012).
"Being Bond: A Daniel Craig Retrospective" by Mark Salisbury (2022).

33 Metro ; via "Roger Michell Discusses Why He Turned Down 'Bond 22'" by Devin Zydel on CommanderBond.net (January 24, 2007): http://commanderbond.net/article/4062

34 HIT ; via "Director Roger Michell cites script as reason for pulling out of Bond 22" on MI6-HQ (March 2, 2007): https://www.mi6-hq.com/news/index.php?itemid=4783

35 "The James Bond Archives" by Ellen Cheshire and Paul Duncan (2012).

36 "The James Bond Archives" by Ellen Cheshire and Paul Duncan (2012).

37 "'Skyfall' Writers on How They Came Up With the Movie's Last-Minute Title and the Explosive Finale" by Phil Pirrello on The Hollywood Reporter (November 9, 2022): https://www.hollywoodreporter.com/movies/movie-features/skyfall-writers-on-daniel-craig-james-bond-1235257806/

38 "'Skyfall' Writers on How They Came Up With the Movie's Last-Minute Title and the Explosive Finale" by Phil Pirrello on The Hollywood Reporter (November 9, 2022): https://www.hollywoodreporter.com/movies/movie-features/skyfall-writers-on-daniel-craig-james-bond-1235257806/

39 "Some Kind of Hero: The Remarkable Story of the James Bond Films" by Matthew Field & Ajay Chowdhury (2015).

40 "Quantum of Solace" by Joe Nazzaro in Starlog magazine (issue #371, November 2008).

41 "Some Kind of Hero: The Remarkable Story of the James Bond Films" by Matthew Field & Ajay Chowdhury (2015).
"Bond director pays homage to 007 cannon" on Canada.com (November 6, 2008): http://www.canada.com/topics/entertainment/movie-guide/story.html?id=4b15bb3e-f0d6-4c47-ab46-c4fd246ae5de

42 "Marc Forster – Quantum of Solace" on ICG Magazine (November 5, 2008): https://www.icgmagazine.com/web/exposure-marc-forster/

43 "Some Kind of Hero: The Remarkable Story of the James Bond Films" by Matthew Field & Ajay Chowdhury (2015).
"Fostering change" on The Star (October 11, 2008): http://www.star-ecentral.com/news/story.asp?file=/2008/10/11/movies/2202154&sec=movies
"Bond director pays homage to 007 cannon" on Canada.com (November 6, 2008): http://www.canada.com/topics/entertainment/movie-guide/story.html?id=4b15bb3e-f0d6-4c47-ab46-c4fd246ae5de

44 "Being Bond: A Daniel Craig Retrospective" by Mark Salisbury (2022).
"'Solace' offers thinking person's 007" by Anne Thomson in Variety (October 23, 2008): https://variety.com/2008/film/columns/solace-offers-thinking-person-s-007-1117994573/

45 "Being Bond: A Daniel Craig Retrospective" by Mark Salisbury (2022).

46 "A James Bond Set Visit and Seven Exclusive Quantum of Solace Images!" by Stax on Rotten Tomatoes (April 4, 2008): https://editorial.rottentomatoes.com/article/a-james-bond-set-visit-and-seven-exclusive-quantum-of-solace-images/

47 "Au service secret de Bond" interview with David Fakrikian in Premiere french magazine (Hors-série Spectre, 2015). Translated from french.

48 "Au service secret de Bond" interview with David Fakrikian in Premiere french magazine (Hors-série Spectre, 2015). Translated from french.

49 "'Solace' offers thinking person's 007" by Anne Thomson in Variety (October 23, 2008): https://variety.com/2008/film/columns/solace-offers-thinking-person-s-007-1117994573/

50 "Some Kind of Hero: The Remarkable Story of the James Bond Films" by Matthew Field & Ajay Chowdhury (2015).

51 "Agent of Change" by Logan Hill on New York Magazine (October 31, 2008): https://nymag.com/movies/features/51819/

52 "Some Kind of Hero: The Remarkable Story of the James Bond Films" by Matthew Field & Ajay Chowdhury (2015).

53 For sources about the Cochabamba Water War, see:
"Cochabamba Water War" page on Wikipedia.
"Cinema for a Grand New Game" by Joshua Clover on Film Quarterly (June 1, 2009): https://filmquarterly.org/2009/06/01/cinema-for-a-grand-new-game/
"From Coca To Congress" by Benjamin Blackwe on Znet (November 11, 2002): http://www.zmag.org/content/showarticle.cfm?ItemID=2612
"Bolivia regrets IMF experiment" by Juan Forero in The New York Times (December 14, 2005): https://www.nytimes.com/2005/12/14/business/worldbusiness/bolivia-regrets-imf-experiment.html

54 "The Secrets of Quantum of Solace" by Stax on IGN (April 4, 2008): https://web.archive.org/web/20080409230619/http://movies.ign.com/articles/864/864542p1.html

55 "Bond interview: Quantum Of Solace director Marc Forster" by Geoffrey Macnab on Screen Daily (October 16, 2008): http://www.screendaily.com/ScreenDailyArticle.aspx?intStoryID=41436&Category=

56 "Being Bond: A Daniel Craig Retrospective" by Mark Salisbury (2022).

57 "Are people ready for an emo Bond?" by the Associated Press on CNN (April 9, 2008):
http://edition.cnn.com/2008/SHOWBIZ/Movies/04/09/film.bond.ap/index.html

58 "Marc Forster Interview, Quantum of Solace" by Sheila Roberts on Movies Online (2008):
http://www.moviesonline.ca/movienews_15801.html

59 "Marc Forster – Quantum of Solace" on ICG Magazine (November 5, 2008):
https://www.icgmagazine.com/web/exposure-marc-forster/

60 "Marc Forster Interview, Quantum of Solace" by Sheila Roberts on Movies Online (2008):
http://www.moviesonline.ca/movienews_15801.html

61 "Some Kind of Hero: The Remarkable Story of the James Bond Films" by Matthew Field & Ajay Chowdhury (2015).

62 "Nobody Does it Better" by Mark A. Altman and Edward Gross (2020).

63 "Some Kind of Hero: The Remarkable Story of the James Bond Films" by Matthew Field & Ajay Chowdhury (2015).

64 "Being Bond: A Daniel Craig Retrospective" by Mark Salisbury (2022).

65 "How James Bond Nearly Became a Father" by Logan Hill on Vulture (November 3, 2008):
https://www.vulture.com/2008/11/how_james_bond_nearly_became_a.html

66 "007 director Marc Forster talks Quantum Of Solace" on Den of Geek (March 9, 2009):
http://www.denofgeek.com/movies/14121/007-director-marc-forster-talks-quantum-of-solace

67 "Nobody Does it Better" by Mark A. Altman and Edward Gross (2020).

68 "The James Bond Archives" by Ellen Cheshire and Paul Duncan (2012).
Quantum of Solace, official "Production Notes" (August 25, 2008).

69 "Paul Haggis talks new James Bond Movie" by Frosty on Collider (August 25, 2007):
http://www.collider.com/entertainment/news/article.asp/aid/5291/tcid/1

70 "The James Bond Archives" by Ellen Cheshire and Paul Duncan (2012).

71 "The James Bond Archives" by Ellen Cheshire and Paul Duncan (2012).

72 "007 Responds to IGN Readers" by Jim Vejvoda on IGN (September 22, 2008):
https://www.ign.com/articles/2008/09/22/007-responds-to-ign-readers

73 "Nobody Does it Better" by Mark A. Altman and Edward Gross (2020).

74 "The 100-Day Writers' Strike: A Timeline" in The New York Times (February 12, 2008):
https://archive.nytimes.com/mediadecoder.blogs.nytimes.com/2008/02/12/the-100-day-writers-strike-a-timeline/

75 "Hollywood fears strike as early as next month" on The Guardian (October 9, 2007):
https://www.theguardian.com/film/2007/oct/09/news

76 "WGA backs strike authorization" by Dave McNary on Variety (October 19, 2007):
https://variety.com/2007/film/markets-festivals/wga-backs-strike-authorization-1117974428/
"Hollywood Moguls Claim "Common Goals"" by Nikki Finke on Deadline Hollywood Daily (December 16, 2007):
http://www.deadlinehollywooddaily.com/hollywood-moguls-advertise-common-goals/
"Contract 2007 Negotiations Statement" on the Writers Guild of America West website (October 31, 2007):
http://wga.org/subpage_newsevents.aspx?id=2526

77 "Minimum Basic Agreement (MBA) Overview" in the Writers Guild of America, East website:
https://www.wgaeast.org/guild-contracts/mba/overview/

78 "Contract 2007 Negotiations Statement" on the Writers Guild of America West website (October 31, 2007):
http://wga.org/subpage_newsevents.aspx?id=2526

79 "WGA backs strike authorization" by Dave McNary on Variety (October 19, 2007):
https://variety.com/2007/film/markets-festivals/wga-backs-strike-authorization-1117974428/
"The Big Question: Why are Hollywood's scriptwriters going on strike, and does it matter?" by Andrew Gumbel in The Independent (November 2, 2007): https://www.independent.co.uk/news/world/americas/the-big-question-why-are-hollywood-s-scriptwriters-going-on-strike-and-does-it-matter-398644.html
"Contract 2007 Negotiations Statement" on the Writers Guild of America West website (October 31, 2007):
http://wga.org/subpage_newsevents.aspx?id=2526

80 "WGA backs strike authorization" by Dave McNary on Variety (October 19, 2007):
https://variety.com/2007/film/markets-festivals/wga-backs-strike-authorization-1117974428/
"The Big Question: Why are Hollywood's scriptwriters going on strike, and does it matter?" by Andrew Gumbel in The Independent (November 2, 2007): https://www.independent.co.uk/news/world/americas/the-big-question-why-are-hollywood-s-scriptwriters-going-on-strike-and-does-it-matter-398644.html
"Contract 2007 Negotiations Statement" on the Writers Guild of America West website (October 31, 2007):
http://wga.org/subpage_newsevents.aspx?id=2526

81 "Letter From the Presidents - State of Negotiations" on United Hollywood (January 22, 2008):
http://unitedhollywood.blogspot.com/2008/01/letter-from-presidents-state-of.html
"Hollywood writers' strike ends after 100 days" on History.com :
https://www.history.com/this-day-in-history/writers-strike-ends-after-100-days

82 "Not a Word" on the Writers Guild of America West website (November 2007): https://www.wga.org/subpage_member.aspx?id=2548

83 "Not a Word" on the Writers Guild of America West website (November 2007): https://www.wga.org/subpage_member.aspx?id=2548

84 "Paul Haggis: 'It's my job ... to be here'" by Robert W. Welkos on The Los Angeles Times (November 5, 2007): http://latimesblogs.latimes.com/showtracker/2007/11/oscar-winning-w.html

85 "Paul Haggis: The Reality of Reality and Animation" by Paul Haggis on United Hollywood (December 12, 2007): https://unitedhollywood.blogspot.com/2007/12/paul-haggis-reality-of-reality-and.html
"Paul Haggis Investigates: In Search of the Schism" by by Paul Haggis on United Hollywood (January 20, 2008): https://unitedhollywood.blogspot.com/2008/01/paul-haggis-investigates-in-search-of.html

86 "Effect of the 2007–08 Writers Guild of America strike on television" on Wikipedia: https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Effect_of_the_2007%E2%80%9308_Writers_Guild_of_America_strike_on_television#Shows_delayed_or_interrupted_by_the_strike

87 "'Prison Break' spinoff plans changed" by Neil Wilkes on Digital Spy (July 15, 2008): https://www.digitalspy.com/tv/ustv/a111203/prison-break-spinoff-plans-changed/

88 "Effect of the 2007–08 Writers Guild of America strike on television" on Wikipedia: https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Effect_of_the_2007%E2%80%9308_Writers_Guild_of_America_strike_on_television#Shows_delayed_or_interrupted_by_the_strike

89 "Hollywood's new scapegoat" by Anne Thompson on Variety (November 29, 2007): https://variety.com/2007/film/columns/hollywood-s-new-scapegoat-1117976784/

90 "Being Bond: A Daniel Craig Retrospective" by Mark Salisbury (2022).

91 "Some Kind of Hero: The Remarkable Story of the James Bond Films" by Matthew Field & Ajay Chowdhury (2015).

92 "Lunch With David Special: WGA Strike (part 2)" by David Poland on Iclipz (November 19, 2007): http://iklipz.com/MovieDetail.aspx?MovieID=62d4fb06-4b09-40a8-9479-82db0e25348f ; via "Writer Paul Haggis reveals he was polishing Bond 22 second draft when strike started" on MI6-HQ (November 22, 2007): https://www.mi6-hq.com/news/index.php?itemid=5597

93 "Hollywood's new scapegoat" by Anne Thompson on Variety (November 29, 2007): https://variety.com/2007/film/columns/hollywood-s-new-scapegoat-1117976784/

94 "Bond interview: Quantum Of Solace director Marc Forster" by Geoffrey Macnab on Screen Daily (October 16, 2008): http://www.screendaily.com/ScreenDailyArticle.aspx?intStoryID=41436&Category=

95 "Some Kind of Hero: The Remarkable Story of the James Bond Films" by Matthew Field & Ajay Chowdhury (2015).

96 "Interview: Daniel Craig on The Golden Compass, Bond 22 and More!" by Andy Duke ans Stephanie Sanchez on IESB (November 25, 2007): http://www.iesb.net/index.php?option=com_content&task=view&id=3784&Itemid=99

97 "A James Bond Set Visit and Seven Exclusive Quantum of Solace Images!" by Stax on Rotten Tomatoes (April 4, 2008): https://editorial.rottentomatoes.com/article/a-james-bond-set-visit-and-seven-exclusive-quantum-of-solace-images/

98 "Marc Forster Reflects on ‘Quantum of Solace'; Says He Wanted to Pull Out over Writer's Strike" by Adam Chitwood on Collider (September 30, 2016): https://collider.com/marc-forster-quantum-of-solace/

99 "The James Bond Archives" by Ellen Cheshire and Paul Duncan (2012).
"Bond on Set: Filming Quantum of Solace" by Greg Williams (and Marc Forster) (2008).
"First spy shots of Bond 22 filming with Daniel Craig in London" on MI6-HQ (January 4, 2008): https://www.mi6-hq.com/news/index.php?itemid=5737

100 "Being Bond: A Daniel Craig Retrospective" by Mark Salisbury (2022).

101 Quantum of Solace Press conference (January 24, 2008); via "Quantum of Solace - Press Conference Transcript" on MI6-HQ (January 25, 2008): https://www.mi6-hq.com/sections/articles/bond_22_jan_press_conference2

102 "Bond' Screenwriter Paul Haggis Has ‘No Idea' What ‘Quantum Of Solace' Means" by Larry Carroll on MTV (February 25, 2008): http://moviesblog.mtv.com/2008/02/25/bond-screenwriter-paul-haggis-has-no-idea-what-quantum-of-solace-means/

103 "Marc Forster Reflects on ‘Quantum of Solace'; Says He Wanted to Pull Out over Writer's Strike" by Adam Chitwood on Collider (September 30, 2016): https://collider.com/marc-forster-quantum-of-solace/

104 "Marc Forster Reflects on ‘Quantum of Solace'; Says He Wanted to Pull Out over Writer's Strike" by Adam Chitwood on Collider (September 30, 2016): https://collider.com/marc-forster-quantum-of-solace/

105 "‘Awards Chatter' Live Pod: Daniel Craig on Playing Gay in ‘Queer,' Bond Typecasting (“Boo-Hoo”) and Facing “My Final Act”" by Scott Feinberg in The Hollywood Reporter (November 30, 2004): https://www.hollywoodreporter.com/movies/movie-news/awards-chatter-daniel-craig-queer-bond-typecasting-1236074049/

106 "Daniel Craig: Seriously" in Esquire magazine (September 2011 issue).

107 "Daniel Craig exclusive interview" by Dave Calhoun on Time Out (December 2011): http://www.timeout.com/london/feature/2002/daniel-craig-exclusive-interview

108 "'Awards Chatter' Live Pod: Daniel Craig on Playing Gay in 'Queer,' Bond Typecasting ("Boo-Hoo") and Facing "My Final Act"" by Scott Feinberg in The Hollywood Reporter (November 30, 2004): https://www.hollywoodreporter.com/movies/movie-news/awards-chatter-daniel-craig-queer-bond-typecasting-1236074049/

109 "Quantum of Solace : les interviews" on Le Bond magazine of the Club James Bond France (issue #13, November 2008): https://jamesbond007.net/2008/quantum-of-solace-les-interviews/ (translated from french).

110 "Being Bond: A Daniel Craig Retrospective" by Mark Salisbury (2022).

111 "Marc Forster Interview, Quantum of Solace" by Sheila Roberts on Movies Online (2008): http://www.moviesonline.ca/movienews_15801.html

112 "Paul Haggis—First Person, Casino Royale—6/11/2014" by Groucho on Groucho Reviews: https://www.grouchoreviews.com/interviews/6334f8485fe75d1811c627e6

113 "Blueprint for a Strike in the Entertainment Industry: Lessons from the 2007 WGA Strike" by Cal Berry on Left Voice (November 5, 2021): https://www.leftvoice.org/blueprint-for-a-strike-in-the-entertainment-industry-strike-lessons-from-the-2007-wga-strike/
"The 2008 Writer's Strike Explained" by Katie Mapes on The Havard Law Record (February 22, 2008): http://hlrecord.org/2008/02/the-2008-writers-strike-explained/
"Letter From the Presidents - State of Negotiations" on United Hollywood (January 22, 2008): http://unitedhollywood.blogspot.com/2008/01/letter-from-presidents-state-of.html

114 "The 2008 Writer's Strike Explained" by Katie Mapes on The Havard Law Record (February 22, 2008): http://hlrecord.org/2008/02/the-2008-writers-strike-explained/

115 "The 2008 Writer's Strike Explained" by Katie Mapes on The Havard Law Record (February 22, 2008): http://hlrecord.org/2008/02/the-2008-writers-strike-explained/

116 "Update #2: WGA and AMPTP Reach Tentative Agreement" on ComingSoon (February 11, 2008): https://www.comingsoon.net/movies/news/41798-update-2-wga-and-amptp-reach-tentative-agreement

117 "Bond interview: Quantum Of Solace director Marc Forster" by Geoffrey Macnab on Screen Daily (October 16, 2008): http://www.screendaily.com/ScreenDailyArticle.aspx?intStoryID=41436&Category=

118 Quantum of Solace, official "Production Notes" (August 25, 2008).

119 ""Putting Personal Lives in IP" Joshua Zetumer on 'Say Nothing,' 'RoboCop' and 'Patriot's Day'" by Brock Swinson on Creative Screenwriting (December 11, 2024): https://www.creativescreenwriting.com/putting-personal-lives-in-ip-josh-zetumer-on-say-nothing-robocop-and-patriots-day/
"Joshua Zetumer" by Matthew Ross in Variety (June 21, 2007): https://variety.com/2007/film/features/joshua-zetumer-1117967375/
Joshua Zetumer's FX page: https://www.fxnetworks.com/shows/say-nothing/crew/joshua-zetumer-executive-producer
Zetumer's IMDb page.

120 "A James Bond Set Visit and Seven Exclusive Quantum of Solace Images!" by Stax on Rotten Tomatoes (April 4, 2008): https://editorial.rottentomatoes.com/article/a-james-bond-set-visit-and-seven-exclusive-quantum-of-solace-images/

121 "A James Bond Set Visit and Seven Exclusive Quantum of Solace Images!" by Stax on Rotten Tomatoes (April 4, 2008): https://editorial.rottentomatoes.com/article/a-james-bond-set-visit-and-seven-exclusive-quantum-of-solace-images/

122 "Being Bond: A Daniel Craig Retrospective" by Mark Salisbury (2022).

123 "The James Bond Archives" by Ellen Cheshire and Paul Duncan (2012).

124 Quantum of Solace, official "Production Notes" (August 25, 2008).

125 Quantum of Solace, official "Production Notes" (August 25, 2008).

126 "Being Bond: A Daniel Craig Retrospective" by Mark Salisbury (2022).

127 "Back into Bondage" by Bill Dawes on Fxguide (November 16, 2008): http://www.fxguide.com/featured/back_into_bondage/

128 "Some Kind of Hero: The Remarkable Story of the James Bond Films" by Matthew Field & Ajay Chowdhury (2015).

129 Quantum of Solace, official "Production Notes" (August 25, 2008).

130 "Marc Forster Interview, Quantum of Solace" by Sheila Roberts on Movies Online (2008): http://www.moviesonline.ca/movienews_15801.html

131 "Quantum of Solace" by Joe Nazzaro in Starlog magazine (issue #371, November 2008).

132 "Marc Forster Interview, Quantum of Solace" by Sheila Roberts on Movies Online (2008): http://www.moviesonline.ca/movienews_15801.html

133 "The James Bond Archives" by Ellen Cheshire and Paul Duncan (2012).

134 "The Desert" in *The Daily Mai*l (October 4, 2008): https://www.dailymail.co.uk/home/moslive/article-1066091/The-Desert.html

135 "Marc Forster explains why there were two different endings to Quantum of Solace" by Steve Weintraub in Collider (October 23, 2008): https://collider.com/marc-forster-explains-why-there-were-two-different-endings-to-quantum-of-solace/

136 "The Fate Of Mr. White" on MI6-HQ (February 8, 2015): https://www.mi6-hq.com/sections/articles/qos-mr-white-cut-scene
A danish TV2 behind-the-scene report, via https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=5JjquyO2zEc
137 "The Fate Of Mr. White" on MI6-HQ (February 8, 2015): https://www.mi6-hq.com/sections/articles/qos-mr-white-cut-scene
"007 director Marc Forster talks Quantum Of Solace" on Den of Geek (March 9, 2009): http://www.denofgeek.com/movies/14121/007-director-marc-forster-talks-quantum-of-solace
138 "The Fate Of Mr. White" on MI6-HQ (February 8, 2015): https://www.mi6-hq.com/sections/articles/qos-mr-white-cut-scene
139 "Interview with Quantum of Solace Director Marc Forster" by Thomas Leupp on Reelz: http://www.reelz.com/article/753/interview-with-quantum-of-solace-director-marc-forster/
140 "Some Kind of Hero: The Remarkable Story of the James Bond Films" by Matthew Field & Ajay Chowdhury (2015).
141 "007 Quantum of Solace - Scrapped Ending Cutscene (PS2)" on "Timeless Lunchbox"'s YouTube channel: https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=6_L12bKMO_E
142 "Marc Forster Talks ‘World War Z' ‘Quantum of Solace' & The Risk Of Failure" by Todd Gilchrist on IndieWire (September 13, 2011): https://www.indiewire.com/news/general/marc-forster-talks-world-war-z-quantum-of-solace-the-risk-of-failure-116364/
143 Empire : http://www.empireonline.com/interviews/interview.asp?IID=1803 ; via jamesbond.de forum : https://www.jamesbond.de/forum/viewtopic.php?style=34&p=157091&sid=87945cec7b7162800dc6b24109bc5081#p157091
144 "Nobody Does it Better" by Mark A. Altman and Edward Gross (2020).
145 "Daniel Craig: Seriously" in Esquire magazine (September 2011 issue).
146 Empire : http://www.empireonline.com/interviews/interview.asp?IID=1803 ; via jamesbond.de forum : https://www.jamesbond.de/forum/viewtopic.php?style=34&p=157091&sid=87945cec7b7162800dc6b24109bc5081#p157091

SKYFALL
007
COMING SOON IN IMAX

Release date (premiere) :
23 October 2012

Writing credit as per title sequence:
"Written by Neal Purvis & Robert Wade and John Logan"

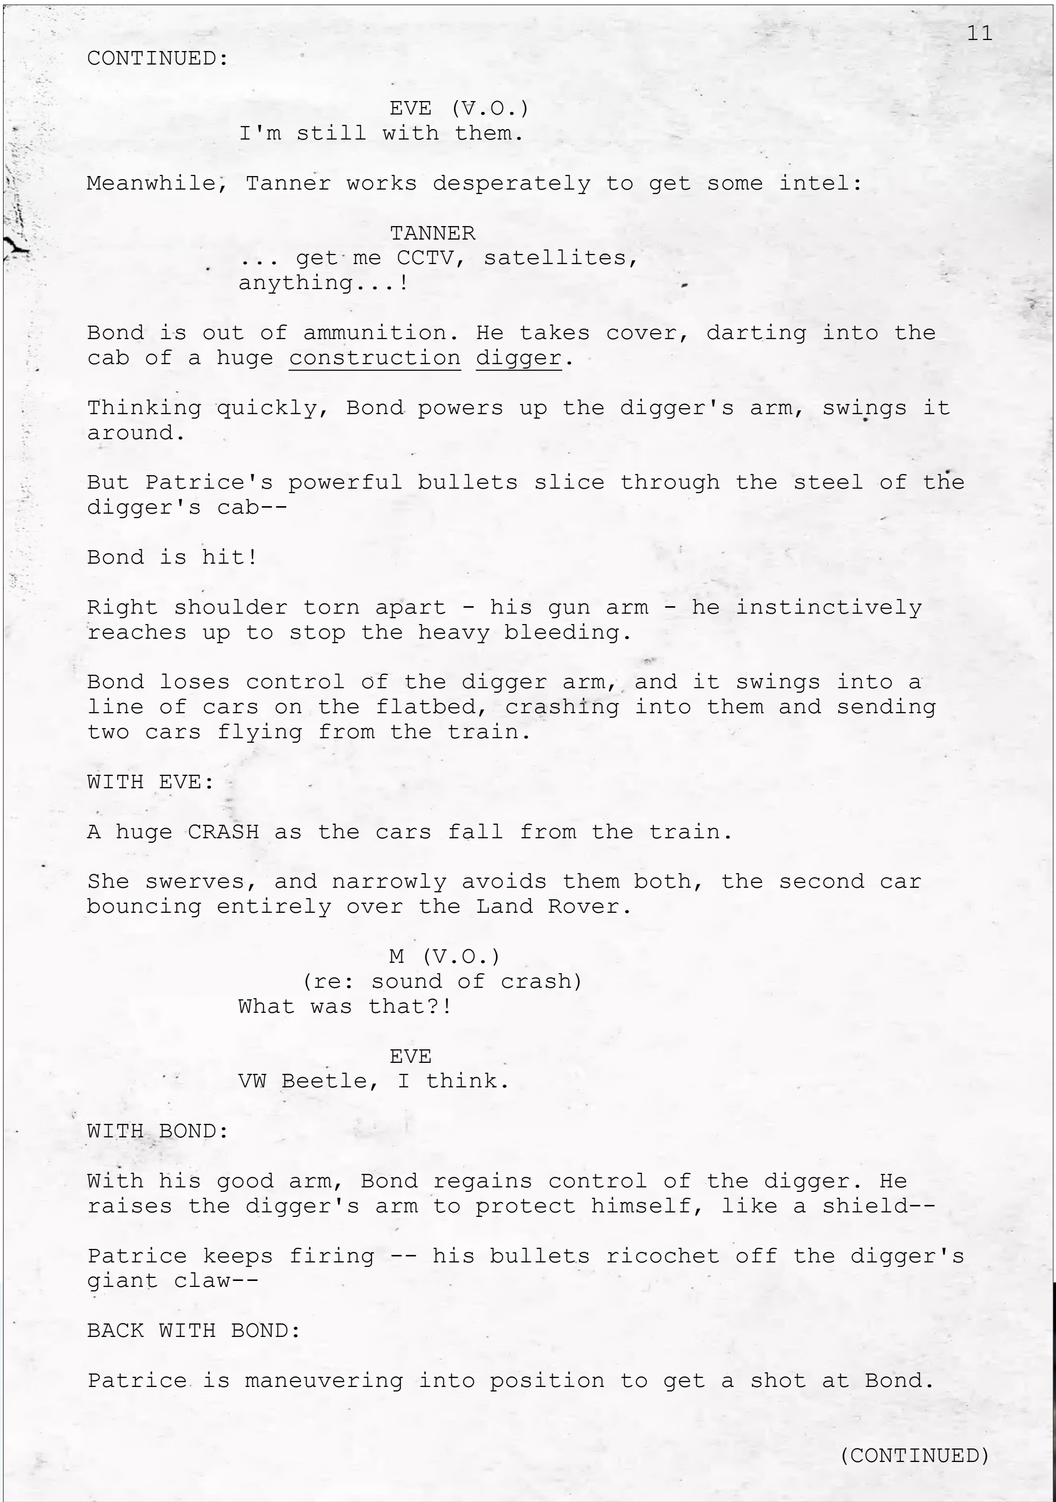
Director :................................Sam Mendes
Producers :...............Michael Wilson and Barbara Broccoli
Director photography :....Roger Deakins
Set Designer :....................Dennis Gassner
Composer :....................Thomas Newman
Editor :.......................................Stuart Baird
Title sequence :..............Daniel Kleinman
Title song vocals :..............................Adele



11

CONTINUED:

EVE (V.O.)
I'm still with them.

Meanwhile, Tanner works desperately to get some intel:

TANNER
... get me CCTV, satellites, anything...!

Bond is out of ammunition. He takes cover, darting into the cab of a huge construction digger.

Thinking quickly, Bond powers up the digger's arm, swings it around.

But Patrice's powerful bullets slice through the steel of the digger's cab--

Bond is hit!

Right shoulder torn apart - his gun arm - he instinctively reaches up to stop the heavy bleeding.

Bond loses control of the digger arm, and it swings into a line of cars on the flatbed, crashing into them and sending two cars flying from the train.

WITH EVE:

A huge CRASH as the cars fall from the train.

She swerves, and narrowly avoids them both, the second car bouncing entirely over the Land Rover.

M (V.O.)
(re: sound of crash)
What was that?!

EVE
VW Beetle, I think.

WITH BOND:

With his good arm, Bond regains control of the digger. He raises the digger's arm to protect himself, like a shield--

Patrice keeps firing -- his bullets ricochet off the digger's giant claw--

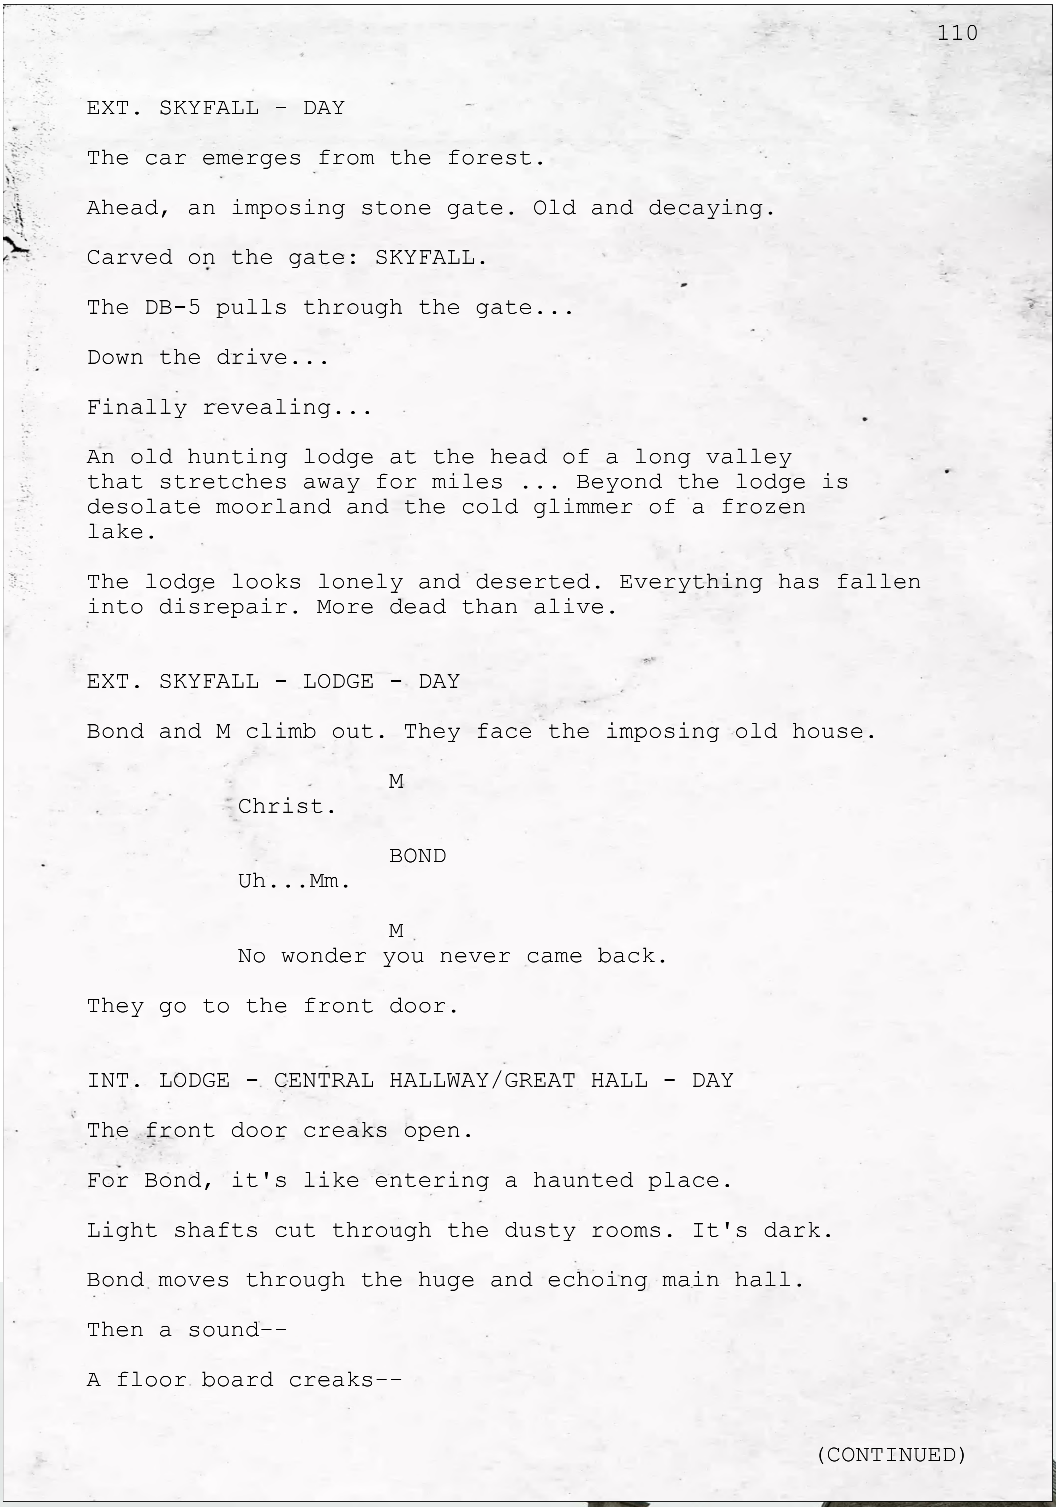
BACK WITH BOND:

Patrice is maneuvering into position to get a shot at Bond.

(CONTINUED)

CHAPTER 23

SKYFALL



110

EXT. SKYFALL - DAY

The car emerges from the forest.

Ahead, an imposing stone gate. Old and decaying.

Carved on the gate: SKYFALL.

The DB-5 pulls through the gate...

Down the drive...

Finally revealing...

An old hunting lodge at the head of a long valley that stretches away for miles ... Beyond the lodge is desolate moorland and the cold glimmer of a frozen lake.

The lodge looks lonely and deserted. Everything has fallen into disrepair. More dead than alive.

EXT. SKYFALL - LODGE - DAY

Bond and M climb out. They face the imposing old house.

M Christ.

BOND
Uh...Mm.

M
No wonder you never came back.

They go to the front door.

INT. LODGE - CENTRAL HALLWAY/GREAT HALL - DAY

The front door creaks open.

For Bond, it's like entering a haunted place.

Light shafts cut through the dusty rooms. It's dark.

Bond moves through the huge and echoing main hall.

Then a sound--

A floor board creaks--

(CONTINUED)

Cast:

James Bond :...........................Daniel Craig
Raoul Silva :........................Javier Bardem
M :..Judi Dench
Séverine :........................Bérénice Marlohe
Patrice :.....................................Ola Rapace
Kincade :................................Albert Finney
Gareth Mallory :..................Ralph Fiennes
Eve Moneypenny :..............Naomie Harris
Bill Tanner :..........................Rory Kinnear
Q :..Ben Whishaw

Main filming locations: United Kingdom, China, Japan and Turkey

This one is beloved by the fans, but not by me. Even if I acknowledge one of the best photography of the saga, the story which has as many hole as a gruyére, is a deterrent for me. Its far too convenient between the bullet that Bond kept in his body (because?) or the (horrible CGI) helicopters that arrive right on cue. Worst: the movie was promoted as "Bond's loyalty to M is tested as her past comes back to haunt her", but the screenwriters never give a shadowy past to M which could have been interesting. Above all Bond is written as a stupid guy who deliberately lead the villain to M rather than far away of her real location, thus straight causing her death! And yet there was four writers in that film produced by an ex-writer of the saga? Inexcusable! Beside, with this film I can't help to feel like a victim of false advertising with half of the trailers scenes not even in the film (neither in my DVD bonus), (and the french voice of Silva different from the trailers). So that movie was a huge disappointment for me.

Table of contents

Skyfall

Nothing (yet?)....................1538

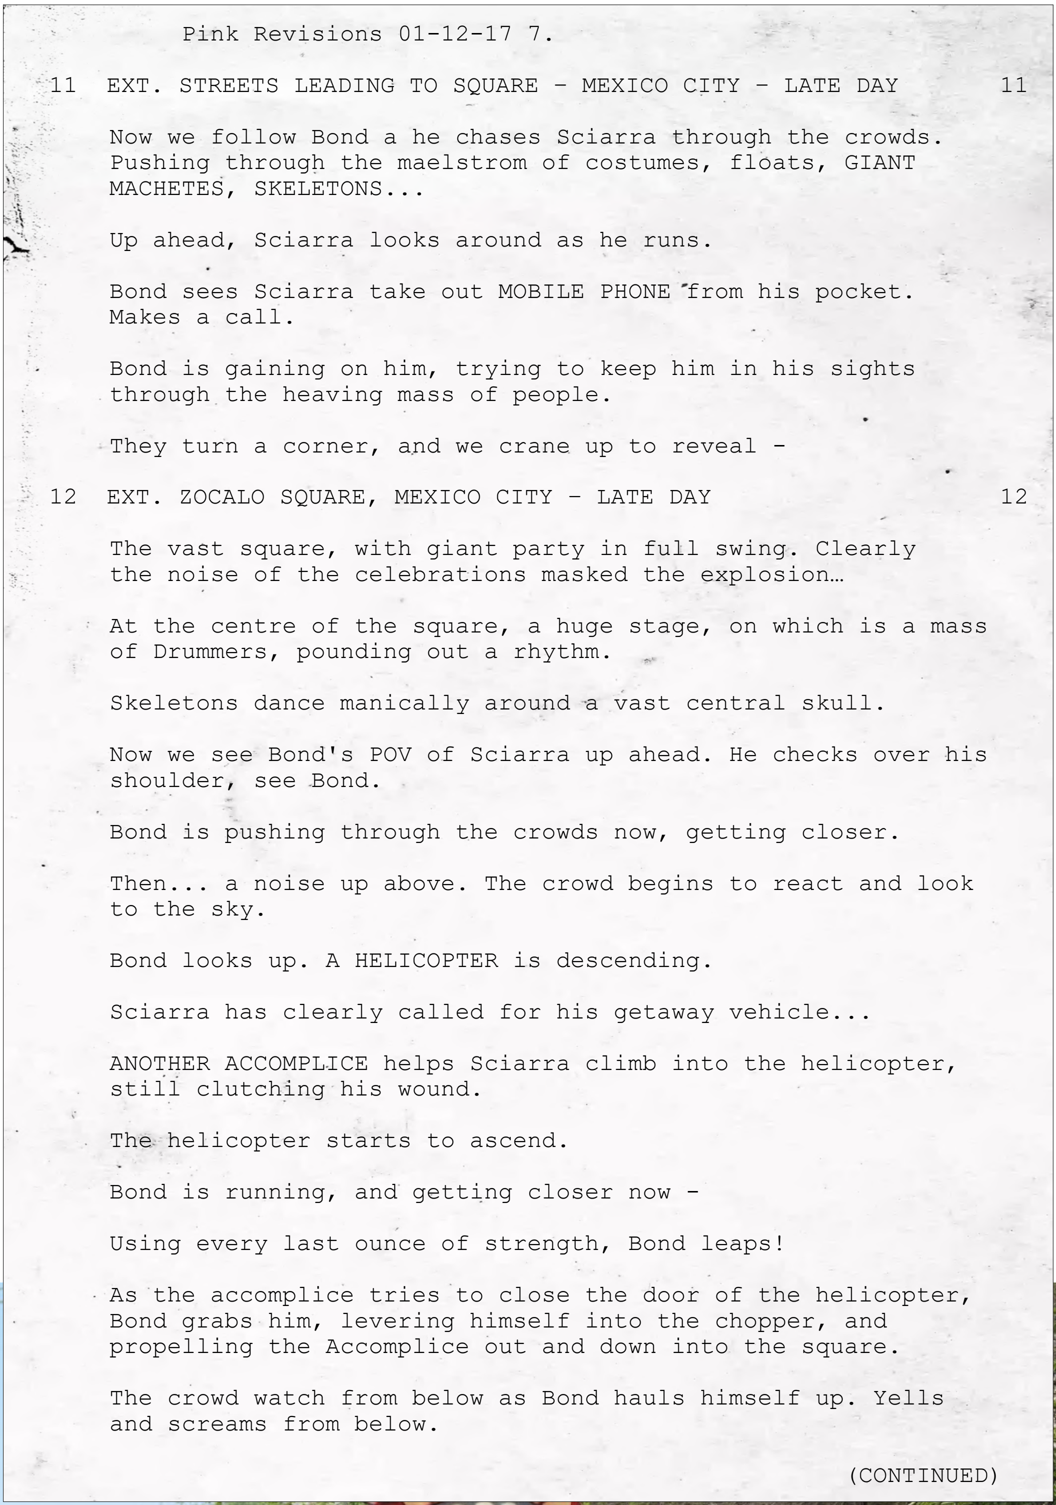
Nothing (yet?)

Since I don't have documents on which to base myself on to write my own take on the writing of this movie, there is no Skyfall chapter in this book...

Release date (premiere) :
26 October 2015

Writing credit as per title sequence:
"Screenplay by John Logan and Neal Purvis & Robert Wade and Jez Butterworth. Story by John Logan and Neal Purvis & Robert Wade"

Director :...............................Sam Mendes
Producers :...............Michael Wilson and Barbara Broccoli
Director photogra. : Hoyte Van Hoytema
Set Designer :....................Dennis Gassner
Composer :....................Thomas Newman
Editor :......................................Lee Smith
Title sequence :.............Daniel Kleinman
Title song vocals :....................Sam Smith



Pink Revisions 01-12-17 7.

11 EXT. STREETS LEADING TO SQUARE - MEXICO CITY - LATE DAY 11

Now we follow Bond a he chases Sciarra through the crowds. Pushing through the maelstrom of costumes, floats, GIANT MACHETES, SKELETONS...

Up ahead, Sciarra looks around as he runs.

Bond sees Sciarra take out MOBILE PHONE from his pocket. Makes a call.

Bond is gaining on him, trying to keep him in his sights through the heaving mass of people.

They turn a corner, and we crane up to reveal -

12 EXT. ZOCALO SQUARE, MEXICO CITY - LATE DAY 12

The vast square, with giant party in full swing. Clearly the noise of the celebrations masked the explosion…

At the centre of the square, a huge stage, on which is a mass of Drummers, pounding out a rhythm.

Skeletons dance manically around a vast central skull.

Now we see Bond's POV of Sciarra up ahead. He checks over his shoulder, see Bond.

Bond is pushing through the crowds now, getting closer.

Then... a noise up above. The crowd begins to react and look to the sky.

Bond looks up. A HELICOPTER is descending.

Sciarra has clearly called for his getaway vehicle...

ANOTHER ACCOMPLICE helps Sciarra climb into the helicopter, still clutching his wound.

The helicopter starts to ascend.

Bond is running, and getting closer now -

Using every last ounce of strength, Bond leaps!

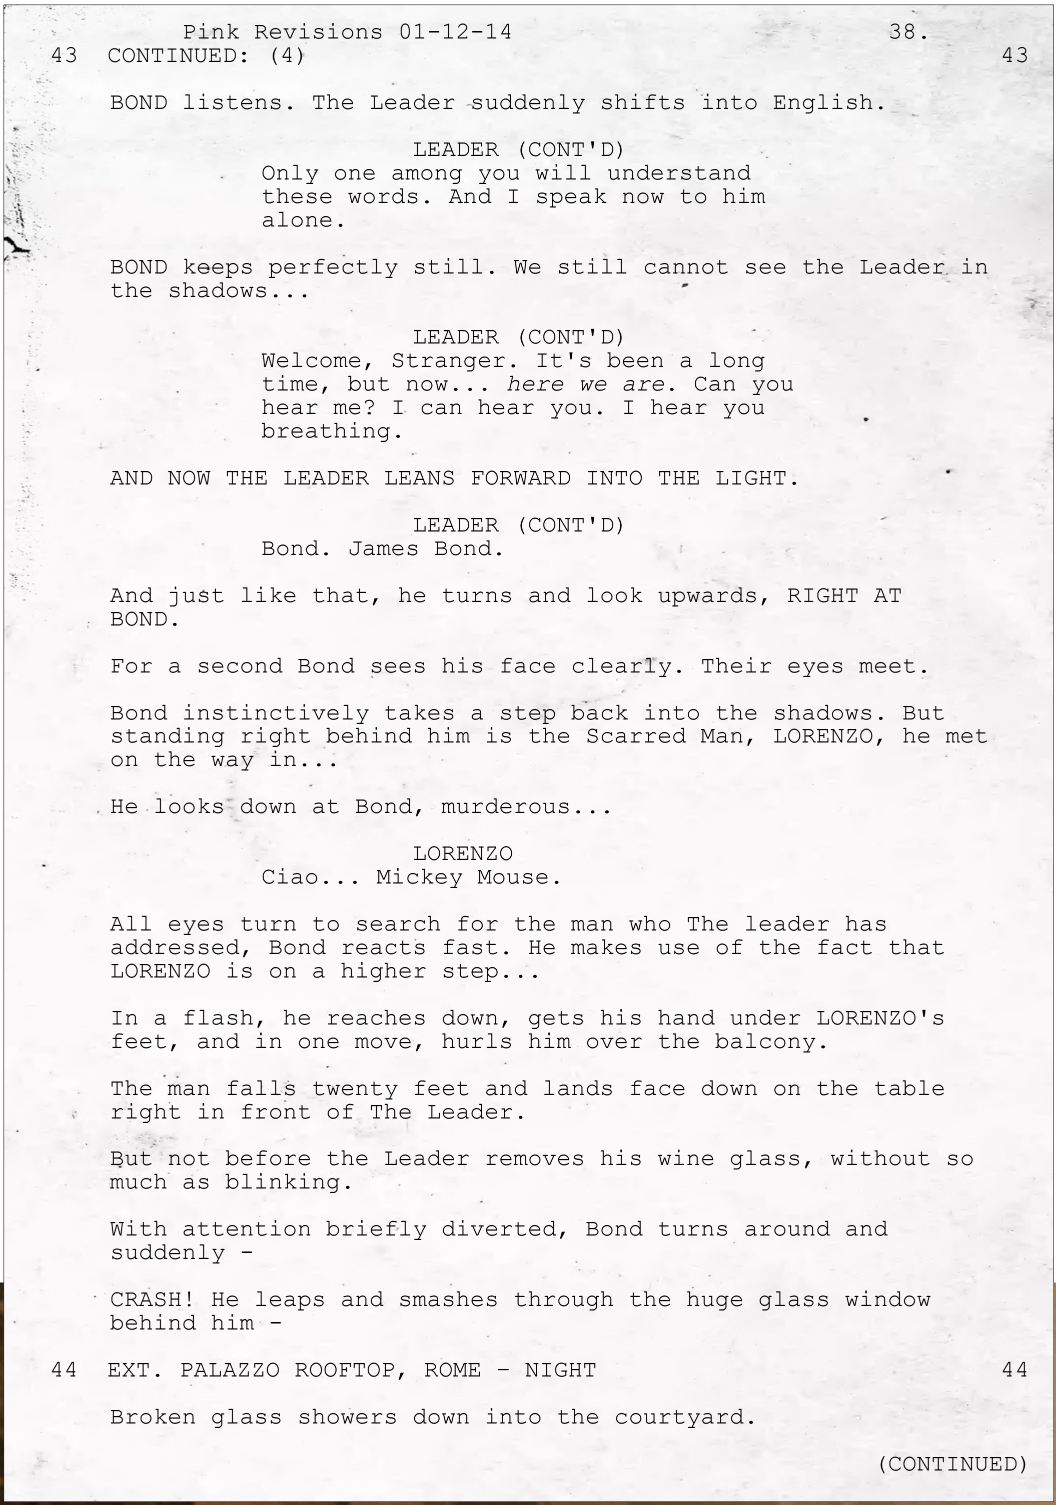
As the accomplice tries to close the door of the helicopter, Bond grabs him, levering himself into the chopper, and propelling the Accomplice out and down into the square.

The crowd watch from below as Bond hauls himself up. Yells and screams from below.

(CONTINUED)

CHAPTER 24

SPECTRE



Pink Revisions 01-12-14 38.

43 CONTINUED: (4) 43

BOND listens. The Leader suddenly shifts into English.

LEADER (CONT'D)
Only one among you will understand these words. And I speak now to him alone.

BOND keeps perfectly still. We still cannot see the Leader in the shadows...

LEADER (CONT'D)
Welcome, Stranger. It's been a long time, but now... here we are. Can you hear me? I can hear you. I hear you breathing.

AND NOW THE LEADER LEANS FORWARD INTO THE LIGHT.

LEADER (CONT'D)
Bond. James Bond.

And just like that, he turns and look upwards, RIGHT AT BOND.

For a second Bond sees his face clearly. Their eyes meet.

Bond instinctively takes a step back into the shadows. But standing right behind him is the Scarred Man, LORENZO, he met on the way in...

He looks down at Bond, murderous...

LORENZO
Ciao... Mickey Mouse.

All eyes turn to search for the man who The leader has addressed, Bond reacts fast. He makes use of the fact that LORENZO is on a higher step...

In a flash, he reaches down, gets his hand under LORENZO's feet, and in one move, hurls him over the balcony.

The man falls twenty feet and lands face down on the table right in front of The Leader.

But not before the Leader removes his wine glass, without so much as blinking.

With attention briefly diverted, Bond turns around and suddenly -

CRASH! He leaps and smashes through the huge glass window behind him -

44 EXT. PALAZZO ROOFTOP, ROME - NIGHT 44

Broken glass showers down into the courtyard.

(CONTINUED)

Cast:

James Bond :..........................Daniel Craig
Oberhauser (Blofeld) :....Christoph Waltz
Madeleine Swann :...............Léa Seydoux
Hinx :..................................David Bautista
Lucia Sciarra :..................Monica Bellucci
Max Denbigh :......................Andrew Scott
Mr. White :..................Jesper Christensen
M :..Ralph Fiennes
Moneypenny :....................Naomie Harris
Bill Tanner :..........................Rory Kinnear
Q :..Ben Whishaw

Main filming locations: Austria, Italy, Morocco, Mexico and UK.

Skyfall had been a big disappointment for me from a screenplay point of view, "having had so much time and so many writers and ending up with this?". So, bad news to find the same people on the writing of this new film and the verdict on the scenario delivered is just a little better. If it's good that the filmmakers (finally) decided to finish the story of Quantum, unfortunately they cannot help but bring out SPECTRE and Blofeld from where they should have stayed forever. The story would have worked better with a villain named differently than Blofeld, to whom Waltz gives the appearance of a buffoon. Beyond the color filter giving unnatural images, Newman is in recycling mode. At least the character of Madeleine brings a little something in this slow film where we get a little bored such as during the car chase in Rome...

Table of contents

Spectre

The premises....1542
October 25, 2013 treatment: mole, Charlotte and Leiter....1545
Late February script: cage fight, Kaja, and mine....1547
May script: Day of the Dead, female Blofeld, and "sloppy mess"....1551
The boys are back in town....1553
October 17, 2014' script: Stockmann, Irma, and solar oven....1559
October 8, 2014' script: Heineken, disease and ambulance....1588
Reactions....1598
December 1, 2014' script: card game....1601
November 9, 2014' beat sheet....1614

The premises

On November 24, 2014, when Sony Pictures employees opened their computers at the Culver City headquarters, they discovered an image of a giggling skeleton with the message "Hacked By GOP" (Guardian of Peace) then suddenly it's the black screen[1]. The hackers threaten to reveal sensitive information (they say they have stolen around a hundred terabytes of data) if the company doesn't comply with their requests[2].

In the days that followed, five Sony films, most of which hadn't yet been released in theaters, appeared on Internet and spread like wildfire in torrent[3]. Just like hundreds of thousands of secret Sony Pictures files: discussion e-mails, scripts, budgets, contracts, passwords, personal information on employees, salary amounts, legal documents, marketing plans, etc... Among these pirated files that ended up on the net: complete and recent scripts from the future Bond 24 and e-mails between members of EON, MGM and Sony regarding the film (script improvement proposals, budget discussions, script summary, etc.).

For the FBI, North Korea is behind the Sony's hack[4]. It turns out that Sony was actually planning to release a film called The Interview with James Franco, a comedy with bold humor which notably made fun of the supreme leader of North Korea, Kim Jong Un. Suffice to say that North Korea reacted badly at the time, considering the film as an "act of war", promising "merciless counter-measure" if the American administration didn't ban it[5].

Later, on April 16, 2015, the famous website Wikileaks will put many of Sony's hacked documents and e-mails online, including those on Bond, thus making these documents very easily accessible to anyone (which was not the case before). Wikileaks justifies the publication of theses data in a press release by indicating that it provides "a rare insight into the inner workings of a large, secretive multinational corporation. The work publicly known from Sony is to produce entertainment; however, The Sony Archives show that behind the scenes this is an influential corporation, with ties to the White House [...], with an ability to impact laws and policies, and with connections to the US military-industrial complex"[6]. A disaster for some fans who were seeking to avoid spoilers at all costs (without having a long-term vision).

The writing of Spectre had started when during the filming of Skyfall[7], the producers asked one of the writers of that film, John Logan, if he would be interested in "continuing the story"[8].

John David Logan[9] was born in 1961 in the United States.

He studied at Millburn High School in New Jersey and then at Northwestern University in Chicago. It was in Chicago that he began his career as a playwright with the play Never the Sinner on a news item: the assassination in 1924 of the teenager Robert Franks by two sons of good families and the trial which followed. Logan also writes the play Hauptmann about the kidnapping of Charles Lindbergh's child, and the musical drama Riverview.

Towards the end of the 1990s Logan launch himself into screenwriting with television films Tornado! (1996) and RKO 281 (1999), historical television film looking back on the troubled production of Citizen Kane.

1999 was also the year when his first scripts written for the cinema were released in the theaters: Bats and Any Given Sunday. In the years that followed, we found Logan notably on Gladiator (2000), Star Trek: Nemesis (2002), The Last Samurai (2003) or the biographical film on Howard Hughes, Aviator (2004).

In December 2009 his piece Red takes place to the stage in London. Work with two characters inspired by a significant moment in the career of the painter Mark Rothko, Red enjoyed great success. Being renewed at Broadway a few months later, Red won six Tony Awards.

In 2011 he is on Hugo by Martin Scorsese. Then he was invited onto James Bond to rewrite Purvis and Wade's (and Peter Morgan) existing script of Skyfall. Coincidentally, Logan had recently re-read all of Fleming's novels when director Sam Mendes asked him to come work on the project.

Logan says his tasks included "everything from working out action sequences to writing dialogue to reinventing some of the characters in the process of discovering them. But I had a fantastic spine that Rob and Neal had worked on so diligently. Their script was terrific and had many of the important elements that were in Skyfall. It had the Silva story, the M story. But things like Moneypenny, introducing a new Q, and figuring out the mechanics of everything, the entire third act when they get to Skyfall, was all the process you do with a director. It was Sam and me at first, then with Barbara and Michael, sitting around a table, really going into the nuts and bolts of structure, then dialogue".

In May 2014 the television series he created and scripted, Penny Dreadful (on which Sam Mendes is executive producer), is broadcast on Showtime. A fantasy drama set in Victorian London, the series ended after three seasons in June 2016.

His work on Skyfall having visibly satisfied the producers and the director, John Logan is the first screenwriter to be hired on Spectre (2015). His work will be rewritten by Purvis, Wade and Jez Butterworth.

In 2017 Logan is on of the screenwriters of Alien: Covenant and in 2020 he launched a spin-off to series Penny Dreadful ; Penny Dreadful: City of Angels. He made his directorial debut in 2022 in They/Them.

When John Logan starts on Bond 24:

> - John Logan[10] : For a while I was toying with The Hildebrand Rarity [...]. For a while, too, we were thinking about two movies, a two-movies arc called The Death Collector that took Bond to Africa, where he gets involved in Coltan mining.

The Death Collector is the title of the seventh chapter of the novel You Only Live Twice.

> - Michael Wilson[11] : Sam Mendes and John Logan wanted to use SPECTRE and Ernst Stravo Blofeld, so we told them to go ahead and we would look into clearing the rights.

Despite the fact that Blofeld and SPECTRE belong to a past/gone time; that they now have a symbol of ridicule and cliché attached to them with all the countless parodies (and even self-parody) of the character as in Austin Powers or James Bond Jr. ; despite that the Craig's era already had its perfect criminal organization with Quantum; somewhere for some reason it was deemed that it would be a good idea to bring back these two elements.

> - John Logan[12] : When we realised we could actually use Blofeld, that clarified everything in terms of what the story might be [...] while the idea that Blofeld has been orchestrating all of these Daniel Craig stories for a particular end was very exciting.

...Although the previous films had never originally been thought of with a major connecting thread in mind, the production having not planned anything in advance when making these films at the time. The idea is therefore to connect wagons together that were never designed to be connected one day.

After the commercial and critical success of Skyfall, the production wants its director Sam Mendes to return to do the same for this new film.

> - Sam Mendes[13] : It all starts from character with me, and I wanted to explore all sorts of different aspects of the characters that I'd left behind in Skyfall. We had populated MI6 with a whole new generation of people: a new M, a new Moneypenny and a new Q. I wanted to let those relationships develop and grow. [Bond] had a sense of new beginnings. Skyfall was an entirely reactive movie as far as Bond was concerned. [...] You could even argue that at the end of Skyfall he has failed. He has not kept M alive, and though Silva's death is a victory for Bond, there are other elements that are failures. Hence, with Spectre, I wanted to give him a chance of redemption.

Sam Mendes is back to directing after Skyfall.

Mendes says there was no script when he came in, only a treatment, "although Barbara and Michael weren't one hundred percent about it"[14]. The director wants to return for only one film, so the idea of making a two-part story would be abandoned[15].

October 25, 2013 treatment: mole, Charlotte and Leiter

A treatment was notably completed on October 25, 2013[16], Mendes was involved in it[17].

"There's so much I love [about it]. Great locations and [...] some strong twists and turns", wrote a Sony executive who had read it[18]. Another executive have the same feeling: "lot of big ideas that are exciting and fun and great opportunities for romance, action and plot reversal"[19].

The outline is refereed internally by Sony as "Bond's last mission"[20].

M is in the field (with Bond and probably others member of the MI6 team) in the pre-title sequence[21], which notably include an old school book code[22]. Decoding it will be a part of the plot through the film, and in the end, they deciphering "Blofeld" name out if it[23].

So Blofeld is the big villain and he happens to be behind the events of the previous Craig's movies[24]. Even if Sony like that idea[25], they are concerned about how managing to making it convincing[26], which one executive noting "right now it feels like a bit of a stretch"[27].

Another problem is that Sony executives seems to not understand the plan Blofeld have in this new movie and why it's so important to stop him now[28].

"Here's the big question: what was Blofeld's big plan?", wrote one executive, "Blowing up the NATO event and causing the blackout doesn't seem that much worse than prior villain plots"[29]. Another member of Sony says of Blofeld: "He feels like the African version of the bad South American General from QOS [Quantum of Solace]"[30] and someone "a little bit too willing to get his hands dirty"[31].

There is a Bond girl called Charlotte King who, at one point, leads a black ops team; she work for the CIA[32]. Bond team up with her and they adopt a husband and wife cover.[33]

There is also a "death mask ball" scene in Rome[34], as well a car chase[35], maybe including the "new Aston Martin" referred in one mail[36]. After the chase, Bond and Charlotte pay a visit to a character named Callo[37].

Q's Smart Blood gadget was already here[38], with Tanner accessing it at one point[39]. There were also scenes in Tangier, "parkour on skis"[40] (ultimately Daniel Craig didn't want to get on skis for this film, so any skis sequences ideas were dropped[41]), and Mr. White was to make a return in the saga[42].

One of the big concept of this treatment is that there is also a mole at the MI6[43]. This led to paranoia between the characters[44], suspecting each other and trusting no one. For example, Moneypenny is a one point under suspicion[45].

Ultimately, Bill Tanner is revealed to be the mole[46]!

Charlotte also turn to be a traitor, even if her motive was apparently too obscures for Sony's employees to understand[47]. "Not quite sure, even by the end, why Charlotte is trying to kill Bond", wrote a Sony executive[48].

At one point 007 give Charlotte a wound to her face, "turning her into a cool Bond villain", note another executive[49]. This same Sony's employee find weird that Felix Leiter, who is present in the treatment, is fighting side by side with James to kill Charlotte, while she is a member from his own agency[50].

Suddenly on November 15, 2013, MGM and Danjaq announced that they had just succeeded in acquiring all the Kevin McClory's rights on Thunderball and its premises, and said in a statement released with McClory's heirs that they had reached "an amicable conclusion the legal and business disputes that have arisen periodically for over 50 years"[51]. Although no court decision has ever awarded the exclusive rights onto Blofeld and SPECTRE to McClory, EON is now able to re-use them without fear of litigation like "you know, Blofeld and SPECTRE first appeared during the creation of Thunderball so we are going to attempts a lawsuits which may or may not turn out in our favor but which risk handicapping you until we finally get a response from the courts".

Late February script: cage fight, Kaja, and mine

One of the things Mendes wants is a character that Bond could fall in love with and walk away with at the end of the film, as there was a feeling within the production that this would be Daniel Craig's last film[52]. Logan therefore invents what will ultimately become the character of Madeleine Swann[53].

> - Sam Mendes[54] : For Spectre, I gave the screenwriters three ideas which seemed essential to me: Bond had to continue the exploration of his long-silenced childhood, the film had to reconnect with the first missions, and 007 had to be faced with a very strong life choice. Towards the end of the film, the character has a line that is dear to me: "and besides, I've got something better to do". I must admit that it was me who wrote it and I take full responsibility for it.

A script was completed around February/March 2014[55]. "Little lame", "flat and basic", "things don't seem to build from one idea to the next", "linking all the stories requires real plotting which they haven't done", were the opinions of some who read it at Sony[56]. Another Sony employee is more positive: "there are so many good ideas to play with but they need further exploration to really deliver"[57]. Another Sony member opinion is "I was really having a lot of fun with the script until the last act"[58].

The opening sequence is set at Amsterdam (Netherlands) and seems to involve Bond undercover as a fighter in caged catch match (and faking his death), the full MI6 team, a character named Valenti, a boat chase, and the code book which will lead to Blofeld[59]. However one Sony executive think that this pre-title is "giving away Blofeld upfront. Isn't that suppose to be the big surprise that he is behind everything?"[60]. This same executive also think that having our hero in a caged match is "very unBond"[61].

There is later a scene with M in a cemetery[62] (apparently he doesn't trust his office[63]), then another one including Bond being injected the Smart Blood[64]. But on this subject, "Why does [Bond] have to meet Q in a MI6 bunker [that is] under a record store cafe? I don't get it", wonders one Sony executive[65].

While we are talking about MI6, it was apparently hacked[66]... Again, as point out some at Sony who has obviously seen Skyfall[67]!

Eventually Bond goes to Rome, with Charlotte from the CIA. They pretend to be married as their cover, and there is even a dialogue about kids[68]. They assist to a masked ball together, where Valenti from the pre-title is present[69]. "They are in and out of the ball so quickly. Feels like an opportunity to make more of the glamorous and sexy environment to see Bond and Charlotte have to dance together perhaps?", note a Sony executive[70].

It seems Charlotte character still suffer the same flaws as before, with one other Sony executive noting:

- Sony's Amy Pascal[71] : Do we ever understand why Charlotte kills Valenti? Or who Valenti is? Or who Charlotte is? Or why she turns against Bond? And why they needed each other in he first place?

Bond meet M. White in a Scandivian villa[72]. Charlotte show up in this scene[73].

Anyway, White have a daughter, and we know that, before finding Léa Seydoux, the production was looking for a Scandinavian actress to play her[74]. This translates in thses old storylines by the fact her name wasn't Madeleine, but Kaja[75]. She wasn't really well welcomed by those who read the script; "Kaja story is just an idea now. Makes zero sense", wrote one story executive[76].

007 must find her to find out what L'Americain is[77]. As in the movie, Bond find her in a clinic, a place where "people go to be turned into someone else"[78]. Q have a scene here as it as the case in the movie, as well as Charlotte[79].

"Why does Charlotte show up here too? What is she after? What she is doing in this movie is totally unclear", note a Sony executive[80].

There is an action sequence involving a "snow plane" somewhere[81].

Bond and Kaja later go to Tangier where they pretend to be married (Sony wonders why)[82]. Here Bond find a video-tape of Vesper, which he apparently watch[83].

There is scenes in a train which include Felix Leiter[84]. "There's no benefit to Q discovering the identity of Blofeld since Felix gives Bond this information anyway. It undermines Q's heroism", note one Sony executive[85]. Q also learned that Blofeld real name was Joseph Ki-Embu[86].

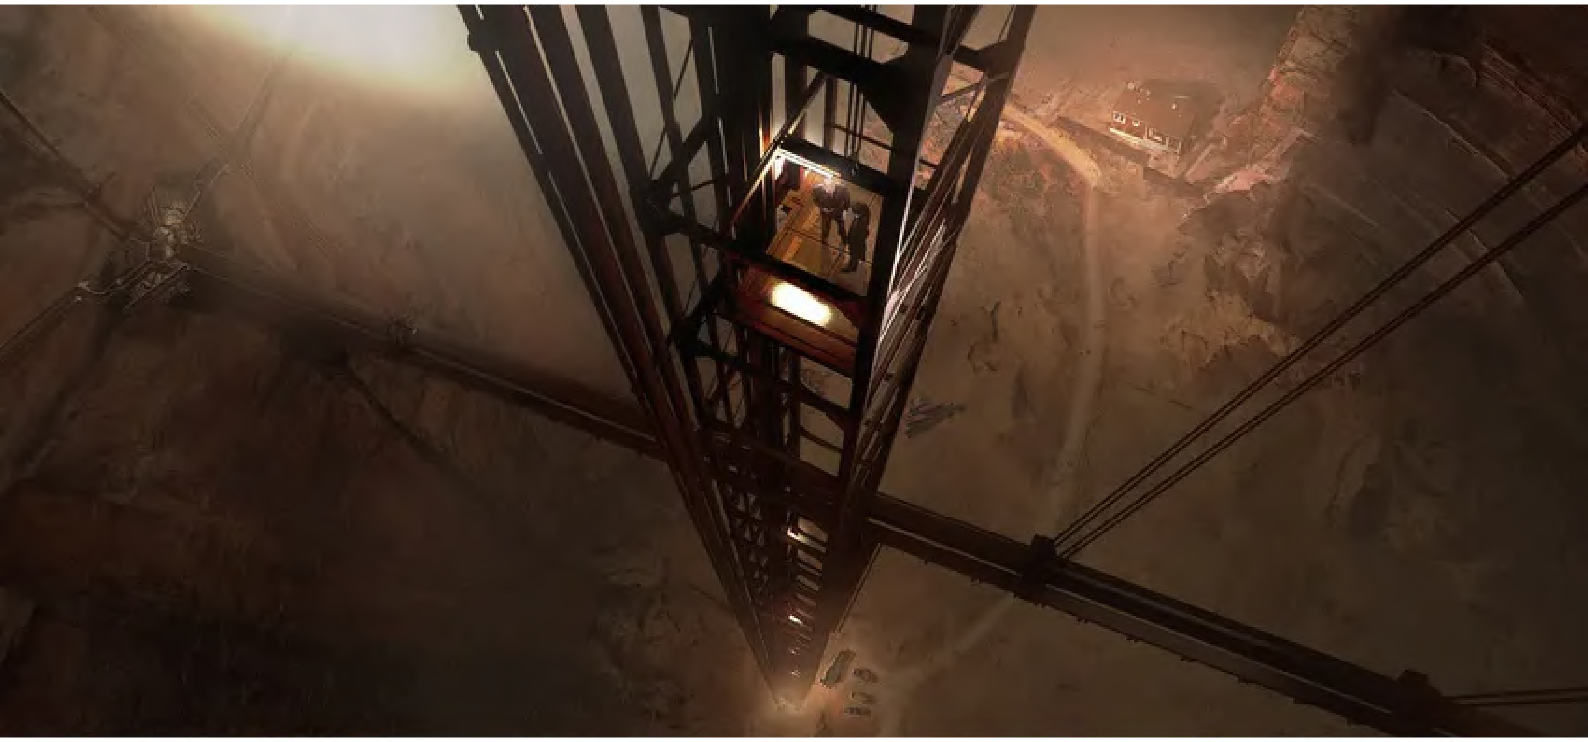
Tanner is also in train, and two Sony executive wonder why[87]. But remember: Tanner is a traitor in theses early storylines, because "he didn't think he was going to get a good retirement package" and felt "pushed out by the new M" according to what understood a Sony member[88].

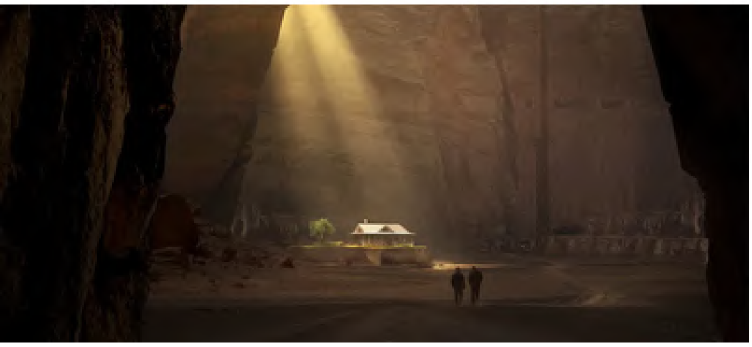
Paranoia and "old spies die alone" themes are still here[89] (with notably a Bond who was on his own[90]). A Sony member also describing Bond getting old and needing to have a life before it's too late as a theme of the movie[91].

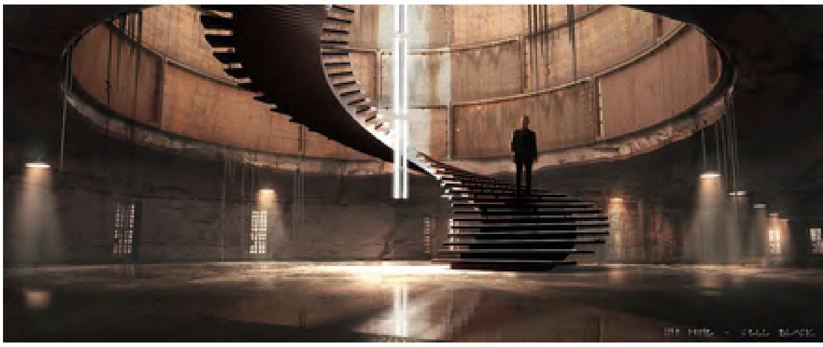
Another theme, according to another Sony employee, is "the idea that the story is about colonization coming back to bite Britain in the ass. And I also like the idea that Blofeld has compromised all of the major security agencies in the world"[92].

Later there is scenes with Blofeld, including some with Leiter[93]. Apparently the CIA was working in league with Blofeld in this iteration of the story[94].

Bond have some scene in Blofeld's lair which is abandoned mine[95]. Apparently Blofeld kidnapped Q earlier and at one point Q and Bond escape the mine as it collapses[96]. We can also note that Q had to kill some guards during theses sequences[97].







There are some scene with Blofeld in London later[98].

> - Sony's Hannah Minghella[99] : The idea of connecting the last three movies is a big exciting idea but this Blofeld doesn't live up to the concept. How did Quantum connect to Silva connect to Blofeld? [...] The threat Blofeld poses is pretty vague and no worse than our prior villains; I don't know what redrawing lines on a map really means. His abandoned mine lair is reminiscent of Silva's abandoned town lair, his near miss attack on London is too similar to Silva's near miss attack on London. Here it's a bomb on a boat instead of a bomb on the subway and an intelligence summit rather than M's hearing.

"Why hasn't Blofeld detonated the ship yet?", is another interrogation from Sony[100].

"Working backwards we're never going to be satisfied with ending on Bond drifting into the sunset with Mr White's daughter. Why is this the movie where he retires? Why is that a good thing?"[101] ; "There's no wish fulfillment for the audience in Bond retiring. Especially not with Kaja"[102].

Another Sony member also find the ending "both unearned and unsatisfying"[103].

On March 10, 2014, it is said that the production is completely reworking the pre-title sequence, "cage fight is out"[104]. For a time it was considered to have it take place against the backdrop of the Monaco Grand Prix[105].

May script: Day of the Dead, female Blofeld, and "sloppy mess"

> - John Logan[106] : For most of my time on Spectre, Blofeld was a woman, and there was a certain grotesquery to the character, based on pigmentation.

End of April 2014, there has been some change about Blofeld: EON is now considering to have a woman to play the character and have talks about it with the MGM. One Sony executive understood from MGM that Blofeld will be an "ugly lesbian" and Bond a "pussy"[107], and that Michael's (probably Wilson) "unwillingness to put a positive spin on anything" didn't really helped at the EON/MGM meeting[108].

A new script called The Death Collector was completed on May 7, 2014[109].

"It needs lots of work", noted one executive about this new script[110]. "There's good writing in individual scenes, it's just the plot isn't hanging together or building towards the 3rd act"[111].

The pre-title is now set on the Day of the Dead[112] (not in Mexico, but Cuba[113]). One Sony executive have reservation about Bond "shooting a woman crawling on the floor and setting off a bomb by shooting it"[114].

Blofeld in this version was a woman. MGM reiterate their lack of enthusiasm about the idea with an MGM executive stating: "Blofeld as a woman is idiotic unless Meryl Streep does it. Doesn't even make sense in any world of reality; that's a tail wagging the dog here"[115]. Tilda Swinton was mentioned for the role[116].

Anyway she had a diamonds mine in Africa[117], and apparently doesn't like the sun, "love wrapping her up to protect her from sun" write one Sony executive who doesn't like the mine idea, notably considering it to similar to Silva's abandoned city[118]. Blofeld is also described as an "arms trader"[119]; plutonium and nuclear waste was part of plot[120].

She is apparently interested to have Bond's blood[121].

> - John Logan[122] : The hook in my version was that a traitor, who was Tanner, downloaded all the files of MI6 and all the NATO powers into Bond's smartblood. Blofeld [was to capture] Bond and drain his blood.

Tilda Swinton will be considered to play the female version of Blofeld.

"Why does Blofeld need to go to London to make a phone call?", wonders someone from Sony[123].

Talking about phone, apparently "all the countries of the world are doing what the voice on the phone says... The voice on the phone does favors for all the heads of the countries individually or together and they all go along with it and now they are all doing whatever he says"[124].

At one point Moneypenny was injured (in the pre-title[125]) and hospitalized[126]. At the beginning, her boyfriend was suspected to be the source of the leaks at MI6[127] (in one version of the story, I don't know which one, Q and Moneypenny also didn't trust Mallory because of a message from Judi's M[128]). However Tanner turn out to be the mole, "he feels discarded and makes a play to secure his future" understand a Sony executive[129]. Once Bond discover that Tanner is a traitor, he let him commit suicide[130].

Felix Leiter had a scene with Moneypenny, whom he called "foxy lady", while in another scene Bond assume Felix is here to kill him[131].

Charlotte is still here: she "makes no sense I'm afraid", comment a Sony executive[132], her character "doesn't work in any draft"[133]! She was killed by 007 at some point and it doesn't seems very clear why since a Sony executive asking "why does Bond kill Charlotte?"[134].

For a Sony executive, Kaja character doesn't work either, she "doesn't seem worth walking away from MI6" with Bond throwing his gun away[135] and we "have no clue how she ends up in bridge"[136].

There is also a mention to an "eyeball cam"[137] (due to the name of the technology? Its shape? Because it was really in someone's eyes? Mystery, maybe the idea was reused for Primo in No Time To Die?).

One Sony executive said of this new script that "the last draft was actually better [than this one]... Beside being not good, its a sloppy mess"[138]. "It is mess", confirm another Sony executive, "They bring in boys tomorrow, I think. Logan is a bit of a fraud"[139]!

The boys are back in town

- Sam Mendes[140] : John Logan did the heavy lifting but hit a wall at a certain point.

The "boys" Purvis and Wade came to the rescue, to see what could be salvaged from Logan storyline.

Yet, Purvis and Wade previously announced at the Doha Film Festival in November 2012 that they wouldn't return for a sixth Bond film. "We're very happy to have done five Bond movies. [...] I know that John Logan and Sam Mendes have come up with a plot for another one, which takes the pressure off because these films take up a lot of time", said Wade in 2012 while Purvis was adding: "We were going to stop with Quantum of Solace, but it's good to go out on a high with Skyfall"[141].

In the October 2015' special issue of the magazine Premiere, Neal Purvis and Robert Wade looked back on the writing process of Spectre[142]:

After promising that Skyfall would be your last Bond, you are back in charge of the scenario of Spectre.

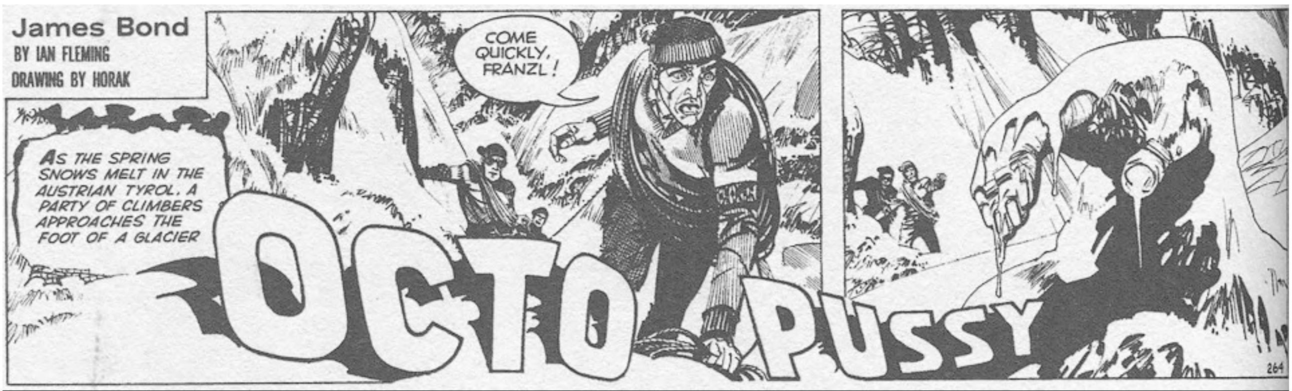
[...] Initially, we left the place to someone else [Logan], but here we are again. This time, we had a lot less pressure than before. It is much simpler to adapt an existing scenario than to invent a story from a blank page. [...]

We changed a lot of things in John Logan's script, while retaining the fundamentals. For example, the relationship between James Bond and Madeleine, even if she was not yet called Madeleine, was already there. Most of our work was to ensure that the plot revolved entirely around the character of Bond. In Skyfall, Bond was constantly reacting to events happening to him, he had no control over the plot. In Spectre, we decided to make him more active, to push him to the forefront, so that he is the driving force of the entire story. The idea was that this time he would be the instigator of the events, rather to have this role falling to the villain as in Skyfall. We therefore developed this idea of a message emerging from his past so that it is he who pulls the strings.

We always try to return to Fleming and draw inspiration from elements of his stories and his life. They are so rich... The click came to us while reading the original draft by John Logan, in which Bond went to Austria, not very far from Kitzbühel. It immediately clicked, making us think of the short-story Octopussy, itself inspired by the real life of Ian Fleming. As a kid, his mother sent him to Kitzbühel to benefit from a kind of psychological and emotional therapy. He was young, he had problems and that's when he started writing... We crossed that with Bond's childhood and connected it all with Skyfall. After lifting a bit of the veil on the character's childhood, we said to ourselves that we could discover even more in Spectre. The other novel that inspired us was On Her Majesty's Secret Service. [...] In Skyfall, we almost included the garden of death from You Only Live Twice, but we had to abandon this option. [...] We think this idea will appear in a future film, one day.



James Bond
BY IAN FLEMING
DRAWING BY HORAK
AS THE SPRING SNOWS MELT IN THE AUSTRIAN TYROL, A PARTY OF CLIMBERS APPROACHES THE FOOT OF A GLACIER COME QUICKLY, FRANZL!
OCTOPUSSY
264

The discovery of Hannes Oberhauser body in Octopussy comics strip.

- Sam Mendes[143] : It was actually Michael Wilson's idea: what if this guy had a real son and Bond came in, a cuckoo in the nest and ousted this less glamorous, less handsome, less heroic figure.

A man called Oberhauser:

As mentioned earlier in this book, the short-story Octopussy tells how James Bond goes to the house of a former soldier named Dexter Smythe who had stolen two gold bars during the war and killed the mountain guide who accompanied him, Hannes Oberhauser, to hide his misdeed.

The character is referred to by Bond in this short story: "Oberhauser was a friend of mine. He taught me to ski before the war, when I was in my teens. He was a wonderful man. He was something of a father to me at a time when I happened to need one".

Before the movie Spectre, the character has appeared in other publications. Starting with the comic strips' adaptation of Octopussy by the Daily Express (1966-1967) in which Oberhauser has a daughter named Trudi.

John Pearson's novel entitled James Bond: The Authorised Biography Of 007 from 1973 is presented as a sort of "interview" with 007. Which therefore implies in this universe that Bond wouldn't only have existed in "real life", but that he was also a friend of Ian Fleming who would have based his novels on his exploits. Here is Oberhauser according to Pearson:

Bond tells his biographer that in 1938, his morale plummeting, he decided to take two weeks off in Kitzbühel. It is there that Bond meets Ian Fleming for the "first" time (or almost) as well as Hannes Oberhauser. 007 states that Fleming exaggerated when writing in Octopussy that it was Oberhauser who taught him to ski, in reality he was already a good skier at that time and Hannes only helped him to improve. It is also mentioned that Oberhauser is an Olympic medalist and that he managed to do what no one else could do with James: get him to open up to him by acting like a father with his advices. Like Bond, Oberhauser has encountered death and lost loved ones, so he tells him not to live with guilt and blame. After his stay, 007 thinks back to his friend's words and decides from now on to enjoy life and have no remorse or regrets.

It turns out that the next mention to Oberhauser was in 2006, during the very promotion of Casino Royale! On the film's official website, fictional MI6 reports regarding agent James Bond reveal this: "Bond's one strong relationship with an adult from his teens and early twenties - one Hannes Oberhauser of Kitzbühel, Austria - ended when Oberhauser disappeared mysteriously. Bond has referred to Oberhauser as a second father" (Psychological assessment by Sir James Moloney, department neurologist). "During his teens, he spent time studying both climbing and skiing with local Austrian instructor Hannes Oberhauser during term breaks at Fettes" (Valencia Report).

Finally the fifth novel in the series Young Bond ; By Royal Command (2008) by Charlie Higson is the story in which Hannes Oberhauser makes his biggest appearance.

The story is set in the 1930s and follows a teenage James Bond on a school trip to Kitzbühel to learn skiing with an instructor named Hannes Oberhauser. Bond quickly excelled on a pair of skis and developed a friendly relationship with Oberhauser. During a ski trip, Bond finds himself caught in an avalanche with a drunk friend. After a stay at the clinic, Bond stays at Oberhauser's home to recuperate, where he meets his wife Helga and their children. Bond feels closer to this family than to anyone since his parents died. Later, in England, Bond discovers that the girl he loved is actually a communist terrorist. MI6 asks Bond to trap her, but Bond chooses to flee with her and temporarily settle with the Oberhausers. Hannes welcomes them warmly. Bond participates in farm life and shares moments with Oberhauser, but he remains undecided about this lifestyle. Eventually, Bond has to leave Oberhauser after yet another betrayal from the girl. Later Oberhauser reappears at the end of the novel, inviting Bond to dinner at his house with his aunt Charmian.

To create the character of Oberhauser, Ian Fleming was inspired by Ernan Forbes Dennis, his "teacher" when he studied in Tyrol (Kitzbühel), one of the best periods of his life[144]. It was at this time that Fleming was introduced to skiing and climbing.

While the duo return, in June 2014, MGM e-mailed Sony to anticipate future revisions: "Just want you guys knowing that we need to make a deal for Jez Butterworth, who Sam, Michael and BB want to have on as of Sept 1 to revise the script when he is avail. It is very important to Sam (that it be Jez)"[145].

Jeremy "Jez" Butterworth[146] was born in March 1969 at Saint Thomas' Hospital in London, in a brotherhood of five children. He grew up in Saint Albans in Hertfordshire, England. After his secondary education, he entered St John's College (Cambridge). We then find him writing a TV film, Night of the Golden Brain (1993).

Butterworth first became known as a playwright, with his play Mojo from 1995, of which he wrote and directed a film adaptation in 1997.

Between 2002 and 2012, Butterworth would write five more plays, including Jerusalem. In 2007 he wrote with his brother Tom the screenplay for the film The Last Legion and in 2010, with his other brother John-Henry, the one of Fair Game.

Shortly after, Jez Butterworth contribued uncredited rewrites on Skyfall. He will also carry some in Spectre, where this time he will have a credit. "It was just me, Daniel [Craig] and Sam. There was never anyone else in the room for four months. And Sam just had an iron grip on what could have been a runaway train, and so we learned in that room that we worked together really, really well", he says of his experience on Spectre.

Butterworth also participated with his brothers in the writing of the films Edge of Tomorrow (2014), Black Mass (2015), Ford v Ferrari (2019) or Flag Day (2021).

In 2017 he returned to the theater with his play The Ferryman, directed by Sam Mendes.

In 2023, with his brother John-Henry, he is one of the screenwriters of Indiana Jones 5.

Two days later, on June 15, a new treatment is sent by EON to Sony and MGM[147]. Forwarding it to one colleague, a Sony executive describes it as a treatment wrote "by Purvis and Wade, who we went back to after John Logan bombed out, and then Sam tried to quit and move release date. [...] Anyway this treatment calmed everyone down"[148]!

The official version of Logan departure according to the book Being Bond is that after several months of work on the story, he had leave to take care of his own series Penny Dreadful[149]. He admitted that the story "wasn't great" when he left[150].

Later, around July, it was decided to not have Tanner as the MI6's mole, but M himself[151]! Ralph Fiennes, however, summarily rejected the idea, stating that he didn't want to play the bad guy[152].

July 11, MGM wrote to Sony: "we are getting a beat sheet tonight – it will be written by Sam's assistant, script supervisor [Jane-Anne Tenggren] – he does not want to waste time of Purvis and Wade writing a treatment. Wants to get them going"[153].

> - Neal Purvis[154] : Jane-Anne Tenggren was there all the time and it probably wouldn't have got done if she wasn't doing the work she did.

MGM also states "they [EON] are very keen on Chiwetel [Ejiofor]; I said we need to read and said Meryl [Streep] was preferable to us. They said she does not work with this story"[155]. Funny, when you know it was written by the same MGM executive who was against a female Blofeld few month earlier...

Anyway, the new storyline Sony receives in half-July is called Spectre and Blofeld is a man[156]. EON wants Léa Seydoux and Christoph Waltz to play some of the main roles[157].

A new script was dispatched around August 26[158]. A Sony executive consider it as "mostly good" this time[159].

Once again, Blofeld is judged as one of the big flaws of this script, notably for the same reason as usual that still haven't been fixed:

> - Sony's Elizabeth Cantillon[160] : Blofeld: has to be better. Can't rely on dialogue like, "can't you see the bigger picture?". [...] This is Blofeld, legendary Bond villain. What are his powers? Global surveillance. And what does he hope to accomplish with them? Chaos in the name of what? Money? World domination? Movie needs to say so we know just what James Bond is stopping, and it can't simply be that Blofeld is "insane". [...] Also there needs to be some kind of a twist rather than a series of watery chases with guns. This is Blofeld after all. What does he have up his sleeve?

"We have to know what Blofeld intends to do with the information[s]" he intent to collect, reads MGM-Sony joint notes sent to the producers[161].

Theses notes also contain something that seems to have aged badly when you read some of the movie's reviews: "We love Blofeld's early childhood connection to Bond through Oberhauser and feel certain that Bond fans will be equally excited that we're tapping into this Bond lore. [...] It needs to be clear that starting with the murder of [his father], Blofeld embarked on a megalomaniac mission to take over the world's intelligence and surveillance agencies, and also kill all of the people Bond loved while destroying his legacy in the process"[162].

Beside, we can note that Denbigh, "C", is present in this script and occupy the role of the mole[163]. He is at the head of "Nine Eyes"[164], inspired by Five Eyes[165], a real intelligence alliance between five countries (United Kingdom, United States, Australia, Canada, and New Zealand) which date back from the 40's. In 2013, around the time of the first developments on Spectre, Edward Snowden exposed massive global internet surveillance activities from Five Eyes. The whistleblower notability described Five Eyes as "a supra-national intelligence organisation that doesn't answer to the laws of its own countries"[166]. (Note that in 2014, EON Production and Sony took an option on the book No Place to Hide: Edward Snow- den, the NSA, and the U.S. Surveillance State to bring it to screen[167]. No film was made in the end).

"It seems we've determined that this movie is about Bond going through an experience that forces him to question his value as a spy in the modern world [of electronic espionage] during a mission where world security becomes threatened. [...] When the story opens Bond is already unsettled and no longer trusts the powers that be at MI6. He doesn't even attempt to adapt to the new regime", says the joint MGM-Sony notes[168]. Theses notes suggest to go further: pushing the paranoia idea and blur the line of Bond being truly going mental as M suggest it[169].

Differences between M and C intelligence organizations and philosophies need to be more clarified, with more screen time[170].

MGM and Sony also warn EON: Spectre shouldn't be shown as already having similar resources as the Nine Eyes, otherwise what would be the point for them to have it?[171]

A MGM executives have a proposition: simplify the plot by revealing that C is in fact Blofeld in disguise[172]. "With that said, we also wonder whether this role couldn't be played by Christoph Waltz"[173].

Charlotte King completely disappeared from the plot, but there is another female for Bond to meet: Lucia[174].

Kaja has been renamed Madeleine since (probably in reference to Marcel Proust's novel Du côté de chez Swann and its famous "madeleine de Proust"). She killed a man when she was 12 to save her father; father that she hates since[175].

Again, there is doubt at MGM and Sony that Bond/Madeleine relation work and lead Bond to quit the MI6 at the end[176].

Somebody from MGM propose a radical change for the character:

> - MGM's Jonathan Glickman[177] : Can we consider that Madeleine turned into a jaded and dark person after this incident [when she was 12] and she's been with Blofeld essentially ever since? Further to this, can we consider that when she meets Bond, she pretends to be the shrinking dove, and she takes Bond to Blofeld on the pretense of wanting to avenge her father, but in a twist, she reveals her backstory and that she's been in league with Blofeld the whole time?

Anyway, MGM and Sony would like her to be more than just "a woman needing rescuing so that she has some agency in the plotting of the demise of Spectre"[178].

There is mention of Bond saving Madeleine from drowning toward the end of the script[179], "we love that Bond rescues her from drowning, which he could not do for Vesper" states both MGM and Sony[180].

Mexico City is in the script[181] and the snowy part are set in Switzerland[182].

A scene in which a man was sweeping after cars crashed through a window is deemed perhaps too comical ("Die Another Day silliness" write a Sony executive)[183]. This is also the case of birds interrupting a fight during the meeting in Rome[184].

"Why does Blofeld kidnap Q?" is also a question that need to be answered according MGM and Sony[185].

There is a charity auction scene in the third act that a Sony member doesn't like cause too reminiscent of Greene's party in Quantum of Solace: "we need to cut 20 pages and this whole set piece could go"[186].

October 17, 2014' script: Stockmann, Irma, and solar oven

Comes a time when the production is in possession of a "shooting script" entitled "Untitled B24" and dated October 17, 2014. This 142-pages script was written by John Logan and was "revised" by Neal Purvis and Robert Wade according to the heading.

The name Jez Butterworth doesn't appear on the cover page, but it seems some of his contributions are nevertheless featured inside[187].

The structure of the film is there, but you will notice a number of changes, including a third act that is very different from the one of the film...

Gunbarrel, then the script opens with the orbit of a skull and the sounds of drums; we are in Mexico (at the end of the day), during the "Day of the Dead".

Marco Sciarra, an assassin who here wears a white suit and a black mask, moves among the crowd. He runs bumps a masked man, accompanied by a girl also masked named Estrella; the "couple" is now heading to a hotel. Once in the room, Estrella removes her mask and asks the man to kiss her. He then removes his mask: he's James Bond.

- Estrella: Now you can kiss me...
- Bond: Sorry. Do I know you?
[They kiss].
- Estrella: You like our Day of the Dead?
- Bond: Unexpectedly charming. Like you.

Suddenly 007 opens the window, "where are you going", "to check out the view" he replies, and here he jumps onto a roof and heads towards an apartment in where Sciarra is talking with another man. 007 takes out his Walther PPK and attaches an additional piece of equipment to it: a laser microphone. He listens to the brief conversation of a couple of civilians, then the one between the two men in which the death of a governor is discussed. It should happen during a speech to be held in an hour. Marco also says that he will visit the "Pale King" after finishing what he has to do here. The two men toast "to death", Bond is ready to kill Marco and his sidekick, however a fireworks makes him spotted. Indeed, the firework was fired from the street and passed right by Bond, the noise caused Sciarra to turn around to the window and he see Bond. So there is a shootout and 007 intentionally shoots into a suitcase that had just been given to Marco. BOOM! A big explosion devastates the entire building in which the bad guys were and suddenly this building begins to fall on Bond's one with a great destruction...

Bond however manages to survive (there is no sofa gag), he emerges from the debris and sees Marco starting to flee. 007 chases him through the streets full of people (the noise of the celebration covered the one of the explosion), Sciarra puts his mask back on and takes out a phone. On the walls we can see several posters indicating that the governor will give a speech at the Azteca stadium.

Suddenly Bond hears a helicopter in which the villain is boarding, 007 manages to hold on to the skids and climb into it. A fight breaks out between the two men inside the aircraft and Bond asks him "who is the Pale King?" by threatening to throw him overboard. Seeing that he doesn't respond, Bond then takes the ring that Sciarra is wearing on his finger.

The pilot causes the helicopter to fly almost upside down, the two men hold on but ultimately Marco falls into the aircraft's blades. 007 now heads towards the cockpit and fights against the pilot while the helicopter, which is no longer piloted by anyone, makes dangerous maneuvers. "You need to leave", Bond said before ejecting the pilot from the helicopter and taking control.

- Sam Mendes[188] : Alex Witt, second unit director, show[ed] me a stunt video of a Red Bull pilot, doing stunts at an airshow in a helicopter. I've never seen anything like that. That's what gave me the whole idea for it in the first place. I then got the writers to write it in, and we developed it from there.

As Bond fly away with the aircraft, his phone rings, it's Estrella:

- Estrella: So how's the view, James?
- Bond: Breathtaking.
- Estrella: Well I hope you found what you were looking for...
[He looks at the ring].
- Bond: It's a start.

The camera moves closer to the silver ring on which there is a symbol representing an octopus...

OPENING CREDITS: with an octopus which takes us back to the past: drowning Helicopter pilot Chuck Aaron who performed backflips, 360° for Red Bull in a modified MBB Bo 105. Theses videos inspired the pre-title sequence and Aaron was hired by the production to perform the stunts for the film with his Red Bull helicopter (re-painted in grey for the shooting).

of Vesper, Le Chiffre, Fields covered in oil, Silva and the death of M... Bond is torn apart, the octopus merges with him, the tentacles become the veins of 007, the blood running along them forms the Union Jack which wraps around M's bulldog. It shatters to reveal a postal envelope in which is a photograph of James Bond...

Early grey morning in Whitehall. Only one silhouette moves, it is Bond. He crosses a wide circular courtyard and enters the austere MI6 building. As 007 walks down a corridor, the people become silent. Analysts are murmuring. Bond takes note. He also notices surveillance cameras attached to the walls, every six meters: they are new. Bond now passes between the desks of the secretaries who start typing faster. He finally reaches Moneypenny's office who carries a dictation earphone. "Morning", he said to her. Moneypenny looks at Bond levelly, she continues typing. He knocks briskly on M's door and enters, Moneypenny glances at the door.

M is angry at his agent for what he did in Mexico, especially since he went there without his permission (according to M, Bond also blames himself for the death of Judi Dench's M). From her office Moneypenny can hear, like "everyone else", the sermon that M gives to 007.

> [...]
> - Bond: Why all the cameras?
> - M: What?!
> - Bond: Out there. In the corridors.
> - M: Are you even listening to me? We are in the middle of the biggest shake up in the history of British Intelligence...
> [...]
> - M: My predecessor may have let you fly solo whenever the hell you felt like it, but NOT ME. You will do what I tell you. Work when I tell you. Eat when I tell you to. Shit when I tell you. My game. My rules.
> - Bond: Has it at any point occurred to you that I may have had my reasons to be there?
> - M: Reasons, Bond? I have a list: arrogance. Insolence. Mania. Paranoia. Borderline Psychosis. Have I missed anything? Admit it. Since she died you've been a loose cannon. You couldn't save her, you blame yourself.
> - Bond: You know, if you're right, and I am a maniac, you should probably think twice before you're left in a room alone with me.
> - M: Are you threatening me, 007?

They are interrupted by another man who joins them in the office: Bruce Denbigh, the head of MI5, also known as "C", and who is also the head of Joint Intelligence Committee. M tells 007 that that will be all and to report to Q the next day.

We find Bond in his apartment, at night drinking a glass of scotch when someone rings at the doorbell: Miss Moneypenny. The latter comes to bring him personal effects from Skyfall's ruins and takes the opportunity to chat a little.

> - Moneypenny: Why the hell did you do it, Bond?
> - Bond: Eavesdropper.
> - Moneypenny: Half the building could hear. It's all anyone's talking about.
> - Bond: For an organization devoted to secrets, there's an awful lot of gossip over there.
> - Moneypenny: There's certainly a raft of opinions.

- Bond: Let me guess. Theory number one: He's burn out, but can't admit it, so he blew up half of Mexico City to force M's hand.
- Moneypenny: That's Theory Two. Theory One is you've gone completely mad. Which is similar to but not the same as theory Three: that you are and always were certifiably insane.
- Bond: [...] So which camp are you in?
- Moneypenny: I have my own theory.
- Bond: Really. And what's that?
- Moneypenny: You've got a secret. Something you can't tell anyone. Because you don't trust anyone.

007 studies Moneypenny briefly and picks up the television remote to show her a recorded message from M (Judi), which he received in an envelope nine months ago:

- Old M: If something happens to me 007, I need you to do something. Find a man called Marco Sciarra. Kill him. And don't miss the funeral.

Bond asks Moneypenny to inquire about a name he had heard: the Pale King. She asks him why he decided to trust her and Bond replies: "You want me to frisk you?". She smiles, but hears a distant female voice saying "James? I'm lonely... Come back to bed". Moneypenny leaves 007's apartment with a smile, telling him that at least this proves he's not insane. Bond tells her not to jump to conclusions and then watches Moneypenny walk away down the street from the apartment window while the girl wrapped in sheets asks him who it was. "A friend", he replies.

- Robert Wade[189] : Originally, the scene when Bond asks Moneypenny to work against Ralph's orders took place in Highgate Cemetery by Judi's grave. As Moneypenny leaves, Bond says, "Do you think she'd have liked the irony?". Moneypenny asks, "What irony?". Bond says, "Her ending up [buried]to the left of Karl Marx".

Bond is now with Bill Tanner on a boat traveling the Thames to visit Q (who has moved his "shop" away from MI6 HQ because he doesn't like MI5 looking over his shoulders). "How was Mexico like?", "Delightful Tanner. Nice a quiet break. You should try it". During the rest of the journey, we can see a recent building described as the "new centre for National Security", "C's kingdom. Tanner explains to Bond that Denbigh thinks 00 Section is obsolete and that drones could do all the dirty work. Tanner also tells him there were explosions in Hamburg and Tokyo during his absence.

Tanner and 007 finally arrive at the "Q Branch East" and meet Q (Bond doesn't fiddle with the equipment). Q inserts a tracker into 007's arm (which also indicates statistics such as fatigue, stress, alcohol, blood pressure, etc.), a bit like in Casino Royale; requested by M after what happened in Mexico.

Q has one last thing to show to Bond and to do so they pass a place where the Aston Martin DB5 is notably rebuilt, then they stop in front of a DB10. Q tells him that it was meant for him, but was reassigned to 009 because of what happened in Mexico. Q still gives 007 an Omega watch as a consolation prize, "What's third prize, a set of steak knives?". Before leaving, Bond manages to obtain a delay of 24 then 48 hours from Q before the activation of the tracker...

James Bond is in his apartment again, there is M's (Judi) bulldog and he is looking at the papers and photos retrieved from Skyfall's ruins: there is one of him with his parents taken in front of Skyfall when he was 10 years old, another where he appears (aged 13) with another man in the mountains... 007 looks at M's message again and we can see that he looks determined.

The next day Moneypenny finds a box from Bond in her own office which contains a mobile phone and Q discovers that the Aston Martin DB10 has disappeared ("Oh shit"); the thief however took care of placing a bottle of Bollinger on site...

The Aston Martin is in Rome and 007 is behind the wheel. He parks near a cemetery, attends the funeral of Marco Sciarra and goes to offer his condolences (and life "assurances") to the widow, Lucia, who is accompanied by what appear to be two bodyguards. After the ceremony, she goes to her villa. The two "bodyguards" also arrive at the villa, screw silencers onto their weapons and begin to target Lucia... But Bond manages to kill them before they take action; one of the corpses falls into the pool.

007 approaches Lucia but she doesn't thank him, she tells him that his gesture was in vain, other men will come and kill her: "all you buy me is five minutes". It's perfect for a drink according to Bond and they go inside where she asks him if he killed her husband. Bond says yes, and she tells him that the people he worked with probably want to kill her so she won't reveal anything she knows.

They kiss (with the "Bond, James Bond"), Lucia tells him that her husband's organization could "make the mafia look like children" and that there is a meeting at the "Palazzo Cardenza" that very evening to find a replacement for Marco.

- Robert Wade[190] : We thought it was so Bondian that he kills the husband and then he fucks the widow.

Bond and Lucia make love and, before leaving, 007 tells her that he has contacted an American friend of his, "Felix", who will help her to get through this. She tries to dissuade him from going to Palazzo Cardenza: "If you go there tonight you are crossing over to the darkness. To a place where there is no mercy. Only madness and blood.. Don't go, James. Stay here with me, please". However, seeing that Bond will not change his mind, she gives him a mask and a "password": Diana.

It is almost midnight, Bond parks "his" Aston in the courtyard of the Palazzo Cardenza. It turns out that there are eight entrances that lead to the building, all of which are named after Roman gods. Bond chooses to head towards the entrance named Diana and comes across a man with a scar who asks him for his identity. 007 jokes that he is "Mickey Mouse", calls the man an "asshole" and shows him the ring he is wearing on his finger; the guard apologizes and asks him where the others are. 007 replies that the widow fought and that they are cleaning up; the guard lets him pass.

Bond is now in a hallway, a bell rings and eight doors open at once. Several people, wearing masks similar to the one that Lucia gave Bond, enter in groups into a sort of large hall where there is a large table around which the meeting will take place.

007 observes people sitting around this table and others remaining standing. Suddenly, the leader of this organization enters. After observing the men and women present in the room, the leader speaks (he will be almost the only person who speaks during this meeting):

> - Leader: In ancient Rome in time of insurrection, the Emperor would order his generals to muster their legions, and the soldiers would be divided into groups of ten. These groups were would draw lots. The soldier on whom the lot fell, regardless of his guilt, was ripped limb from limb by the other nine. They called it... Decimation. Three days ago I summoned the heads of the 20 chapters... The men who have recently performed such valiant work for us in Tokyo, in Hamburg, in Rio. I asked each to contact their cells, and to send one envoy from each to answer the question tearing at our heart. They came. I listened carefully. But none of them knew why five days ago, our loyal brave servant, Marco Sciarra, was cut down in Mexico City by an unseen assassin. Sciarra, the best of you all. My hawk. My protector. God's own arrow. Gone... A hundred or more came. But none of them knew. Nobody knew. I'll tell you why > they did not know. They didn't know because THEY WERE NOT PAYING ATTENTION!

Suddenly, the leader throws a bucket filled with over 200 eyeballs right in the middle of the table!

The leader continues by explaining that one of Marco's jobs remains to be completed: the elimination of a traitor, the Pale King. He asks who wants to finish this work at Lake Mondsee: two men offer and take off their masks, including a certain Hinx.

> - Leader: There are two candidates. Now, we could split this assembly into ayes and noes, but since we're here, let's settle it the way Romulus and Remus did. [Addressing the Spanish candidate] Show me why you should succeed Signor Sciarra.
> - The Spaniard: Karate 10th dan. Taekwondo 9th Degree Grandmaster. President's 20 Combat medal for marksmanship. Expert with gun, knife, and the garotte.
> - Leader: And you, Mister Hinx?

Hinx gets up and grabs his rival, sticks his (bare) fingers in his eyes and breaks his neck.

This question being settled, the leader asks his assembly if they want to know what is funniest about all this:

> - Leader: You want to know the funny thing? The funny thing is... I knew. I knew who was responsible. Even before the bullet struck. Before the shot was fired I knew... Only one among you truly understands these words, only one can hear me and I speak now to him alone. Welcome, stranger. It's been a long time, but now here we are. Can you hear me? I can hear you. I hear you breathing. Tell me, did you enjoy our little entertainment... Mister Bond? [Sings like a child] I know you're up there...

Bond (masked) suddenly has a flash of genius, he draws his pistol and aims at another masked man, shouting in Italian: "There! Don't move!". Everyone draws their guns and points them at the man and Bond takes advantage of the diversion to jump through a window. He lands in the courtyard and quickly gets behind the wheel of his Aston Martin DB10 as bullets ricochet not far from him.

The Aston heads towards the exit of the Palazzo Cardenza as a "Jaguar sports car" driven by Hinx chases it, followed by other bad guys in cars. However, only 007 and Hinx manage to cross the Palazzo gates before they closes and a chase begins at night through the streets of the Italian capital.

Bond looks at four buttons on the dashboard, "Come on Q, give me a clue...", and decides to randomly press the one marked "Atmosphere". The music Spooky by Dusty Springfield blasts through the speakers with a message "Music enabled for Eric Bryce" (009's identity?) and 007 can't stop it.

Bond then presses the "Backfire" button and a small machine gun comes out of the back of the Aston, but this ultimately proves useless as there is no ammunition loaded.

As Hinx get close, Bond makes a surprise U-turn and then picks up his phone to contact Moneypenny (who is in bed with her "boyfriend") and the music stops. 007 tells her that M (Judi) has indeed stumbled upon something and asks her to find out about Lake Mondsee and the Pale King.

The Jaguar and the Aston are still chasing at high-speed in the streets of Rome, Hinx comes up to Bond and raises his gun, 007 brakes violently and turns right, Hinx turns around. Bond comes to a T-shaped junction where cars are parked on a road below. He accelerates and causes the Aston to take off, tearing the roof off one of the cars. It is too late to stop for Hinx, he follows Bond but the roof of the car that Bond tore off falls on his windshield. No problem, Hinx continues the chase despite the cracks on his windshield.

007 now avoids scooters parked on the side of a street, but Hinx doesn't bother: the scooters fall like dominoes. Now Bond's street is blocked by a small Fiat which is not moving very fast. Bond tries to intimidate the driver of the vehicle but seeing Hinx approaching, he decides to accelerate and push the Fiat. Finally the vehicles approach a parking space and the Fiat is pushed perfectly right into it, the old man who was driving it is amazed (there is no airbag gag).

Bond turns down a street and for a moment it's a pure duel of speed. Moneypenny contacts Bond again, she tells him that she did the research, we can see a photo of Mr. White on her computer; she informs Bond (it's a surprise for him, a bad surprise). As the cars approach the Vatican, Bond hears Moneypenny's boyfriend and asks who it is. She replies that he's a friend, "at this time of night?", and she concludes by saying that it is called life and that he should try.

The cars drift and now take a street which runs along the Tiber. Bond presses the "Exhaust" button, a flamethrower activates at the back of the DB10 and hits Hinx's car, but he doesn't give up.

The chase continues and the cars now avoid occasional obstacles, but they happen to arrive to a dead end. 007 presses the "Air" button which activates an ejection seat! A five second countdown activates and Bond flies into the air, his parachute opens and he lands unscathed on a bridge while the Aston Martin DB10 ends up at the bottom of the water.

In Tokyo, a meeting is held between people of different nationalities, M, Tanner and C are also present. The recent attacks are mentioned and C wants the various government agencies present (9 countries) to work together and share their information with others. He talks about a committee called "Nine-Eyes" which would have access to all the information from these government agencies. M is dismayed, he doesn't like this project. Meanwhile, Tanner reads in the newspaper Il Tempo on his computer: "Widow of Mexican bomb victim Marco Sciarra missing, two bodyguards found dead at villa".

> - C: Fear has made us isolated. We have the resources at our disposal and what are we doing? Phone hacking each other, computer surveillance used against allies, intelligence gathering on our friends. Now is the time to share what we know and stand together. I say it again: a Nine-Eyes committee will have full access to the combined intelligence streams of member states. More data, more analysis. The security services of the world, united. Gentlemen alone, we are weak. Together, we are a global power.

Bond is in a dark Range Rover, he stops near Lake Mondsee (Austria). He takes a motorboat to go to a chalet located at the other end of the body of water. 007 takes out his gun, a security camera observes him, he enters the chalet but the place seems deserted and messy. 007, however, finds a panic room, manages to open it and sees Mr. White in a chair. He is visibly in bad shape (bearded, disheveled, old) and is surrounded by trash and screens showing recent attacks.

They move into the living room where there is a chess set, there are dialogue from the film, 007 shows him the ring and asks him who is trying to kill him. White replies that the leader is a terrible man and tells him a story:

> - White: There are some things a man fears more than death. If you knew him, what he is capable of...
> - Bond: So what is he capable of?
> - White: There was a rogue Foreign Legion Unit, out in the desert. One of the soldiers was small, weak, the weakest of all of them. We were getting by, raiding smugglers, working for ourselves. Until a sandstorm hit. They left us for dead. Ten men. No rations... In the night the small, weak one slit eight throats. And they became our rations. You know why he didn't slit my throat? Because he needed someone to carry the food. And when the storm was over, he led us out by the stars.... What is he capable of? LOOK AROUND YOU, Mister Bond [there is a TV playing the attacks]. He's everywhere. Everywhere and invisible. Like pain. Always one move ahead. How do you know he's not watching you right now? It's enough to make you, what's the word... Paranoid?
> - Bond: So what happened?
> - White: A man like that. It's the people closest to him that are most in danger. I was his right hand. But I knew too much. I got too close...
> - Bond: Where can I find him?
> [Laughs].
> - White: You never give up, do you? It's good to see you again, Mister Bond.
> - Bond: It doesn't make sense. If you fear him more than death, why wait? A razor blade. A bullet. Rope. What have you got to lose? You have somebody. Somebody you're trying to protect.

007 offers to protect this person for him in exchange for information; Bond gives him his word and his weapon to show him the seriousness of his proposal.

> - White: Your word, Bond? Your word? [...] You know I kept my word once before, or you wouldn't be alive today.
> - Bond: Vesper.
> - White: You do know she bought your life with her own?
> Bond doesn't blink.
> - Bond: Do we have a deal? Yes or no?
> [White points the gun at Bond].
> - White: You have caused me a lot of pain. I blame you, just like he does.

Mr. White pulls out a photo of himself younger with his daughter, Madeleine, when she was 10 years old. He shows it to Bond and tells him she gonna to take him to "L'Americain". "I can't protect her now, but maybe you can. You are a kite dancing in a hurricane, Mister Bond. Good luck". And White suddenly turns the gun on himself before ending his life with a bullet in the head.

We are back in Tokyo where the Nine-Eyes motion is voted on. Although it obtained a very large majority of favorable opinions, the motion didn't pass because the vote was not unanimous (the representative of South Africa refused). Tanner reads a new article in the press: "Speeding car crashes into Tiber" and sends a message to M: "ARE WE QUITE CERTAIN BOND IS IN LONDON?" ". M contacts Q to find out if 007 is still in London, Q checks, sees that Bond is in Kitzbühel and lies to M by telling him that it is indeed the case.

James Bond flies over the Austrian mountains in a plane which lands at a clinic for the rich called "Body and soul spa". Meanwhile, C shows M around the Centre for National Security (CNS building) and gives the latter a transcript of the phone call Bond made to Moneypenny during the cars chase in order to show him one of the advantages of total surveillance.

Bond meets Mr. White's daughter at the clinic: Dr. Madeleine Swann, and she asks him questions to establish what therapy would be best for him. Bond tells her in particular that his parents died in a climbing accident when he was 11 and when she asks him his profession, he replies that he kills people, "small world, eh?".

Madeleine makes the connection with her father's activities and 007 reveals to her he committed suicide two days ago and that she is in danger. She cools when he tells her that he needs her to find L'Americain. Madeleine then tells Bond that it's over and that he has ten minutes to leave or she'll calls security. 007 tells her that he gave his word to her father to protect her but she replies "What does that even mean to people like you?" and Bond leaves.

He therefore goes alone to the bar where he orders a vodka-martini which ultimately cannot be given to him because alcohol is not served in this establishment. Suddenly Q joins 007, he is there to bring him back to London and doesn't really believe his story of a secret organization led by a single man whose identity is unknown and who is behind all the terrorist attacks. Then security agents (sent by Madeleine) approach them. Before following these gentlemen, Bond gives the ring to Q and asks him to see what he can get out of it. They will meet in an hour in room 12 of the hotel The Horatio.

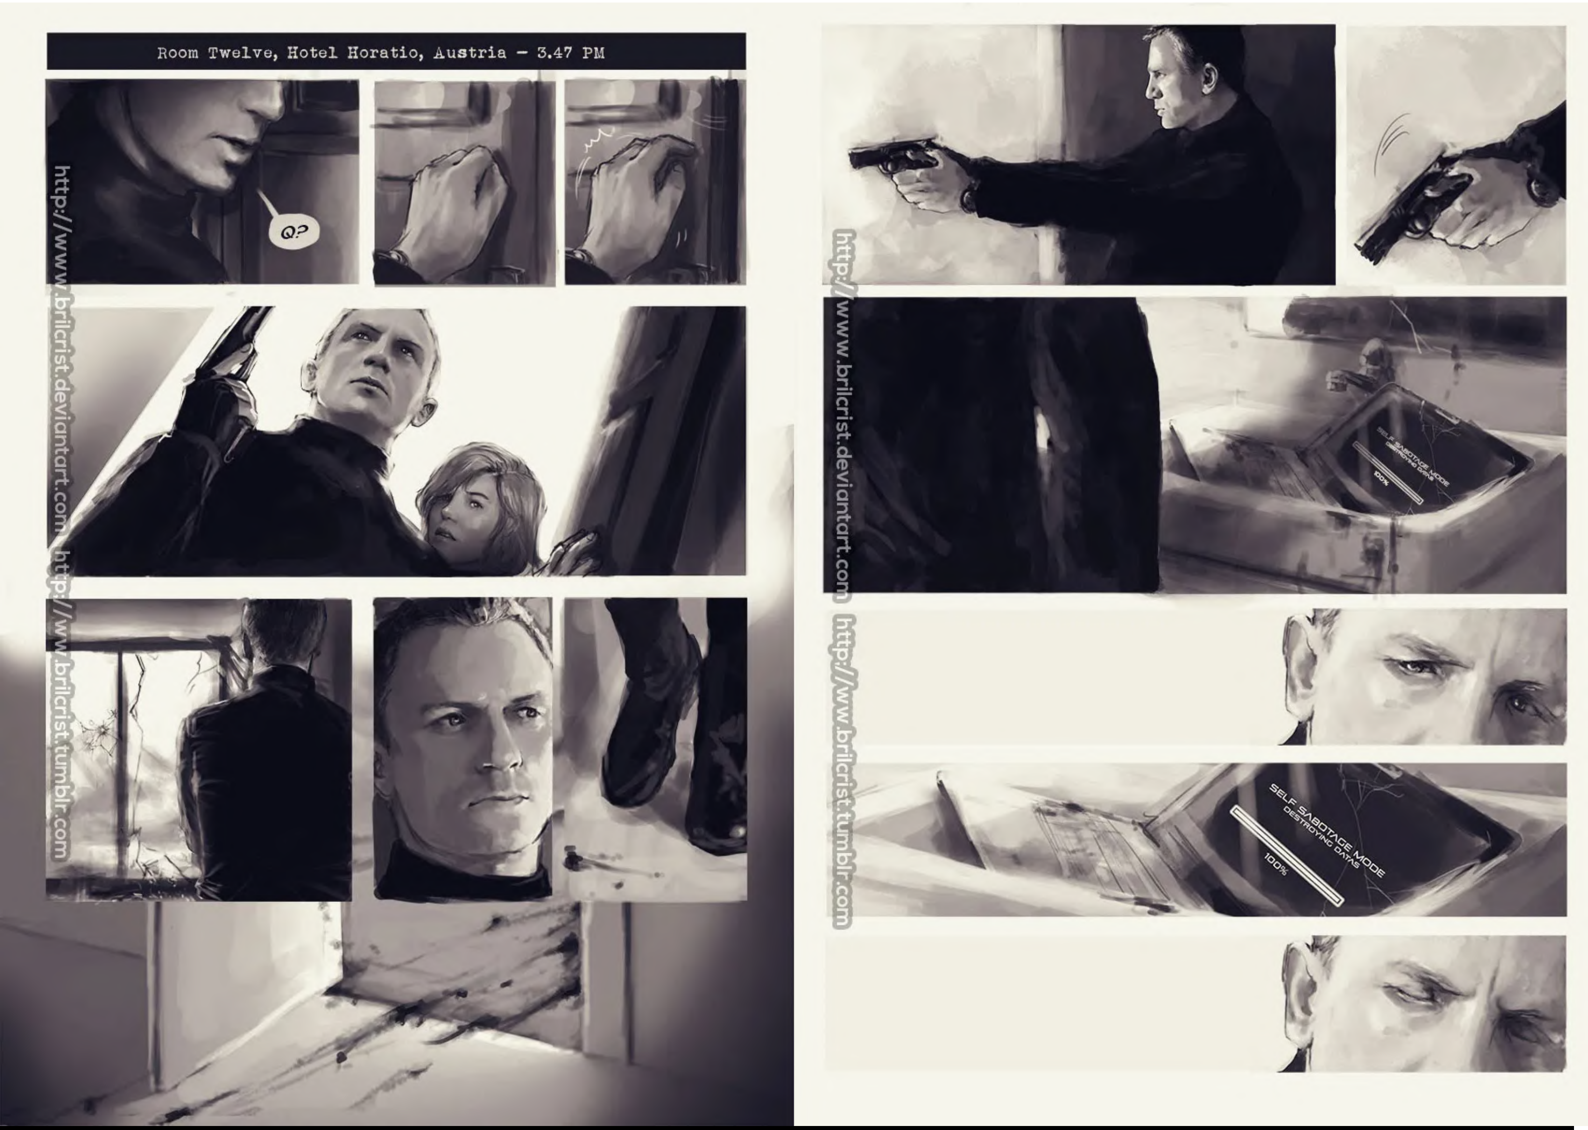
Bond is escorted out by security when he sees that Madeleine is being attacked. He gets rid of his escort (purely physically) to go save her. However it is too late, he sees her being pushed into a car in which Hinx is. Bond gets rid of two henchmen, but soon the car moves away, escorted by two Land Rovers... Inside the car Madeleine struggles, manages to turn a hypodermic syringe against one of her attackers and sees that Bond is now following the convoy by plane.

Hinx's men open fire on the plane but Bond doesn't give up. Arriving in a forest, 007 manages to get rid of one of the Land Rover, thanks to an ingenious maneuver. However, moments later, Bond makes an error in judgment and one of his wings hits a tree and he quickly loses control of the plane, along with his second wing. The plane crashes, slides in the snow like a sled, hits Hinx's car, but the two land vehicles manage to get away from Bond. 007 struggles with the controls of what remains of his plane to slide it in the direction of the convoy. The vehicles arrive in a village and Bond flies his plane through a barn and manages to hit the second Land Rover.

007 quickly gets out of his aircraft, aims and shoots the driver of the car where Madeleine is, which is now charging towards him (Hinx said to the driver "Kill him!" on this occasion, his only line of dialogue in the script). Bond having managed to kill the driver, the car rolls over, flies through the air over 007 and falls to the ground. Hinx's body goes through the windshield and hits a tree, but he is still alive... Finally, Bond helps Madeleine to get out of the vehicle. She just says to him: "Who the hell are you?", and he replies: "Later".

Meanwhile, Q was on a cable car with a stranger where he was analyzing the ring with his computer; White's file came up. Q looked at all the places White had been spotted in the past, analyzed who was in the hotels, train stations, airports during the same time period and matched it with the ring "material". Strangely, an image of Raoul Silva appeared among those of Dominic Greene, Vesper Lynd and Le Chiffre. Another man had climbed into the cabin and the two strangers, who had weapons in their pockets, blocked Q's path; however tourists joined them in the cable car. Q used the sound of the first Land Rover's explosion as a diversion to get out of the cable car and mingle into the crowd to join his hotel in town.

Bond and Madeleine are now in a street bar in Kitzbühel. 007 asks to drink hot apple juice. She tells him in particular that her father may have had too much confidence in Bond's abilities but he replies that luckily he doesn't work alone. On a TV, 007 sees images of a terrorist attack which has just taken place in Cape Town (South Africa) and says that they must keep moving. Together, they reach Q's hotel but the latter is nowhere to be found. There is blood and Q left a "message" in the bathroom that only says: "SPECTRE" (one of the rare occurrence in script where the name is spelled in capital letters). Bond blames himself: "It's my fault he was there. He was trying to help...".



Room Twelve, Hotel Horatio, Austria – 3.47 PM
Q?
SELF SABOTAGE MODE
DESTROYING DATAS
100%
http://www.brilcrist.deviantart.com
http://ww.brilcrist.tumblr.com

Fan illustration of the script by Bril Crist. After this, Bond turns on the hot water supply in the bathtub and the steam reveals a word that Q had written with his fingers on a mirror: SPECTRE.

007 contacts Moneypenny and asks her to find out about Spectre, she tells him that a file of that name has strangely been deleted from the database. Moneypenny hangs up because M has just called her into his office. 007 asks Madeleine where he can find L'Americain, she tells him that L'Americain is not a person but a place.

Meanwhile, in M's office:

- M: We deals in lies and secrets, but not between ourselves. You've been colluding with Bond to undermine my authority. Yes? [M hands over the transcript C gave him] I do hope it wasn't for love. If so, you've been made a fool.
- Moneypenny: It wasn't love. It was loyalty.
- M: You are officially suspended as chief analyst pending an investigation into your actions. You've let me down, Moneypenny.
- Moneypenny: He was following orders.
- M: From who?
- Moneypenny: Your predecessor, sir. Before she died, she made a disk. She told him to go to Mexico. To kill Sciarra. And then go to his funeral.
- M: You crafty bitch.
- Moneypenny: Sir?
- M: Not you. Her.
- Moneypenny: He knew if she went to those lengths of secrecy it was huge. Bond didn't know who he could and couldn't trust. So like her, he trusted no one.
- M: Except you.
- Moneypenny: Except me... Sir, Bond thinks the organization behind the attacks is called Spectre. I've tried searching for it in the digital archive but I've found nothing. I think he's onto something, sir. And right now needs us. He needs you.
- M: That's really interesting Moneypenny but I'm afraid you're going to remain officially suspended.
- Moneypenny: Sir.
- M: However, unofficially... You are now on filing duty.
- Moneypenny: Sir?
- M (pushing old keys): The paper archives. The old [MI6] building... Start with the letter S.
- Moneypenny: Reporting only to you, sir?
- M: Reporting only to me.

We find Bond and Madeleine in a souk in Tangier (Morocco). Madeleine explains that it was only in this city that her father truly felt at home; he experienced Tangier while he served in the Legion. They enter an old hotel called L'American (she gives a little background on this place: her father spent his wedding night here, he came back every year despite the divorce). 007 begins to ransack the place around, Madeleine shouts him to stop but Bond tells her that he is looking for why his father wanted to lead them to this place; she lets him do it. While searching, Bond finds an old bottle of schnapps:

- Madeleine: What is it?
- Bond: Your inheritance...
- Madeleine: I don't drink.
- Bond: Lucky you, it's schnapps. [He opens the bottle] Cheers, you old bastard. Thanks for the wild goose chase...
- Madeleine: That's my father you're talking about.
- Bond: Please. Let's neither of us pretend we miss him.

[She walks over to Bond, takes the bottle from him and takes a big gulp].

- Bond: I thought you didn't drink.
- Madeleine: I said I didn't. Not couldn't.

She takes another pull.

- Bond: Well you might want to go steady. It's strong stuff.
- Madeleine: Don't tell me how to drink, Bond. I could drink your ass under that table.
- Bond: That's fighting talk.

[She takes another sip and passes the bottle to Bond who also takes a sip before passing the bottle back to her. They repeat the operation twice].

- Madeleine: Now kiss me.
- Bond: But I hardly know you.

[She approaches, but he gently pushes her away].

- Madeleine: You must have kissed a lot of girls you hardly knew. Don't you want to know what it's like?

[She approaches to kiss him, but loses her balance from the influence of alcohol, Bond catches her and carries her to the bed].

- Madeleine: You putting me to bed? How sweet... You don't want to join me...?
- Bond: Tempting. But no.
- Madeleine: How gallant. And there I was thinking you were a heartless monster... I came here every year til I was about eight. I remember everything in this room from the ground up. The floor. The table legs. The skirting board. I used to play in here. For hours.
- Bond: Did your father ever talk about him? The man he worked for.
- Madeleine: He told me once, when he was drunk, he said you'll never know what this man is capable of. He just keeps going... He's never going to stop.
- Bond: All it takes is one small bullet.
- Madeleine: In all my life I have only ever saw my father afraid of one thing: him. Don't you see? He was never scared of you. But of him... He was terrified. (Drunk double vision) Look! There are two of you! Are you both just going to sit there all night?
- Bond: You never know. We might have unexpected guests.

> - Madeleine (drunk): Well, now there's two of you to protect me... I knew it would end like this. I knew you'd leave me. To heartless bastards... Everywhere...

A little later, while Madeleine is sleeping, Bond sees a mouse disappearing into a hole in a wall (he doesn't speak to the mouse in the script). Bond approaches and destroys the wall with a punch, which wakes Madeleine. Behind it they discover a secret room... In addition to false passports, weapons, poisons, reserves of morphine, telephones, etc.; there is a photo in which appears the man we had already seen in photos in Bond's apartment, except that this time he is with another teenager... Madeleine also finds family photos and she shows Bond a paper with numbers that he identifies as coordinates, the ones of a satellite phone. According to a map, it's lead to the middle of nowhere in the desert...

While Bond and Madeleine were at L'American, Moneypenny went to the old MI6 and found the file she was looking for. Inside was a photo of a legionnaire troop taken in the late 80s in the desert, White and the leader are on it. Looking closer, she saw that the group of Legionnaires were standing in front of a painting that depicted an octopus riding the planet Earth, one tentacle catching a jet. Looking even closer, Moneypenny saw that this platoon of legionnaires was called: "LES SPECTRES DE PIERRE". Moneypenny also found a newspaper clipping with the same photo Bond just saw at the hotel, saying that "Hannes Oberhauser found dead in mountains. Son, Franz still missing".

Bond and Madeleine are now on a Moroccan train leaving Tangier, 007 unpacks, takes out a tuxedo, and asks a member of the train staff to see if it can be ironed. Madeleine asks him "You travel with a tuxedo?", he frowns, almost confused, and replies: "of course". While the "valet" is holding the tuxedo, he [the valet] walks past Hinx who is reading a newspaper...

Bond wants to teach Madeleine how to use a Glock 33 but she tells him that she hates guns because she once used one when an assassin broke into their home when she was 12. He gives up when he realizes that she knows how to use it perfectly. Madeleine asks Bond for a little "privacy" so she can change for dinner. He goes out into the corridor where the valet gives him his ironed tuxedo.

Inside his compartment, Bond hangs the suit on the back of the door, and takes off his shirt, thinking about what just happened. Slowly he smiles at himself in the mirror...

On the side of the Foreign Office, C tells M that he arrived too late, the meeting had been brought forward: the South Africans changed their minds and decided to join Nine-Eyes following the attack which had just taken place in their country; furthermore, 00 Section will soon be closed and MI6 operations will now be managed by himself in the new building. M doesn't intend to let go: "You're a cocky bugger, aren't you?", "What on earth do you mean?", "I mean... It's not bloody over yet".

Bond is now in the restaurant car in a white tuxedo, Madeleine approaches and sits opposite him. They talk, the dialogues are like those in the film with a few exceptions:

- Server: An apéritif, Madam?
- Madeleine: Club soda.
- Bond: I forgot, you don't drink.
- Madeleine: It gets me into trouble. Makes me do crazy things.
- Bond: And we can't have that, can we?
- Madeleine: So I stick to this. That is, unless my whole world has been turned upside down, my life is in danger, I'm feeling reckless and I really don't care what happens to me anymore...

[Finally she also order a vodka-martini].

[...]

- Madeleine: Why, given every other possible options, does a man choose the life of the paid assassin?
- Bond: It was that or accountancy.

[...]

- Madeleine: You know, I was wrong. You're not like my father at all. He was cold to the bone. But you, you're wounded. Have you ever been in love?
- Bond: Once.
- Madeleine: What happened?
- Bond: She died.
- Madeleine: Were you there?
- Bond: Yes.
- Madeleine: Does it haunt you?
- Bond: I've deal with it.
- Madeleine: Do you dream about her?
- Bond: I already told you I don't dream.
- Madeleine: Not anymore...
- Bond: Not anymore.

They toast "to new beginnings" when Hinx shows up! He sends the table flying into Madeleine and then begins a violent hand-to-hand fight between the two men on several wagons (the description of which resembles what was filmed). Finally Hinx tries to stick his thumbs in Bond's eyes when Madeleine shoots him in the shoulder with the Glock, but Hinx turns around, takes the gun from her, and give her a slaps which sends her to the ground. Bond takes the opportunity to grab a chain connected to barrels and wraps it around Hinx's neck; he asks Madeleine to open the door.

She does so, Hinx punches Bond in the stomach, so he falls to the ground as Hinx begins to remove the chain, but in a last effort, Bond kicks one of the barrels which then falls from the train. A chain reaction ensues, all the barrels are ejected from the train with Hinx... However Hinx grabs Madeleine as he passes and clings to her, Bond hits him again and again and manages to bring her back on board. Hinx realizes what's going to happen and is about to speak, but before he can, he disappears through the door and ends up under the wheels of the train! And, as if to celebrate their victory, Bond and Madeleine isolate themselves and make love...

Moneypenny brings the file containing the photos and the newspaper article to M who is in an Italian restaurant:

> - Moneypenny: I found something. The whole regiment were thought to have died. But we know White survived. And, it seems, one other.
> - M: Spectre. It can't be a coincidence.
> - Moneypenny: There was another document attached. About the death of this man.
> - M: Franz Oberhauser... Call Bond now. Tell him. Tell him everything we know.
> - Moneypenny: Sir.
> - M: I just hope it's not too late.

On the train, Madeleine is packing her things, Bond hangs up his phone and comes to see her to say "we're here". The train stops and they find themselves at an abandoned station in the middle of the desert when an old Bentley parks near them.

> - Robert Wade[191] : Originally, that trip into the desert was to get you to an abandoned legionnaire port where something terrible had happened.

They silently get into the Bentley which is driven by a uniformed driver and which takes them to an isolated crater in which there are various silver domes, armed men, a lawn, a modern house, etc... The car parks, they get off; a butler greets them politely and tells them that his boss will join them at 7 p.m. for dinner. Bond places his gun on the butler's silver tray and replies, "Tell our host, thank you and we won't be late". The butler also tells them that their rooms are ready and they go there.

In her room Madeleine is greeted by a tall woman, Irma (probably Irma Bunt, although the name is never pronounced), who shows her the wardrobe; she seems to be sexually attracted to Madeleine...

> - Madeleine: So you know my size.
> - Irma: We know everything about you, Doctor Swann. If you need assistance...
> - Madeleine: I'm a big girl. I can dress myself.

In his room, Bond finds a suit and photos of himself as a child, in the company of Hannes Oberhauser and sometimes also with his son, Franz Oberhauser; they are skiing, playing cards, etc... There is also a video of White committing suicide that is playing on a loop.

At nightfall, they find themselves on a roof terrace, Bond asks Madeleine:

> - Bond: How do you like your room?
> - Madeleine: Incredible. I hate it. How's yours?
> - Bond: Stirring.

> - Madeleine: So where is our host? And what's his name?
> [A voice is heard from the doorway, it's the one of the leader].
> - Stockmann: His name is... Heinrich Stockmann. Mister Bond, Doctor Swann. I've been looking forward to this so much that now I'm nervous. Really. I've got butterflies in my tummy.

A white Persian cat jumps onto a table and Stockmann addresses it, saying, "Get off there, you bloody fool". He pushes the cat to the ground, it meows, "Filthy creature... Shut up". A waiter arrives and offers Bond champagne.

> - Bond: Now, perhaps you can tell me where my friend is? [Reminder: Q was kidnapped].
> - Stockmann: All in good time time, Mister Bond. First, let us toast this... Reunion. Health, love and money, and the time to enjoy them.
> - Bond: Here's to that.
> [Bond raises his glass and drinks].
> - Stockmann: It's such a pleasure to finally meet you Dr. Swann. It's strange because I feel I know you so well after all these years.
> - Madeleine: You may know my dress size, but you don't know me.
> - Stockmann: On the contrary. I've been watching you your whole life. You see with an organization as big as mine you have to keep a close eye on your associates. I've watched you grow from a small girl, into a woman. But's that's just me. I always, always... Loved to watch. Now I have something I'd like you to watch, shall we?

Stockmann brings Bond and Madeleine to his operations center, a modern place with plenty of screens and half a dozen employees. The screens show information from satellites, surveillance cameras, various cities... Stockmann says he is going to show them something that happened 48 hours earlier, all the screens turn off except one which shows a truck parking in a street and the driver gets off.

> - Stockmann: This is probably my favorite part. The moments just before, when the scene is pristine, everything is well, and no harm can come to anyone... Everything is as it should be... Observe...

Suddenly the truck explodes, "Whoosh!", exclaims Stockmann and all the screens turn on again, they show the surrounding streets where people are panicking.

> - Stockmann: Look at that. Just look at it...
> - Bond: Why?
> - Stockmann: Before he blew his brains out, Dr. Swann's father informed you that my motives were far too strategically complex for you to even remotely comprehend. And so with all due respect, Mister Bond, let's not waste time trying to explain Mozart to the monkeys. Now... Listen to this music.

On the screens, news bulletins from around the world report on the disaster in a cacophony of sound. We can read "Terror attack in Cape Town" on certain channels.

> - Stockmann: What you're witnessing, Doctor, on a molecular level, is power itself taking shape.
> - Bond: The power to kill innocents?
> - Stockmann: What is the difference between this and an earthquake? Answer: nothing. The only reason we exist is cataclysmic events in nature. Earthquake. Flood. Drought. This "abomination" (making rabbit ears) is simply power to affect the greater good through a strategy of linked, controlled catastrophes designed to manipulate local political feeling to place maximum pressure on the global stage.
> - Bond: A bomb in South Africa? Just when their leaders refuse to sign up to a new international surveillance pact?
> - Stockmann: Oh, haven't you heard? They've signed up to it now.
> - Bond: I bet they have.
> [...]
> - Stockmann: So! Who's hungry?

So it's time for dinner, there is a large table in the observatory, the roof is open so you can see the stars, waiters arrive to serve soup, vegetables, wine, but a problem arises when Madeleine push away her bowl of soup:

> - Madeleine: I'm not hungry.
> - Stockmann: Come now, Doctor Swann.
> - Bond: She said she's not hungry.
> - Stockmann: Perhaps I should explain. You see, Mister Bond, Dr. Swann, although you are my guests here, and I extend this hospitality, I'm afraid you are no longer free to make your own choices. From this point forward you will do everything I ask of you. Starting with enjoying this creamy and thoroughly delicious lobster bisque. So... Shall we? (She glares at him). Come now Madeleine. You know what happens to little girls who don't eat their supper...
> - Bond: That's enough.
> [Bond prepares to intervene but the waiter now points a gun to his head].
> - Stockmann: Daddy's going to count to three... One. Two...
> [Madeleine finally takes a spoonful of soup].
> - Stockmann: That's a good girl...
> - Bond: You know what? I'm suddenly not that peckish either.
> - Stockmann: It's such a thrill to see you again, Mister Bond. Since you assumed 00 status, I've kept an especially close eye on your progress. I've been there all the time, rooting for you, revelling in your triumphs. Sharing your failures, of which, it seems, there are many.
> - Bond: You'll have to remind me.
> - Stockmann: Where to start? Wait... Vesper Lynd! [To Madeleine] Did he tell you about her? No? That was the big one. She was stunning. Intelligent. Charming. So charming, that even when that four faced lying bitch double crossed him he still tried to save her. Sadly he failed. Then he tried to save his beloved M. But she died too. Have you ever noticed, Mister Bond how all of the women in your life seem to end up dead?

- Bond: "Heinrich Stockmann", Where did you pick that up? I know a bit about you too, "Herr Stockmann". You and your secret organization nobody dares whisper the name of. Spectre.
- Stockmann: Whoops! The cat is out of the bag!
- Bond: Le Chiffre. Quantum. Silva. They all worked for you. For Spectre.
- Stockmann: Come on Mister Bond. Are you really saying one person is responsible for all your pain? That makes you sound a little... Paranoid. What's the term, Doctor, for someone who focuses all their misfortune and woe upon a single individual?
- Madeleine: A Delusional Paranoiac.
- Stockmann: That has a ring to it, don't you think? Delusional paranoiac. It's a term I've heard before. Because at one point in my life I too believed there was one, single person who I could blame for everything, for all my torment, all my unhappiness, my pain. I told the doctors. And do you know what they did? They put me in a straitjacket. Gave me electric shocks. They said I was delusional. Paranoid. But I didn't feel paranoid. So time went by, and they gave me a little more freedom, and the first chance I got I put strychnine in my Doctor's morning coffee. And I took her keys and I hopped the wall, and I ran away and joined the Legion. It's a good story so far... No?
- Bond: Gripping.
- Stockmann: I'm so pleased you think so.
- Bond: So come on. Who was it? This demon who ruined your life?
- Stockmann: It's so unfair that everything that goes wrong in life happens to the child, doctor, don't you think? When we're too small, too vulnerable to do anything about it. I was not a well child. But I had loving, doting parents. Then one day, they brought another boy into our home. This boy was an orphan. His parents had died in a climbing accident. When he arrived all he did was stay in his room and cry like a baby. But as time passed he slowly came out of his shell. This boy was tall, strong, with piercing blue eyes. He was the absolute embodiment of everything I was not. And my father fell in love with him. This cuckoo in the nest. He spent all his days with him, skiing, climbing, hunting, at nights playing poker. I would sit in my room alone at night listening to my father hour after hour playing cards with this boy. They would play with hazelnuts for chips. One day I asked if I could play. My father said... My father said that the excitement would be bad for my heart. But I begged him and finally he relented. What he didn't know was I had been secretly learning the game. Alone. In my room. And so that night we played and slowly over the course of the evening, I began to win. I won at least half of the cuckoo's hazelnuts. I could see the cuckoo sweating. [...] And the next hand I was dealt all Hearts to the King. A flush! And I pushed all my hazelnuts into the middle. And the cuckoo looked at me. And he did the same. Then he reached to his wrist, and he took off his big silver watch his own dead father had given him, and he placed it on the table. And suddenly... I panicked. I thought, my God, he has a better hand. He has a better hand than me. And I started to shake. And you know what I did? I folded my cards. And when he turned his cards over, he had a pair of threes. He had nothing. He was bluffing. It feels like yesterday. Isn't that right, Cuckoo?

- Bond: I afraid I don't remember.
- Stockmann: Of course you don't. Why would you?
- Bond: Your name is Franz Oberhauser... The only son of Hannse Oberhauser. Herr Oberhauser died in a fire in Kitzbuhel, Austria. The cause was arson.
- Stockmann: You are wrong, Mister Bond. Franz Oberhauser died too. In the deserts of Tangier... You want to know my name? My real name... Is... PAIN... [To a guard] Let's begin.

It's still night, 007 is in a sort of abattoir where there are traces of blood on the floor, he is tied up on a chair, a tablet displays his vital statistics.

- Stockmann: Check this out. It's your vital statistics. I got these from your little friend at MI6. It was worth keeping him alive just for this!
- Bond: ...Where is he?
- Stockmann: Let's see... Blood pressure. Heart rate. Skin temperature.

Stockmann takes a "cattle prod" and begins to hit Bond several times just for fun while keeping an eye on the tablet. 007 screams in pain, but doesn't try to talk.

- Stockmann: Whoops, look at that... Where's your poker face now, Mr. Bond?... It hurts doesn't it?... This is fun... You know, I'm no doctor, but I would say judging from all this data... Heart rate, perspiration, levels of adrenalin, pupil dilation, I'd say... That you are actually scared... Are you scared, 007? Is this fear we see?... You really are a very funny man...

Finally Stockmann stops hitting Bond with his cattle prod and reveals important information to him:

- Stockmann: Do you know where you are, little brother? This is a solar furnace. When the sun rises you will be slowly cooked, but don't worry. It takes hours. The flesh will fall nicely off the bone.
- Bond: I have a question. Why all the games? Why not just a bullet?
- Stockmann: Ha. That's a good question.
- Bond: It is, isn't it?
- Stockmann: Well, it's perfectly simple really. The truth is I never wanted you to die. After all the dead feel no pain.
- Bond: Then I promise you this. Look me in the eyes. If you don't put a bullet in my head right now, I'm going to find you, and I'm going to kill you.
- Stockmann: Ooh. That's a pretty scary threat.
- Bond: It's not a threat. It's a promise.
- Stockmann: Well then I'd be insane to take such a chance.
- Bond: Yes you would.
- Stockmann: You know what. You're right. I can't take that chance. I've had my fun. It's time to put one bullet where it belongs. [He stands up with a gun he has loaded] Goodbye Mister Bond. I miss you already…
- Bond: You want to play a last hand, Franz? For old time sake. There a file in London. It links you to Spectre and reveals your true identity. If anything happens to her, that file will be made public, and your whole house of cards comes tumbling down.

- Stockmann: You're bluffing.
- Bond: Am I? How can you be sure?
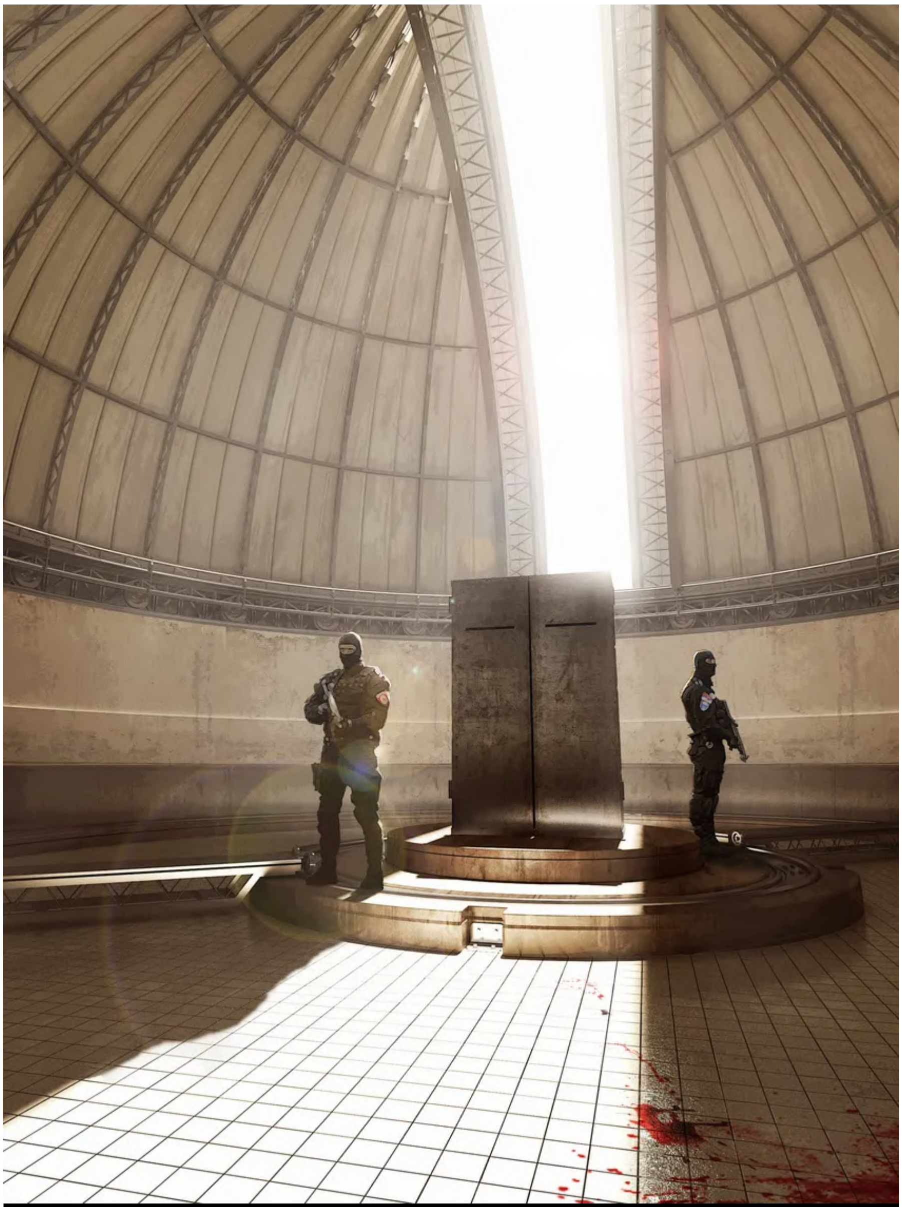
[Stockmann looks at the tablet, Bond's heart rate is normal].
[...]
- Stockmann: I have more eyes in MI6 than you could believe Mister Bond. Many, many more... It won't take me long to find them...



Concept art created for the film by Tim Browning.

Stockmann/Oberhauser (let's call him Stockmann since that's the name that is given before each of his lines of dialogue) gets up and walks towards the door, adding "Don't worry, she was always very, very dear to me...I will look after her for you", before leaving for good. A luxurious helicopter with Oberhauser and Madeleine inside takes off from the crater and flies away before disappearing into the sunrise. Locked in the solar oven, Bond hears a voice coming from the cell next door:

- Q: 007...
- Bond: Q!
- Q: First of all I want you to know I am blaming you for all of this.
[The sun's rays begin to burn Bond's skin].
- Bond: Q. It's getting bloody hot. Any ideas?
- Q: Have you still got the watch. Or have you lost that too...?
- Bond: What?
- Q: The watch... I lied about the watch...
[Bond undoes the watch].
- Q: 007...

As his skin burns, 007 starts the countdown of the explosive watch and places it near the cell door. Boom! The door explodes and lands right on a guard. Another guard reacts and draws his weapon, Bond disarms him, the gun lands at Q's feet. The guard manages to grab his dead colleague's weapon and takes aim at Bond. Bang! The guard falls: Q killed him; he is traumatized. Bond retorts with:

- Bond: Sometimes a trigger has to be pulled. [Echoing with a line of dialogue of Skyfall].

Bond sees a text message on one of the henchmen's phones: "Are they dead?", he types an answer and Bond tells Q that this place needs to be destroyed. In the helicopter, Stockmann reads the response on his phone and says to Madeleine: "I thought I would feel elated when it was over. But now... It feels a little empty".

In the operations center, surprised technicians see mirrors reconfiguring themselves, concentrating the sun's rays on a cooling system. Q and Bond are at a safe distance:

- Q: By redirecting the light onto the cooling system, the computer will instantly overheat, causing a chain reaction.
- Bond: And?
- Q: Two possible outcomes. One, it will just short the place out.
- Bond: And the second?
- Q: Well it's complicated to explain, but if the system is overclocked to the extent I think it is...
[BOOM, a giant chain explosion!].
- Bond: I think I get it.

London, it's night and it's raining violently. Bruce Denbigh walks into the CNS building preparing to host a reception for the launch of the Nine-Eyes. C tells an assistant that they will be online at 8:00 p.m. and asks "where is our benefactor?". The assistant replies that he has landed, but he is just taking a small detour. "Splendid, amazing how fast history moves".

A black speedboat stops near the old MI6 building which bears the scars of the explosion caused by Silva in Skyfall. Heinrich Stockmann, Madeleine, Irma and other henchmen get out; they are greeted by an assistant of C: a certain Jenkins. They enter the dilapidated building, there are cables everywhere, a net and a construction elevator and they stop in front of the memorial wall. There Stockmann makes a comment saying that these are the ones who gave their lives for those who don't even know their sacrifices ("what a load of shit"), and orders Irma to go and search near the vault. He is now speaking to Madeleine:

- Stockmann: What do you think, my child? Is there a file? Or was he bluffing? I really don't know what I'll do to you if he was. Or for that matter, if he wasn't. [...] [They arrive at the place where the explosion started] Ah. The scene of the crime. They couldn't even scrape together the money to rebuild it. This really is a third world country.
- Madeleine: You did this?
- Stockmann: I'd love to claim credit. But it was my friend Mister Silva. I provided the money of course. I guess you could say I fanned the flames...
- Madeleine: No wonder my father stopped trusting you. You're just another small time criminal.
- Stockmann: A reasonable diagnosis, Doctor Swann. But a partial one. I am a criminal. But certainly not small time.

At the new MI6 in Whitehall, we find Gareth Mallory at his office which is now empty. He is holding a small box containing a George Cross he had obtained for his bravery while serving in the SAS. Moneypenny comes in and asks him if he's ready. M tells him he is as ready as he'll ever be. They leave the office and M briefly addresses the entire MI6 staff (including Tanner) who was waiting for him outside: it's a farewell speech. M leaves, Moneypenny and Tanner watch him leave in a limousine but Moneypenny is surprised:

"Strange. That's not M's usual driver", "What do you mean? ", "Wrong number plate". They look at each other, Tanner exclaims, "Christ", and takes out his phone.

M's limousine speeds up, Mallory asks what the hell is this and it's 007 who answers: he's driving the car. Bond tells him that he hopes he has enjoyed his retirement but that there are still some matters to attend to. M's phone rings, Bond asks who is this, Tanner, and Bond tells M to tell him to meet them at Q-Branch.

On a table in Q-Branch, there are weapons and Bond examines a plan of the CNS building:

> - Bond: Your job is to get Q into there.
> - Q: The Vertex, it's the terminal where the highest level data is output.
> - M: We have to stop the building going online. Otherwise Stockmann will have access to everything.
> - Bond: Just the opposite. We're going to let them turn it on... And then we're going to use it against him.
> - M: Against Stockmann?
> - Bond: Against his number two.
> - M: Who's that?
> - Bond: Le Chiffre was the money. Silva was his tech wizard. Guess who's his Security expert...
> - M: Denbigh. That bastard.
> - Bond: Come on now, Q, are we still blind?
>
> [A dot appears on a map, near Vauxhall Bridge: this is the location of Stockmann's phone].
>
> - Q: Not perfect, but here's the phone's last appearance. Stockmann was on the south bank, but then the signal simply disappeared.
> - Bond: There's only one place that could be...
> - Bond and Q: ...The Faraday Cage.
> - M: In the old MI6 building?
> - Q: That has to be it.
> - Bond: He's hiding right under our noses.
> - M: What are you going to do?
> - Bond: Have you still got your Section 6 aviation access?
> - M: ...Yes.
>
> [Moneypenny and Tanner join them].
>
> - Bond: What took you so long?

At the old MI6 HQ, Madeleine watches the black boat sail away. Irma tells her, "Your father was a good foot soldier. Before he became a drunken coward and a liability", "I'd like to break your neck", "Why don't you try? I'm right here".

At the CNS building, the guests arrive, including M, which surprises Denbigh: "I have to say I'm surprised you took up the invitation", "Oh, I wouldn't have missed it for the world", "Our public schools breed such fervent masochists".

Madeleine spots a piece of metal on a window and takes it, she prepares to hit Irma with it but Irma avoids the blow and punches her in the stomach. Madeleine falls to the ground but doesn't give up, she gets back on her feet and suddenly starts running. She goes through a door but finds herself faced with a hole in the ground, she steps back to gain momentum and jumps over it. Irma tells her that she is a "pathetic child" and suddenly both women are aware of the noise. The sound of a helicopter approaching. The pilot, James Bond, scans the place with searchlights, but because of the strong wind (remember that it is raining cats and dogs) 007 lands on the roof of the building.

He gets off the helicopter but two armed men arrive, he goes back into the cockpit to dazzle them with the spotlights and kills them: two bullets, winning shots. Bond now plunges into the bowels of old MI6…

Meanwhile, at the CNS building, a speech is given. Stockmann is in the audience, one of his men comes and whispers something in his ear, he turns white then smiles: Bond is alive.

The old MI6's construction elevator descends. Two armed men notice that, the doors open and they machine-gun the inside; however there was no one inside. Bond was on the roof of the elevator and he kills both men with one bullet each. Suddenly someone shoot the elevator from below, 007 gets out and jumps over some holes in the floor. He shoots into a skylight and the broken glass falls on the men below; they are injured and Bond takes the opportunity to kill them.

Meanwhile at the CNS building, C speaks (and reveals an important surname in passing):

> - C: Thank you. Well, as you must all know by now, this great building was only made possible by an extraordinary donation from an extraordinary man. Step forward please, Mister Heinrich Stockmann.
> [A spotlight shines on Stockmann and the audience applauds, but looking at him C sees that something is wrong].
> - C: So, finally tempted out of the shadows... Mister Stockmann, Ernst, if I may, I wonder if we might call on you to take the system online?
> - Stockmann: Of course.

Amidst thunderous applause, Stockmann walks towards the stage under the gaze of M. In the technical area of this building, Q and Tanner connect to the network. It turns out that Tanner has a gun pointed at Jenkins: "you'll be locked up for this Tanner", "So shooting you won't make a blind bit of difference".

On the stage, C whispers to Stockmann to ask him what's wrong, Stockmann whispers to him that Bond is alive and presses the button which puts the system online. Data lights up the screens in the room. "If he exposes me, you're dead", he warns C. Stockmann steps off the stage and heads for the exit as Denbigh demonstrates to the audience. Moneypenny now follows Stockmann at a reasonable distance...

At the old MI6, the sound of the elevator is heard again. Bond aim the cable and shoot, he hits it but the cable doesn't break. Suddenly a door opens behind Bond: a henchman opens fire, missing 007 who doesn't miss him in his retaliation. While his back is now turned to the elevator, the elevator door opens and a henchman points a gun at Bond who then raises his hands in the air to surrender. Bond quickly turns around and shoot again on the cable which breaks: the elevator and the man who was inside violently descend a few floors with a crash. "Going down" comments Bond.

On the CNS side, Q presses a button on his keyboard. In the inauguration room where Denbigh is doing his demonstration, Denbigh's personal profile appears on the screen behind him. M speaks:

> - M: Fascinating stuff. Those charts up behind you now. What do they represent?

- C: Wrong page. Teething problems. How predictable. [C turns around and realizes it's his own profile on the screen] Well, I... This wasn't...
- M: Ah yes, I think I see. What we're looking at, ladies and gentlemen, is the digital profile of a man embedded in a network of international terrorism. Here, for example, secret funds transferred between in Swiss bank accounts between you and Mister Stockmann. [More data, M joins C on stage] Just ten days ago the two of you met in a restaurant in Rome. With you was Sciarra, the Mexico City bomber. [More data] One month ago, Mister Denbigh and Mister Stockmann at the Mount Nelson Hotel in Cape Town. Who they were meeting? [On screen, video of a man walking through the hotel lobby with the words "terror bomb suspect"]. It seems you really can tell everything from properly analyzed data... Now at least we know what C stands for.

Outside the building a storm has risen, the rain is torrential now. Moneypenny followed Stockmann to the exit, he is now heading towards a boat. Moneypenny informs Tanner who tells Q to block the roads. Inside, C tells M that he has no power in this building but police officers approach the stage to arrest Denbigh, "but they do".

In the old MI6 side, Bond gets closer to Irma. When he sees her, she has a gun pointed at Madeleine's head who is now chained and gagged. Irma has not spotted Bond, she is in the process of untying Madeleine and taking her elsewhere when suddenly bam! 007 goes through a wall at the controls of an excavator! Irma makes a quick decision, a suicide decision: she throws herself into a hole in the ground, taking Madeleine with her. Bond gets off the digger, too late, he approaches the hole and sees that the two women have in fact fallen into a safety net which is slowly giving way under their weight. Bond tries to help, the two women are fighting in the net, it comes loose but 007 catches her. Finally Madeleine kicks Irma, clings to a cable and Bond releases the net... Irma thus falls to her death. 007 asks Madeleine if she's okay, she answer no, that she thought he was dead; Bond tells her he is sorry to disappoint her. They are kissing.

Moneypenny tries to contact Bond but he is out of range, Stockmann's boat is starting... Moneypenny then does what she has to do, she takes her gun, runs, aims and shoots at the boat. She misses and the thugs inside are about to return fire when she shoot a second time and hits the gas tank, BOOM! Stockmann and his last henchman abandon the boat and go to the shore where a car is waiting. Moneypenny shoots, hits the henchman, but Stockmann gets into the car and flees; she takes her phone.

Outside the old MI6, Bond receives a call from Moneypenny who informs him that Stockmann is heading towards him, alone, in a car. Due to roadblocks, she tells him that he will only be able to go through the Westminister Bridge. When he asks her what happened to the henchmen, she replies that she's not such a bad shot after all... Bond asks Madeleine if she will wait for him, she replies that yes, and he then starts running towards Westminster Bridge.

Stockmann arrives on the bridge and sees a black figure in front of him: Bond. He slows down and gets out of the car. The rain falls violently, the two men approach each other while walking like in a western except that Bond doesn't have his weapon in his hand while Stockmann has a submachine gun.

- Stockmann: I wish I could say that I planned it this way, but I'd be lying. I didn't...

- Bond: I did.
- Stockmann: I see. So this is how you wanted it, just you, me and the moonlight? What do you think our therapist friend would say about this?
- Bond: She'd say kill the bastard.
- Stockmann: How? With your bare hands? You know what I think? I think this is the way you always wanted it. You see, Mister Bond? It was written in the stars all along.
- Bond: You want a bet on that?
- Stockmann: A bet Mister Bond?
- Bond: You see, I've got Walther PPK 9mm in this pocket, and there's three bullets in it. I'm thinking I can draw it before you can pull that trigger. And now you're thinking it too. Aren't you?
- Stockmann: Even now still bluffing?
[Further on the bridge, M and Moneypenny get out of a car].
- Bond: You don't believe me? Then go on. All you've got to do is pull the trigger. Or are you too scared? Too weak? Or maybe you would just miss me.
- Stockmann: Oh I don't think I'll miss you, Mister Bond. Not from here...
- Bond: He talked about you all the time. He wasn't disappointed with you. He blamed himself for your illness. He loved you. He never stopped loving you, right til the end. But you killed him. Didn't you... Brother...

Stockmann is suddenly disconcerted by these words, his sub-machine gun lowers imperceptibly, and in a split second, Bond draws his PPK and fires two bullets into the chest of his "brother". Simultaneously Stockmann fires one bullet into Bond's shoulder. Stockmann falls to the ground but Bond manages to remain standing, he places his foot on Stockmann's wrist who is still holding the weapon. Bond leans over him:

- Bond: By the way, it wasn't a pair of threes... It was pair of twos. [Bond points his gun at Oberhauser's head] Sorry chum. You lose again...
- Stockmann: But... You're my little brother.
- Bond: I never had a family.

Bang! Bond shoots Stockmann in the head! Franz Oberhauser is definitely dead. 007 takes a tissue from his pocket and wipes the blood from his shoulder, he looks towards M then towards the Thames. He then looks at his PPK for a moment ("a last moment" the script tells us) then decides to throw it in the river and join Madeleine. She asks him why he threw his gun away and he responds that "it was weighing me down". He goes away with her, away from M, away from the bridge, away from London, away...

A week later, Bond breaks into Q's workshop but comes across the latter. Q tells him he thought he was "gone" but Bond tells him he needs one last thing... The James Bond Theme starts to make himself heard, Q throws keys at him and Bond thanks him.

A series of close-up shots: a hand turns the keys in the ignition, a rev counter comes to life, the engine throbs, a clutch is depressed, and the gear lever is slammed forward. Bond is in the driver's seat of the Aston Martin DB5 and turns to Madeleine who is in the passenger seat:

- Madeleine: Where will we go, James?

> - Bond: I've got a couple of ideas up my sleeve. After all... We have all the time in the world.

James Bond steps on the accelerator, the wheels spin and the DB5 drives away, taking them somewhere... Anywhere... Together... The end.

October 8, 2014' script: Heineken, disease and ambulance

Before the October 17 script, another "revised interim draft" of 139 page was previously completed on October 8:

Pre-title:

The pre-title, although it begins in the same way as in he script of October 17, is fundamentally different:

Gunbarrel opening the eye socket of a skull... Mexico City during the Day of the Dead... Marco Sciarra moves among the crowd... The couple is now heading towards a hotel... (A man disguised as Satan gives Bond a key in the hotel)... They enter the room and Estrella asks Bond to kiss her... Bond removes part of his disguise (here he is now dressed in black commando outfit)... Bond goes out onto the rooftops, takes his PPK, goes near the apartment where Sciarra is and listens...

This is where things was different:

> - Marco: It's over there. Where are the others?
> - Man: At Saint Saviours.
> - Marco: And the flight out of here?
> - Man: South side of the Main Square.
> - Marco: What time is the governor due at the stadium?
> - Man: One hour.
> [Bond murmurs to himself in Latin: Nos morituri te salutamus...].
> - Marco: A toast, my friend. To Death!
> - Man: To Death!

Bond decides to shoot and places a bullet between Sciarra's two eyes (who therefore dies), his accomplice returns fire and manages to hit 007 but his commando outfit protects him. Finally Bond shoot on the suitcase. BOOM! A large explosion devastates the entire building the villain was in; suddenly this building begins to fall on Bond's one with a great crash...

Bond, however, manages to escape alive and in the debris, he comes across Sciarra's body, takes his ring and then removes his commando outfit. As police officers arrive on scene, Bond walks away and comes across a sign reading: Scuela Infantil de San Salvador (Saint Savior's Infant School ; the place Sciarra's accomplice was talking about).

Bond enters the school, the playground is empty and he takes out his PPK. Entering a classroom, he comes across "the others": two men sitting with guns near them. The men notice Bond and for a moment nobody moves, suddenly they try to take their weapons but 007 shoots them down.

Bond examines the telephones and stops: on the table where the two men were, there is a third cigarette in the ashtray... When Bond notices it, he hears the sound of a toilet flushing and a man return to the room. The man sees him, but too late, 007 shoots him down, adding: "You shouldn't smoke". Bond then notices an old TV with a VCR in the classroom and presses the play button, a man appears on the screen but his face cannot be clearly seen:

- Man: Dia Di Muertos..... The Day of the Dead. How fitting an occasion for the task ahead. Strength to you, my Brothers. And when the deed is done contact Signor Sciarra, who will instruct you on the final elimination of the Pale King..

Bond grabs one of the phones and dials a number:

- Bond: Pruitt...
- Pruitt: Bond! What the hell happened?
- Bond: Later, find Saint Savior's School. I'll be at the front. [He hears people coming from the front] Make that the back.

Bond walks out of the school and a Heineken beer delivery truck (!) speeds through a gate and stops just inches from 007's head! Bond climbs into the cabin to join Pruitt (the man who was disguised as Satan, he is "a local ex-pat contact") and takes the wheel.

More obvious the product placement next time, please...

- Pruitt: I thought you said a nice quiet job?!
- Bond: Yes. Sorry about all that.
[Three men leave the school with guns in their hands and goes towards cars].
- Pruitt: I had to steal this bloody thing from the service entrance of the hotel. I take it this wasn't meant to happen.
- Bond: Not exactly.
- Pruitt: Where are we going?
[The cars are now chasing the truck].
- Bond: The south side of the main square. The bombers had an exit strategy.
- Pruitt: Bombers?!
[They pass several posters indicating that the governor will make a speech at the Estadio Azteca stadium].
- Bond: They were planning to blow up the Governor. And I'm guessing the rest of the stadium as well.
- Pruitt: Christ... Well done you.
- Bond: I'm not sure M's going to see it that way.
[Bond continues driving, he sees a police roadblock].
- Pruitt: Bugger. No way through.
[Bond takes another route and arrives at the main square].

Sam Mendes had actor Toby Jones in mind for the role of Pruitt.

Driving through the crowd, Bond and Pruitt see a helicopter fly overhead and drop two men. "Oh, God in heaven!", Pruitt exclaims. Bond considers the situation: two pursuing cars behind and a helicopter in front, "Hold on" and he shifts into reverse, ramming the cars. Heineken bottles fall from the back of the truck and partially bury the cars. "You shouldn't drink and drive", Bond comments.

The men in front open fire, Bond and Pruitt duck. 007 presses the accelerator and manages to get rid of one of the men, the other gets back into the helicopter. Bond comes out, clings to a skid of the aircraft, climbs in and fights against the man...

Finally the pilot causes the helicopter to fly almost upside down, the two men hold on but ultimately the guy falls into the aircraft's blades. 007 now heads into the cockpit and fights with the pilot. "You need to leave", Bond said before ejecting the pilot from the helicopter and taking control.

The police arrive at the square and Pruitt's phone rings:

> \- Bond: I owe you a drink.
> \- Pruitt: A pleasure dear boy. But let's never, ever do it again. Did you get what you wanted?
> \- Bond (looking at the ring): It's a start...

The rest of the script:

- It was planned that we would first hear M yelling at Bond from Moneypenny's office "NOW YOU LISTEN TO ME...", before getting a first shot inside (the dialogue is somewhat different):

> \- M: In case you forgot, your 00 status does NOT give you the right to swan around the globe settling old scores. Christ man, what the hell were you thinking?
> \- Bond: Why all the cameras?
> [...]
> \- M: I don't suppose you're going to tell me what you were even doing there?
> \- Bond: I'd love to, Sir... But with respect, all these mergers, "Inter-Departmental Streamlinings", "Cost-Effective Restructurings"...? Can you really say who's calling the shots anymore?
> \- M: Don't push me, 007.
> [...]
> \- Bond: Congratulations on your appointment, C. M and I were just discussing the new cameras.
> \- C: Yes. The cameras. Standard procedure over at MI5. Trust me. You get used to them..
> \- Bond: Why wouldn't I trust you?
> \- M: 007 was just leaving.
> \- Bond: Bruce Denbigh. Wrote that dossier last year on how the 00 programme was obsolete, how drones could do all our dirty work abroad.
> \- M: That's enough.
> \- C: It's perfectly alright, M. I appreciate candour. After all, that's what this merger is all about. Openness, sharing opinions across departments, bringing Intelligence out of the Dark Ages, into the light.

> - Bond: Well, that all sounds lovely.
> - M: That will be all, 007. Report to Q tomorrow.
> - Bond: So I'm still active?
> - M: No. You're grounded. For now.
> - Bond: Very good, sir.

- Bond asks Lucia if there is a password (instead of her giving it to him without him asking). She also had a sentence where she said to him "I've met a lot of men. But none as crazy as you", he replied with a Moneypenniesque sentence: "flattery will get you nowhere". Finally, she doesn't give him a mask (no one wears one at the meeting).
- During the Spectre meeting, the leader's face is not hidden by shadows, but by bandages. When the leader arrives in the room, he is connected to a drip.
- After Leader threw the eyeballs onto the table, he and the Spectre members recites a kind of credo:

> Santa Muerta, Goddess of death, with defleshed body, your gaping jaw swallows the stars... Protect us this today, so when the moon is gone and the eternal night falls, we shall dance together in the darkness, as the sky rains tears and blood.

- Although Hinx and the Spaniard both volunteer, the words "Pale King" and "Lake Mondsee" are not spoken during the meeting.
- When Bond is "unmasked", thirty people point their guns at him and he jumps out of the window to get to the Aston. Once inside, he doesn't escape the palace so easily: a car blocks the exit and he looks for another way out. At one point his car is confronted to armed men and Bond launches into a 360° on the spot, causing the tires to smoke. The car disappears into smoke and comes out a few seconds later. Bond then heads towards the exit.
- A helicopter (containing the leader) takes off from Palazzo Cardenza when Bond flees in Aston Martin.
- In addition to Spooky by Dusty Springfield, the script asks want L-O-V-E by Nat King Cole to be heard when Bond avoids a truck during the car chase.
- Just after 007 landed by parachute and walked past the garbage collectors, M was to be heard speaking in Tokyo:

> - M: ...He had no time to inform the Mexican authorities of the unfolding threat. He made a judgment call of extraordinary sensitivity in exceptional circumstances.
> - A Japanese: Revealing yet again that many of the external intelligence agencies are dominated by rogue elements, and have ceased co-operating with each other for our safety.
> - C: If co-operation is the goal, then none in this room is innocent. Phone hacking, computer surveillance, intelligence gathering on our friends as well as our enemies; all of us here are crippled by mistrust. I believe we are seeing something new, not just coordinated attacks, but different terrorist organizations joining together. They trust each other more than we do. Whatever we are doing, it's failing... I say, again a Nine-Eyes committee will have full access to the combined intelligence streams of member states. Then we stand a chance of making a difference. So I implore you. A "Yes" vote is the only way forward.

- Mr. White already mentions the thallium in his phone (an idea absent from the script of the October 17 draft, but that will come back in a December one. The thallium by the death of of Russian dissident Alexander Litvinenko[192]). The same goes for Hinx who arrives at Mr. White's cabin.
- When Bond asks White where he can find the leader, he replies "It's good to see you again, Mister Bond" but also adds "I always loathed you. Now at least I know you'll die horribly. Alone, and insane". When White says that Vesper has traded his life for his and he sees that 007 doesn't even blink, he adds: "Oh come on, surely you must have wondered...".
- When Madeleine asks Bond questions to establish which therapy would be most suitable for him, there is an element that appears in the novel You Only Live Twice:

> \- Madeleine: So you grow up where?
> \- Bond: Here and there. England, Scotland, Eton. Then thrown out of Eton.
> \- Madeleine: What for?
> \- Bond: I was caught with one of the maids.
> \- Madeleine: That was careless.
> \- Bond: So how do you train at the Oxford and the Sorbonne [...]?
> \- Madeleine: I see you've done your homework.
> \- Bond: And I see you didn't answer the question.

- When Bond tells Madeleine that her father committed suicide, she asks him if he was one of his friends; Bond replies that White was his "sworn enemy".
- It was planned to show us two attackers break the windows of the Horatio Hotel where Q is staying.
- At L'Americain, Madeleine says that her father once told her that the leader had a serious health problem:

> \- Madeleine: He told me once, when he was drunk; he said you'll never know what this man is capable of. He said that he had a disease. A wasting disease. That his organs slowly ate themselves. But he found a way around it.
> \- Bond: How?
> \- Madeleine: A kidney here, a liver there. Blood transfusions, bone marrow, skin grafts... All it took was money, a blood match, and people poor enough to sell their own bodies, piece by piece. That's how he stays alive. Keeps going. Who knows... Maybe forever.
> \- Bond: All it takes is one small bullet.

- In the secret room of L'Americain, Bond not only finds the tape titled "Interview with Vesper Lynd" which he decides not to watch, but also the newspaper article stating that "Hannes Oberhauser found dead in mountains. Son, Franz still missing".
- There is a very short scene in a train station where we saw Bond and Madeleine boarding the train. It's a luxury train and she read on the ticket:

> \- Madeleine: It says we have to dress for dinner.
> \- Bond: I'm sure you can scrub up...
> \- Madeleine: I was talking about you.
> \- Bond: Don't worry about it.

- During the fight against Hinx on the train, there is a scene where Bond passes into a private dining car where the waiter, whose uniform Hinx had stolen, is tied up and gagged. Bond goes to the next car (which is isn't present in the October 17 script) which is a kitchen car, there he grabs a knife and stabs it into Hinx's shoulder... Then the fight move to the next car.
- The scene in the Italian restaurant takes place here in M's office, the last survivor of the legionnaire group is not identified as Franz Oberhauser, but as Heinrich Stockmann.
- When the old Bentley parks, the butler who greets Bond and Madeleine doesn't say that his "employer" will join them at 7 p.m. for dinner but that "Herr Stockmann" will join them at 7 p.m. for dinner. So the dialogues change slightly afterwards:

- Madeleine: Incredible. I hate it [my room]. How's yours?
- Bond: Stirring.
- Madeleine: So, where's Mister Stockmann?
- Bond: There is no Stockmann.
- Madeleine: What do you mean?
- Bond: That's not his name. It's made up. Another mask. Another game.
- Madeleine: Now you're scaring me. What's going on...?
- Stockmann: Mister Bond. Dr. Swann. I've been looking forward to this so much that now I'm nervous. Really. I've got butterflies in my tummy.

[...]

- Stockmann: You will have to excuse me. As you probably know I have a chronic condition which means I must regularly undergo surgery. I am presently recovering from just such an operation and the drugs which manage the pain make me a trifle on edge.
- Bond: Wall we can't have that, can we?
- Stockmann: Let's us toast this... Reunion, Mister Bond. Health, love and money, and the time to enjoy them.

[...]

- In the operations center:

- Stockmann: [...] of linked, controlled catastrophes designed to manipulate local political feeling to place maximum pressure on the global stage.
- Madeleine: The unshakable belief characterized by consistently inflated feelings of personal ability, privilege, or infallibility.
- Stockmann: Or as psychologist might call it: a God complex.
- Bond: I've got another word for it.
- Stockmann: Enough of this. Take her away.

- There is no dinner scene, we go directly from the control center to the solar oven:

- Stockmann (to the guards): Tie his hands, tight.
- Bond: If anything happens to her...
- Stockmann (bored): Yes, yes...
- Bond: Her father told me a document would be released. A passport application with your fingerprints. Isn't Franz Oberhauser wanted for murdering his own father?
- Stockmann: You're bluffing.
- Bond: But can you afford to take that chance? Without seeming rude, how is this a reunion?
- Stockmann: Was I really so... Invisible?
- Bond: Your real name might help.
- Stockmann: That died with my father. Hannes Oberhauser. Remember him? Taught you to ski, to climb. How many peaks did you scale in the Aiguilles Rouges? Twenty-two?
- Bond: I wasn't counting.
- Stockmann: Well I was. It was quite a feat. You and he out on those mountains day after day. While his sickly disappointment of a son watched from inside his iron lung.
- Bond: You're right. I forgot about you.
- Stockmann: Well I never forgot about you. [Stockmann punches Bond, he uses his fists and not a Cattle prod in this script] This is a solar furnace. When the sun rises there will be nothing left of you... So your pain in the present is very important to me. [He continues to violently punch Bond with his fists and feet] We desire truth, and find within yourselves only uncertainty. We seek happiness, and find only misery and death. We cannot but desire truth and happiness, and are incapable of finding either. As your friend Q would say; "it's irksome".

[One of the henchmen hands Stockmann a handkerchief to wipe off the blood he received, Bond gets up instead of remaining on the ground].

- Stockmann: I didn't seek you out. It was written in the stars that we meet again. You came after me without even knowing it; when you stumbled onto my money man, Le Chiffre. The pleasure it gave me to watch you fall in love with Vesper, then take her away. Have you noticed how the women around you tend to die? It was so inspired to send Silva after your beloved M. Yet still so... Unsatisfying. Because you didn't know it was me. Well... Now you do.
- Bond: I'm going to kill you Stockmann.
- Stockmann: No you are not.
- Bond: Where is he? Where is Q?
- Stockmann: Your next door neighbor. He touchingly refused to help us track your special blood. The man is barely alive, but I saved him so you might watch each other die > [Actually Q was beaten up and is barely conscious]. I'd like to have stayed but I'm on a rather strict timetable. Besides, there really isn't anything to see: too bright for the naked eye. When the sun rises you will be burnt alive. I would like to say, slow and lingering... But it will be surprisingly fast. You know, it's ironic. You are in my home, and soon I will be in yours, your girl on my arm. I've come a long way. Goodbye, little brother.

Some Desert Station – 89 hours later WHERE IS HE?
WHERE IS Q?
YOUR NEXT DOOR NEIGHBOUR
HE'S TOUCHINGLY REFUSE TO HELP US TRACK YOUR SPECIAL BLOOD
BUT I SAVED HIM...
THE MAN IS BARELY ALIVE
SO YOU MIGHT WATCH EACH OTHER DIE.
I'D LIKE TO STAYED BUT I'M ON A RATHER STRICT TIMETABLE.
BESIDE, THERE IS NOTHING TO SEE... TOO BRIGHT FOR THE NAKED EYE.
Solar Furnance – 4 hours and 27 minutes later
Q?
NNH....
Q!?
Q?
007..
IT'S GETTING BLOODY HOT.
ANY IDEAS?
THE WATCH...
007...
WHAT?
THE WATCH...
I LIED ABOUT
THE WATCH...
007.
http://www.brilcrist.deviantart.com
http://ww.brilcrist.tumblr.com

O!
O!
7!
CLICK
CLICK
CLICK
CLICK!
http://www.brilcrist.deviantart.com
http://ww.brilcrist.tumblr.com

Fan-illustrations by Bril Crist.

- When Bond drives M's limousine, he tells him "If I'm responsible for you being sacked; I apologize", M replies "Don't be so bloody pompous Bond. What's going on?".
- Stockmann isn't called "Ernst" by C.
- When C's file appears on the screens and M climbs onto the stage, the dialogues are somewhat different:

> - M: Ah yes, I think I see... You really can tell everything from properly analyzed data. All the occasions when you and Mister Stockmann have met in secret, for example. Seven times in Switzerland, four in Rome. Others two. And yet it seems that we now know that under his previous identity, he was a wanted murderer. He changed his name. He set up SPECTRE, a vast criminal organization. Then he put you in power. By indiscriminate bombing. Have I missed anything out?

- Stockmann flees Moneypenny by boat (instead of by car).
- On their way out of the old MI6, Bond tells Madeleine they need to get out of here and spots an ambulance parked nearby. They climb into it (they steal it), "best way through a road blocks". "Where are we going?", "Somewhere safe", "It's difficult to stay safe around you". 007 receives a call from Moneypenny who informs him that Stockmann is heading towards Westminister Bridge. Bond drives the ambulance to one of the bridge's two entrances and gets off, telling Madeleine to stay there, before going onto the bridge on foot.
- On the Thames, Stockmann looks at Bond who is on the bridge, then in the distance to a place where a helicopter is waiting for him on a helipad. Stockmann's gaze returns to Bond and he realizes what he has to do, he asks his driver to park near the bridge and joins Bond on the structure. 007 has his pistol and Stockmann has a sub-machine gun.

> - Oberhauser: You and me have had this date from the beginning.
> - Bond: Don't flatter yourself.
> [Bond suddenly pivot and fires at the gun in Stockmann's hand].
> - Oberhauser: No!
> [Stockmann moves to pick up his gun].
> - Bond: Stop.

Stockmann ignores 007 and Bond shoots him but click, his gun jams. Stockmann retrieve his weapon and smiles but Madeleine, driving the ambulance, rushes towards Stockmann! He turns around, shoots at the vehicle and hits a tire; the ambulance flips and slides sideways avoiding Stockmann before crashing into a wall, where it then swings over the edge of the bridge, ready to fall into the water. Bond sees that Madeleine is unconscious inside but can do nothing because Stockmann points his gun at him.

> - Oberhauser: You see, Mister Bond? It was written in the stars.
> - Bond: I do remember you.
> - Oberhauser: What?
> - Bond: I lied. Of course I remember you. Your father would talk about you all the time. When we were out climbing. He wasn't disappointed with you. He hated himself for not being able to do more for you. He blamed himself for your illness.

> He wanted nothing more than for you to be with us. With him. But you killed him. So there's just us now. And her [pointing to Madeleine].

Stockmann looks away towards Madeleine and Bond takes the opportunity to approach him and disarm him; he puts his hands around Oberhauser's throat and strangles him, "But... You're my little brother", "I never had a family" and Bond doesn't relax his grip. Eventually Stockmann dies like Blofeld in the novel You Only Live Twice: strangled by Bond.

007 walks towards the ambulance and takes out Madeleine, "is it safe to be with you now?", "definitely". The ambulance falls into the water, "all in the timing". Under M's gaze, Bond throws his gun into the river...

- Bond leaves with Madeleine in the DB5 but there is no dialogue between them and therefore no "We have all the time in the world".

Reactions

So the first of the two lasts scripts studied is dated October 8. Enthusiasm was in Sony and MGM offices when they received it. For a Sony member: "I really like it. Fun, sexy, some really cool original action and a worthy companion to the last 3 pics"[193]. Another executive describe it as an "amazing job"[194], and for a MGM executive the "first 100 pages are fantastic: it's fun, emotional and the major logic issues have been rectified"[195]. However he is qualifying the next pages as a "let down"[196].

"I agree with Jon", said one Sony executive, "the first 100 or so pages are wonderful. Madeleine is now a real character worthy of Bond. The threads of the plot all link together nicely and the dialogue is crisp and fun"[197].

"This is by far the best draft I've read. I agree with all your notes and the general feeling that the first 100 pages are in great shape", confirm another studio executive[198].

The 3rth act is however deemed more problematic.

"Now to work on villain and the MI6 subplot which is better but still flat, and the 3rd act has good ideas but rough", says a Sony member[199].

> - MGM's Jonathan Glickman[200] : The current connection between Bond and Oberhauser feels a bit superficial and some logic issues: why would a governmental intelligence agency be supported by private industry? Also: We've already witnessed many horrible acts of terrorism, the finale should be about the biggest one yet that allows SPECTRE to profit the most. They should need the combined resources of all the intelligence agencies to pull it off. Surely there is something more pressing than suppressing one document.

Indeed, Stockman, should have another thing to do than just retrieving a passport containing his fingerprint. "Stockmann's agenda in 3rd act to retrieve some remnant from the analogue world that he couldn't master even with his digital prowess is a good notion, but can't be the only thing", confirm a Sony member[201]. "It fells too small", add another people[202].

Stockmann feels like "petulant kid" with that revenge story and "by making this a personal attack against Bond it somehow makes the overall threat and ambition of Spectre feel small"[203]. An another Sony executive is on the same line: "we also don't want to undermine the importance of the Spectre organization with his desire to destroy Bond's life[204].

"We aren't quite there yet [...] it doesn't 100 percent work yet", the concept of Blofeld having a grudge having Bond since his childhood must be believable and better connect the dots of the other movie[205].

> - Sony's Hannah Minghella[206] : The idea of the nanotechnology injected into Bond's blood is very cool. However, it doesn't pay off in a particularly interesting way. It simply seems to help Q locate Bond. It seems like a missed opportunity for Bond to use the technology himself, for example, if he was to tag someone else with his blood could it work as a way to trace someone else… [...] The idea of how invasive but also powerful this is could be mined for more drama and inventiveness and betrayal. Also, when Bond goes to see Q at the end of the movie is he asking to have the nanotech deactivated?

"Bond doesn't seem particularly worried about what has happened to Q. [...] Also, why doesn't M or Moneypenny realize Q has gone missing?"[207]. The question "by the way, why do they kidnap Q?" is reiterate[208].

Some seems thinking of us, the audience: "also why have the Vesper tape, Bond is not gonna look at it ...Are we the only ones who are dying to know whats on it?"[209].

For the train sequence, someone wonders "why does he [Bond] take Madeleine with him?". Does he really believe she'll be safer by his side heading to the unknown rather than waiting in a safehouse? "Isn't she a liability?"[210].

"Love that M, Q, Moneypenny, Tanner and Bond all work together to defeat Stockmann plan and all in the shadow of the broken MI6", note someone[211].

Someone also wonder about the meaning of the ending: why does Bond seem vulnerable to Madeleine? "Why this girl? Why now?". Is Bond resigning for good or taking a well-deserved vacation? Does he feel a sense of accomplishment for completing M's (Judi Dench) latest mission? "It's hard to know what significance any of these final gestures carry"[212].

Few days later, the October 17 script was received. Sony and MGM judged it much better"[213]. The joint notes sent by MGM and Sony to the producers states that "the change from the last draft to the current script is incredible. The story has improved in every single area, this is going to be a great movie"[214].

M and C scenes are more clear[215], but too much exposition scenes is present betwen 007 and White; and all the dialogues with Stockmann: the asylum, the hazelnuts, the murder of his father, "it's too many ideas in one character's scene" says a Sony member[216]. Paradoxically, more info on how Oberhauser became Spectre's leader would be welcomed[217].

The still present idea of Blofeld at London searching after a file mentioned by Bond, still doesn't meet enthusiasm[218], even if we can read "we love Bond's bluff"[219]. If they decide to stick with the idea, the content of the file must something that threatening Blofeld seriously enough[220]. "Also, is there another name for the MacGuffin that sounds more formidable?"[221]. Beside, considering that intelligence is C's domain, why Stockmann doesn't contact him to find the file mentioned by Bond?[222]

If Blofeld's vendetta on Bond is such important for him, why does he leave instead of watching Bond dying in the solar furnace?[223] "Does Stockman leave prematurely because Bond's bluff has spooked him?", they wonders at Sony and MGM[224]. Beside, why Blofeld brings Madeleine along in London otherwise to just kill her?[225]

A long-recurrent problem is still present: "third act needs a bit more set up so audience understands what is at stake and what is supposed to go down before Bond disrupts it"[226].

Part of that would find a better way to indicate to the audience that C is a villain, but also to 007: "How does Bond know Stockman installed C to run Nine Eyes?"[227]. Better explanation about what is Nine Eyes is needed, because in the actual state of the script Sony and MGM felt "concept for Nine Eyes is never properly established"[228].

Ideas are being mades, such as developing a story with Nine Eyes intelligence datas that would include a pact between MI5 and private sector companies, "as Michael suggested there is a lot of story to mine from the real world as seen by the pact between the CIA and Amazon"[229].

Perhaps also revisit Bond's priorities since he chooses to save Madeleine ("in many overblown and familiar sequences: helicopter, elevator shaft, netting") rather than going to prevent the activation of the Nine-Eye[230].

"The audience will expect that Bond should be stopping Nine Eyes from gaining control of the world's intelligence, [...] but the current action has Bond quite removed from stopping Stockman and Spectre"[231].

- MGM/Sony joint notes[232] : This may cause more problems than it's worth, but is there any value in keeping Hinx alive after the train fight so he can be involved in the final Madeleine chase? Hinx certainly seems like he is going to be an iconic baddy and the current henchmen chasing Madeleine are a bit faceless.

- Sony's Elizabeth Cantillon[233] : And the killing of Blofeld with a final shot to the head? I don't know. Seems brutal even for Bond.

We can note that Sony and MGM refer the Stockman character as "Blofeld", but neither October 8 or October 17 scripts contain this name inside, only Stockmann and a little "Ernst"! According to Purvis, it was done for security reasons, to avoid that potential readers leaks the return of Blofeld in the press[234].

December 1, 2014' script: card game

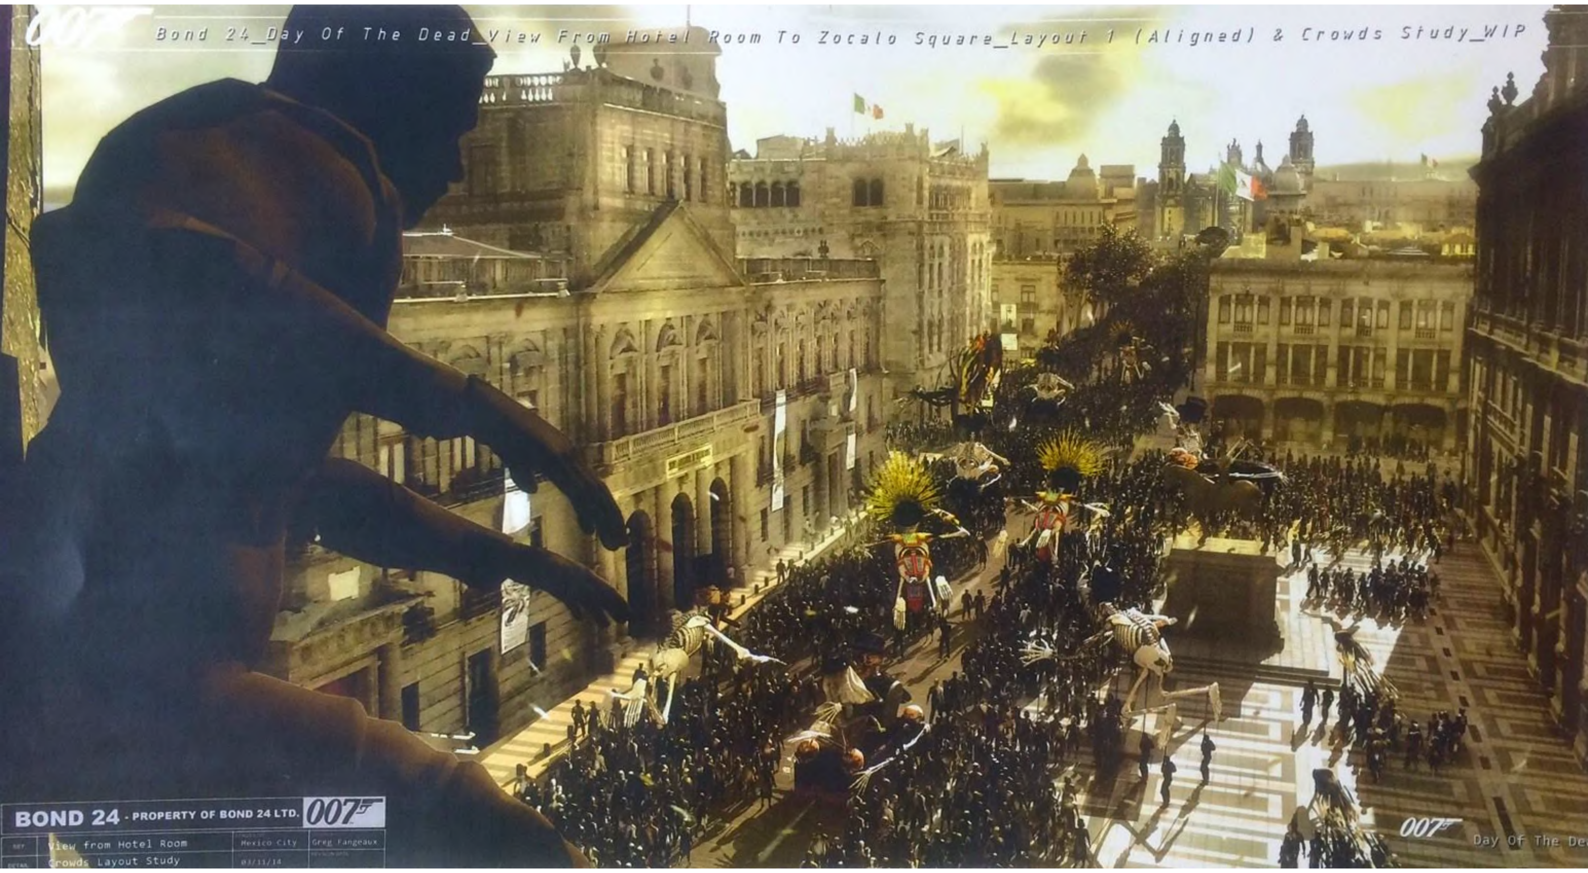
At the end of October, actor Chiwetel Ejiofor passed on the role of Denbigh and David Oyelowo is envisaged as a replacement[235].

There is work being done in November with a new beat sheet (that we are gonna to talk later).

Another script was produced on December 1, 2014 and is still titled (or rather not titled) "Untitled B24" (130 pages). Jez Butterworth is still not mentioned in the credits on the cover page. This script therefore dates from only 3 days before the press conference announcing the film...

Since it is relatively similar to the one of October 17, I will not summarize it entirely, but rather we will try to play the "game of seven differences" (although there are many, many more). The first thing you need to know is that some dialogues have been slightly modified in order to be quote-unquote "improved". The passages which are supposed to take place in the original language with subtitles have been translated into their respective languages. Finally, the third act is again very different…

For the clarity sake, the differences will be presented in list form:



007
Bond 24_Day Of The Dead_View From Hotel Room To Zocalo Square_Layout 1 (Aligned) & Crowds Study_WIP
BOND 24 - PROPERTY OF BOND 24 LTD.
007
View from Hotel Room Crowds Layout Study
Mexico City
03/11/14
Greg Fangeaux
007
Day Of The De

Pre-title:

- It is not specified that Bond's weapon is a Walther PPK, it is only written "gun".
- Marco Sciarra's accomplice, who gives him the bomb, now have a name: Gallo.
- It is no longer a governor that Marco is trying to assassinate, but an ambassador.

- When Marco meets Gallo, he shows him his ring; it's a sort of code to make him understand that he is indeed the man Gallo was waiting for.
- Bond is no longer spotted by fireworks but by the laser from his microphone which is visible in the smoke, when Marco smokes a cigarette.
- When Estrella calls Bond, she tells him that she though he wouldn't be long (he actually told her that at the hotel in this script), and he replies to her that "something came up", before moving on to the other dialogues.

London / Italy:

- A shot of a technician installing a CCTV camera at MI6 HQ is requested.
- There is no longer the dialogue where Mallory says that Bond blames himself for the death of Judi Dench's M, nor the whole one where Bond was "threatening" M.
- Denbigh's first name is no longer Bruce but Max. Furthermore, he is no longer the head of the "Joint Intelligence Comitee" but of the "Combined Intelligence Service".
- There's more rivalry between C and Bond in M's office (before, there wasn't really any). Denbigh notably asks 007 to trust him because they are both fighting the same war.
- When Moneypenny asks Bond why he trusts her, he replies: "instinct".
- Tanner tells Bond that the old MI6 building is to be demolished. The attack in Hamburg was inexplicably relocated to Tunisia in this script.
- Arriving at Q Branch, Bond fiddles with a half-built weapon.
- Franz appears in the photo of Hannes and Bond (it is said he is older than Bond), but his face is not visible due to the photo being partially burned in Skyfall. Franz Oberhauser is also present at Marco's funeral in this version, Bond only sees him from behind.
- Lucia gives neither mask nor password (Diana) to Bond.
- It is stated that the courtyard of Palazzo Cardenza is filled with luxury cars.
- The man with the scar at the entrance to the Palazzo has now a first name: Lorenzo, and the line "asshole" is redistributed to this character rather than Bond.
- No one wears a mask at the SPECTRE meeting.
- There are eight people sitting around the table (instead of twenty) and some are named: Moreau (a Frenchman), Kimura (a Japanese), Vogel (a German), Marshall (an American), Carlos Francisco Guerra (the Spanish which competes with Hinx).
- Unlike the October 17 script where only the leader spoke, it is these peoples who speak while the leader doesn't say a word and drinks wine. They give him an account of the terrorist attacks before talking about the Pale King (of course, there is obviously no longer the bucked filled of eyes):

> - Moreau: Begin, please.
> - Kimura: The attack on the Hamburg bullet train to caused 81 deaths, and 331 casualities. T plus 14 days, there remain 96 different international press corps in the city, broadcasting around the clock, around the globe.
> - Vogel: The explosion in Sartorius Mechatronics chemical plant, 20 kilometers from the center of Tunis was carried at 08:23 hours local time, eigth days ago. Fourteen thousand local inhabitants were hospitalized, and with predicted winds the entire south side of the city was evacuated. Media coverage remains global.

- Moreau: And what of Mexico City?
- Marshall: The attack in Mexico was unfortunately aborted. Before he could complete the mission, our trusted friend Marco Sciarra was killed by an unknown assailant.
- Moreau: Sciarra was a valued asset. He will be missed. The death of Sciarra leaves one of his duties outstanding: The neutralization of The Pale King. Who will complete the job at Mondsee? Who steps forward?

- The Spaniard proposes and exposes his feats of arms, Hinx just stick his thumbs in his eyes and break his neck. Finally, the leader speaks, first in German, asking if they want to know what's funniest. Then he speaks the rest in English (it's the same dialogue as in the October script except he uses "Bond. James Bond" instead of "Mister Bond"). At the end of the tirade, Bond sees the leader's face clearly.
- Bond fights Lorenzo to escape, he sends him over the railing where he falls onto the large table.
- There are no longer the henchmen chasing the DB10 only to be ultimately blocked at the gate of the Palazzo.
- During the chase, the Fiat's airbag is triggered and 007's road is at one point blocked by a truck.
- The two scenes in Tokyo are merged into one.

Austria:

- Mr. White is on an intravenous morphine drip. He says he found thallium in his phone.
- White says the leader wants to kill him because he was disobedient and didn't condone the attacks. (In the October script, it was more because the leader was more of a paranoid type and White knew too much). Furthermore, White no longer tells the story of the legion (the dialogues are closer to the film).
- The "Body and soul spa" was renamed "Hoffler clinic".
- A scene was added where Hinx arrives at Mr. White's cabin and comes across his lifeless body.
- We learn from Bond that Madeleine studied at Oxford and the Sorbonne, that she became a consultant, then she worked for two years at Médecins sans frontières before working at the Hoffler clinic. 007 tells her he thinks that if she is there: it is to hide from something.
- When Q joins 007 at the bar, Bond tells him the attacks are linked and that it is Franz Oberhauser (and not "the leader", because he already knows who he is in this script) who is behind them. Strangely, Q knows that these are the people who "raised" Bond after his parents death.

- Q: Oberhauser... Isn't that the name of the family who raised you after your parents?
- Bond: Exactly.
- Q: So you know him? You remember him?
- Bond: He was older than me. We barely spoke. But he knows me. Check his name. And check for multiple identities
- Q: And what's your plan exactly?
- Bond: Find him. And kill him.

- The end of the action scene with the plane has changed somewhat: Hinx's car crashes into the wreck of the Land Rover that Bond hit with the plane (in October 17 script, Hinx's car tried to run over Bond and crashed because Bond was shooting the driver). The moment where Hinx's car flips and flies through the air over Bond was therefore removed. Hinx's body gets stuck through the windshield and Madeleine shout at Bond (with dialogue from the film). Additionally, this scene is now relocated to Sölden instead of Kitzbühel and there is no longer the scene in the street bar.

In the November 2015 issue of Empire, we learn that the plane chase of the Austrian sequence was shortened for reasons of the times. Originally it was supposed to end with a snowmobile chase through the village which was supposed to lead to a confrontation between Bond and Hinx on a dam! Neil Callow told Dailymail that "water levels were uncertain and an enormous ramp would have had to have been built".

- When Bond and Madeleine go to Q's hotel, he is there and has therefore had not been kidnapped:

- Bond: Q - Doctor Swann. Doctor Swann - Q.
- Q: Enchanted. Bond we need to speak. Alone.
- Bond: She knows...
- Q: But...
- Bond: She knows. What have you found?
- Q: Congratulations 007. You're not paranoid. Le Chiffre. Quantum. Silva. They're all linked. All part of one organization. Run by Oberhauser.

- Bond: This organization. Does it have a name?
- Madeleine: "Spectre". Its name is Spectre.
- Q: How does she know that?
- Madeleine: Because my father worked for them. He was second in command for more than twenty years...
- Q: By the way, I think you should see this.

[Q turns on the TV which shows a terrorist attack in Cape Town].

- Bond: We've got to keep moving. The man, L'American? Did you find anything?
- Q: Nothing. But I'm working on it.
- Madeleine: It's not a man... It's a place.

- Apparently, Bond doesn't inform Moneypenny of his discoveries since the dialogue between M and her ends with "He [007] needs you".

- Moneypenny: It wasn't love. It was loyalty.
- M: Well congratulations. Between you, you've have put the final nail in the coffin of the Double-0 programme. I hope you're proud of your work.

Morocco:

- The scenes where Moneypenny visits the archives of the old MI6 HQ no longer exist.
- In the room at the L'Americain hotel, the dialogue has changed somewhat, Madeleine notably doesn't say that she doesn't drink:

[...]

- Bond: Here's to your father...
- Madeleine: You want me to toast that man? He disappeared, and then didn't speak to me for six years.
- Bond: Well, if you want my opinion, he was scared they would find you. He was protecting you. Your father is the reason you're still alive.
- Madeleine: And I am supposed to thank you for this information?

[...]

- Madeleine: Is this where you kiss me?
- Bond: I hardly know you.

- The script calls for Bond to drink Heineken while Madeleine sleeps, and talk to the mouse.
- In the secret room, 007 comes across a video titled "interview with Vesper Lynd" which he decides not to watch, but doesn't find a photo of the Oberhausers.
- Madeleine empties her magazine to shoot Hinx (but he hides behind some crates).
- The Italian restaurant scene was changed to another scene between M, Q and Moneypenny. Q shows that 007 is in the desert thanks to the implant but M tells him that if he can find out, so can C. He asks Q to erase all traces of the implant and specifies that Bond is left to his own devices. Bond receives a telegram from M on the train that says: "Double-0 section finished - stop - good luck - stop".
- Oberhauser no longer sends an old Bentley to look for Bond and Madeleine but an old Rolls Royce.

- Irma's character was completely removed from the script.
- 007 only finds one photo of himself as a child in his room (the same as the one in his apartment) in addition to the suit.

The rest of the script:

Since the last act has undergone very big changes from the scenes of the discovery of their rooms, we will return in a detailed summary format:

Bond and Madeleine share their opinions on their rooms when the butler asks them to follow him. They cross the lair to a dimly lit observatory in which there is a meteorite. "What does our host's taste in art say about him?", "nothing good". Suddenly a distant voice is heard, "Feel free to touch it" and a man comes out of the shadows; it is Franz Oberhauser (simply Franz Oberhauser, he is no longer called Heinrich Stockmann at all in this script and there is no white cat).

- Oberhauser: The Kartenhoff. The oldest in human possession. Older than the planet we're standing on. The very meteorite which made this crater.
- Bond: You must be really proud. Do you have any other rocks you'd like to show the class?
- Oberhauser: That dry English wit. How I've missed it.

The rest of the dialogue is faithful to the film and the other script, then Oberhauser leads them to his center of control. He asks his two guests to observe the truck (which will explode) on the screen:

- Oberhauser: Observe... A world about to change... [The truck explodes] Humanity in the raw. Reflect on the wilfulness of cause and effect. A ripple over here... Becomes a tidal wave over there. This "abomination" is simply the power to intelligently shape our history. This isn't terrorism. It's information. The most powerful force in the history of the world.
- Madeleine: You think you can shape the world?
- Oberhauser: And why not? What is the difference beween this and an earthquake, Doctor? Answer: nothing. The only reason we exist is cataclysmic events in nature. Earthquakes. Flood. Droughts. Cause... And effect...

The screen images now show MI6 HQ in Whitehall where people are packing up:

- Oberhauser: A world of grey rain shaken by events far away.
- Bond: So... You bought yourself an intelligence agency. All those bombings put C into power.

> - Oberhauser: I have access to everything now. It's above us, in the air... Every individual and their secrets. Anyone. Anywhere. Anytime. The cocaine - addicted president, the captain of industry cutting corners to get his knighthood. Coercion is just a matter of well-applied knowledge.
> - Bond: Or just another word for blackmail.
> - Oberhauser: I prefer the term "biographical leverage". Everyone is open to it, at some level. Man who pick up girls and forget them as soon as the act is done...

The screen images now show the video that M (Judi) left for Bond:

> - Oberhauser: I got my hands on this a little too late. The girl you entertained so ardently in your apartment was one I had some hooks in. Trust me, you don't want to know...

The screen images now show a video of Bond and White at the chalet:

> - Bond: Turn it off.
> - Oberhauser: Doesn't Dr. Swann want a last glimpse of her father? The man she condemned when she cut him out of her life? [To Madeleine] That's when he weakened and became no good to me. You did this to him. [White raises the gun to his head, but Oberhauser stops the image] I can get to anyone. Anyone who has a mother, or a friend, or a lover, or a child. Vesper. Silva. M... Her weakness was you. So. Who's hungry?

So it's time for dinner, it's take place in a dining room. At first everything goes like the script from October 17: Madeleine refuses to eat, Bond insists that she said she wasn't hungry but he suddenly grabs the waiter's head and slams it in the soup. Red dots from laser sights appear on Madeleine's forehead and heart, Bond calms down. Oberhauser replies:

> - Oberhauser: You know what? I'm not that peckish either... Let's play another games. The last was so stimulating.
> - Bond: How about an old game?
> - Oberhauser: What an excellent idea.

A waiter enters and places a tray containing a deck of cards on the table and Oberhauser launches into his monologue: I had loving, doting parents.... The cuckoo... They would play with hazelnuts... Pair of threes... Blablabla (the only sentence missing is "My father said that the excitement would be bad for my heart"). Finally things change:

> - Oberhauser: It feels like yesterday. Isn't that right, cuckoo?
> - Bond: Sorry, I don't remember it. I don't really remember you either much I'm afraid. Sorry...
> - Oberhauser: The game is Hold 'em. If I win, you both die. But if you win, Mister Bond, if you win, I will let Doctor Swann go free. You have my word. As a brother. Agreed?
> - Bond: Agreed.

- Oberhauser: Big blind four. Small blind two. Deal please, doctor. Two cards each, face down.
- Madeleine: I know how to deal Hold 'em...
- Oberhauser: Of course.

Concept art made for the film.

Madeleine distributes. Bond looks at his cards: a 2 of spades and a 5 of hearts. Oberhauser does the same: a king and queen of hearts. He bets his hazelnuts (a waiter had brought around twenty to each during the monologue).

- Oberhauser: Five.
- Bond: Fold.
Oberhauser collects Bond's big blind.
- Oberhauser: A trip down memory lane, no? For me it feels like yesterday.
[Madeleine deals again, Bond has a 7 and a 5].
- Bond: Fold.
- Oberhauser: Come now Mister Bond. You're not afraid to play me, are you?
[Madeleine deals, Bond has a 2 and a 3].
- Oberhauser: Five.
- Bond: Call.
[Madeleine turns over the cards: queen of spades, 4 and 7 of hearts. Oberhauser has a pair of kings].
- Oberhauser: Five.
- Bond: Call.
[Oberhauser turns over a fourth community card, it's a king].
- Oberhauser: Ten...
- Bond: Call.
[Madeleine turns over another card, another king].

- Oberhauser: Check.
- Bond: You know... I think I do remember you. It's coming back. Quiet boy. Always in his room. Cried a lot at night. That's about all I recall. Except that you were adopted too. You told me you were his real son, his only son. But your parents were Romanian diplomats. The government caught them spying for the Germans. They tortured them to death. They made you watch. You were smuggled out, and taken in by an Austrian family who cared for you like you were their own. Your name is not Oberhauser. Your name, your real name... Is Ernest Serban. Who's the cuckoo now?
[Bond pushes all his nuts onto the table].
- Bond: All in.
- Oberhauser: Very clever, Mister Bond. Very clever, but very foolish.
- Bond: Call or Fold, Oberhauser?
- Oberhauser: You're bluffing.
- Bond: Then calls. Call or Fold.
- Oberhauser: Call.
[Oberhauser turns over his cards].
- Oberhauser: Four kings.
[Bond smiles, grimly]
- Bond: You got me...
[Bond throws his cards and Oberhauser smiles].
- Oberhauser: The game is over.
- Bond (to Madeleine): I'm sorry...
- Madeleine: James...
- Bond: I'm sorry. I never should have brought you. It was a mistake.
- Madeleine: I'm scared James.
- Bond: You have my congratulations, Oberhauser.
- Oberhauser (to a guard): Kill the girl.
[007 takes off his watch].
- Bond: Wait. I've got something for you. Here.
[007 throws the watch on the table which slides to under Oberhauser's chin].
- Bond: To heal old wounds.

BOOM! The watch explodes, Oberhauser is thrown against a wall, blood flows from his face. Bond gets up, overpowers a guard and takes his gun. He kills three guards and walks through the smoke towards where Oberhauser was standing but he is no longer there. 007 kills another guard, grabs Madeleine and leaves. They are outside, other guards arrive and shoot at them, Bond and the girl enter the operation center. 007 takes a hard drive and ends up coming out with Madeleine. Once outside he shoots into a fuel tank, everything starts to catch fire. Bond and Madeleine head towards a helipad, get into the helicopter and fly away while the whole complex explodes, "It never looked more beautiful" comments Madeleine...

M and Q are in a military barracks where Bond would be:

- M: How did you find him?
- Q: I used the nanotechnology in his blood. Officially I should have deleted his data, but I thought...
- M: Don't worry Q. It's hardly the first time you've flagrantly broken the law.

- Q: He left Africa sixteen hours ago. Refueled in Gibraltar. We tracked him up through Europe all the way here to theses barracks...
- M: Who's the girl?
- Q: Doctor Madeleine Swann. White's daughter.
- M: Thanks you Q. I'll take it from here.

M enters a room in the barracks:

- M: Doctor Swann. Gareth Mallory.
- Madeleine: Pleased to meet you.
- M: Likewise. So, Bond. How's unemployment been treating you?
- Bond: Stimulating.
- M: Been keeping busy I take it? [Bond throws the hard drive on the table] What's that?
- Bond: Everything. Le Chiffre was the money. Silva was the I.T.
- Madeleine: My father was the Chief of operations.
- Bond: Guess who's the Head of intelligence.
- M: That little bastard. I knew I couldn't trust him. What about Oberhauser?
- Madeleine: Oberhauser. His real name is Oberhauser. He's dead.
- Bond: We don't know that. And if he's still alive, this isn't over.
- M: So, are you going to tell me why we're meeting at my old regimental barracks?
- Bond: I'm going to pay C a visit; I need back up.
- M: Are you suggesting what I think you're suggesting?
- Bond: Yes.
- M: That, Bond, is called a military coup...
- Bond: It's Oberhauser I'm after. If he's alive, then he's coming for me. And he's not coming alone.

[...]
- M: I trust you. I'll contact the regiment immediately.
- Bond: Thank you, sir. Don't expect me to wait for them.
- M: I wasn't about to.
- Bond: How was it, sir? Retirement?
- M: I played golf. It was awful.

Bond and Madeleine go outside:

- Madeleine: Haven't you done enough? Let your friends take over.
- Bond: I can't. The job isn't finished.
- Madeleine: I won't watch any more people die, James. I walked away from that life. I can't come back. Remember what I said: your life is a choice.
- Bond: I know. This my choice. I'm sorry.

[Madeleine gives him one "last" kiss and he leaves].

Further on, soldiers gather around M who says to them: "Well men, glad you could make it. It's been a while...". Moneypenny joins them, "Weren't forgetting me, were you?".

At the CNS building, C goes to his office but doesn't notice that 007 is there before the latter speaks:

- Bond: I don't think people really like being spied on. But clearly sometimes it's for the best.
- C: What the hell are you doing here?
- Bond: I thought I'd drop by to congratulate you. On all your achievements. It's a lovely office. You must be very proud.
- C: Perhaps you didn't get the e-mail. the Double-Os are history. You're trespassing. Now get out of my office.
- Bond: I'd love to. But I'm afraid I don't work for you anymore.
- C: Then why are you here?
- Bond: Bringing you in. Or finishing you off. Your choice.
- C: On what charge, exactly?
- Bond: Bad taste in friends? I know everything.
- C: Everything? Like the date footprint we've been creating? Let me tell you what's going to happen... Tomorrow, the Foreign Secretary is going to receive a file, which according to our data records, links one man to all the recent terror attacks. A certain MI6 agent... A few days later I'll get a commendation for shooting our traitor, and then they'll arrest your moronic boss. [Denbigh suddenly pulls a gun out of a drawer] That's M stands for: Moron.
[C pulls the trigger but the gun is empty].
- Bond: And now we know what C stands for. [Bond holds the clip] Some people never learn...
- C: You think by destroying one of his bases you've achieved anything? He has them all over the world. The man's a genius. He's in control. Face it, Bond, you don't matter any more.
- Bond: I know. But something has to.

Bang! Bond kills C in cold blood! Suddenly the entire building is plunged into darkness and when the power comes back on, all the surveillance screens now showing Oberhauser clapping. He is "badly disfigured":

007
Bond 24_Int.Main Atrium_CNS Building_Redress Proposal 2_ Overall Layout_Work In Progress 26-01-15
CNS
BOND 24
CNS Building
Main Atrium Redress
007
SPECTRE

007
Bond 24_Int.Main Atrium_CNS Building_Redress Proposal 2_ Overall Layout_Work In Progress 26-01-15
BOND 24
CNS Building
Main Atrium Redress
007
SPECTRE

- Oberhauser: Thank you Mister Bond. You saved me the trouble. Tell me, are you sure you've not been working for me all along? Now won't you join me for one last hand? Come alone. It'll be just you and me. Step outside. I'm sure you can figure out where to find me...

The screens turn off and 007 runs to reach the exit of the CNS building. Once outside, he sees a single light in the old MI6 building, the one of M's office. Bond is heading towards the entrance of this building, signs saying that the site is under demolition and not to use radio or telephone signals adorn the place. Bond presses a button on his phone twice.

Meanwhile, an APC (troop carrier vehicle) drives through the streets of London. On board is Moneypenny, M and the soldiers. M says the target is dead but Moneypenny wonders what 007 is doing at the old MI6...

Bond enters, gun in hand, and sees his name inscribed on the memorial wall. He continues to progress through the ruined building, when Oberhauser's distant voice is heard: "Welcome home, Mister Bond... Does it feel good to be back? This is what's left of your world!". 007 passes various cables and explosive charges, "That's it, warmer... You're getting warmer...". 007 passes the basement where there are two semi-rigid boats and arrives in a shooting gallery where photos of his face have been pasted on targets. He is surprised and shoots three times in total at the moving targets. "Still the dead shot. You were always so pathetically proud of your marksmanship. Listen to that. The echo of a gunshot. That's all you'll leave behind, Mister Bond. That's your legacy...".

Bond suddenly sees Oberhauser in front of him with his back to him in the old Q-lab: he doesn't hesitate and shoots in his direction, but it turns out that there is armored glass between the two men. Oberhauser is disfigured, a large burn on one side of his face, from forehead to mouth, the eye is no longer there.

- Oberhauser: Ah, there you are. Forgotten you way around this place? As I promised, one last game... The building is rigged to detonate in three minutes. I can get out of it in time. Can you?
- Bond: Where's the challenge in that?
- Oberhauser: Because the deck is stacked in my favour. The game is called "Find the lady"... We found her at Charles de Gaulle changing planes. She was off to start a new life. You forget Mister Bond, I have eyes everywhere. Now... You can either die trying to save the woman you love, or save yourself and have it gnawing at you to the end of your days... "Could I have saved her?".
- Bond: How do I know you're not bluffing.
- Oberhauser: You don't.
- Bond: Where is she?
- Oberhauser: You might start by looking where your old boss used to dream up her nightmares.. Of course, you failed with all the others. Why should this one be any different? Ready... Set... [Presses a button] Go. Three minutes!

James Bond therefore desperately searches for Madeleine and shout her name in the bowels of the former MI6 while Oberhauser heads towards a helicopter to flee and watch the fireworks. Of course, 007 finds Madeleine in M's office, they jump into the void where they fall into a safety net, run and manage to take refuge in the basement before the whole building explodes!

From his helicopter, Oberhauser watches this tsunami of dust and debris with a fascination. Suddenly, Bond and Madeleine emerge from the dust in a RIB (rigid inflatable boat) out of Oberhauser's sight and pursue the helicopter.

007 fires and manages to hit the engine of the aircraft, it is now losing altitude. The helicopter crashes onto Westminster Bridge. Oberhauser gets out, kills the pilot who asks for help and shoots down two police officers who arrived on the scene. At the other end of the bridge, the APC arrives as do military helicopters; Oberhauser shoots blindly.

Bond has reached the bridge, he kneels on the ground, takes aim, and fires three times. The bullets hit Oberhauser in the chest, hip and neck; he drops his weapon and falls. As M orders his men not to shoot, Bond approaches his nemesis.

> - Oberhauser: It seems you have the advantage, cuckoo. Is it possible that I underestimated you? Surely not. Tell me... Don't you think, that after so long, we could perhaps...

Suddenly Oberhauser pulls out a Derringer and shoots Bond in the shoulder (like Francisco Scaramanga in the novel The Man with the Golden Gun). 007 manages to disarm his enemy with one movement and now aims his PPK at his head.

> - Oberhauser: What are you waiting for? Kill me. But my death will never heal all the suffering I've caused you. My work is done! I win. I cut out your heart, cuckoo... I cut out your heart... Now KILL ME!
> - Bond: Under the Special Measure Act 2001, I am detaining you on behalf of Her Majesty's Government.
> - Oberhauser: KILL ME you coward! KILL ME!!
> - Bond: Where's the fun in that?

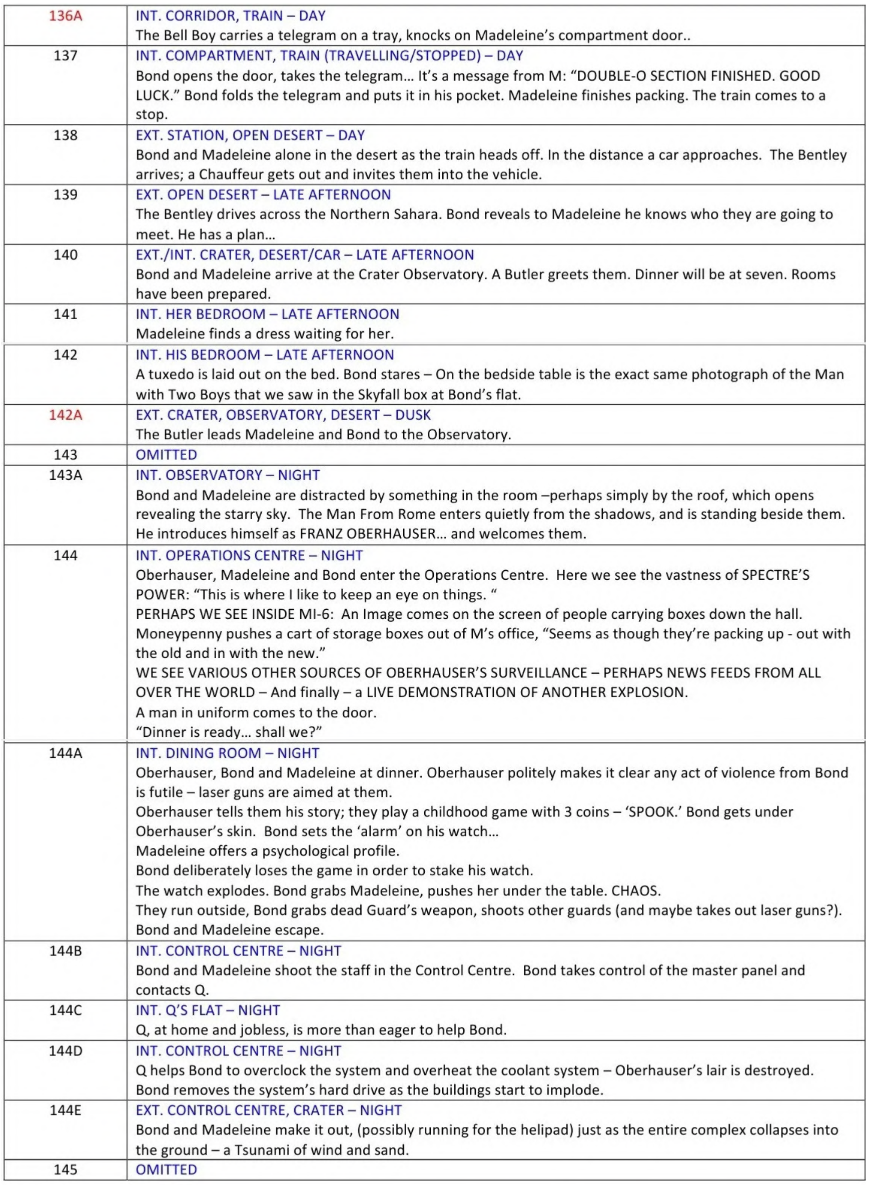
Bond knock out Oberhauser with the butt of his gun, makes a sign to M which means "he's yours", and walks away before throwing his PPK into the river and go to Madeleine. She asks him why he threw away his gun, he replies "I don't need it anymore" and leaves with her.

A week later, Bond breaks into Q's workshop but comes across the latter... James Bond Theme... Q throws keys at him... Bond is in the driver's seat of the DB5 and turns to Madeleine who is in the passenger seat... We have all the time in the world...

November 9, 2014' beat sheet



136A	INT. CORRIDOR, TRAIN – DAY The Bell Boy carries a telegram on a tray, knocks on Madeleine's compartment door..
137	INT. COMPARTMENT, TRAIN (TRAVELLING/STOPPED) – DAY Bond opens the door, takes the telegram… It's a message from M: "DOUBLE-O SECTION FINISHED. GOOD LUCK." Bond folds the telegram and puts it in his pocket. Madeleine finishes packing. The train comes to a stop.
138	EXT. STATION, OPEN DESERT – DAY Bond and Madeleine alone in the desert as the train heads off. In the distance a car approaches. The Bentley arrives; a Chauffeur gets out and invites them into the vehicle.
139	EXT. OPEN DESERT – LATE AFTERNOON The Bentley drives across the Northern Sahara. Bond reveals to Madeleine he knows who they are going to meet. He has a plan…
140	EXT./INT. CRATER, DESERT/CAR – LATE AFTERNOON Bond and Madeleine arrive at the Crater Observatory. A Butler greets them. Dinner will be at seven. Rooms have been prepared.
141	INT. HER BEDROOM – LATE AFTERNOON Madeleine finds a dress waiting for her.
142	INT. HIS BEDROOM – LATE AFTERNOON A tuxedo is laid out on the bed. Bond stares – On the bedside table is the exact same photograph of the Man with Two Boys that we saw in the Skyfall box at Bond's flat.
142A	EXT. CRATER, OBSERVATORY, DESERT – DUSK The Butler leads Madeleine and Bond to the Observatory.
143	OMITTED
143A	INT. OBSERVATORY – NIGHT Bond and Madeleine are distracted by something in the room –perhaps simply by the roof, which opens revealing the starry sky. The Man From Rome enters quietly from the shadows, and is standing beside them. He introduces himself as FRANZ OBERHAUSER… and welcomes them.
144	INT. OPERATIONS CENTRE – NIGHT Oberhauser, Madeleine and Bond enter the Operations Centre. Here we see the vastness of SPECTRE'S POWER: "This is where I like to keep an eye on things. " PERHAPS WE SEE INSIDE MI-6: An Image comes on the screen of people carrying boxes down the hall. Moneypenny pushes a cart of storage boxes out of M's office, "Seems as though they're packing up - out with the old and in with the new." WE SEE VARIOUS OTHER SOURCES OF OBERHAUSER'S SURVEILLANCE – PERHAPS NEWS FEEDS FROM ALL OVER THE WORLD – And finally – a LIVE DEMONSTRATION OF ANOTHER EXPLOSION. A man in uniform comes to the door. "Dinner is ready… shall we?"
144A	INT. DINING ROOM – NIGHT Oberhauser, Bond and Madeleine at dinner. Oberhauser politely makes it clear any act of violence from Bond is futile – laser guns are aimed at them. Oberhauser tells them his story; they play a childhood game with 3 coins – 'SPOOK.' Bond gets under Oberhauser's skin. Bond sets the 'alarm' on his watch… Madeleine offers a psychological profile. Bond deliberately loses the game in order to stake his watch. The watch explodes. Bond grabs Madeleine, pushes her under the table. CHAOS. They run outside, Bond grabs dead Guard's weapon, shoots other guards (and maybe takes out laser guns?). Bond and Madeleine escape.
144B	INT. CONTROL CENTRE – NIGHT Bond and Madeleine shoot the staff in the Control Centre. Bond takes control of the master panel and contacts Q.
144C	INT. Q'S FLAT – NIGHT Q, at home and jobless, is more than eager to help Bond.
144D	INT. CONTROL CENTRE – NIGHT Q helps Bond to overclock the system and overheat the coolant system – Oberhauser's lair is destroyed. Bond removes the system's hard drive as the buildings start to implode.
144E	EXT. CONTROL CENTRE, CRATER – NIGHT Bond and Madeleine make it out, (possibly running for the helipad) just as the entire complex collapses into the ground – a Tsunami of wind and sand.
145	OMITTED

Before that December script, a beat sheet was notably wrote. Dated November 9, 2014, this is a nine page detailed plot in tabular form. A note saying "Jez [Butterworth] is revising the first two acts and Rob and Neal are rewriting the 3rd act" accompanying it[236].

- Neal Purvis[237] : The cuckoo expression was Jez. He did write a backstory more to do with that. He also concentrated on the crater material and the third act for a while. It was dialogue that he was concerning himself with.

One Sony executive was happy with this beat sheet, felling the story "better", "more comprehensible", and "more Bond"[238].

This table entitled "Potential new structure - Untitled B24" have some interesting things:

- Estrella asked Bond if he was going to come back after he was at the controls of the helicopter.
- The confrontation between M and Moneypenny over the transcription occurs as Bond enters the clinic. She concludes by saying that 007 is their last hope.
- It is said that 007 purposely lost at a game (which was played with coins called "spook") in order to gamble his watch. And during his escape, Bond killed the staff of the operations center and contacted Q (who is at home, unemployed) to find out how to destroy the complex.
- When Madeleine leaves Bond, the dialogue is: "I'm not going to watch you die. When you decide James, that you want to leave this life, I'll be here for you, but I won't wait forever".
- Oberhauser doesn't just cut the power to the CNS, all of London is plunged into darkness and the power doesn't come back until after the finale on the Westminister Bridge.
- Bond travels from CNS to old MI6 by car.
- Bond phones M to tell him that Oberhauser is at the old MI6. M warns him that the building is doomed to demolition.

- Bond kills several henchmen before arriving in front of Oberhauser who is behind armored glass.
- It is stated that he fires at Oberhauser's helicopter from the boat either with a rifle or with a flare (instead of his pistol).
- Finally, when Bond arrives on the bridge, Oberhauser is already on the ground from the helicopter crash and pulls a gun out of his boot. Bond removes the gun from his hand and reveals that Franz Oberhauser is an orphan, real name "ESB" (most likely Ernst Stavro Blofeld), before sparing him...

> - MGM's Jonathan Glickman[239] : We are currently facing a budget that is far beyond what we anticipated and are under immense pressure to reduce the number to $250M net of rebates and incentives. This is not about "nickel and diming" the production. As of now, our shooting period is $50M higher than Skyfall and the current gross budget sits in the mid $300Ms, making this one of the most expensive films ever made.

The studios behind Spectre not only offer changes for quote-unquote "improve" the story, but also to reduce the budget. Thus at the beginning of November, several ideas were also proposed to reduce the film cost, which was too deemed high. Among the suggested changes were the idea of filming the Roman villa scene in England[240], omitting Bond arriving at the clinic by plane[241], reducing the number of train carriages (and thus the scope of the fight)[242], forgetting the rain in the final scenes ("this will allow us to save on VFX, SPFX, and shooting time") and show modern aspects of Mexico (in order to perceive subsidies from the country)[243] as well as having the terrorist Sciarra not portrayed by a Mexican actor[244]. It is also specified that the partnership with Heineken will help reduce the budget.

Third act was reworked after the December script and in the "Blofeld" name appears in the movie whereas it was not the case in some of the script we saw.

The long poker scene was replaced by a torture scene, inspired by the James Bond novel Colonel Sun by Kingsley Amis. This one contains a chapter with a very salacious torture scene. In this scene from the novel, Colonel Sun Liang-tan has 007 tied up in an armchair in a cellar and pushes (with his hands and not with a machine) meat-skewers into Bond's skull, his ears and his nose, all with blood-curdling sadistic dialogues... Among these dialogues from the novel, we can see that some inspired those from the film:

> - Colonel Sun, chapter 19: A man lives inside his head. That's where the seat of his soul is. And this is true objectively as well as subjectively. I was present once - I wasn't directly concerned - when an American prisoner in Korea was deprived of his eyes. And the most astonishing thing happened. He wasn't there any more. He'd gone, though he was still alive. There was nobody inside his skull. Most odd, I promise you.

> So, James, I am going to penetrate to where you are, to the inside of your head. We'll make our first approach via the ear. [...] I take this skewer and I insert it into your skull. [...] You won't feel anything at first. In fact, in the true sense you won't feel anything at all. The tympanic membrane, which I'm about to stimulate, has no touch receptors, only pain ones. So the first you'll know will be when... Well, I leave it to you to put a name to your experience. If you can.

Sources/references from chapter 24: Spectre

1 "Hack at Sony Pictures shuts computer system" by Ryan Faughnder, Paresh Dave and Saba Hamedy on The Los Angeles Times (November 24, 2014): https://www.latimes.com/entertainment/envelope/cotown/la-fi-sony-hack-20141125-story.html

2 "Hack at Sony Pictures shuts computer system" by Ryan Faughnder, Paresh Dave and Saba Hamedy on The Los Angeles Times (November 24, 2014): https://www.latimes.com/entertainment/envelope/cotown/la-fi-sony-hack-20141125-story.html
"Sony Hackers Have Over 100 Terabytes Of Documents. Only Released 200 Gigabytes So Far" by James Cook on Business Insider (December 16, 2014): https://www.businessinsider.com/the-sony-hackers-still-have-a-massive-amount-of-data-that-hasnt-been-leaked-yet-2014-12

3 "Sony's New Movies Leak Online Following Hack Attack" by Andrew Wallenstein and Brent Lang on Variety (November 29, 2014): https://variety.com/2014/digital/news/new-sony-films-pirated-in-wake-of-hack-attack-1201367036/

4 "Update on Sony Investigation" on the FBI website (December 19, 2014): https://www.fbi.gov/news/pressrel/press-releases/update-on-sony-investigation

5 "North Korea threatens war on US over Kim Jong-un movie" on BBC (June 26, 2014): https://www.bbc.com/news/world-asia-28014069

6 WikiLeaks (April 16, 2015): https://wikileaks.org/sony/press/

7 "The James Bond Archives" by Paul Duncan (2021).

8 "Being Bond: A Daniel Craig Retrospective" by Mark Salisbury (2022).

9 For John Logan biography, see for the sources:
"Full of drama" by Elizabeth Canning Blackwell on Northwestern (2012): https://www.northwestern.edu/magazine/spring2012/feature/full-of-drama.html
"Being Bond: A Daniel Craig Retrospective" by Mark Salisbury (2022).
John Logan's Wikipedia page.

10 "Being Bond: A Daniel Craig Retrospective" by Mark Salisbury (2022).

11 "The James Bond Archives" by Paul Duncan (2021).

12 "Being Bond: A Daniel Craig Retrospective" by Mark Salisbury (2022).

13 Spectre's Production notes / press kit.

14 "Being Bond: A Daniel Craig Retrospective" by Mark Salisbury (2022).

15 "Being Bond: A Daniel Craig Retrospective" by Mark Salisbury (2022).

16 WikiLeaks, the Sony Files/Archives, mail from October 29, 2013: https://wikileaks.org/sony/emails/emailid/153640

17 WikiLeaks, the Sony Files/Archives, mail from October 28, 2013: https://wikileaks.org/sony/emails/emailid/45027

18 WikiLeaks, the Sony Files/Archives, mail from October 28, 2013: https://wikileaks.org/sony/emails/emailid/45027

19 WikiLeaks, the Sony Files/Archives, mail from October 28, 2013: https://wikileaks.org/sony/emails/emailid/45027

20 WikiLeaks, the Sony Files/Archives, mail from October 28, 2013: https://wikileaks.org/sony/emails/emailid/45027

21 WikiLeaks, the Sony Files/Archives, mail from October 28, 2013: https://wikileaks.org/sony/emails/emailid/45027

22 WikiLeaks, the Sony Files/Archives, mail from October 28, 2013: https://wikileaks.org/sony/emails/emailid/45027

23 WikiLeaks, the Sony Files/Archives, mail from October 28, 2013: https://wikileaks.org/sony/emails/emailid/45027

24 WikiLeaks, the Sony Files/Archives, mail from October 28, 2013: https://wikileaks.org/sony/emails/emailid/45027

25 WikiLeaks, the Sony Files/Archives, mail from October 28, 2013: https://wikileaks.org/sony/emails/emailid/45027

26 WikiLeaks, the Sony Files/Archives, mail from October 28, 2013: https://wikileaks.org/sony/emails/emailid/45027

27 WikiLeaks, the Sony Files/Archives, mail from October 28, 2013: https://wikileaks.org/sony/emails/emailid/45027

28 WikiLeaks, the Sony Files/Archives, mail from October 28, 2013: https://wikileaks.org/sony/emails/emailid/45027

29 WikiLeaks, the Sony Files/Archives, mail from October 28, 2013: https://wikileaks.org/sony/emails/emailid/45027

30 WikiLeaks, the Sony Files/Archives, mail from October 28, 2013: https://wikileaks.org/sony/emails/emailid/45027

31 WikiLeaks, the Sony Files/Archives, mail from October 28, 2013: https://wikileaks.org/sony/emails/emailid/45027

32 WikiLeaks, the Sony Files/Archives, mail from October 28, 2013: https://wikileaks.org/sony/emails/emailid/45027

33 WikiLeaks, the Sony Files/Archives, mail from October 28, 2013: https://wikileaks.org/sony/emails/emailid/45027

34 WikiLeaks, the Sony Files/Archives, mail from October 28, 2013: https://wikileaks.org/sony/emails/emailid/45027

35 WikiLeaks, the Sony Files/Archives, mail from October 28, 2013: https://wikileaks.org/sony/emails/emailid/45027

36 WikiLeaks, the Sony Files/Archives, mail from October 28, 2013: https://wikileaks.org/sony/emails/emailid/45027

37 WikiLeaks, the Sony Files/Archives, mail from October 28, 2013: https://wikileaks.org/sony/emails/emailid/45027

38 WikiLeaks, the Sony Files/Archives, mail from October 28, 2013: https://wikileaks.org/sony/emails/emailid/45027

39 WikiLeaks, the Sony Files/Archives, mail from October 28, 2013: https://wikileaks.org/sony/emails/emailid/45027

40 WikiLeaks, the Sony Files/Archives, mail from October 28, 2013: https://wikileaks.org/sony/emails/emailid/45027

41 "Being Bond: A Daniel Craig Retrospective" by Mark Salisbury (2022).

42 WikiLeaks, the Sony Files/Archives, mail from October 28, 2013: https://wikileaks.org/sony/emails/emailid/45027

43 WikiLeaks, the Sony Files/Archives, mail from October 28, 2013: https://wikileaks.org/sony/emails/emailid/45027

44 WikiLeaks, the Sony Files/Archives, mail from October 28, 2013: https://wikileaks.org/sony/emails/emailid/45027

45 WikiLeaks, the Sony Files/Archives, mail from October 28, 2013: https://wikileaks.org/sony/emails/emailid/45027

46 WikiLeaks, the Sony Files/Archives, mail from October 28, 2013: https://wikileaks.org/sony/emails/emailid/45027

47 WikiLeaks, the Sony Files/Archives, mail from October 28, 2013: https://wikileaks.org/sony/emails/emailid/45027

48 WikiLeaks, the Sony Files/Archives, mail from October 28, 2013: https://wikileaks.org/sony/emails/emailid/45027
49 WikiLeaks, the Sony Files/Archives, mail from October 28, 2013: https://wikileaks.org/sony/emails/emailid/45027
50 WikiLeaks, the Sony Files/Archives, mail from October 28, 2013: https://wikileaks.org/sony/emails/emailid/45027
51 "Thunderball rights go to Danjaq/MGM after 50 year dispute" by David Leigh on The James Bond Dossier (November 16, 2013): https://www.thejamesbonddossier.com/news/thunderball-rights-go-to-danjaqmgm-after-50-year-dispute.htm
52 "Being Bond: A Daniel Craig Retrospective" by Mark Salisbury (2022).
53 "Being Bond: A Daniel Craig Retrospective" by Mark Salisbury (2022).
54 "Sam Mendes à propos du tournage de "007 Spectre" : "James Bond, c'est la vague ultime des surfeurs"" by Aurélien Ferenczi in Télérama (November 11, 2015): https://www.telerama.fr/cinema/007-spectre-sam-mendes-nous-raconte-le-tournage-james-bond-c-est-la-vague-ultime-des-surfeurs,133594.php (translated from french)
55 WikiLeaks, the Sony Files/Archives, mail from March 6, 2014: https://wikileaks.org/sony/emails/emailid/79058
56 WikiLeaks, the Sony Files/Archives, mail from March 10, 2014: https://wikileaks.org/sony/emails/emailid/61847
WikiLeaks, the Sony Files/Archives, mail from March 10, 2014: https://wikileaks.org/sony/emails/emailid/40034
57 WikiLeaks, the Sony Files/Archives, mail from March 10, 2014: https://wikileaks.org/sony/emails/emailid/72638
58 WikiLeaks, the Sony Files/Archives, mail from March 10, 2014: https://wikileaks.org/sony/emails/emailid/56934
59 WikiLeaks, the Sony Files/Archives, mail from March 10, 2014: https://wikileaks.org/sony/emails/emailid/32966
WikiLeaks, the Sony Files/Archives, mail from March 10, 2014: https://wikileaks.org/sony/emails/emailid/72638
60 WikiLeaks, the Sony Files/Archives, mail from March 10, 2014: https://wikileaks.org/sony/emails/emailid/32966
61 WikiLeaks, the Sony Files/Archives, mail from March 10, 2014: https://wikileaks.org/sony/emails/emailid/32966
62 WikiLeaks, the Sony Files/Archives, mail from March 10, 2014: https://wikileaks.org/sony/emails/emailid/32966
63 WikiLeaks, the Sony Files/Archives, mail from May 12, 2014: https://wikileaks.org/sony/emails/emailid/64219
64 WikiLeaks, the Sony Files/Archives, mail from March 10, 2014: https://wikileaks.org/sony/emails/emailid/32966
65 WikiLeaks, the Sony Files/Archives, mail from March 10, 2014: https://wikileaks.org/sony/emails/emailid/32966
66 WikiLeaks, the Sony Files/Archives, mail from March 10, 2014: https://wikileaks.org/sony/emails/emailid/32966
67 WikiLeaks, the Sony Files/Archives, mail from March 10, 2014: https://wikileaks.org/sony/emails/emailid/32966
68 WikiLeaks, the Sony Files/Archives, mail from March 10, 2014: https://wikileaks.org/sony/emails/emailid/32966
69 WikiLeaks, the Sony Files/Archives, mail from March 10, 2014: https://wikileaks.org/sony/emails/emailid/72638
70 WikiLeaks, the Sony Files/Archives, mail from March 10, 2014: https://wikileaks.org/sony/emails/emailid/72638
71 WikiLeaks, the Sony Files/Archives, mail from March 10, 2014: https://wikileaks.org/sony/emails/emailid/32966
72 WikiLeaks, the Sony Files/Archives, mail from March 10, 2014: https://wikileaks.org/sony/emails/emailid/32966
73 WikiLeaks, the Sony Files/Archives, mail from March 10, 2014: https://wikileaks.org/sony/emails/emailid/32966
74 "[Bond 24] Les scandinaves sont de retours !" on Commander James Bond France (May 15, 2014): https://www.commander007.net/2014/bond-24-les-scandinaves-sont-de-retours/
75 WikiLeaks, the Sony Files/Archives, mail from March 10, 2014: https://wikileaks.org/sony/emails/emailid/32966
76 WikiLeaks, the Sony Files/Archives, mail from March 10, 2014: https://wikileaks.org/sony/emails/emailid/40034
77 WikiLeaks, the Sony Files/Archives, mail from March 10, 2014: https://wikileaks.org/sony/emails/emailid/32966
78 WikiLeaks, the Sony Files/Archives, mail from March 10, 2014: https://wikileaks.org/sony/emails/emailid/32966
79 WikiLeaks, the Sony Files/Archives, mail from March 10, 2014: https://wikileaks.org/sony/emails/emailid/32966
80 WikiLeaks, the Sony Files/Archives, mail from March 10, 2014: https://wikileaks.org/sony/emails/emailid/32966
81 WikiLeaks, the Sony Files/Archives, mail from March 10, 2014: https://wikileaks.org/sony/emails/emailid/56934
82 WikiLeaks, the Sony Files/Archives, mail from March 10, 2014: https://wikileaks.org/sony/emails/emailid/32966
83 WikiLeaks, the Sony Files/Archives, mail from March 10, 2014: https://wikileaks.org/sony/emails/emailid/32966
84 WikiLeaks, the Sony Files/Archives, mail from March 10, 2014: https://wikileaks.org/sony/emails/emailid/32966
85 WikiLeaks, the Sony Files/Archives, mail from March 10, 2014: https://wikileaks.org/sony/emails/emailid/72638
86 WikiLeaks, the Sony Files/Archives, mail from March 10, 2014: https://wikileaks.org/sony/emails/emailid/72638
87 WikiLeaks, the Sony Files/Archives, mail from March 10, 2014: https://wikileaks.org/sony/emails/emailid/32966
WikiLeaks, the Sony Files/Archives, mail from March 10, 2014: https://wikileaks.org/sony/emails/emailid/72638
88 WikiLeaks, the Sony Files/Archives, mail from March 10, 2014: https://wikileaks.org/sony/emails/emailid/72638
89 WikiLeaks, the Sony Files/Archives, mail from March 10, 2014: https://wikileaks.org/sony/emails/emailid/40034
90 WikiLeaks, the Sony Files/Archives, mail from March 10, 2014: https://wikileaks.org/sony/emails/emailid/32966
91 WikiLeaks, the Sony Files/Archives, mail from March 10, 2014: https://wikileaks.org/sony/emails/emailid/72638
92 WikiLeaks, the Sony Files/Archives, mail from March 10, 2014: https://wikileaks.org/sony/emails/emailid/56934
93 WikiLeaks, the Sony Files/Archives, mail from March 10, 2014: https://wikileaks.org/sony/emails/emailid/32966
94 WikiLeaks, the Sony Files/Archives, mail from March 10, 2014: https://wikileaks.org/sony/emails/emailid/72638
95 WikiLeaks, the Sony Files/Archives, mail from March 10, 2014: https://wikileaks.org/sony/emails/emailid/72638
96 WikiLeaks, the Sony Files/Archives, mail from March 10, 2014: https://wikileaks.org/sony/emails/emailid/72638
WikiLeaks, the Sony Files/Archives, mail from May 12, 2014: https://wikileaks.org/sony/emails/emailid/64219
97 WikiLeaks, the Sony Files/Archives, mail from March 10, 2014: https://wikileaks.org/sony/emails/emailid/72638
98 WikiLeaks, the Sony Files/Archives, mail from March 10, 2014: https://wikileaks.org/sony/emails/emailid/32966
99 WikiLeaks, the Sony Files/Archives, mail from March 10, 2014: https://wikileaks.org/sony/emails/emailid/72638
100 WikiLeaks, the Sony Files/Archives, mail from March 10, 2014: https://wikileaks.org/sony/emails/emailid/72638

101 WikiLeaks, the Sony Files/Archives, mail from March 10, 2014: https://wikileaks.org/sony/emails/emailid/72638
102 WikiLeaks, the Sony Files/Archives, mail from March 10, 2014: https://wikileaks.org/sony/emails/emailid/72638
103 WikiLeaks, the Sony Files/Archives, mail from March 10, 2014: https://wikileaks.org/sony/emails/emailid/56934
104 WikiLeaks, the Sony Files/Archives, mail from March 10, 2014: https://wikileaks.org/sony/emails/emailid/40034
105 "Being Bond: A Daniel Craig Retrospective" by Mark Salisbury (2022).
106 "Being Bond: A Daniel Craig Retrospective" by Mark Salisbury (2022).
107 WikiLeaks, the Sony Files/Archives, mail from April 23, 2014: https://wikileaks.org/sony/emails/emailid/40628
108 WikiLeaks, the Sony Files/Archives, mail from April 23, 2014: https://wikileaks.org/sony/emails/emailid/40628
109 WikiLeaks, the Sony Files/Archives, mail from May 9, 2014: https://wikileaks.org/sony/emails/emailid/51089
110 WikiLeaks, the Sony Files/Archives, mail from May 12, 2014: https://wikileaks.org/sony/emails/emailid/158436
111 WikiLeaks, the Sony Files/Archives, mail from May 12, 2014: https://wikileaks.org/sony/emails/emailid/158436
112 WikiLeaks, the Sony Files/Archives, mail from May 12, 2014: https://wikileaks.org/sony/emails/emailid/64219
113 WikiLeaks, the Sony Files/Archives, mail from May 14, 2014: https://wikileaks.org/sony/emails/emailid/150319
"Some Kind of Hero: The Remarkable Story of the James Bond Films" by Matthew Field & Ajay Chowdhury (2018).
114 WikiLeaks, the Sony Files/Archives, mail from May 12, 2014: https://wikileaks.org/sony/emails/emailid/64219
115 WikiLeaks, the Sony Files/Archives, mail from May 12, 2014: https://wikileaks.org/sony/emails/emailid/158436
116 WikiLeaks, the Sony Files/Archives, mail from May 14, 2014: https://wikileaks.org/sony/emails/emailid/166503
"Some Kind of Hero: The Remarkable Story of the James Bond Films" by Matthew Field & Ajay Chowdhury (2018).
117 WikiLeaks, the Sony Files/Archives, mail from May 12, 2014: https://wikileaks.org/sony/emails/emailid/158436
118 WikiLeaks, the Sony Files/Archives, mail from May 12, 2014: https://wikileaks.org/sony/emails/emailid/158436
119 WikiLeaks, the Sony Files/Archives, mail from May 12, 2014: https://wikileaks.org/sony/emails/emailid/158436
120 WikiLeaks, the Sony Files/Archives, mail from May 12, 2014: https://wikileaks.org/sony/emails/emailid/158436
121 WikiLeaks, the Sony Files/Archives, mail from May 12, 2014: https://wikileaks.org/sony/emails/emailid/64219
122 "Some Kind of Hero: The Remarkable Story of the James Bond Films" by Matthew Field & Ajay Chowdhury (2018).
123 WikiLeaks, the Sony Files/Archives, mail from May 12, 2014: https://wikileaks.org/sony/emails/emailid/158436
124 WikiLeaks, the Sony Files/Archives, mail from May 12, 2014: https://wikileaks.org/sony/emails/emailid/64219
125 "Some Kind of Hero: The Remarkable Story of the James Bond Films" by Matthew Field & Ajay Chowdhury (2018).
126 WikiLeaks, the Sony Files/Archives, mail from May 12, 2014: https://wikileaks.org/sony/emails/emailid/158436
WikiLeaks, the Sony Files/Archives, mail from May 12, 2014: https://wikileaks.org/sony/emails/emailid/64219
127 WikiLeaks, the Sony Files/Archives, mail from May 12, 2014: https://wikileaks.org/sony/emails/emailid/64219
128 WikiLeaks, the Sony Files/Archives, mail attachment from August 31, 2014: https://wikileaks.org/sony/emails/emailid/83887
129 WikiLeaks, the Sony Files/Archives, mail from May 12, 2014: https://wikileaks.org/sony/emails/emailid/158436
130 WikiLeaks, the Sony Files/Archives, mail from May 12, 2014: https://wikileaks.org/sony/emails/emailid/64219
131 WikiLeaks, the Sony Files/Archives, mail from May 12, 2014: https://wikileaks.org/sony/emails/emailid/64219
132 WikiLeaks, the Sony Files/Archives, mail from May 12, 2014: https://wikileaks.org/sony/emails/emailid/158436
133 WikiLeaks, the Sony Files/Archives, mail from May 14, 2014: https://wikileaks.org/sony/emails/emailid/150319
134 WikiLeaks, the Sony Files/Archives, mail from May 12, 2014: https://wikileaks.org/sony/emails/emailid/64219
135 WikiLeaks, the Sony Files/Archives, mail from May 14, 2014: https://wikileaks.org/sony/emails/emailid/150319
136 WikiLeaks, the Sony Files/Archives, mail from May 12, 2014: https://wikileaks.org/sony/emails/emailid/158436
137 WikiLeaks, the Sony Files/Archives, mail from May 12, 2014: https://wikileaks.org/sony/emails/emailid/158436
138 WikiLeaks, the Sony Files/Archives, mail from May 12, 2014: https://wikileaks.org/sony/emails/emailid/140990
139 WikiLeaks, the Sony Files/Archives, mail from May 12, 2014: https://wikileaks.org/sony/emails/emailid/74790
140 "Some Kind of Hero: The Remarkable Story of the James Bond Films" by Matthew Field & Ajay Chowdhury (2018).
141 "Skyfall Screenwriters Confirm Their Bond Departure; Sam Mendes and John Logan Have Story Idea for Bond 24" by Adam Chitwood on Collider (November 19, 2012): https://collider.com/neal-purvis-robert-wade-leaving-bond/
142 "Au service secret de Bond" interview with David Fakrikian in Premiere french magazine (Hors-série Spectre, 2015). Translated from french.
143 "Some Kind of Hero: The Remarkable Story of the James Bond Films" by Matthew Field & Ajay Chowdhury (2018).
144 "The Life of Ian Fleming" by John Pearson (1966).
145 WikiLeaks, the Sony Files/Archives, mail from June 13, 2014: https://wikileaks.org/sony/emails/emailid/80132
146 For Jez Butterworth biography, see for the sources:
"Playwright Jez Butterworth Spills All His Secrets in 'The Ferryman'" by Suzy Evans in The Hollywood Reporter (May 10, 2019): https://www.hollywoodreporter.com/lifestyle/lifestyle-news/playwright-jez-butterworth-spills-all-his-secrets-ferryman-1209467/

"Jez Butterworth: the visionary fast becoming a theatrical great" by Vanessa Thorpe in The Guardian (May 7, 2017): https://www.theguardian.com/stage/2017/may/06/jez-butterworth-visionary-fast-becoming-theatrical-great-ferryman-royal-court
Jez Butterworth's Wikipedia page.

147 WikiLeaks, the Sony Files/Archives, mail from June 15, 2014: https://wikileaks.org/sony/emails/emailid/35761

148 WikiLeaks, the Sony Files/Archives, mail from June 16, 2014: https://wikileaks.org/sony/emails/emailid/164879

149 "Being Bond: A Daniel Craig Retrospective" by Mark Salisbury (2022).

150 "Being Bond: A Daniel Craig Retrospective" by Mark Salisbury (2022).

151 WikiLeaks, the Sony Files/Archives, mail from July 10, 2014: https://wikileaks.org/sony/emails/emailid/154853
WikiLeaks, the Sony Files/Archives, mail from July 4, 2014: https://wikileaks.org/sony/emails/emailid/61223

152 WikiLeaks, the Sony Files/Archives, mail from July 10, 2014: https://wikileaks.org/sony/emails/emailid/154853
WikiLeaks, the Sony Files/Archives, mail from July 4, 2014: https://wikileaks.org/sony/emails/emailid/61223

153 WikiLeaks, the Sony Files/Archives, mail from July 11, 2014: https://wikileaks.org/sony/emails/emailid/59050

154 "Some Kind of Hero: The Remarkable Story of the James Bond Films" by Matthew Field & Ajay Chowdhury (2018).

155 WikiLeaks, the Sony Files/Archives, mail from July 11, 2014: https://wikileaks.org/sony/emails/emailid/59050

156 WikiLeaks, the Sony Files/Archives, mail from July 15, 2014: https://wikileaks.org/sony/emails/emailid/24674

157 WikiLeaks, the Sony Files/Archives, mail from July 16, 2014: https://wikileaks.org/sony/emails/emailid/18844

158 WikiLeaks, the Sony Files/Archives, mail from August 26, 2014: https://wikileaks.org/sony/emails/emailid/50733

159 WikiLeaks, the Sony Files/Archives, mail from August 26, 2014: https://wikileaks.org/sony/emails/emailid/36142

160 WikiLeaks, the Sony Files/Archives, mail attachment from August 27, 2014: https://wikileaks.org/sony/emails/emailid/72626

161 WikiLeaks, the Sony Files/Archives, mail attachment from August 31, 2014: https://wikileaks.org/sony/emails/emailid/83887

162 WikiLeaks, the Sony Files/Archives, mail attachment from August 31, 2014: https://wikileaks.org/sony/emails/emailid/83887

163 WikiLeaks, the Sony Files/Archives, mail attachment from August 27, 2014: https://wikileaks.org/sony/emails/emailid/72626

164 WikiLeaks, the Sony Files/Archives, mail from August 28, 2014: https://wikileaks.org/sony/emails/emailid/31043

165 "The James Bond Archives" by Paul Duncan (2021).

166 "Snowden-Interview: Transcript" on NDR.de (January 26, 2014): http://www.ndr.de/ratgeber/netzwelt/snowden277_page-2.html

167 WikiLeaks, the Sony Files/Archives, mail from May 13, 2014: https://wikileaks.org/sony/emails/emailid/102104
"Sony Pictures Entertainment Options Pulitzer Prize Winner Glenn Greenwald's Book On Edward Snowden" on PR Newswire (May 14, 2014): https://www.prnewswire.com/news-releases/sony-pictures-entertainment-options-pulitzer-prize-winner-glenn-greenwalds-book-on-edward-snowden-259246721.html

168 WikiLeaks, the Sony Files/Archives, mail attachment from August 31, 2014: https://wikileaks.org/sony/emails/emailid/83887

169 WikiLeaks, the Sony Files/Archives, mail attachment from August 31, 2014: https://wikileaks.org/sony/emails/emailid/83887

170 WikiLeaks, the Sony Files/Archives, mail attachment from August 31, 2014: https://wikileaks.org/sony/emails/emailid/8388

171 WikiLeaks, the Sony Files/Archives, mail attachment from August 31, 2014: https://wikileaks.org/sony/emails/emailid/83887

172 WikiLeaks, the Sony Files/Archives, mail from August 28, 2014: https://wikileaks.org/sony/emails/emailid/31043

173 WikiLeaks, the Sony Files/Archives, mail from August 28, 2014: https://wikileaks.org/sony/emails/emailid/31043

174 WikiLeaks, the Sony Files/Archives, mail from August 28, 2014: https://wikileaks.org/sony/emails/emailid/31043

175 WikiLeaks, the Sony Files/Archives, mail attachment from August 27, 2014: https://wikileaks.org/sony/emails/emailid/72626

176 WikiLeaks, the Sony Files/Archives, mail attachment from August 27, 2014: https://wikileaks.org/sony/emails/emailid/72626
WikiLeaks, the Sony Files/Archives, mail from August 28, 2014: https://wikileaks.org/sony/emails/emailid/31043

177 WikiLeaks, the Sony Files/Archives, mail from August 28, 2014: https://wikileaks.org/sony/emails/emailid/31043

178 WikiLeaks, the Sony Files/Archives, mail attachment from August 31, 2014: https://wikileaks.org/sony/emails/emailid/83887

179 WikiLeaks, the Sony Files/Archives, mail attachment from August 27, 2014: https://wikileaks.org/sony/emails/emailid/72626
WikiLeaks, the Sony Files/Archives, mail attachment from August 31, 2014: https://wikileaks.org/sony/emails/emailid/838

180 WikiLeaks, the Sony Files/Archives, mail attachment from August 31, 2014: https://wikileaks.org/sony/emails/emailid/838

181 WikiLeaks, the Sony Files/Archives, mail from August 28, 2014: https://wikileaks.org/sony/emails/emailid/31043

182 WikiLeaks, the Sony Files/Archives, mail attachment from August 31, 2014: https://wikileaks.org/sony/emails/emailid/838
183 WikiLeaks, the Sony Files/Archives, mail attachment from August 27, 2014: https://wikileaks.org/sony/emails/emailid/72626
184 WikiLeaks, the Sony Files/Archives, mail attachment from August 31, 2014: https://wikileaks.org/sony/emails/emailid/83887
185 WikiLeaks, the Sony Files/Archives, mail attachment from August 31, 2014: https://wikileaks.org/sony/emails/emailid/838
186 WikiLeaks, the Sony Files/Archives, mail attachment from August 27, 2014: https://wikileaks.org/sony/emails/emailid/72626
187 WikiLeaks, the Sony Files/Archives, mail from October 8, 2014: https://wikileaks.org/sony/emails/emailid/70331
188 "Spectre: Sam Mendes on the difficulties of the opening scene" by Simon Brew on Den of Geek (October 27, 2015): https://www.denofgeek.com/movies/spectre-sam-mendes-on-the-difficulties-of-the-opening-scene/
189 "Some Kind of Hero: The Remarkable Story of the James Bond Films" by Matthew Field & Ajay Chowdhury (2018).
190 "Some Kind of Hero: The Remarkable Story of the James Bond Films" by Matthew Field & Ajay Chowdhury (2018).
191 "Being Bond: A Daniel Craig Retrospective" by Mark Salisbury (2022).
192 "Some Kind of Hero: The Remarkable Story of the James Bond Films" by Matthew Field & Ajay Chowdhury (2018).
193 WikiLeaks, the Sony Files/Archives, mail from October 10, 2014: https://wikileaks.org/sony/emails/emailid/48910
194 WikiLeaks, the Sony Files/Archives, mail from October 13, 2014: https://wikileaks.org/sony/emails/emailid/156489
195 WikiLeaks, the Sony Files/Archives, mail from October 10, 2014: https://wikileaks.org/sony/emails/emailid/65401
196 WikiLeaks, the Sony Files/Archives, mail from October 10, 2014: https://wikileaks.org/sony/emails/emailid/65401
197 WikiLeaks, the Sony Files/Archives, mail from October 10, 2014: https://wikileaks.org/sony/emails/emailid/39655
198 WikiLeaks, the Sony Files/Archives, mail from October 12, 2014: https://wikileaks.org/sony/emails/emailid/91668
199 WikiLeaks, the Sony Files/Archives, mail from October 10, 2014: https://wikileaks.org/sony/emails/emailid/39655
200 WikiLeaks, the Sony Files/Archives, mail from October 10, 2014: https://wikileaks.org/sony/emails/emailid/65401
201 WikiLeaks, the Sony Files/Archives, mail from October 10, 2014: https://wikileaks.org/sony/emails/emailid/39655
202 WikiLeaks, the Sony Files/Archives, mail from October 13, 2014: https://wikileaks.org/sony/emails/emailid/156489
203 WikiLeaks, the Sony Files/Archives, mail from October 12, 2014: https://wikileaks.org/sony/emails/emailid/91668
204 WikiLeaks, the Sony Files/Archives, mail from October 13, 2014: https://wikileaks.org/sony/emails/emailid/156489
205 WikiLeaks, the Sony Files/Archives, mail from October 13, 2014: https://wikileaks.org/sony/emails/emailid/156489
206 WikiLeaks, the Sony Files/Archives, mail from October 12, 2014: https://wikileaks.org/sony/emails/emailid/91668
207 WikiLeaks, the Sony Files/Archives, mail from October 12, 2014: https://wikileaks.org/sony/emails/emailid/91668
208 WikiLeaks, the Sony Files/Archives, mail from October 13, 2014: https://wikileaks.org/sony/emails/emailid/156489
209 WikiLeaks, the Sony Files/Archives, mail from October 13, 2014: https://wikileaks.org/sony/emails/emailid/15648
210 WikiLeaks, the Sony Files/Archives, mail from October 12, 2014: https://wikileaks.org/sony/emails/emailid/91668
211 WikiLeaks, the Sony Files/Archives, mail from October 10, 2014: https://wikileaks.org/sony/emails/emailid/39655
212 WikiLeaks, the Sony Files/Archives, mail from October 12, 2014: https://wikileaks.org/sony/emails/emailid/91668
213 WikiLeaks, the Sony Files/Archives, mail from October 21, 2014: https://wikileaks.org/sony/emails/emailid/24886
WikiLeaks, the Sony Files/Archives, mail from October 21, 2014: https://wikileaks.org/sony/emails/emailid/52280
214 WikiLeaks, the Sony Files/Archives, mail attachment from October 22, 2014: https://wikileaks.org/sony/emails/emailid/66518
215 WikiLeaks, the Sony Files/Archives, mail from October 21, 2014: https://wikileaks.org/sony/emails/emailid/24886
216 WikiLeaks, the Sony Files/Archives, mail from October 22, 2014: https://wikileaks.org/sony/emails/emailid/69395
217 WikiLeaks, the Sony Files/Archives, mail attachment from October 22, 2014: https://wikileaks.org/sony/emails/emailid/66518
218 WikiLeaks, the Sony Files/Archives, mail from October 22, 2014: https://wikileaks.org/sony/emails/emailid/69395
219 WikiLeaks, the Sony Files/Archives, mail attachment from October 22, 2014: https://wikileaks.org/sony/emails/emailid/66518
220 WikiLeaks, the Sony Files/Archives, mail attachment from October 23, 2014: https://wikileaks.org/sony/emails/emailid/36259
221 WikiLeaks, the Sony Files/Archives, mail attachment from October 23, 2014: https://wikileaks.org/sony/emails/emailid/36259
222 WikiLeaks, the Sony Files/Archives, mail attachment from October 23, 2014: https://wikileaks.org/sony/emails/emailid/36259
223 WikiLeaks, the Sony Files/Archives, mail attachment from October 23, 2014: https://wikileaks.org/sony/emails/emailid/36259
224 WikiLeaks, the Sony Files/Archives, mail attachment from October 23, 2014: https://wikileaks.org/sony/emails/emailid/36259

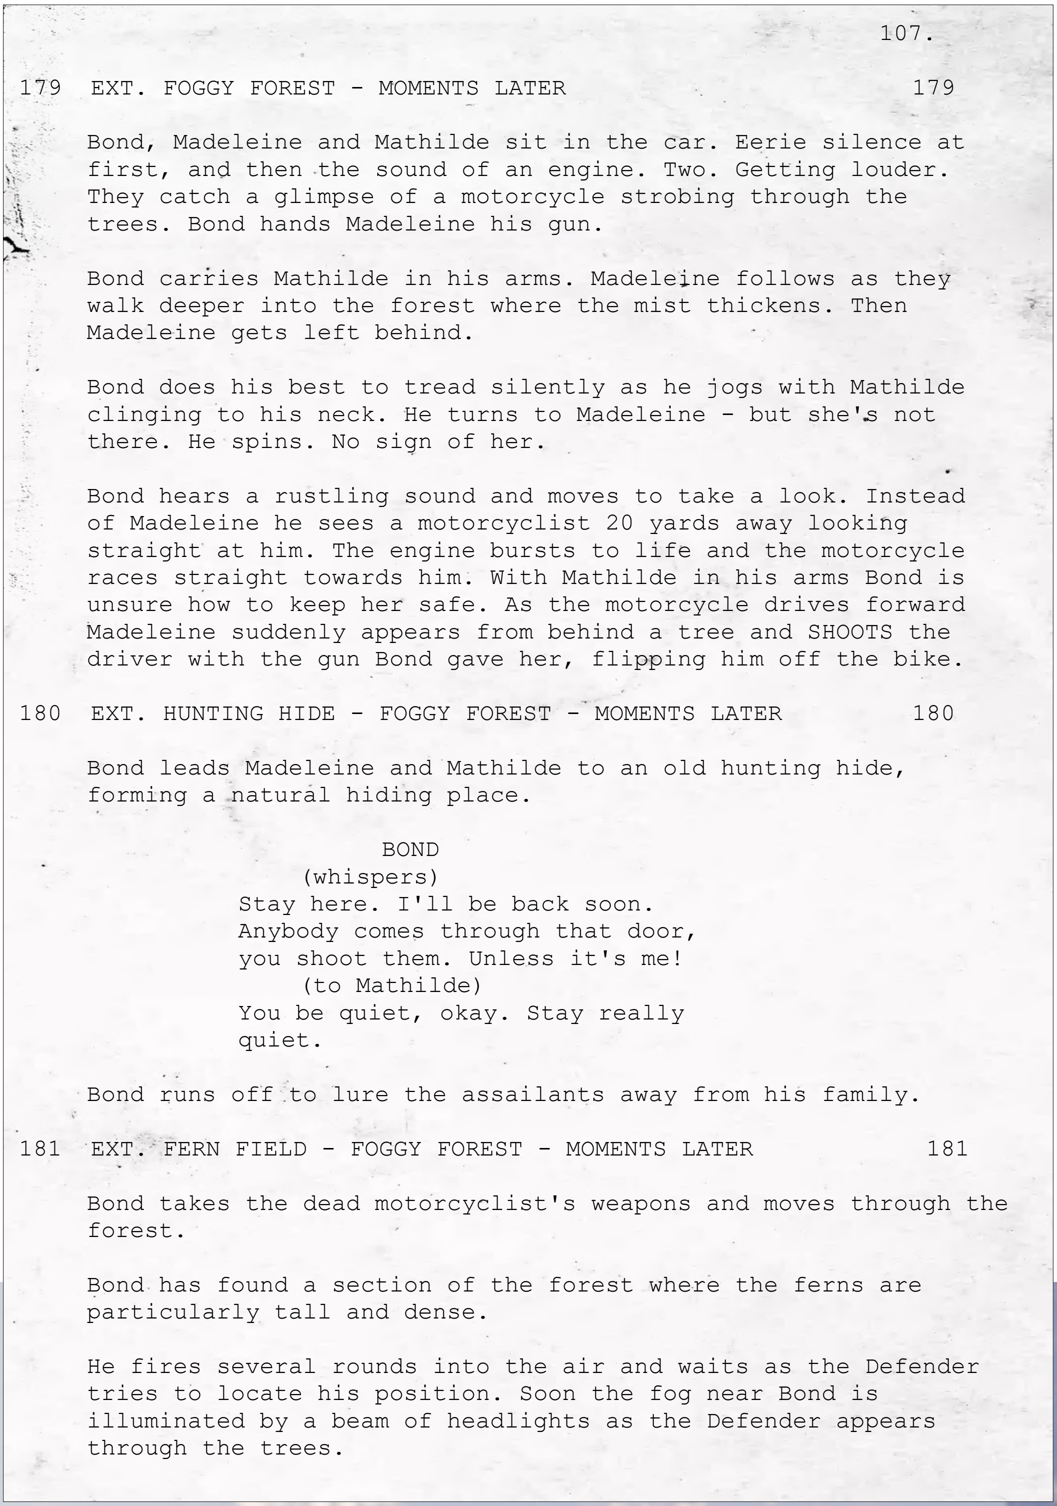
225 WikiLeaks, the Sony Files/Archives, mail attachment from October 23, 2014: https://wikileaks.org/sony/emails/emailid/36259
226 WikiLeaks, the Sony Files/Archives, mail from October 21, 2014: https://wikileaks.org/sony/emails/emailid/52280
227 WikiLeaks, the Sony Files/Archives, mail attachment from October 23, 2014: https://wikileaks.org/sony/emails/emailid/36259
228 WikiLeaks, the Sony Files/Archives, mail attachment from October 22, 2014: https://wikileaks.org/sony/emails/emailid/66518
229 WikiLeaks, the Sony Files/Archives, mail attachment from October 22, 2014: https://wikileaks.org/sony/emails/emailid/66518
230 WikiLeaks, the Sony Files/Archives, mail from October 22, 2014: https://wikileaks.org/sony/emails/emailid/69395 WikiLeaks, the Sony Files/Archives, mail attachment from October 23, 2014: https://wikileaks.org/sony/emails/emailid/36259
231 WikiLeaks, the Sony Files/Archives, mail attachment from October 23, 2014: https://wikileaks.org/sony/emails/emailid/36259
232 WikiLeaks, the Sony Files/Archives, mail attachment from October 23, 2014: https://wikileaks.org/sony/emails/emailid/36259
233 WikiLeaks, the Sony Files/Archives, mail from October 22, 2014: https://wikileaks.org/sony/emails/emailid/69395
234 "Some Kind of Hero: The Remarkable Story of the James Bond Films" by Matthew Field & Ajay Chowdhury (2018).
235 WikiLeaks, the Sony Files/Archives, mail from October 24, 2014: https://wikileaks.org/sony/emails/emailid/28683
236 WikiLeaks, the Sony Files/Archives, mail from November 9, 2014: https://wikileaks.org/sony/emails/emailid/72288
237 "Some Kind of Hero: The Remarkable Story of the James Bond Films" by Matthew Field & Ajay Chowdhury (2018).
238 WikiLeaks, the Sony Files/Archives, mail from November 9, 2014: https://wikileaks.org/sony/emails/emailid/68968
239 WikiLeaks, the Sony Files/Archives, mail from November 10, 2014: https://wikileaks.org/sony/emails/emailid/52505
240 WikiLeaks, the Sony Files/Archives, mail from November 10, 2014: https://wikileaks.org/sony/emails/emailid/52505
241 "Peña pagó en EU el contrato más caro en 30 años para promover turismo: 95 millones de dólares" by Dolia Estévez on Sinembargo (January 13, 2019): https://www.sinembargo.mx/13-01-2019/3521534
242 WikiLeaks, the Sony Files/Archives, mail from November 10, 2014: https://wikileaks.org/sony/emails/emailid/52505
243 WikiLeaks, the Sony Files/Archives, mail from November 10, 2014: https://wikileaks.org/sony/emails/emailid/52505
244 "Peña pagó en EU el contrato más caro en 30 años para promover turismo: 95 millones de dólares" by Dolia Estévez on Sinembargo (January 13, 2019): https://www.sinembargo.mx/13-01-2019/3521534

NO TIME TO DIE
007
OCTOBER 2021

Release date (premiere) :
28 September 2021

Writing credit as per title sequence:
"Screenplay by Neal Purvis & Robert Wade and Cary Joji Fukunaga and Phoebe Waller-Bridge.
Story by Neal Purvis & Robert Wade and Cary Joji Fukunaga"

Director :...........................Cary Fukunaga
Producers :...............Michael Wilson and Barbara Broccoli
Director photography :..Linus Sandgren
Set Designer :......................Mark Tildesley
Composer :...........................Hans Zimmer
Editors :.....Elliot Graham and Tom Cross
Title sequence :.............Daniel Kleinman
Title song vocals :...................Billie Eilish



107.

179 EXT. FOGGY FOREST - MOMENTS LATER 179

Bond, Madeleine and Mathilde sit in the car. Eerie silence at first, and then the sound of an engine. Two. Getting louder. They catch a glimpse of a motorcycle strobing through the trees. Bond hands Madeleine his gun.

Bond carries Mathilde in his arms. Madeleine follows as they walk deeper into the forest where the mist thickens. Then Madeleine gets left behind.

Bond does his best to tread silently as he jogs with Mathilde clinging to his neck. He turns to Madeleine - but she's not there. He spins. No sign of her.

Bond hears a rustling sound and moves to take a look. Instead of Madeleine he sees a motorcyclist 20 yards away looking straight at him. The engine bursts to life and the motorcycle races straight towards him. With Mathilde in his arms Bond is unsure how to keep her safe. As the motorcycle drives forward Madeleine suddenly appears from behind a tree and SHOOTS the driver with the gun Bond gave her, flipping him off the bike.

180 EXT. HUNTING HIDE - FOGGY FOREST - MOMENTS LATER 180

Bond leads Madeleine and Mathilde to an old hunting hide, forming a natural hiding place.

BOND
(whispers)
Stay here. I'll be back soon.
Anybody comes through that door,
you shoot them. Unless it's me!
(to Mathilde)
You be quiet, okay. Stay really quiet.

Bond runs off to lure the assailants away from his family.

181 EXT. FERN FIELD - FOGGY FOREST - MOMENTS LATER 181

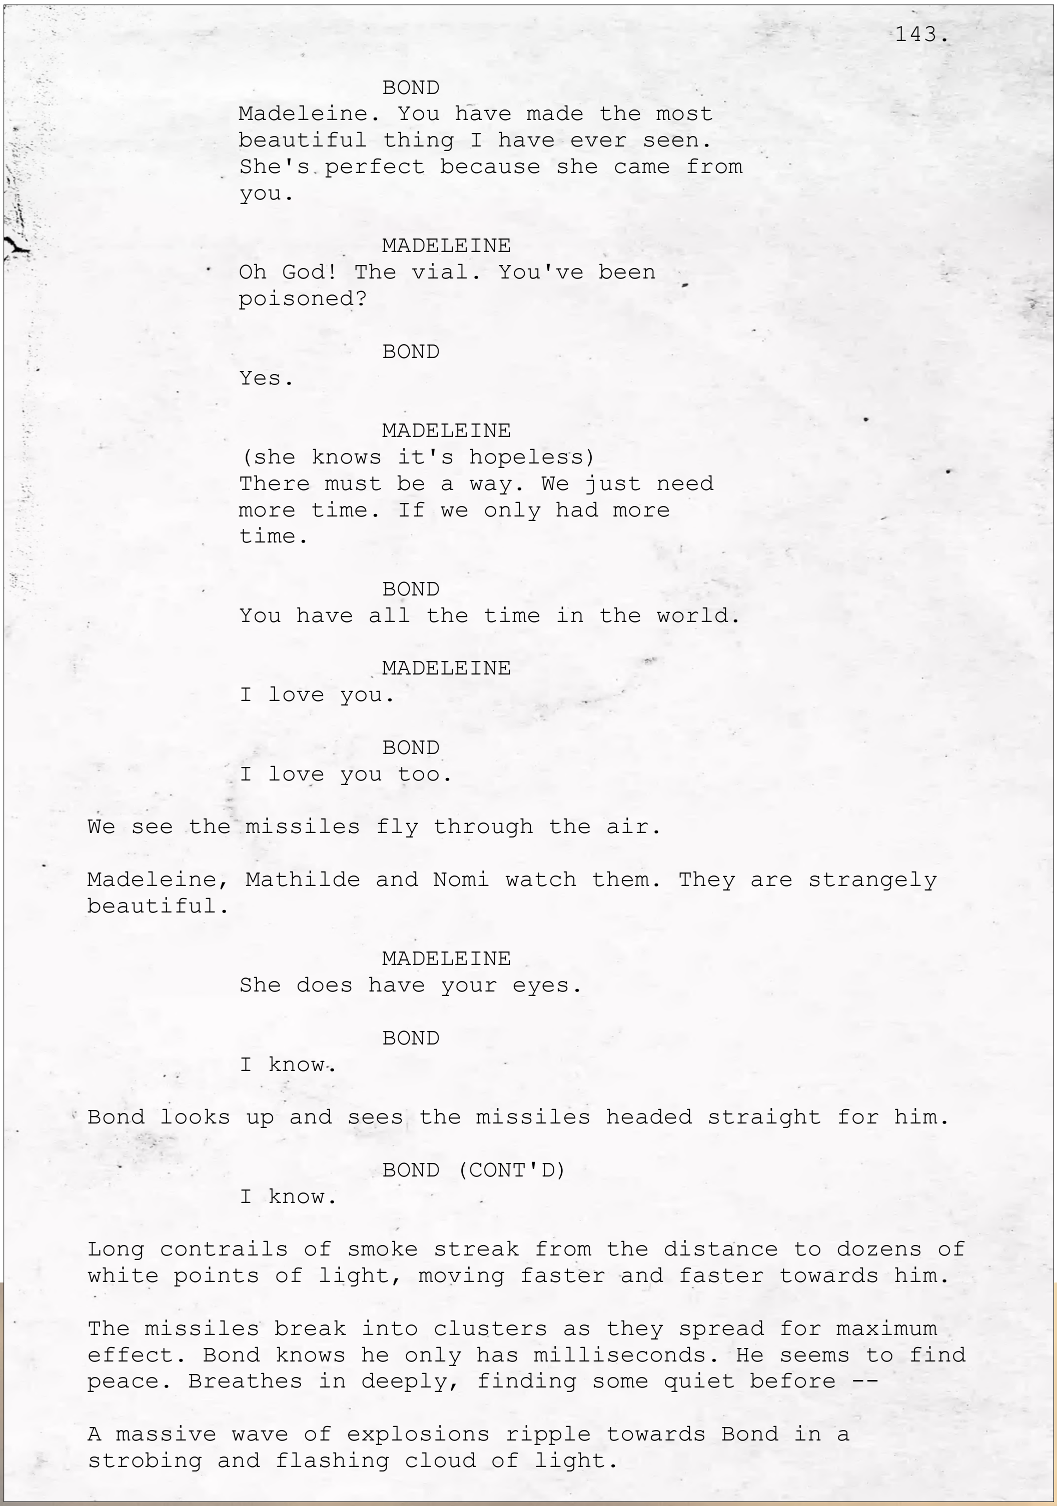
Bond takes the dead motorcyclist's weapons and moves through the forest.

Bond has found a section of the forest where the ferns are particularly tall and dense.

He fires several rounds into the air and waits as the Defender tries to locate his position. Soon the fog near Bond is illuminated by a beam of headlights as the Defender appears through the trees.

CHAPTER 25

NO TIME TO DIE



BOND
Madeleine. You have made the most beautiful thing I have ever seen. She's perfect because she came from you.

MADELEINE
Oh God! The vial. You've been poisoned?

BOND
Yes.

MADELEINE
(she knows it's hopeless)
There must be a way. We just need more time. If we only had more time.

BOND
You have all the time in the world.

MADELEINE
I love you.

BOND
I love you too.

We see the missiles fly through the air.

Madeleine, Mathilde and Nomi watch them. They are strangely beautiful.

MADELEINE
She does have your eyes.

BOND
I know.

Bond looks up and sees the missiles headed straight for him.

BOND (CONT'D)
I know.

Long contrails of smoke streak from the distance to dozens of white points of light, moving faster and faster towards him.

The missiles break into clusters as they spread for maximum effect. Bond knows he only has milliseconds. He seems to find peace. Breathes in deeply, finding some quiet before --

A massive wave of explosions ripple towards Bond in a strobing and flashing cloud of light.

Cast:

James Bond :	Daniel Craig
Lyutsifer Safin :	Rami Malek
Madeleine Swann :	Léa Seydoux
Nomi :	Lashana Lynch
Primo :	Dali Benssalah
Mathilde :	Lisa-Dorah Sonnet
Valdo :	David Dencik
Felix Leiter :	Jeffrey Wright
Paloma :	Ana de Armas
Logan Ash :	Billy Magnussen
Oberhauser (Blofeld) :	Christoph Waltz
M :	Ralph Fiennes
Moneypenny :	Naomie Harris
Bill Tanner :	Rory Kinnear
Q :	Ben Whishaw

Main filming locations: Italy, Jamaica, Norway and UK.

This Bond has not finished generating a lot of ink with its daring choices. The production tried new things (and I am lucky to be at peace with each of them). The direction is good, the locations and sets are there, the stunts present (but less impressive than in certain opuses of our favorite secret agent) and the romance and emotion are there more than ever. The sparkling Paloma brightens up the film while the villain, oversold during promotion, is however one of the big disappointments of the film with a plan that nobody found useful/intelligent to explain to us! With its end, the film adds a conclusion to Craig's era and makes a clean slate for the next one.

Table of contents

No Time to Die

Completing a cycle....1626
The script for the awards....1634

Completing a cycle

July 24, 2017, EON comes out of its silence and (finally) announces the return of James Bond in a 25th film scheduled for November 8, 2019 in the United States[1]. No title, no director, nor even a main actor announced (Craig who needed a break after Spectre has still not confirmed his return): only a date and the names of two screenwriters, Robert Wade and Neal Purvis.

Craig will announce his return in August 2017[2]. However, for him "if we do it, then we need to do something that really puts a button on the whole the whole thing, [...] finish the story, finish my tenure"[3]. He indeed want Bond to die at the end of the film if he come back[4]. Apparently the idea was relatively old:

> - Daniel Craig[5] : I'm going to tell a story here, whether or not anybody remembers it or agrees with it. But it was 2006. Barbara and I were sitting in the back of a car driving away from the Berlin premiere of Casino Royale. Everything was going well. People liked the movie. And it looked like I was gonna get a chance to make at least another movie. I said to Barbara, "How many of these movies do I have to make?", because I don't really look at contracts or any of those things. And she said, "Four", and I went, "Oh, okay. Can I kill him off in the last one?". And she didn't pause. She said, "Yes".

> - Neal Purvis[6] : Barbara had mentioned it to us when Daniel first came on during Casino Royale. We'd actually completely forgotten that. When it came up again, it's such a bold idea. [...] There were lots of different ways you could play it but we actually came down on the side of this missile ending from a naval vessel quite early on. That kind of environment felt right and then knowing that something's coming is a really good way of keeping the tension and really makes you think that it's not really going to happen.

> - Barbara Broccoli[7] : We had considered killing Bond in Spectre, but decided against it.

Craig wants to kill Bond to add a conclusion to the story of his cycle started with Casino Royale, and also a little to ensure that he would not be asked to do another Bond after this one[8].

> - Robert Wade[9] : It started with us and Barbara going to GCHQ [Government Communications HeadQuarters] for lunch. Trump had just got into power and it was shortly after the London Bridge attacks. That was the environment we > were initially writing into. In building up the treatment we then worked with Daniel Craig in New York for several weeks.

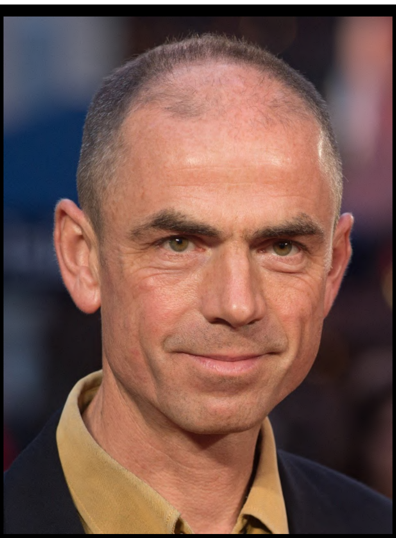
The screenwriting duo aims to make a film where Bond travels little, "like [in] Key Largo"[10], with the only locations being Jamaica, where Bond retired, and Cuba[11]. The garden of death of You Only Live Twice must then have been located in a place where Cuban crises weapons were housed, and there should have been a tornado; a way to do something other than explosions according to Wade[12].

"In March 2017, we started developing a script with Neal Purvis and Robert Wade where Bond continues his relationship with Madeleine Swann. It also featured a toxin that targets people based on their DNA", says Michael Wilson[13]. A similar device was mentioned at the very beginning of the development of The World Is Not Enough[14].

> - Neal Purvis[15] : We'd had the idea some time ago about what was, in the old days, called a gene bomb which could affect or kill people of particular genetic makeup, but we were always uncertain to what extent that was really true or likely. Then Michael G. Wilson mentioned to us that he'd read about something that actually was going on in the medical profession. DNA targeting for illnesses and ailments. That was for good purposes, obviously and so we all thought we can do something similar but have a malevolent reason behind it.

After completing a first draft in December 2017, it was deemed that Bond needed to travel more and Pompeii and an island near Japan were added to the story[16].

Enter February/March 2018 with rumors that Danny Boyle (who directed the short film for the opening of the 2012 Olympics in which Bond and the Queen parachute from a helicopter) is being considered as director[17]. Boyle responds to the rumors by saying that he has indeed been approached and that he is working on the writing of the film with one of his regular partners, John Hodge[18].



John Hodge[19], born in Glasgow, Scotland, came from a family of doctors and continued the family tradition by studying medicine at the University of Edinburgh. Hodge began writing scripts after meeting producer Andrew Macdonald at the Edinburgh Film Festival in 1991. His first was Shallow Grave (1994), directed by Danny Boyle.

This marked the end of his ambitions for a career in medicine and the beginning of a long relationship with Boyle for whom he would write five more films: Trainspotting (1996) adapted from Irvine Welsh's novel, in which one of the characters is a James Bond fanatic, A Life less ordinary (1997), The Beach (2000), Trance (2013) and T2 Trainspotting (2017).

Apart from his films with Boyle he also writes The Sweeney (2012) adapted from a television series, or also The Ipcress File, the 2022 TV series adapted from the novel by Len Deighton.

> - Danny Boyle[20] : We've got an idea, John Hodge, the screenwriter, and I have got this idea, and John is writing it at the moment. And it all depends on how it turns out. It would be foolish of me to give any of it away.

Danny Boyle.

It was not until late May 2018 that EON officially announced Danny Boyle as director with a script written by John Hodge[21]. No details in this press release on what happened to Purvis and Wade who had been announced a few months earlier. Danny Boyle will bring back in addition to Hodge some other of his usual collaborators such as Mark Tildesley (set designer) or Suttirat Anne Larlarb (costume designer).

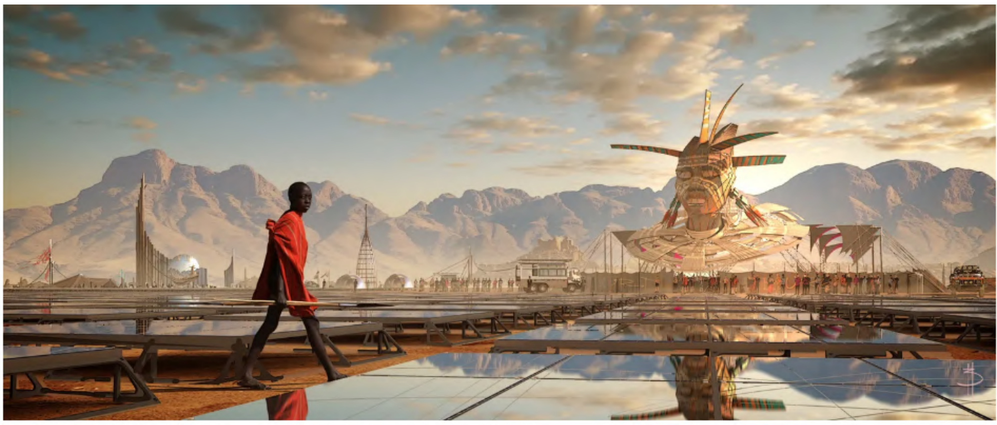
A month passes since Boyle's announcement, then two, three and in the fourth EON set the cat among the pigeons by announcing that due to "creative differences", "Danny Boyle has decided to no longer direct Bond 25"[22].

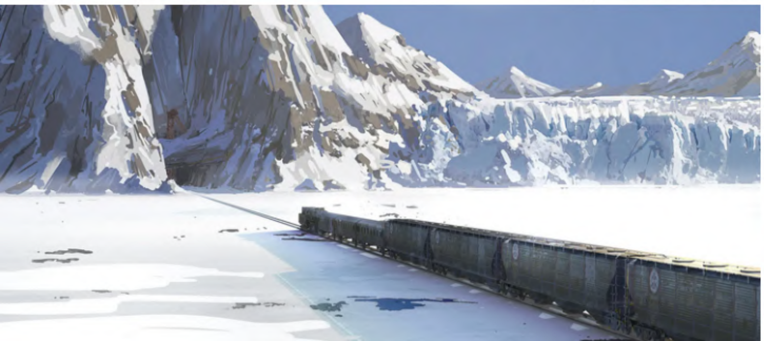
Even today, what exactly hide behind these mysterious "creative differences" remains very vague:

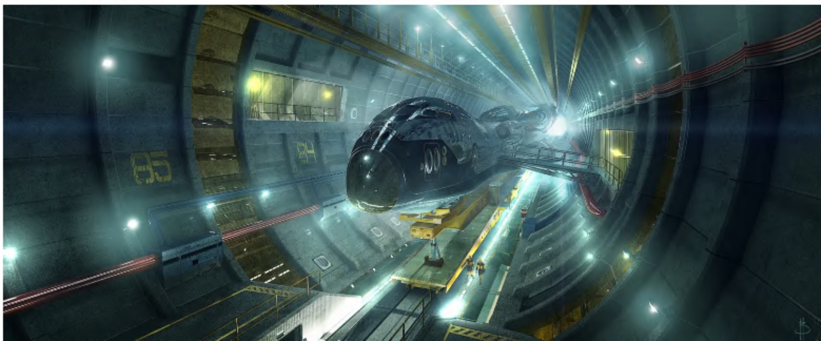
> - Michael Wilson or Barbara Broccoli[23] : We all spent a lot of time developing a storyline, and got to a point where we looked at what we had and jointly decided that the film [he] wanted to make and the film we wanted to make were not the same. And he agreed.

Sets were apparently already being built when Boyle left[24] (of which EON no to bother to share photos after the film release...), just as no one at EON seemed to have bother to give a few details of what was planned, so that virtually nothing is known about what was envisaged by Boyle and Hodge.

Apparently the pre-title was to take place during a large Burning Man gathering in the Nevada desert and feature a sort of Mad Max-style sequence[25]. 007 was to retire to Majorca and the story was to include Namibia and Russia[26], including a former gulag / mining town where Bond was imprisoned for a long time[27] (which was actually constructed in Canada[28]). More surprisingly there was also talk of a huge rocket with apparently Bond going into space[29].







Boyle/Hodge's big idea apparently was for Bond to have a child[30], although in their version the mother was named Maria[31] while the producers insisted on changing this character to Madeleine Swann[32].

> - Michael Wilson[33] : Their idea was that Bond had a relationship in the past, not with Madeleine, and he finds out he has a child. The idea of Bond having a child has been mooted before, a daughter was in an early Spectre script.

Just like in Purvis and Wade versions, Bond also had to die:

> - John Hodge[34] : My understanding was that that twist had been decided even before we came on board because Daniel Craig wanted it.

> - Danny Boyle[35] : It was all set in Russia, which is of course where Bond came from, out of the Cold War. It was set in present-day Russia and went back to his origins, and they just lost, what's the word... They just lost confidence in it. It was a shame really.

Wilson said Hodge's script was "not reflective of where we wanted to go with the twenty-five chapter"[36].

> - John Hodge[37] : I think it was me they really wanted rid of, but Danny took the bullet, too.

EON thus finds them-self without a director and dusts off Purvis and Wade's script. According to associate producer Gregg Wilson, the production wanted to retain three elements from the writings of the duo: the new 007, the DNA weapon and Bond's sacrifice[38].

September 20, 2018, EON announces that they have found a new director in the person of Cary Fukunaga (and that the film has been postponed)[39].

> - Daniel Craig[40] : He's a writer as well, which is was what we needed, because we had a lot of ideas we wanted to use and we needed someone who could come in and help us collate it. We had the ending. We needed to work backwards from that.

B 25
NO TIME TO DIE
25/10/19
1

Cary Joji Fukunaga[41] was born in 1977 in California, from a Swedish-American mother and a father of Japanese origin.

He studied at the University of California where he obtained a degree in history. He then attended the Grenoble Institute of Political Studies in France, where he studied geopolitics and international law.

Fukunaga originally wanted to become a professional snowboarder, but after discovering a passion for film, he continued his education at New York University, where he earned a degree in cinematic art.

After a few acclaimed short films, his career took off with his first feature film which he wrote and directed: Sin Nombre (2009), recounting a dangerous journey of two young illegal immigrants across Central America. Hailed by critics for its realistic vision and daring staging.

He is then seen directing the film Jane Eyre from 2011.

However, it was on the small screen that Fukunaga achieved global notoriety in 2014 with the directing of the television series True Detective, in which two detectives investigate a mysterious ritual murder in Louisiana.

He then wrote and directed the film Beasts of No Nation (2015), based on the novel by Uzodinma Iweala, which explores the horrors of the West African civil war through the eyes of a young child soldier.

In 2017 he participated in the writing of the horror film It and the following year he returned to television with the series Maniac.

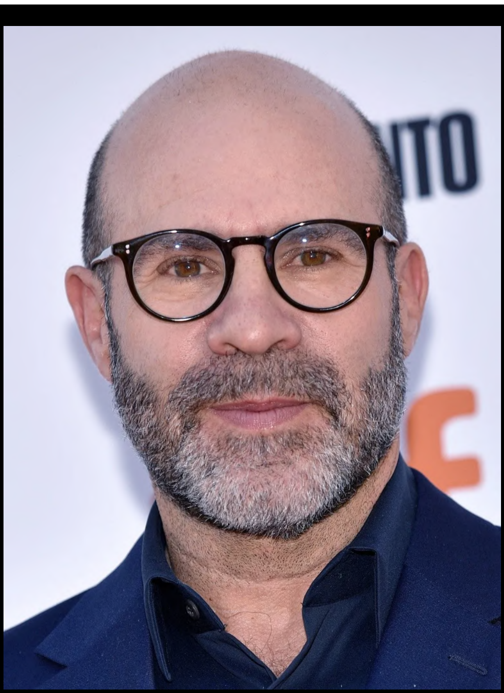
In 2018 he is the one chosen by the production of Bond 25 to replace the original director Danny Boyle.

We find him producing and directing episodes of Masters of the Air in 2024.

"Writing to me is essential to the filmmaking process. I can't really imagine directing something that I haven't written", says Fukunaga[42]. "There was no script when I joined, [after Boyle] it was a complete wipe-the-chalkboard-clean, start over again"[43].

- Carry Fukunaga[44] : There were four things that were given to me: Bond dies. Child. Madeleine Swann. Female 007.

"I sat down with Purvis and Wade initially", Fukunaga says, "and we hashed out a treatment and a screenplay, and I took that screenplay and worked on it a bit myself"[45].



Scott Z. Burns[46] was born in the United States in 1962. He attended the University of Minnesota where he earned a degree in English.

His film career began mainly in 2006, the year in which the feature film was released Pu-239, which he wrote and directed. He also produced the documentary An Inconvenient Truth by Davis Guggenheim, who address climate change.

He then participated in the writing of The Bourne Ultimatum, 3rd part of the Jason Bourne saga which was released in 2007. After several short films, he wrote The Informant!, directed by Steven Soderbergh and released in 2009. Burns will meet again the director twice: Contagion (2011) and Side Effects (2013). He then participated in uncredited rewrites of Dawn of the Planet of the Apes (2014) and also wrote a play in 2014, The Library.

In 2019 Burns returned to directing with The Report, which he also writes and produces. He also collaborates again with Steven Soderbergh for The Laundromat, a film about the Panama Papers. 2019 also sees him performing uncredited rewrites on No Time To Die.

In 2023 he creates the television series Extrapolations, about climate change, and directs and writes episodes.

At one point screenwriter Scott Z. Burns was called in to do some rewrites but could only stay for a few weeks as he already had other commitments[47].

Screenwriter Phoebe Waller-Bridge was also approached for rewrites at the request of Daniel Craig[48]. "We brought in Phoebe some time around March, which was when we started shooting", Fukunaga says[49]. "I really like her mind; I really like the way she thinks about character, and especially scenes. It's almost like a science for her. We talked about what we had; I talked about what characters I wasn't happy with yet, and about situation and dialogue"[50].

Phoebe Mary Waller-Bridge[51] is an actress, screenwriter and producer born in 1985 in London. She attended St Augustine's Priory Catholic girls' school in London and later studied acting at the Royal Academy of Dramatic Art (RADA), where she developed her writing and acting skills.

After graduating, she founded the DryWrite theater company with Vicky Jones in 2007.

She makes her debut in the play Roaring Trade at the Soho Theater in 2009, then continued her acting career in theater and television, such as in the television series Broadchurch (2015).

At the same time, she writes plays that she also performs, such as the one woman show Fleabag in 2013 which she will adapt into a television series in 2016 and in which she will plays the main character. The series follows the tribulations of a modern, sarcastic and casual British woman as she juggles the challenges of her chaotic personal life, her complicated relationships, and the café she has to run alone since the death of her friend and partner. The series will be acclaimed and have a second season in 2019.

In 2016 she also created, wrote and starred in the series Crashing.

She lends her voice to the droid L3-37 in the film Solo: A Star Wars Story (2018). Also in 2018, Waller-Bridge wrote and produced the thriller television series Killing Eve, based on the novels of Luke Jennings, which explores the dangerous and obsessive game between a talented hitwoman and an MI5 investigator. Just like for Fleabag, critical success was achieved and four seasons were released.

Her commitment to gender equality and the representation of women in the entertainment industry as well as her approach to comedy, which combines dark humor, raw realism and emotional sensitivity, are praised.

In 2019, she was approached for rewrites on No Time To Die.

We also find Waller-Bridge producing the series Run (in which she also play a character) in 2020. In 2023 she is the actress who plays Helena Shaw in Indiana Jones 5.

"I didn't get to work with Phoebe as much as I wanted to", Burns says[52]. "She was in New York, I was in London and I wasn't able to stay on the film for as long as I wish I would have been. She's one of the most talented people I've ever met"[53].

- Phoebe Waller-Bridge[54] : Barbara Broccoli got in touch and said would I consider reading the No Time To Die script and coming in and having a conversation with them and see what my thoughts were and just kind of throw some ideas around that. I was like "Hell. Yes". So I read the script and it was fantastic, and then I went in and met Michael and Barbara and Cary for a meeting. And I know that I think it was Daniel who had recommended me, I believe.

Interviewed on May 2019, Waller-Bridge said her contribution to the film was "mainly about making them [the Bond Girls] feel like real people"[55].

- Lashana Lynch (the actress playing Agent 007 Nomi)[56] : I didn't want someone who was slick. I wanted someone who was rough around the edges and who has a past and a history and has issues with her weight and maybe questions what's going on with her boyfriend. [...] We had one conversation [with Phoebe] about her maybe being on her period in one scene, and maybe at the beginning of the scene, and I spoke to Cary about this, throwing her tampon in the thing.

"We had Paloma in our script, but she was just a contact. Cary wanted more", Purvis says[57]. Waller-Bridge notably develops the character of Paloma with Fukunaga:

- Cary Fukunaga[58] : The character was there when Phoebe Waller-Bridge came on board. But Phoebe and I spent a lot of time discussing: "How do you make what people expect out of this iconic Bond character, that we see in these Bond films, surprising but fun, intelligent and a person in their own right?". Ana [de Armas] was someone I wanted to work with for a while. We almost did a project together the year before. So when this was coming about, that character didn't even exist in earlier drafts. I just texted her. I was like, "Hey, Ana, do you want to do a cameo?". And basically, I created a character around her, and tried to do something that Ana hadn't done before.

- Phoebe Waller-Bridge[59] : There's been a lot of talk about whether or not [the Bond franchise] is relevant now because of who he is and the way he treats women. I think that's bollocks. I think he's absolutely relevant now. It has just got to grow. It has just got to evolve, and the important thing is that the film treats the women properly. He doesn't have to. He needs to be true to this character. [...] I was really excited about writing dialogue for [Craig's Bond]. I mean, the script was there. It's already there. I think it's unfair to say that I'm writing the script. [...] I just want to make sure that when they get those pages through, that Lashana, Léa and Ana open them and go, "I can't wait to do that". As an actress, I very rarely had that feeling early in my career. That brings me much pleasure, knowing that I'm giving that to an actress.

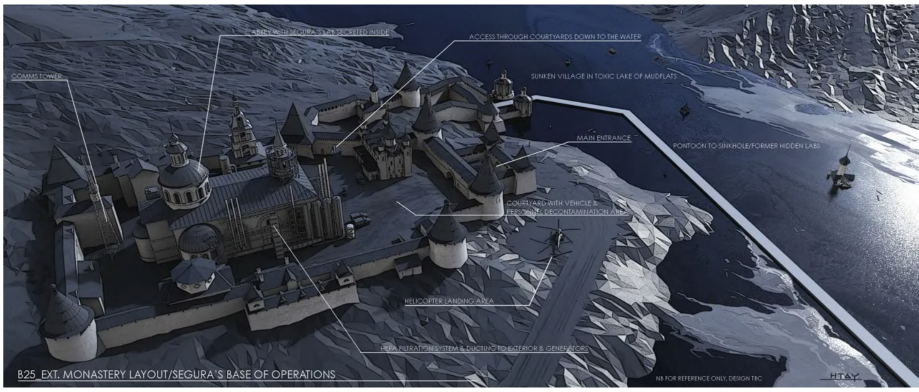
- Neal Purvis[60] : We've always tried to write strong women. Ian Fleming liked strong women. Barbara Broccoli would not allow you to do anything that > wasn't in that sort of vein. They've got to be a challenge for him whether it is as a villain or an accomplice.

Waller-Bridge not only reworks female characters but also male portions, such as scenes between Bond and M[61].

> - Phoebe Waller-Bridge[62] : [I was asked to do] dialogue polishes and to offer things, really. It's about just offering different alternatives. They did give me some scenes and then be like, "can you write some alternatives [...] ?". And then I would just give them options and various scenes and then they would take what they want.

> - Phoebe Waller-Bridge[63] : You know, Daniel is really, really involved from the beginning. [I had] so many great conversations with him about it, constantly in touch with him about it. So it's a big sort of melting pot of everybody's ideas the whole time.

At one point, one of the planned ending for Fukunaga's film had Bond swimming in radioactive waters and drilling through concrete to collect pathogens from the villain, then named "Valentin Segura"[64]. In the end, Bond infiltrates Segura's lair, the Solovetsky Monastery in northern Russia, to rescue Madeleine and their daughter[65].



ABBEY WITH SEGURA'S LAB SECRETED INSIDE
ACCESS THROUGH COURTYARDS DOWN TO THE WATER
COMMS TOWER
SUNKEN VILLAGE IN TOXIC LAKE OF MUDFLATS
MAIN ENTRANCE
PONTOON TO SINKHOLE/FORMER HIDDEN LABS
COURTYARD WITH VEHICLE & PERSONNEL DECONTAMINATION AREA
HELICOPTER LANDING AREA
HEPA FILTRATION SYSTEM & DUCTING TO EXTERIOR & GENERATORS
B25_EXT. MONASTERY LAYOUT/SEGURA'S BASE OF OPERATIONS
NB FOR REFERENCE ONLY, DESIGN TBC
HTAY

One of the most surprising things about this film that was revealed by Gregg Wilson is that the filmmakers, in order to keep certain elements of the plot secret, also created a fake script of the film (with things like Nomi as 001 rather than 007 or Bond who is knighted at the end)[66]!

The script for the awards

Around the time of the film's release, in view of award ceremonies like the Oscars, United Artists released online a script for the film in an attempt to beg for some awards.

It is not a "shooting script", but rather what we could call a "release script": basically something that they tried to modify in order to stick as closely as possible to the finished film (while losing in the process all the flavor that this script could had). So no indications of cut scenes, or even much of anything interesting... Let's see what this 146-page sanitized script signed Neal Purvis, Robert Wade, Cary Joji Fukunaga and Phoebe Waller-Bridge on the cover have in store for us.

First of all, in the Norwegian part of the pre-title, we notice that the CD is supposed to play "French seventies electro-punk". The script tells us that Madeleine is 12 years old and the French dialogues are written in English (it is however specified that they will be spoken in French).

Arriving at the moment when Madeleine (this time as an adult) returns to the surface in Italy, there is the first appearance of Bond described as: "Bond stands like Adonis on a lido overlooking the sea".

Further on the bridge, the person who is shooting from the Maserati doesn't hit Bond. The motorbike jump is caused by a simple "Bond rides the bike up the piazza steps". We notice that "Spectre" is typed like this in the script and that a "German accent" is asked for Blofeld. The pursuit in the DB5 is poorly described; what will be miniguns in the film are only described as "[front] gun muzzles" in the script (there is no indication that they are a version 2.0 of the usual gadget from Goldfinger).

After the credits, the building where the secret laboratory is located appears to be named "C Minus Two" or "C-Minus-Two" and the helmets of the men of Primo's commando are described as similar to those of the Russian Spetsnaz.

Arriving in Jamaica, the script specifies that the name of James Bond's boat is the "Happenstance". We're told that Bond "is visibly relaxed, walking at an island pace. A Bond we've never seen before". The appearance of his house is not described. When he sees the cigar, it is written that he examines the label (but the writers never specify in the script that it says "Delectado" on it).

The script tells us for some reason that Felix Leiter and Ash's "rental car" is a "Ford Mondeo" (it will be a Toyota Corolla in the film).

In the nightclub, the script specifies that the game Bond and Felix play is called "Spook". Nomi is described physically only as "a woman" (and that's it). After leaving the club, Bond is at a stall where he finishes a piece of chicken before heading towards his old Land Rover.

> - Cary Fukunaga[67] : Originally there was [in Jamaica] a gardener, and scenes in a boxing gym and a barbershop, but they felt contrived. I even met with Grace Jones for her to revive the character of May Day as a crime boss, but I decided Bond doesn't have friends.

In the Q-lab, it should be noted that the Aston Martin Valhalla is designated by its old code name, the "DB003" (AM-RB 003).

At Spectre's party in Cuba, "Bond surveys [his surroundings]. He's in the thick of dwarfs, pregnant women, wild cats and revellers dancing with religious fervour".

On the other hand, there is no Dr. Vogel (or the character played by Clem So) in the script, just anonymous "Spectre agents".

When Obruchev says to Paloma: "You are my... Escort?", we are told that he "realises she was not sent by Safin".

Further on, in the toilets of Belmarsh prison, Nomi "thinks" that Madeleine is applying perfume "for Bond". When Madeleine leaves the room and answers "home" to the question "where are you going?" from Bond: "The message hits him. The door closes. She's gone. Why the message?".

Further in Norway, Nomi is in an "Aston Martin DBS" (this script also specifies the brand of Madeleine's 4WD, the Land Cruiser).

During the off-road chase, the arrival of three Defenders with three motorcycles is described "Like charging cavalry they storm down the steep slope" and at one point "Bond forces [a motorcycle] to jump a high bank, sending the rider flying".

In the misty forest, a biker tries to run over Bond and Mathilde before Madeleine shoots him (in the film the biker stops and draws instead of trying to run them over). When Bond tries to shoot Ash while his clip is empty, there's this phrase: "Ash smiles like a fox eating shit from a wire brush". The way in which Ash's death will be filmed is not specified in the script, it just says that Bond causes the Land Rover to fall, which crushes him (nothing here indicate that the character's death will be off-screen).

Arriving at the C-17A Globemaster scene, the script specifies that Q is wearing a pajama top under his jacket when Nomi tells him "sorry to get you out of bed". The "QDAR" gadget is spelled like this.

On Safin Island, it is written that "workers are restoring the building and its garden to their former glory". The large room where people in pink hazmat suits work is named the "bacterial acid farm", the script adds that "electric pod vehicles transport workers across the space" of the room.

Further on, it is clarified that Madeleine is "lying" when she tells Primo that the flower in her tea makes you blind. Bond joins Safin and Mathilde in what the script calls the "games room" (the director explained that is because this is where Safin's family played games when they were alive[68]).

The description of when Safin escapes through the trapdoor with Mathilde while Madeleine joins James: "Bond still has his gun pointed at the trapdoor. He looks up. FUCK".

The action scenes that follow when Bond goes to open the doors are not very detailed (everything is sent in a few lines) like: "Bond makes his way up the stairs, he fights guards all the way up, it's a brutal slog, he gets winged, stabbed and knocked by grenades along the way".

Bond's death is described as this:

> - Bond: I know.
>
> Bond looks up and sees the missiles headed straight for him.

> - Bond: I know.
>
> Long contrails of smoke streak from the distance to dozens of white points of light, moving faster and faster towards him.
>
> The missiles break into clusters as they spread for maximum effect. Bond knows he only has milliseconds. He seems to find peace. Breathes in deeply, finding some quiet before –
>
> A massive wave of explosions ripple towards Bond in a strobing and flashing cloud of light.
>
> From afar, the island is turned to dust.
>
> INT. C-17A GLOBEMASTER - IN FLIGHT - SAME
>
> Q reacts.
>
> INT. MI6 - SAME
>
> M, Moneypenny and Tanner are quiet. They stare at Bond's flatlined vitals.
>
> EXT. NEARBY ISLAND - SAME
>
> Madeleine sees the island bathed in smoke.
>
> FADE TO WHITE:

When the members of MI6 gather for a final tribute to Bond, we can notice that M's words are taken from those of "M.G." (Mary Goodnight, Bond's secretary?) when Bond is reported missing, presumed dead, at the end of the novel You Only Live Twice:

> - You Only Live Twice, chapter 21: I was happy and proud to serve Commander Bond in a close capacity during the past three years at the Ministry of Defence. If indeed our fears for him are justified, may I suggest these simple words for his epitaph? Many of the junior staff here feel they represent his philosophy: "I shall not waste my days in trying to prolong them. I shall use my time".

Finally, we are told that the finale with Madeleine and Mathilde takes place "one month" after the members of MI6 drank in memory of Bond.

> - Madeleine: His name was Bond. James Bond.
>
> Mathilde smiles.

> We follow the Vantage from above as it winds up into the mountains. The noise of the world fades away.
>
> Louis Armstrong's "We have All The Time in the World" starts to play. Credits roll over the driving car.
>
> The car enters a tunnel. The camera leads.
>
> The tunnel forms an iris of darkness that slowly closes in, bringing us into black.
>
> END.

(No "JAMES BOND WILL RETURN" at the end of the script).

Sources/references from chapter 25: No Time to Die

1. "Bond 25 announcement" on 007.com (July 24, 2017): http://www.007.com/bond-25-announcement/
2. "[Bond 25] Daniel Craig officiellement de retour !" by Clément Feutry on Commander James Bond France (August 16, 2017): https://www.commander007.net/2017/bond-25-daniel-craig-officiellement-de-retour/
3. "No Time to Die: The Making of the Film" by Mark Salisbury (2021).
4. "Being Bond: A Daniel Craig Retrospective" by Mark Salisbury (2022).
5. "Inside the Ending of ‘No Time to Die': Daniel Craig and Filmmaking Team Discuss the Shocking Conclusion" by Adam B. Vary in Variety (December 30, 2021): https://variety.com/2021/film/news/no-time-to-die-ending-james-bond-death-daniel-craig-1235144941/
6. "What It Takes To Write A Bond Film" on 007.com (January 2022): https://www.007.com/what-it-takes-to-write-a-bond-film/
7. "The James Bond Archives" by Paul Duncan (2021).
8. "Being Bond: A Daniel Craig Retrospective" by Mark Salisbury (2022).
   "No Time to Die: The Making of the Film" by Mark Salisbury (2021).
9. Purvis and Wade Q&A at London's Regent Street Cinema (October 14, 2021); via "Heavy Lifting" by Matthew Field on MI6-HQ (October 25, 2021): https://www.mi6-hq.com/sections/articles/no-time-to-die-writers-neal-purvis-robert-wade-discuss-james-bond?id=4977
10. "Being Bond: A Daniel Craig Retrospective" by Mark Salisbury (2022).
11. "Being Bond: A Daniel Craig Retrospective" by Mark Salisbury (2022).
12. "Being Bond: A Daniel Craig Retrospective" by Mark Salisbury (2022).
13. "The James Bond Archives" by Paul Duncan (2021).
14. "Some Kind of Hero: The Remarkable Story of the James Bond Films" by Matthew Field & Ajay Chowdhury (2015).
    "Goldfingers: meet the writers of every James Bond film this century" by Ryan Gilbey on The Guardian (November 12, 2021): https://www.theguardian.com/film/2021/nov/12/goldfingers-meet-the-writers-of-every-james-bond-film-this-century
15. "What It Takes To Write A Bond Film" on 007.com (January 2022): https://www.007.com/what-it-takes-to-write-a-bond-film/
16. "Being Bond: A Daniel Craig Retrospective" by Mark Salisbury (2022).
17. "[Bond 25] Danny Boyle envisagé comme réalisateur ?" by Clément Feutry on Commander James Bond France (February 21, 2018): https://www.commander007.net/2018/bond-25-danny-boyle-envisage-realisateur/
    "[Bond 25] Danny Boyle à la réalisation, John Hodge à l'écriture, selon Baz Bamigboye" by Clément Feutry on Commander James Bond France (March 9, 2018): https://www.commander007.net/2018/bond-25-danny-boyle-a-realisation-john-hodge-a-lecriture-selon-baz-bamigboye/
18. "[Bond 25] Danny Boyle confirme son implication dans le projet" by Clément Feutry on Commander James Bond France (March 16, 2018): https://www.commander007.net/2018/bond-25-danny-boyle-confirme-implication-projet/
19. For John Hodge biography, see for the sources:
    "An Interview with John Hodge" by oliverjlwebb on CloselyObservedFrames (October 24, 2022): https://www.closelyobservedframes.com/post/an-interview-with-john-hodge
    "John Hodge: from Trainspotting to Bulgakov" by Xan Brooks on The Guardian (December 6, 2011): https://www.theguardian.com/stage/2011/dec/06/john-hodge-collaborators-interview-trainspotting
    John Hodge's Wikipedia page.
20. "Danny Boyle confirms he is directing ‘James Bond 25,' will shoot at the end of the year" by Gregory Wakeman on Metro.us (March 14, 2018): https://www.metro.us/danny-boyle-confirms-he-is-directing-james-bond-25-will-shoot-at-the-end-of-the-year/
21. "Bond 25 announcement:Director, writer, distributor and production start date revealed" on 007.com (May 25, 2018): https://www.007.com/bond-25-announcement-2/
22. Tweet from @007 on Twitter (August 18, 2018): https://twitter.com/007/status/1031951674544476160
23. "No Time to Die: The Making of the Film" by Mark Salisbury (2021).
    "Being Bond: A Daniel Craig Retrospective" by Mark Salisbury (2022).
24. "Being Bond: A Daniel Craig Retrospective" by Mark Salisbury (2022).
    "Media and Film Masterclasses: Mark Tildesley" on MediaFilm LPSB YouTube channel: https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=LCk4IQfupdY
25. French Stunt Team Q&A at the From Paris With Love event of the Club James Bond France (November 20, 2021): https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=WNa5Ov-gdcw
26. "Being Bond: A Daniel Craig Retrospective" by Mark Salisbury (2022).
27. "Rewrite" on MI6-HQ (February 16, 2019): https://www.mi6-hq.com/sections/articles/bond-25-new-writer-to-overhaul-shooting-script
28. "Being Bond: A Daniel Craig Retrospective" by Mark Salisbury (2022).
    "Media and Film Masterclasses: Mark Tildesley" on MediaFilm LPSB YouTube channel: https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=LCk4IQfupdY
29. "Being Bond: A Daniel Craig Retrospective" by Mark Salisbury (2022).

30 "The James Bond Archives" by Paul Duncan (2021).
"England's Dreamer: Danny Boyle Takes on the Sex Pistols" by Olivia Ovenden in Esquire (May 10, 2022): https://www.esquire.com/uk/culture/tv/a39839241/danny-boyle-pistol-interview/

31 "Being Bond: A Daniel Craig Retrospective" by Mark Salisbury (2022).
"The James Bond Archives" by Paul Duncan (2021).

32 "Being Bond: A Daniel Craig Retrospective" by Mark Salisbury (2022).

33 "The James Bond Archives" by Paul Duncan (2021).

34 "'The threat of nuclear annihilation hasn't gone away' – the timely return of The Ipcress File" by Mark Lawson in The Guardian (March 4, 2022): https://www.theguardian.com/tv-and-radio/2022/mar/04/the-threat-of-nuclear-annihilation-hasnt-gone-away-the-timely-return-of-the-ipcress-file

35 "England's Dreamer: Danny Boyle Takes on the Sex Pistols" by Olivia Ovenden in Esquire (May 10, 2022): https://www.esquire.com/uk/culture/tv/a39839241/danny-boyle-pistol-interview/

36 "No Time to Die: The Making of the Film" by Mark Salisbury (2021)

37 "'The threat of nuclear annihilation hasn't gone away' – the timely return of The Ipcress File" by Mark Lawson in The Guardian (March 4, 2022): https://www.theguardian.com/tv-and-radio/2022/mar/04/the-threat-of-nuclear-annihilation-hasnt-gone-away-the-timely-return-of-the-ipcress-file

38 "The James Bond Archives" by Paul Duncan (2021).

39 Tweet from @007 on Twitter (September 20, 2018): https://twitter.com/007/status/1042688562335047681

40 "Being Bond: A Daniel Craig Retrospective" by Mark Salisbury (2022).

41 For Cary Fukunaga biography, see for the sources:
"'True Detective' Director Cary Fukunaga's Journey from Pro Snowboarder to Hollywood's Most Wanted" by Marlow Stern in Daily Beast (July 12, 2017): https://www.thedailybeast.com/true-detective-director-cary-fukunagas-journey-from-pro-snowboarder-to-hollywoods-most-wanted
"Film Captures the Joy and Terror of Immigrants' Trip North Through Mexico" in Creators.com (2009): http://www.creators.com/lifestylefeatures/fashion-and-entertainment/movie-reviews/film-captures-the-joy-and-terror-of-immigrants-trip-north-through-mexico.html
"True Director" by Emma Brown in Interview magazine (January 9, 2014): https://www.interviewmagazine.com/culture/cary-fukunaga-true-detective
"Beyond the Man-Braids: An Everything Guide to Loving Cary Fukunaga" by Allison P. Davis in The Cut (August 26, 2014): https://www.thecut.com/2014/08/everything-guide-to-loving-cary-fukunaga.html
Cary Fukunaga's Wikipedia page

42 "What It Takes To Write A Bond Film" on 007.com (January 2022): https://www.007.com/what-it-takes-to-write-a-bond-film/

43 "Agents of Change: The women of Bond are on a mission in No Time to Die" by Clark Collis in Entertainment Weekly (September 29, 2021): https://ew.com/movies/no-time-to-die-digital-cover-lashana-lynch-lea-seydoux-ana-de-armas/

44 "Being Bond: A Daniel Craig Retrospective" by Mark Salisbury (2022).

45 "Agents of Change: The women of Bond are on a mission in No Time to Die" by Clark Collis in Entertainment Weekly (September 29, 2021): https://ew.com/movies/no-time-to-die-digital-cover-lashana-lynch-lea-seydoux-ana-de-armas/

46 For Scott Burns biography, see for the sources:
Scott Burns's IMDb page
Scott Burns's Wikipedia page

47 "Being Bond: A Daniel Craig Retrospective" by Mark Salisbury (2022).
"Scott Z. Burns Talks Writing On 'No Time To Die,' "Pressurized" Blockbuster Writing & Other Projects In The Works [Interview]" by Rodrigo Perez on The Playlist (September 30, 2021): https://theplaylist.net/scott-z-burns-writing-no-time-to-die-climate-change-projects-interview-20210930/2/

48 "Being Bond: A Daniel Craig Retrospective" by Mark Salisbury (2022).

49 "Agents of Change: The women of Bond are on a mission in No Time to Die" by Clark Collis in Entertainment Weekly (September 29, 2021): https://ew.com/movies/no-time-to-die-digital-cover-lashana-lynch-lea-seydoux-ana-de-armas/

50 "Agents of Change: The women of Bond are on a mission in No Time to Die" by Clark Collis in Entertainment Weekly (September 29, 2021): https://ew.com/movies/no-time-to-die-digital-cover-lashana-lynch-lea-seydoux-ana-de-armas/

51 For Phoebe Waller-Bridge biography, see for the sources:
"Phoebe Waller-Bridge" by Cristina Ruiz in The Gentlewoman (n°15, Spring & Summer 2017): https://thegentlewoman.co.uk/library/phoebe-waller-bridge
Phoebe Waller-Bridge's IMDb page
Phoebe Waller-Bridge's Wikipedia page

52 "Scott Z Burns talks returning to directing with 'The Report', working on 'No Time To Die'" by Jeremy Kay in Screen Daily (December 23, 2019): https://www.screendaily.com/features/scott-z-burns-talks-returning-to-directing-with-the-report-working-on-no-time-to-die/5145633.article

53 "Scott Z Burns talks returning to directing with ‘The Report', working on ‘No Time To Die''" by Jeremy Kay in Screen Daily (December 23, 2019): https://www.screendaily.com/features/scott-z-burns-talks-returning-to-directing-with-the-report-working-on-no-time-to-die/5145633.article

54 "What It Takes To Write A Bond Film" on 007.com (January 2022): https://www.007.com/what-it-takes-to-write-a-bond-film/

55 "Phoebe Waller-Bridge - 'Fleabag' & 'Killing Eve'" on The Hollywood Reporter's Awards Chatter Podcast (May 9, 2019): https://podcasts.apple.com/gb/podcast/phoebe-waller-bridge-fleabag-killing-eve/id1039032256?i=1000437565819

"Phoebe Waller-Bridge to make James Bond's women feel 'real'" on BBC (May 9, 2019): https://www.bbc.com/news/entertainment-arts-48213903

56 "Bond Women: How Rising Stars Lashana Lynch and Ana de Armas Are Helping Modernize 007" by Rebecca Ford on *The Hollywood Reporte*r (November 6, 2019): https://www.hollywoodreporter.com/movies/movie-features/how-lashana-lynch-ana-de-armas-are-helping-modernize-james-bond-1252345/

57 "Goldfingers: meet the writers of every James Bond film this century" by Ryan Gilbey on The Guardian (November 12, 2021): https://www.theguardian.com/film/2021/nov/12/goldfingers-meet-the-writers-of-every-james-bond-film-this-century

58 "Bond 25 trailer breakdown: No Time To Die director Cary Joji Fukunaga on miniguns, Blofeld and Daniel Craig's final mission" by Jordan Farley on Gamesradar+ (December 4, 2019): https://www.gamesradar.com/bond-25-trailer-breakdown-no-time-to-die-director-cary-joji-fukunaga/

59 "Phoebe Waller-Bridge: James Bond Is “Absolutely Relevant Now” But The Film “Has To Treat Women Properly”" by Peter White on Deadline (May 31, 2019): https://deadline.com/2019/05/phoebe-waller-bridge-bond-1202624860/

60 Purvis and Wade Q&A at London's Regent Street Cinema (October 14, 2021); via "Heavy Lifting" by Matthew Field on MI6-HQ (October 25, 2021): https://www.mi6-hq.com/sections/articles/no-time-to-die-writers-neal-purvis-robert-wade-discuss-james-bond?id=4977

61 "Being Bond: A Daniel Craig Retrospective" by Mark Salisbury (2022).

62 "Chris Evans with Phoebe Waller-Bridge" on The Chris Evans Show on Virgin Radio (February 24, 2020): https://podcasts.apple.com/nz/podcast/chris-evans-with-phoebe-waller-bridge/id1450650136?i=1000466502049

"Phoebe Waller-Bridge 'dreamed' of writing Bond film months before being asked" by Jacob Stolworthy on The Independent (February 24, 2020): https://www.independent.co.uk/arts-entertainment/films/news/phoebe-waller-bridge-bond-25-no-time-to-die-daniel-craig-release-date-trailer-a9354706.html

63 "Chris Evans with Phoebe Waller-Bridge" on The Chris Evans Show on Virgin Radio (February 24, 2020): https://podcasts.apple.com/nz/podcast/chris-evans-with-phoebe-waller-bridge/id1450650136?i=1000466502049

"Phoebe Waller-Bridge 'dreamed' of writing Bond film months before being asked" by Jacob Stolworthy on The Independent (February 24, 2020): https://www.independent.co.uk/arts-entertainment/films/news/phoebe-waller-bridge-bond-25-no-time-to-die-daniel-craig-release-date-trailer-a9354706.html

64 "The James Bond Archives" by Paul Duncan (2021).

65 "The James Bond Archives" by Paul Duncan (2021).

66 "The James Bond Archives" by Paul Duncan (2021).

67 "The James Bond Archives" by Paul Duncan (2021).

68 "No Time to Die: The Making of the Film" by Mark Salisbury (2021).

Afterword

Acknowledgements

This is therefore the end of our dive into the writing universe of the James Bond movies; I hope you enjoyed this book. If this is the case, don't hesitate to share it, or even write something about it.

At the time I'm writing theses lines in 2025, writing of Bond 26 doesn't seem to have started since the end of filming on No Time To Die, which happened at the end of 2019. A statement from Broccoli in September 2022 had lets to us foresee a return of Purvis and Wade:

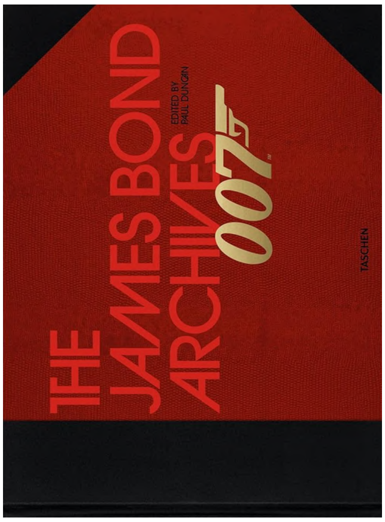
> - Barbara Broccoli: When you change the actor you have to reimagine the direction the film's gonna go on. [...] We're going to take our time. We want to get a sense of where we want to go with the series and we want to do that before we bring anybody else on. We'll start the process probably with [writers] Rob [Wade] and Neil [Purvis] and we'll see where we go!

Since then, Broccoli and Michael Wilson have decided to distance themselves from Bond to focus on other projects, and had now leaved creative control of the franchise to MGM-Amazon in the beginning of 2025. We might see a total shift in how Bond's scripts are developed ; only time will tell...

It's now time for me to thank a bunch of people without whose assistance or support this book would not have been possible: Justin Litke, Cameron Hardee, Yvain Bon, Chris Distin, Danny Morgenstern, Emmanuel Mischler, Guy Eloi, Eric Saussine, Matt Sherman, Pierre Rodiac, Bill Koening, Magman67, Volker Möbus, Jack Cook, Steve Kilcullen, Neil McNally, the members of commander007.net and my parents. I would also like to thank Johanna Harwood Clément for her time, kindness and contributions.

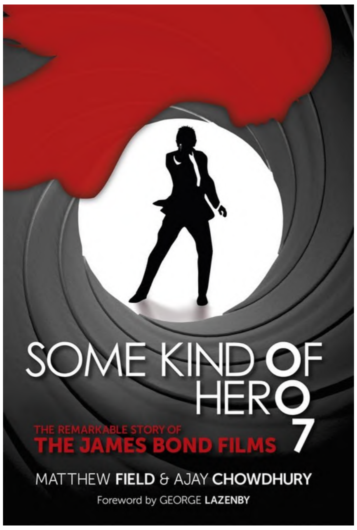
(Also a big thank you to everyone who wrote tutorials on the internet about OpenOffice without whom I would have banged more my head against the walls!).

A lot of excellent books on James Bond helped me during the researches and for the quotations; essentials books for Bond fans' libraries including:



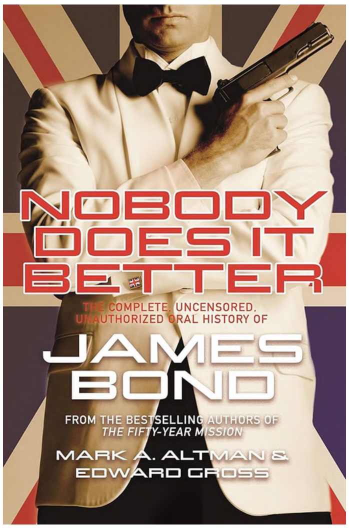
THE JAMES BOND ARCHIVES
007
EDITED BY PAUL DUNCAN
TASCHEN

The James Bond Archives
by Paul Duncan



SOME KIND OF HERO 007
THE REMARKABLE STORY OF
THE JAMES BOND FILMS
MATTHEW FIELD & AJAY CHOWDHURY
Foreword by GEORGE LAZENBY

Some Kind of Hero
by Matthew Field & Ajay Chowdhury



NOBODY DOES IT BETTER
THE COMPLETE, UNCENSORED, UNAUTHORIZED ORAL HISTORY OF
JAMES BOND
FROM THE BESTSELLING AUTHORS OF THE FIFTY-YEAR MISSION
MARK A. ALTMAN & EDWARD GROSS

Nobody Does It Better
by Mark A. Altman and Edward Gross

THE AUTOBIOGRAPHY OF CUBBY BROCCOLI:
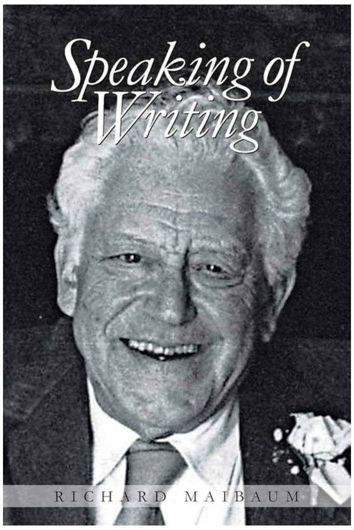
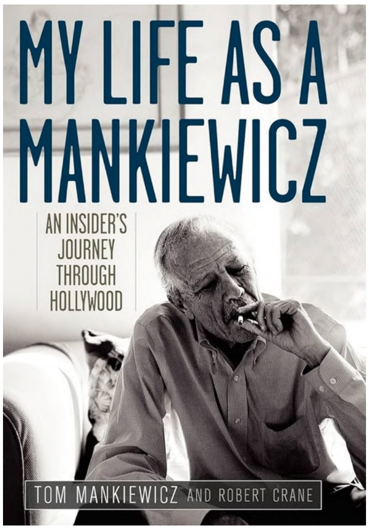
THE MAN WHO BROUGHT
JAMES BOND 007
TO THE SCREEN
with Donald Zec

When the Snow Melts
by Cubby Broccoli and Donald Zec



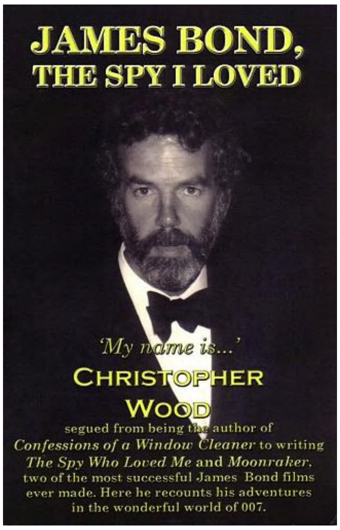
Speaking of Writing
RICHARD MAIBAUM

Speaking Of Writing
by Richard Maibaum



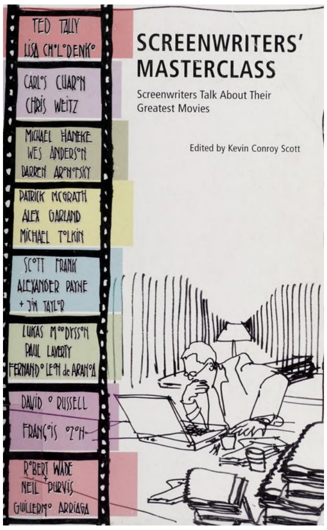
MY LIFE AS A MANKIEWICZ
AN INSIDER'S JOURNEY THROUGH HOLLYWOOD
TOM MANKIEWICZ AND ROBERT CRANE

My Life as a Mankiewicz
by Tom Mankiewicz



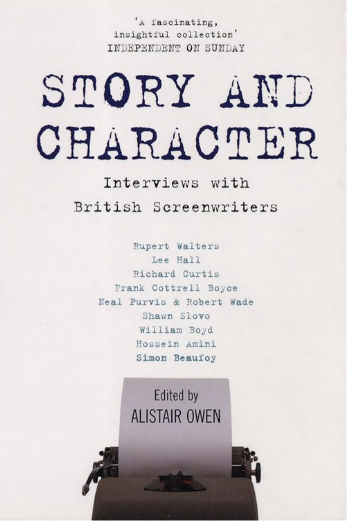
JAMES BOND, THE SPY I LOVED
'My name is...'
CHRISTOPHER WOOD
segued from being the author of Confessions of a Window Cleaner to writing The Spy Who Loved Me and Moonraker, two of the most successful James Bond films ever made. Here he recounts his adventures in the wonderful world of 007.

James Bond, The Spy I Loved
by Christopher Wood



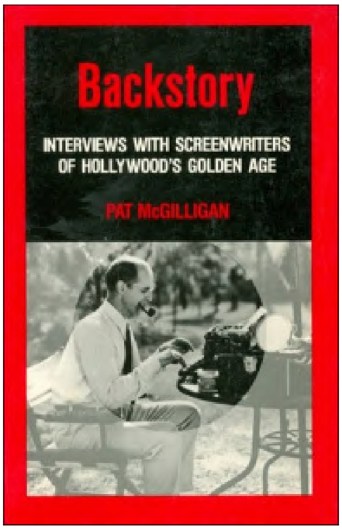
SCREENWRITERS' MASTERCLASS
Screenwriters Talk About Their Greatest Movies
Edited by Kevin Conroy Scott

Screenwriters' Masterclass: Screenwriters Talk About Their Greatest Movies
by Kevin Conroy Scott



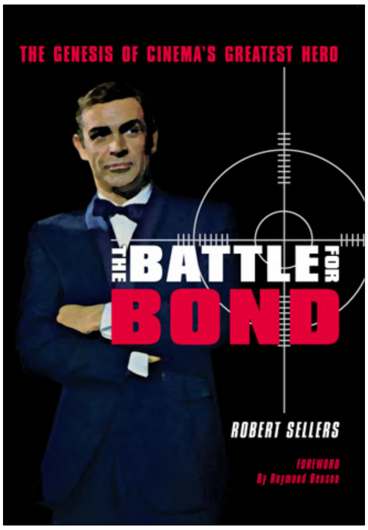
'A fascinating, insightful collection' INDEPENDENT ON SUNDAY
STORY AND CHARACTER
Interviews with British Screenwriters
Rupert Walters
Lee Hall
Richard Curtis
Frank Cottrell Boyce
Neal Purvis & Robert Wade
Shawn Slovo
William Boyd
Hossein Amini
Simon Beaufoy
Edited by ALISTAIR OWEN

Story and Character: Interviews with British Screenwriters
by Alistair Owen



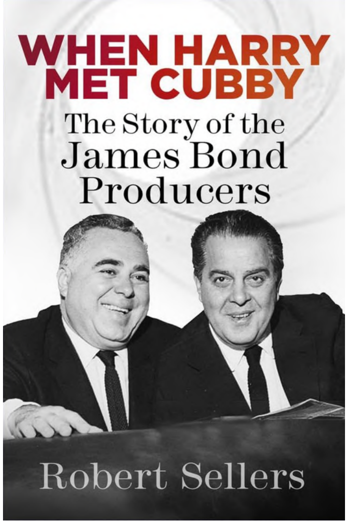
Backstory
INTERVIEWS WITH SCREENWRITERS OF HOLLYWOOD'S GOLDEN AGE
PAT McGILLIGAN

Backstory: Interviews with Screenwriters of Hollywood's Golden Age
by Pat McGilligan



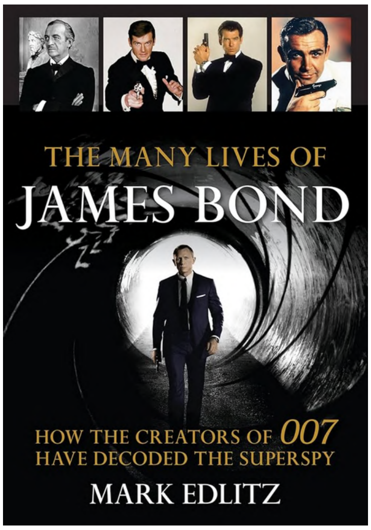
THE GENESIS OF CINEMA'S GREATEST HERO
THE BATTLE FOR BOND
ROBERT SELLERS
FOREWORD By Raymond Benson

The Battle for Bond
by Robert Sellers



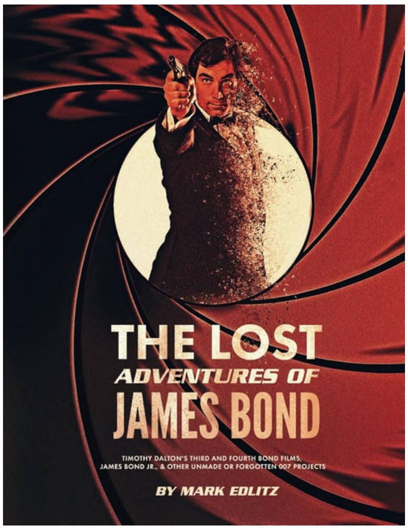
WHEN HARRY MET CUBBY
The Story of the James Bond Producers
Robert Sellers

When Harry Met Cubby
by Robert Sellers



THE MANY LIVES OF JAMES BOND
HOW THE CREATORS OF 007 HAVE DECODED THE SUPERSPY
MARK EDLITZ

The Many Lives of James Bond
by Mark Edlitz

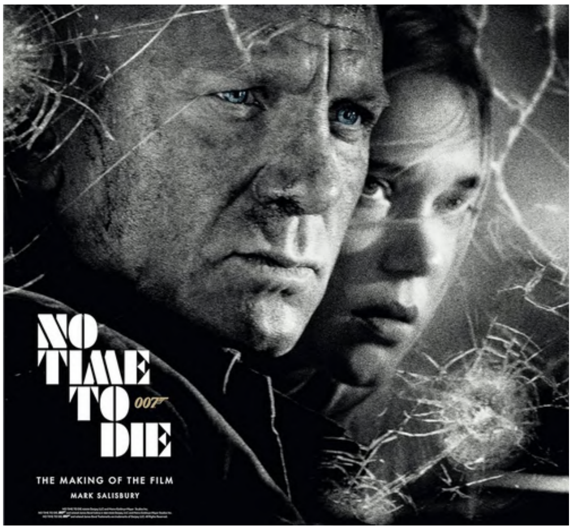


THE LOST ADVENTURES OF JAMES BOND
TIMOTHY DALTON'S THIRD AND FOURTH BOND FILMS, JAMES BOND JR., & OTHER UNMADE OR FORGOTTEN 007 PROJECTS
BY MARK EDLITZ

The Lost Adventures Of James Bond
by Mark Edlitz

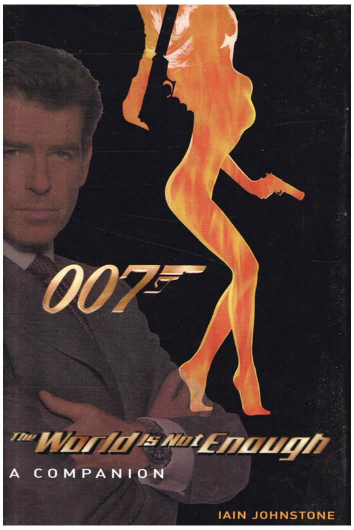
BEING BOND
A DANIEL CRAIG RETROSPECTIVE
MARK SALISBURY

Being Bond
by Mark Salisbury



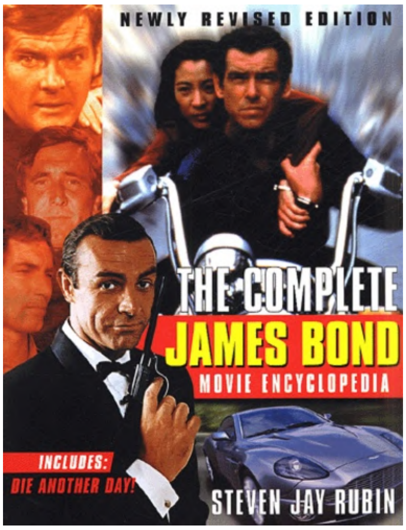
NO TIME TO DIE 007
THE MAKING OF THE FILM
MARK SALISBURY

No Time to Die: The Making of the Film
by Mark Salisbury



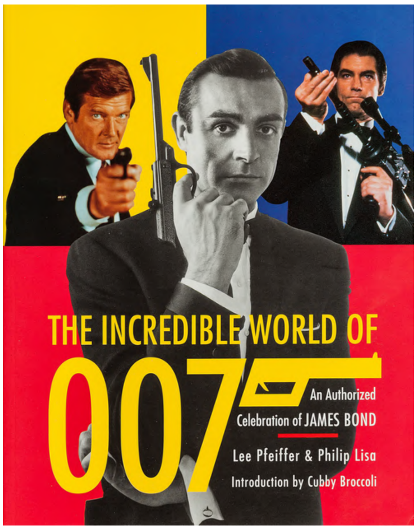
007
The World Is Not Enough
A COMPANION
IAIN JOHNSTONE

The World Is Not Enough: a Companion
by Iain Johnstone



NEWLY REVISED EDITION
THE COMPLETE JAMES BOND MOVIE ENCYCLOPEDIA
INCLUDES: DIE ANOTHER DAY!
STEVEN JAY RUBIN

The Complete James Bond Movie Encyclopedia
by Steven Jay Rubin



THE INCREDIBLE WORLD OF
007
An Authorized Celebration of JAMES BOND
Lee Pfeiffer & Philip Lisa
Introduction by Cubby Broccoli

The incredible world of 007
by Lee Pfeiffer & Phil Lisa

Complete Works of Ian Fleming
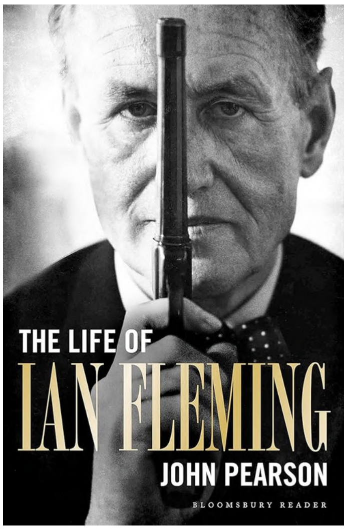
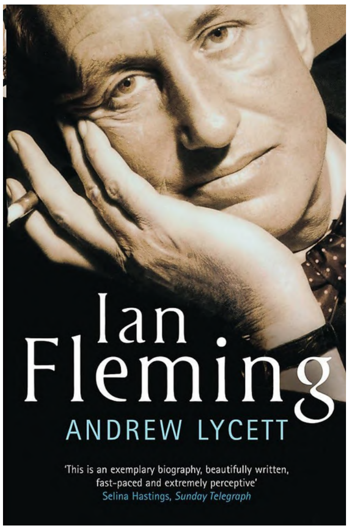
DELPHI CLASSICS
Series Seven

Complete works of Ian Fleming
by Ian Fleming



THE LIFE OF
IAN FLEMING
JOHN PEARSON
BLOOMSBURY READER

The Life of Ian Fleming
by John Pearson



Ian Fleming
ANDREW LYCETT
'This is an exemplary biography, beautifully written, fast-paced and extremely perceptive'
Selina Hastings, Sunday Telegraph

Ian Fleming
by Andrew Lycett

And a bunch of magazines (such as Starlog, Bondage or 007 Magazine), podcasts like SpyHards and websites (including thunderballs.org ; 007forever.com ; hmssweblog.wordpress.com ; mi6-hq.com and web.archive.org).

Thanks to all the people who made the films of this saga which has rocked me since my earliest youth and finally thanks to all those who followed me on www.commander007.net all those years and to thank you for having downloaded and read to the end this book.

This free eBook required thousands of hours of work (and love) as well as several hundred euros in expenses to write it. If you liked it, you have the possibility to make a donation to the author via Paypal to the following email address: moneyofpropre@hotmail.fr . It will be appreciate.

Finally I have to say a few words about the cover of the book. I wanted something along the lines of the trompe-l'œil covers of Fleming' or Garder' novels, the Pan' reissues from the 70s, the Boxtree' edition of James Bond Bedside Companion or even Gerald Wadsworth's paintings. In short, the concept was to have a typewriter surrounded by movie props/replicas. For this I owe a big thanks to Luca Brignoni.

Lucas is a bit like our French Q. A passionate collector since his childhood, he makes his own objects from archive photos of the originals props and everything he can find during his research. The result is a bunch of homemade objects recreated as faithfully as possible in a truly impressive, and extensive, collection which would make any Bond fan jealous.

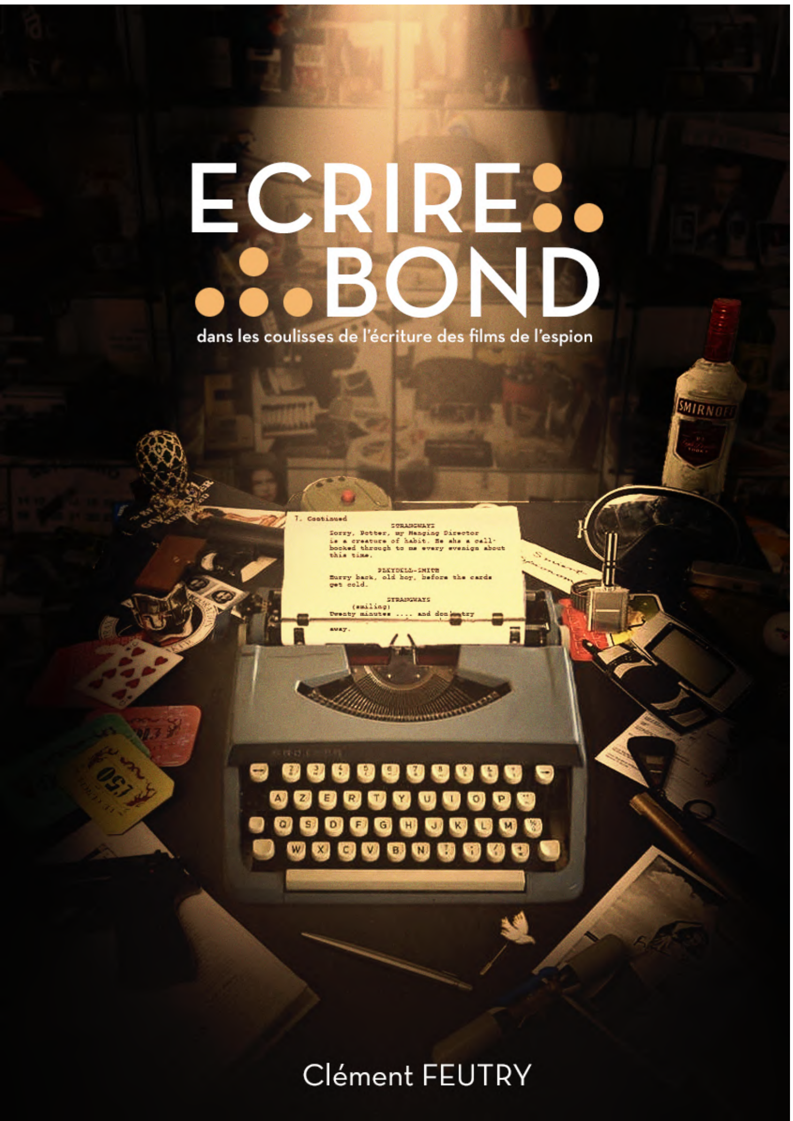
These are his objects that you can see on the cover and I would never thank him enough for all the time spent taking the photographs and creating/editing the cover, as well as being able to support me each time I came back for asking him to do a little more like this or like that.

I would also like to thank Rémi Germain of Les Contes de l'Archiviste and commande007.net who subsequently put the final touches with the text ("with urgency", of course), after testing shadow effects that remained unused but visible in the next page.

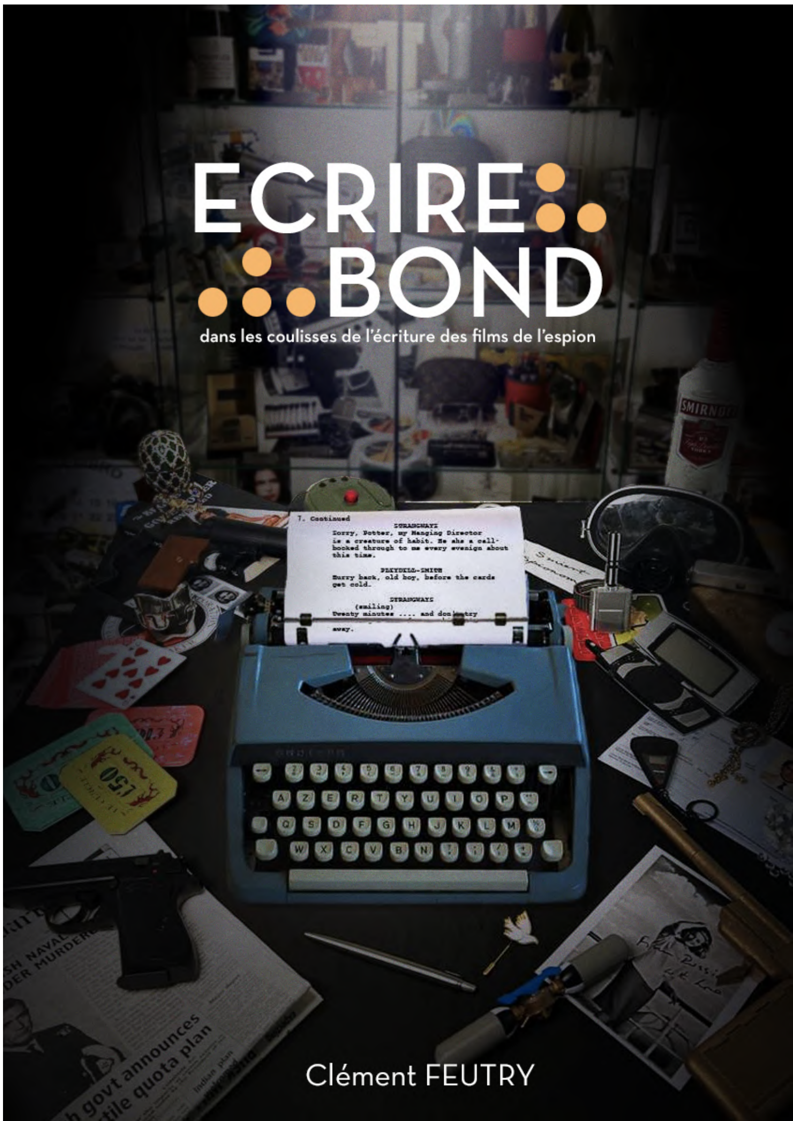
Attached are some bonus images of versions that didn't fully come to fruition.

For the back cover, the concept was taken from an old brochure called The Care and Maintenance of Your Portable Typewriter, the idea of the white circles representing the keys of the typewriter reminding me of the gunbarrel sequence and the dots of Dr. No title sequence, was too striking to ignore.

On the left is Luca's first concept, including the AMF Voit diving knife from Thunderball, Jones' poisoned cigarettes in Dr. No or the grappling gun from Diamonds Are Forever. It was later decided to include object that are more "iconic" from the saga, such as photographed above.

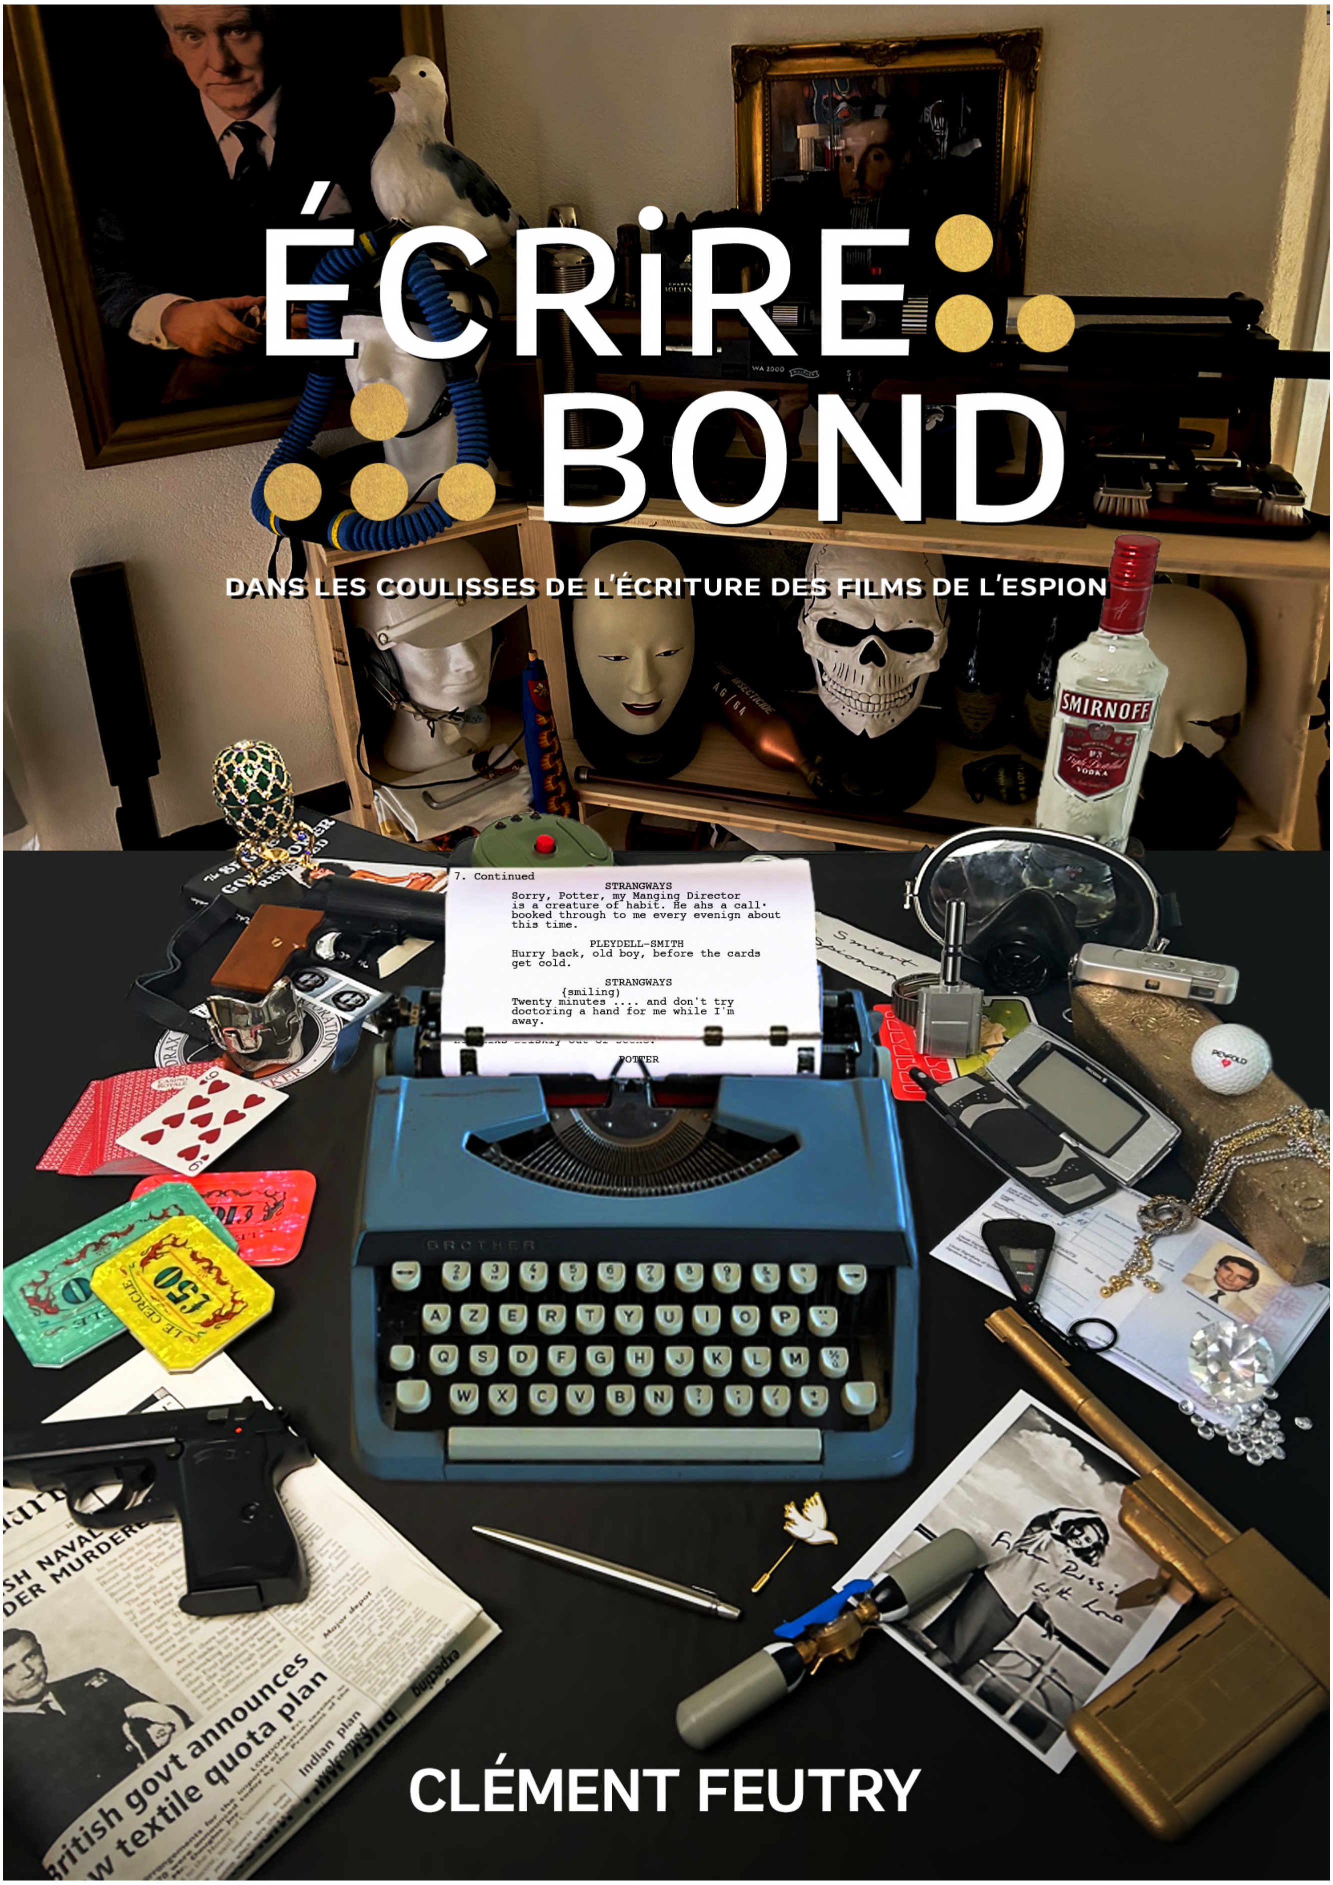


ECRIRE
BOND
dans les coulisses de l'écriture des films de l'espion
Clément FEUTRY



ECRIRE
BOND
dans les coulisses de l'écriture des films de l'espion
Clément FEUTRY

On the previous page: At the top various tests on the background. At the bottom of Rémi's concepts, playing with shadows.



ÉCRiRE
BOND
DANS LES COULISSES DE L'ÉCRITURE DES FILMS DE L'ESPION
7. Continued
STRANGWAYS
Sorry, Potter, my Manging Director is a creature of habit. He ahs a call· booked through to me every evenign about this time.
PLEYDELL-SMITH
Hurry back, old boy, before the cards get cold.
STRANGWAYS
(smiling)
Twenty minutes .... and don't try doctoring a hand for me while I'm away.
POTTER
CLÉMENT FEUTRY

At top: The cover of the original French version uses a different background.

WANTED

Although I have no plans to launch myself in a project of this magnitude anytime soon, the fan in me is always looking for reading scripts/treatments from the James Bond films.

If you have one or more that I haven't covered in this book: please be assured that I'm interested.

If you don't want separate yourself from it, know that I don't necessarily need the original paper version (a scan or photos suits me very well, I'm more interested in the content than the object in itself). Also, I wouldn't say no to any eventual summary you could provide.

Not necessarily to update this book, but at least to satisfy my personal curiosity.

Contact me.
moneyofpropre@hotmail.fr

WANTED

This book could also benefit from informations contained in old, long out of print magazines and books that I don't have, such as the ones bellow. If you are able to check inside for me: contact me.

NEW WOLVERINE: ALL YOU NEED TO KNOW!
SFX
JAMES BOND RELOADED!
007
SKYFALL EXCLUSIVE!
PLUS 50 YEARS OF OUT OF THIS WORLD THRILLS LOOPER
BRITISH TV BLOWOUT!
DOCTOR WHO RED DWARF X
MERLIN

SFX magazine
November 2012

(Christopher Wood interview)

THE MAKING OF JEDI'S EWOKS
INSIDE DOUG TRUMBULL'S BRAINSTORM
FANTASTIC FILMS
JEDI • KRULL
AND SPIELBERG'S TWILIGHT ZONE
SAY NEVER AGAIN Producer JACK SCHWARTZMAN

Fantastic Films
N°36, Novemb. 1983

(Never Say Never Again part)

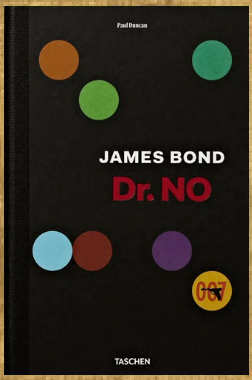
PREMIERE
Vanessa
sorcière bien-aimée
Interview et premières photos de son nouveau film

Premiere
N°238 Janvier 1997

(Donald Westlake interview)



Paul Duncan
JAMES BOND
Dr. NO
007
TASCHEN

James Bond. Dr. No
by Paul Duncan

(Writing part)

19
mi6 confidential
billion dollar bond
HOW SKYFALL BECAME THE BIGGEST 007 MOVIE EVER
SOLD OUT

MI6 Confidential
#19, vol. 7, jan. 2013

(Purvis & Wade interview)

24
mi6 confidential
scripting bond
AN EXCLUSIVE INTERVIEW WITH PURVIS & WADE
SOLD OUT

MI6 Confidential
#24, vol. 8, feb. 2014

(Purvis & Wade interview)

(If you live in Los Angeles and want to help to develop this book, I may also have something for you).

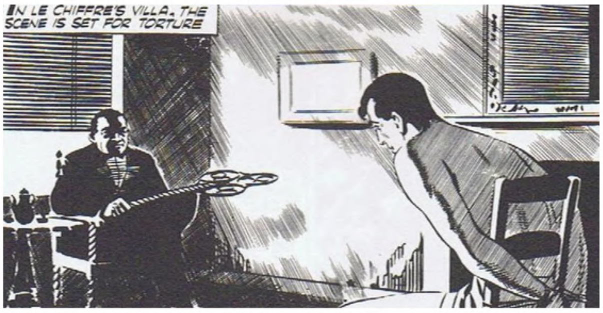
Bonus

- As said int Dr. No chapter, in June 1956, producer Henry Morgenthau III approached Fleming about a television series project he had in mind. Ian Fleming then wrote an outline for the show and a script for the first episode. In it, Fleming imagine a villain called Dr. No, an "international freelance spy of Chinese-German extraction" who use electronic inferences to divert from their course Anglo-American missiles from a test station located on the Turks Islands. The story involve an American secret agent named James Gunn who investigate the electronic inferences that are coming from Jamaica, under the cover of a treasure hunt. Gunn fight against Dr. No's "Chinese-Negro" henchmen, who notably use some Jamaican's superstitions to ward off curious onlookers. When the TV series failed to materialize, Fleming reused his treatment to write his sixth Bond novel, Dr. No, which has been published in 1958: https://www.commander007.net/2025/commander-jamaica-quand-le-dr-no-etait-dabord-un-personnage-pour-la-television/

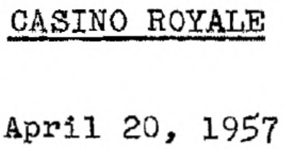
COMMANDER
JAMAICA

- On April 20, 1957, producer Gregory Ratoff was in possession of a Casino Royale script from an unknown screenwriter in which James Bond... Is curiously absent! The character was indeed replaced by an American businessman (gangster?) named Lucky Fortunato. Vesper is also absent, replaced by another girl named Suzi who is Le Chiffre's mistress. Apart from that, the plot of the novel is relatively well preserved. To discover this curiosity of a Casino Royale without James Bond: https://www.commander007.net/2024/1957-lorsque-lon-envisageait-un-casino-royale-sans-james-bond/

LORSQUE L'ON ENVISAGEAIT
UN CASINO ROYALE
SANS JAMES BOND

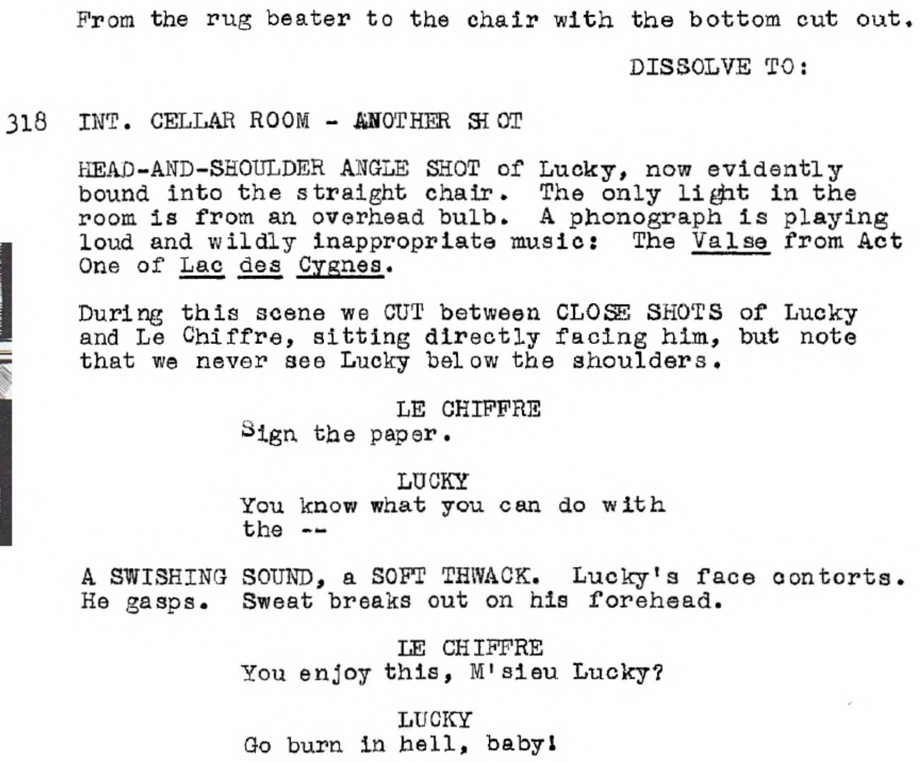


IN LE CHIFFRE'S VILLA, THE SCENE IS SET FOR TORTURE



CASINO ROYALE

April 20, 1957



From the rug beater to the chair with the bottom cut out.

DISSOLVE TO:

318 INT. CELLAR ROOM - ANOTHER SHOT

HEAD-AND-SHOULDER ANGLE SHOT of Lucky, now evidently bound into the straight chair. The only light in the room is from an overhead bulb. A phonograph is playing loud and wildly inappropriate music: The Valse from Act One of Lac des Cygnes.

During this scene we CUT between CLOSE SHOTS of Lucky and Le Chiffre, sitting directly facing him, but note that we never see Lucky below the shoulders.

LE CHIFFRE
Sign the paper.

LUCKY
You know what you can do with the --

A SWISHING SOUND, a SOFT THWACK. Lucky's face contorts. He gasps. Sweat breaks out on his forehead.

LE CHIFFRE
You enjoy this, M'sieu Lucky?

LUCKY
Go burn in hell, baby!

- In 1963-1964, screenwriter Ben Hecht, to whom we notably owe Scarface (the 1932 version), was hired by producer Charles K. Feldman to write a serious adaptation of Casino Royale for the cinema. And that's what Hecht does, imagining in his scripts a long prologue in which James Bond and Vesper must go to a German brothel of "Colonel Chiffre" and destroy films taken without the customers' knowledge. Other elements include much of the novel, Bond's exes, Le Chiffre's wife, a telepath, "Specter" in place of SMERSH and even a hero who is not James Bond but someone who adopts his name: https://www.commander007.net/2024/1964-quand-ben-hecht-ecrivait-des-scripts-de-casino-royale/

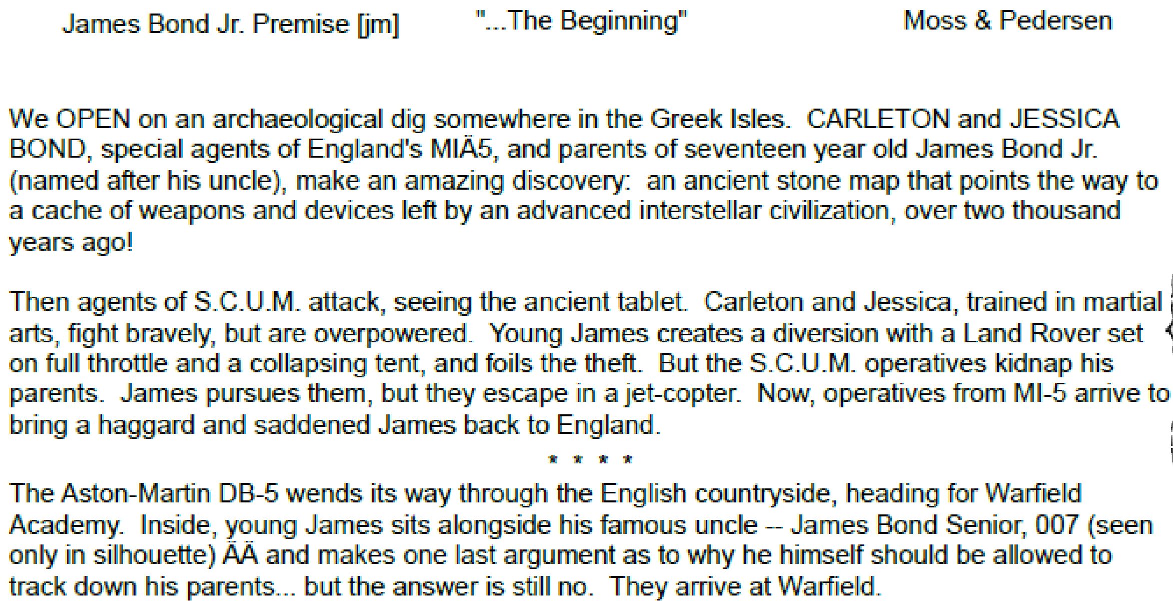
- Among the army of veteran writers of what became Casino Royale in 1967, was novelist Joseph Heller, best known for his comedic masterpiece Catch-22. He was contacted by Charlie Feldman in 1965 and began working with George Mandel that year, using earlier scripts from various screenwriters as a springboard. After a few months, fed up with Feldman's behavior, he left the project. The final script for Casino Royale was a far cry from Heller's, and when the film was finally released, Heller & Mandel contributed an article to Holiday magazine. Some parts are obviously exaggerated for comedic effect, but it shows how lunatic the production of this film was: https://www.commander007.net/2021/cr-67-comment-jai-trouve-james-bond-perdu-mon-amour-propre-et-presque-gagne-150-000-sur-mon-temps-libre/

- An undated script of Casino Royale (1967) that is rather close from the film but with few differences including a big action scene in Hamburg, a villain HQ in a volcano, the character played by Joanna Pettet (Mata Bond) was then named Lily Weiss while Peter Sellers's one was named Migel Force, Moneypenny dies, etc:

https://www.commander007.net/2024/casino-royale-1967-analyse-dun-script-quelque-peu-different-du-film/

- An undated two-page memo from Richard Maibaum (?) to "introduce a new Bond without explanation" "and avoid going back to the fifties or sixties... Where you will have problems with props, costumes, sets, etc". The idea is to introduce an international crime syndicate that has used modern business management techniques to enrich itself. Most of the organization's income is legitimate, but there is also quite a bit of money to be laundered.
  The syndicate's biggest problem is managing to stay in the shadows of governments in all the countries where it operates. So the syndicate invests time and money in political science schools so that the future leaders of these countries will be under their control. There is also an assassination section, blackmail section, seduction section, for the most incorruptible politicians and civil servants.
  When an important banker is found dead in Geneva, 007 is sent to investigate. The author of this document concludes it by saying that this kind of idea allows us to stay away from real politics because the "villains don't work for this or that government. It also allows us to stay away from atomic bombs, secret formulas, etc".

- The evolution of some scripts for the 1991/1992 James Bond Jr. animated series about 007's nephew. This includes the pilot episode which in its early versions included James Jr.'s parents; Goldie Finger (Goldfinger's daughter) and the treasure of the legend of the lost city of Atlantis!:
  https://www.commander007.net/2022/james-bond-jr-levolution-de-lintrigue-de-lepisode-pilote/



James Bond Jr. Premise [jm] "...The Beginning" Moss & Pedersen

We OPEN on an archaeological dig somewhere in the Greek Isles. CARLETON and JESSICA BOND, special agents of England's MIÄ5, and parents of seventeen year old James Bond Jr. (named after his uncle), make an amazing discovery: an ancient stone map that points the way to a cache of weapons and devices left by an advanced interstellar civilization, over two thousand years ago!

Then agents of S.C.U.M. attack, seeing the ancient tablet. Carleton and Jessica, trained in martial arts, fight bravely, but are overpowered. Young James creates a diversion with a Land Rover set on full throttle and a collapsing tent, and foils the theft. But the S.C.U.M. operatives kidnap his parents. James pursues them, but they escape in a jet-copter. Now, operatives from MI-5 arrive to bring a haggard and saddened James back to England.

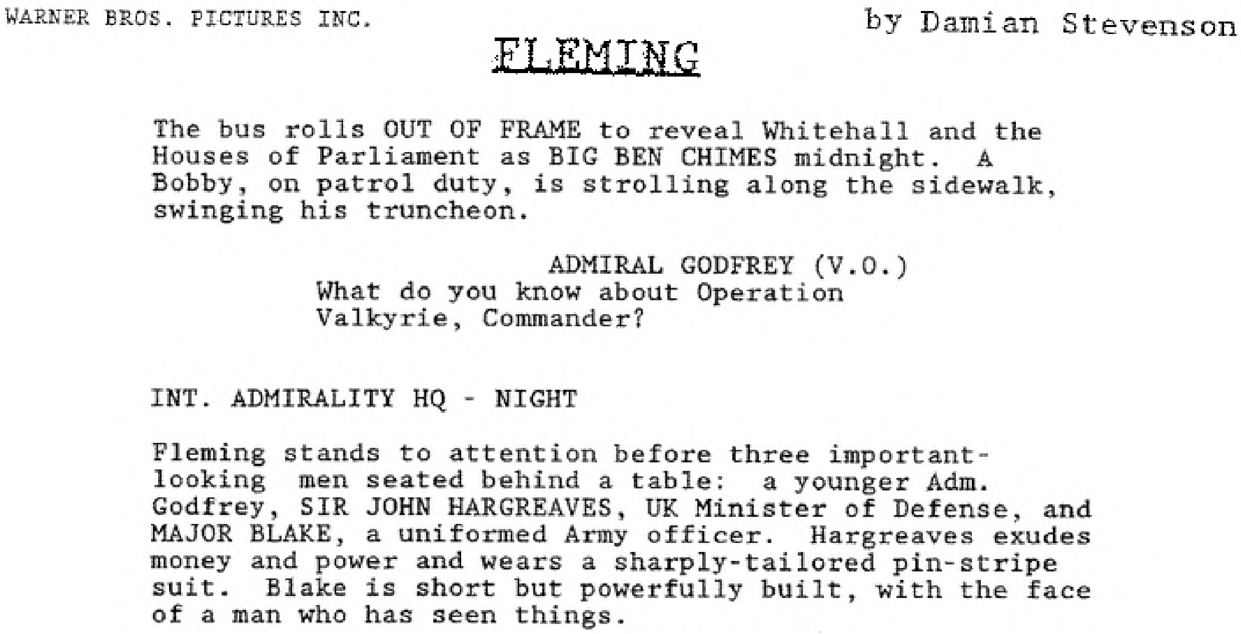
* * * *

The Aston-Martin DB-5 wends its way through the English countryside, heading for Warfield Academy. Inside, young James sits alongside his famous uncle -- James Bond Senior, 007 (seen only in silhouette) ÄÄ and makes one last argument as to why he himself should be allowed to track down his parents... but the answer is still no. They arrive at Warfield.

- License To Thrill is a four-minute James Bond short film developed for theme parks. It is an experience in which the spectator finds himself in a sort of cinema hall, on a seat which moves according to the action on the screen. The idea is to put you in the shoes of James Bond, or rather in his eyes, with a short film in first person view: we see the action through the eyes of 007 as he is chased in an action sequence including chase on a motorbike, fight on a train, parachute jump and scene on a jet-ski. The short film is nowadays unavailable but its script can be read in full: https://www.commander007.net/2017/license-to-thrill-court-metrage-destine-aux-parc-dattractions/

007
License To Thrill

- In October 2005, Variety reported that Warner Bros was going to develop a film about the life of James Bond's creator, Ian Fleming, simply titled "Fleming" with a certain Damian Stevenson as screenwriter. As time passed, no film was released, although in 2008 the Los Angeles Times reported that the film was still in development and that Leonardo DiCaprio had shown interest in the Fleming production through his production company Appian Way. The film was ultimately abandoned but Stevenson wrote at least two different versions, none of which had a "biopic" aspect but were more of action film type, set during the Second World War. Stevenson would adapt his scripts into novels a few years later. More details: https://www.commander007.net/2022/fleming-analyse-du-script-du-biopic-abandonne-de-la-warner/



WARNER BROS. PICTURES INC. by Damian Stevenson

FLEMING

The bus rolls OUT OF FRAME to reveal Whitehall and the Houses of Parliament as BIG BEN CHIMES midnight. A Bobby, on patrol duty, is strolling along the sidewalk, swinging his truncheon.

ADMIRAL GODFREY (V.O.)
What do you know about Operation Valkyrie, Commander?

INT. ADMIRALITY HQ - NIGHT

Fleming stands to attention before three important-looking men seated behind a table: a younger Adm. Godfrey, SIR JOHN HARGREAVES, UK Minister of Defense, and MAJOR BLAKE, a uniformed Army officer. Hargreaves exudes money and power and wears a sharply-tailored pin-stripe suit. Blake is short but powerfully built, with the face of a man who has seen things.

Scripting 007: Behind the writing of the James Bond movies

You know the name, you know the number, but do you know... How it was planned to pit Bond against Goldfinger's twin brother on several occasions? What exactly was in the script for the canceled spin-off about the character of Jinx, envisioned after Die Another Day? How Thunderball was first envisaged as a film, before becoming a novel, then a film, and yet another film later? What would Timothy Dalton's third film look like? What is this action scene in the London postal railway network that was imagined for four films but never ended in any of them? How Max Zorin's character original plan was to divert a comet and make it crash into Silicon Valley? In which adventure was Muammar Gaddafi briefly considered as one of the villains? How 007 was to confront SPECTRE again in The Spy Who Loved Me and Octopussy? What about this motorcycle chase on the Great Wall of China in a film project where the Bond Girl was inspired by Rambo? Which scenes from the scripts were filmed but cut in the edits? Or how The Living Daylights was first envisioned as a reboot presenting the very first mission of an inexperienced young James Bond?

All the answers to these questions and more can be found in this new free e-book about the writing of the films, featuring the world's most beloved secret agent. Discover 60 years' history of the saga through the analysis of more than a hundred documents (scripts, treatments, interviews, correspondence, storyboards, etc.). See how the screenwriters created the plots for the Bond films. Who were these screenwriters? From what or from whom did certain storylines or characters originate? How different is the story of the film compared to the novel? How did the plots evolve from their initial concepts to the final edit? What ideas were abandoned along the way and sometimes re-used in subsequent films? What were the challenges? It's up to you to discover it in this book.

70002455-27800-007